30. εὶ καυχ. δεῖ, &c.] The words have roμου καυχῆσομαι. <sup>31</sup> * Ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν <sup>e Rom. i. 8.</sup> Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ οἶδεν, (ὁ ὢν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας,) ὅτι οὐ <sup>& p. 1. 32.</sup> ψεύδομαι. <sup>32</sup> * Ἐν Δαμασκῷ ὁ ἐθνάρχης Ἀρέτα τοῦ βασιλέως <sup>Gal. i. 20.</sup>

 ἐφρούρει τὴν Δαμασκηνῶν πόλιν, πιάσαι με θέλων <sup>Phil. i. 8.</sup> <sup>33</sup> καὶ διὰ <sup>i Thess. 2. 8.</sup> <sup>f Acts 9. 24.</sup>

ference to both the preceding and the following context. 'If, then, I must needs boast (see ver. 18), [as I am compelled to do,] I will boast of τὰ τῆς δοθ., 'the things which concern my [so-called] weakness and infirmities;' which made the Apostle appear mean in the eyes of his adversaries. Comp. ch. x. 10. xii. 10.

31. ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ—ὅτι οὐ ψεύδομαι.] These words are by all the ancient, and many modern Commentators (as Mackn.), referred to the narration which follows of the Apostle's escape from the plots of the ethnarch Aretas. But, had such been the reference intended by the Apostle, he would scarcely have employed so solemn a form of asseveration—almost constituting, as Augustin, Thom. Aquin., and Est., are agreed, a formula jurandi—on an occasion which would have so little called for it. Hence the best modern Commentators, from Est. downwards, have been of opinion, that the words must be referred to what goes before, and be regarded as a solemn confirmation by oath of the truth of the foregoing statement respecting himself,—namely, his various sufferings for the Gospel's sake. And though it be true, that some of the circumstances in question were so well known, that even his enemies could not deny them; yet others, in which he has entered most into particulars, were prob. little known even to his friends,—and would have been quite unknown to us, but for the present passage, these not having been recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Considering, however, that a certain deference is due to the almost universal voice of antiquity, I am now inclined to suspect that the point, as to the precise references of these words, has not yet been fully settled. Certainly not a few of the things recorded in the preceding portion needed no such solemn confirmation of their veracity. And so general (indeed almost universal) was the opinion of the ancients, as to the reference being to the following context, that, in the earliest division of the New Test. into chapters, a new chapter commenced with ὁ Θεός, &c.; and so much did Hyper. approve of this division, that, in his Latin Version with notes, he makes ch. xii. to commence with these words. The true solution of the whole difficulty is, I am now persuaded, to suppose (what formerly I myself suspected, and what I have since found supported by the opinion of Thom. Aquin., Hyper., and Schliting) that this solemn protestation is meant to be applied, both to all that has been said and is about to be said, espec. the latter. This confirmation was, Hyper. thinks, obiter interposita, in order to be applied to both. We may, however, be permitted to suppose that the narrative in question was put into writing after the rest of this section, and was subsequently brought in as a kind of ἐπιμνησκον to the above detail of his imminent perils and severe sufferings; though, from inadvertence on the part of the transcribers, introduced after, and not before, the solemn protestation at ver. 31. The very air of the passage, in its abrupt commencement, without any connexion with the foregoing context, tends strongly to confirm this suspicion. And, though a connexion is in two ways attempted to be traced by Billroth and by Zeger, yet it is too hypothetical to be considered a connexion at all; and I am persuaded that the only satisfactory mode of removing the difficulty is to suppose the portion in question brought in out of its proper place; a view further confirmed by the consideration that ἐν Δαμασκῷ cannot be joined with ἐφρούρει ('caused a guard to be set'), but must necessarily be regarded as belonging to some expression introductory to the narration. As to the words themselves of the solemn ostentation, Θεός καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ—Χριστοῦ, they are best explained by Hyper. thus: 'Deus Christi dicitur respectu humanæ in Christo naturæ (quomodo Christus ipse loquebatur, Deus meus, quid me reliquisti?) Pater Christi dicitur respectu Divinæ in Christo naturæ secundum quam genitus est ab illo ante secula.' Est. well points out the emphasis in the words, ὁ ὢν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, as in Rom. i. 25, ὅς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, as much as to say, 'Ab ætæ, ut ab ætæ ejus testimonio cui omnis laus et honor debetur in omnem æternitatem!'

32, 33. This circumstance (which Dodd. thinks took place not when the Apostle was first converted, but when he had preached about three years in Arabia) is subjoined to the foregoing, quasi κατ' ἐπιμνησκον. So Expositors generally. 'But why,' it may be asked, 'does Paul add this incident here, which is not in itself so remarkable as those before mentioned, and that too after he had already concluded? Without doubt, because it relates to the first danger to which he was exposed in consequence of his Christianity. The connexion seems to be this: "I asseverate that all this is true (v. 31); nay, before any of these things, in Damascus, three years (Gal. i. 18) after my conversion, I fell into great danger, from which I was rescued with difficulty.'" (Billr.)

33. διὰ θυρίδος ἐν σαργάνῃ ἔχαι.] Luke, in his account (Acts ix. 25) of this transaction, uses the word σκαυλός: but Paul's expression here, σαργάνῃ (from γρῶ, 'a weavement'), is the more exact term, denoting, as Suid. explains, 'a rope-basket,' or 'net-work of cords.' as in Athen. iii. p. 119. 407. This is confirmed by Mr. Curzon, in his 'Visits to Monasteries,' where (p. 275), in his account of the great monastery of Meteora, he says, 'after a careful reconnoitering from long-bearded monks, a rope, with a net at the end of it, came down to us, a distance of about twenty-five fathoms; and being bundled into the net, I was lugged in at the window by two of the strongest of the brethren.' When we bear in mind the permanence of Oriental customs, we may regard this incident as at once an exemplification and illustration of the mode in which the Apostle effected his escape from Damascus. But to advert to a seeming discrepancy in the accounts of St. Luke and St. Paul as to the escape in question. In the former (Acts ix. 25) it is said that the Apostle was let

f Jos. 1. 18.
 1 Sam. 19.
 12.
 a Acts 9. 2.
 2. 14. 6.
 & 23. 17.
 1 Cor. 13. 3.

θυρίδος ἐν σαργάνῃ ἑχαλάσθην διὰ τοῦ τείχους, καὶ ἐξέφυγον τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ. XII. <sup>1</sup>Καυχᾶσθαι δὴ οὐ συμφέρει μοι
 ἐλεύσομαι γὰρ εἰς ὄψασις καὶ ἀποκαλύψεις Κυρίου. <sup>2</sup> Ὅϊδα

down διὰ τοῦ τείχους, 'by the wall;' i. e., as Doddr. explains, 'by the side of it,' which seems not to agree with the account of St. Paul; yet there is no discrepancy in the original; for διὰ may mean by and through the wall; i. e. through an aperture of the wall, a loop-hole, or window; see the note on Acts xx. 9. Such is the sense of διὰ τείχους in St. Luke; but St. Paul makes the thing clearer by using both διὰ τοῦ τείχους, and διὰ θυρίδος, which may be rendered, 'through a window, by (i. e. 'along') the wall.' Thus far in my former Editions. I would now add that the historical difficulty has been discussed, and as far as possible removed, in note on Acts ix. 25; and I have only further to remark, that, in the plate referred to by Alf. in Conyb. and Hows., vol. i. 110, the window is not, as Alf., by implication, says, in the wall of Damascus, but in a turret on the wall; and hence my first interpretation of θυρίδος is confirmed, but the second (adopted by Conyb. and Hows.) is disproved. Of course, by ἐν Δαμασκῷ is meant, 'when sojourning at Damascus;' and ἐθν. must be understood as I have shown in Acts. At ἐφ' ὧραις τῆν Δ. πόλιν there is a harsh brevity of expression, and an elsewhere unprecedented use of ἐφ' ὧραις for Luke's more correct term ἐν ἡμέραις, like our Verb 'to watch' = 'to observe in ambush;' and by τῆν πόλιν must be meant 'the city gates,' τὰς πόλεις, as Luke expressly says; accordingly, the word should be rendered 'watched at.' As to the perplexing question, of the connexion between xi. 32, 33, and xii. 1, I am not quite satisfied with any solution which has hitherto been propounded, and least of all with that of Dr. Peile. That of Mr. Alf. is preferable, as being less harsh. But that which I have now framed with the aid of Estius, and submit to my readers, is, I trust, just as likely to be true.

XII. The Apostle now proceeds to treat of other matters whereof he might boast, but which he kept apart from the former, as things of another and very superior nature; namely, the exalted Supernatural Gifts he enjoyed, and the Revelations from Heaven which had been vouchsafed to him; such as were proper to be mentioned on this occasion, as fully establishing his claim to a high superiority above his opponents and depreciators, the false Apostles. Yet, with the same prudence as elsewhere, St. Paul introduces this fresh cause for boasting with an expression meant to deprecate censure. As vv. 32 and 33 of the preceding chap. seem to have been a supplement added to the preceding detail of the merits he could boast of in the cause of the Gospel, and written at another time, so the following portion may have been; which some think was also a supplement to the preceding, though, in fact, it contains things quite of another kind—things of which, indeed, the Apostle might justly boast—and which are not hinted at in the preceding, namely, the supernatural gifts he had received, and the revelations with which he had been favoured from heaven; both which might, in a popular sense, be said to be matter of just boasting,—and, at all events, sufficient to establish his claim to a high superiority over his opponents and depreciators, the Corinthian teachers, who pretended to the dignity of Apostles. As introductory, however, to these further grounds of boasting, the Apostle—with the same judicious care to pre-occupy uncandid animadversion (which is observable also supra, ix. 1. 16. 21. 23)—commences with a form of expression well calculated to produce this effect, καυχᾶσθαι δὴ οὐ συμφέρει μοι, of which the sense is very well expressed by Schleus., 'quanquam indignum meâ personâ gloriari de rebus externis videtur.' Such being the Apostle's view, I still, as heretofore, see no reason to adopt here the change of reading adopted by Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., and Alf.; namely, for καυχᾶσθαι δὴ οὐ συμφ., καυχᾶσθαι δὲ, οὐ συμφέρει μοι. For though δεῖ is found in B, E, F, G, J, and 20 cursives (1 add Lamb. 1185, 1196), and has been followed in the Syr., Vulg., and Arabic Versions, and, again, συμφέρον has place in 13 F, G, and 2 cursives, yet μοι is absent from only one. To me, I confess, these var. lects. seem worthy of attention only as bearing marks of the passage having been tampered with by the ancient Critics. And this arose, I suspect, from a misapprehension of its true nature, and an unfounded fear that it was open to censure. Now the substitution of δεῖ for δὴ would seem to remove any such objection; but thus another would arise,—namely, that in this case the  sequel of the sentence would no longer be suitable to the  commencement. 'The Apostle (says Est.) again employs this deprecatory preamble, because he is now about to make mention, not of those things which pertain to his weakness, but something grand and sublime.' The connexion, then, between the first and second clause may be traced as follows: '[But to boast in my own case, and as to what concerns myself, is not expedient, nor is it now necessary]; for I shall proceed to touch on a subject of glorying which nevertheless excludes all self-boasting.' Here Alf. (mirabile dictu!) abandons both his venerated guides, following the example of Matth. and Griesb., Dr. Peile, and myself, in rejecting the above reading, and truly observes, 'there can be no doubt which is the nervous elliptical irony of the great Apostle, and which the same conventional propriety of the Grammatical Correctors.' He might, perchance, have seen the same truth in a vast multitude of other cases had he trusted to his own eyes, and not to those of his Foreign guides,—carried away by an overweening reverence of the judgment and critical acumen of the Germans, for which, with the exception of Hermann, the nation has never been distinguished. The terms ὄψασις and ἀποκαλύψεις are not synonymous. The latter is a stronger term than the former.—'Ὁπτασία is 'an appearance presented supernaturally to the mind of a person sleeping or waking;' ἀποκάλυψις is 'a suggestion of a truth or fact by the Spirit of God.'

2. ὁἶδα ἀνθρώπων ἐν Χρ.] 'I have known' = 'do know, a Christian man.' The best Commentaries are agreed that this expression signifies

ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χριστῷ, πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων (εἴτε ἐν σώματι, οὐκ οἶδα· εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, οὐκ οἶδα· ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν) ἀρπαγέντα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἕως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ. <sup>3</sup> <sup>b</sup> Καὶ οἶδα <sup>b</sup> Luke 22. 42. τὸν τοιοῦτον ἄνθρωπον (εἴτε ἐν σώματι, εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, οὐκ οἶδα· ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν) <sup>4</sup> ὅτι ἥρπαγῃ εἰς τὸν παρά-

a disciple or servant of Christ (as supra ver. 17); the Apostle thus speaking of himself in the third person through modesty, as St. John, in his Gospel, xviii. 18. xix. 36. That the Apostle here means himself, appears from vv. 6, 7.—πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων, i. e. 14 years from the writing of this Epistle, which, according to the researches of Canon Tate, in his 'Continuous History of St. Paul,' was in the latter part of A.D. 56; and, accordingly, the date of the occurrence subjoined must be the latter end of A.D. 42, and the place very probably Antioch, where Paul sojourned for a year, after having been brought thither by Barnabas, who had fetched him from Tarsus to be his coadjutor. If the foregoing computation be true, or near the truth (on which see the Introduction to the First Epist.), we may see how much mistaken were Chrys. and Thom. Aquin., who pursued so strange a chronological reckoning, as to fix the period of these raptures to the year of Paul's conversion to Christianity, and, perhaps, during the three days immediately after his conversion, during which he sojourned at Damascus, without being able to see, and neither eating nor drinking. Now those events took place several years before the period in question, at least seven; indeed Estius says eight; and he fixes it to the year when Paul received, with Barnabas, the office of preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles.

3. εἴτε ἐν σώματι, εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, οὐκ οἶδα] Many Commentators explain this to mean, that, during the raptures in question, the Apostle lost all consciousness of any thing around him (as in the case of Peter's trance, Acts x. 9); and that his outward senses were so entirely closed, (the whole perception being by the powers of the mind,) that he could not say whether his soul was then in the body, or removed from it. Est. enters at large, with his usual ability, into this most perplexing question, as to the doubt of Paul whether it was in the body or out of the body that the rapture here described took place. He adverts to Chrys. as being of opinion that the meaning intended by the Apostle is, that 'he did not know for certain whether the soul was rapt, the body being left dead, or whether the body was rapt (i. e. body with soul);' and he adduces Th. Aquinas and St. Augustin as with reason objecting to this view. Est. truly remarks that 'the difficulty hinges on this,—namely whether, in those things which he saw in rapture, the mind or soul saw conjoined with the body, or separate from the body.' 'Nam etsi dicatur anima mansisse conjuncta corpori, recte tamen intelligi potest, eam fuisse raptam.' It is a shrewd remark of Dr. Doddridge, that, 'what the presence of an immaterial soul in a body can be, distinct from the capacity of perceiving by it and acting upon it, we have yet to learn.' However, whatever may be the difficulty, it must by no means be removed in the summary way adopted by some recent Commentators; i. e. by supposing the Apostle only to mean, that 'the things were represented in so lively a manner, as to leave it doubtful whether they had not been really seen and heard; that he was quasi raptus extra se,' &c. By retaining the natural sense, though confessing the difficulty, we, at least, are enabled (with Whitby) to 'regard this as a proof of St. Paul's belief that the soul may have perception when out of the body, and consequently have an independent existence.'—To advert to a matter of far less moment—the doings of our Critical Editors. For ἐκτὸς Iachm., Tisch., and Alf. read χωρὶς from B, D, E, and no cursives; but wrongly; as I have shown on James iii. 17. Besides, the Apostle meant to repeat the very words,—which thus have more force, a force lost by the change into χωρὶς, which arose, as I have shown, from a desire to throw some light on a dark subject by substituting a term of greater exactness and plainness, and, perhaps, to remove tautology, and introduce variety. To suppose it, as Alf. says, 'a correction from ver. 2,' in all the copies except 3, and all the Versions, involves the highest improbability.—Ἀρπαγέντα—ἕως τρίτου οὐρ. Almost all Expositors, from the time of Grot., are of opinion, that this is accommodated to the language of the Jews of that age, who held that there were three heavens: 1. the region of the atmosphere; 2. the sidereal, or place of the stars; 3. the heaven properly so called, the abode of God and the angels. Meyer politely terms this 'a fiction of Grot.' But that so distinguished a Rabbinical scholar as Schoettg. should take it on trust, is not to be supposed. Others say, that the Jews held there were seven heavens; but that was prob. a fancy of the later Jewish Rabbins. Under these circumstances it seems the safest course, with Mr. Alf., not to follow any fixed division, but to understand a high degree of celestial exaltation. However, I do not see why it should not be as safe to say, with Schoettg., H. H. p. 718, 'Paulus his verbis non utitur, quasi ipse tres aut plures celos cum Judeis statuerit; sed phrasin tantum Judaicum adhibet, ut rem ipsam phrasi apud eos notā ἰμφοτικῶς proponat. Nimirum is celum rapti, vel pervenire, Judaicā locutione denotat, immediatam et summam revelationem Divinam habere: locutione a Moese desumptā, qui legem Divinam in ipso celo accepit, quorsum alii prophetae non pervenerunt, teste ipso Spiritu Sancto, Deut. xxxiv. 10.' The philological Commentators have failed to remark that this passage of the Apostle was had in view by the author of the Philopatris, in Lucian iii. 597, fin., where it is said of Paul, Γαλιλαῖος ἀναφαλαντίας ἐπὶ ἑρῆμους, ἐς τρίτον οὐρανὸν ἐροβαθήσας καὶ τὰ κάλλιστα ἐκμαθηκώς, &c. &c.

4. ἥρπαγῃ εἰς τὸν παρ.] It is debated whether this εἰς, or vision, be the same as the last, or another. Most of the modern Commentators are of the former opinion; while the ancients and several of the most eminent modern Expositors are of the latter. The raptures them-

δεισιν, καὶ ἤκουσεν ἄρρητα ῥήματα, ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπῳ
 λαλῆσαι. <sup>5</sup> *Τὸν τοιοῦτον καυχῆσομαι ὑπὲρ δὲ ἑμαυτοῦ οὐ καυχῆσομαι, εἰ μὴ ἐν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις μου. <sup>6</sup> *Ἐὰν γὰρ θελήσω καυχῆσασθαι, οὐκ ἔσομαι ἄφρων ἀλήθειαν γὰρ ἐρῶ φεῖδομαι δὲ, μή τις εἰς ἐμὲ λογίσσεται ὑπὲρ δὲ βλέπει με, ἢ ἀκούει τὶ ἐξ ἐμοῦ.

<sup>5</sup> Job 2. 6, 7.
<sup>6</sup> Luke 18. 16.
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 4. 6.

7 * Καὶ τῇ ὑπερβολῇ τῶν ἀποκαλύψεων ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι, selves were evidently distinct (though the one αὐτὸς *παρά*δ., perhaps immediately succeeded the other); the one, as transporting to heaven itself; the other εἰς τὸν παράδεισον, or the intermediate state (that of faithful souls, between death and the resurrection) mentioned in Luke xxiii. 43, and perhaps in Rev. ii. 7. Of this blessed state, Paul, it seems, had a brief foretaste.—Ἀρρητα ῥήματα. Ἀρρητα may signify either 'what cannot be uttered,' or 'what ought not to be uttered.' If the latter sense be the true one, the words following, ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν, &c., are explanatory of the preceding; and yet ἄρρητα, in that sense, required no explanation, since it was the common signification of the word. The former signif. is preferable, and the sense may be, 'ineffably, inexpressibly sublime,' such as no human intellect could comprehend.—The words following, ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπῳ λαλῆσαι, signify, 'and which [if they were capable of being expressed] it would not be lawful for me to communicate;' and that (Schoettg. observes) 'because the Apostle had not the authority to declare the mysteries revealed unto him, these having been not so much for the sake of the Church as for himself, for the strengthening of his own faith, and the alleviation of his sufferings.'

5, 6. Ὑπὲρ δὲ ἑμαυτοῦ—ἀκούει τὶ ἐξ ἐμοῦ [The full sense intended is, 'Of myself I will make no boast, except in respect of my infirmities (see note, supra, xi. 30) [though I might boast of far more, even ὅσας τις καὶ ἀποκαλύψει]; FOR were I to boast of them, I should not be foolish (incur the charge of foolish boasting), since I should [only] speak the truth,—but I spare (i. e. keep back what I could say), in order that no one may think more highly of me than [according to the standard I hold]; as he sees me to be, or hears from me,—namely, in my teaching.' Calvin observes, that "the Apostle here anticipates his adversaries, who might, from his saying that he 'would not boast,' draw the inference that he could not boast; and this he does by saying, 'I might with justice, and without subjecting myself to the charge of vanity, boast; for I have grounds enough: but I abstain.'" In fact, to avoid making this contradict what precedes, we may regard the Apostle as saying this referentially, q. d. 'Si gloriari voluero, non invenien stultus,'—namely, when compared with those who have no grounds for self-boasting.

7-10. Paul now adverts more distinctly to what was before mentioned,—'the infirmity in the flesh,' which had been a subject of deep mortification and regret; especially since it had hindered the efficiency of his public ministrations.

7. καὶ τῇ ὑπερβ.—ἰδὼθ μοι σκόλοψ τῇ

σαρκί] Render: 'and that I might not be over-exalted by the supereminence of the revelations [made to me] there was given to me a thorn for the flesh; Δατ. ἰσχυρῶς. This use of ἰδὼθ (very uncommon elsewhere) is decisive against the term being referred to Satan; as applied to God, it occurs similarly in 1 Cor. xi. 15. xii. 7. Gal. iii. 21, et al. To pass over here the many vain, and some absurd conjectures that have been hazarded, I would observe, that by σκόλοψ may be meant a paralytic affection (occasioned by the rapture originally, and afterwards continued by the mind pressing too much on the body), which, inflicting acute pain, and, by contracting the muscles of the face, thereby causing contortion of the countenance, would be a source of no small mortification to the Apostle's natural feelings, and to a certain degree tend to impede his usefulness;—though, at the same time, serving to keep him low (as he says, ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι) by making him sensible of his human weakness; and consequently such as it pleased the Lord not to remove. Σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί might, indeed, have allusion to the idea of acute bodily pain experienced from the disorder, whatever it might be (in which view not a little to the purpose are the words of Artemid. iii. 33, ἀκαθὰ καὶ σκόλοπι δόνας σημαίνουσι διὰ τὸ δέξυ); but the expression seems rather meant to advert to the mental pain, and keen mortification resulting from this bodily infirmity, than what belonged to the infirmity itself. The above view of the sense is substantially that adopted by Whitby, Benson, Mackn., Bp. Bull, Billr., and Peile. While, however, the term σκόλοψ may be thus explained figuratively and by metonymy, the next term, ἀγγέλος Σατάν, can be understood only of the aforesaid physical infirmity. And what is said we are to consider as said in the Apostle's own opinion (and not by an accommodation to Jewish ideas),—namely, as sent from Satan as it were by one of his ministers. This natural and obvious sense of the words, by which the infirmities of Satan must necessarily be inferred, is, I find, very properly contended for by Bp. Bull; yet he embarrasses the case with needless and well-nigh insuperable difficulties. In short, I suspect that one principal reason why St. Paul chose to use the expression was, because he wished the visitation in question to be considered in the light of a temptation, or trial of his faith, permitted by God to be sent by the Tempter: for it is in this view, and not in that of the Adversary, that Satan is here regarded; as appears, indeed, from the words of Gal. iv. 13, above noticed: where by πειρασμός is doubtless denoted the same as by σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί here. This very use of πειρασμός (namely, to denote 'such a tribulation, or mortification, as tries our ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί, ἄγγελος Σατάν, ἵνα με κολαφίζῃ, ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι. <sup>8</sup> Ὅτι τούτου τρίς τὸν Κύριον παρεκάλεσα, ἵνα ἀποστῇ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ. <sup>9</sup> καὶ εἰρήκῃ μοι. "Ἀρκεῖ σοι ἡ religious faith') occurs in James i. 2 and 12, and 1 Pet. i. 6. It appears, then, that in τῇ σαρκί here, and τῆς σαρκὸς in the passage of Gal. above adduced, there is a twofold allusion, (1) to the disorder, whatever it was, considered as a severe infliction; (2) to the disorder as considered in reference to its effect in humbling the pride, and trying the patience, of poor weak humanity, with all its frailties and infirmities; an effect which would indeed not a little come in aid of that wholesome self-control, by which the holy Apostle was enabled so uniformly to keep the inferior and corporeal in subjection to the superior and spiritual nature. The view which I have taken of this, as closely connected with τὸν πειρασμόν μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου, at Gal. iv. 14, and both connected with revelations vouchsafed to Paul in the beatific Vision, is, I find, confirmed by the opinion of Canon Tate (Cont. Hist. p. 150 sq.), where, after remarking that the σκόλοψ τ. σ. is with good reason supposed to have been the same with the infirmity of the flesh, and the temptation (i. e. severe trial) in the flesh, at an earlier period, recalled to the mind of the Galatians (Gal. iv. 13, 14), as having fallen under their notice, he subjoins:—'Now the beatific vision, referred to in 2 Cor. xii. 1—4, must have long preceded his first visit to Galatia; and therefore the thorn, if as an humiliation and chastisement [the παιδεία, 'loving-correction,' spoken of in Prov. iii. 4, 5, and Heb. xii. 4, 5, 19], it came soon after that remarkable event; must also have preceded the visit into that region, and must have continued at least till that period when the Galatians witnessed Paul actually suffering under it. But, in respect of the Corinthians, the case seems very different. That they witnessed such a visible infirmity when he appeared in Corinth the first time, there could hardly be any need to tell them of, so very particularly now. Probably, therefore, his prayers for deliverance from the affliction had, at length, been heard. Not a vestige of its existence can be traced down lower than in that notice of it to the Galatians.'—The words at the end of the verse, ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι, are absent from several of the most ancient MSS., and some Versions and Fathers, and were cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., ed. 1, but restored in ed. 2, rightly; since internal evidence is quite in their favour. Such a repetition, arising from that intensity of sense characteristic of a full mind, is no tautology, but conveys an emphasis. The words, as Jacks. testifies, occur in various passages of Origen, Cyprian, Macar., Chrys., and other Fathers. I find them in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies.

† Phil. 4. 18.
Col. 1. 11.
Heb. 11. 34.

8. παρεκάλεσα] 'I besought,' 'supplanted.' Of this sense (exceedingly rare) I have noted one (and only one) example, in Joseph. Bell. i. 23, 5, τῆς γνώμης τὸν Θεὸν σύμψηφον—παρακαλῶ γινίσθαι. By τὸν Κύριον is, as appears from the next verse, to be understood Christ. See Whitby, Macknight, and Smith's Scrip. Test., vol. ii. p. 229. iii. 251, who rightly notice this as an example of prayer to Christ, and consequently a proof of the Divinity of Christ. In τρίς, the Commentators remark, we have a certain on an uncertain but large number, to signify oftentimes. So Eurip. Hippol. 46, μηδαὶν μάταιον αἰετρίς εἰδῆσθαι Θεῶν, and Job xxxiii. 29. But there is no need to resort to that principle. The words ἵνα ἀποστῇ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ may best be rendered, 'that it might be removed from me;' for the Aorist Active of this and other compounds of ἵστημι are not unfrequently used in a Passive sense. Though the expression itself may have been selected, as meant to have reference both to the infliction and the inflictor, namely, ἄγγελος Σατάν. Comp. Job vii. 16, Sept., ἀπόστα ἀπ' ἐμοῦ. Mackn. well remarks 'that this example of prayer rejected ought to be well attended to by all good men; because it shows that they neither should be discouraged when their most earnest prayers seem to be disregarded, nor discontented when they are rejected; because in both cases their good is designed, and effectually promoted.'

9. εἰρήκῃ μοι] Namely, either by vision or by the Bath Kol, mentioned in 1 Kings xix. 12. In ἀρκεῖ σοι we have, as Bengel remarks, benignissima repulsa.—ἀρκεῖ σοι ἡ χάρις μου. The full sense of the words will stand thus: 'It is not necessary nor expedient that what thou askest should now be granted (namely, that this visitation should be removed from him), because my grace is sufficient to enable thee to overcome this evil.' By ἡ χάρις, Calvin remarks, is here to be understood, not (as many explain) the favour of God, but, by metonymy, the gracious aid of the Holy Spirit, through whose support he would be made more than conqueror. Accordingly, the full sense intended by ἀρκεῖ is, 'is sufficient for thy aid and support.' Why it is sufficient is shown by the words following. ἡ γὰρ δύναμις—τελειοῦται, 'for through weakness is it that my strength is completely manifested.' Comp. Sap. iv. 7, and see note on 1 Cor. i. 27—31. The μου after δύναμις, not found in 5 uncial MSS. and several Versions (not, however, including the Pesch. Syr.), and certain Fathers, has been cancelled by Lachm., Tisch., and Alf.; but not on good grounds, since it is supported by the great body of the MSS., including some of the most ancient, as B, C, E; and internal evidence is not against it; for it is more likely that the μου should have been removed by those who thought that the absence of σου after δυνάμις required its absence here, than that any should have (as Bengel thought) brought in μου to correspond to σου. Not to say that the μου cannot be dispensed with, since it is, as Calvin well saw, emphatic, the general sense intended being, 'for my strength (i. e. the strength imparted by me), plenus eo exornatus in,' &c., namely, as thus showing itself all-sufficient in the weakness of the instruments employed.—Ἠδιστα οὖν—ἀσθ. μου. There is some appearance of incongruity between Ἠδιστα and καυχ.; Ἠδιστα rather requiring ὑποσώμεν, as 2 Macc. ii. 28, ἦδιστε τὴν κακοπάθειαν ὑποσώμεν. This, however, may be removed by supposing in καυχ. a significatio χάρις μου ἡ γὰρ δύναμις μου ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ τελειοῦται." Ἡδιστα οὖν μᾶλλον καυχῆσομαι ἐν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις μου, ἵνα ἐπισκηνώσῃ ἐπ' ἐμέ ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>10</sup> Διὸ εὐδοκῶ ἐν ἀσθενείαις, ἐν ὕβρεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν διωγμοῖς, ἐν στενοχωρίαις ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ· ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ, τότε δυνατός εἰμι. <sup>11</sup> Ἔγωνα ἄφρων [καυχώμενος]· ὑμεῖς με ἠναγκάσατε. ἐγὼ γὰρ ὥφειλον ὑφ' ὑμῶν συνίστασθαι· οὐδὲν γὰρ ὑπέρησα τῶν υπερβάν ἀποστόλων, εἰ καὶ οὐδὲν εἰμι. <sup>13</sup> Ἐὰν μὲν σημεῖα τοῦ ἀποστόλου κατεργάσθῃ ἐν ὑμῖν ἐν πάσῃ ὑπομονῇ, [ἐν] σημείοις καὶ τέρασιν καὶ δυνάμεσιν. <sup>13</sup> Τί γάρ ἐστιν ὃ ἡττήθητε ὑπὲρ τὰς λοιπὰς

g. ch. 11. 1, 16, 17.
1 Cor. 15. 8—
10.
Eph. 3. 8.

h Rom. 15.
10.
1 Cor. 9. 2.
ch. 9. 4.
2 Th. 1. 6.
1 Cor. 9. 12.
ch. 11. 7, 9.

præsumens, thus: 'Most willingly, therefore, will I bear with, nay, rather rejoice in and boast over my infirmities [than be discouraged under them].' Considering the rare (not to say unprecedented) conjunction of these words, ἡδιστα and μᾶλλον, we may suppose, with Fritz, that the μᾶλλον is to be construed, not with ἡδιστα, but with καυχῆ. Thus the sense will be, 'I will prefer to make my boast of, rather than complain of.' As respects ἀσθενῶ, the term here and in the next verse, as also in the former clause of this verse, denotes 'such afflictions, trials, and tribulations as are sent to try the faith of the saints.' The next words, ἵνα ἐπισκηνώσῃ ἐπ' ἐμέ ἡ δύναμις Χρ., are meant to intimate that, as it were, condition or ground of the foregoing sentiment,—namely, so that (thereby) the strength (virtus, vis, 'power to strengthen') may rest upon or abide in me, i. e. for support, so that out of weakness I may become strong (see Heb. xi. 34). Comp. Isa. xl. 29.

<sup>10</sup> Διὸ εὐδοκῶ ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ.] Render: 'Wherefore I am well pleased with, I complacently acquiesce in,' namely, for the reasons above mentioned, as alluded to in the διὸ; for, as observes Est., the ἀσθενῶ would not be desirable per se. This sense of εὐδοκῶ, occurring also supra v. 8, is of good authority, being found in Polyb. ii. 12, 3, ἡ Τ. ποιεῖται συνθέκας, ἐν αἷς εὐδόκησας, 'acquiesced.'—In ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ, τότε δυνατός εἰμι, we have a beautiful turn (similar to one in Philo, cited by Wetstein, μὴ ἀναπίπτει, τὸ ἀσθενεῖς ὑμῶν δύναμις ἐστι); q. d. 'The more I am brought down by tribulation, the more do I experience the supports of Divine strength.' See Phil. iv. 13.

<sup>11</sup> Ἔγωνα ἄφρων καυχῆ.] As the Apostle began this detail of his merits and spiritual endowments with the deprecatory softening ἀνέχασθί μου τῆς ἀφρ., &c., and ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθε, so he ends it with an apology introductory of the reason for it; q. d. 'Ye see, then, that I have made myself a fool in boasting. But ye have compelled me so to do, viz. by rendering it necessary to do justice to myself, and also for your good, by disabusing you of your prejudices.' It is truly observed by Bp. Sanderson, in his Sermon on Job xxix. 14—17, that 'when men do us manifest wrong, it is not vanity, but charity, to do ourselves right; and whatever appearance of folly or vain boasting there may be in so doing, those are chargeable with all, who compel us thereunto, and not we.'—Ἐγὼ γὰρ ὥφειλον ὑφ' ὑμῶν συνίστ. These words show how the Apostle was compelled to do this;

namely, by the want of that commendation from them which was his dus, since he was nothing inferior to the chiefest Apostles. His merits and endowments ought to have been summed up by them, and then it would not have been necessary to praise himself.—Εἰ καὶ οὐδὲν εἰμι. Some regard this as spoken saturnally, and ex opinione pseudopostolorum; 'though I am, it seems, a nobody.' So Soph. Trach. 1109, κἄν τὸ μηδὲν εἴ, and Aj. 767, κἄν ὁ μηδὲν ὦν. But more natural and probable is the usual view, by which the words are understood as spoken seriously, and as expressive of genuine humility; his own weaknesses being considered apart from the strength of his Lord. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 8—10.

<sup>12</sup> τὰ μὲν σημεῖα ὑπομονῇ.] Render: 'the marks, to wit, of the Apostle, have been wrought out [by me] among you (meaning that they have been set forth) with all patient perseverance.' On this force of the Article as denoting an individual of an entire class of agents, Bp. Middl. and Mr. Green are agreed, and adduce as an ex. 'He gave proofs of the general,' or 'the hero.' The words τὰ μὲν σημεῖα καταργῶ, have reference to οὐδὲν ὑστ. τῶν λοιπῶν ἀποστόλων in the preceding verse (the words εἰ καὶ οὐδὲν εἰμι being a parenthetical remark), and are meant to prove the assertion. The words ἐν πάσῃ ὑπομονῇ I have showed long ago in Rec. Syn. to be taken, not simply of 'patience' (or the 'power of suffering wrong, or enduring pain or labour'), but of 'patient perseverance by continuance in well-doing,' an explanation confirmed by Luke viii. 15. The ἐν before σημείοις is absent from five uncial and six cursive MSS. (to which I add Lamb. 1182, 1183), and several Versions, and is cancelled by Lachm., Tisch., and Alf., perhaps rightly; since it may have crept in from the ἐν before.

<sup>13</sup> Having shown that no signs of an Apostle were wanting in him, he inquires whether there be any other deficiency which should leave them inferior to other churches; q. d. '[What have you to complain of?] for in what, &c.—ἤτι. here signifies to be in an inferior condition; of which sense some examples are cited from the Classical writers.—ὑπὲρ is for μᾶλλον &c.—αὐτὸς ἐγὼ is emphatic; q. d. 'I myself have not, whatever others may have.'—χαρισσασθί μοι τὴν δό. τ., 'forgive me this wrong,' if that be a wrong.' A keen sarcasm, with which comp. D. Hal. Ant. p. 1825, 5, τινοὺς οὖν ἀδικήματος ὑπεύθυνους εἰμι ὑμῖν; εἰ μὴ τὸ νικᾶν τοὺς πολέμους ἐστὶν ὑμᾶς ἀδικεῖν. 'Adikia in this sense occurs no where else in the New Test., though ἐκκλησίας, εἰ μὴ, ὅτι αὐτὸς ἐγὼ οὐ κατενάρκησα ὑμῶν; χαρί-

 σασθέ μοι τὴν ἀδικίαν ταύτην. <sup>14</sup> Ἰδοὺ, τρίτον ἐτοίμως ἔχω <sup>k Acts 20.</sup> ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ οὐ καταναρκήσω ὑμῶν· οὐ γὰρ ζητῶ τὰ <sup>ch. 13. 1.</sup> ὑμῶν, ἀλλ' ὑμᾶς· οὐ γὰρ ὀφείλει τὰ τέκνα τοῖς γονεῦσι θησαυ- <sup>1 Cor. 4. 14.</sup> ρίζειν, ἀλλ' οἱ γονεῖς τοῖς τέκνοις. <sup>15</sup> Ἐγὼ δὲ ἥδιστα δαπα- <sup>1 ch. 1. 6.</sup>
 νήσω καὶ ἐκδapaνηθήσομαι ὑπὲρ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν· εἰ καὶ, <sup>& 6. 12, 13.</sup> περισσοτέρως ὑμᾶς ἀγαπῶν, ἤττον ἀγαπῶμαι. <sup>16</sup> Ἔστω δέ <sup>Col. 1. 24.</sup>
 ἐγὼ οὐ κατεβάρησα ὑμᾶς· ἀλλ', ὑπάρχων πανούργος, δόλω ὑμᾶς <sup>2 Tim. 2. 10.</sup> ἔλαβον. <sup>17</sup> Μὴ τινα ὧν ἀπέσταλκα πρὸς ὑμᾶς, δι' αὐτοῦ <sup>m ch. 7. 2.</sup> ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς; <sup>18</sup> Παρεκάλεσα Τίτον, καὶ συναπέστειλα <sup>n ch. 8. 6, 15.</sup> τὸν ἀδελφόν· μήτι ἐπλεονέκτησεν ὑμᾶς Τίτος; οὐ τῷ αὐτῷ <sup>18, 22.</sup> πνεύματι περιεπατήσαμεν; οὐ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἴχνεσι;
<sup>19</sup> Πάλιν δοκεῖτε ὅτι ὑμῖν ἀπολογούμεθα; κατενώπιον τοῦ <sup>o ch. 8. 12.</sup>
<sup>& 11. 31.</sup>
<sup>1 Cor. 10. 28.</sup>

occasionally in the Clementine writers, and in Joan. Antt. xvi. 4, 3, fin., ὡς ἔχουν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ τοῦ διδωκότος, 'to the injury of him who gave it.' Here we have a most keen sarcasm.

14. This and the next verse may be considered parenthetical; v. 16 being closely connected with v. 13. The scope of the passage is to exclude any misrepresentation of the false teachers,—that he was only urging his past moderation, to pave the way for future demands upon them. Thus the sense is, 'I have not been burdensome to you [heretofore]; and when I come to you again, [as I am now for the third time purposing in mind to do,] I will not be burdensome to you.' So xi. 12, ὃ δὲ τοῦ καὶ ποιήσω. The best Commentators are agreed that τρίτον is to be referred to ἵστομαι ἔχω; since it appears from i. 15 that his last visit could only be the second.—After τρίτον is, in some Versions and Fathers, added τοῦτο, which has been received by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but, I think, wrongly; since internal evidence is quite against it; for while we may easily account for its insertion,—namely, from ch. xiii. 1, we can by no means for its omission; not a single MS. being there without it, though many MSS., Versions, and Fathers have there added ἵδω, manifestly from the present passage: inasmuch that no Editor there has admitted it. But τοῦτο is on the very same footing.—Ὁ δὲ γὰρ ζητῶ—ὑμᾶς, q. d. 'I seek not your substance, but only desire the salvation of your souls.' In γὰρ ὀφείλει—τέκνοις there is an adagial sentence (perhaps formed on Ezek. xxxiv. 2), expressed populariter, and referring to what is natural, and in the regular order of things.

15. ἀγά· 'I for my part.' See note on 1 Cor. v. 3.—Δαπανήσω καὶ ἐκδew.; q. d. 'I am ready to spend my time, substance, health, strength,—nay, my very life for your sake.'—Ἐκδew. signifies 'to be utterly exhausted by labours,' &c. Thus the expression is similar to that at Acts xx. 24, ἀλλ' οὐδένος λόγον ποιῶμαι, οὐδὲ ἔχω τὴν ψυχὴν μου τιμᾶν ἑμαυτῷ. It is a fine remark of Theodor. and Theophyl., that 'what is here said is at once accusatory and yet consolatory. He heals the pain he might inflict by charging them with want of affection to him, by intimating his great affection for them.'

16. Ἔστω δὲ—ἔλαβον.] The Apostle here speaks in the person of his calumniators, making their words his own.—Δόλω ὑμᾶς ἔλαβον is supposed by almost all Commentators to mean, 'I took you in,' 'made a gain of you, by artifice and stratagem.' The sense, however, seems simply to be, 'I practised, it seems, upon you a piece of refined artifice, and sought to accomplish my selfish purpose by the instrumentality of another person.'

17. Here τινα—δι' αὐτοῦ is put, by a popular mode of expression, for διὰ τινα ἰκέλευν, οὐν, &c.

18. παρεκάλ. Τίτον, &c.] This has reference to what was said supra, viii. 6, 18. The Apostle appeals to facts, which they themselves could not deny; and the interrogation at μήτι ἔπλεον. implies a strong negation. The sentence, arranged according to the regularity of Western composition, would run thus: 'Did Titus, whom I requested to go to you, or the brother whom I sent with him, make a gain of you?' This the Apostle follows up with a sentence in which the consequent is put for the antecedent. He does not say, 'No, they walked in my steps,' but delicately substitutes, 'Have we not walked in the same spirit,—pursued the same disinterested course?' In fact the verb περιεπ. is to be taken per dialogum twice, in a somewhat different sense, as adapted to each of the two clauses. In the former, it may be rendered 'live,' or rather 'act.' Comp. Gal. v. 16, πνεύματι περιπατεῖτε. One might, indeed, have expected that after ἔχ. would have been subjoined ἐστοιχίσασμαι, as Gal. v. 25, σὺ ὡς μὲν πνεύματι, πνεύματι στοιχῶμαι, meaning, 'walk habitually according to its dictates;' by a metaphor taken from soldiers who step firm and in a straight line laid down,—comp. also Rom. iv. 12,—but περιπατ. is here meant to include that sense.

19. πάλιν δοκεῖτε ὅτι, &c.] The πάλιν δοκεῖτε has reference to what was said supra, iii. 1; q. d. 'Think ye again that I am defending myself before you?' &c. Paul says this, in order that the anxiety which he shows to justify himself in all respects may not be ascribed to improper motives,—whether timidity or selfishness. The πάλιν refers to iii. 1. v. 12. Now the Apostle does not reply to this by a p 1 Cor. 4. 21.

ch. 10. 3.
8. 15. 9. 10.
q ch. 5. 2.
r Rom. 12.
15.
1 Cor. 5.
9-11.
15-18.
Gal. 5. 10.
Eph. 5. 5, 6.
Col. 3. 5.
1 Thess. 4.
8-7.
Heb. 12. 4.
a ch. 12. 14.
Num. 25. 20.
Deut. 17. 6.
& 19. 15.
Matt. 18. 16.
John 8. 17.

Θεοῦ, ἐν Χριστῷ λαλοῦμεν τὰ δὲ πάντα, ἀγαπητοί, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὁμῶν οἰκοδομῆς. 20 <sup>p</sup> Φοβοῦμαι γὰρ, μήπως ἐλθὼν, οὐχ οἶους θέλω εὗρω ὑμᾶς, κἀγὼ εὑρεθῶ, ὑμῖν οἶον οὐ θέλετε μήπως ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, ἐριθείαι, καταλαλῖαι, ψιθυρισμοί, φυσιώσεις, ἀκαταστασίαι· 21 <sup>q</sup> μὴ πάλιν ἐλθόντα με ταπεινώσῃ ὁ Θεός μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ πενθήσω πολλοὺς τῶν προσημαρτηκότων, καὶ μὴ μετανοησάντων· ἐπὶ τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ πορνείᾳ καὶ ἀσελγείᾳ ἣ ἔπραξαν.

XIII. 1 <sup>a</sup> Τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐπὶ στόμα-strong negation, οὐχι, but leaves that to be implied,—by stating, with a solemn protestation, that his views, in acting and writing as he has done, have been solely their edification and spiritual benefit.—To advert to a matter of reading.

For πάλιν MSS. A, B, F, G, and a few cursives (to which I can make no addition), read πάλαι, which has been received into the text by Lachm., Tisch., and Alf.; but not on good grounds; for the sense they assign, ‘ye have long since been thinking,’—namely, throughout the whole of this portion of my Epistle, is very strained and far-fetched, and not to be extracted from the words without violence. And, as regards antiquity, πάλιν has the support of the Pesh. Syr. Version (where the expression employed by the translator signifies ‘yet again,’ or ‘still,’ equivalents to ‘once more’), as also that of Cod. C and D.
In short, external authority is quite in favour of πάλιν, and so is internal evidence, as existing in the want of probability that πάλαι should have been altered into πάλιν, while, on the other hand, πάλιν might very well by the scribes be confounded with πάλαι, which has in other cases occurred.—Of πάλιν confounded by the scribes with πάλαι many instances have been adduced from various Philological writers by Schaefer on Stoph. Thea. in v. πάλαι, to which I can add Thucyd. iii. 79, 1, where for Vulg.
πάλαι, Bek., Poppo, Arn., and myself, edit πάλιν, from five MSS. Sometimes all the MSS. unite in one or other of the two words, though the other is called for by internal evidence. Thus in Pherecr. Metall. frag. i. 33, p. 108 (Meincke), διπλάσι· ἰγίγναι· εὐδὲν ἐξ ἀρχῆς πάλιν,
the author must have written πάλαι. Read διπλ.
ἰγ. εὐδ. ἣ ἔξ ἀρχῆς πάλαι: the former emendation is called for by the context. But, to advert to the sense of the variously interpreted words κατανώπιον (or, as Lachm. and Tisch.
read, κατίναντι, as supra, ii. 17, where see note) τοῦ Θεοῦ—λαλοῦμεν, I am now of opinion that it is the same as in the altogether similar passage at ii. 17. Accordingly, the sense may be thus expressed: ‘It is in the presence of God, in the name, or person (i. e. by the authority), of Christ that we are speaking, as if Christ were speaking by us.’ Comp. xiii. 3.

20. φοβοῦμαι γὰρ, μήπως, &c.] The connexion here is not very obvious, and has been but imperfectly traced. The thread of connexion may most simply and naturally be supposed to hang by ὁμῶν οἰκοδομῆς, thus: ‘Your edification, I say,—[and need enough there is for this furtherance in the Divine life]: FOR I fear lest perchance on coming I should find you not such as I wish you to be,—and so I should be found by you such as ye would not [have me to be]:

lest haply there should be found among you,’ &c.
Of these various terms, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, &c.,
the first three seem meant to designate the strife, jealousy, and angry contention of individuals, engendered by a party spirit, in their open and more violent forms; and the next two, κατα- λαλῖαι and ψιθυρισμοί, the secret and underhand effects of the same spirit, as shown in slandering and backbiting, by which would be kept alive the embers of discord. In the first class are included the teachers, the second must refer to the disciples, their partisans, who fomented the σχίσματα and ἰριδῆς mentioned at 1 Cor. i. 10 —12, and the ζῆλοι καὶ ἔρις καὶ διχοστασίαι mentioned at 1 Cor. iii. 3. By ἔρεις are here to be understood, not a party spirit, but simply rivalries, meaning those of the teachers one against another. The last two terms, φυσιώσεις and ἀκαταστασίαι seem meant to designate generally the effects of this party spirit, both on the teachers and the taught; on the teachers, by puffing them up with spiritual pride (to which purpose may be noticed a certain phrase occurring in a very ancient writing found in Routh’s Reliq.
Sacrae, t. ii. p. 874), φυσίωμα πνεύματος (i. e.
‘spiritual pride’); on their disciples by blowing up the coals of a party spirit, busy in magnifying one teacher to the prejudice of another. Comp.
1 Cor. iv. 6. The last-mentioned term ἀκατα- στασίαι may be supposed to refer in a general way to that state of tumult and confusion, which must ever arise in a Christian society from διχο- στασίαι and party spirit. Comp. James iii. 16,
ἔπον ζῆλοι καὶ ἰριθεῖα, ἐκὰς ἀκαταστασία καὶ πάν φάυλον πρᾶγμα, adverting to a state of things nearly resembling that in the Church of Corinth when St. Paul wrote his Second Epistle; for there, as here, the strife, &c. had (as we find from the context) arisen from a rivalry among the πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι there spoken of, who, together with their disciples, had ‘sinned not a little with their tongues’: which evil propensity is nearly allied to what is here denoted by κατα- λαλῖαι and ψιθυρισμοί.

21. Here the Apostle hints at something worse, —immorality.—Πάλιν may be taken either with ἐλθόντα, or with ταπεινώσῃ. But the former seems preferable.—Μή με ταπειν. ὁ Θεός μου
π. ὑ., ‘lest my God should humble me in respect of you;’ i. e. lest I should be mortified, and grieved to find, in some of you, so little profit of my labours.—Πεσθ. πολλ., &c. The sense is, ‘[lest] I may have to bewail many who have not repented, and forsaken their sins.’

XIII. In this Chapter the Apostle proceeds to τος δύο μαρτύρων καὶ τριῶν σταθήσεται πᾶν ῥῆμα.

<sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Προείρηκα καὶ προλέγω, (ὡς παρὼν τὸ δεύτερον, <sup>b</sup> καὶ ἂπὼν <sup>b</sup> ch. 13. 11. & 1. 32.) νῦν,) [γράφω] τοῖς προσημαρτηκόσι, καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσιν, ὅτι ἐὰν ἔλθω εἰς τὸ πάλιν, οὐ φείσομαι. <sup>3</sup> <sup>c</sup> ἐπεὶ δοκι- <sup>c</sup> Matt. 10. 30. <sup>1</sup> Cor. 9. 1. μὴν ζητεῖτε τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ λαλοῦντος Χριστοῦ, ὃς εἰς ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἄσθενεῖ, ἀλλὰ δυνατεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν. <sup>4</sup> <sup>d</sup> Καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἐσταυρώθη <sup>d</sup> Phil. 2. 7. <sup>1</sup> Pet. 2. 18. ἐξ ἄσθενείας, ἀλλὰ ζῇ ἐκ δυνάμεως Θεοῦ καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἄσθε- νοῦμεν ἐν αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ ζησόμεθα σὺν αὐτῷ ἐκ δυνάμεως Θεοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς. <sup>5</sup> <sup>e</sup> Ἐαυτοὺς πειράζετε εἰ ἐστὲ ἐν τῇ πίστει, ἑαυτοὺς <sup>e</sup> 1 Cor. 11.

intimate his purpose to inflict punishments supernaturally, on those who persisted in resisting his authority. And after exhorting them to self-examination, and to anticipate his correction by timely reformation, he concludes with exhortations, salutations, and benedictions.

1. τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχ. 'I am preparing for the third time and intending to come.' See note supra xii. 14.—ἐπὶ στόματος δύο—ῥῆμα. The purport of these words has been not a little disputed. Many Expositors suppose the meaning to be, 'When I come, every matter or complaint respecting impenitent offenders shall come to a regular process, and be decided according to the rule laid down in the Law (Numb. xxxv. 30. Deut. xvii. 6. xix. 15), and sanctioned by the Gospel (see Matt. xviii. 15. 18), that by the testimony of two or three witnesses,' &c. Some ancient and several modern Commentators, (as Calv., Est., Grot., Hamm., and Locke,) indeed, understand by these witnesses the Apostle's admonitions in his Epistles.

2. προείρηκα καὶ προλέγω [As much as to say, 'I have [just] before told you, and I [now] give you this notice beforehand,' equiv. to προαναφώνω. Here, however, the idea of warning, under that of threat, seems implied, as in a kindred passage of Gal. v. 21, ἐὰν προλέγω ὑμῖν, καθὼς καὶ προείπον, ὅτι, &c. With respect to ὡς παρὼν νῦν, the best Commentators are agreed that the sense is, 'as if I were present the second time, though now, as yet, absent.'—Γράφω is wanting in several MSS. of the Western recension, and is cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., and Alf.; rightly; for we can better account for its insertion than its omission.

3. 4. Many recent Commentators connect ἐπὶ δοκιμῇ—Χριστοῦ at ver. 3, with ἐαυτοὺς πειρ. at ver. 5, thus making the former contain a protasis, and the latter an apodosis, and throwing the intermediate words into a parenthesis. But though this method yields a good sense, it seems too artificial; nor is the Apostle accustomed so accurately to complete a sentence, interrupted by some parenthesis. The usual mode of pointing and taking the words seems to be more natural, and yields full as good a sense. The sense of ver. 3 may be thus expressed: 'Especially since some of you boldly demand a proof of Christ's speaking in me, as his Apostle; though this has been already confirmed by evidence of the strongest kind,—namely, by His mighty power working in and through me in various ways.' The next words are meant to show that the proof does exist, and their full sense is (ὅτι being put for καὶ αὐτόν), 'whereas he is not weak as regards you, but is mighty [in operation among you],' viz. 'by and through me, even by the working of miracles and the communication of the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit,' which attested Paul's divine legation. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 4, ὁ λόγος μου ἐν ἀποδείξει Πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως (scil. ἡν) meaning of the Spirit and of power from on high. Comp. Acts x. 38.

4. καὶ γὰρ—Θεοῦ Render: 'For even were He crucified out of (equiv. to 'through') weakness (in the likeness of sinful flesh, see Rom. viii. 3), yet He is still living through the mighty power of God.' See Rom. i. 16. Phil. iii. 21. In the next member of the sentence καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἄσθε—ὑμᾶς, there is adduced another proof of Christ's power; and the general sense is, 'And so truly we his ministers, (though) we are weak in ourselves as to Him, yet shall we live with him,' &c.—ζήσομεν. Lachm. and Tisch. edit ζησόμεθα, from A, B, D, F, G, and 6 cursives. But the Active form is found in all the other MSS. (including the Lamb. and Mus. copies.) However, it may be the true reading, and the Active form does occur in several other passages where the bulk of the MSS. have the Middle form (e. gr. Mark v. 23, ζήσῃ, for rec. ζήσεται: Luke x. 28, ζήσῃσι for ζήσῃ: John v. 25, ζήσουσιν, and ver. 58, ζήσονται: vi. 51, ζήσῃσι for ζήσεται: vi. 57, ζήσῃσι for ζήσεται bis; xiv. 19, ζήσῃτε for ζήσῃσθε, and Lachm. mostly receives the active form—perhaps rightly; but the idiom seems confined to the Gospels, and was probably not in use by St. Paul. Thus ζήσῃσθε is found in all the copies at Rom. viii. 13. Why, then, should not ζησόμεθα have been here written by him? Besides, ζήσομεν may very possibly have arisen from scribes mistaking the reading ζησόμεθα (so it is written in Lamb. MS. 1182) for ζήσομεν, by the α having faded away, and then the 5 might be mistaken for ν.

5. ἐαυτοὺς πειρ., &c. Instead of demanding proofs, where none ought equitably to be required, Paul bids them try and examine themselves; q. d. 'Yourselves try ye whether ye are [or not] in the faith; yourselves put ye to the proof.' For (as appears from the prominent position given to them) a certain emphasis is meant to be imparted to the Pronouns, it being meant, in other words, that the test is to be applied to the taught, and not to the teachers. He means to say, that if they be in the faith of Christ, they will find sufficient evidences of his own Divine legation in the spiritual gifts, and general reformation produced through his preaching, as well as to prove Christ to be in them, by his power.

δοκιμάζετε ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγινώσκετε ἑαυτοὺς, ὅτι Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστίν; εἰ μὴτι ἀδόκιμοί ἐστε. <sup>6</sup> Ἐλπίζω δὲ ὅτι γνώσεσθε ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐσμὲν ἀδόκιμοι. <sup>7</sup> † Εὐχόμεαι δὲ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, μὴ ποιῆσαι ὑμᾶς κακὸν μηδὲν οὐχ ἵνα ἡμεῖς δόκιμοι φανώμεν, ἀλλ' ἵνα ὑμεῖς τὸ καλὸν ποιῆτε, ἡμεῖς δὲ ὡς ἀδόκιμοι ὤμεν. <sup>8</sup> οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθά τι κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀληθείας. <sup>9</sup> εὐχαίρομεν γὰρ ὅταν ἡμεῖς ἀσθενώμεν, ὑμεῖς δὲ δυ-

g ch. 11. 30.
ε 12. 5, 9, 10.

— ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγινώσκετε—ἐστίν;] The full sense may be thus expressed: 'What, know ye not yourselves, and find that Jesus is in you? [as know it ye must,] unless, indeed, ye be not genuine Christians, [and accordingly devoid of proof whether Jesus be in you, or not.]' I am still, as formerly, of opinion that the Apostle uses ἀδόκιμοι in a twofold view, per dilogiam, by a paronomasia, and with a certain pregnancy of sense which is not unfrequent in Thucydides.

6. ἐλπίζω δὲ ὅτι—ἀδόκιμοι.] The full sense is: 'I hope, however, that ye will [know by proof that we are not [as has been said of us] unguine (i. e. counterfeit) apostles and ministers.] A metaphor derived from money assailed by the stamp of genuineness, and which therefore is not taken. So Plut. Mor. p. 4, ἀνθρώποις ἀδόκιμοι καὶ παρασήμεροι. So here the sense is, 'counterfeit,' and 'devoid of the Divine power claimed by us.' The ancient Greek Commentators, and several modern ones, take the purport of these words to be minatory. But the case now seems to me not fully made out. Hence I prefer to understand the γνώσ. of 'knowledge by convictionment,' arising from the truth of the case, and the marks of Apostleship in re, or, as Thom. Aquin. explains, ex viâ et doctrinâ nostrâ quam ostendo vobis. There may, however, be intended a twofold sense, as referred to the two classes,—the well-inclined, and the evil-inclined. The former would come to the knowledge in question in the way just adverted to. They could not disprove Paul's true apostleship without also disproving their own conversion, since 'the seal of his apostleship were they in the Lord.' See ch. iii. 1—3, and 1 Cor. ix. 1—3. The latter would come to the knowledge in question in another way,—namely, from the fruits of bitter experience of his power to punish disobedience. This is confirmed by the words of ver. 7, εὐχόμεαι δὲ—ἀδόκ. ὤμεν, of which the full sense (from delicacy imperfectly developed) is this: 'However, I pray to God that ye may do nothing evil and worthy of punishment; my wish being not that our divine commission may be [by that means] approved; but [rather] that ye may do what is good, and that we may [thereby] be, as it were, without that proof [by not having to exercise the power], viz. of punishing offenders.' The ellipsis before εἰ, constituting the chief cause of the difficulty here existing, was well seen, and the difficulty ably removed, by Theophyl. and Phot.—To turn to a matter of reading. For εὐχόμεαι, Laehm., Tisch., and Alf. edit εὐχόμεθα, from 5 uncials, 7 cursives, and some Fathers; and internal evidence is in its favour; though εὐχόμεαι is confirmed by all the Versions, except the Vulgate.

8. οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθα—ἀληθείας.] The connexion here is far from obvious, and the sense, any thing but clear, has been variously explained. The mode of tracing the connexion pursued by Billroth is harsh and far-fetched, and the supply of so many words to which the γὰρ is thus made to refer is unsatisfactory. As respects the purport of the words in question, this was ably drawn forth by Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and Photius, and after their time by T. Aquinas, De Lyra, and Est. Yet they all pass over the force of the γὰρ, which seems to have been alone perceived by Hyper., who annotates thus: 'Confirmat quod ita sit erga eos affectus argumento sumpto a suo officio, seu vero usu Apostolicæ potestatis, q. d. Si honeste agitis, nos nihil in vos poterimus: nam potestas nostra duntaxat exercenda est adversus eos qui male agunt, quique adversantur veritati, i. e. sanæ doctrinæ et vitæ sanctimonie.' I cannot, however, agree with him in assigning to ἀλθ. a sense so comprehensive as to include sound doctrine; but would understand it to denote simply, what the best Expositors unanimously explain the term to mean, namely,—by a Hebraistic idiom,—vitas integritas; quod rectum et iustum est, which is the sense that the word bears at John iii. 21, ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. 2 John 4, περιπατεῖν ἐν ἀληθείᾳ. 8 John 3, et al. Comp. Phil. iv. 8. The term δυνάμει is to be used with reference to potestas punitiva, which does not come into force, is not exercised, so long as ἡ ἀλήθεια, truly right action, which renders it unnecessary, is preserved, and consequently he, who otherwise could, then cannot exercise it.

9. χαίρομεν γὰρ ὅταν—ἦτε.] The γὰρ here must not be passed over, but accounted for by co-ordinating ver. 9 with ver. 7, so as to make it furnish a second reason for ver. 7; q. d. 'Nay, so far are we from wishing to give proof of our power, by having to punish your irregularities, that we rather rejoice when we are (thus) weak (i. e. seem weak, by not having our power shown by the proof) and ye are strong (in faith and good works). Agreeably to this view, which is confirmed by Calv., Hyper., and Billr., the γὰρ may be taken nearly in the same sense as in the former verse, namely, 'Why, = yea, we rejoice!'—τοῦτο δὲ καὶ εὐχόμεθα, τὴν ὑμῶν κατάρτισιν. Render: 'Now this it is, which we pray for (votis prosequimur), your restoration [as a body in Christ] to a sound and perfect state, so as to be both, as individuals, spiritually whole (comp. Gal. vi. 1, καταρτίζεσθε τοιοῦτος), and, as a body, in a sound state as to Church unity.' Comp. 1 Cor. i. 10. With respect to the general sense, it is, as Beza points out, that 'whereas the members of the Corinthian Church were all, as it were, dislocated and out of joint, they should be joined together in love (1 Cor. i. 10), and thus endeavour to make perfect (1 Thess. iii. 10. Heb. xiii. 21. 1 Pet.

νατοὶ ἦτε· τοῦτο δὲ καὶ εὐχόμεθα, τὴν ὑμῶν κατάρτισιν. <sup>10 h</sup> Διὰ <sup>h 1 Cor. 4. 21. ch. 3. 5. & 10. 1, 2. & 13. 20, 21.</sup> τοῦτο ταῦτα ἀπὸν γράφω, ἵνα παρὼν μὴ ἀποτόμως χρήσωμαι, κατὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἣν ἔδωκέ μοι ὁ Κύριος εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεσιν.

<sup>11 i</sup> Δοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί, χαίρετε, καταρτίζεσθε, παρακαλεῖσθε, <sup>i 1 Cor. 1. 10. Rom. 12. 10. 15. & 15. 5. Phil. 2. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 8. Heb. 12. 14. 2 Rom. 10. 10. 1 Cor. 16. 20. 1 Thess. 5. 26. 1 Pet. 5. 14.</sup> τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, εἰρηνεύετε! καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς ἀγάπης καὶ εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν. <sup>12 k</sup> Ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν ἀγίῳ φιλήματι· ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἅγιοι πάντες. <sup>13</sup> Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ ἡ κοινωνία τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

v. 10) what was amiss in them either in faith or morals.'

10. διὰ τοῦτο—χρήσωμαι] This is, as Theophyl. observes, meant to apologize for the ob-jurgatory and minatory language he had employed,—namely, as wishing that it would have to be extended no farther than words, and not shown in deeds. The general sense is, 'For this [cause it is that] I write these things whilst absent, in order that when present with you I may not have to employ severity, by the exercise of that authority which has been given me [given me, I say] for the purpose of edifying, and not destroying souls.' Comp. supra, x. 8.

11. καταρτίζεσθε] meaning, it would seem, 'strive after reformation and perfection:' the term corresponds to κατάρτισιν at ver. 9, where see note. Comp. Matt. v. 48, ἵσατε οὖν τέλει, by which can only be meant, 'aim at,' 'strive after being perfect.' That God hath his part in this work, as well as man, is clear from Heb. xiii. 21, καταρτίζει (scil. ὁ Θεός) ὑμᾶς ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.—Παρακαλ., 'take comfort;' or rather, 'comfort each other' (implying both the giving and the taking comfort); and this is confirmed by 1 Thess. iv. 18, v. 11. Heb. iii. 13. The τὸ αὐτὸ φρον., denoting the aiming at concord in religious views, belongs to ἀγάπης.

The Apostle now fortifies his exhortation by proposing a strong motive to the cultivation of this unanimity and concord; namely, that the God of all love, the author and source of all love, who is himself the giver of peace and all other blessings, will be with them; namely, for their protection against all who seek to interrupt that peace and disturb concord.—ὁ Θεός τῆς ἀγάπης καὶ εἰρήνης. Three uncial and several cursive MSS., to which I add Lamb. 1182, 1185, and some Mus. copies, have τῆς εἰρ. καὶ [τῆς] ἀγάπης, which is confirmed by the Vulg., Ital., and Gothic Versions, as also by Theophyl., Theodor., and Pelag. It seems to have been preferred by Calv., who remarks: 'Deum pacis et dilectionis vocat, qui pacem et dilectionem nobis commendavit, qui eas amat.' And this view of the sense seems required by the logic of the context; for, as Thom. Aquin. remarks, it is meant to hold forth the reward of fulfilling the above admonition, q. d. 'If ye shall preserve peace among you, the God of peace and of love will be with you;' both God the Father, called the God of peace in Rom. v. 5, and also Christ the Son, as the Author and Giver of peace, John xiv. 27. xvi. 33. 1 Cor. xiv. 33. Moreover, He is not only the God of peace, but of love and charity, as it is here said. And this is so, because he who is in true peace of heart, is also in love and charity of life. So also Hyper. and Etius.

13. Concluding Benediction, remarkable for the distinct recognition of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity, and thence adopted by the Christian Church, in all ages, as the final blessing in her Services.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΓΑΛΑΤΑΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

a ver. 11, 12.
Acts 9, 6.
Tit. 1, 4.
Acts 2, 24.
22, & 3, 15.
& 4, 10. & 10, 40. & 12, 20, 24. & 17, 31. Rom. 4, 24. & 2, 11. 1 Cor. 6, 14. & 15, 15. 2 Cor. 4, 14. Eph. 1, 20. Col. 2, 12.
1 Thoms. 1, 10. Heb. 12, 28.

I. 1 * ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος, — οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων οὐδὲ δι' ἀνθρώπου, ἀλλὰ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς τοῦ

THIS was among the earliest of the Epistles of St. Paul, being written, some say, as early as A. D. 49, others, as late as 55 or 57. It seems best referred, as by Dr. Davidson, to A. D. 55, or by Wieseler and Alf. to 56. The Galatians had been converted to Christianity six or seven years before, chiefly, though not entirely, by St. Paul; but after his departure Judaizing teachers had crept in, who maintained the necessity of circumcision and the observance of the precepts of the Mosaic Law; and, in order the more effectually to work their purposes, had undermined his authority, representing that he was no Apostle, having only a deputed commission from the Apostles and elders at Jerusalem; who had always, they said, required or encouraged an adherence to the Mosaic Law. To counteract these errors, St. Paul, in the present Epistle, first proves his Apostleship, — by showing that he had received it directly from God, appealing to the history of his conversion, and his subsequent conduct. Secondly, he proceeds to refute the notion of the necessity of an observance of the Jewish Law to salvation; showing not only that those who embrace the Gospel are freed from its observance, but also, that whoever depends on it for acceptance with God, will lose all the benefits to be expected therefrom. Thirdly, he vindicates the doctrine he taught, — of justification by faith without the works of the Law, — and shows the folly of the Galatians in going about to subject themselves to the Law, whereby they would forfeit the benefits of the Covenant of Grace. Fourthly, after giving them various instructions, and exhortations to walk worthy of their high calling, and espec. to make a right use of their Christian freedom, he concludes with a brief summary of the topics above discussed, terminating in an Apostolical benediction.

Hence it is plain that the present Epistle relates to the very same subject as that to the Romans, — justification by faith only; though a difference is perceptible in the manner of treating the subject, — arising, Paley thinks, 'from the difference in St. Paul's situation.' In this, to those whose Church he had founded, he rests much upon authority; in that to the Romans, where he was not personally known, nor his authority fully established, he appeals solely to argument. Besides this, there are other points of difference which are well stated by Dr. Mackn. in his preface to this Epistle. The Epistle to the Galatians, he shows, 'was intended to prove, against the Jews, or Judaizers, that men are justified by faith, without the works of the Law of Moses; whereas the Epistle to the Romans treats of justification on a more enlarged plan, being meant to prove, both against Jews and Gentiles, that neither the one nor the other can be justified meritoriously by performing works of Law, or any law of works, but that all must be justified gratuitously by faith, through the obedience of Christ. Accordingly the two Epistles supply a complete proof that justification is not to be obtained meritoriously, either by rites and ceremonies (though of Divine appointment) or by works of morality, but that it is entirely a free gift, proceeding alone from the mercy of God in Christ.'

To proceed from the subject and scope to the manner, — here, too, there is a considerable difference between the two Epistles; for while in the Epistle to the Romans, the matter far exceeds the manner, — and, from extreme brevity, a considerable obscurity prevails throughout; in the present, though there is much of conciseness, and, from a similar boldness of expression and peculiarity of treating a subject, much of difficulty exists, — yet there is more of plan and regularity, as Dr. Davidson observes. And though the Epistle was written under the excitement of strong feelings, marking a fiery energy, — not to say impetuosity, yet Dr. D. admits that the matter is well arranged, and the order clear, — idea after idea being consecutively disposed; and the arguments adduced admirably fitted to serve the pur-ἐγείραντος αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν, <sup>2</sup> καὶ οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοί,

ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας· <sup>3</sup> χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ

poes in view. Dr. D., indeed, maintains that 'the structure is not so regular as that of the Epistle to the Romans, nor the order in which the materials are disposed so perfect and consummate:' which may be true, taken as a whole, though many portions are not inferior even to that matchless production; and though there is less of polish and refinement, there is as much of vehemence, by impassioned apostrophe, and strong appeals to the conscience and understanding of those whom the Apostle addresses. In short, there is the very same Pauline character to a very marked degree, as has been at large pointed out in the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans;—the same strong, not to say, vehement emotion; the same emphasis and point; the same earnestness, not to say δεινότης almost Demosthenean; the same strong alternations, and sudden transitions. I need scarcely point out the remarkable similarity which subsists between this Epistle and the Second to the Corinthians: no wonder, since they were written under very similar circumstances, and dictated by very similar feelings. In respect to style, composition, and phraseology, what I have said of the last-mentioned Epistle will almost universally apply to this. Yet the similarity to that to the Romans, in point of general plan and scope, and development of ideas, is more marked. To use the words of Dr. Davidson, 'both Epistles set forth the relation of the Law to the Gospel: the Epistle to the Romans objectively, without a polemic reference to Judaizing errors; that to the Galatians expressly in opposition to the Judaizing tendency. Taken together, they exhibit a complete view of the essential principles of the Gospel. The language of the Law is imperative. It makes demands on every individual—demands which the weakness of humanity is unable to fulfil. It cannot make sinners holy. It convinces them of their want of holiness. On the other hand, the Gospel promises, and confers pardon, regeneration, and sanctification. It supplies what the Law cannot give. It is scarcely necessary to remark that the expression Law, or Law of Moses, as used in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, is taken in its most comprehensive sense. It is wrong to restrict it to the ceremonial Law of the Jews. It embraces the moral, as well as the ceremonial Law. Both are inseparably united. The ceremonial is merely one aspect of Law, or, if we may be permitted the phrase, a grosser form of it. The moral is a finer form of the same. Sometimes the one is made prominent, sometimes the other, just according to the writer's purpose in a particular place. It is the ceremonial law to which there is a primary reference in the Epistle before us. But in demonstrating its inability to save, or the impossibility of obtaining salvation by means of it, every form of law is virtually excluded, from the same inherent efficacy.'

I. 1—5. In these verses is contained the inscription and the salutation. In treating of the former, clearness is imparted to a somewhat involved sentence, by placing the words οὐκ ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπων—ἐκ νεκρῶν between marks of semi-parenthesis. The scope of this parenthetical clause (where ἀποσταλλόμενοι may be supplied from ἀπόστολος) is, to show the grounds of Paul's claim to Apostleship, which, it seems, had been called in question. Instead, therefore, of simply saying (as in the Epistles to the Corinthians and those to the Colossians and Ephesians), διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, Paul enters more at large into the thing,—showing what he is not, as well as what he is.—'Ἀπ' ἀνθρ. and δι' ἀνθρ. are not, as Koppe and Borger suppose, synonymous.—'Ἀπὸ signifies 'from,' denoting origin; and διὰ, 'by the agency or mediation of.' Thus the sense is, 'not commissioned from men, but from God; not through the agency of man, but by Jesus Christ.' See the able notes of Calv. and Hyper. It is plain that ἀνθρώπων points to the Divine origin of Christ. Hence the passage was justly regarded, by Origen and the other Fathers, as one among those which prove the Deity of our Lord.—διὰ 'I. Χρ. καὶ Θεοῦ Π. The full sense is, 'through the ministration of Christ (who appeared to me) and (virtually) by the act of God.' The circumstance at τοῦ ἐγείρειν αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν was subjoined for weighty reasons, ably pointed out by Calv., Hyper., and Borger, to show the grounds on which Jesus was proved to be the Son of God, and supreme Ruler of the Church; espec. as on this rested Paul's claims to a Divine legation; and also, as Calv. well saw, to point peculiar attention to that august event, as forming the commencement of Christ's kingdom.

2. οἱ—πάντες ἀδελφοί! By this I now think is meant, not merely 'brother ministers,' but 'brother Christians,' as composing together the Church as a Body, consisting of various members in the different congregations; just as here ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις refers to the congregations which had, it seems, sprung up in the larger cities and towns of Galatia.

3. χάρις ὑμῖν—Χριστοῦ! In this accustomed Christian salutation (on which see note on Rom. i. 7) Paul wishes them grace and peace; of which they who were in danger of falling back under the Law and the grievance thereof, were in especial need; inasmuch as their late sin of wavering, or even misbelief, had to be forgiven them by Christ and his vicarious satisfaction for sin, subjoined in the next words.—τοῦ δόντος ἑαυτὸν περὶ τῶν ἡμ. ἡ., 'who gave himself up to death, as an expiation for our sins,' i. e. as an expiatory sacrifice for them;—a circumstance, as Chrys. observes, introduced by way of setting forth the vast superiority of the Gospel over the Law, in respect to this expiation for sin. Comp. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Tit. ii. 14. 1 Macc. vi. 44. Here, for ὡς, I have, with Matth., Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., and Alf., edited, from many of the best MSS. (including several Lamb. and Mus. copies), and some Fathers and early Editions, περὶ; not, however, so much from external authority, as from internal evidence; ὡς being prob. a gloss on περὶ.—ὅπως ἐξέλθαι ἡμᾶς—πονηροῦ. The sense is, 'that he might [thereby] rescue us from the present corrupt sinful world ("the world that lieth

b Matt. 20.
23.
Rom. 4. 26.
ch. 3. 20.
Eph. 5. 2.
1 Tim. 2. 6.
Tit. 2. 14.
Heb. 9. 14.
& 10. 6, 10.
John 15. 19.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
& 5. 15.
1 John 5. 19.
c Rom. 11.
26. & 16. 27.
Eph. 1. 12. Phil. 4. 20.
d ch. i. 4. e Acts 15. 1. 1 Cor. 11. 4. ch. 5. 18.

Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>4</sup> τοῦ δόντος ἑαυτὸν * περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, ὅπως ἐξέληται ἡμᾶς ἐκ τοῦ ἐνεστώτος αἰῶνος πονηροῦ, κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν. <sup>5</sup> ᾧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. ἀμήν.

<sup>6</sup> Θαυμάζω ἐν οὕτω ταχείᾳ μετατίθεσθε ἀπὸ τοῦ καλέ-
σαντος ὑμᾶς διὰ χάριτι Χριστοῦ εἰς ἔτερον εὐαγγέλιον. <sup>7</sup> ὁ

in wickedness." 1 John v. 19.) : by τοῦ ἐνστώτος αἰῶνος being meant, according to the literal sense, 'the present order of things, marked by sin and misery, i. e. as carried on by the men of this world, in their present avvexaristatē state, undelivered from the wrath to come.' See Rom.
xii. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 6. iii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 4. Eph. vi.
12. Thus the sense last mentioned is by the context intended to be prominent, and denotes, in a twofold sense, 'the being withdrawn or separated from the men of the world, and delivered, by the death and sacrifice of Christ, from the condemnation befalling the ungodly and impenitent men of the world.' See Calv. and Hyper. Accordingly, while δόντος ἑαυτ. refers to the reconciliation, ἐξέλητ. refers to the redemption of the reconciled.—κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Π. ᾧ, 'agreeably to the will of God, even our Father,' i. e. as the efficient Cause of our salvation. The formula is oft. used by Paul.

<sup>5</sup> ᾧ ἡ δόξα] not, as Wakef., 'to whom be the glory of our deliverance and salvation,—for 'glory and praise'; δόξα being one of those nouns, which, when used in their most abstract sense take the Article. See Bp. Middl. Gr. Art.
ch. v. § i. Besides, the present words evidently form a doxology; as at Rom. xi. 36. xvi. 27.
Eph. iii. 21. Phil. iv. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 18. 1 Pet.
iv. 12; in which case the Article is always used in its most abstract sense, as applied to God.

6. The Apostle now, without the introductory expressions of love or sympathy which generally usher in what he has to say, proceeds abruptly and at once to animadvert on the gross errors in doctrine into which the Galatians, as a body, had fallen,—errors so serious and fundamental, that they might be said to form another Gospel. Accordingly, he commences his subject in the language of astonishment at their conduct; and with reason, because they had the fullest means of being better informed. Render: 'I do marvel that ye are so soon falling off [lit. 'changing sides'] from him who called you, through the grace of Christ,—namely, his merits gratuitously applied to you; or, who called you to be in (i. e. partakers in) the grace of Christ.' On this force of μετατίθεσθαι see my Lex.—Τοῦ καλ. may,
with several Commentators, be referred to Christ;
though, as the office of calling is elsewhere ascribed to God, and Paul could not wish to convert any one to himself, the ancient and most modern Expositors are right in so applying it here; but, in fact, there is a brevisloquētia (as at in agnitionē in 1 Thess. iv. 7), of which the full sense is, 'who hath called you, that you should be in the state of grace by Christ.'—Ἐν χάριτι is generally taken for eis χάριν. But the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors render, 'by or through the grace of Christ,'
i. e. unto salvation; as Rom. v. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12.

2 Thess. ii. 16.—Eis ἔτ. εὐαγγ., i. e. 'as it were another' (see note on 2 Cor. xi. 4), being so corrupted by admixture with Judaism. On further consideration I am inclined to agree with Chrys. and Theophyl., together with a few eminent modern Expositors, espec. Crell., Bretschn., and Prof. Schott, that by ταχείᾳ is meant 'hastily,' 'precipitately,' 'inconsiderately;' which is, I think, more agreeable to the following than 'quickly.' Certainly ταχείᾳ is so used in 2 Thess. ii. 2, where Paul exhorts the Thessalonians μὴ ταχείᾳ σαλευθῆναι, where ταχ.
refers not so much to the time, as to the manner, in which they were affected. Comp. 1 Tim. v.
22, χεῖρας ταχείᾳ μεθεῖμι ἐπιτίθει: and ταχείᾳ is used in the Sept., Prov. xxv. 8. Sap.
S. xiv. 15, 28. Sir. iv. 32. v. 13. Ecclus. v. 2, and sometimes in the Class. writers, e. g. Soph.
ap. Plutarch, Artax. 28, ταχεία πειθὸ τῶν κακῶν. However, it should seem that in the present passage, and in most of the others, there is a conjoint notion of 'hastiness' and precipitant inconsideration.

7. ὁ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο· εἰ μὴ, &c.] There is some difficulty in tracing the construction, and consequently in ascertaining the exact sense of the words. The ancient and most modern Commentators, supposing ὁ to refer to εὐαγγ., take εἰ μὴ as put for ἀλλὰ, ἄλλωθεν; the sense being either, 'which, however, is not another Gospel, but there are some, &c.; or, 'which, however,
is not another Gospel, not worthy of that name, nor indeed the Gospel at all; but, notwithstanding, there are some, &c.' This interpretation is, however, rejected by Schott and Olsh., on the ground that εἰ μὴ is no where put for ἀλλὰ, nor used in any other sense than  nisi. Understanding ὁ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο in this sense, we may, with Abp. Newcome and Prof. Schott, regard it as a parenthetical clause, corrective of the foregoing assertion; q. d. 'the Gospel is not sometimes one thing, and sometimes another, but always the same.' (Heb. xiii. 8.) But however specious is the sense, the mode of arriving at it is not satisfactory. On again attentively considering this puzzling question, I have come to the conclusion that the best mode of removing the difficulty is to suppose that there is here, as in Thucyd. ii. 40, 3, an irregularity in the use of
ὁ, and that arising from some word being omitted which should have followed ὁ, and by another construction being substituted in its place, which is irreconcilable with the former construction, and which, instead of the Nomin. ὁ, would require the Conjunction ὅπου, ubi, where. The words in the above passage of Thucyd. are, ὁ τοῖς ἄλ-λοις ('whereas in the case of the others') ἀμα-θία μὲν θράσος, λογισμοὶ δὲ δένον φέρει. The same use of ὁ occurs in Eurip. Ion 245, ὁ πάντες ἄλλοι γὰρ ἀλυσσόντες θεοῦ Χαιρουσιν, ἐνταῦθ' ὅμα τὸν δακρυρόον. As to the present

οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, εἰ μὴ τινὲς εἰσιν οἱ ταρασσούντες ὑμᾶς, καὶ θέλοντες μεταστρέφαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>8</sup> Ἄλλα <sup>f1</sup> Cor. 10. 22. καὶ ἐὰν ἡμεῖς, ἢ ἄγγελος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ εὐαγγελίζεται ὑμῖν παρ' ὃ εὐηγγελισάμεθα ὑμῖν, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. <sup>9</sup> ὥς προειρηκάμεν, <sup>g</sup> Rev. 22. 18. καὶ ἄρτι πάλιν λέγω· εἰ τις ὑμᾶς εὐαγγελίζεται παρ' ὃ παρελάβετε, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. <sup>10</sup> Ἄρτι γὰρ ἀνθρώπους πείθω, ἢ τὸν Θεόν; <sup>h</sup> Acts 4. 10, 20, & 5. 30. ἢ ζητῶ ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκειν; εἰ γὰρ ἔτι ἀνθρώποις ἡρεσκον, Χριστοῦ δοῦλος οὐκ ἂν ἦμην. <sup>i</sup> Thoma. 2. 4. James 4. 4. <sup>j</sup> Cor. 12. 19. Eph. 6. 6. Col. 3. 22. <sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 15. 12. ver. 1. <sup>l</sup> Eph. 2. 2.

<sup>11</sup> Γνωρίζω δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τὸ εὐαγγελισθὲν ὑπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι κατὰ ἄνθρωπον· <sup>12</sup> οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐγὼ παρὰ

passage the sense intended is: 'whereas there is no other Gospel [but that which I preached to you].' This view is supported by the authority of Chrys., Theophyl., Æcumen., Thom. Aquin., and Est. With respect to εἰ μὴ, it is, as Est. points out, put for sed tantum, 'but only [that]'; by, probably, an idiom of the common Gr. dialect. On the terms ταράσσειν and μεταστρέφειν, see my Lex. N. T. in vv., and comp. Acts xv. 24, ἐτάραξαν ὑμᾶς λόγοις, where, as well as here, ταρ. is nearly synonymous with σαλεύω at Acts xvii. 13, and ἀναστατός, infra, ch. v. 12. In the latter term it is implied that the Gospel itself is always the same, however men may aim at modifying it (viz. by the introduction of something extraneous, introduced either from Judaism or Gentilism), which would be the same as perverting it.

8. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐὰν ἡμεῖς, ἢ ἄγγελος, &c.] The full sense is: 'But [whosoever such there should be] whether myself, or an angel from heaven, who should preach or teach to you, &c.—παρ' ὃ, 'other than,' i. e. by alteration from. See Chrys., Æcumen., and Theophyl. In ἢ ἄγγελος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ there is a rhetorical hyperbole of expression, whereby we have supposed, what is next to an impossibility, for illustration's sake; whereby also, as Kutta. remarks, there is expressed the absolute truth, as from God, of the evangelical doctrine preached by the Apostle. On ἀνάθεμα ἔστω see my annotation on 1 Cor. xvi. 22, and my Lex. N. T. in v.

9. ὥς προειρήκαμεν.] 'as we have just said.' There is a repetition, but only one arising from earnestness, and used in order to show his settled judgment. From what is here said by Paul, it, as Whitby says, appears that 'a man may err fundamentally, not only by rejecting a fundamental article of faith, but also maintaining things unnecessary, and teaching them in the name of Christ. And herein consists the great guilt of the Church of Rome.'

10. ἄρτι γὰρ—Θεόν:] There is here an abruptness of transition, and a brevity, which has occasioned some obscurity, and led, besides vain attempts to trace a connexion (see Olsh.), to variety of interpretation. But the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed in regarding the passage either as an apology for the foregoing language, which might be thought to savour of vanity, or as an appeal to themselves, whether what the false teachers affirmed of him (namely, that he suited his doctrine to the humours of men), was not a mere calumny. Both senses may be admitted; the latter as implied in the former. "Ἄρτι" refers to the whole time which had passed since his conversion to Christianity; and the full sense is, 'What, then! am I now all along conciliating men, or pleasing God?' That such is the sense is clear, from the words following, ἢ ζητῶ ἀρέσκειν; which are explanatory of the foregoing. The interrogation at ἢ—ἀρέσκειν (used as at Matt. vii. 7) implies a strong and indignant negation, 'No indeed!'—Of εἰ γὰρ—ἀνθρώποις the full sense is, 'for if I were yet seeking [after all that I have done and suffered] to conciliate the favour of men, I should not be the servant of God.' See the able notes of Hyper. and Calv., which furnish important matter for the preacher.

11—14. 'Paul now endeavours, from hence to ii. 10, to trace historically this his relation to God through Christ.' (Olsh.)

11. The connexion here (on which see Chrys.) has been thought doubtful; nay, some are of opinion (as Theodor. and Borger) that there is none at all; but that a new subject is commenced, —namely, the proof of his Apostleship. I am, however, induced to think, with Schott, that it is connected with the preceding verse, and also with ver. 7; what is there said being here more fully treated of, and what is written up to this verse serving to pave the way for introducing the grand subject, which is treated on at chapp. i. and ii.—his Apostolical dignity and authority.—Γνωρίζω may mean communicatio, as in a kindred passage at 1 Cor. xv. 1, or significatio.—Κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, is for ἀνθρώπινον, meaning, 'is not of human origin, nor composed of human precepts, received from men, or taught by men.'

12. The scope of the verse is ably traced by Borger thus: 'Evidentissimis Apostolus argumentis demonstrat summo se jure extraordinarium potius originem suam vindicare doctrinam, quippe quæ ad ipsum Christum sit referenda, exclusæ omni humanæ institutionis ope.' As to the proper version of the words, Dr. Peile remarks that 'our Translators have rendered this passage as though it had been written οὕτως γὰρ παρέλαβον αὐτὸ παρὰ ἄνθρωπον. οὕτως ἰδ.: whereas the οὕτως γὰρ was plainly intended to connect this clause with the preceding, and the οὕτως ἰδιδάχθην refers to a latent οὕτως before παρέλαβον.' He then expresses the sense in paraphrase thus: 'The Gospel which I preached to you is not of man's devising. How, indeed, should it? seeing that I received it not from men, nor was I taught it by man, but by immediate revelation from Jesus Christ.' This I find confirmed by Theophyl., who observes that 'this was what the Apostle's

1 Acts 8. 3.
2 9. 1.
3 22. 4.
4 26. 9.
5 Phil. 3. 6.
1 Tim. 1. 13.

m Acts 9. 15.
Rom. 13. 2.
1 Tim. 1. 1.
Jer. 1. 6.

ἀνθρώπου παρέλαβον αὐτὸ, οὔτε ἐδιδάχθη·ν ἀλλὰ δι' ἀποκα-λύψεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>13</sup> Ἠκούσατε γὰρ τὴν ἐμὴν ἀναστροφήν ποτὲ ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ, ὅτι καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἐδίωκον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐπόρθουν αὐτήν <sup>14</sup> καὶ προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ ὑπὲρ πολλοὺς συνηλικιώτας ἐν τῷ γένει μου, περισσότερως ζηλωτῆς ὑπάρχων τῶν πατρικῶν μου παραδόσεων.
<sup>15</sup> Ὅτε δὲ εὐδόκησεν [ὁ Θεός,] ὁ ἀφορίσας με ἐκ κοιλίας

calumniators had pretended,—namely, that he was not, like the other Apostles, an αὐτῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ, but had received every thing he knew from man. He means therefore to say, that he had enjoyed a revelation of the Gospel from the same source as Peter and the rest derived it,—namely, from Christ himself, and therefore had no need of instruction from the elder Apostles. If the above view of the construction be admitted, it will follow that there is no need to read οὐδὲ before ἐδιδάχθ. from A, D, F, G, and 6 cursives, with Lachm. and Ruckert, and also Olsh., who maintains that there is a 'specific' distinction; while Winer says, more rightly, that it is 'non-specific'. As to his denial that παρὰ ἀνθρ. can be joined with ἐδιδάχθ., and that διδασκ. forms an antithesis with ἀσολ., the whole proceeds on false views of the construction; and even were it well founded, it would not apply to phraseology so different from pure Greek composition as the present. The foregoing διδασχ. is, as Theophyl. remarks, 'called ἀποκάλυψις, not only with reference to the time when Christ ἀπεκαλύφθη αὐτῷ κατὰ τὴν ὁδόν, but also with reference to Christ's state after having left this world, when even an appearance would be an ἀποκάλυψις, much more an interview.' There is also, no doubt, an allusion to the mysterious nature of certain things revealed,—namely, the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel, which we owe espec. to this Divine revelation. Comp. Rom. xvi. 25, κατ' ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου. The chief of these revelations are supposed to have been communicated to St. Paul when in Arabia.

13, 14. 'In order to place the striking circumstances of his conversion in a clear light, Paul reminds the Galatians first of his earlier relation to Christ, when he persecuted the Church as a zealous Pharisee.' (Olsh.) Thus the γὰρ is epexegetical; what is subjoined being meant as a proof and illustration in detail of the foregoing assertion, derived from a brief narrative of Paul's course of life previous to his conversion, and of the circumstances which attended it.—ἀναστροφή here is synonymous with βίωσις at Acts xxvi. 4, and signifies, as often in the New and Old Test., 'manner of life, character, and conduct.' The ratio significationis will appear, by considering that human life is made up of human actions. See note on James iii. 11. The πρὸς is for πρωτέρων, which occurs in Ephes. iv. 22. 'The argument,' Rosenmüller observes, 'is, that from his former life, it is plain that he must have received his doctrine by Divine revelation. For since he was such a persecutor of the Christian religion, how could he have been so suddenly changed, had not a Divine revelation influenced him?'—καθ' ὑπερβ., is for σφόδρα, or rather it is a stronger term. The expression τὴν ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is employed to set in a strong point of view the criminality of his conduct, and also that of the Jewish persecutors of that time.—ἐπόρθουν is a more forcible term than ἐδίωκον, and should be rendered, 'laid it waste,' namely, by dragging its professors to execution. See Acts ix. 21.

14. προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδ. 'made proficiency in a knowledge of the rites and forms of the Jewish religion; see note on Rom. xiv. 11. —πολλοὺς συνηλ., 'many of my age,' prob. by implication, fellow-students. Ζηλωτῆς νόμου and νόμος is an expression frequently occurring in the Apocrypha; and sometimes in Josephus, as Bell. iv. 6. Antt. xii. 6, 2, εἰ τις ζηλωτὴς ἐστὶ τῶν πατρῶν ἰδῶν, καὶ τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ θρησκείας, ἐπίσθω μοι. The τῶν πατρ. παρὰ. serves to show what was especially meant by Ἰουδαϊσμῷ. The expression is one well adapted to denote the Judaism of the Pharisees, as a religion handed down from their fathers, and containing, together with what was of Divine institution, much of human tradition merely, and what pretended to no more than human authority, namely, that of their forefathers. Comp. Matt. xv. 2. Mark vii. 3. Acts xxvi. 4, and espec. Jos. Antt. xii. 10, 6, Νόμιμα πολλὰ τινα παρέδοσαν τῷ δήμῳ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι ἐκ πατέρων διαδοχῆς, ἀπὲρ οὐκ ἀναγίγνωσται ἐν τοῖς Μωϋσέων νόμοις, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ταῦτα τὸ Σαδδουκαῖον γένος ἐκβάλλει, λέγων ἱκεῖνα (scil. μόνον) δεῖν ἡγεῖσθαι νόμιμα τὰ γεγραμμένα: τὰ δ' ἐκ παραδόσεων ('tradition') τῶν πατέρων μὴ τηρεῖν, and xiii. 16, 2.

15, 16. εὐδόκησιν.—ἀποκαλύψαι τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν ἐμοί. 'Was pleased to reveal his Son to me;' a forcible form of expression, having allusion to δι' ἀποκαλύψεως at ver. 12, and referring to the doctrines of the Gospel of Christ being, by the powerful operation of the Holy Spirit, imprinted deeply on his mind and heart ('the inner man'), as well as revealed, λόγῳ τῆς ἀποκαλύψεως, to the outer man. So in 2 Cor. iv. 6, the Apostle, doubtless with the same idea in view as here, says of God, that λαμπρὴν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν, πρὸς φωτισμὸν τῆς γνώσεως τῆς δόξης, &c. This interpretation I find confirmed by the ancient Versions, also by Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and Æcumen., and adopted by several eminent modern Expositors, including Prof. Schott. I admit, however, that the sense of ἐν ἐμοί may be, 'per me,' through my instrumentality as Apostle, and the ἐν is so interpreted by Hyper., Grot., Crell., Pisc., Est., Wakef., and Abp. Newc. What is here meant seems to be, that God was first pleased to reveal to the mind of Paul, by the Holy Spirit, both the glory of the person and the richness of the salvation of his Son Jesus Christ; and to show the power of his grace as evinced in the conversion of 'the chief of sinners;' and then was pleased to reveal his Son, &c., by and μητρός μου καὶ καλέσας διὰ τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, <sup>16</sup> ἀποκα- n Matt. 16.

17.
Cor. 2. 9—
12.
3 Cor. 4. 6.
ch. 2. 8.
Eph. 2. 1, 8.
λύψαι τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν ἐμοί, ἵνα εὐαγγελίζωμαι αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν εὐθέως οὐ προσανεβέμην σαρκὶ καὶ αἵματι, <sup>17</sup> οὐδὲ ἀνήλθον εἰς Ἱερουσόλυμα πρὸς τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστόλους, ἀλλ' ἀπήλθον εἰς Ἀραβίαν, καὶ πάλιν ὑπέστρεψα εἰς Δαμασκόν.
<sup>18</sup> Ὁ ἔπειτα μετὰ ἑτὴ τρία ἀνήλθον εἰς Ἱερουσόλυμα ἱστορήσαι o Acts 9. 26
—29.
22. 17, 18.
p Mark 6. 2.
Πέτρον, καὶ ἐπέμεινα πρὸς αὐτὸν ἡμέρας δεκαπέντε. <sup>19</sup> ἕτερον through [the instrumentality of] Paul, as the Apostle of the Gentiles.

15. ὁ ἀφορ. μς] meaning, 'who separated [and, by implication, destined me to preach the Gospel; see Acts xiii. 2. xxii. 14. seq. Rom. i. 1. The term ἀφορίσας must be referred (with the best Commentators, ancient and modern) to the foreknowledge of God. See the able notes of Calv., Hyper., and Est. At any rate, it cannot, as Dr. Hamm. shows, with any good reason, be understood of any irrespective decree of the Apostle's person to heaven and bliss.

16. ἀποκαλύψαι — ἐν ἐμοί] Ἀποκ. has reference to what was said at ver. 12; and, indeed, vv. 13, 14, are, in some measure, parenthetical. The words following state the purpose of this revelation,—that he should propagate the religion of his Son to the Gentiles, not confining it to Jews,—and consequently rejecting Judaism, as a religion for the world at large.—εὐθέως properly belongs to ἀπήλθον in the next verse; though, in consequence of the long clause interposed, a change of construction is introduced by ἀλλὰ. Προσανατίθεσθαι signif. properly 'to commit any thing to another,' and espec. 'to deposit any secret,' or 'to communicate any information to another,' 'lay one's case open to him, to refer it to him, confer with, and consult him upon any matter.' So Diod. Sic. xvii. 116, cited by Wetstein, τοῖς μόντοι προσανατίθεσθαι περὶ τοῦ σημείου.—Σαρκὶ καὶ αἵμ. may mean 'any man' (by a tacit opposition to God and Christ before named), not even the Apostles, who are just after particularly mentioned: though some (as Koppe, Schulz, and others) take it to signify, 'in consilium non adhibui sensus et affectus humanos.' Both senses may be included; q. d. 'I neither consulted with men, nor conferred with the dictates of my own mind and feelings; or rather, of my own, or any human, reason.' By τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστ. it is intimated that, at the time of the revelation in question, he received such information, as placed him on a footing with the Apostles,—even those who had been invested with that office by Christ himself; nay, even above them, since he had received his illumination in a more extraordinary manner than they had.

17—19. On the circumstances here adverted to, see Acts ix. 25—28, and notes, and espec. my note in Recens. Synop. on the present passage. The discrepancies, which occur in the two accounts, may, in a great measure, be attributed to the difference of the circumstances in which the general historian is placed, as compared with those of the writer of a personal narrative. The former necessarily speaks in general terms; the latter descends to particularities of time, place, and persons; see Paley. As to the journey into Arabia not being mentioned by St. Luke, it may very well be accounted for on that principle; see Recens. Synop. So little, indeed, is here said, that to exactly adjust the chronology of the Apostle's life is next to impossible. As to the reconciliation of the diversity, which seems to subsist between the Apostles, in order to settle the chronology, no method that I have yet seen appears to me satisfactory. I may, therefore, be permitted to suggest, that there seems to be nothing in the words of St. Paul to lead us to suppose that his stay in Arabia was otherwise than short; nor need we suppose that the journey was a very long one. It was probably taken, in a great measure, for the purpose of restoring his health; since it is said at Acts ix. 19 that he ἐνίσχυσεν, which implies that he was then only in a state of convalescence. And at this very period (when, according to the words of St. Luke, we find he had remained at Damascus some days) I would fix the first journey into Arabia, which, as having occupied but a very short time, and affording no circumstances of moment, St. Luke omits, continuing his narration with εὐθέως ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ἐκήρυσεν. And surely the propriety of the term εὐθέως will scarcely be affected by this short interposed journey. Certain it is, that the words καὶ εὐθέως—Χριστὸς must refer to another narrative. The state of the Apostle's health would not admit of his immediately resuming his evangelical labours at Damascus; and that, as we see, is not at variance with St. Paul's account. Finally, I would understand the words of St. Luke, ὅτι δὲ ἐπληροῦντο ἡμέραι ἰκαναί, of the whole time of St. Paul's second sojourn at Damascus; which, by his own account here, must have extended to not much less than three years. Or we may suppose the narrative of what took place in his second stay at Damascus, to commence at ver. 22, Σαῦλος δὲ, &c. And though that may seem scarcely warranted by the words, yet it must be remembered, that the expression ἡμέραι, by an Hebraism, has often only the general signification of time, and that ἰκανός is a term of extensive application, and is often used of a somewhat long period. Upon the whole, there can be little difficulty in understanding St. Luke's words of as considerable a time as St. Paul's require.

18. ἱστορήσαι Πέτρον] Ἱστορεῖν signifies either 'to ascertain any thing by inquiry, by personal intercourse, or any person by personal examination;' but sometimes, as here, 'to visit for the purpose of becoming acquainted with any one by personal communication.' So Jos. Bell. vi. 1, 8, δὲ (scil. Julianum) ἱστορήσα, 'whom when I came to know.' Plut. V. Sic. See Acts ix. 26, 27, from which we find that the acquaintance was effected by the intervention of Barnabas, who introduced Paul to Peter and James.

δὲ τῶν ἀποστόλων οὐκ εἶδον, εἰ μὴ Ἰάκωβον τὸν ἀδελφὸν τοῦ Κυρίου. <sup>20</sup> <sup>a</sup> Ἀ δὲ γράφω ὑμῖν, ἰδοὺ, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι οὐ ψεύδομαι. <sup>21</sup> <sup>r</sup> Ἐπειτα ἦλθον εἰς τὰ κλίματα τῆς Συρίας καὶ τῆς Κιλικίας <sup>22</sup> ἤμην δὲ ἀγνούμενος τῷ προσώπῳ ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Ἰουδαίας ταῖς ἐν Χριστῷ <sup>23</sup> μόνον δὲ ἀκούοντες ἦσαν, ὅτι ὁ διώκων ἡμᾶς ποτὲ, νῦν εὐαγγελίζεται τὴν πίστιν ἣν ποτὲ ἐπόρθει. <sup>24</sup> καὶ ἐδόξαζον ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν Θεόν. II. <sup>1</sup> <sup>a</sup> Ἐπειτα διὰ δεκατεσσάρων ἐτῶν πάλιν ἀνέβην εἰς Ἱερουσόλυμα μετὰ Βαρνάβα, συμπαραλαβὼν καὶ Τίτον. <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Ἀνέβην δὲ κατὰ ἀπο-

19. Ἰάκωβος] To which of the three Jameses this is to be referred Commentators are not agreed. The most probable opinion seems to be that of most Commentators, ancient and modern, that this James was not brother, but cousin or kinsman, of our Lord, and a son of Alphaeus; an opinion maintained formerly by Winer, who, however, is now not disinclined to think that ἀδελφ. should here be taken in its usual sense brother.

20. Here we have a solemn protestation, as it were, by oath, of the truth of what had been said, similar to those at Rom. ix. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 31; q. d. ' (as to) this which I now write to you, behold (I protest), in the presence of God, I lie not.' The argument, Whitby observes, is this,— 'Having, therefore, preached the Gospel so long before I saw them, and staying so little while with them, and going then only to see, not to learn of them, it cannot be conceived I should receive my instructions how to preach the Gospel from them.'

21. Συρίας] By Syria is here meant (as appears from Acts ix. 30) that part of Syria called Phœnicie.

23. ἀκούοντες ἦσαν] The Commentators usually consider this as standing for ἤκουον. But there is rather a reference to the thing as customary,— 'they were in the habit of hearing.' Instead of ἀκούοντες, grammatical propriety would have required ἀκούουσαι. But here we have a construction πρὸς τὸ σημαζόμενον, frequent in the best writers, adopted where (as here) there would be an incongruity in the use of the feminine; of the nature of the subject requiring the masculine gender. Render: "'Our quondam persecutor in time past is now preaching the Faith which once he sought to destroy:" and they gave God glory on my account.'

II. The Apostle here carries forward the proof of his Divine commission, vv. 1—10; and then, in illustration of the nature and extent of it, recounts (vv. 11—14) his expostulation with even St. Peter. This enables him to introduce the argument respecting justification by faith, the principal subject he meant to treat of in this Epistle.

1. διὰ δεκατεσσάρων ἐτῶν] 'after the lapse or intervention of fourteen years.' This use of διὰ for διαγαμόμενον occurs also in Mark ii. 1, and Acts xxiv. 17. On the chronological difficulty involved in the words, see Paley, Borger, Winer, Schott, and Olsh.

2. ἀνέβην κατὰ ἀποκάλ.] Koppe and Borger show that this account is not inconsistent with that at Acts xv. 2; for though he went up, as appointed by the Antiochians, yet his determination to comply with their request (which he had many reasons to decline) might be, and, it appears, was from a Divine order.—ἀνέβην αὐτοῖς τὸ αὐ., 'I set forth, or laid before them the Gospel;' by which seems to be meant the setting forth those prominent points, which had reference to the annulling of the rites of the Mosaic law, the free admission of the Gentiles without binding them thereto, and perhaps some of the mysterious doctrines of the Gospel, which seem to have been especially treated on by St. Paul; on all which accounts he might well style it his Gospel. At τοῖς δοκοῦσι we may supply αὐαὶ τῇ, which is expressed at ver. 6. Comp. Acts xii. 25, where, however, it is simply said that Barabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, after having executed their commission; 'no mention,' as observes Dr. Poole, 'being made of any further object which Paul had in that journey, nor of his having seen any of the Apostles;—and no wonder, seeing that (as he here tells us) he went up as specially instructed by that God whose he was, and whom he served (Acts xxvii. 23), and conferred privately with the three leading Apostles of the circumcision;' and that because the congregation at large could not bear the doctrine,—that the Gentiles were to be admitted into the Christian Church without being bound to the Jewish observances. On this and the next two verses I agree with Mr. Green (Gr. N. T. Dial. pp. 81-3) in his general view, and espec. in regarding v. 3 as parenthetical: Paul, he thinks, while mentioning his journey to Jerusalem, being suddenly reminded, by association, of the circumstance of his Greek fellow-traveller, Titus, being exempted from the necessity of circumcision; which circumstance, as bearing upon the subject on which he was at that time writing with so much earnestness, was instantly noted down at the moment, as the thought occurred. I also agree with Mr. Green in regarding τρέχω as the Present Indicative;—for, as Dr. Poole observes, in the Subjunctive it would have been written δρόμω, and in classing this ex. with Eurip. Phœn. 98, μή τις πολιτῶν ἐν τριβῇ φανέρεται, Κάμοι μὲν Ἰσθμ., &c., 'for fear there be any of the townsmen to be seen in the street, and thus there should come,' &c. Accordingly, the verses in question may be pointed, with Mr. Green, thus: ἀνέβην δὲ κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, καὶ ἀνέβην αὐτοῖς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ὃ κηρύσσω ἐν τοῖς Ἰουδαίῳ, κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσι, μήπως εἰς κινδύνον ἢ ὄραμον (ἄλλ' οὐδὲ Τίτος ὁ

κάλυψιν, καὶ ἀνεθέμην αὐτοῖς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ὃ κηρύσσω ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι, κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσι, μήπως εἰς κενὸν τρέχω, ἢ ἔδραμον. <sup>3</sup> Ἄλλ' οὐδὲ Τίτος ὁ σὺν ἐμοί, Ἑλλήν ὢν, ἡμαγ- <sup>a</sup> Acts 18. 2. <sup>b</sup> 1 Cor. 9. 21.
κάσθη περιτμηθῆναι. <sup>4</sup> Διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους ψευδαδέλ- <sup>c</sup> Acts 15. 24.
φους, οὔτινες παρεισῆλθον κατασκοπῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμῶν ἣν ἔχομεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα ἡμᾶς καταδουλώσωσιναι . . .
<sup>5</sup> οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, ἵνα ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ

σὺν ἐμοί Ἑλλήν ὢν ἡμαγκάσθη περιτμηθῆναι), διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους ψευδαδέλφους, οὔτινες, &c. I would render vv. 2-4, partly with Mr. Green, and partly with Dr. Peile, thus: 'I laid before them an account of my preaching among the Gentiles;—but privately to those of reputation, lest haply I might be running, [or had been running,] in vain (nay, not even was Titus, who was with me, though a Greek, constrained to undergo the rite of circumcision); and this was done on account of the false brethren who had been unwarily introduced among us, who had stolen in to become spies upon the liberty which we have in Christ Jesus.' In rendering the words μήπως—ἔδραμον, I have followed Dr. Peile, not Mr. Green, because the version of the latter requires the words ἀντίθεμην, &c., to be strained; for I cannot agree with him that ἀντίθεσθαι signifies originally, in a metaphorical sense, 'to leave altogether in the hands of another, or at the pleasure of another.' The proof he adduces from Origen is insufficient, since the sense there is certainly not what he assigns. The true origin of the sense here (which is the same as at Acts xiv. 14, τῷ βασιλεῖ ἀντίθετο τὰ κατὰ τὸν Παῦλον, where Festus was desirous of having the king's opinion on the case) is, 'that the matters so laid upon or referred to any one for counsel or judgment, have previously been laid up for consideration in the mind of the person making it known.' The line of the Poet, ἄνθρωπος ἐβόλως εἰς κενὸν μοχλεῖ τρήγων, has been well brought in, because Paul prob. had it in mind: but we are not indebted for it, as Dr. Peile supposes, to Dr. Burton, but to De Rhoer Fer. Davent., p. 92; and it is not a line of Menander, but of some anonymous poet, in the Poet. Gnom. p. 305. Brunck; though something like it occurs in Menander, Rhetor. ap. Corp. Hist. Byz., vol. i. p. 98, ἵνα μὴ καταμπατοῖην, where he prob. had in mind the passages of Paul and the Gnom. poet.

4. παρεισάκτους means, not, 'brought in unawares,' or, as Dr. Peile renders, 'unwarily,' a signifi. for which there is no authority, and introducing a sense unsuitable. The expression may mean, 'brought in by the bye, privily (and so denoting certain who had insinuated themselves covertly into the society), or it may mean, as H. Steph. Thea. in v. renders, 'adventitious strangers becoming members of the society;' a sense confirmed by the passages he and Haase adduce from later Greek writers, and also by the ancient Versions. The former, however, is the more probable interpretation; and it is confirmed by 2 Pet. ii. 1, παρεισέξουσιν αἰρέσεις, and espec. by the occurrence of the following term, παρεισῆλθον, 'clam intravertant,' which was meant to be explanatory of the other.—Κατασκοπῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθ. The term signifies inspi-

diari, 'to plot the destroying, or plundering, of persons by private contrivances,' a metaphor taken from spies in war. Comp. 2 Sam. x. 3.—καταδουλώσωσιναι, lit. 'that they might make us their slaves;' for καταδουλ., in the Middle voice, signifies 'to make any one a slave to oneself; and hence corresponds to the Hebr. רָצַח in Exod. i. 14, and vi. 5. The reading καταδουλώσουσιν, found in A, B, C, D, E, and a few cursives, and edited by Lachm., Tisch., and Alf., is prob. an alteration, proceeding from some who did not well discern the strong force of the Middle verb; though the —σουσιν, or —σωσιν, may have been an idiom of the common Greek, converted by the Critics into the Class. Gr.

5. In οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν we have a popular form of expression, meaning, 'No, not at an instant,' 'not even temporarily,' i. e. 'not at all.' The more Class. Greek would be, οἷς οὐκ εἴξαμεν οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν, 'to whom we nought succumbed, no not for, &c. Hence we see the bad judgment of Griesb. and Scholz, who would cancel the words, on authority next to nothing; though the removal cuts the nerve of the Pauline energy.—The next words, τῇ ὑποταγῇ = εἰς ὑποταγὴν, are added for explanation; q. d. 'in the way of subjection;' and the words ἵνα—ὑμᾶς adduce the reason for this unyielding firmness:—'that the true Gospel might remain with you (Gentiles).'

6. Here again there is an anacoluthon; Paul prob. intending to write ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν δοκούντων—οὐδὲν μοι προαντιτίθῃ, οὐδὲν προφθαλαβόμεν; though, by reason of a somewhat long parenthesis, he drops the thread of the construction, and thus changes the Genit. into a Nominat., as it were resuming what was said before the parenthesis; the γάρ being resumptive.—τῶν δοκούντων εἰναί τῇ, 'those who were of repute,' thought to be of consequence.—The next clauses ὅποιοι ποτε ἦσαν and οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρει have been not a little disputed, both as to the force of the particle ποτε and the sense of the phrase οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρει. With respect to the former, it is by the Vulg. and Arab. translators rendered 'aliquando' (and this translation, also adopted by the earlier modern Translators and Expositors, has been strenuously maintained by Schott); while the Syr. and Coptic Translators, Chrys. and, of the early moderns, Camer., and most of the recent Translators and Expositors from Wolf and Bengel, regard it as an enclitic particle answering to the Latin cumque added to qualis, and the English ever added to what or whoso. And this view I still continue to prefer; for no proof can I find of the antithesis, maintained by Schott, between δοκούντων εἰναί τῇ and ὅποιοι ποτε ἦσαν, εἰ τῇ, and little probability, since it would involve no inconsiderable harshness. On the other hand, that ὅποιος is used with ποτε, cumque, is certain from Demosth. Or. de Pace, iv. 15, ὅποιά ποτ'

e Deut. 10.

17. 2 Chron. 12.

Job 34. 19.

Wisd. 6. 7.

Acts 10. 34.

Rom. 2. 11.

Eph. 6. 9.

Col. 3. 25.

1 Pet. 1. 17.

f Acts 18. 40.

Rom. 11. 18.

1 Tim. 5. 7.

2 Tim. 1. 11.

g Acts 9. 15.

h 18. 2. &amp; 22. 21.

ch. 1. 10.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

Eph. 3. 3.

εὐαγγελίου διαμεῖναι πρὸς ὑμᾶς. <sup>6</sup> ὁ ἄπο δὲ τῶν δοκούντων εἶναι τι, ὅποιοι ποτε ἦσαν, οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρειν πρόσσωπον Θεὸς ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει· ἐμοὶ γὰρ οἱ δοκούντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο ἢ ἄλλα τούναντιον, ἰδόντες ὅτι πεπίστευμαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς ἀκροβυστίας, καθὼς Πέτρος τῆς περιτομῆς <sup>8</sup> (ὁ γὰρ ἐνεργήσας Πέτρῳ εἰς ἀποστολὴν τῆς περιτομῆς, ἐνῆργησε καὶ ἐμοὶ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη) <sup>9</sup> καὶ γνόντες τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθείσάν μοι, Ἰάκωβος καὶ ιστὶν, α. el. Heliodor. Æth. vii. 14, ὅποιοις ποτὶ ἄρα συντινύμεθα. Basil in Epist. (cited by Doun. ap. Wolf), πᾶν ὅποιά ποτ' ἂν ᾖ—qualiacunque sint. Here, however, the ἂν is absent. And it is well observed by Chrys. that Paul does not say εἶσιν, but ἦσαν, as showing that even they themselves had at length ceased so to preach, ἄρα τοῦ κηρύγματος πανταχοῦ διαλάμπαντος: so that ἦσαν is μοί, as Grot.

 thought, put for εἶσαν, as it was taken by the Syr. and Vulg. Translators. The imperf. indic.
 may as well follow ὅποιοις and qualiacunque as the opt. = the Latin fuerim. As to the stricture of Est. formed on Chrysostom's interpretation, that 'we are not to think that Paul means to reprehend or call into doubt any thing in the doctrine of Peter and the other Apostles, for the other Apostles observed the legal ceremonies among the Jews in no other way than did Paul himself, who, in 1 Cor. ix. 20, writes, that to the Jews he became as a Jew, and to those that were under the law as if he himself were under the law, that he might gain them to Christ: and therefore he ought not to say of his brother Apostles, nihil me interest, but to clear them of unjust aspersions.' This view proceeds on a strained interpretation of the expression οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρειν, one occurring several times in Plato and other Class. writers cited by the Commentators,—as if it signified that 'he does not care whether the persons in question be thought this or that,' whereas its true import is, 'it makes no difference
 as to me and my cause, non est meum, neque id ad rem meam facit, does not affect my doctrine or authority.' Accordingly St. Paul does not bear so hard on his brother Apostles as Chrys. incau-tiously admits. Paul's case (as indeed he intimates) was quite different from theirs, and could not be affected by any circumstances in theirs, whether as to peculiar advantages and dignity, or to any course which they might, for present expediency, think fit to resort to. In this and the next words (for the clause πρόσσωπον Θεὸς ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει is quite parenthetical, which is not the case with ὅποιοι ποτε ἦσαν, οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρει) St. Paul does not, I repeat, 'bear hard on his brother Apostles,' or depreciate them, but merely uses words which may wear the appearance of arrogance, but have not the reality, and that not to gratify vanity, but, as Chrys.
 says, 'to benefit the weak in Christ.' He was (observes Hyper.) compelled so to speak (see 2 Cor. xii. 11), 'propter importunitatem pseud-apostolorum, qui semper imprudentissimè urge-bant auctoritatem aliorum apostolorum, ut Paulum opprimerent, et veritatem evangelii pes-undarent.' See also Calvin. As respects the parenthetical words, πρόσσωπον—λαμβάνει, these are meant to advert to the reason of the thing in question. I would now point the words of this and the next two verses thus: Ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν δοκούντων εἶναι τι—ὅποιοι ποτε ἦσαν, οὐδὲν μοι διαφέρειν (πρόσωπον Θεὸς ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει)· ἐμοὶ γὰρ οἱ δοκούντες οὐδὲν προσαν-έθεντο· ἄλλα τούναντιον, ἰδόντες ὅτι πεπίστευμαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς ἀκροβυστίας, καθὼς Πέτρος τῆς περιτομῆς (ὁ γὰρ ἐνεργήσας Πέτρῳ εἰς ἀποστολὴν τῆς περιτομῆς, ἐνῆργησε καὶ ἐμοὶ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη)· καὶ γνόντες τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθείσάν μοι, Ἰάκωβος καὶ Κηφᾶς καὶ Ἰωάννης,—οἱ δοκούντες στύλοι εἰμὶ,—δέξιας ἰδωκαν ἐμοί, κ. τ. λ.—ἐμοὶ γὰρ οἱ δοκούντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο. We have here a παραπομασία; q. d. 'those who were thought something [great], added nothing to me,' i. e. to my knowledge of the Gospel. This (as Calvin and Hype-rius show) is brought in not from any vain-glorious spirit, but by way of asserting the weightiness of his doctrinal authority; the words furnishing another argument that the doctrine he had taught was consummate and in no respect deficient; implying, perhaps, 'made no alteration in the Gospel I had taught.'

7. ἄλλα τούν.] meaning, 'nay, so far from teaching me any thing, or supposing that they had any thing to teach me, they acknowledged my Divine commission; and, seeing that I was instructed, &c., they gave the right hand of fellowship [as Apostles] to me and Barnabas.' At πᾶσι τ. supply ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, for a Divine communication is implied. See 1 Cor. ix. 17. Rom.
 iii. 2. and notes.—τὸ εὐαγγ. τῆς ἀκροβυστίας signifies 'the preaching of the Gospel to the uncircumcised.' St. Peter was chiefly, but not entirely, occupied with the Jews; and St. Paul chiefly, but not wholly, with the Gentiles: the former had for his assistants principally James and John; the latter, Barnabas, himself divinely appointed to this office, whom the Greeks have, therefore, not ill styled the fourteenth Apostle.

8. This verse is parenthetical, and the γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And this is very true:] for he who worked in, exercised Divine aid in, or upon, Peter unto,' &c.
 The term ἐνεργ. is here, as infra iii. 5. 1 Cor.
 xii. 6. Eph. i. 11. Phil. ii. 13, used of the co-working by the Spirit of due aid to perform the work of the Gospel. See my Lex. in v.; and comp. a similar construction in Prov. xxii.
 (xxix. Sept.) 12, γυνὴ ἐνεργεῖ τῷ ἀνδρὶ εἰς ἀγαθόν. The εἰ has reference to the immediate and extraordinary mode in which each of the two Apostles was appointed to his peculiar charge.

9. γνόντες] This, and ἰδόντες at ver. 7, are in apposition with the Nomin. cases to the verb ἰδωκαν ἐμοί, which are Ἰάκωβος, καὶ Κηφᾶς, καὶ Ἰωάννης.—τὴν χάριν, scil. τῆς ἀποστολῆς, as χάριν καὶ ἀποστολὴν in Rom. i. 5. Of οἱ δοκοῦντες στυλοὶ the sense is, 'those who were [as Apostles] accounted pillars of the Church.' So, by Ignat. Epist. ad Philip., the Apostles are called οἱ στυλοὶ τοῦ κόσμου, meaning of the Christian commonwealth (πολιτεία), as opposed to the πολιτεία of Israel, Eph. ii. 12. In this strong expression there may be an architectural metaphor, wherein the Christian society is compared to an edifice, such as the Temple at Jerusalem, of which the main pillars are the Apostles. See 1 Cor. iii. 16. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Eph. ii. 21, 22. 1 Pet. ii. 5. So Maimon. cited by West. calls the Prophets 'columnæ generis humani in rectâ fide'; and Philo says that good men κλόνει ἐσθί, ὄρμον ὅλον ὑπεριδόντες.—δεξιὰς ἔδωκαν—κοινωνίας. Indicating not merely friendship, and consent in doctrine, but chiefly acknowledgment of his Apostleship in common with themselves; which it seems to have been a principal purpose of St. Paul to bring them to acknowledge. The giving the right hand is to be regarded as a symbolical action, denoting union, whether of fellowship in any office, or of compact as to any matter. So Virgil, Æn. vii. 266, 'Pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigitur tyranni.' Here, it would seem, both fellowship (implying parity in office and dignity) and compact are meant; the former principally, the latter secondarily. And, indeed, such seems adverted to in ἵνα, &c. following. The full sense, then, is: 'They formally acknowledged us as fellow-Apostles, and it was agreed that the Gospel should be preached by us in common, so that we should go to the Gentiles, and they to the Circumcision.' The phrase δεξιὰν δοῦναι is found both in the New Test. and Sept., and also in the later Class. writers. At ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ supply εὐαγγελιστάμεθα καὶ εὐαγγελίζονται, from τὸ εὐαγγέλιον at v. 7. After ἡμεῖς several uncials, and many cursives, MSS., with some Versions, and Fathers, have μὲν, which has been admitted by Griesb., Matth., and Scholz; but injudiciously; since internal evidence is quite against it. It was, I doubt not, inserted by the Alexandrian Critics, in order to make the correspondence with the following clause, αὐτοὶ δὲ, &c., more direct.

Κηφᾶς καὶ Ἰωάννης, οἱ δοκοῦντες στυλοὶ εἶναι, δεξιὰς ἔδωκαν ἔμοι καὶ Βαρνάβᾳ κοινωνίας ἵνα ἡμεῖς εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, αὐτοὶ δὲ εἰς τὴν περιτομήν. <sup>10</sup> ὁ μόνον τῶν πτωχῶν ἵνα μνημονεύομεν δ καὶ ἐσπούδασα αὐτὸ τοῦτο ποιῆσαι. <sup>11</sup> Ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε Πέτρος εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν, κατὰ πρόσωπον αὐτῷ ἀνέστην, ὅτι κατεγνωσμένος ἦν. <sup>12</sup> πρὸ τοῦ γὰρ ἐλθεῖν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου, μετὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν συνήσθιεν ὅτε δὲ ἦλθον, ὑπέστελλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἑαυτὸν, φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς. <sup>13</sup> καὶ συνυπεκρίθησαν

<sup>10</sup> μόνον τῶν πτωχῶν ἵνα μνημ.] Supply αἰτούμενοι καὶ παρακαλοῦντες, an ellipsis, frequent after μόνον or ἄλλην, and before ἵνα; as 2 Cor. viii. 7. Eph. v. 33. The complete sense is: '[They did not wish to impede or circumscribe our liberty of action as Apostles, by any rules or directions of theirs, but] they only desired that we would be mindful of the poor.' In μνημ. (as in ὑμ., Ps. viii. 4, and Luke xxiii. 42) there is, as often, an ellipsis of some verb of relieving or helping, from delicacy omitted. By τῶν πτ. must be understood, not the poor generally (for as almsgiving held a very high place in the Jewish as well as Christian religion, that would have been needless to urge on St. Paul), but those of Judaica in particular, who had peculiar claims to relief.—Ὁ καὶ ἐσπούδασα—ποιῆσαι. Koppe and other Commentators here recognise a pleonasm in αὐτὸ τοῦτο, while Winer, Bornemann, and Schott, suppose an anacoluthon; the δ being suspended on ποιῆσαι, and the αὐτὸ brought in, κατ' ἐπ' ἀνάρθρωσιν, to explain the Pronoun Relative. There may, however, be no more than a blending of two constructions (viz. δ ποιῆσαι ἐσπ. and καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐσπ. ποιῆσαι), which has usually an intensive force. Render, 'Which very thing I was [of myself] even desirous to do,' or, 'I have endeavoured to do.' So Etheridge and Conyb. However, αὐτὸ τοῦτο cannot mean, as C. supposes, 'accordingly.'

<sup>11</sup> ὅτι δὲ ἦλθε, &c.] Render: 'Moreover, when he was come to Antioch; the necessity for which version is evinced by Schott and Borger; and it is supported by the Pesch. Syr. and all the other ancient Versions. As to the time of this visit, it was, prob., after Paul's return from Jerusalem to Antioch; and it is, with reason, supposed by Koppe to have taken place a short time after that period, and been made for the purpose of personally inspecting the state of the Antiochian Church, and by the Apostle's authority and influence, composing the yet remaining differences in it.—Ὅτι κατεγνωσμένοι ἦν. This may be rendered, 'because he deserved to be condemned,' i. e. severely censured; Participle for Adjective, as ψηλαφωμένοι at Heb. xii. 18, or, as ἐβδελύμην in Rev. xxi. 8, for βδελυκτός. However, the full sense intended seems to be not only 'blamable,' but 'blamed,' 'who incurred blame;' which is supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version. The same idiom occurs in Jos. Antt. xii. 9, 9, ὡς καταγνωσθησομένου Ἰωσήφου καὶ προσκρούσονται τῷ βασιλεῖ.

<sup>12</sup> ἰδὼν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰ.] The persons were, no doubt, Jewish converts and Judaizers. The words do not necessarily imply that they were sent by James, though we cannot infer less than that they had his consent for their journey, and probably they had some letters from him to Peter and to Paul. They seem to have been some of the persons characterized at v. 4. By ἐθνῶν the best Expositors understand, not Pagans, but Gentile Christians.—συνῆσθι, i. e. 'ate with them as ὡς ἑσθί.'—ὑπέστελλε καὶ ἀφ. ἑαυτὸν, 'he withdrew, and separated himself [from their society].' This use of the Act. ὑπστ. taken absolutely is very rare; though I have noted it in Plut. Demet. c. 47, ὑπίστανται τοῖς ὀχνηράτοις τοῦ Ταύρου, and Polyb. i. 16, 10.

<sup>13</sup> συνυπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ] 'Practised dissimulation with him.' To the example I have

αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι ὥστε καὶ Βαρνάβας συναπύχθη αὐτῶν τῇ ὑποκρίσει. <sup>14</sup> Ἄλλ' ὅτε εἶδον, ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθοδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ ἐμπροσθεν πάντων "Εἰ σὺ, Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων, ἐθνικῶς ζῆς καὶ οὐκ Ἰουδαϊκῶς, τί τὰ ἔθνη ἀναγκάζεις Ἰουδαῖζεν; <sup>15</sup> ἡμεῖς, φύσει Ἰουδαῖοι καὶ οὐκ ἐξ ἐθνῶν ἀμαρτωλοί· <sup>16</sup> εἰδότες ὅτι οὐ δικαι-οῦται ἄνθρωπος ἐξ ἔργων νόμου, ἐὰν μὴ διὰ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ

1 Acts 10. 28.
 31. 11.—18.
 15. 10, 11.
 19—21, 24.
 25, 26.
 1 Ps. 148. 2.
 Rom. 1. 17.
 2. 20, 25.
 30. 2. 4, 5, 6.
 24, 25.
 2. 1, 2, 3, 9.
 3. 2, 3.
 ch. 11.

already adduced of this signif. of συν. followed by Dat. of person, implying 'familiar society,' add Jos. Antt. v. 2, 9, συναπύχθη—ὑποκρίσει, a brief mode of expression (as here) for 'was carried away with them into their dissimulation.' We have a metaphor taken from any one's being hurried away along with a crowd, as it were by a torrent. The same expression occurs at 2 Pet. iii. 17, ἵνα μὴ τῇ τῶν ἀθέλων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες.

<sup>14</sup> οὐκ ὀρθοδοῦσι—εὐαγγελίῳ] i. e. 'did not act with that straightforwardness which the spirit of the Gospel requires;' lit. 'did not go straight to their object (with uncompromising firmness) without turning to the right hand or the left:' comp. Heb. xii. 13, τροχῶν ὁρᾶτε ποιῶσά τοις ποσὶ ὁμῶν. The words πρὸς τὴν ἀλθθ. εὐαγγ. are meant to further develop the sense; q. d. 'according to the truth of the Gospel,' i. e. 'its true genius and spirit,' which requires openness and genuineness. This I find confirmed by Crell., who well explains it to mean 'quod non ita se gerent, quemadmodum sinceræ atque incorruptæ evangelii doctrinæ congruebat; quod a recto itinere, quod veritas evangelica monstrabat, deflecterent, et inter legem et evangelium quodammodo claudicaret.' See 1 Kings xviii. 21. Thus πρὸς means 'suitably to,' 'agreeably to;' as in Luke xii. 47. 2 Cor. v. 10, and in the Class. writers. Were it not for this being the evident force of the phrase, I should be inclined to agree with Hyper. and Calv. that the sense is, that Peter had by his dissimulation, and halting between two opinions, compromised the truth of the Gospel. So Calv., 'Rectus ad Evangelii veritatem incensus erat, unire Gentes Judæis, salva vera doctrina; necessitate vero servandæ Legis obstringi piorum conscientias, et silentio sepeliri libertatis doctrinam, hæc erat indigna merces unitatis.'—Ἰουδαῖος ζῆς, 'livest like the Gentiles,' i. e. in non-observance of the Mosaic Law.—Ἰουδαῖζεις is for Ἰουδαϊκῶς ζῆν, 'to observe the Jewish Law.—ἀναγκ. denotes 'the moral compulsion of strong influence;' for Peter seemed to employ his influence, at least by example, to induce the Gentile converts to submit to circumcision, and put themselves under the Jewish Law. On the Apostle's argument see Dr. Chandler. For τί, A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and 11 cursives, with some Versions and Latin Fathers, have ᾧ, which is edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; and internal evidence is in its favour, as being the more difficult reading, and unusual in this sense.

<sup>15</sup> It is not agreed, among Editors and Commentators, whether the Apostle's address to Peter terminates at v. 14, or is carried forward; and if so, where it terminates. Many think it is continued to the end of the Chapter; while some suppose it to terminate at v. 17; others, at v. 16; others, again, at νόμον in v. 16; and others, at v. 14. Weighty reasons are alleged in support of the first and last of those opinions. The question is, I apprehend, one that cannot be brought to any absolute decision. For, as observes Schott, 'in ipâ quidem serie et indole sententiarum hujus sectionis nihil apparet, quo alterutrum certo comprobetur.' The scope will, in either case, be precisely the same,—namely, to maintain the doctrine, that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Christ. In the one, it will be part of the address from Paul to Peter; in the other, it will be a general statement of the reasons on which Paul acted in thus addressing Peter. But it would seem, that, if we suppose the address to extend beyond v. 14 (and the nature of the construction obliges us to do so; for otherwise, as Winer observes, the Apostle would certainly have added some word, to indicate that he was addressing the Galatians, as ἡμεῖς οὖν ἀδελφοί, &c.) we cannot suppose it to terminate at least until the end of v. 17. Though, whether it terminates there, or at the end of the Chapter, I would not positively affirm. In the former case, vv. 18—21 may be regarded as meant to be a further illustration of what the Apostle then said on the subject of justification by faith alone. And thus there will be, as Est. remarks, 'latens recessus à Petro, et ingressus ad materiam principalem,' i. e. a paving the way to the direct address to the Galatians, at iii. 1; a view, it may be observed, confirmed by the transition from the use of the plural to the singular number.—ἡμεῖς, φύσει, &c. ἡμεῖς ought to be construed with εἰδότες a little further on; the two words forming nominatives absolute, put for a verb and participle. For want of perceiving this (which, indeed, seems to have escaped the Commentators), the ancient Critics subjoined δι, which has been injudiciously received, from a comparatively few MSS., by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.—At Ἰουδαῖοι supply ὄντες, this corresponding to Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων in the preceding verse. Render: 'since we, who are Jews by nature, or birth: a sense of φύσει sometimes found in the Class. writers. So Plato, 245, D, φύσει μὲν βάρβαροι ὄντες, νόμῳ δὲ Ἕλληνες. In ἐξ ἑθνῶν ἀμαρτωλοί we have a periphrasis for ἐθνικοὶ ἀμαρτωλοί: this being a customary appellation of the Gentiles (as οἱ ἄγιοι of the Christians) with reference chiefly to the idolatry, and gross immorality, closely connected with their very religion.

<sup>16</sup> ἐξ ἔργων lit. 'out of works of law,' i. e. on the score of duty done. Of the words ἡμεῖς εἰς Χρ. Ἰ. ἐπιστάμεσθαι, the sense is, 'we to wit,—namely, we (equiv. to we accordingly) have become believers in Christ Jesus.' The

Χριστοῦ καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐπιστεύσαμεν, ἵνα δικαιωθῶμεν ἐκ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου διότι οὐ δικαιωθήσεται ἐξ ἔργων νόμου πᾶσα σὰρξ. <sup>17</sup> Εἰ δὲ ζήτουντες δικαιωθῆναι ἐν Χριστῷ, εὐρέθημεν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἁμαρτωλοὶ,—ἀρα Χριστὸς ἁμαρτίας διάκονος; μὴ γένοιτο! <sup>18</sup> Εἰ γὰρ ἂ κατέλυσα, ταῦτα πάλιν οἰκοδομῶ, παραβάτην ἑμαυτὸν συν-

καὶ is epexegetic, as in Matt. i. 24, ἐποίησεν ὡς προσέταξεν αὐτῷ—καὶ (and accordingly) παρέλαβε τὴν γυν. And so often in New Test. and Class. writers, e. gr. Xen. An. ii. 5, 36, ἔχει τὴν διακίαν, καὶ τίθησκει.—ἵνα δικαιωθῶμεν—νόμου, 'that so we may obtain justification and acceptance out of (or, on account of) faith in Christ, and not out of, by (i. e. on account of) works of law,' duty done thereby. See Rom. iii. 20, 28, and notes.—Διότι οὐ δικαιωθήσεται—σὰρξ, 'because on the score of duty done will no man be found to have been justified and accepted with God.' In thus rendering ἔργα νόμου I have followed the just definition of Dr. Peile,—namely, 'the doing of what men, as instructed by law, moral or ceremonial, believe to be their duty.' Comp. 1 Kings xxi. 27, 29. 2 Kings v. 13. Mark x. 17, 20. Luke x. 25, 28. xvii. 10. xviii. 12. Rom. iii. 27. iv. 2, 4. It is truly observed by Dr. Peile, that to this enlarged view of the principle which the Apostle meant to combat in the assertion διότι οὐ δικαιωθήσεται ἐξ ἔργων νόμου πᾶσα σὰρξ, Calvin well led the way in the following able representation: 'Quæritur quid per OPERA LEGIS intelligat. Papistæ, ab Origene et Hieronymo decepti, tantum de umbris litæ esse opinantur, immo secure definiunt; opera Legis semper interpretantur cærimonias. De cærimonis obijciunt questionem molestam fuisse; quod et nos fatemur. Cur ergo, inquit, a particulari ad universalem causam transiret Paulus? Hæc sola Origeni et Hieronymo errandi causa fuit; neque enim putabant convenire, ut, quæ de solis cærimonis quærent Pseudo-Apostoli, plus apprehenderet Paulus. Verum non considerant, hanc ipsam causam illi fuisse tam acriter pugnandi, quod dogma illud longiorem trabebat caudam, quam primâ fronte præ se fereret. Neque enim tam molestum fuisset Paulo cærimonias servari, quam transferri fiduciam et simul gloriam salutis ad opera; quemadmodum quæ de prohibitione carnis ad certos dies agitur, non tam spectamus, quam grave sit illud, eum carnis interdici, quam de læque conscientiarum solliciti sumus. Non ergo extra causam spatiat Paulus, quæ disputationem de totâ Legē instituit; tametsi de cærimonis duntaxat digladiabatur Pseudo-Apostoli. Nam idæ cærimonies urgebant, ut salutem quærent homines in observatione Legis, quia scilicet cultum meritorium esse fingebant; quare non legem moralem illis opponit Paulus, sed solam Christi gratiam.'

17. The Apostle now proceeds to confirm the foregoing position. Previously, however, to adducing any direct argument in proof of it, he preoccupies a scruple, or doubt, as if the doctrine might seem to give a licence to sin. An objection to which the Apostle answers, first, by a solemn disavowal; and then propounds two solutions of the difficulty; 1. (v. 18) indirect, and deduced from the nature of contraries; it being absurd and impossible that Christ, who is confessedly the author of righteousness, should be the author of sin;—2. (v. 19) direct; in which the objection is more fully done away, by an argument deduced from the condition of the unregenerate, who are thereby spiritually dead. (Hyper.)—αὶ δὲ ζητούντες δικαιωθῆναι—μὴ γένοιτο! The full sense is, 'But if, while seeking [as we must] to be justified [and accepted] by God through Christ, we ourselves should be also found (or made out) to be mere sinners (like the rest of mankind, called 'sinners of the Gentiles,' and, accordingly,) yet in our sins,' 'unjustified by Christ,' as it is said 1 Cor. xv. 17.—Ἀρα Χρ. ἁμαρτίας διάκονος; 'Is it Christ [that has thus become] a minister of sin?' in other words, does it follow, that Christ [thus justifying those found to be sinners] has ministered unto sin (brought about the imputation of sin) by occasioning its commission; Μὴ γένοιτο! 'God forbid,' viz. that we should thus speak or think of Christ, 'in whom was God reconciling' the world unto Himself, not imputing their transgressions unto them, 2 Cor. v. 19. The Apostle means to say simply this, that 'if those who profess to seek justification through faith in Christ rely also, in some measure, upon any works of law, they thereby acknowledge themselves to be yet in their sins, and make Christ the minister of a dispensation insignificant to atone for sin.'—After ἁμαρτωλοὶ regularity of composition would have required ἀρα Χρ. ἁμαρτίας διάκονος, 'then it will follow that Christ is the author of sin' (i. e. of a dispensation which leaves men under the guilt and punishment of sin); a sort of reductio ad absurdum: and such is edited from a few copies by Berger, Vater, and Winer; but as μὴ γένοιτο follows,—which is, every where else in St. Paul's writings, preceded by an interrogation, that cannot be admitted; and it is better to suppose, with Schott, that the Apostle says short in the conclusion which he was going to draw, and changes it into the more spirited form of an interrogation, employing ἀρα, 'nonne?' not ἀρα, which enabled him to subjoin the strongest exception to such a conclusion, by μὴ γένοιτο!

18. αὶ γὰρ ἂ κατέλυσα, &c.] The first person singular is here used through delicacy, though the first person plural would be more suitable,—a general assertion being intended. In κατέλυσα and οἰκοδομῶ we have an architectural metaphor, taken from unwise builders, who pull down and build up again without due consideration, and thereby betray their own folly. By οἰκοδομῶ is meant, 'I observe, or countenance its observance, as necessary to justification;' and by κατέλυσα, 'I pronounce ineffectual for justification.'—Παραβάτην ἑμαυτὸν συνίστημι, 'I set forth or declare myself a transgressor [of the

1 Rom. 6. 11.
14 & 7. 4, 6.
8. 2.
2 & 14. 7, 8c.
3 Cor. 8. 15.
1 Thess. 5.
10.
m Rom. 6. 8.
ch. 1. 4.
2 & 5. 24.
2 & 6. 14.
Eph. 6. 2.
Tph. 2. 14.
n Heb. 7. 11.
a ch. 8. 7.

ιστημι. 19<sup>1</sup> ἐγὼ γὰρ διὰ νόμον νόμῳ ἀπέθανον, ἵνα Θεῷ ζήσω.

20<sup>m</sup> Χριστῷ συνεσταύρωμαι· ζῶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ, ζῇ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστός· ὁ δὲ νῦν ζῶ ἐν σαρκί, ἐν πίστει ζῶ τῇ τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντός με καὶ παραδόντος ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ.

21<sup>n</sup> Οὐκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ· εἰ γὰρ διὰ νόμον δικαιοσύνη, ἄρα Χριστὸς δωρεὰν ἀπέθανεν."

III. 1<sup>a</sup> Ὁ ἀνόητοι Γαλάται! τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε, [τῇ ἀληθείᾳ

[Law]; i. e. 'in resting my acceptance with God on a Law which places me in the class of transgressors, and from which the Son of God has come to make me free,'—a sense of συνίστημι occurring also at Rom. iii. 5. v. 8. 2 Cor. vi. 4, and sometimes in the later Classical writers.

19. ἐγὼ γὰρ διὰ νόμον—ζήσω On the force of ἐγὼ, see note at 1 Cor. v. 3. On the sense of the remaining words, no little difference of opinion exists. That by νόμῳ is meant the law of Moses, is generally admitted; but on the purport of νόμον the Expositors are not agreed. There can be little doubt that both νόμῳ and νόμου refer to one and the same thing; by which we obtain a weightier sentiment, such as is more fully explained at Rom. vii.; q. d. 'I, for my part, by the very law itself (i. e. by the tenor of the law, which condemned imperfect obedience, and, from its extreme strictness, left no hope of perfect obedience) am dead to the law (i. e. have renounced it, so as to have no confidence in it for salvation), I am set free from the obligation to obey it for justification; [but only] that I may live unto God, i. e. to his service, as justified through the blood of Jesus.' Comp. Rom. vi. 11. vii. 6. 2 Cor. v. 15; and see Calvin's able note.

20. In this verse the Apostle more fully develops the sentiment of the preceding one.—Χριστῷ συνεσταύρωμαι, &c., i. e. 'omnis vita, quam ego antehac tanquam Judæus egi, adeoque omnia studia et officia, quibus ista vita rogebatur (τὸ ζῆν τῷ νόμῳ, τῇ ἀμαρτίᾳ, τῇ σαρκί) nulla amplius sunt: novam nunc, ut homo Christianus, ingressus sum vitam (τὸ ζῆν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ Χριστῷ, τῇ πίστει). (Winer.)—ζῶ δὲ—Χριστῷ. This is usually explained, 'Nevertheless, I live; [or rather] not I live, but Christ liveth in me.' If this view be correct, there is in οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ a sort of oparorthosis, as at 1 Cor. xv. 10, ἐκτίλασα, οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλ' ἡ χάρις. Yet here we have not οὐκ, but οὐκ ἔτι, and such a use of δὲ were somewhat strained. Hence it is better to explain thus, ζῶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ, 'nay, I no longer live,' viz. as to 'the old man,' being dead to sin.—Οὐ δὲ νῦν ζῶ, quod autem nunc vivo: the full sense is, 'And as regards the life I now live in the flesh (carne prædixi), that I live not on carnal principles, but through faith in the Son of God, who so loved me as to deliver himself to death for me; implying faith in the atoning merits of Christ, to the abandonment of all legal justification by our own merits. By 'Christ's living in him' is meant living in him by the power of his Spirit and grace, thus communicating a divine life to his soul. There is an allusion to that transformation to the image of God and Christ which is implied in regeneration. Compare Rom. xii. 2. Col. iii. 10.

21. οὐκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χάριν τ. Θεῦ] The full

sense is, 'By thus arguing, I do not frustrate, or make nugatory, the grace of God, through Christ in the Gospel, as shown in freely giving his Son to die for us; which I should do, if I were to aim at obtaining justification by law, or any other coadjutor for obtaining salvation. For if justification in the sight of God—so as to be admitted into covenant with Him, and, consequently, to become heirs of future glory (infra, ch. v. 5)—can arise by means of law,—from observing law, whether moral or ceremonial, then Christ died uselessly, to no effect (see Joa. Antt. xvi. 3, 4), since men might have been saved without his death, and have been entitled to eternal life merely by their observance of law.'

III. Having previously vindicated his Apostleship, and briefly stated his doctrine of the method of justification by faith, the Apostle now proceeds to speak more authoritatively, and comes closer home to that important point, entering more fully into the subject of the abrogation of the Law. He argues, 1, with reference to the case of the Galatians; 2, from that of Abraham, showing the Law to have been only preparatory to the Gospel. And in order further to excite the attention of those whom he is addressing, he apostrophises them, employing an epithet (ἀνόητοι), which need not be pressed upon, even could it be proved that the Galatians were a stupid people; for insult we cannot imagine to have been intended by the Apostle; see note on Acts xvii. 22. In short, we may suppose them to be called ἀνόητοι simply with reference to the levity, and inconstancy, whereby they had deserted the doctrines of the Apostle, which they had professed and engaged to follow,—being so foolish as to suffer themselves to be deceived by the arts of false teachers: just what we should expect from the description given of them by Themist. Orat. xxiii., who ascribes to them the same characteristics as those of their ancestors, the Galli (and transmitted to their posterity, the modern French), namely, a quickness of apprehension, but united with levity and inconstancy; with which too they are charged by Strabo, l. iv. p. 299.

1. τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε:] This is usually rendered, 'Who has bewitched you?' incantavit? Preferable, however, is the version of the Vulg., Pesch. Syr., and Calvin, fascinavit? since, from the words following, οὐς κατ' ὀφθαλμοῦς, there seems an allusion, not so much to the incantation of witchcraft, as to the sleight of jugglers, namely, by making things to appear otherwise than they are: a metaphor taken from the gross delusion supposed to be practised on the senses, and espec. on the sight, by fascination or jugglery (to which purpose is the saying of an eminent Philosopher that 'fascination is over by the eye'), whereby

μη πείθεσθαι]; οἱς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς προεγράφη
 ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος. <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Τοῦτο μόνον θέλω μαθεῖν ἀφ' ὑμῶν ἐξ ἔργων νόμου τὸ Πνεῦμα ἐλάβετε, ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως; <sup>3</sup> Οὐτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε; ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι, νῦν σαρκὶ ἐπιτελείσθε; <sup>4</sup> <sup>c</sup> τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῇ; εἴ γε καὶ εἰκῇ. <sup>5</sup> Ὁ οὖν ἐπι-<sup>b</sup> Acts 2. 38.
<sup>c</sup> 2. 15.
<sup>d</sup> 15. 8.
<sup>e</sup> Eph. 1. 13.
<sup>f</sup> Heb. 6.
<sup>g</sup> 6.
<sup>h</sup> 10. 23—30.
<sup>i</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 20—
<sup>j</sup> 22.
<sup>k</sup> John 8.

things are made to appear otherwise than what they really are; and therefore highly adapted to denote that fascination of the judgment, by which it is brought to regard as true what is in reality false. To this there is a close allusion in the words that follow, οἱς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χρ. προεγράφη ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρ., where, in proleg., there is a metaphor taken from paintings publicly exhibited, and accordingly, of which the subjects are familiar to the public, and imprinted indelibly, through the visual organs, on the mind. The full sense, then, here intended is, 'You to whom Jesus Christ nailed to the cross was represented to the eyes [of your mind] as if depicted in a painting, how could it be that those eyes should be fascinated,—as it were, deprived of sight?' In this lively representation of Christ crucified there is a double allusion: 1. to the Eucharist, and, 2. to the Apostle's preaching, which had set forth to them the great doctrine of Christ crucified. By τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι is meant, 'not to receive the fundamental truth of the Gospel,'—justification by faith through the blood of Christ, and not by works of law. However, the words (cancelled also by Lachm. and Tisch.) are, notwithstanding all that I have urged in their defence, probably not genuine; and certainly internal evidence is rather against them.

2. Having thus rebuked them, the Apostle proceeds to argue with them. (Chandl.)—τοῦτο μόνον θέλω μαθεῖν, &c. From the exx. adduced by Wets. this appears to have been a common formula, resorted to for the purpose of bringing an argument to a speedy decision, by demanding an answer to one principal question,—such as should, of itself, be sufficient to determine the whole matter at issue. The interrogation here has great spirit; and the Apostle's argument may be stated, in the words of Dr. Chandler, as follows: 'Those who are justified by faith in Christ need not conform to the law of Moses for justification; but Christians are justified by faith. Therefore, &c. That Christians are justified by faith is thus proved. Those who have received by faith that Spirit from, which is the great evidence of their justification, are justified by faith; but Christians have received. Therefore, &c. The argument is, as Hyper. remarks, 'one ex signo, i. e. from experience of the manifest effect of faith.' By τὸ Πνεῦμα must, as the best Expositors are agreed, be understood, not so much the ordinary gifts of the Spirit, as the extraordinary and supernatural ones by the laying on of hands (compare Acts x. 44, ἐπέκειτο τὸ Πνεῦμα, &c.), whereby the gift of tongues was communicated. 'It was (says Hyper.) expedient that, by such external signs the doctrine of the Gospel should be confirmed and propagated as widely as possible. Accordingly those gifts of the Spirit were communicated, as the full evidence that those who received them were, of a truth, the people of God.' The full import of the words, which imply more than they express, is well stated by Chandl. as follows: 'Did ye receive that Spirit, which was the fullest evidence of your being justified, accepted, and received as the children and people of God, by conformity to the law of Moses, or by embracing the doctrine of the Gospel? If by embracing the doctrine of the Gospel, then you became justified by embracing that doctrine, and consequently need not conform to the law of Moses, in order to obtain justification.'—ἀκοῆς πίστεως. 'Ακοῆς is by many said to stand for ὑπακοῆς. But it rather denotes the hearing, or being instructed in (as Rom. x. 17); and πίστις here signifies 'the Gospel, as opposed to the Law.' So in 1 Thess. ii. 13, λόγον ἀκοῆς is equivalent to τὸν λόγον τὸν ἀκούσμενον.—Ἐργων is prefixed to νόμου, as in a kindred passage of Rom. ix. 32, in order to hint at the nature of the Law, as one of works; and ἀκοῆς to πίστι, because, as the Apostle says, Rom. x. 17, 'faith cometh by hearing [the word of God preached].'

3. οὕτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε;] The Adverb here has much force, as in Philom. Incert. frag. 46, 1, οὕτως ἀνάνδρως γίγνεται, and Thucyd. vi. 36, 1, 'Ἀθηναῖοι ὅστις μὴ βούλεται οὕτω κακῶς φρονῆσαι.—Ἐναρξάμενοι—ἐπιτελείσθε; 'After having begun in the Spirit, are ye finishing with the flesh?' i. e. having begun with a spiritual religion (one whose truth was attested by the Holy Spirit), are ye finishing with a carnal and ceremonial one? do ye take up with those external ordinances of the Law, which were mere forms, and only typical of the internal and spiritual gifts of the Gospel? There is great δεινότης in this mode of expression, in which we have, as Hyper. observes, an argumentum ex absurdo per collationem; and the infinite inferiority of the flesh to the Spirit is taken for granted. Comp. John vi. 63.

4. τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῇ;] We have here another argument, the exact force of which depends upon the sense assigned to ἐπάθετε, which is a term used not only of evil but of good, in which latter acceptance almost all the more recent Commentators have taken the word, understanding it of the favours and benefits before mentioned; i. e. 'Have ye experienced so many spiritual benefits, tokens of Divine favour, to no purpose?' A sense, indeed, permitted by the context; yet not required by it. Crell., Bos, and Wolf, have ably maintained the interpretation adopted by the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, 'have ye suffered so many evils?' (i. e. persecutions,) which yields an equally apt, and a much stronger sense; for, as Hyper. remarks, we usually value that which has been acquired by great danger. And it is an excellent way to move men's affections, to set before them the difficulty, labour, and toils already endured in order to the attainment of some desired object. We do not readily commit an act by which all our previous labour will seem expended d Acts 14. 3, 9, 10.

 e 10. 11, 12.
 f Rom. 15. 19.
 1 Cor. 1. 4, 5.
 g Gen. 15. 6.
 Rom. 4. 3.
 James 2. 23.
 f Rom. 4. 11, 12, 13.
 g Gen. 12. 3. & 13. 12. & 22. 18. & 26. 4. Acts 3. 25.

χορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, <sup>a</sup> καὶ ἐνεργῶν δυνάμει ἐν ὑμῖν, ἐξ ἔργων νόμου ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως; <sup>b</sup> ὥς καθὼς Ἀβραὰμ ἐπίστευσεν τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. <sup>c</sup> ὅτι οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οὗτοι εἰν υἱοὶ Ἀβραάμ. <sup>d</sup> ὅτι οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οὗτοι εἰν υἱοὶ Ἀβραάμ. <sup>e</sup> Προϋδούσα δὲ

in vain. Against the other interpretation a most serious objection lies,—that, although some few instances have been adduced from the Classical writers of πάρχω used, without the addition of εἰ, or such like, in a good sense, yet not one has been produced from either the New Test. or the Sept. Whereas examples of πάρχω in a bad sense, without any addition, are common in both the Script. and Class. writers; not to mention that thus the expressions εἰ γὰρ αὐτῶν (scil. πᾶν.) have more point and significancy. On reconsidering the disputed interpretation of ἐν ἔργῳ, involved in these words, I see no sufficient reason for altering my former opinion, that the ancient and usual interpretation is to be retained. The arguments against it advanced by Schomer, Kypke, and others, are any thing but weighty. Schomer has not proved that the Galatian converts had sustained no persecutions from their Gentile relations, friends, and neighbours. The probability is, that (as was the case in other Churches) they had; and it does not follow that they had not, though no such have been recorded. It was sufficient for the argument's sake to merely allude to them here. As to persecutions from the Jews, it must be admitted that those, under the circumstances of the case, were not likely to occur. Considering, too, that no example of this use of παρῶν, without something added of benefits, or blessings, is to be found, either in the New Test. or in the Sept., and in the Class. writers only once or twice, while, as used in the sense of suffering with an adjunct, it occurs very frequently, it is unlikely that so very uncommon an idiom should have been employed by St. Paul in so unstudied a composition as this Epistle. As to the argument so confidently urged, that the sense, as applied to spiritual benefits, agrees better with the context, it is invalid,—for, in point of fact, it does not agree better, nor so well. As to the mention of Divine benefits occurring at the two former verses and the one following the present verse, it does not supply any certain argument; for, as Crell. observes, 'the Apostle does not quite recede from the circumstance of the Holy Spirit's impartment to the Galatians mentioned at ver. 2, but he has only explained some of its fruits, and admonished the Galatians to beware of losing those fruits; after the interposition of which admonitions, he returns to what was his main object [for the sake of which the rest had been added] at ver. 5, urging it anew, and, it would seem, somewhat more neatly than if he had at ver. 4 spoken of the very same thing.' This remark tends to corroborate what I have said, that 'in these verses, 2, 3, 4, the Apostle diversifies the argumentation by asking, (1) whether professing such high spiritual gifts and graces, and such distinguished Gospel benefits, they will now take up with mere external rites, only typical of and shadowing them forth: (2) whether, after suffering so many trials from persecution, as the profession of a religion every where spoken against must have subjected them, they will continue so to act as to have suffered them to no purpose;' q. d. 'Shall the benefits ye have received by the Gospel be changed into empty ceremonies?'—εἰ γὰρ αὐτῶν. This has not, what many have imagined, the force of amplification (as if involving a sort of threat), but rather (as the best Expositors, Chrysa., Theodoret, Theoph., Oecum., Calv., Hyper., Est., Crell., and others, are agreed) of mitigation or correction; q. d. 'If, indeed, it should be proved by the event that they have been suffered in vain, which I will not suppose. Thus he expresses a hope in them, that they would see their errors and amend them.

5. Here we have, as Hyper. observes, a third hortatory reason, deduced from the purpose and good pleasure of God to give the Spirit; nearly the same argument as at ver. 2,—here repeated for greater emphasis, consisting in an appeal to their own senses; in the former case, whether the Spirit of grace they had received was consequent on their obedience to the Law, or on their embracing the Gospel; in the latter, whether the spiritual gifts of power were communicated by the one or by the other.—On the term ἐνεργῶν, as one appropriate to the imparting of the spiritual gifts, see note supra, ii. 8.—By the term ἐκ χορηγῶν, it is intimated that those gifts and graces of the Spirit were furnished forth in a large abundance, so as to supply every need; perhaps with allusion to the χορηγός at Athens, who supplied the various expenses for a public spectacle.

6—9. The Apostle here (as in Rom. iv. 1, seqq.) supports the doctrine of justification by faith, by a reference to the example of Abraham, the Father of the faithful, and illustrious for the many signal proofs he gave of faith in God. See the note on the passage of Romans.

6. καθὼς Ἀβραὰμ, &c.] Kathōs may have here its usual illustrative and comparative force, —quemadmodum. It also involves an οὐτως, with reference to the thing compared; q. d. 'Even as Abraham had faith in God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness; so it is in your case.' 'You must have entire confidence in God;' wherein the correspondence of the two cases consists.

7. οἱ ἐκ πίστεως] Most Expositors treat this phrase as like οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς for οἱ περιτομημένοι, and equiv. to οἱ πιστεύοντες. It seems, however, to be a stronger expression; meaning, 'those who rest on faith.'—genuine faith, as Abraham's was, and rest on that only, as he did, and seek to be justified alone by it; they, it is said, are alone the true [spiritual] children of Abraham. On the force of υἱοὶ see Rom. iv. 1. ix. 7.

8. Having taught, in a general way, that men are justified by faith, in like manner as was Abraham, the Apostle now, descending to particulars, shows that the Gentiles as well as Jews are included; that no one might imagine that the justification by faith, which Abraham obtained, and which was promised to his seed, did

ἡ γραφή, ὅτι ἐκ πίστεως δικαιοὶ τὰ ἔθνη ὁ Θεὸς, προευηγγελίσατο τῷ Ἀβραάμ. Ὅτι *ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν σοὶ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη. 9 Ὡστε οἱ ἐκ πίστεως εὐλογοῦνται σὺν τῷ πιστῷ Ἀβραάμ. 10 Ὅσοι γὰρ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου εἰσιν, ὑπὸ κατάραν <sup>h Deut. 27.
Jer. 11. 2.
Ezek. 18. 4.
Rom. 4. 19.
20. & 22.</sup>
εἰσὶ γέγραπται γάρ. Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς ὃς οὐκ ἐμμένει
ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς γεγραμμένοις ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ τοῦ νόμου, τοῦ ποιῆσαι αὐτά. 11 Ὅτι δὲ ἐν νόμῳ οὐδεὶς δικαιούται
παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, ὅλον ὅτι ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.
12 Ὁ δὲ νόμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ πίστεως ἀλλ' ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ
[ἄνθρωπος] ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς. 13 Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἐξηγό-

not certain also to the Gentiles. (Calv. and Crell.) By ἡ γραφή we are to understand, per prophetarum, the Holy Spirit, who inspired the words; as Rom. iv. 3. John vii. 38.—Προ-ἰδούσα, 'having foreseen and foreknown.'—δικαιοῖ, 'is to justify'; i. e. would justify: a not uncommon sense of the present tense.—προ-ευγγ. τῷ Ἀ. The sense is, 'announced before [the giving of the Law, nay, even before the birth of Isaac] the glad tidings.'—ἐνευλογηθή-σονται—ἰσθ. The citation here is founded neither on the Hebrew nor the Sept.; and indeed seems formed from two different passages, ἐνευλογ. ἐν σοὶ from Gen. xii. 3, and πάντα τὰ ἔθνη from Gen. xxii. 18, where τῇ γῇ is added. Instead of αὐτὰ, ἐνευλογ. is rightly edited by Matthæi, Grieseb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., from many MSS.

9. Ὅσοι ἐκ πίστεως—Ἀβρ.] The Apostle here simply repeats the general conclusion at v. 7. Render: 'So then those [only], who have a like genuine faith with believing Abraham are to be blessed [with him];' namely, by having their faith counted for righteousness. It is well pointed out by Calv. and Hyper. that πιστῷ is highly emphatic; for, as he observes, 'nulla personæ qualitas in rationem hic venit, nisi fides.' In short (to use the words of Bp. Warburton, Works, vol. vi. p. 14), 'the Apostle is here convincing the Galatians, that the Gospel of Christ is founded on the same principle with that which justified Abraham,—namely, Faith.'

10—14. Here the Apostle urges other arguments in proof of the doctrine of justification by faith; the one at ver. 10, taken from the constitution of the law itself, being, as Hyper. observes, an argument ab effectu legis pians contrariis. It is shown that those who sought to be justified by their observance of the law, so far from obtaining the blessedness of Abraham, abode under the curse of the law, and were liable to Divine punishment. The argument, when expressed in logical form, is (as Borger states it) this: 'Those who trust to the Law for salvation must completely observe it; for vengeance is denounced against the transgressors of it. But all have transgressed it; therefore all are liable to its punishment.'

10. Ὅσοι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου εἰ.] This must, from the force of the context, mean, 'those who depend on the works of the Law for salvation'; alluding to the opposite, vv. 7, 9, ἐκ πίστεως.—ὑπὸ κατάραν ε., 'are under curse,' namely, that of the broken law; are ἐπικατάρατος, as in the passage of the Old Test. then quoted, to show the reason of the thing. The citation does not quite correspond with either the Hebrew or the Sept.; but the sense is the same.—Of the term ἐπικατάρατος the proper signif. is ὑπὸ κατάραν ὢν, diris deotus; and thence it comes to mean, according to its sense in this verse, penitendus gravissimè, and, by a further remove, abominandus, detestabilis, 'fit to be marked with infamy, by a stigma'; and so it is used at ver. 13. The word does not occur in the Class. writers, who use, instead of it, ἐκατάρατος, 'one on whose head rests a curse.' Yet it has been found in a Greek inscription, ap. Boeckh. Inscr. t. ii. p. 457, ἐπικατάρατος ἦν ἐπὶ ταῖς προσηρμύαις δρᾶσι.

11. Here is adduced another argument (derived from the nature of contraries) to prove that no man is justified by the law. 'Having shown that the law maketh accursed, but faith blesseth, the Apostle now shows also that faith alone justifieth, and not the Law; and he brings in the words of the Prophet Habakkuk to attest the truth of what he is saying.' (Theophyl.) The argument is (as Bp. Warburton states it, Works, vol. v. p. 400) this: 'That no one can obtain eternal life by virtue of the Law is evident from one of your own Prophets [Hab.], who expressly holds, that "the just shall live by faith." Now, by the Law no rewards are promised to faith, but to works only.'—ὅτι ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ π. ζ. At δὲ supply γίγνεται. The passage is also cited at Rom. i. 17, and Hebr. x. 38. Some Expositors would construe, ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσ. But that, as Bp. Middl. observes, 'would require ὁ δίκ. ὁ ἐκ π., or else ὁ ἐκ πίστεως δίκ., and would then yield a weak and inappropriate sense. Whereas to affirm that the good man, he whose obedience, though imperfect, is sincere, shall reap life everlasting from faith (as opposed to a law of works) and from faith alone, is a most important declaration; and it agrees exactly with the context.'

12. Ὁ δὲ νόμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ πίστεως] Render, 'But the law is not of faith; i. e. depends not on faith, has nothing to do with it. In οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως (where the πίστεως is emphatic) is implied ἀλλ' ἐξ ἔργων: though that is suggested in the ἀλλὰ following, which belongs, I conceive, both to the clauses omitted, and to the one to which it is affixed, where it may be rendered imo. On the logical argument in this and the foregoing verse see Hyper. and Chandler.—ἄνθρωπος after αὐτὰ, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, and several Versions and Fathers, is probably from the margin, being introduced either from the Sept. or from Rom. x. 5.

13. Here we have a further argument, derived ρασεν ἐκ τῆς κατάρας τοῦ νόμου, γενόμενος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν κατάρᾳ (γέγραπται γάρ Ἐπικατάρματος πᾶς ὁ κρεμάμενος ἐπὶ ξύλου) <sup>14</sup> ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ γένηται ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τοῦ Πνεύματος λάβωμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως. <sup>15</sup> Ἐδελφοί, (κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω) ὁμοῦ ἀνθρώπου κεκυρωμένην διαθήκην οὐδεὶς ἀθετεῖ ἢ ἐπιδιατάσσεται. <sup>16</sup> Τῷ δὲ Ἀβραὰμ ἐρρήθησαν αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, καὶ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ οὐ λέγει· καὶ τοῖς σπέρμασιν, ὡς ἐπὶ πολλῶν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐφ' ἑνός· καὶ τῷ σπέρματί σου, ὃς ἐστὶ Χριστός. <sup>17</sup> Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω διαθήκην προκεκυρωμένην ὑπὸ τοῦ

k Rom. 6. 19.
1 Cor. 15. 22.
Heb. 9. 17.
1 Gen. 12. 7.
& 15. 5.
& 17. 7.
& 22. 18.
ver. 8.

m Gen. 15.
12, 16.
Exod. 12. 40.
41.
Acta 7. 6.

from the intent and object of Christ's death.—Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἐξηγόρασεν, &c., q. d. 'we are justified by faith, and not by the works of the law, because Christ hath redeemed us'; literally, 'hath bought us off from the curse of the law'; there being an allusion to the price paid. See my Lex. It is not agreed whether ἡμᾶς has reference to the Jews only, and by 'the law' be meant the law of Moses; or to both the Jews and the Gentiles, and by the law, the law of nature as well as the law of Moses is to be understood. The latter opinion is ably maintained by Grot., Whitby, and Mackn., and is, on various accounts, preferable.—Κατάρᾳ, for κατάρματος (abstract for concrete), 'obnoxious to punishment.' The general sense of the passage is thus traced by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv.: 'Christ hath redeemed us from that general curse, which lay upon all men for the breach of any part of the law, by taking upon himself that particular curse laid only upon them who underwent a certain punishment of the law which was affixed to a crime.' Deut. xxi. 23.

14. ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, &c.] meaning, 'with the intent that the blessing [promised to the posterity] of Abraham, [of justification by faith] might come, by (or through) Jesus Christ, unto the Gentiles [also].—ἵνα τὴν—πίστιν. Render: 'that so we (both Jews and Gentiles) might receive the promise of the Spirit (i. e. the promised Spirit) through faith'; i. e. 'on the sole condition of faith'; see Rom. iv. 9, 16. It is to be borne in mind, that the gift of the Spirit was all along foretold by the Prophets as a part of the covenanted blessing.

15—18. Here the Apostle further illustrates the argument from the nature of the Abrahamic covenant, which, he means to say, was in no respect made void; the law subsequently promulgated having by no means taken away its force. This is illustrated by an example taken from human affairs, or what is the usual practice of men; for such is the force of the formula κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω, so used also at Rom. iii. 5. vi. 19, and often in the Rabbinical writers.

15. ὁμοῦ ἀνθρώπου] Commentators need not have stumbled, as they have done, at the ὁμοῦ, or proposed to read ὁμοῦς; see note on 1 Cor. xiv. 7. The word is rightly rendered by Borger, Winer, and Schott, quasiomnis, and in our common version though = even though; a signifi. oft. found in the Class. writers. In such cases, the difficulty arises from two clauses being blended together; and, accordingly, the true force of the word will best appear by dividing them. Thus here: 'No one disannuls, or alters, a covenant, though it be but a man's covenant.'—ἀθετεῖ, for ἀκυροῖ at ver. 17.—ἐπιδιατάσσεται is rightly explained by Borger, 'adds new and contrary conditions or stipulations.' So Jos., Bell. ii. 3. Antt. xvii. 9, uses ἐπιδιαθήκη. Here διαθήκη is by some explained fœdus, 'contract'; by others, testamentum. The former interpretation is preferable. But Winer seems to best express the sense by the general term dispositionem, which will include both.—κεκυρ., 'when established by attestation.'

16. τῷ δὲ Ἀβρ.] The example is now applied to the promise or covenant of God with Abraham. The plural in ἐπαγγ. may refer to the repetition of the original engagement. To the Apostle's interpretation of τῷ σπέρματι, and to the mode of taking σπέρμασι, adopted by him, several recent Commentators have taken exception; maintaining that σπέρμα in the promise to Abraham is not meant, as Paul takes it, of the Messiah, but of Christians in general. But the former view is ably vindicated by Beza, Whitby, and espec. Koppe, Borger, and Schott, who have shown that the interpretation is found in the Rabbinical writers, and that the mode of argumentation here adopted is quite Jewish, and therefore suitable to the occasion; and, moreover, that this does not at all affect the general argument,—since the Apostle only asks this postulate, that the promises made to Abraham had all of them a reference to the Messiah. As to the assertion made by recent Commentators, that γῆ and σπέρμα were never used in the plural, except to denote the seeds of vegetables, it is quite untenable. The use of the Old Test. will not prove that γῆ was never used to denote sons, or families. And as to σπέρμα, it is used elsewhere in the plural for sons, in Soph. (Ed. C. 599. Æschyl. Suppl. 290. Plato, Legg. p. 853; and occasionally elsewhere in the sense racæ or families. 'The meaning of the argument,' as Conyb. observes, is, that 'the recipients of God's promises are not to be looked on as an aggregate of different individuals, or of different races, but are all one body, whereof Christ is the head.'

17. We have here a continuation of the argument à similitudine de testamento eius fœderis commenced at ver. 15, but interrupted by some parenthetical matter at ver. 16, and now resumed and concluded.—τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, 'I mean by that example to let you know.' The form recurs at 1 Cor. i. 12, and elsewhere, and is nearly equiv. to τοῦτο δὲ φημι, 1 Cor. vii. 29.

Θεοῦ εἰς Χριστὸν, ὁ μετὰ ἑτῆ τετρακόσια καὶ τριάκοντα γεγονὼς νόμος οὐκ ἀκυροῖ, εἰς τὸ καταργῆσαι τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν. 18<sup>a</sup> Εἰ γὰρ ἐκ νόμου ἡ κληρονομία, οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγελίας τῷ δὲ Ἀβραάμ δι' ἐπαγγελίας κεχάρισται ὁ Θεός. 19<sup>a</sup> Τί οὖν ὁ νόμος; Τῶν

n Rom. 4. 13,
14.
15.
16.
17.
18.
19.
20.
21.
22.
23.
24.
25.
26.
27.
28.
29.
30.
31.
32.
33.
34.
35.
36.
37.
38.
39.
40.
41.
42.
43.
44.
45.
46.
47.
48.
49.
50.
51.
52.
53.
54.
55.
56.
57.
58.
59.
60.
61.
62.
63.
64.
65.
66.
67.
68.
69.
70.
71.
72.
73.
74.
75.
76.
77.
78.
79.
80.
81.
82.
83.
84.
85.
86.
87.
88.
89.
90.
91.
92.
93.
94.
95.
96.
97.
98.
99.
100.

xv. 50, where see my note. As to the chronological question connected with the number 430, it is of no consequence to the Apostle's argument; yet it is, I think, sufficiently settled by supposing (with most Expositors) that the Apostle is computing not from the ratification, but from the original making of the promise, mentioned at Gen. xii. 3.—εἰς Χριστὸν. These words are absent from 3 uncials, A, B, C, and 4 cursives, and are not recognized in the Vulg. and Coptic Versions, and several Fathers, and are cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; but without reason. I find them in all the Lamb. and Mus. MSS.; and internal evidence is in their favour, considering that no reason can be imagined why words so very obscure as these should have been interpolated; whereas their obscurity might very well cause them to be passed over by the Vulg. Translators, and thus to be cancelled by the early Critical Revisers. Though, indeed, the difficulty may be removed in a more legitimate manner, by supposing εἰς Χριστὸν to be an error of the scribes for ἐν Χριστῷ, which must have had place in the copies used by the Syriac Translators, and also by the Italic and Arabic Translators, and by Ambrose: and Lachm. inserts it within brackets in his edition of the Vulg. as found in two of the most ancient MSS. This reading is followed in our Common Version, and is adopted by Estius, who renders it, 'non potest irritum facere testamentum, seu pactum, ante firmatum ratumque factum a Deo atque in Christo præstandum, ut sic aboleatur et inanis reddatur Dei promissio.' This reading involves less difficulty than that involved in εἰς Χρ., which is capable of no sense without using violence, as in Dr. Peile's version.—οὐκ ἀκυροῖ, 'does not (by impl., cannot) annul.'—καταργεῖν is with great reason thought by some to be a Cilicium,—or rather, I should say, a provincialism.

18. 'The Apostle having shown, that the great promise, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," referred to the Messiah, and, by consequence, that this promise could not be annulled by the law of Moses, which was given four hundred and thirty years after it, draws the proper inference at ver. 18, to which all his reasoning tended,—namely, that justification, righteousness, and acceptance with God, could not be by the observation of the law of Moses.' (Chandler.) See also Calv. and Hyper.—ἡ κληρονομία, meaning the blessing mentioned at ver. 14, 'salvation secured, as by inheritance, on Abraham, and believers in general.' At ἐκ νόμου supply ἐν τῷ, 'does not come by the observance of the law [or by any law of works].'
—οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγελ., &c., i. e. 'is not obtained by the promise of God to Abraham, that it should come through Jesus Christ.' The reason (says Abp. Newcome) is, because obedience to law makes reward a matter of debt; whereas, in fact, the inheritance, or Abraham's reward, was a free gift by promise.' The sense of the verse is ably illustrated by Bp. Bull in his Harm.

Apost., p. 46. He shows why the Apostle here places the law in opposition to the promise, and points out the real scope, which (as Beza saw) was to tacitly meet an objection on the part of the Jews, as to what had been said in the verse preceding; q. d. 'the law and the promise cannot stand together, "nempe ut hereditas ex Legge simul et promissione detur; cum iustitia Legis (loquitur κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, ver. 15) meritum inducat et gratiam excludat, adeoque gratuita promissioni repugnet, nempe si Lex iustificandi causâ data fuisset."—καχάρ. is used, and not ἰδίῳ, either to suggest the gracious kindness of God, or that it was made gratis, and without merit, or both senses; the latter as suspended on the former. See Bp. Bull, ubi supra.

19. τί οὖν ὁ νόμος;] 'What, then, [was the object of] the Law?' meaning the whole Mosaic dispensation, of which, Calv. remarks, the purpose was to prescribe a rule of life, and the ceremonies to be observed in the worship of God, and then to annex promises and threatenings.—τῶν παραβ. χάριν προσετίθη, 'it was superadded [to the promise to Abraham] on account of transgressions, i. e. both for the knowing or taking cognizance of them (see Rom. iv. 15, 20. vii. 8—10), and for the restraining of them by legal penalties; for the moral law was meant to convince men of sin, and to check sin, and espec., by thus discovering it, to make men see their need of the promise of a Saviour. See more in the able notes of Hyper. and Calv., who take a deeper and more profoundly theological view of this text than Expositors in general.—ἐχθροὶ οὗ Ἰσθ., &c. These words seem meant to suggest, that the Law was only intended to be temporary, and preparatory to the Gospel (as in many respects shadowing it forth, and showing its necessity), which was to be ushered in when the Seed (i. e. the Messiah, see supra ver. 16) should come, unto whom both Jews and Gentiles, being engrafted by faith, would become the spiritual seed of Abraham. There is here, however, a notable variety of reading. For προσετίθη Grieb. and Scholz edit τίθη, from MSS. D, F, G, and 5 cursive MSS., confirmed by the Vulg. and Italic Versions; while Lachm. and Tisch. retain the ε rec., rightly; since the strongest external authority (προσετίθη being found in all the Lamb. and Mus. MSS.) requires this; and internal evidence is rather in its favour, considering the great improbability of its having been (as Borger thinks) brought in, for the purpose of introducing the sense,—that the Law was not adverse to the Divine promises, but was only superadded to them. Surely this would argue great presumption; and such a change would not be likely to have been all but universally received. More likely is it that τίθη was introduced by those Critics who, as did Theodor. (misled by his usual guide Chrys., who has handled the text with any thing but his usual care), thinking that the sense is simply lata est, 'was promulgated,' regarded the παραβάσεων χάριν † [προσ]ετέθη, (ἄχρως οὐ ἔλθῃ τὸ σπέρμα ᾧ ἐπηγγέλλεται,) διαταγείς δι' ἀγγέλων ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου. 20 Ὁ δὲ μεσίτης ἐνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν. 21 Ὁ οὖν νόμος κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγελιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ; Μὴ γένοιτο! εἰ γὰρ ἐδόθη νόμος ὁ δυνάμενος ζωοποιῆσαι, ὅπως ἂν ἐκ νόμου ἦν ἡ δικαιο-

Preposition as worse than useless, and (according to their wont) expunged it. What further induced them to do this was, that νόμος τιθεῖναι is a phrase often occurring in the sense 'to promulgate a law,' but never νόμος προστιθεῖναι, at least in that sense, but only 'to superadd a law to some previous law;' for in that sense it does occur, however rarely,—namely, in Hdot. ii. 136, ἐλαγος—προστίθηναι δι' ἑτι τοῦτο τῷ νόμῳ τούτῳ, the very sense here intended; but which sense Mill, Bengel, Berger, and Grieseb. failed to see, though it had been ably pointed out, long before them, by Theophyl., Hyper., Bulling., Calv., and Est., of whom Bulling. well observes, that 'an emphasis rests on προστίθῃ, apposita, adjuncta, "super-introduced," "super-added," into the Abrahamic Covenant.' And Est. (who here rejects even his own Vulgate) remarks that the expression is used lest the Law should be thought to have succeeded to the Promise, and removed it; therefore the Law is represented as 'adjuncta et subinducta (rather superinducta) manente promissione.' Bulling. points out that it is as much as to say, 'Lex ita addita est Testamento Dei æternæ, ut hoc neque subverterit, neque alieno sensu violarit, imò juverit, confirmarit, ac exposuerit magis.'—ἐπιγγέλλεται may be taken impersonally, or ἐπαγγελία be supplied from ἐπαγγέλλας just before. The words διαταγείς δι' ἀγγέλων are closely connected with προστίθῃ. Render: 'promulgated by or through the intervention of the angels;' the meaning of which will appear from the note on Acts vii. 53.—ἐν χ. μεσίτου, 'by the intervention of a mediator,—namely, Moses,' who is so called also by Philo, and, indeed, by the Rabbinical writers, with allusion to Deut. v. 5, Sept. (doubtless in the mind of the Apostle), καγὼ ἐσθῆκεν ἀνὰ μέσον Κυρίου καὶ ὁμίω. Nay, it has been fully shown by Schoettgen in loc. that the Mediator was the common appellation given to Moses in the Rabbinical writers; by whom the Law is often said to have been given 'by his hand as mediator.'

20 ὁ δὲ μεσίτης—is ὁ μεσίτης. This is, perhaps, the most obscure passage in the New Test., and certainly, above all others, 'vexatus ab interpretibus,' if it be true, as Winer affirms, that there are no less than 250 modes of explanation. In a work of this limited nature it is impracticable to enter into a variety of interpretations; I can merely indicate that which has the greatest semblance of truth. I am still of opinion that the view taken by Prof. Schott, as follows, is the most entitled to be thought the true one. "The intent of the Apostle is, I conceive, to affirm the paramount authority and dignity of the Sinaitical Dispensation above any human covenant, from a consideration of the nature, not, indeed, of the Lawgiver, Moses, but of God, the Author of the Law. And though the expression etc. viewed by itself alone, would not signify any thing or person unchangeable, yet this idea of one who is all-con- sistent, and who ever remains the same, may very well, in a context like the present, be united with the proper and usual signification of the word; comp. Rom. iii. 30. Philip. i. 27. So also in vv. 15, 17, seqq., mention had been made of the alteration, or abrogation, of a Dispensation, or Covenant. These things considered, there is surely no objection to assigning to the word etc. in both members of ver. 20, the sense of immutability, or perfect consistency [in which case etc. will stand for ὁ αὐτός, 'one and the same.' So Thucyd. iii. 38, ἐγὼ αὐτός εἰμι τῇ γνώμῃ. Ed.]. With respect to the expression εἷς ἐστιν, it is here, I conceive, used in the same signif. as at 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 4, ἀ partitiones alicujus domus, si addictus esse, 'to be of any one's party.' Thus the sense will be, 'A mediator, indeed, belongs not to one person or party only [and that unchangeable];' q. d. 'in human concerns, where a mediator is wanted, there are of course two parties, between whom a mediator may act, whether the transaction be between two persons only, or there be a large number of persons constituting either or both parties. Hence, from the Sinaitical Law being promulgated ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου (ver. 19), it does not follow that it is of perpetual authority. And yet God is one,—he remains ever a God unchangeable; the covenant of the Sinaitical Dispensation was not of human, but Divine authority; nor did it depend on the will of man, but of God, who is unchangeable."

21. A doubt is now proposed, arising from what the Apostle had said at ver. 20 respecting the authority of the Sinaitical law, as evinced from the nature of God;—namely, whether the Sinaitical law, being of Divine authority and command, was meant to so limit (or change) the promise given to Abraham, that that should no longer be a promise, of which the fulfilment belonged only to the free grace of God. This doubt (or rather objection) the Apostle removes, by giving them to understand, that although each Dispensation of God (the law and the promise) is different in its own nature and efficacy from the other, yet there is no such inconsistency between them, as that the law should take away the promise; nay, that each coheres with the other, by a connexion divinely ordained, whereby the law served to pave the way for the Christian Dispensation; finally, that the law does not interfere with the promise, but tends to confirm it. (Schott.) The general sense of εἰ γὰρ ἰδοὺ ὁ νόμος—δικαιώσας, is, 'for if a law were given which could raise men from death to life, then verily justification would have come from law.' Of course under 'justification' is included 'sanctification and salvation.' The sentiment is the same as at Rom. xi. 32. The connexion of the argument is thus traced by Mr. Conyb. 'If the law could give men spiritual life, and so enable them to fulfil its precepts, it would give them righteousness: but it does not pretend to do this; on the

σύνη. <sup>22</sup> Ἡ δὲ ἄλλα συνέκλεισεν ἡ γραφή τὰ πάντα ὑπὸ ἁμαρτίαν, ἵνα ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοθῇ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν. <sup>23</sup> Πρὸ τοῦ δὲ ἔλθειν τὴν πίστιν, ὑπὸ νόμον ἐφρουρούμεθα συγκεκλεισμένοι εἰς τὴν μέλλουσαν πίστιν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι. <sup>24</sup> Ὡστε ὁ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς ἡμῶν γέγονεν εἰς Χριστὸν, ἵνα ἐκ πίστεως δικαιωθῶμεν. <sup>25</sup> Ἐλθούσης δὲ τῆς πίστεως, οὐκέτι ὑπὸ παιδαγωγὸν ἐσμέν. <sup>26</sup> Πάντες γὰρ υἱοὶ Θεοῦ ἐστε διὰ τῆς

Rom. 2. 9.
20—22.
2. 12, 20.
2. 11, 22.

1. Matt. 5. 17.
Rom. 10. 4.

1. John 1. 12.
Rom. 8. 15.
ch. 2. 5.

contrary, it shows them the impotence of their nature by the contrast of its requirements with their performance.

<sup>22</sup> Here we have, as Hyper. observes, 'the second and direct answer to the foregoing objection, and that deduced from the proper office and end of the law. The law is not opposed to the promise, since it excludes not from the benefit of the promise, nay, it rather leads men to joyfully embrace the promise.'—συνέκλεισεν. Many interpret, 'hath included.' A sense, however, too feeble. It is better, with Berger and Winer, to explain, 'has shown or declared all to be subject to the dominion of sin,' brought them under it. So Hyper.: 'Scriptura enim, vel lex scripta, declarat hominibus, quod sint rei.' The full sense, then, is: 'Nay [so far from that], the Scriptures declare all men [of all nations, both Jews and Gentiles] to be sinners brought under condemnation, and therefore amenable to wrath and punishment.' Similarly, at Rom. vii. 23, sin is compared to a tyrant, who holds men captive, and to whose dominion all are subject. So Demosthenes has κατακλείειν τῷ νόμῳ: see more in the note on Rom. xi. 32.—τὰ πάντα alludes to the ἔθνη, which will serve to account for the neuter gender being used.—ἵνα ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἐκ πίστεως, &c. 'Ἐκ πίστεως is for ἡ ἐκ πίστεως εὐαγγ. The clause may be rendered, 'in order that the promised blessing, which depends on faith in Christ Jesus, might be given to them that believe in him.' Comp. Rom. iii. 22.

<sup>23</sup> This verse forms the second part of the above confutation, wherein the Apostle teaches that believers in Christ are freed from the law. (Hyperius.) Two similitudes are here made use of; one to a prison, the other to a pedagogue.—πρὸ τοῦ ἔλθειν τὴν πίστιν, 'before the faith [i. e. the dispensation which requires faith in Christ as indispensable, meaning the Gospel covenant] was introduced;' see Rom. iii. 27; or 'the dispensation, whereby we walk by faith;' the better covenant, even that of faith, as distinguished from that of works, the law. The idea in the words following, ὑπὸ νόμον ἐφρουρούμεθα συγκεκλεισμένοι, seems to have arisen out of the previous expression, συνέκλεισεν ὑπὸ ἁμαρτίας; and that, by a metaphor, derived from persons so shut up in a place, as to be cut off from every outlet of escape.—ἐφρουρούμεθα contains an additional idea, engrafted on the foregoing; and of the words ἐφρουρ. εἰς τὴν μέλλουσαν πίστιν ἔσται, the sense may be, 'custodiamur usque dum pateri debet fides:' but it should rather seem that, agreeably to the foregoing figure, their meaning is, 'lego circumlocui me servabatur ad futuram fidei patificationem.' See 1 Pet. i. 5. Moreover, under the idea of conservation, or conservation, for, seems included that of preparation for, which is further developed in the next verse.

<sup>24</sup> Ἵνα ὁ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς, &c.] Here we have an argument deduced from analogy. And as the law was before compared to a jailer, so it is here likened to a pædagogus, by which term is not to be understood a schoolmaster (for that would have been διδάσκαλος), but the pædagogus or person (usually a freedman or slave) who conducted children to and from school, attended them out of school hours, formed their manners, superintended their moral conduct, and in various respects prepared them for the διδάσκαλος; see Chrysost., cited by Berger; and Plut. de Educ. § 13. In short, how widely different was the παιδαγωγός, or 'boy-conductor,' from the διδάσκαλος, or 'schoolmaster,' is plain from Epictet. Sent. 101, παῖδας ὄντας ἡμᾶς οἱ γονεῖς παιδαγωγῷ παρέδοσαν, ἐπιβλέποντι παταχοῦ πρὸς τὸ μὴ βλάπτεσθαι ἡμᾶς, ὡς παῖδας, signif. 'one employed as a sort of looker after,' 'care-taker' (see Gen. iv. 12), so nearly answering to the ἐπιτροπὸς in Plut. de Educ. § 7, and Xen. Lacod. i. 1, 2. iii. 1, both which writers carefully distinguish (as does also Plato) between these and the διδάσκαλοι of the public schools. It would seem that the leading idea here intended, is that of bringing into, and preparing for; as the Law did in respect of the Gospel, namely, by its doctrines, moral precepts, types, and prophecies, all leading men to the Gospel, by showing the short-coming of the Law, and the impracticability of performing any law of works; see note on Matt. v. 17; hinting also at the restraint and discipline under which boys were held till they reached manhood, and at the necessarily incomplete knowledge until then communicated to them; intimating that those under the law were νήπιοι as compared to the τέλειοι of the Gospel.

<sup>25</sup> οὐκέτι ὑπὸ παιδαγ. ἐσμέν] Just as the boy, when he had reached the school to which he had been conducted by the παιδαγωγός, was no longer under his care or direction, but under that of the διδάσκαλος; q. d. 'so it is with us; we are no longer under the pedagogy of the Law; which is no longer necessary for us, or obligatory upon us; inasmuch as, the better Covenant being established, the introductory one, of course, ceased.'

<sup>26</sup> There is here a second argument to prove the unsuitableness of their being perpetually bound to the law; namely, that they are sons of God, and consequently free.—πάντες, meaning, 'all of every nation,' both Jews and Gentiles.—υἱοὶ ἐστε, i. e. 'are admitted to a sort of sonship by adoption,' with the adjunct notion of liberty from slavish and unnecessary restraint.

Rom. 8. 2.
 & 13. 14.
 1 John 17. 21.
 Rom. 10. 12.
 1 Cor. 12. 13.
 Eph. 2. 14.
 15.
 Col. 2. 11.
 u Gen. 21.
 12.
 Rom. 9. 7.
 Heb. 11. 18.

a Col. 2. 8.
 20.
 Heb. 7. 18.

πίστει ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>27</sup> ὅσοι γὰρ εἰς Χριστὸν ἐβα-πτίσθητε, Χριστὸν ἐνεδύσασθε. <sup>28</sup> Οὐκ ἐν Ἰουδαίῳ οὐδὲ Ἑλλην οὐκ ἐν δούλῳ οὐδὲ ἐλεύθερῳ οὐκ ἐν ἄρσεν καὶ θήλυν πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς εἰς ἓστε ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>29</sup> Εἰ δὲ ὑμεῖς Χριστοῦ, ἄρα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ σπέρμα ἐστέ, καὶ κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν κληρονόμοι. IV. <sup>1</sup> Λέγω δὲ, ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ὁ κληρονόμος νήπιός ἐστιν, οὐδὲν διαφέρει δούλου, κύριος πάντων ὢν <sup>2</sup> ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ ἐπιτρόπους ἐστὶ καὶ οἰκονόμους, ἄχρι τῆς προθεσμίας τοῦ πατρὸς. <sup>3</sup> οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς, ὅτε ἦμεν νήπιοι, ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα

27. ὅσοι γὰρ εἰς Χριστὸν, &c.] The full sense is, [‘I say sons, and sons of God;] for as many of you as, having received baptism, profess the Christian religion [whether circumcised or uncircumcised] are united with Christ by the closest bond.—On Χρ. ἐνεδύσ., see note on Rom. xiii. 14.

28. Here we have, not a mere repetition of what was said at ver. 26, but a further development of the idea, by pre-occupying the objections of the Judaizers. See Hyper.—οὐκ ἐν Ἰουδαίῳ, &c.; q. d. ‘there is under the Gospel no discrimination in privileges, no distinction of nation, none of condition nor sex,—but ye are all one family, by the religion of Christ Jesus—all alike entitled to the same benefits, those of sincere believers.’ See Rom. ix. 7, 8.

29. εἰ δὲ ὑμεῖς Χριστοῦ] ‘And so, if ye be Christ’s’ (as infra, v. 24, of δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ),
 i. e. if ye be incorporated with Christ, and made his members by faith and baptism (as was shown supra, v. 27), &c. In the words following, ἄρα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ—κληρονόμοι, the ὑμεῖς is emphatic, the full sense being, ‘then [in that case] ye [all], whether Jews or Gentiles, are Abraham’s [true seed,] and, [accordingly,] heirs by promise,’ i. e. heirs of the promised inheritance to life eternal; and consequently are resting your hopes thereon, not on any works of righteousness that ye may have done, but on the covenanted mercies of God, which are sure.’
 Comp. Rom. iv. 16. So Heb. vi. 17, κληρονόμοι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, comp. with Tit. i. 2. iii. 7, κληρονόμοι κατ’ ἐλπίδα ζωῆς αἰωνίου. See also Rom. viii. 17.

IV. In continuation of the argument in the foregoing chapter, the Apostle now proceeds to show the superior excellence and freedom of the state of believers under the Gospel, as compared with that in which they were placed under the law. And, after reproving the Galatians for not adhering firmly to the latter, he illustrates the differences between the two dispensations, by tracing them as figuratively represented in the two branches of Abraham’s posterity, Sarah’s and Hagar’s. He commences, however, with glancing at an objection, prominently brought forward at Rom. iii. 1; q. d. ‘If this be the case, what advantage hath the Jew, or what profit is there in circumcision?’ This the Apostle overrules by arguing, that supposing them to be the heirs of Abraham, yet this will not at all invalidate his account of their condition under the law. And this he illustrates by a familiar and popular example suggested by the sonship, or inheritance, just before mentioned.

1, 2. Here we have a further illustration of the subject, suggested by the idea of the κληρονόμος and παιδαγωγός, and deduced from the condition of a minor, who is still held under tutelage and restraint, and cannot come into possession of the inheritance destined for him, till the period fixed by his father. Thus mankind are represented as held in bondage under the introductory and preparatory discipline of the law, whether of Moses or of nature, until God sent his Son for their deliverance.

1. The formula λέγω δὲ (on which see supra
 iii. 17) here serves to introduce a continuation of the argument, and an illustration of the reasoning in the preceding chapter; wherein first the state of God’s Church under the law is compared to that of a minor, whose father is dead; and who, though he be, by legal right, the owner of the whole inheritance, yet, while in his non-age, is in a situation little differing, in respect of restraint, from that of a servant; and so continues, until the period appointed by his father for putting him into possession of his inheritance.—νήπιός ἐστιν, for νήπιος ἄνθρωπος, ‘one in his boy-hood,’ = τὰς ἐτι εἰς, ‘a minor, one too young to inherit;’ a use of the word of which I know no example elsewhere in the New Test., nor in the Sept., nor in the Class. writers.

2. Of the terms ἐπιτροπ. and οἰκον., the former denotes such guardians (Latin tutores) as not only superintended the education of minors (see Ælian, V. H. xiii. 44, cited by me in Lex. New Test. in v.), but held a sort of general superintendence over, and, indeed, management of, their property; the latter, those house and land stewards who acted under them in the above capacity, and also, in particular, managed the expenses, as burgars. On the term προθεσμ., see my Lex. in v., as also on οἰκονόμος.

3. ἡμεῖς] meaning, both Jewish and Gentile Christians.—νήπιοι, i. e. children in the knowledge of God, unable to attain that accurate and complete knowledge of Divine things, which pertains to ἀνδρες τέλειαι spoken of at Eph. iv. 14.
 —στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου. Στοιχεῖα denotes figuratively, ‘the elements, or rudiments, of any branch of knowledge;’ consequently implying that which is superficial, and only suited to the less informed; not intended to be permanent,
 but to give way to the more complete knowledge of a further advanced period of study; see Col.
 ii. 8. Here it designates, in conjunction with the qualifying term τοῦ κόσμου, chiefly the ceremonial observances of the law of Moses τοῦ κόσμου ἦμεν δεδουλωμένοι. <sup>4 b</sup> Ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε τὸ πλήρωμα <sup>b Gen. 40. 10. Dan. 9. 24. Eph. 1. 10.</sup> τοῦ χρόνου, ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, γενόμενον ἐκ γυναικὸς, γενόμενον ὑπὸ νόμον <sup>5</sup> ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον ἐξαγοράσῃ, ἵνα τὴν υἰοθεσίαν ἀπολάβωμεν. <sup>6 d</sup> Ὅτι δὲ ἐστε υἱοί, <sup>c John 1. 12. ch. 2. 26. d Rom. 8. 15.</sup> ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς καρδίας

 ὑμῶν, κράζον Ἀββᾶ, ὁ πατήρ! <sup>7 e</sup> Ὡστε οὐκέτι εἰ δούλος, <sup>e Rom. 8. 15. 17.</sup>

(comp. Col. ii. 8, 20, 21), but also the similar rites and ceremonies of the various heathen religions. Now these are called στοιχεῖα, as consisting of what was merely rude and elementary, (comp. Heb. v. 12, τὰ στοιχ. τῆς ἀρχῆς), dealing in matters merely external; and τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου (for κοσμικά), as being merely worldly or earthly, as opposed to the ἐπουράνια of the Gospel. The Apostle means to suggest the inference, that, however useful might be the law of Moses, or the law of nature (each as introductory dispensations, more or less perfect), the obligation to both must cease when the more perfect religion of the Gospel was promulgated, by which they were alike superseded. With respect to the phrase δεδουλωμένοι ὑπὸ, &c., it is formed on those supra, iii. 23, ὑπὸ νόμον—συγκραλισμένοι, and ver. 25, ὑπὸ παιδαγωγῶν ἑστέιν, and thus the sense is, 'elementis mundi, tanquam servituti, fuimus addicti.'

4, 5. Here is carried forward the illustration drawn from the ἐκτρ. and οἰκον. q. d. 'For as the son is, for a time, subject to the governance of masters; but when the προθεσμία is accomplished, becomes his own master; so we, so long attached τοῖς στοιχείοις τοῦ κόσμου, are released from them, by the Son of God being sent into the world for the purpose of delivering us.'—On the πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου see my Lex. in v. πλήρ. The phrase here denotes the time appointed by the Father for delivering all nations from the bondage mentioned at ver. 3.—ἔξαπέστειλε τὸν Υἱόν, &c. Ἐξῆς, is not, as Borer supposes, synonymous with ἐπέστ., but is a more significant expression; espec. where (as here and at Exod. iii. 10, 13, and Acts xxii. 21) it is used of legates sent forth with a Divine commission. Here, however, there may be an allusion to the Son being, as it is said at John i. 18, εἰς τὸν κόλπον τοῦ Πατρὸς.—Γενόμενον, 'born'; a signif. found in Rom. i. 3, and sometimes in the Class. writers. Γενόμενον ἐκ γυν. here intimates that Christ was endued with the whole of the human nature; see Phil. ii. 7.—ὑπὸ νόμον some render 'subjectum legi'; others, 'sub lege'; i. e. for Ἰουδαίων. Both senses, however, may be included; the latter primarily, the former secondarily. At τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον, ver. 5, supply δύναται, or δεδουλωμένους, from the preceding, 'under the dominion and condemnation of the law,' whether of Moses or of nature. See Rom. iii. 20.

5. ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον ἔξῃ.] These words state the purpose for which Christ was sent,—namely, to buy off and liberate those who were under the condemnation of the law, and restore them to perfect freedom; see note supra iii. 13. The ἵνα following denotes the end or effect of what Christ did.—On the phrase τὴν υἰοθεσίαν ἀπολαμβάνειν, see note at iii. 26, and Rom. viii. 15, 23.

VOL. II.

6. ὅτι ἐστε υἱοί] Wakef. and Borer explain, 'And to show that ye are sons.' An ellipse, however, too harsh. It is true that the Apostle seems to mean to assert their having received the Spirit as an evidence of their sonship. But that may be implied thus: 'And because ye are sons, God has [in token thereof] sent, &c. So Calvin remarks: 'Prius adoptatum esse a Deo, quam habere a Spiritu Dei testimonium adoptionis; sed effectus signum est causæ.' 'The same argument (observes Mr. Locke) from their having the Spirit, St. Paul uses to the Romans, Rom. viii. 16. And on reading 2 Cor. v. 5, and Eph. i. 11—14, it will be found that the Spirit is looked upon as the seal and assurance of the inheritance of life to those who have received the adoption of sons.' Here the best ancient and modern Expositors alike recognize the express mention of the three Persons of the Trinity, with the due distinction. 'The Son (as Bp. Pearson observes) is distinguished from the Father, as first sent by Him; and the Spirit of the Son is distinguished both from the Father, and from the Son, as sent by the Father, after He had sent the Son. And this our Saviour hath taught us several times, John xiv. 26. xv. 26. Hence we conclude that the Holy Ghost, although he be truly and properly God, is neither God the Father, nor God the Son.'—Κράζον here signifies 'teaching and enabling us to cry out [in prayer]' with filial confidence, Ἀββᾶ! addressing God as a Father; see Rom. viii. 15. Perhaps there is an allusion to the distinction between Slaves and Sons, or others of the family,—that the former were not allowed to use the title of Abba in addressing the master of the family, while the latter enjoyed that privilege. Claude (in his Essay on the Composition of a Sermon) remarks, that the Jews would not permit a slave to address a free man as "Abba" (Father), nor to address a free woman as "Imma" (Mother). See my note on Rom. viii. 15.

7. Here we have the conclusion; see ver. 1. Comp. Rom. viii. 17. iii. 29, where see the notes.—Εἰ is supposed to be for ἵνα, but it would rather seem that the singular is adopted to make the application, by its individuality, more forcible. There is a similar transposition in Rom. xii. 19, 20. 1 Cor. iv. 6, sq.—In the ἵνα it is implied that the person in question has received the Holy Spirit given through the Son, to seal believers as the children of God.—κληρ. θ., meaning, partaker of the blessings bestowed by God on men through Christ, viz. justification and redemption, which are very often denominated an inheritance, to denote certainty of possession.—εἰ δὲ υἱὸς, καὶ κληρονόμος Θεοῦ διὰ Χρ. For Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ, Lachm. and Tisch. edit. from A, B, C, and one curiave, the Vulg. and Copt. Versions, and several

A A

f 1 Cor. 8. 4.
 & 12. 2.
 Eph. 2. 11.
 12.

g 1 Cor. 8. 3.
 & 12. 12.
 Col. 2. 20.

ἀλλ' υἱός· εἰ δὲ υἱός, καὶ κληρονόμος Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ. 81' Ἀλλὰ τότε μὲν, οὐκ εἰδότες Θεόν, ἐδουλεύατε τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὐσι θεοῖς· 9 εἰ νῦν δὲ, γινόντες Θεόν, μᾶλλον δὲ γνωσθέντες ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, πῶς ἐπιστρέφετε πάλιν ἐπὶ τὰ ἄσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα, οἷς

Fathers, διὰ Θεοῦ: a very specious reading, which is recommended by Prof. Schott on the score of its simplicity, and as serving to account for the several variations of reading which are found in the copies. But it does not account for them satisfactorily. And the other variations are of the most slender authority, and not such as to cast any doubt on the genuineness of the t. rec.; which, being supported by all the MSS. except four (for I find the t. rec. in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies), confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and Arab. Version, and Chrys., I have thought proper to retain that text. If it be asked, how came Χριστοῦ to be left out, and διὰ put in before Θεοῦ, I answer, it may be supposed to have proceeded from certain early Critics, who were, like our modern Editors, ignorant of the exact import of διὰ Χριστοῦ, and consequently altered the words, so as to convey a sense which they could, indeed, understand, but quite at variance with that which the Apostle meant to convey, and which was well seen by Theodor., though best pointed out by Hyper. and Bulling.; of whom the latter remarks: 'per Christum notantur addit (Paulus), ut excludat merita nostra.' Even Est., always ready to support, where it is possible, any reading contained in the Vulgate, here deserts that, and in his paraphrase explains as if Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ were the true reading.

8. There is here a conversio sermonis; the Gentile Christians being espec. addressed. In vv. 8, 9, we have a contrast drawn between the pristine state of the persons in question (when involved in gross idolatry, through ignorance of the nature of God), and their present condition, when knowing and being known of God. This is done to place in a strong point of view their folly in wishing to return to their former state of servitude to the law.—Τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὐσι θεοῖς. Most modern Commentators (understanding φύσει as opposed to νόμῳ, or θείῳ, or δόξῃ) explain it to mean, 'those who are not gods by nature, but only such in the opinion of men;' and thus tantamount to the οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ of 1 Cor. viii. 5. This view, however, scarcely reaches far enough. It would rather seem, according to the opinion of the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors, as Calv., Hyper., Wolf, and Elsner, that the expression has reference to the nature and essence of the only true God, as opposed to fictitious deities, or imaginary beings having no real existence. So Hierocles, in Aur. Carm. p. 170 (cited by Elsner), says of Pythagoras, δε οὐκ ἦν τῶν ἀθανάτων θεῶν, οὐδὲ τῶν φύσει ἥρώων, ἀλλ' ἀνθρώποις ὁμοίωσι θεῶν κοσμηθεῖς, and p. 228, οὐ φύσει ἀθάνατος θεός. The sense first-mentioned may, however, be included; meaning, as Calv. explains, those in whom there is no truth of Divine nature, but who are only accounted such by the opinion of men.—As to the reading of several of the most ancient MSS., and some Fathers and early Editions, τοῖς φύσει μὴ οὐσι is plainly only an emendation of those who, by this change of position, sought to avoid a seeming acknowledgment of them as gods in some sense. But no change is necessary, since the words cannot be better rendered than they are in our Common Version, formed on the t. rec., 'which by nature are no gods.' So Deut. xxxiii. 21, αὐτοὶ παρεξήλωσάν με ἐν οὐ τοῖς θεοῖς, ἰ. ε. τῇ φύσει μὴ ὄντι θεῶ. Had Abp. Newcome seen this, he would not have altered 'no-gods' into 'not gods.'—The Particle ἄλλα here has in a great measure a continuative, serving to introduce the third part of the confutation, but also an adversative, force, as Hyper. well saw; and in this view it has reference to ἰδουλεύσατε, as taken, by implication, a second time; the full sense being, 'Ye did, indeed, then worship those who were no gods; but however ye did it through ignorance of God, which ye have not now to plead.'

9. μᾶλλον δὲ γνωσθέντες ὑπὸ Θεοῦ] By this form of correction, μᾶλλον δὲ, occurring also at Rom. viii. 34, and in the Class. writers, the Apostle (as observes Est.) meant to direct their attention to the preventing grace of God. And so Calv. remarks: 'quia Deus misericordiā suā eos prænoverit,' comparing Isa. lxi. 1, 'inventus sum (Sept. ἰμψανὴν ἐγινίθην) a non quærentibus me.' Of γνωσθέντες the full sense is, acknowledged as sons of his love, approved and recognised as 'ἀσκηπταὶ εἰς νόθευσιν = προσληφθέντες,' as Theophyl. explains. Here the acknowledgment and recognition is supposed to be attested by the possession of the Spirit (in his gifts and graces) as the seal of the adoption. See Eph. iv. 30.—πῶς ἐπιστρέφ.; &c.: 'how is it that ye are turning back?' &c. The Apostle expresses his wonder that they, who have been set free from the bondage of atheism, or polytheism, should return to bondage; even to a dispensation, which, however of Divine institution, was not of sufficient efficacy to procure them salvation; for that is all that is meant by the terms δόξαν καὶ πτωχὰ, of which the latter is a further illustration, under another metaphor, of the idea contained in the former; see Theophyl., Grot., and Croll. How the law of Moses was weak, appears from Heb. vii. 18, 19, x. 1.; and how the law of nature was such, appears from the Epistle to the Romans, passim. For that the Apostle has both in view there is little doubt; and such is the opinion of the best Expositors. In πάλιν ἀνῶθεν I would not, with Koppe and others, recognise a pleonasm for the simple πάλιν; though the forms πάλιν ἐκ δευτέρου, and πάλιν αὖ, might seem to countenance it. There is no necessity here to resort to any such principle; for the context very well admits of the full sense, namely, 'again, as at the first;' 'as though ye had never been Christians.'—πάλιν ἀνῶθεν, ἰσχυρὸν δὲ ποτὶ, 'again, [as] at the first,' is not so much a pleonasm, as a stronger expression, with a more fully developed sense. It occurs, and in the above sense, at Wisd. xix. 6. Joa. Antt. i. 18, 3. See more in my Lex. New Test. in ἀνῶθεν.

πάλιν ἄνωθεν δουλεύειν θέλετε ; <sup>10</sup> <sup>h</sup> Ἡμέρας παρατηρεῖσθε καὶ <sup>h</sup> Rom. 14. 5.
 μηνᾶς καὶ καιροὺς καὶ ἑνιαυτούς· <sup>11</sup> φοβοῦμαι ὑμᾶς, μήπως εἰκῆ <sup>h</sup> Gal. 2. 16.
 κεκοπίακα εἰς ὑμᾶς.

<sup>12</sup> <sup>i</sup> Γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, ὅτι καὶ γὰρ ὡς ὑμεῖς, ἀδελφοί, δέομαι ὑμῶν ! <sup>12</sup> Cor. 2. 5.
 οὐδὲν με ἡδικήσατε. <sup>13</sup> <sup>k</sup> Οἴδατε δὲ ὅτι δι' † ἀσθένειαν τῆς σα- <sup>k</sup> 1 Cor. 2. 3.
 κὸς εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν τὸ πρότερον· <sup>14</sup> <sup>1</sup> καὶ τὸν πειρασμόν <sup>3</sup> Cor. 11. 30.
<sup>1</sup> Zech. 12. 8.
<sup>1</sup> Heb. 12. 2.

10. The Apostle now proceeds to adduce particular examples of this turning back to the weak and beggarly elements just spoken of.—παρατηρ. The full sense is, 'ye studiously observe,' 'strictly keep.' Of the names of the feasts celebrated, ἡμέρας denotes holy-days generally, espec. the Jewish Sabbaths. So Joseph. Ant. iii. 5, 5, παρ. τὰς ἡβδομάδας, comp. with xiv. 10, 25, παρ. τὴν τῶν Σαββάτων ἡμέραν. If, however, with the Arabic Version, Wakef., Butt., Chandl., and Scholz, we take the sentence interrogatively, the reproof is stronger, and the expression more pointed: 'Do ye then observe?' &c. But the declarative mode has more of dignity, and perhaps propriety; as has been evinced by Calv. and Hyper.

11. In φοβοῦμαι, &c., Borger and Winer think there is a kind of attraction; ὑμᾶς, which belongs to the clause following, being thrown back to the preceding one. Thus, by a very common Grecism, it will mean, 'I am afraid I have bestowed on you labour in vain.' Here, however, it is better not to resort to any such principle, since that would somewhat lower the sense, which is far stronger according to the usual manner of rendering. The Apostle first expresses that he is in great fear of them, and then subjoins the nature and extent of that fear. This will espec. appear, if we attend to the strict propriety of the idiom here; for the force of μήπως with the Indicative is (as Winer observes) to show that the writer, or speaker, supposes the thing feared to have already taken place. So Thucyd. iii. 53, νῦν δὲ φοβοῦμεθα, μὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἅμα ἡμαρτήκαμεν. Here, however, it is sufficient to understand 'extreme fear of a thing, as almost sure to take place.'

12—16. 'Having thus justly reproved the inconstancy of the Galatians, the Apostle now subjoins an exhortation, in which he most affectionately adjures them to return to the right path, and to imitate his example; reminding them of the time past, when they had most reverently and thankfully received the doctrine which he preached to them.' (Schott.)

12. γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, &c.] The exact import of these words has been somewhat disputed. Almost all the earlier modern Commentators (as Beza, Grot., Calv., Hyper., Morus, Wolf, and Whitby) take it to be, 'love me with the same affection as I do you.' While the ancient Interpreters in general, and, of modern ones, Hammond, Doddridge, Rosenm., Semler, Koppe, Schleusner, Winer, and Schott, at καὶ γὰρ ὡς ὑμεῖς supplying ἐγανόμην, assign this sense: 'Follow my example, in renouncing the law for the Gospel. I was once as zealous for the law as you now are; but now I live as do the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews. Do you, who are not Jews, but Gentiles, live in like manner, as men released from the law.' Yet this requires great violence to be done to the words, and is liable to other objections, which I have already stated. Considering the nature of the context, espec. vv. 15, 16, it cannot be doubted that some sentiment of deep affection is meant to be expressed in this very brief and therefore obscure address, wherein the entreaty it contains is evidently that of one desiring continuance and reciprocity of affection on the part of another; comp. 2 Chron. xviii. 15. And taken in conjunction with ver. 16, we may regard the whole as an assurance that his love for them was unaltered, and an entreaty that theirs to him may be what it formerly was, and his now is. The transposition of the phrase of entreaty, ἀδελφοί, δέομαι ὑμῶν, from the first part of the sentence,—which is its usual place,—to the last, strongly marks the pathos, in promoting which the hyperbaton has great force, a figure excellently treated of by Longinus, de Sublim. sect. xxii., where he says, that the hyperbaton is οἰοντι χαρακτήρ ἰσχυριῶν πάνθους ἀληθείας. For, he adds, 'as those who are angry, indignant, or jealous, or suffering under any other strong affection, easily run into hyperbaton, so, in the best writers, excited feeling carries them to what are nature's works; for then is art perfect when it seems to be nature.'—Οὐδὲν με ἡδικήσατε, q. d. 'I have no grievous injuries to complain of at your hands, and therefore, in speaking so plainly as I must do, I am not actuated by any feeling of resentment.' There is here, as Calv., Crell., and Hyper. point out, a pre-occupation of an objection. According to which view, the connexion of these with the following words may be thus traced: 'I do not harbour resentment against you, for any wrongs that you might be thought to have done me; on the contrary (δὲ), I feel a disposition the very opposite, that of thorough good will, founded on past experience.'

13. οἴδατε δὲ, &c.] According to the connexion above traced, the train of thought may be supposed to proceed thus: 'On the other hand (δὲ), I feel nought but affection for you,—and, as ye know, on good grounds; for, when under much bodily infirmity, ye did not reject me, but' &c.—δὲ ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς, through, under, much infirmity of flesh, i. e. of body; viz. from the thorn in the flesh. Dr. Peile purposes to read δὲ ἀσθένειαν, which would be very suitable, since it would be a genit. of state, or situation, or affection, under which any thing is done. See Winer's Gr. Gr. New Test. p. 325, ed. 3. Schott, indeed, affirms, that of this use of the accus. examples are altogether wanting. I can, however, myself furnish one from Aristot. Mirab. Aus. C. 68, διὰ τὸν λειμῶνα. But I would not affirm that there may not be a corruption; and the terminations -av and -as are often confounded by the scribes.

14. τὸν πειρ. μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σ.] Most Expo-
 A 2

μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε οὐδὲ ἐξεπτύσατε ἀλλ' ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξασθέ με, ὡς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 15 Τίς οὖν ἦν ὁ μακαρισμὸς ὑμῶν; μαρτυρῶ γὰρ ὑμῖν ὅτι, εἰ δυνατόν, τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξαντες ἀν ἐδώκατέ μοι. 16 Ὡστε ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν; 17 Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς, οὐ καλῶς· ἀλλὰ ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλουσιν, ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλοῦτε.

m 1 Cor. 11.

2 Cor. 11. 2.

13—15.

Phil. 2. 31.

sitors, ancient and modern, take this expression to refer to the persecutions and afflictions which Paul underwent. But to that interpretation insuperable objections have been urged by Whitby, Doddr., Mackn., and Borger, with whom, and also Newcome and Iaspia, I would understand it to denote the same with the corporal trial called 'the thorn in the flesh' at 2 Cor. xii. 7. The words παρ. μου—ἐξουθ. οὐδὲ ἐξεπτ. mean, by a common hyperallage, 'ye did not set at nought and loathe me on account of my trial.'—ἐξεπτ. is a stronger term than ἐξουθ. So Æchin. p. 31, δυσχαλεῖται καὶ καταπτύει δωροδοκίαν. The words ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξ. do not (as most recent Commentators suppose) merely denote 'receiving with great respect'; but also, and perhaps chiefly, 'such an obedient admission of the Apostle's doctrine, as if they were promulgated by an angel of God,—nay, even Jesus Christ himself in person, and not by deputy.' as Theophyl., Calv., Hyper., Bulling., Crell., and Est. There is a sort of dīmar, q. d. 'ye were receiving my teaching in the Gospel, as coming by message from heaven; nay, as coming from a vice-gerent of Christ Jesus.' The Apostle could scarcely have failed in this passage to call to mind the words of his Divine Master, as they are recorded in Matt. x. 40. John xiii. 20. and which he probably had heard related by the Apostles Peter and John.

15. τίς—ὑμῶν;] (Ecumen., Locke, Wolf, Doddr., Koppe, Borger, Winer, and Schleusner, rightly regard this as not meant to be interrogatory but exclamatory. The full sense is: 'How great, accordingly, was [then] your congratulation of yourselves [in having had such an one for your teacher]!' thus implying what is expressed in the next words, 'what an enthusiastically warm reception did you give me!—there was nothing you would not have done for me.'—In τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξ. ἀν ἐδώκατέ there is a proverbial and strongly hyperbolic expression, not unfrequent in the Class. writers, denoting 'the strongest affection'; of which Wets. adduces numerous exx. So that what Paul means is, that they could willingly have sacrificed to him what was the very dearest, and most precious to them. Accordingly, it cannot justly be thought (as Conyb. supposes) to confirm the view of those who imagine Paul's malady to have been some disease in the eyes. To extract the sense supposed by Conyb. requires great violence, the least of which is the fixing a strong emphasis on ὑμῶν, 'your own.'

16. The Apostle now deprecates any offence being taken at his free expostulation, as if the demonstration of ill-will. To tell the truth, he says, is the part of a friend, not an enemy; and should excite, not hostile, but friendly feelings. 'Am I become your enemy by speaking the truth to you,' in other words, 'by preaching to you faithful Gospel truth? [by no means!]' meaning to say, that he acts rather in the character of a reformer, than of an enemy. So Plato, p. 471, σωφρονισταὶ ὄντες, οὐ πολέμιοι, with which comp. Thucyd. iv. 17, 3, λάβετε δὲ αὐτοὺς [λόγους, 'words'] μὴ πολέμιοις ('not as if coming from enemies') οὐδὲ ὡς μισῶν ὑμᾶς, ἀλλὰ φιλῶν.—Ὡστε seems to be used here, as occasionally in the Class. writers, for ἀτε, or ὥσπερ, 'as it were'; q. d. 'Am I become, as it were, your enemy, by speaking to you the truth?' The force of the Asyndeton, in such an appeal as this, is manifest.—As to the words ἐχθ. ὑμῶν, Expositors are not agreed whether the sense be vobis infensus, 'the object of your hatred'; or, vobis invidius, 'one who hates you.' The former seems preferable; but the latter is almost implied.—ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν, 'by speaking to you the truth.'

17. There is an obscurity in this and the next verse, partly occasioned by extreme brevity, arising out of that delicacy of the Apostle, on a subject so personal to himself, which made him rather intimate his meaning than speak it fully out; and partly from that union of point and antithesis which sometimes tends to darken the sense. The persons here spoken of are the false teachers, who endeavoured to draw the Galatians to the observance of the Mosaic law in addition to that of Christianity.—Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς. Some take this to mean, 'they imitate your zeal for the Gospel.' But it is best interpreted by others, ambulant, 'they are paying you court.'—οὐ καλῶς, i. e. 'not with a good intent,' or 'on proper principles'; meaning (as I would understand it), 'not from a real desire to promote your salvation, but from selfish motives and party feelings.' The explanation is much confirmed by the next words, which seem intended to be illustrative; and, viewed in that light, they need not have so perplexed the Expositors. The embarrassment, indeed, partly arose from the reading ὑμᾶς, introduced, on conjecture, by Beza, and transmitted into the Elzevir Edition and the t. rec. Though for this reading there is not any direct evidence; MSS., Versions, and Fathers, all uniting in ὑμᾶς, which I find in nearly all the Lamb. and Mus. copies; and it has been very properly restored by all the recent Editors. It was, in fact, discarded by Beza, merely from his not perceiving the sense of ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλ. just after, which is not, as many interpret, 'they desire to exclude you from the Church and salvation'; but rather (as Winer explains), 'they wish to separate you' from following me, or from connexion with me, or (as Schott explains) from all others (i. e. 'who have abandoned the Mosaic law'), in order to, as it were, monopolize you to themselves.' The words ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλ. plainly mean, by the force of the antithesis,

18 Καλὸν δὲ [τὸ] ζηλοῦσθαι ἐν καλῷ, πάντοτε, καὶ μὴ μόνον ἐν τῷ παρεῖναι με πρὸς ὑμᾶς.—<sup>19</sup> ἡ τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, ἄχρις οὗ μορφωθῇ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν!—<sup>20</sup> ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἄρτι, καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν μου, ὅτι ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν.

21 Λέγετέ μοι, οἱ ὑπὸ νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι τὸν νόμον οὐκ ἀκούετε; <sup>22</sup> Ὁ Γέγραπται γάρ, ὅτι Ἀβραὰμ δύο υἱοὺς ἔσχεν ἓνα ἐκ τῆς παιδίσκης, καὶ ἓνα ἐκ τῆς ἐλευθέρας <sup>23</sup> ὅ ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἐκ τῆς παιδίσκης, κατὰ σάρκα γεγέννηται ὁ δὲ ἐκ τῆς ἐλευθέρας,

'that you may attach yourselves to them and their party.'

18. καλὸν δὲ, &c.] A sentiment suggested by οὐ καλῶς just before. The difficulty complained of will vanish, if the words be considered as formed of two sentences blended into one. Thus the full sense will be, 'Zeal and attachment in a good cause is laudable; but it should be felt and shown always, and not merely when I am with you [but when, as now, absent from you.] Real love (he means to say) exists in absence as well as presence. Yet the difficulty is how to extract that sense from the words as they stand,—a difficulty resting mainly with the term ζηλοῦσθαι. If this be taken as a passive form (which the usage of language requires), we obtain a sentiment objectionable in itself, and not at all suitable to the subsequent words. Our common version, 'to be zealously affected,' requires that we should suppose the form to be a middle, which there is no reason to think ever existed; otherwise it would signify, 'to attach one's self to any one.' Hence, I suspect, that for ζηλοῦσθαι was written ζηλωσαι, either as taken in a passive sense, 'to feel zealous attachment;' or, supposing an ellipse of τινά, as understood to denote, by a modest suppression, ἐμὲ. And though not one of the MSS. seems to have this reading, yet the Pesch. Syr. translator must have had it in his copy, since he renders the word in an active sense, which the middle form, did it exist, would not admit. Certain it is, that σαι and σθαι are often confounded. It seems best to regard the clause τεκνία—ὅμιν as a parenthetical one of exclamation (called forth by the recollection of the endeavour made to draw away their affections from him, ver. 17), and left unfinished, from pathos; see note supra ver. 12. The metaphor in ὠδίνω is one frequent in St. Paul, and scarcely less so in the Rabbinical writers, the term referring to the whole process of gestation and formation in the womb, to which the words following, ἄχρις οὗ μορφ. Χρ. ἐν ὑμῖν, are skillfully accommodated; there being, as Theodor., Pisc., and Calv. observe, a metaphor derived from an imperfect fetus; see Theodor. The full sense, divested of the metaphor, is, 'the same anxiety, my dear children, which I formerly felt in converting you, I again feel [and shall feel] till the Christian doctrine and disposition be thoroughly formed in your minds;' 'until the very image of Christ be impressed on your hearts.' The diminutive in τεκνία is one of affection; see note on 1 John v. 21.

20. ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι] The full sense is, 'But I would that I were now present with you, that I might change my tone (i. e. adapt my language to circumstances); for [while absent] I am at a loss what to think of you.'—The sense of the words following, καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν μου, is obscure, and disputed. Some take them to mean, 'change my tone [to praise instead of censure, which I cannot do], for I am in doubt about you;' while others suppose it to mean, 'to alter and vary my tone,'—namely, 'by accommodating my addresses, either for reproof or condemnation, according to circumstances; for while absent I am quite at a loss what to think of you (see John xiii. 22), whether you have been truly converted or not, and how to adapt my language to your real degree of merit or demerit;' see 1 Cor. iv. 21. The former interpretation is most agreeable to what precedes: the latter, to what follows. And perhaps, considering how pregnant in meaning every portion of St. Paul's writings is, we shall not be wrong in supposing that both these senses may have been in his mind. My interpretation is confirmed and illustrated by Philostr. Vit. Apoll. l. iv. 20, μεταβαλὼν τοῦ τόνου. Artem. On. ii. 20, ἀλλάσσειν τὴν φωνήν.

21. The Apostle now turns to the Judaizers, and, resuming the refutation of their error, he proceeds to prove, by an allegorical interpretation of a passage of the Old Test. respecting the two sons of Abraham, that Christians—whom he compares to Isaac (not Ishmael, whom he likens to the Jews in bondage to the law)—are liberated from the dominion of the law; and that the law has not any power to obtain justification; q. d. 'the former inherit by promise, the latter are in bondage.'—Τὸν νόμον οὐκ ἄκ.; The sense seems to be, 'Do ye not hear and know what is written in the law, and what ye have heard read continually in your ears?' see Rom. ii. 13. Some recent Commentators, however, explain, 'Do not you attend to, nor understand the law [you profess to receive]?' Perhaps the latter sense may be admitted in conjunction with the former. As the error of the persons in question arose from a misapprehension of the scope and true intent of the Law, the Apostle now endeavours to remove their mistake by a reference to the Law, as found in Scripture, for the purpose of illustration.

22. γέγραπται γάρ, &c.] The γάρ may be rendered scilicet, or exempli gratiā; q. d. 'The History of Abraham will illustrate what I mean to say, since it contains an apt emblem of the two covenants' between which you are hesitating.

23. κατὰ σάρκα] 'after the regular course of nature.' In the antithetical words διὰ τῆς διὰ τῆς ἐπαγγελίας. <sup>24</sup> Ἀτινά ἐστὶν ἀλληγορούμενα· αὐται γὰρ εἰσιν [αἱ] δύο διαθήκαι· μία μὲν ἀπὸ ὄρους Σινῶ, εἰς δουλείαν γεννώσα, ἥτις ἐστὶν Ἀγαρ· <sup>25</sup> (τὸ γὰρ Ἀγαρ Σινῶ ὄρος ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ)· συστοιχεῖ δὲ τῇ νῦν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, δουλεύει δὲ μετὰ τῶν τέκνων αὐτῆς. <sup>26</sup> ἡ δὲ ἄνω Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐλευθέρᾳ

q Heb. 12. 22.
Rev. 2. 12.
& 21. 2, 10,
&c.

ἐπαγγ. something is left to be supplied, and the full sense is, '[out of the common course of nature, and] by virtue of the promise made to Abraham.'

<sup>24</sup> Ἀτινά ἐστὶν ἀλληγορούμενα] The full sense intended by the Apostle seems to be, 'which things admit of being [thus] allegorized,' i. e. 'accommodated symbolically to the case of the law and the Gospel.' So Philo de Cherub., p. 143, says, τὰ μὲν Χερουβὶμ—οὕτως ἀλληγορεῖται, i. e. 'admit of being thus allegorized.' And so Clemens Alex. Protr. ii. and Porphyry. Vit. Pyth., p. 185, ἀλληγοροῦμένην κατὰ τινὰς αἰνιγμούς. It may, however, be meant, that they are to be considered as emblematical and typical,—namely, by the correspondence of type and antitype: a view of the sense supported by Chrys. and Theophyl. So Bp. Marsh well observes, that 'when St. Paul allegorized the history of the two sons of Abraham, and compared them with the two covenants, he did nothing more than represent the first as types, the latter as their antitypes.' I have not found ἀλληγ. elsewhere in the Passive voice, except in the gloss of Hesych., ἀλληγορία· ἄλλο τι παρὰ τὸ ἀκούμενον ὑποδεικνύουσα ἀλληγορούμενον. And Dr. Peile quotes the gloss for illustration of the sense. But that is not to be derived from a confessedly corrupt passage. The words are, I doubt not, formed out of two glosses, which should be separated, and the words emended as follows: ἀλληγορία· ἄλλο τι παρὰ τὸ νοούμενον ὑποδ. ἄλλ. The correction νοούμενον I am enabled to confirm from the explanation of Chrys., ἑτέρως νοούμενα, which is adduced on an enlarged scale by a glossator in Alberti thus: ἑτέρως κατὰ μετάφρασιν νοούμενα, καὶ οὐ κατὰ τὴν ἀνάγνωσιν: also by a passage in an epistle of Pherecyd. to Thales, preserved in Diog. Laert. l. i. 122, ἄσσα δ' ἐν ἐπιλήγῳ ('you may select') θεολογίων, τὰ ἄλλα χρη νοῦν· ἅπαντα γὰρ αἰνίσσομαι, where, for the manifestly corrupt θεολογίων, τὰ, I propose the reading θεολογία, ἄλλα, &c. At θεολ. suppl. συγγραμματα, theological writings. At ἄλλα χρη νοῦν some words essential to the sense are lost, but which may be gathered, at least in substance, from the words following. Read and point thus: ἄλλα χρη, [ἡ δὲ] ἐκδοῦται νοῦν· ἅπαντα γὰρ αἰνίσσομαι. All those glosses were evidently derived from Chrysost. and other Greek Fathers.

<sup>25</sup> I have now pointed (as in my smaller Gr. Text), μία μὲν ἀπὸ ὄρους Σινῶ—ἥτις ἐστὶν Ἀγαρ· (τὸ γὰρ Ἀγ. Σιν. ὄρος ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ) συστοιχεῖ δὲ τῇ νῦν Ἱερ., and render thus: 'One [covenant] from Mount Sinai, bringing forth children unto bondage, which is Agar [now the word Agar is (i. e. denotes) in Arabia Mount Sinai], and ranges in the same row with Jerusalem that now is (i. e. as it is in its present state), and is, with her children, in bondage (ver. 26); but the Jerusalem on high (namely, as opposed to the lower, or terrene; see Heb. xii. 22) is free, and this Jerusalem (viz. the New Covenant) is the mother of us all.' That Ἀγαρ was an appellation of Sinai among the people of the surrounding country, we have the testimony of Chrysost. and the ancient Commentators, which is also confirmed by the accounts of modern travellers. And it might well have it, since ὄρη in Arabic signifies a rock, or rocky mountain; and as Sinai is remarkably such, it might be κατ' ἐξοχὴν called τὸ Ἀγαρ.

<sup>26</sup> ἡ δὲ ἄνω Ἱερ. meaning, figuratively, the Christian Church, the Gospel Dispensation, in that new and perfect state, which it will assume at the coming of the Messiah.—ἐλευθέρᾳ, 'free': viz. from spiritual bondage.—μήτερ πάντων ἡμῶν, i. e. of all true believers; all, whether Jews or Gentiles, forming one common 'Israel of God.' Gal. vi. 16.—Ἰσταν, however, is wanting in 6 uncials, and 5 cursives, and in several Versions and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. It may be an interpolation; but the Apostle (as Winer observes) is accustomed to join πάντες with ἡμῶν, or ὑμῶν; as Gal. iii. 28, 2 Cor. ii. 3, vii. 15. Phil. i. 4. Though as that is not agreeable to the usage of the Class. writers, it might therefore be removed by the early Critics, especially, in so few MSS. as eleven (for I find the πάντων in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies) it might be lost from variety of position; for I have observed that when πᾶς and the Pronoun come together, there is almost always a variety of position (so here in 3 ancient Greek Fathers and one Version we have ἡμῶν πάντων), and generally an omission of one or other of the two words. It was read by Macarius, by Cyrill. of Jer. Cat. 118, by Euseb. Comm. on Is., by Theodor., by Irenaeus, Jerome, and Primasius. That the word should have been obtruded into nearly all the copies from a marginal scholium is very improbable. I do not doubt that it came from the Apostle; and even Estius is fain to abandon his reverend Fulg., and truly remarks, 'Videtur Apostolus hac universalis nota significare voluisse magnam fidelium Novi Testamenti multitudinem ex gentibus collectam et colligendam, atque ita etiam Galatas esse filios coelestis Jerusalem, ac proinde liberos. Eo namque pertinet probatio sequens de multis filiis.' Calvin has here an able note, in which, 'inter alia,' after considering the ἄνω Ἱερ., as the Church of God, he adds, 'habet enim semen vitæ incorruptibile apud se depositum, quo nos format, fovet in utero, edit in lucem; habet eadem lac et cibum, quo procreatos perpetuo alit.' He adds, 'see, then, why the Church is called the mother of the faithful.' 'Et sano qui recusat esse Ecclesiae filius, Deum frustra Patrem habere expetit; neque enim, nisi per Ecclesiae ministerium, Deus sibi filios generat, et tollit, donec adolescent, et perveniant ad virilem usque ætatem.' Hence it is clear how the case stands ἐστὶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ μήτηρ [πάντων] ἡμῶν. <sup>27</sup> ἡ γέγραπται γάρ ἡ ἱσ. 54.

 Εὐφράνθητι, στείρα ἢ οὐ τίκτουςα· ῥῆξον καὶ βόησον, ἢ οὐκ ὠδίνουσα· ὅτι πολλὰ τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἐρήμου μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς ἐχούσης τὸν ἄνδρα· <sup>28</sup> ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοί, ἡ Rom. 9. 7.
 κατὰ Ἰσαὰκ, ἐπαγγελίας τέκνα ἐσμέν. <sup>29</sup> Ἄλλ', ὥσπερ τότε ἡ Gen. 21. 9.
 ὁ κατὰ σάρκα γεννηθεὶς ἐδίωκε τὸν κατὰ πνεῦμα, οὕτω καὶ νῦν.
<sup>30</sup> Ἀλλὰ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; Ἐκβαλε τὴν παιδίσκην καὶ ἡ Gen. 11.
 τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς, οὐ γὰρ μὴ κληρονομήσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τῆς παιδίσκης μετὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ τῆς ἐλευθέρας. <sup>31</sup> Ἀρα, ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἐσμέν παιδίσκης τέκνα, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐλευθέρας. V. 1 Ὁ Τῷ ἡ Acts 15. 10.
 1 Pet. 2. 16.

as to the reading. The Apostle, we see, might have been content with writing ἡμῶν, but, for the reason suggested by Estius, he added πάντων. But the Critics, being too dull to perceive the reason, removed the word as useless.

27. εὐφράνθητι—ἀνδρα] This is quoted exactly from the Sept. Version of Isaiah liv. 1, which, in its literal sense, represents the Jewish state, though then labouring under great distress, as to be hereafter restored to its pristine glory. But it is, we find by the Apostle's application, to be referred, at least in a sublimer sense, to the Christian Jerusalem,—the Church. With respect to the correspondence, the expression στείρα ἢ οὐ τίκτ. is to be understood of the Christian Church, in a great measure composed of Gentiles; and τῆς ἐχούσης τὸν ἄνδρα, of the Jewish Church. Στείρα is brought in with reference to the barrenness of the antitype Sarah.—πολλὰ—ἀνδρα. Render: 'many more are the children of the deserted and neglected, than of her who had a husband.' In ἡ τὸν ἄνδρα there is an allusion to the fecundity which may be expected to result from the circumstances described.—ἐρήμου has reference to the desertion of Sarah by Abraham, to cohabit with Hagar, who is therefore meant by τῆς ἐχ. ἀνδρα. 'The Gentile world (says Dr. Chandler) is here represented as a forsaken unmarried woman [rather as a neglected unmarried, or a forsaken married woman. Ed.] because the Gentiles were not constituted the Church of God, nor taken into a special covenant with him, but were generally abandoned to idolatry and vice. And she is ordered to shout for joy for that happy alteration which God intended to make in her circumstances, by espousing her to himself, and giving her at length a more numerous posterity than the married wife, viz. than the Church of the Jews, could ever boast of, who are represented as betrothed to God, because they were under his peculiar protection, and brought into a special covenant with him.'

28. Here the Apostle adverts to the promise of offspring held out to the heavenly Jerusalem; i. e. the Christian Church; q. d. 'If you would know who it is that are meant by the prophet, it is we Christians; we are the ἐπαγγελίας τέκνα (for τὰ τέκνα τὰ ἐπαγγελίαινα), children divinely promised, not κατὰ σάρκα, like the Jews,' Rom. ix. 8; see also supra iii. 14.—κατὰ Ἰσ., 'after the similitude or example of Isaac.'

29. "Here the Apostle, adhering to the same similitude, adds, that 'as Ishmael vexed Isaac, so do the Jews persecute the Christians.'

(Borger.) It was not, however, done merely to trace another point of coincidence, but to suggest that Christians are not to be surprised at similar persecution, from a similar cause,—envy; but may yet comfort themselves with reflecting, that the persecution of Ishmael did not prevent Isaac from being the free-born son of Abraham, and the persecutor's superior. 'As (observes Chandler) being born after the flesh, and after the Spirit, are here opposed; the being born after the Spirit must mean, Isaac's being born in a peculiar manner, by the extraordinary influence of the Spirit and power of God.—διώκει will here denote 'injurious treatment of every kind, both in deeds and words.' And although the Mosaic history records only one instance of insulting treatment,—namely, on Ishmael mocking Sarah, when she weaned Isaac (see Gen. xxi. 9, 10); yet when we consider the disappointment which both Hagar and Ishmael must have felt on the birth of Isaac, it was not unnatural for them to feel ill-will, and show it on every occasion to the real heir of the promise.

30. ἀλλὰ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; [Ἐκβ.] This is meant to indicate that the consequence of unbelief and disobedience, in the case of the Jewish Church, will be correspondent to that in the case of the antitype Hagar; viz. the being cast out from the presence and favour of God, and excluded from salvation.

31. ἀρα, ἀδελφοί, &c.] The Apostle here, through delicacy, does not fully express, but only hints at, the conclusion to be made,—simply expressing what may serve to suggest it; q. d. 'We believers, then, whether Jews or Gentiles, are not in the state I have represented by Hagar, but by Sarah; consequently, we are not under bondage to sin and death, but are free from them by Christ, being alone heirs of the promises.'—For ἀρα, Lachm. and Tisch. edit. διό, from three uncial, and a few cursive MSS. (to which I can make no addition); but wrongly; since internal evidence strengthens external authority in favour of ἀρα, which is often so used by St. Paul in ratiocination. That the Pesch. Syr. Translator had ἀρα in his copy is plain.

V. Having set forth their Christian liberty, the Apostle subjoins, by way of inference, that they should steadfastly continue in, and maintain, the exercise of that liberty from the yoke of the law, which Christ had bestowed on them.

1. There is here an inference from the preceding; and, therefore, this verse ought not to have commenced a new chapter.—στίχ. ἐν is ἐλευθερία [οὖν], ἥ Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἠλευθέρωσε, στήκετε, καὶ μὴ πάλιν ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε. <sup>2</sup> Ἰδὲ, ἐγὼ Παῦλος λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι, ἐὰν περιτέμνησθε, Χριστὸς ὑμᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφελήσει. <sup>3</sup> μαρτύρομαι δὲ πάλιν παντὶ ἀνθρώπῳ περιτεμνομένῳ, ὅτι ὀφειλέτης ἐστὶν ὅλον τὸν νόμον ποιῆσαι. <sup>4</sup> Κατηργήθητε ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ οἷτως ἐν νόμῳ δικαιοῦσθε τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε.

 § 2m. 4 <sup>5</sup> Ἡμεῖς γὰρ Πνεύματι ἐκ πίστεως ἐλπίδα δικαιοσύνης ἀπεκ-

equiv. to the Class. ἐμμένειν.—Ἐνέχεσθαι is generally explained by κρατεῖσθαι. The word is used properly of being 'held by ropes, nets, &c.:' but is often metaphorically employed; as ἐνέχεσθαι ἐν νόμοις, 'to be held in obedience to the laws.' The ἐν may have reference to the insertion of the neck in a noose, or yoke; and thus the sense will be, 'do not again thrust your neck into the yoke of bondage [to the law].' See 2 Cor. xi. 4.—Here there are two remarkable var. lectt., but manifestly inferior to the common one. The origin of both readings has been evinced by Rinck to have been mere error, or the emendandi audacia of the early Biblical Critics, some of whom appear to have been displeased with the position of the οὖν, and changed it, though (as in many other cases) for the worse. From this change of position Griesb. irrationally concluded that it ought to have place no where! and he cut it out (as Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. have done after him); though without any competent authority, and notwithstanding that the sentence is thus deprived of what shows its scope.

2. ἐγὼ Π. λέγω, &c.] This mention of his name may be meant (as at Eph. iii. 1, and 2 Cor. x. 1) to give weight and authority to what is about to be said. But it seems also intended to contrast his doctrine with that of the false teachers; nay, as some think, what he really teaches with what he is by certain persons represented as teaching. The ἰδὲ, 'see to it; mind!' hints at the great importance of what he is going to say, which forms the first among the several reasons adduced why he wishes them to stand fast in their Christian liberty, and that from the great detriment with which its loss would be attended.—Ἐὰν περιτέμ., i. e. 'if ye undertake the ritual law,'—namely, as necessary to justification, expecting to be justified thereby; for the words, as Chandler shows, have reference not to the Jews, who submitted to the rite as a national constitution (or mode of entering into covenant with God), but to the Gentiles becoming circumcised.—Χριστὸς ὑμᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφελήσει, 'Christ will profit you nothing.' Calvin on these words rightly observes, that 'the Apostle here does not (as at Rom. iv. 11) touch on the institution of God (the rite of circumcision), but only treats on the figment of the pseudo-apostles, who pretended that circumcision was an opus meritorium, and so commended the observance of the law, that circumcision might be the commencement of its profession. He then goes on to say that circumcision was enjoined by God only for a time. Accordingly, after the coming of Christ, that sacrament, divinely instituted, had already ceased, because baptism had succeeded in its place. Then, in order to show how strikingly the doctrine of the Papists coincides with that of the false apostles here impugned by St. Paul, he bids us observe that 'the sacraments, truly and sincerely received, are properly not the works of men, but of God. For in baptism and the supper of the Lord we are not agents; we [only] offer ourselves to God for the receiving of his grace. Therefore baptism is, as regards us, an opus passivum, for we bring nothing besides faith, which hath all things laid up in Christ. But what do the Papists? They imagine the fancy of an opus operatum, by which men may before-hand merit the grace of God. What else do they but extinguish the truth of the sacrament? We [Protestants], however, retain baptism and the Lord's supper, because Christ intended there should be a perpetual use thereof. But those impious absurdities we, as it is right we should, utterly reprobate.'

3. μαρτύρομαι δὲ πάλιν] 'And moreover, I solemnly declare;' a use of μαρτύρομαι similar to that at Acts xx. 26. See note. The expression πάλιν does not imply repetition, but is here, as often, a constitutive particle, connecting circumstances which relate to the same subject. The verse is meant to further confirm the former one, and to intimate the reason for what might seem a harsh restriction.—ὀφειλέτης ἐστί, meaning, 'is morally bound to the performance of.' So the expression is used Rom. viii. 12, where see note. By this it is intimated that circumcision, like baptism, binds the person who undergoes it to the other rites of the religion undertaken; and that thus the undergoing circumcision is a virtual abandonment of Christianity.

4—6. Here the Apostle shows why justification, with the expectation of being justified, must exclude from Christ.—κατηργ. ἀπὸ τ. Χ., meaning, 'are separated from Christ,' 'have renounced your interest in him.' The true sense of this peculiar expression is lit., 'you have parted company, have become separated from Christ:' perhaps a metaphor taken from a ship which has parted from the tow-line, has let go its hold by it. The meaning is, in other words, 'your personal interest in him has become null and void.'—δικαιοῦσθε, 'ye are being justified, seeking to be justified.' The same idea is followed up in the next words, τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε, of which the sense is, 'ye have lost hold of the [covenant of] grace, ye have ceased to have a personal interest in it.' The metaphor is taken from a thing which, for want of care to keep hold of it, slips from one's grasp; as a tow-line, or a rope thrown out to save a sinking mariner.

5, 6. ἡμεῖς γὰρ—ἀπεκδεχόμεθα. Ἐγὼ γὰρ, &c.] These two verses should not have been separated, since they form but one sentence, and ought to be pointed (as they were long ago in δεχόμεθα. <sup>6 c</sup> 'Εν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει, <sup>o ch. 6. 15.</sup>

<sup>Matt. 12. 50.</sup>
οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη. <sup>7 d</sup> Ἐτρέ- <sup>1 Cor. 7. 19.</sup>
<sup>Col. 3. 11.</sup>
<sup>d 1 Cor. 9. 24. ch. 3. 1.</sup>

R. Stephens's edition O mirificam): 'Ἡμεῖς γὰρ — ἀπεδεχόμεθα' ἐν γὰρ, &c.

5. In this verse we have, as Calv. and Hyper. show, a pre-occupation of an objection: 'What, then, is there no use in circumcision?' The Apostle shows that those are aiming at an absurdity who think that both religions may be conjoined, and wish to be accounted Christians, even though they seek to attain justification by an obedience to the law. This he does by tacitly contrasting the carval with the spiritual faith. In short, his great object is, as Hyper. observes, that 'of more fully explaining what he had said on justification by grace.' So Calv., Bulling., Musc., and Crell., who have ably treated on the passage, and have, I think, made it clearly appear that Πιστεύει is not, as it is by Chrysa., Theophyl., Œcumen., and most modern Expositors, to be understood of the influence of the Holy Spirit, but is to be taken in the sense spirit, as opposed to the letter or carnality of the law; meaning that 'justification is seated in faith, and espec. obtained after a spiritual manner.' The two arguments, at ἡμεῖς γὰρ, &c., and ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ, are each introduced by a γὰρ, which Particle in the former case is rendered vero by Musc., and but by Mackn. And certainly γὰρ is sometimes, though rarely, taken by interpreters as standing for δι. But, in such a case, it is better to suppose a reference to words suppressed, as in Thucyd. iv. 3, 2. Accordingly, the sense will be in the present passage: '[But such is not, I trust, the case with us], FOR we, &c.—In ἐκτίθα ἀντὶ, we have not a mere pleonasm, but rather a very strong mode of expression, to denote 'anxious longing after, full expectation of anything,' and reliance on its appearance. The latter is pointed out by Calveta alone; and the former alone by Hyper.

6. ἐν γὰρ Χρ. q. d. 'I say in faith, and faith only; for,' &c. Here we have, as Hyper. shows, a reason why they should confidently expect justification by the Spirit, and that deduced from the exalted nature of faith. To preclude, however, the supposition, that a bare faith was meant, the Apostle cautiously subjoins the limitation δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργ., meaning, what shows itself, exerts its efficacy in action, as opposed to mere speculation; what is operative, as opposed to what produces no fruits; see 1 Thesa. ii. 13.—ἐνεργουμένη. It has been not a little debated among Expositors whether this should be regarded as of the Passive or of the Middle voice. The early modern Commentators generally, and, of later ones, Grot., Rosenm., Borger, Schott, and Peile, adopt the latter view. According to this, we may best render by 'efficax fit,' shows itself, evidences its presence, in love, i. e. in acts of love. Of those, on the other hand, who take the word in a Passive sense, there are Est., Hamm., Whitby, Schoettg., Bp. Bull., and Dindorf in Steph. Thes. in v. Edit. Par. It is, indeed, asserted by Est. and Bp. Bull., that the word is scarcely ever used as a Middle form, even in the Class. writers. They might, perhaps, have said sever, except as a Dependent. I have, in my Lex New Test., shown that in the passages of Polyb., adduced by Dr. Robinson in his

Lex., the words are of the Passive form, as they are in the passage of Aristot. de Mundo, and another of Jos. Antt. xv. 5, 3. That Schoettg. explains it as a Middle form, must have been from want of due consideration, since he has, in his note on 1 Thesa. ii. 13, said that 'as often, at least in St. Paul, a passive signification is proper to be retained.' In all the passages of St. Paul a Passive sense (as Est. has shown) is either prominent, or quite perceptible, as indeed is the case in James v. 16. And this view is supported by the Pesh. Syr. in Eph. iii. 20, and Col. i. 19, it may be doubtful which of those forms (Pass. or Middl. Reflex.) should be supposed. Here, however, the Passive is greatly preferable, and is supported by the judgment of antiquity, since not only the above ancient Versions confirm it, but the interpretations of Chrysa., Theophyl., and Œcumen. So Chrysa. and Theophyl. explain ἐνεργεῖται by ζῶσα δεικνύται, 'is evidenced to be a living faith,' as said in opposition to a dead faith, spoken of James ii. 26. And so Est.—than whom no one has better (if so well) treated of the true force of ἐνεργεῖται—explains thus: 'Sed fides per caritatem animalia, acta, mota, incitata ad opus, q. d. quæ per caritatem constituitur in actu, quamque caritas non sinit esse torpentem. Caritas enim est velut ignis, anima, spiritus, inflammans, vivificans, impellens fidem, quæ sine caritate frigida, mortua est.'

7. Having opened out the true nature of the Gospel, and shown that it cannot stand with the Law, the Apostle takes occasion to express his amazement that the Galatians should in any degree have deserted it; and inveighs against the false teachers, by whose evil persuasions alone they had been induced to swerve from the right course of Evangelical liberty; to which, however, he expresses a hope that they will return. The scope of the passage is ably traced by Hyper. and Calv., who show that few and brief as are the arguments employed to bring back the erring Galatians, they are most judiciously selected, as being those highly calculated to work upon them, and fully effect the purpose in view. Paul first proceeds upon a comparison of their former state with their present one; and that (as Calv. observes) in order that, by the sense of shame, they may be induced to return to the way from which they had departed.—ἰτρέχετε καλῶς, 'ye were running well'; i. e. going on prosperously in your Christian course of faith and obedience. See Heb. xii. 1, comp. with 1 Cor. ix. 24. Eph. ii. 10. An agonistic metaphor (see note on ver. 22, and 1 Cor. ix. 24), suggested by the term ἡρεπίζετε at ver. 4, and meant to suggest the necessity of continued zeal and energy.—Ἐνέκοψα. The common reading here is ἀνέκοψα, 'hath checked you in your course,' 'hindered you'; i. e. 'hath retarded, hindered.' Now this reading is well sustained by examples, and might be admitted; but, as all the best MSS., including the Lamb. and Musc. copies, and many Versions and Fathers, have ἐνέκοψα, which yields quite as good a sense, and one more agreeable to the foregoing metaphor, it is preferable, and has been adopted by all the ε ch. 1. 6.

 f 1 Cor. 5. 6.
 7.
 & 15. 22.
 8 Tim. 2. 17.
 9 3 Cor. 2. 2.
 & 6. 22.
 ch. 1. 7.

χετε καλῶς τίς ὑμᾶς * ἐνέκοψε τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι ; 8 * Ἡ πεισμονὴ οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος ὑμᾶς. 9 * μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοί. 10 * Ἐγὼ πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὅτι οὐδὲν

Critical Editors. In deference to whose judgment I have received it, though with some hesitation. In such a case as this, the letters α and ε being perpetually confounded by the scribes, internal evidence has weight, and can alone decide,—and that is quite in favour of ἐνέκοψε.—for ἐνέκοψε, taken in the sense which, as I have shown, it must bear, would be far too strong a term for the occasion; for those whom the Apostle here addresses were not quite cut off in their course; but were only grievously impeded in running, being 'sore let and hindered' by the false notions above adverted to. The metaphor seems one taken from a racer, who is hampered in his course, either by superfluous clothing, or the ill-managed endeavours of certain by-standers and professed well-wishers to aid him. With the present compare the expression μὴ ἐνέχουσιν, supra, ver. 1. In my Lex. New Test., in ἀνακόπτω, I have adduced exx. of this sense of ἀνακ. from Polyen., Plut., and Appian, and have proved that propriety of language, as to construction, almost demands ἀνακ., for ἐνέκοψε would require the dat. ἡμῖν.

8. ἡ πεισμονὴ—καλοῦντος ὑμᾶς] The sense to be assigned to this verse depends on the interpretation of the two terms (both disputed as to their import) πεισμονή, and τοῦ καλ. With respect to the former, very difficult is it to fix that on any certain proof, because the word is a term of such rare occurrence. Besides the present passage it has only been found in G. Pachym., p. 64. Just. Martyr, p. 87. Apollon. de Syntaxi, p. 195, and the Lexicographers Hesych. and Zonar. It may mean either persuasibility, the disposition to be easily persuaded (equiv. to εὐπειθία), or the state of mind resulting therefrom,—namely, persuadableness, persuasion of mind, which Chrys. and Theophyl. meant when explaining it by τὸ πείθεσθαι. The latter interpretation has most support from the usus loquendi, as far as the little light we have goes; and it is most agreeable to the context, espec. as regards the paronomasia between πείθεσθαι and πεισμονή. Of the other term τοῦ καλοῦντος, I am now of opinion that the best explanation is that by which it is referred to God; and this derives strong confirmation from supra, i. 6, θαυμάζω ὅτι—μετατίθεισθα ἀπὸ τοῦ καλίσαντος ὑμᾶς, ἐν χάριτι Χριστοῦ, εἰς ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον, where τοῦ καλίσαντος—Χριστοῦ forms a fuller and more developed, as compared with the shorter, and therefore less clear expression here employed. The term is one not unfrequently used of Him by whom believers are 'called to be saints.' See Rom. ix. 11. 1 Cor. vii. 17. Gal. i. 15. Col. i. 12. 1 Thesa. ii. 12. iv. 17. v. 24. 2 Tim. i. 9. 1 Pet. i. 15. ii. 9. v. 10. 2 Pet. i. 3, though in one or two of those passages it may be doubtful whether God the Father, or Christ the Son, be meant. Certainly there was no reason for Chandler and Mackn. to have so decidedly urged a reference to the Apostle himself here—a reference which has, besides others, the objection of its involving a certain want of modesty; for it were surely not befitting one even so high as this chief

Apostle, to express what Mackn. lays down as the sense intended, 'that ye are so soon removed from me who called you.' Calv. has shown how very suitable to the argument carrying on is the other reference to which I have now given the preference; and Est., besides adopting it, shows that there is a tacit allusion to the opposite to ὁ Θεὸς,—namely, ὁ διάβολος, the author of all heresy and schism.

9. Here we have, as Hyper. observes, a second argument, and that from the danger of the course in question. This is enforced by a proverbial saying, employed supra at 1 Cor. v. 6, where see note. With respect to the application carrying on, many refer it to the false teachers; q. d. 'a few false teachers may corrupt the whole congregation;' see 2 Tim. ii. 17. While others refer it to the false doctrine which maintained the necessity of circumcision, and such a partial observance of the law as those Judaizers might then be content to enjoin. This is preferable; for the Apostle means by the proverbial saying, μικρὰ ζύμη, used also at 1 Cor. v. 6, to intimate that the giving way to principles involving even trifling points, would quite corrupt their Christian soundness in doctrine, and make the Gospel of none effect.

10. ἐγὼ πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ] This is intended to soften the harshness of the preceding expressions, by an assurance of some remaining confidence in them; for we have here (as Hyper. remarks) 'an argumentum ad spe, sive a bona expectatione,' 'as for me, I, &c. The ἐγὼ is emphatic: 'I, for my part,' &c. Πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ may mean, either 'I have confidence in you, through the goodness and assistance of the Lord;' or rather, 'I trust in the Lord concerning you.' Perhaps, however, both senses are intended: q. d. 'I trust in the Lord [relying on his help], and I place confidence in you.'—οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρον. Here there is something left to be supplied; probably, as often, from modesty. It is not agreed among Expositors, whether the words mean, 'that you will be of the same opinion as myself,'—namely, on the subject of this Epistle; or, 'that you will entertain no principles contrary to the doctrine I taught you.' The former is preferable, espec. as the latter sense merges into the former.—ὅ δὲ παράσσω ὅ., however, he that troubleth you;' or rather, 'perplexes and unsettles you;' as if that was all he could do,—not teach them. So Galen, παράττοντες μόνον τοὺς μαθητόντας, διδάσκοντες δὲ οὐδὲν. The use of the singular will not prove that there was no more than one false teacher; since it may be used collectively. Yet the Apostle seems to glance at one, the principal of them; and by ὅστις ἂν ᾖ we may infer, that he was a person of some consequence.—βαστ. τὸ κρ. may be rendered, 'shall, or will, bear the blame, and (by implication) suffer the punishment [suitable to his offence], whether excommunication, or the infliction of bodily disease. See Matt. xxiii. 13. Rom. xlii. 2. To advert to a matter of criticism. Olsh. notices the want of some connexive Particle, whereby, he says, the separate sentences have an indeterminateness as to the context.

ἄλλο φρονήσετε ὁ δὲ ταράσσων ὑμᾶς βαστάσει τὸ κρίμα, ὅστις
 ἀν ᾧ. <sup>11</sup> Ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀδελφοί, εἰ περιτομὴν ἔτι κηρύσσω, τί ἔτι <sup>h 1 Cor. 1. 23.</sup> διώκομαι; ἄρα κατήγγηται τὸ σκάνδαλον τοῦ σταυροῦ. <sup>12</sup> Ὁφε- <sup>11 Cor. 5. 12.</sup>
 λον καὶ ἀποκόφονται οἱ ἀναστατοῦντες ὑμᾶς. <sup>2. & 2. 15.</sup>

Prof. Schott, too, notices the too great abruptness; and they both seem to have thought some Particle wanting; not perceiving that the asyndeton here is quite in place, and imparts no little gravity to the assurance. The ancient Critics thought a Particle was wanting, and, as usual, kindly furnished one de suo; of which we have vestiges in the reading of C, F, G, and 4 cursive (Scholz adds et alii; but I cannot find them). However, it was brought into the text by Lachm., with singular ἀκρισία, of which we have, alas! perpetual instances. He ought to have seen that internal evidence is as strong as external against the Particle, which was evidently not in the copies used by the Pesch. Syr. Translator.

11. ἔγω δὲ, &c. The connexion is, 'But to advert to the doctrine which I, for my part, really do hold, if (as my accusers allege) I yet, or still, &c. The repetition in ἔτι has great force, as serving to antithesis. The Apostle here glances, by example, at one of the grossest calumnies respecting him, disseminated by the ὁ ταράσσων and his partisans,—namely, that he had, on some occasions, and when it suited his interest, preached the necessity of circumcision, or, at least, had allowed it to some other Churches;—while to the Galatians he interdicted it.—ἔτι, 'even yet'; i. e. after having become a Christian, and Apostle of the Gentiles. 'If I yet, as they say, preach [the necessity of] circumcision [to justification], τί ἔτι διώκ.; 'how is it that I am yet persecuted?' viz., by the Jews and Judaizers. The Apostle means to argue, that his being yet under such furious persecution from the Jews was a decided proof that he did not preach circumcision and the law. If that be the case (ἄρα), then κατήγγ. τὸ σκάνδαλον τ. σ., 'the chief matter at which offence is taken [by the persons in question, Jews and Judaizers] (namely, that salvation was only to be obtained by believing in the Messiahship of one who was crucified) is done away;' q. d. 'then persecution would have ceased, [but it has not.]' By σταυροῦ is meant 'the doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ on the cross,' and the necessity of that sacrifice for the salvation of men. And as by this death not only eternal salvation was procured, but deliverance from the burdensome ceremonies of the Mosaic law was effected,—it is no wonder that such a doctrine should have been a stumbling-block to the Jews.

12. ὀφελον καὶ ἀποκόψ. οἱ ἀναστατ. ὅ.] These words have given rise to no little discussion among Commentators. The ancient ones almost universally, and many of the most eminent moderns, recognize a sarcastic paronomasia between περιτίμνεσθαι and ἀποκόψασθαι: q. d. 'I would that they, who are so fond of circumcising, would not only circumcise, but even cut off the parts usually circumcised.' But thus the action is supposed to be voluntarily performed. Yet I agree with Erasmus, Crollius, Elsner, Whitby, and others, that this sentiment has too much of bitterness and levity (not to say indecorum) to be supposed likely to have come from St. Paul (even with all the allowance which Koppe, Borger, and Schott justly claim for the change of manners, and difference of ideas between ages so distant as St. Paul's and our own); espec. as we find no approach to any thing like a coarse joke elsewhere in his writings, though penned under equally great 'commotion of mind.' For in the passage of Phil. iii. 2, we have only a paronomasia between κατατομήν and περιτομήν. Of the other interpretations proposed, only two seem to merit attention; 1. that of Elsner, Koppe, Newcome, and others, who take the sense to be, 'may they be cut off by some disease, or even suffer perdition from God!' But that yields a sentiment even less suitable to the character of the Apostle, and, as Schott remarks, had this been the sense, the Apostle would have used another expression, and not ἀποκ.; see 1 Cor. xvi. 22. v. 5. 2ndly, That of Piscator, Estius, Crollius, Hyper., Whitby, Chandler, Doddridge, Jortin, Michael., Iaspis, and others, who assign the following sense: 'I would that they were even cut off from your society by excommunication, or would cut themselves off, by leaving it; and thus were prevented from giving you any further trouble;' which has much semblance of truth; for the ellipse of ἀφ' ὑμῶν is very mild, and like that at iv. 17, 30. And the use of the future middle for future passive is by no means uncommon. The construction with a future Indicative, for Infinitive, is indeed rare; but examples are adduced from Arrian and Aristenetus. Finally, the uncommonness of the word in this sense may be sufficiently tolerated from the paronomasia; see note supra v. 8. With respect to the allusion, it is certainly not (as Dr. Burton supposes) to ἐνέκον at ver. 7, but rather to the thing in question, περιτομήν, which at Phil. iii. 2, the Apostle contemptuously calls κατατομήν. This last interpretation is confirmed by the Apostle having alluded to excommunication at i. 8, 9, and by a similar passage of 1 Cor. v. 6, 7, adduced by Whitby and Chandler, where having said, as here, 'a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump,' he adds, 'Purge out therefore the old leaven, and put away from you the wicked person.' The Apostle wishes that they would do it, rather than feels disposed himself to order it to be done (as in 1 Cor. v. 1—5. ix. 13), because (as observes Scott) 'the infection had spread so wide in the Churches of Galatia, the persons to be censured possessed so great influence, and so very many were concerned in some degree, that there was little prospect, except by the intervention of miracles, that such a command would be obeyed.' Besides, the Apostle could not well command the Galatians to excommunicate the false teachers,—their conduct not being of the scandalous nature of that of the incestuous person among the Corinthians.

k ch. 6. 2.
1 Pet. 2. 16.
2 Pet. 2. 19.
Jude 4.

1 Lev. 19. 18.
Matt. 7. 12.
& 19. 18, 19.
& 22. 30.
Rom. 13. 9.
James 2. 8—11.

m Rom. 6.
12. & 8. 1, 4.
13. & 18. 14.
1 Pet. 2. 11.

13 κ' Ὑμεῖς γὰρ ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ ἐκλήθητε, ἀδελφοί· μόνον μὴ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκί· ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης δουλεύετε ἀλλήλοις. 14 ὁ γὰρ πᾶς νόμος ἐν ἐνὶ λόγῳ πληροῦται, ἐν τῷ Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑαυτόν. 15 Εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε καὶ κατεσθίετε, βλέπετε μὴ ὑπὸ ἀλλήλων ἀναλωθῆτε.

16 Δέγω δέ· πνεύματι περιπατεῖτε, καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν σαρκὸς

13. Having vindicated the doctrine of Christian liberty, and inculcated its use, the Apostle now proceeds to guard them against its abuse, as shown in a censorious and uncharitable spirit; reminding them that they were still bound by the law of Christian charity, in which the whole moral law is comprehended. At εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκί sup. τρέπηται: the sense being, 'for a handle to the flesh by way of pretext to commit sin.' The term ἀφορμή, though properly signifying only a means, or occasion, yet is sometimes used, like our word 'handle,' of what is bad, at least by abuse. So Demosth. Olynth. i. τὸ εὖ πράττειν ('to be successful') παρὰ τὴν ἀξίαν ἀφορμή, τὸ κακίαι φρονεῖν τοῖς ἀνοήτοις γίνεσθαι. So Schott interprets it of fleshly lusts, comparing 1 Pet. ii. 16. Yet it is here not to be confined to, nor understood chiefly of, fleshly lusts (which war against the soul), but to carnality of spirit as well as flesh. St. James v. 4, well says, 'the spirit that is in us lusteth to envy,' and consequently to malice, hatred, and all uncharitableness. Accordingly St. Paul (well aware of the above kind of carnality) calls the Corinthians (1 Cor. iii. 3) σαρκικοί, inasmuch as there was envying and strife. That the Apostle chiefly has in view this kind of carnality in the present passage is probable, since he glances at it at ver. 15, εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε, with which compare Arius, Epict. ii. 22, δάκναι ἀλλήλους καὶ λοιδορεῖσθαι. By the expression διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης δουλεύειν, inseruire mutuis commodis, is depicted Christian charity in its widest extent, as set forth in 1 Cor. xiii., and espec. in the being mutually indulgent to each other in such matters as were disputed between the Judaizers and the Gentile converts.—δουλεύετε indicates, as Chrys. remarks, 'the extreme of love.' And observe, that though the Apostle takes away the yoke of the law, he lays upon them another, which, though light to affection, is yet stronger than the other.

14. The discourse is now, with much address, turned from doctrinal to practical subjects, with reference to a most important moral maxim, the primary precept of the law, called by James ii. 8, νόμος βασιλικός.—Ὁ γὰρ πᾶς νόμος—πληρ., meaning the whole law, whether Jewish or Christian, as it respects our fellow-creatures. Πληρ. here is equiv. to ἀνακεφαλαιούται ('is comprehended') in a similar passage of Rom. xiii. 9 (where see note); meaning, 'it may be reduced to this maxim.' Lachm. and Tisch., indeed, edit πεπληρωται, from A, B, C, and 7 cursives; to which I can add nothing; and the authority for that reading is insufficient, espec. considering that internal evidence is against it, from the probability of its having arisen from the correction of some Critics, who were not aware of the true sense meant to be conveyed by the term, which cannot but be this, 'its claims are fully satisfied by the observance of this commandment.'—ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑ. The ὡς, as Koppe observes, refers to the kind, not the degree of love. We are to love others (τὸν πλησίον being for ἑαυτὸν) in the same manner as we love ourselves; and so may justly be required to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us, Matt. vii. 12. To love them to the same degree were (from the principle of self-love wisely implanted in us by the Creator) impossible, and therefore could not have been enjoined. In short, the love here meant, is no other than that described by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii.

15. Here the Apostle urges the practice of this duty from human motives; i. e. with reference to the evils which would result to society from the breach of it.—Εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε, &c. The εἰ contains an admission that the thing was too common; importing, 'If, as is very much the case.' In δάκν. and κατεσθ. (of which the latter is the stronger term, and denotes the result of the former) we have a metaphor, taken from wild beasts, finely expressive of backbiting, disputes, and bitter quarrels. Of βλέπετε—ἀναλ. the full sense is, 'Take care lest ye be made instruments of mutual destruction as individuals, and of total ruin as a society.'

16. Having declared that to bite and worry each other will tend to the destruction of all, the Apostle suggests what is the surest prevention to this evil, from its at once preserving love (or charity) and being preserved by it, namely, the being spiritual. To give this admonition still greater effect, the Apostle introduces it with the weighty formula λέγω δέ, employed for the same purpose, supra iii. 17, and iv. 1, and τοῦτο δέ φημι, 1 Cor. xv. 50. The impressive injunction πνεύμ. περιπατεῖτε—τελείετε contains the sum of the Apostle's practical injunctions; and the verses following are explanatory and illustrative of it, considered as a theme.—πνεύματι, 'by the spirit,' i. e. the spiritual part of man, enlightened, however, and strengthened by the influence of the Holy Spirit. See note on John viii. 16.—καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν σαρκὸς οὐ μὴ τελ., 'you will not fulfil,' &c. The interpretation of several eminent Commentators, 'and mind that ye do not fulfil,' is forbidden by grammatical propriety, and arose from the not attending to the force of the form οὐ μὴ, followed by the Subjunctive Aorist, on which Schott refers to the learned remarks of Lipsius, de Modorum usu in N. T. p. 67. My interpretation of the words is further supported by the Pesh. Syr., Vulg., and Arabic Translators. Such, too, was the view of the sense adopted by Chrys. and Theophyl., and has been of almost all the modern Commentators, of whom Grot. and Est. have best treated on the οὐ μὴ τελέσῃτε. <sup>17</sup> ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ ἐπιθυμεῖ κατὰ τοῦ πνεύματος, <sup>h Rom. 7. 15. &c.</sup> τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα κατὰ τῆς σαρκός· ταῦτα δὲ ἀντίκειται ἀλλήλοις, ἵνα μὴ ἂν θέλητε, ταῦτα ποιῇτε. <sup>18</sup> εἰ δὲ πνεύματι ἄγεσθε, <sup>o Rom. 6. 14. & 8. 2.</sup> words, the former by vindicating the future sense, the latter by ably opening out the full force of the sentiment, whom see, and also Hyper. and Bulling. The present verse thus understood will tend materially to open the way to settling the sense of the next verse (ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ ἐπιθυμεῖ—ἵνα μὴ ἂν θέλητε, ταῦτα ποιῇτε), where fancied doctrinal difficulties have led to interpretations devised for the purpose of avoiding those difficulties, but which in effect do but exchange them for others scarcely less formidable. In order to fully determine the import of the words, it is proper to previously ascertain the connexion. Now this has, I think, been best traced by Crell. and Calv., whose modes of laying it down, though they seem to differ, yet in reality coincide; for the connexion, as traced by Crell., holds good of the former clause, ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ—τῆς σαρκός,—namely, that it sets forth (by the γὰρ) the cause why he, who fully obeys the Spirit, will not render obedience to the flesh; which cause is, that the two stand so mutually opposed, that the motions of the Spirit cannot but run counter to the desires of the flesh. Again, Calvin's connexion is even more applicable than the above, though only to the latter clause, ταῦτα δὲ [ὁβρω] ἀντίκειται—ταῦτα ποιῇτε, where, Calvin observes, the Apostle admonishes them of the difficulty of the spiritual contest [as involved in its being made a successful contest], and so gives them to understand, that they will not conquer without a severe struggle; at the same time directing their attention to the great source of the difficulty in question, which consists in this,—that the natural disposition of man is repugnant to the Spirit and things spiritual, and thus intimating a wholesome lesson. Such, then, being the general purpose of the Apostle in these words, how, it may be asked, could it have been his intent to exhort those whom he is addressing to follow the motions of the Spirit, and by no means to fulfil the desires of the flesh, on the consideration that they could never do the things in question? To avoid a consequence so awkward, it will be necessary either, with Whitby, Wesley, and Dr. A. Clarke, to assign to the words a totally different meaning, or to explain them away by unwarranted limitation, so as to make them mean, 'ye cannot at all times,' or 'generally, do.' No such mode of removing the difficulty can be approved. In short, I consider no interpretation so free from objection as that which I have hitherto adopted, thus: 'so that, upon the whole (or, it comes to this), that what things ye may wish to do, those ye [in fact] do not.' This interpretation, adopted by Abp. Newc., Dodd., G. Wakef., and T. Scott, I find supported by the suffrages of St. Augustin, Calv., Bulling., and Est., who, together with the first-mentioned Commentators, refer what is said to good works; but Calv. and Est. are agreed that the Apostle is speaking only of the regenerate, since in the unregenerate there is no conflict at all. What the Apostle (says Calv.) here affirms is, that 'the faithful, however they may strive, yet never, as long as they are in this life, bring to a close the conflict [with the flesh, i. e. the old man], so as to serve God perfectly. They wish, indeed, and desire so to do; but the full effect never corresponds to the wish; for the good which they would that they do not, but the evil that they would not do that they do, as it is said Rom. vii. 19.' And to the same purport is the explanation of Est.

18. αἱ δὲ πνεύματι—ὁπρὸ νόμου] Render: 'But if ye are led by the Spirit.' The scope of these words has been variously laid down, but by no one of the Commentators so successfully as by Calv., who shows that the purpose of the Apostle here is to console those faithful ones who might be dispirited at their shortcomings in running the way of God's commandments. Accordingly, he tells them that, nevertheless, if they be true to their Christian engagements, they are not under a law (see Rom. vi. 14) extreme to mark their commissions and omissions, but under a merciful dispensation of grace. Whence it follows that those shortcomings will not be imputed to them, but their services equally accepted by God, as if full and complete in all respects. In accordance with the above is the view adopted by Est., who in his able note has, as often, profited largely by Calv.

19. That they may the better be able to discern whether they are indeed spiritual, or as yet but carnal, the Apostle proceeds to describe the flesh and the Spirit by their different effects. Accordingly he, at vv. 19—21, gives a list, containing 17 particulars, of the works of the flesh; and then, at vv. 22, 23, another, of the works of the Spirit; wherein we may observe three things; 1. the general description of spiritual graces, under the name 'the fruits of the Spirit;' 2. the particular species contained therein; 3. a special privilege belonging to all those particulars,—namely, exemption from the law. In this general description there are four differences observable; 1. the effects of the former sort of works proceed originally from the flesh; these, from the Spirit: 2. those are rather styled works; these fruits: 3. those are set forth as many and separate; these, as many, but united into one (fruit): 4. those are expressly said to be manifest; of these no such thing is mentioned. (Bp. Sanderson.) With this enumeration of vices and sins compare other similar ones in Matt. xv. 19. Mark vii. 21. Rom. i. 29. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Eph. v. 3—5. James iii. 14, where see notes. The order, indeed, of the vices varies; but reasons may usually be given for each particular distribution. St. Paul, as I have elsewhere shown, generally digests them into regular order, and throws them into groups. At the same time, it is plain from the concluding words, καὶ τὰ ὅμοια τούτοις, that the list was not meant to be complete; which was, indeed, unnecessary, they being, as the Apostle says, manifest, namely, to 'who have the faculties of spiritual discernment' (comp. Heb. v. 14). As to the words τὰ ἔργα τῆς σαρκός, the term ἔργα must be taken with some latitude; some of the particulars here specified being, as Whitby remarks, errors of the mind;

p 1 Cor. 3. 3. οὐκ ἐστὶ ὑπὸ νόμον. 19 P Φανερά δέ ἐστι τὰ ἔργα τῆς σαρκός, 20 εἰδωλο-
 21 ατρεία, φαρμακεία ἔχθραι, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, ἐριθείαι, διχο-

others, evil dispositions of the heart. Σάρξ denotes, as Theodoret explains, τὸ σαρκικὸν φρόνημα, our corrupt nature, the τῆς ψυχῆς τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ χεῖρα ῥοπὴν, extending, as Doddr. says, to the powers of the mind as well as the appetites of the body, and opposed to the new nature communicated by the renewing of the Holy Spirit. See Tit. i. 15.—Of the groups into which the vices now specified seem thrown, there are four; 1. those of lust, μολιχ., παρ., ἀκαθ., ἀσέλιγ.; 2. those of superstition, or impiety, εἰδωλ. and φάρμ.; 3. those of anger, discord, enmity, revelling, and contention, ἔχθρ., ἔρ., ζῆλοι., θυμοί., ἐριθ., διχοστ., αἰρ., φθόν., φόνος; 4. those of drunkenness and debauchery, μέθ., κώμοι. As to the first group, the terms μολιχ. and παρ. are often coupled, both in the Old and New Testament. Μολιχ. is, indeed, wanting in A, B, C, and one cursive (to which I can add nothing), some Versions and Fathers, and has been cancelled by Griesb., Lachm., and Tisch., whether with good reason may be doubted; since the external evidence for this omission is very insufficient, though the internal is in its favour. And after all that can be said, it would seem that the word is an interpolation from Revisers, who thought it ought not to be omitted; not perceiving that it is implied in παρ.

20. εἰδωλ., φάρμ. I cannot agree with Koppe, Borger, and Winer, that εἰδ. is placed after fornication, as being spiritual fornication. It has, I conceive, no connexion with the preceding, but is coupled with φάρμ., as bearing an affinity thereto. Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say, εἰδ. must be taken in the usual signification of the word; being rightly numbered among the works of the flesh, since it originates in a grovelling and sensual mind, which cannot worship God in spirit, nor have any conception of his perfect holiness; but brings him down to the senses, and represents him to corporeal eyes by images. Φαρμακεία is by many of the most eminent Commentators supposed to mean poisoning, a crime extensively prevalent in the then corrupt state of society, both among the Heathens and the Jews. This, however, cannot, I think, be admitted as the true sense, because the vices and evil dispositions contained in this enumeration are, as Chrysost. and Theophyl. have pointed out, such as our corrupt nature is prone to. Now it cannot be meant, that man is by nature prone to poisoning. In fact, the works in question are, almost all of them, such as were by the Heathens regarded as but slight delinquencies, and scarcely any of them punishable by law. It was, therefore, not unnatural for the Christian converts to treat them, in general, as venial offences, not inconsistent with their salvation. To remove this misconception, the Apostle solemnly assures them that they will (i. e. if persisted in, and unrepented of) exclude from the kingdom of heaven. Thus, to the enumeration of vices which closes the first chapter of Romans, is subjoined not the present declaration, but an equivalent—that 'the perpetrators of such things are deservedly adjudged to spiritual death.' Moreover, the above-mentioned sense of φάρμ. is inconsistent with the word following; and the true interpretation seems to be that adopted by the ancient Expositors in general, and most modern ones; i. e. sorcery of every kind, including charms, divinations, incantations, fortune-telling, and attempted intercourse with evil spirits, whether real or pretended; together with other arts, employed sometimes by the heathen priests for the support of their superstition, but oftener by impostors, similar to our conjurers, for the purpose of gain. In all such cases there can be no doubt that there was a mixture of sorcery and legerdemain; of which the former, in all its branches, was closely connected with the making up of powerful medicaments, to produce deception of the senses, and otherwise effect what might be in vain attempted by incantations, or such like. How feasible this was, as well as other illusions, by methods now familiar to all who are versed in natural philosophy, is fully proved by Dr. Hibbert on Apparitions. Nor was this all; for such impostors also eked out the force of charms, spells, and medicaments, by the use of actual poisons. Finally, it would seem that the Apostle has in view not only the persons who practised the arts of sorcery or divination, but also those who resorted to them. Either would exclude from salvation, as being inconsistent with any true dependence on God, and in fact (as Mr. Scott says) 'worshipping the Devil,' since in 1 Cor. x. 20, the gods of the heathens are, by implication, called devils, i. e. when real, and not mere stocks and stones.—The terms of the next class are such as we find frequently united both in the New Test. (as Phil. i. 15. 2 Cor. xii. 20) and the Class writers; the plural being used for greater force. It would seem that the terms ἔχθραι, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, are meant of 'private enmities, bickerings, emulations, and angry disputes;' and ἐριθείαι, διχοστασίαι, αἰρέσεις, and φθόνος, of 'public and party strife,' and its results, in uncharitable divisions or separations, and sectarianism in general.—By φθόνος may be designated 'the temper which, as the Poet says, "inly pines" at the happiness of others;' or it may be meant to be conjoined with the preceding. So Soph. Œd. Col. 1228 (cited by Wetst.), φόνος, στάσεις, ἔρεις, μάχαι, καὶ φθόνος. Several eminent Editors and Commentators would cancel the φόνος, on the authority of some six MSS. and a few Latin Fathers. This, however, is very uncritical; since it appears to have been omitted by the scribes from homoeoteleuton, and by the ancient Critics from the same vain notion that induced their modern brethren to cancel it; thinking it strange that murder should be inserted in the list, as being punishable rather by the civil magistrate. But, not to say that adultery was also punishable by the civil magistrate, and yet is found in the list (compare also Eph. iv. 28. 1 Cor. v. 11. vi. 10. Rom. ii. 22, seq.); that objection may be fully removed by supposing that the Apostle here does not mean

στασίαι, αἰρέσεις, <sup>21</sup> φθόνοι, φόνου μέθαι, κῶμοι, καὶ τὰ ὅμοια <sup>Rev. 22.</sup>
τούτοις· ἃ προλέγω ὑμῖν, καθὼς καὶ προεῖπον, ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες βασιλείαν Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσιν. <sup>22</sup> Ὁ δὲ <sup>1 Eph. 5. 9.</sup>
καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐστὶν ἀγάπη, χαρὰ, εἰρήνη, μακροθυμία, <sup>Phil. 1. 11.</sup> χρηστότης, ἀγαθωσύνη, πίστις, πραότης, ἐγκράτεια. <sup>23</sup> κατὰ <sup>1 Tim. 1. 9.</sup>
τῶν τοιούτων οὐκ ἔστι νόμος. <sup>24</sup> οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὴν σάρκα <sup>1 Rom. 8. 3.</sup>
<sup>8. 12. 14.</sup>
<sup>ch. 2. 26.</sup>

murder, but homicides; which was among the ancients often committed in the excitement of anger and strife. This is confirmed by Rom. i. 29. The last group is μέθαι, κῶμοι, joined also in Rom. xiii. 13, and often in the Class. writers. By the latter are denoted those nocturnal revelings, usually attendant on an evening of debauchery, consisting of licentious singing, dancing, and parading the streets with drunken rioting.

21. ἃ προλέγω ὑμῖν, καθὼς, &c.] Render, 'concerning which I [now] forewarn you, even as I have told you heretofore, that they who practise (i. e. habitually commit) such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.'

22. καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος.] The best modern Commentators take καρπ. as put for ἔργα, to correspond to the ἔργα τῆς σαρκὸς before; referring to Matt. vii. 16, and Eph. v. 9. But it would seem that the Apostle here studiously avoided the term works; and the reason why he says fruits is pointed out by Chrys. and Theophyl., as follows: 'Evil works come from ourselves alone; therefore they are called the works of the flesh; but virtuous ones require not our own exertions alone, but the aid of Divine grace; therefore the Apostle calls them the fruits of the Spirit; the seed (namely, the intention) being from ourselves, but the fruit resting with God.' It cannot be doubted that the term καρπός, and not ἔργα, is used, by way of intimating that the spiritual principle, sustained by the Spirit, produces these virtues, as a good tree brings forth good fruit. Very similar to the above is the explanation given by Bp. Sanderson. After remarking that the term fruit is used in preference to works, with reference to the rewards of righteousness, he further observes that, in the service of sin the toil is so great that, in comparison thereof, the benefit is as nothing; in the service of God the benefit is so great that, in comparison thereof, the labour is as nothing. Where the flesh rules all, the work exceeds the fruit; and therefore, without even mentioning the fruit, they are called 'the works of the flesh.' But where the Spirit of God rules, the fruit exceeds the work; and therefore, without even mentioning the work, it is called 'the fruit of the Spirit.' And so in other passages; as, for instance, in Ephes. v., speaking of the duties of holiness, as here, the Apostle, without any mention of work, calls them by the name of fruit (ver. 9). But at ver. 11, speaking of sinful actions, he not only calls them works (as here), but pronounces them 'fruitless.' Why the works of the flesh are spoken of in the plural, but those of the Spirit in the singular (fruit), is pointed out by the same eminent writer, Sermon. p. 598, § 37.—ἀγάπη, χαρὰ, &c. Ἀγάπη is placed first, as being the germ of all virtues, and a general virtue comprehending many particular ones; being the love of God, and of man for God's sake. 'Love (says Bp. Sanderson) is so comprehensive a grace, that it includes all the rest, and so is the fulfilling of the whole law (Rom. xiii. 10). There is a thread of love which runs through all the particular duties and offices of a Christian's life, and strings them, like so many rich pearls, in one chain.' With the present enumeration of graces compare a similar one at 1 Tim. vi. 11.—By χαρὰ many eminent Expositors understand, 'a rejoicing in the happiness of others,' as opposed to envy and malevolence (see ver. 21), which are works of the flesh. But it would rather seem to mean, what the Apostle more fully expresses elsewhere, Rom. xiv. 17, by χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι ἀγίῳ, 'joy in the Holy Ghost,' and 1 Thess. i. 6, χαρὰ Πνεύματος ἀγίου, and what St Peter (1 Epist. i. 8) calls a 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' Thus forming, with the peace just afterwards spoken of, two of the several particulars enumerated in the above passage of Rom. xiv. 17, 'the kingdom of heaven is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.'—Again, by εἰρήνη, thus closely associated with χαρὰ, may best be understood, not merely (as some have explained) a peaceable temper of mind, as opposed to ἔρις, θυμὸς, δυσχερασίαι, αἰσίστις; but that peace (elsewhere called by the Apostle, Phil. iv. 7, 'the peace of God') which naturally evinces itself in a peaceable spirit (see James iii. 17); that peace within which it has been well said is peace with all men.—By χρηστ. is denoted benignity, affability; by ἀγαθ. that kind-heartedness which delights in doing good. Πίστες is variously interpreted. It may denote (as most recent Commentators suppose) fidelity and integrity, which is a not unfrequent sense of the word. From the context, however, it would seem to mean that modification of fidelity which consists in sincerity. Finally, ἐγκράτεια denotes, in a general way, the governance of the appetites and passions.

23. κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων, &c.] Meaning, 'Against such dispositions as those above-mentioned, no law, whether the law of Moses, or that of nature, is directed; and to these neither can have reference, being not promulgated against virtue, but vice.'

24. After having enumerated the various effects both of the flesh and the spirit, the Apostle now proceeds to show that Christians may, and ought, to avoid the works of the flesh, and follow the works of the spirit. To which he afterwards subjoins an exhortation to shun those works of the flesh to which the Galatians were especially prone, namely, strifes and contentions, and the vices from which they spring; and thus he, as it were, returns to the beginning of his whole exhortation.—οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c. Here is tacitly encountered an objection; q. d. 'How can we, encompassed with the frailties of the flesh, forsake the works thereof, and follow

α Rom. 8. 5. ἐσταύρωσαν σὺν τοῖς παθήμασι καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις. 25 α Εἰ x Phil. 2. 3. ζῶμεν πνεύματι, πνεύματι καὶ στοιχῶμεν. 26 x Μὴ γινώμεθα κενόδοξοι, ἀλλήλους προκαλούμενοι, ἀλλήλοις φθονοῦντες.
 VI. 1 Ἀδελφοί, ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ ἄνθρωπος ἐν τινι παραπτώματι, ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοὶ καταρτίζετε τὸν τοιοῦτον ἐν πνεύματι α 1 Thess. 5. 14. πρᾶότητος σκοπῶν σεαυτὸν, καὶ σὺ πειρασθῆς. 2 α Ἀλλή-1 John 4. 21. λων τὰ βάρη βαστάζετε, καὶ οὕτως ἀναπληρώσατε τὸν νόμον β 1 Cor. 8. 2. τοῦ Χριστοῦ. 3 β Εἰ γὰρ δοκεῖ τις εἶναι τι, μηδὲν ὢν, ἑαυτὸν γ 1 Cor. 11. 28. φρεναπατᾷ. 4 γ τὸ δὲ ἔργον ἑαυτοῦ δοκιμαζέτω ἕκαστος, καὶ δ 3 Cor. 12. 5. τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν μόνον τὸ καύχημα ἔξει, καὶ οὐκ εἰς τὸν ἕτερον

the motions of the spirit?' To which the answer is, that we can, and must, otherwise we are not Christ's, and are not to expect to inherit the kingdom of heaven. (Crellius.) This, then, is the test whether men really belong to Christ or not:—'that they do crucify,' &c.

25. α [ζῶμεν πνεύματι, &c.] The connexion is evidently with the verse preceding. Now as there St. Paul says, 'they only are really Christ's who thus crucify the flesh [whether they profess to have the Spirit or not], so here he means to say, 'If, then, we profess to be living by the Spirit, we must show it by acting, not merely talking, conformably thereto, and thus evincing the fruits of the Spirit.' On the term στοιχ. see Rom. iv. 12, and note.

26. μὴ γινώμεθα κενόδοξοι, &c.] q. d. 'And as a proof that we are living by it, let us abstain from a vain-glorious spirit.' Thus cautioning them against that pride and conceit to which he knew they were too prone, and whence arose envyings, detractions, and contentions; though here he chiefly refers to their conduct in spiritual matters and religious communications.

VI. Contemplating the probability that there would, notwithstanding his earnest injunctions, be breaches of the foregoing rules, the Apostle subjoins an admonition to certain persons who, however spiritually-minded, had not yet mortified the desire of vain-glory, but indulged their vanity by censoriousness and spiritual pride.

1. ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ, &c.] 'If any person be overtaken in and surprised into a fault,' do you, οἱ πνευματικοὶ (i. e. who possess the spiritual gifts mentioned at iii. 5, and are, consequently, advanced in Christian knowledge), and who are (agreeably to the above admonition) walking by the Spirit (those described a little before, ch. v. 25; not a few of whom had probably often the gifts and always the graces of the Spirit), καταρτ. Such, being aware of the doctrine set forth above, ch. v. 17, and in several other parts of the Apostle's writings of the same character, would be ready to make due allowance for an erring brother, considering their own liability to temptations, and would know how to succour those that are being tempted. Of course, this designation would comprehend all the true and living members of Christ's Church in Galatia.—Καταρτίζ. is for διορθοῦσθαι or ἐπανορθοῦσθαι; meaning, 'restore him to a right sense of duty, and thereby to a right conduct. On the nature of the term I have already treated at 1 Cor. i. 10, and elsewhere. The metaphor is derived from 'setting right a dislocated limb,' there being an allusion to the erring member of Christ's body, the Church. Now this is directed to be done ἐν πνεύμ. πρᾶστ., which evidently signifies 'with a spirit and temper of mildness.'—σκοπῶν σεαυτὸν, &c., meaning, 'each of you considering thyself, lest thou also be [so] tempted [as to fall in like manner].' Comp. 1 Cor. x. 12, 13.

2. ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστ. meaning, 'charitably bear with each other's infirmities and faults;' called βάρη as being burdensome not only to the person himself (see Pa. xxxviii. 4), but to others his associates. Comp. Rom. xv. 1, and note; 1 Thess. v. 14, and infra v. 6.—καὶ οὕτως ἀναπλ., &c. The full sense is, 'And thus fulfil [as ye will do] the precept of Christ, which enjoins us to love one another' (as in John xiii. 34. xv. 12); thus also following his example. 'The best motive to indulgence towards others is the sense of our own weakness; he that thinks he is something, i. e. to be free, as regards himself, of all βάρη, deceives himself. Hence the exhortation to self-examination, which teaches humility, while it shows that each has enough to bear in his own burden. Thus, while all bear the burden of all, the whole body is held together by the bond of love.' (Olsh.)

3. αἱ γὰρ δοκεῖ, &c.] The argument (as suggested by γὰρ) is, that 'this self-conceit is useless; for it does not really make a man the greater: he only deceives himself [not others, much less God].'—In μηδὲν ὢν there is a popular form of expression to denote 'nothing comparable to what he thinks himself, or claims to be thought,' and, in one sense, nothing at all, as not having learnt to discharge the fundamental duties of humility and charity.—φρεναπ. is a word only found in St. Paul's writings, and prob. provincial. The sense is that of ἐπατῶν καρδίαν αὐτοῦ in a kindred passage of James i. 26.

4, 5. To prevent so fatal a mistake, and effectually dissipate the delusion, the Apostle bids them, instead of censuring the failings of others, to examine and try their own actions, by the test of God's laws. The words καὶ τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν—τὸν ἕτερον are variously interpreted. Many eminent Expositors take it to be, 'let him keep his boasting to himself alone, and not extend it to others.' But the common interpretation is, with some modification, more natural, and agreeable to the words following, i. e. 'Thus he will have matter of glorying, or rejoicing, in reference to himself, and not to others;' i. e. by comparing himself with others.

δ' ἕκαστος γὰρ τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον βαστάσει. ὁ κοινωνεῖτω δὲ ὁ κατηχούμενος τὸν λόγον τῷ κατηχούντι ἐν πάσιν ἀγαθοῖς.
 7 Μὴ πλανᾶσθε Θεὸς οὐ μυκτηρίζεται. Ὁ γὰρ ἐὰν σπείρῃ ἄνθρωπος, τοῦτο καὶ θερίσει. ὅτι ὁ σπείρων εἰς τὴν σάρκα ἑαυτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς θερίσει φθοράν ὁ δὲ σπείρων εἰς τὸ πνεῦμα, ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος θερίσει ζωὴν αἰώνιον. 9 Ὁ δὲ καλὸν

d Pa. 64. 12.
 Jer. 17. 10.
 & 22. 19.
 Matt. 16. 27.
 Rom. 2. 6.
 & 14. 12.
 1 Cor. 2. 8.
 2 Cor. 8. 10.
 Rev. 3. 22.
 & 22. 13.
 e 1 Cor. 9. 7.
 11, 14.
 f 2 Cor. 9. 6.
 g Thess. 2. 12.

5. ἕκαστος—βαστάσει] These words admit of two senses, corresponding to the two interpretations of the latter part of the preceding verse. By the one they will import, 'Every one will find frailties enow of his own to wrestle with;' by the other, 'Every man will bear his own burden;' i. e. 'his own burden alone, not another's;' and give his account thereof at the last day. Consequently, we are not to busy ourselves about the burdens of others, nor are we to endeavour to lighten our own by making that of our neighbour heavier; but to mind solely our own business. Φορτ. βαστ. is for αλτίαν ἔχειν, as in Thucyd. iv. 114.

6. Hitherto Paul has turned chiefly, or espec., to the Teachers—or, at least, along with the laics: he now addresses himself to the laics alone, and enjoins a duty espec. incumbent upon them.—Κοιν., 'let him give part of his wealth;' see note on Rom. xii. 13.—τ. λ. τῷ κατ., 'to him who instructs him in the Gospel.'—ἐν πάσιν ἀγ., is for πάντων ἀγαθῶν, which is the usual syntax; see note on Rom. xv. 27, and compare the phrase τρέφειν ἐν πάσιν ἀγαθοῖς, in Aristoph. Acharn. 936, and 2 Tim. i. 18. The meaning of the expression is, 'all things necessary to the attainment of the purpose in view, the dissemination of pure and undefiled religion.'—κατῆχ. is a term properly applicable only to instruction εἰςά voce and elementary; but it is also used of religious instruction generally. See 1 Cor. xiv. 19. Acts xviii. 25.

7. μὴ πλανᾶσθε] A formula generally introductory to some weighty admonition on a subject which the person addressed would be likely to neglect.—Θεὸς οὐ μυκτ., meaning, 'is not [to be] mocked, sneered at, [with impunity].' Both expressions seem to refer to the various subterfuges by which men seek to evade this duty; q. d. 'Deceive not yourselves, nor hope to escape the punishment of God, who will not suffer himself to be defied with impunity.' The words following contain properly a general sentiment, which, however, is here meant first to be applied to the preceding subject; i. e. the support of the teachers (as at 2 Cor. ix. 6); and then, in the next verses, to have a much wider application. There is also a metaphor, wherein the flesh and the spirit are compared to fields, in which the seed of each is sown, and yields crops according to its nature; q. d. 'he who neglects the duty in question, and charity to the poor, aiming only at his own gratification, and seeking only his own interest, will reap the fruits of such a selfish and sensual life, in corruption both temporal and spiritual,—namely, perdition; but he who soweth to the spirit (i. e. what is spiritual generally), by living according to it (see note on vv. 16—25), shall reap [not only the present fruits, in inward consolation, but] everlasting life.' The Apostle had here probably in mind Job iv. 8, οἱ δὲ σπεί-ροντες αὐτὰ (scil. τὰ ἀτοπα) ὀδύνας θηριοῦσιν ἑαυτοῖς, also Hos. x. 13, and Prov. i. 31. It is, however, not merely a Hebrew metaphor, but occurs in pure Greek writers. Comp. Aristoph. ap. Aristot. Rhet. iii. 3. 18, εὐ δὲ ταῦτα αἰσχροῦς μὲν ἱσχυρίας, κακῶς δὲ ἐθίρινας, and Æschyl. Agam. 485, αὐτὸς φρυγῶν καρποῖτο τὴν ἀμαρτίαν.

9. τὸ δὲ καλὸν ποιοῦντες] The Apostle here shows that what he has said is meant to be applied particularly to works of piety and benevolence, such as the support of the teachers of the Gospel, and the relief of the poor. The same agricultural metaphor is continued. Ἐκακεῖν signifies, 'to give up, from being tired out,' as in the more complete phrase ἐκλύεσθαι ταῖς ψυχαῖς in Heb. xii. 3.—For ἐκακαῶμεν Lachm. and Tisch. edit. ἔγκ., from A, B, C, and 2 cursives,—namely, 37 and 39; for 17 was merely an error in Scholz's Edit. for 37, but faithfully copied by Griesb., who, however, did not copy the Professor's et alii (purely imaginary). Tisch., however, did not profit by his prudence, but fell into this Critical trap. In the other passages where the word occurs in the N. T., as Luke xviii. 1. 2 Cor. iv. 1. Eph. iii. 13. 2 Thess. iii. 13, some six or seven uncial MSS. have ἔγκ., the rest ἔκκ., which latter I have, in common with Griesb. and Scholz, retained. Yet, on carefully reconsidering the question, I am now inclined to think that St. Paul wrote ἔγκ. Internal evidence is in its favour, since it has the appearance of being an Alexandrian form, as having place only in the Versions of Symmach. and Theodot., and also Euseb. Præp. Ev. p. 319, though it never came, as did ἔκκ., into the common Greek idiom; the latter term, it seems, keeping it out of use. So that, but for the circumstance of all the most ancient MSS. of the Greek Test. attesting its use by St. Paul, one might be inclined to suspect a corruption in those very few passages where it has place in the above Versions. However, the existence of the word is further attested by the gloss of Hesych., ἔγκακούμεν' ὑφ' οὐμιν, where the former term ought not to have been tampered with by the critics. The corruption falls on the latter word, for which I would read ἀμελοῦμεν, which is supported by the corresponding gloss, ἔκκ. ἀμελοῦμεν. The first two letters were, I suspect, eaten away by a worm, and the third disfigured. As to the letters χ and λ, they are very frequently confounded by the scribes. That Clemens Rom. read ἔγκ. in his copy of the N. T. is almost certain, since he uses the word (by an imitation of what we read in Luke xviii. 1, and Eph. iii. 13) in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, § 2, τὰς προσευχὰς ἡμῶν, ἀναφέρων πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, μὴ, ὡς ἀδύναται, ἔγκακούμεν, 'deficiamus.' Ἐκλύεσθαι signifies 'to be wearied out,' and is often used, both in the Scriptural and Class. writers, as applied to ποιούντες μὴ † ἐκκακῶμεν καιρῷ γὰρ ἰδίῳ θερίσομεν, μὴ ἐκλυόμενοι. 10 <sup>b</sup> Ἄρα οὖν, ὡς καιρὸν ἔχομεν, ἐργαζώμεθα τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς πάντας, μάλιστα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς οἰκείους τῆς πίστεως.

B 2

h Eph. 2. 10.
a 2. 16.
1 Tim. 6. 8.
Heb. 2. 6.
a 6. 10.
1 John 2. 18
—19. & 5. 1.
2 John 5—8.
1 Phil. 2. 18.

11 Ἴδετε πηλίκους ὑμῖν γράμμασιν ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρί. 12 <sup>1</sup> Ὅσοι θέλουσιν εὐπροσώπησαι ἐν σαρκί, οὗτοι ἀναγκάζουσιν ὑμᾶς περιτέμνεσθαι μόνον, ἵνα μὴ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ διώκωνται. 13 οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ † περιτεμνόμενοι αὐτοὶ νόμον φυλάσharvest-work. It refers to that timing out of charity, which the frequent calls on its benevolence and the ungrateful returns it might meet with, would be likely to produce. With this elegant use of μὴ ἐκκακῶμεν and ἐκλυόμεθα as applied to benevolence, I would compare a similar one to the kindred term κάμναι in Eurip. Beller. frag. 28, 2, ξίνοις τ' ἐπηρεαίει, οὐδὲ ἱκαμνεις εἰς φίλων, and Athen. 276, c, οὐκ ἂν ἱκοπίασι τὰ αὐτὰ παρασκευάζουσα. See also 1 Cor. xv. 58. 2 Thes. iii. 13.

10. ἀρα—πίστεως] Ἄρα here is used like ἵστε at 2 Cor. v. 16. Render: 'So then, having these strong motives to sow unto the Spirit, by making pious and charitable contributions, let us do good,' &c. It seems to have been the especial care of the Apostle, in this concluding admonition, to show that the duty was to be performed, not only towards the ministry, but towards Christians in general; and not towards Christians only, but towards all their fellow-creatures.—ὡς καιρὸν ἔχ., 'whilst we have opportunity in this life, and as occasions present themselves.'—ἐργαζ. is a more significant term than ποιεῖν, and implies 'diligence'; denoting, in a word, 'labour of love.'—τοὺς οἰκείους τ. πίστ., lit. 'those connected by the ties of our common faith.' How oik. comes to have this sense, see my Lex. This admonition was not given in vain. So even Julian bears this testimony of Christians: τρίψουσιν ἐι δυσσεβεῖς Γαλιλαῖοι πρὸς τοῖς ἑαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς ἡμετέρων.

11. πηλίκους ὑμῖν γράμμ. ἔγραψ.] These words have not a little perplexed Expositors; several of whom, even from the time of Chrys., take the sense to be, 'See with what great kind of letters (i. e. how mis-shapen),' &c.; a sense, however, which does not well comport with Apostolic gravity, or the reserve traceable through the whole Epistle; not to say, that it may be doubted whether the term πηλ. is capable of such a sense. That it was ever used in such a sense I cannot find the least proof. However, ἴδετε must be rendered 'see'; as being clearly an Imperat; not 'ye see'; and so the Syr. and Vulg. Versions. However, on carefully reconsidering this puzzling question, I see reason to abandon the view which I long entertained. To take γράμματα here for πιστολή, and πηλ. for 'long,' seems to me absolutely inadmissible. Not that Paul might not have used the idiom, occurring at Acts xxviii. 31, and doubtless well known to him; but then he never would have employed such an epithet as πηλ., even if it could mean 'long.' Besides, the Epistle is not long; and the fact itself has nothing to do with the matter in question; for I quite agree with Olsh., that the object of the remark (as in 2 Thes. ii. 2, comp. with iii. 17) is simply to certify the genuineness of the Epistle. I agree with Tholuck and Olsh., that πηλ. is here, as often in later Greek, used for ποιος, 'qualibus.' There is evidently allusion to some peculiarity in the Pauline letters, prob. as being long and uncouth in form, which, however, would, as meant to be suggested, attest the authenticity of this added portion, vv. 11—18; for I agree with Mr. Conyb., that St. Paul does not here say that he wrote the whole Epistle with his own hand. Accordingly, this may be (as Mr. Conyb. supposes) the beginning of the usual autograph postscript, and equiv. to the οὕτω γράφω in 2 Thes. iii. 17. I am the more induced to take this view, because the matter of this postscript is mainly a brief recapitulation of the substance of the Letter itself, in which the Apostle places in a strong contrast his own conduct with that of his Jewish adversaries, the false teachers; and after invoking the blessings of peace, mercy, and grace on those who were walking according to rule, he concludes with dealing a heavy parting blow at his adversaries.

12. ὅσοι θέλουσιν, &c.] q. d. 'It is not I who urge you to the observance of the Mosaic Law, but those who court the gale of popular applause, —they instigate you to it.'—εὐπροσώπ. is by many explained, 'endeavour to please others.' That sense, however, cannot fairly be extracted from the word; which may be best interpreted, 'to make a fair appearance of piety, so as to pass well with the world.'—τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Many recent Commentators interpret this, 'persecutions such as Christ suffered.' But it is far better, with the ancient and most modern Expositors, from Piscator to Borger, to understand, 'the doctrine of the cross,' Christianity being so called by opposition to the Law; and since the death of Christ abrogated the Mosaic Law, and the doctrine of the atonement thereby made for the sins of men effectually excluded the use of circumcision. See the able notes of Calv., Hyper., and Est.

13. οἱ περιτεμν.] Some refer this to the persons who had thus submitted to undergo circumcision; while others, with more propriety, refer it to the Judaizers,—the circumcision Party. For περιτεμν., indeed, many ancient and excellent MSS., and several Fathers and early Editions, have περιτεμνόμενοι, which is edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and by Tisch., ed. 1, who, however, in ed. 2, restored περιτεμν., rightly; since internal evidence is quite against περιτεμν., it having every appearance of an alteration of Critics, who mistook the sense, and were not aware of the idiomatic use of the Present. The persons in question did not, indeed, intend to impose on their votaries the Mosaic law; but, maintaining the use of circumcision, as well as baptism, by the Gentiles, intended (it would seem) to place their votaries

σουσιν ἀλλὰ θέλουσιν ὑμᾶς περιτέμενσθαι, ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχῆσονται. <sup>14</sup> <sup>k</sup> Ἐμοὶ δὲ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι, εἰ <sup>k</sup> Rom. 6. 6. ch. 1. 30.
 μὴ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δι' οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐσταύρωται, καὶ γὰρ τῷ κόσμῳ. <sup>15</sup> <sup>l</sup> Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ <sup>l</sup> 1 Cor. 7. 19. ch. 5. 6. Col. 3. 11.
 Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομὴ τι * ἐστὶν οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. <sup>16</sup> <sup>m</sup> Καὶ ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχήσουσιν, εἰρήνη <sup>m</sup> Ps. 125. 5. Rom. 2. 29. & 4. 12. ch. 3. 20.
 ἐπ' αὐτοὺς καὶ ἔλεος, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

<sup>17</sup> <sup>n</sup> Τοῦ λοιποῦ, κόπους μοι μὴδεὶς παρεχέτω· ἐγὼ γὰρ τὰ <sup>n</sup> 2 Cor. 4. 10. & 11. 22—25. Col. 1. 24.
 στήγματα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω. <sup>18</sup> <sup>h</sup> Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Γαλάτας ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης.

in a sort of midway between proselytes of the gate and proselytes of righteousness, and so to effectually secure the honour of the Law by engrafting the Gospel thereupon. Their motive in so doing was to keep fair with the Jews, and to have to boast of their influence in procuring the reception of the rite of circumcision; for that is the import of the words ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχῆσονται, where the term περιτετημῆναι is to be supplied from περιτέμνεσθαι preceding; 'your circumcised flesh' being equivalent to 'your being circumcised.'

<sup>14</sup> Here ἐμοὶ is emphatical, there being implied a comparison with the Judaizers. Moreover, ἐμοὶ is for ἐμὲ, 'quod attinet ad me,' 'for my part.' The general meaning is this: 'But, for my part, I leave them to glory in a fleshly ordinance. God forbid that I should feel proud of the inculcation of any doctrine, except the plain unmixed one of justification, not by my own merits, but by the atonement of a crucified Redeemer.'—δι' οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος, &c., 'by which (scil. σταυροῦ) doctrine of the cross.'—ἐσταύρωται, meaning, 'is crucified and dead;' i. e. is as nothing to me. By κόσμος we must understand the things of the world,—namely, its riches, honours, and pleasures; equiv. to ὁ κόσμος καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ, Acts xvii. 24. Bp. Middleton, indeed, stumbling at the omission of the Article, and having remarked that whenever in the New Test. κόσμος, the world, occurs in its common acceptance, it has the Article, except here and in 2 Cor. v. 19 (of course, not reckoning passages like Rom. ii. 12, 15, where the omission may be accounted for by his canons), thinks that, in both these passages, the word has somewhat of the nature of a proper name, and can therefore dispense with the Article. He instances Plutarch, p. 470, ὁ δὲ Ζεὺς καὶ Κόσμος, 'Jupiter and World.' And he might have added Shakespeare, 'O World, thy slippery turns!' Since, however, it seems impossible to adopt that view of κόσμος at 2 Cor. v. 19, both on account of its harshness,—I had almost said jejuneity,—and because αὐτοῖς and αὐτῶν immediately follow; so it would seem unsafe to adopt it here, which is also forbidden by the τῷ with κόσμῳ just after.

<sup>15</sup> ἐστὶν] This reading (found in all the MSS. except a very few, as also in many Versions and Fathers) has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; rightly, I think; since the common reading ἐστίν is plainly a gloss, prob. from v. 6. Indeed, the word, as Rinck says, would involve a petitio principii; whereas, with ἐστίν the γὰρ has its force, denoting the reason why he did not boast of circumcision, as did his adversaries; 'for circumcision is nothing.'—ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. The full sense is, 'But the being a new creature, moral regeneration is every thing, all in all, the substance of the Gospel.' See note on 2 Cor. v. 17.

<sup>16</sup> τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχ.] 'as many as shall walk by this rule.' On the force of στοιχ. see note supra v. 25, and on καν. see note on 2 Cor. x. 13. By 'this rule,' the Apostle means the doctrine just mentioned, of salvation by grace, and the necessity of moral regeneration. For στοιχῆσ., however, MSS. A, C, D, E, F, G, and a few cursives, have στοιχοῦσιν, edited by Lachm., and by Tisch., ed. 1; but in his 2nd ed. he has restored στοιχῆσ., with reason, since the other is manifestly a Critical gloss, to improve the Grecism. It is in vain to appeal to the authority of ancient Versions in a case like this, where Versions have no weight. Thus our common English Translators rendered 'walk,' though they had στοιχῆσουσιν in their copies. For τὸν Ἰερ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant the true spiritual Israel. See note on Rom. ix. 6. In ἐλθέτω ἰπ' αὐτοὺς we have not an assertory, but a precatory form, nearly allied to that of benediction, by bidding adieu. The Epistle probably was meant to terminate here, just as the Epistle to the Ephesians concludes with ἐλθέτω τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, and v. 17 was added afterwards.

<sup>17</sup> κόπους μ. μ. παρεχ.] The full sense seems to be, 'let me have no more trouble, by either my doctrine, or my sincerity and integrity being questioned; for [of the latter] I bear strong attestation in the στήγματα, or wounds of former scourgings, beatings, and stonings, of the Jews and others, for the sake of Christ and his Gospel.'—βαστάζω is here used for παρεφέρω, and only means that 'this is, wherever he goes, an evidence of his sincerity.'

<sup>18</sup> μετὰ τοῦ πν. ὑ.] meaning, as it is said at Phil. iv. 7, 'your hearts and minds.'

ΠΑΤΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΕΦΕΣΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

<sup>a</sup> Rom. 1. 1. I. <sup>1</sup> ΠΑΤΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος
<sup>1</sup> Cor. 1. 2. Θεοῦ, τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ καὶ <sup>b</sup> πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ
<sup>2</sup> Cor. 1. 1. Gal. 1. 1. b Acts xii. & xx.

THIS has been pronounced the richest and noblest of the Epistles; and certainly, in fulness of matter, depth of doctrine, sublimity of metaphor, animated fervour of style, pious exultation (occasionally rising to what has been called rapture), and Apostolic earnestness of exhortation, it so deeply interests the heart, that if the reader have a spark of regard for the Gospel, it will blow it into a flame; no wonder, since 'in this (Coleridge observes) the divinest composition of man, we have contained every doctrine of Christianity; first, those doctrines peculiar to Christianity, and then those precepts common to it with natural religion.' The reason for its peculiar character, as above pointed out, seems to be that assigned by Thomas Scott,—namely, that 'the Apostle's heart was much enlarged in writing to those whom he had no occasion to rebuke, and with whom he was not under the necessity of engaging in controversy; so that entire confidence of affection took place of the caution, reserve, or sharpness, which were requisite in the three preceding Epistles.' Accordingly, none of the reproofs there so frequent are found in the present; which was written, it would seem, to confirm the Ephesian and other Asiatic churches in the true faith and practice of the Gospel; of which the Apostle first (i. 1, 2) shows the great end,—that it was meant for all mankind, and that he himself was appointed the preacher of it to the Gentiles. Then, after expatiating on the love of God, the dignity of Christ, and the excellence of the Gospel, he warns his converts against the evil practices in which they had formerly lived, and which, as Christians, they had renounced; and while he guards them against errors, he establishes them in the great and fundamental truths of the Gospel, fortifies their minds to contend for, and persevere in, the faith of Christ, and animates them in their Christian warfare. Finally, he earnestly exhorts them to a zealous discharge of the relative duties, and all others becoming their Christian profession. Thus much may suffice for the Contents of the Epistle.—As to the time and place of writing, the question is too extensive and disputed a one to be discussed within the brief space to which the plan of my work confines these Introductions. That this Epistle, as well as those to the Colossians, and Philippians, and Philemon, belong to nearly the same period, A.D. 62 and 63, there is no doubt; but, as to the exact order, there is much doubt, 'et adhuc sub judice lis est.' From the discussions, however, of Dr. Davidson it would seem, that the four were written during the Apostle's imprisonment at Rome, and the present Epistle probably at Rome, A.D. 62. But the question is closely united with another, yet more difficult to settle, as to the connexion between the Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians,—namely, as to the order in which those Epistles were written,—far too extensive a question to be here discussed at large, and for which I beg to refer my readers to Dr. Davidson. Great names are arrayed on both sides of the questions, especially for the priority of the Epistle to the Ephesians. The arguments for the former view are very numerous, and one or two of them are very strong. Those for the latter are fewer in number, but are, generally speaking, more cogent. But on both views, some are rather gratuitous presumptions, than arguments. Thus Mr. Coleridge (ubi supra) is of opinion that 'the Epistle to the Colossians is the overflowing of the Apostle's mind upon the same subject.' It may be so; but the diversity of scope is adverse to that view, the one to the Colossians being very much polemical. The view taken by Neander,—'that in the Epistle to the Colossians the Apostle's thoughts exhibit themselves in their original formation and connexion, as they were called forth by his opposition to that sect, whose sentiments and practices he combats,' is perhaps more likely to be the true one. I am, indeed, inclined to agree with Dr. Davidson, that the preponderance of argument seems in favour of the priority of the Colossian Epistle; and that a comparison of the internal structure and peculiarities of both seems to intimate the originality of that addressed to the Colossians.

Ἰησοῦ <sup>2</sup> χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ <sup>3</sup> Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

<sup>3</sup> Εὐλογητὸς ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ

2 Cor. 1. 2.
Gal. 1. 3.
Tit. 1. 4.
1 Pet. 1. 2.
2 Cor. 1. 3.
1 Pet. 1. 3.
Rev. 4. 9-11.

I cannot, however, go so far as to aver, with him, that 'the thoughts and language have something about them, which shows that they proceeded from the writer before the similar thoughts and language of the Ephesian Epistle. This subject, however, is partly connected with the genuineness and authenticity of the present Epistle, which, though recognized by the unanimous voice of antiquity, and confirmed by the suffrage of all the greatest names in theology of modern times, has recently been denied by Evanson and Usteri, and more recently by Baur, DeWette, and others; of these, the three former names are entitled to no attention, as being all but unbelievers. Of course, far more attention is due to DeWette, as being a professed believer, though it is to be feared, a decided misbeliever. Be that as it may, his attack on the genuineness of the Epistle before us is not only most deliberate, but most vehement and bitter. It is unnecessary for me to notice, much less refute, his arguments, since that has been done with great ability and success by Dr. Davidson, to whose remarks I refer my readers, and I content myself with pointing attention to my note on iii. 5, for a refutation of one of the most presumptuous, not to say profane, of DeWette's arguments. I am the more induced to bring under the attention of the Christian public this unmeasured attack of DeWette, and the masterly refutation of it by Dr. Davidson, because the attack was one of the most determined and pertinacious on record—one directed by a most minute and microscopic examination, in which nothing seems to have escaped him; though, after all, as Dr. Davidson remarks, 'utterly ineffective and impotent in the result.' 'What minute verbal criticism, and Herculean industry, do men of DeWette's class (to use Dr. D.'s words) squander away in trying to show something which cannot be proved!' If it be (as Dr. D. thinks) 'instructive to look at the means by which men can persuade themselves that a writing virtually genuine is supposititious,' it can only be in the way of warning. As to the date, Commentators, are neither agreed on the date (varying from A. D. 57 or 58 to 62 or 63; perhaps the date 62 may be the most exact), nor even on the Church to which it was addressed. Some think it was meant for the Christians at Laodicea; and, indeed, the Epistle to the Laodiceans is referred to by the Apostle in Col. iv. 16; while others, to reconcile conflicting testimonies, suppose it to have been a circular letter, intended for all the churches of Asia Minor. Be that as it may, there is not a shadow of external proof that it was not addressed to the Ephesians (see the notes of Bp. Middleton and Rinck), though doubtless intended for the use also of the other churches of Asia Minor. As to the alleged internal evidence, that it was not written to the Ephesians, it is inconclusive, being merely founded on a misconception of certain words and expressions that occur in the Epistle; and which, when properly interpreted, rather confirm the common opinion, supported by all the MSS., and the almost unvaried evidence of antiquity, that it was written to the Ephesians. As to the difficulty occasioned by the seeming mention of an Epistle to the Laodiceans, it admits, it would seem, of a ready and satisfactory solution. The Apostle is, with much probability, supposed to have directed the Ephesians, through Tychicus, the bearer of the Epistle, to send a copy of it to the Laodiceans, which should also be afterwards transmitted to the Colossians. I must not conclude without offering a few remarks on the style and composition of this Epistle, since they seem called for by the perverse misrepresentations and disingenuous animadversions of DeWette, whose charges against it of degeneracy, poverty of thought and ideas with a multiplicity of words, are utterly groundless. True is the remark of Dr. Davidson, that 'the language is rich and copious, but it is every where pregnant with meaning. Not a word is superfluous. If, therefore, the Epistle has more words than that sent to the Colossians, it has more ideas.' The peculiarity of style, as respects the unusual length of the sentences and involution of the construction, is easily accounted for, by adverting to the circumstances, above referred to, under which the Epistle was written. The Apostle had, we see, no polemic purpose in view, as in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. Hence, as observes Dr. Davidson, 'he allowed the full stream of his thoughts to flow forth in an uninterrupted course, without much regard to periodic structure. So various were the aspects and mutual relations of those great thoughts, that they could scarcely avoid being presented in periods of many members linked in, the one with the other. In other Epistles the periods are shorter, and better fitted in succession to one another. They are of more limited extent and definite form, because the writer had some definite aim. But the character of the present leaves the Apostle at full liberty to speak of the blessings treasured up in Christ, and freely bestowed on his people, with unrestrained and elevated enlargement. His ideas on the subject of salvation are too big to be cramped by the confines of customary periods. With exhaustless copiousness they gush forth in manifold abundance, disdaining the logical links of argumentation. While, therefore, the style is elevated, simply because it is the vehicle of lofty thoughts—while there is a copiousness of words, because the richness of Divine grace is depicted—there is irregularity and intricacy in the syntactical structure.' To the disentanglement of these perplexed constructions and involutions of composition, I have espec. addressed myself; with what success I leave it to my readers to decide.

I. 1. διὰ Θεῶν. See 1 Cor. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. 1, and notes.—τοῖς ἀγίοις. See note on Rom. i. 7.—καὶ πιστοῖς. This term seems to be exegetical of the preceding; q. d. 'even to all true believers in Jesus Christ.'

3-14 inclusive form one very long sentence, overcharged with matter, arranged imperfectly, of which flaw, I could adduce, however, several ex. from Thucyd. The Apostle's mind was, we may

6 Rom. 8. 29. Χριστοῦ, ὁ εὐλογήσας ἡμᾶς ἐν πάσῃ εὐλογίᾳ πνευματικῇ ἐν τοῖς 20.
 ch. 5. 27. ἐπουρανίοις ἐν Χριστῷ. 4° καθὼς ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς ἐν αὐτῷ πρὸ
 Col. 1. 12. καταβολῆς κόσμου, εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώμους κατενώπιον
 2 Thess. 2. αὐτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ. 5° προορίσας ἡμᾶς εἰς υἰοθεσίαν διὰ Ἰησοῦ 18.
 1 Tim. 1. 9. Χριστοῦ εἰς αὐτὸν, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ,
 1 Pet. 1. 1, 2. ὅς ἐστις ἐπαυὼν δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ἐν ᾗ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς
 2 Rom. 8. 15.
 Gal. 4. 6.
 2 Matt. 5. 17.
 2 17. 8.
 Col. 1. 12.

be sure, so full of his subject (espec. in reflecting on the great things which God had done for him, and by him), that he was not likely to be very exact as to his style; indeed, he scarcely ever is at the beginning of his Epistles.—εὐλογ. ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατήρ, &c. The sense of these words is the same as that of the similar ones at Rom. xv. 6, where see note. As to the accumulation of oropate terms in εὐλογητός, εὐλογήσας, and εὐλογία, it may be observed, that in composition that was by the ancients, espec. the early writers, rather sought after as a beauty, than avoided as a blemish.—ὁ εὐλογήσας—πνευμ., who hath blessed us with (i.e. hath liberally bestowed upon us) every spiritual blessing. The Commentators in general are not agreed whether this is to be understood of the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit, or his sanctifying graces; whatever may conduce to the consolation of our souls here, or prepare them for glory hereafter. There is no reason why both senses should not have place. As to the ellipse. In ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, many Expositors suppose τόποις, others of note πράγμασι, 'matters,' meaning 'things relating to heaven,' and tending to fit us for it. See the able notes of Calv. and Hyper., in whose view I still continue to agree. Though Est. argues strongly, and not quite unsuccessfully, in favour of τόποις. The expression ἐν τοῖς ἐπ., he observes, occurs no where out of this Epistle, in which we have it 5 times, and in 4 out of the 5 as used of places; that, however, affords no reason why the term should not be used of things. How it happened that the Apostle, in this and the twin Epistle, chose to say so much of the heavens and heavenly places, as also of angels, principalities, and powers, &c., was, that many things fabulous and quite contrary to sound doctrine had been delivered to the people by Simon Magus and his disciples. Against other pestilent errors, the Apostle, in this Epistle, and in that to the Colossians, diligently inculcates the vast eminence of Christ above the angels, teaching that he is the Head of all things. Suitably to this view, Est. thinks the words ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. are to be closely connected with those immediately preceding, and he assigns to them this sense, 'quā benedictiones spirituali provehimur ad celestia, ubi caput nostrum Christus ad dexteram Dei constitutus est.'

4. The Apostle now adverts to the nature of these spiritual and heavenly things.—ἐξελέξατο—ἐν αὐτῷ, 'hath elected us through him,' viz., as the next verse shows, to be his peculiar family and people.—ἐν ἀγάπῃ, i.e. 'through the exercise of Christian charity.' The words ἐν ἀγάπῃ have been variously arranged; but I am still of opinion that they connect more naturally with the preceding, than with the following context, as may be imagined from the circumstance, that v. 5 is exegetical of v. 4, and therefore it was likely that as the portion to be explained commenced with the principal word ἐξελέξατο, so the explanatory one would with προορίσας. To advert to the import of the words, we may, with some, who refer them to ἐξελέξατο, interpret, 'out of his love to us.' Yet that would rather require ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ. And it is more natural, with others (as Pisc., Eras., Beza, Crell., Calv., and others), to connect them with ἀμώμους, and render, 'by, or in, the exercise of Christian charity;' intimating (as Calvin observes) that the perfection of the faithful is seated in charity or love. Not because God requires such charity alone, but because it is the proof of fear of God, and of obedience to the whole Law. Thus by ἀγάπῃ is here meant such a love to man as arises from a love and fear of God.

5. The election of the foregoing verse is here further represented by predestination to sonship.—προορίσας ἡμᾶς εἰς υἰοθεσίαν. This is, Korpe says, for προορίσας ἐκποιήσασθαι ἡμᾶς τέκνα αὐτοῦ, but it is rather for προορ. υἰοθεσίᾳ ἡμᾶς αὐτῷ, and that for εἰς αὐτόν. This υἰοθεσία had formerly appertained to the Jews only (Rom. ix. 4, comp. v. 8), but was now extended, through Christ, to all believers, as denoting that relation in which Christians especially stand to God. Thus the sense is: 'And this election consists in having from eternity decreed for us the privilege of being his sons.'—κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τ. θεοῦ, 'according to his own mere good pleasure;' a very strong expression; on the full force of which, see Hyperius, Calvin, Grot., and Vorst. Suffice it here to say, that St. Paul meant thereby to effectually exclude all claims of human merit. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are, however, agreed that the election and predestination here spoken of solely relate to God's eternal purpose of bestowing the privilege of adoption (on which see note on Rom. viii. 15) upon the Ephesians and other sincere believers in Christ. Nay, even candid Calvinistic Commentators admit that the Apostle has here no reference to the personal election of individuals, but to the election of whole communities and nations,—even all the Gentiles, whom God was pleased to admit to the benefits of the Gospel.

6. Having assured them of God's eternal purpose to call them to the knowledge of the Gospel and the privileges of the Church of God, he proceeds to show them how great an instance this was of the mercy and goodness of God. (Chandl.)—εἰς ἐπαυὼν δόξης τῆς χάρ. α. I am now of opinion that it is better not to take δόξης as put, by Hebraism, for its cognate Adj., but to allow it to retain its prominence. And accordingly I would render, with Hyper., 'ut laudetur gloria gratiæ ipsius;' i.e. as Est. explains, 'ut ipse laudetur et glorificetur in tanto beneficio gratiæ nobis collato.' So also Hyper. thus: 'Ut pro tanta bonitate omnis ad ipsum solum laus redeat, atque gratia ista immensaque beneficentia per-

ἐν τῷ ἡγαπημένῳ <sup>7</sup> ἢ ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, τὴν ἀφεσιν τῶν παραπτωμάτων, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ <sup>8</sup> ἧς ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς ἡμᾶς, ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει, <sup>9</sup> ἡ γνωρίσας ἡμῖν τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ, ἣν προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ, <sup>10</sup> εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν, ἀνακεφαλαιώ-

<sup>7</sup> Tim. 1. 9. Tit. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20. <sup>8</sup> Gen. 42. 10. Dan. 9. 24. Gal. 4. 4. <sup>9</sup> Acts 20. 26. Rom. 2. 4. 1 Cor. 2. 7. 2 Cor. 1. 14. Phil. 4. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 18. Heb. 9. 12. 1 Rom. 16. 26. ch. 3. 9. Col. 1. 26. 1 Cor. 1. 20.

petuō apud nos celebretur.' Comp. 1 Pet. iv. 11.—ἐν ᾧ ἔχαρ. ἡμᾶς, lit. 'wherein he hath imparted his grace to us;' meaning, as Theophyl. and Euseb. explain, 'hath poured out his grace upon us, so that by making us wise and prudent he might make known to us the mystery of his will; thus denoting the absolutely free bounty of God in this acceptance.'—ἐν τῷ ἡγαπ., 'by or through the Beloved One;' a title of our Lord, like ὁ Χριστός (as in Luke ii. 26, πρὶν ἢ ἰδῆν τὸν Χριστὸν Κυρίου), or what Aquila substitutes for it in the Old Test., ὁ Ἠλειμνός. It appears, then, to have been not a mere appellation, but (like Χριστός) to have denoted office or dignity, with allusion to the words of the voice from heaven, Matt. iii. 17, 'This is my beloved Son.' Thus it may be compared with ὁ μονογενὴς in John i. 14, 18. iii. 18. 1 John iv. 9, where the full sense is, 'only and most dearly beloved.'

7. ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν—αἵματος.] Render: 'through whom we possess (= to whom we owe) the redemption [procured] by his blood.' So Rom. iii. 24, διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χρ. 'I. (where see note), and also Heb. xi. 35, οὐ προσδεξάμενοι τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν.—τὴν ἀφεσιν τ. παραπτ., 'the forgiveness of our transgressions.' See my Lex. in v.

8. ἧς] for ἧ (by a common Grecism, in which the relative is attracted by the antecedent), if, at least, we take ἐπερίσσεω, with many modern Expositors, in a neutral sense, 'in which he hath renewed his abundant goodness to us;' but if, with the ancient and some modern ones, in an active one, 'to make to abound' (as in 2 Cor. iv. 15. ix. 8), the ἧς will be for ἧν, meaning, 'which he has bountifully bestowed upon us.'—ἐν π. σοφ. καὶ φρον. may, with some, be construed with γνωρίσας which follows, but better with ἐπερίσσεω which precedes. If the words be referred to God, the sense will be, 'in the exercise of the deepest wisdom [of plan] and prudence [of execution].' If to the Ephesians, it will be, 'in imparting to us the wisdom and prudence necessary to understand the Gospel.' Either method is agreeable to the context, but the latter seems preferable, both on account of the parallel passage of Colossians i. 9, and because the words seem meant to further explain this sense.—ἐν ἐν πάσῃ σοφ. καὶ φρον. we have a brief form of expression for what, expanded, would stand thus: αἰς ἡμᾶς, πληρωθέντας πάσῃ σοφίᾳ (see Rom. i. 29. 2 Cor. vii. 4). As it is, the ἐν carries with it, by implication, the sense, 'endued with,' i. e. filled with all wisdom. So Rom. xv. 14, πεπληρωμένοι πάσης γνώσεως. I have in this ninth Edition pointed off the words, because they have a sense independent of the foregoing, though they form a sort of vinculum to unite what is said of redemption by free grace, through the blood of Christ, with the means for effecting it, by the calling of the Gentiles, and the promulgation of the Gospel dispensation; to profit by which it was necessary that those who entered it should be endued with all necessary wisdom and understanding, both by the written or the preached word, and by the Holy Spirit; which latter means is adverted to in the parallel passage of Colossians.

9. γνωρίσας.] 'by having made known to us [in the Gospel].—τὸ μυστ. τοῦ θεοῦ. a., 'his will or purpose long hidden in the mind of God;' namely, for the salvation of all men, Gentiles as well as Jews. Comp. Rom. xi. 25, and note.—ἣν (scil. εὐδοκίαν) προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ, i. e. 'according to his own free-will and determinate purpose in himself.' Mr. Rose, on Park. Lex. in v. προστίθημι, observes, after Schleus., 'that if the reading here be αὐτῷ, the second clause expresses no more than what is conveyed by αὐτοῦ in the first.' And he adds, that 'if we read αὐτῷ (so Mr. Rose meant, or ought, to have written) the words must be referred to Christ our Saviour.' No various reading, however, has place on αὐτῷ, which seems to be found in every MS. However, the sense of the second clause will not be quite that of the first, if for αὐτοῦ we read αὐτοῦ, which I doubt not the Apostle wrote; and, though no MS. is recorded as having that reading, yet such minute diversities often elude the most careful collators. The Syriac Translator seems to have had it in his copy; and so prob. had the Vulgate, for I suspect that he wrote 'voluntatis ejus secundum bene placitum suum': though the present copies have, by a negligent transmutation on the part of the copyists, 'voluntatis suae, beneplacitum ejus;' for which Jerome reads suum, which the context requires. The ejus there was meant for voluntatis.

10. αἰς οἰκονομίαν.] The Common Version here cannot stand; for there is no ὅτι in any Greek MS., nor a vestige of ἐν οἰκ. Our Translators may seem to have the support of the Vulgate, in dispensatione. But I doubt not that Jerome wrote 'dispensationē' (i. e. 'dispensatione'). So Schaaf., after the Polygl. and others, in his Version of the Syriac renders most accurately 'in dispensationem plen. temp.' And the Syriac words are capable of no other rendering. Mr. Etheridge, and Dr. Murdock, strangely render, 'in the dispensation,' following, as they oft. do, the Vulg. and Engl. Versions. It cannot be denied, that αἰς involves no little obscurity, which cannot be removed by arbitrarily assigning to αἰς the sense 'donec' (with Calv., Musc., and Est.); for that sense would require ἕως, and then it would not be sufficiently suitable. Nor am I now satisfied with understanding the αἰς of purpose; q. d. '[And this was done] for the purpose of displaying the plan of (or respecting) the fulness of time;' i. e. the plan to be put in execution at the fulness of time,—namely, that k Acts 26.

18.
Rom. 8. 17.
Col. 1. 12.
1 Rom. 8. 15,
16.
& 10. 14—17.
2 Cor. 1. 22.
& 5. 5.
ch. 8. 20.
2 Tim. 2. 19.
Rev. 7. 2.
m Exod. 19.
5.
Deut. 7. 6.
& 14. 2.
& 28. 12.
Rom. 8. 22.
1 Pet. 2. 9.

σασθαι τὰ πάντα ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, τὰ [τε] ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· <sup>k</sup> ἐν αὐτῷ, <sup>11</sup> ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἐκληρώθημεν, προορισθέντες κατὰ πρόθεσιν τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐνεργούντος κατὰ τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, <sup>12</sup> εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς εἰς ἕπαινον [τῆς] δόξης αὐτοῦ, τοὺς προηλπικότες ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ· <sup>13</sup> ἐν ᾧ καὶ ὑμεῖς, (ἀκούσαντες τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς σωτηρίας ὑμῶν), ἐν ᾧ καὶ πιστεύσαντες ἐσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ, <sup>14</sup> ὅς ἐστιν ἄρραβὼν τῆς κλη-

of bringing all things together in Christ at the fullness of time. It seems better to connect the words εἰς οἰκονομίαν τ. πλ. τ. κ., with the preceding ones, τὸ μυστήριον αὐτοῦ τὸ κακρυμμένον, supposing the εἰς to have the force of reference, 'as to, respecting,' thus rendering εἰς οἰκονομίαν—καιρῶν 'as regarded a dispensation of the fullness of time,' ὅτε ἤλθε τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου (as it is expressed at Gal. iv. 4), 'tempus maturum ac opportunum.' In the next words, ἀνακεφαλ., &c., the infin. ἀνακεφ. is one serving for explication, in apposition with οἶκον.; and the sense is, 'namely, that of bringing together into one body, and uniting all beings under one head, CHRIST.' See Col. i. 20. Note-worthy is the use of the expression ἐν Πνεύματι εἶναι or γίγνεσθαι, 'to be under the influence of the Spirit;' by which is implied the being endued therewith.—τὰ πάντα is for τοὺς πάντας; i. e. (by a common idiom) all intelligent beings, meaning both Jews and Gentiles. By τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς are denoted the angels, elsewhere called God's family in heaven, from which his family on earth had been long discovered, but was now to be united with it into one society. Comp. Col. i. 16.

11. ἐν ᾧ ἐκληρώθημεν] Here there is a resumption of the construction at ver. 7, ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν (vv. 10, 11 being parenthetic). Render: 'By, or through whom [I repeat] we have had allotted to us (have obtained) a portion in this heavenly inheritance.' See note on Col. i. 12. The reading, however, on which mainly depends the sense, is disputed. For ἐκληρώθημεν, A, D, E, F, G, but no cursives, have ἐκλήθημεν, which has been received into the text by Griesb. and Lachm., but without reason, as Tisch. saw, who rejects it. The alteration, to remove a difficulty (for such it is) came, I doubt not, from the same class of Critics as those who altered ἱκανόσαντι into καλίσαντι, or subjoined καλίσ. at the kindred passage in Col. i. 12, where, as here, Lachm. received καλίσ. In both these passages Tisch., rightly, retains the usual reading, which is here supported by the most ancient of the MSS., the Vat. B. The framers of the reading prob. intended by 'the calling' thus denoted that 'effectual calling,' whereby sinners, savingly believing and obeying, have the heavenly inheritance secured to them. See Rom. xi. 11, comp. with 2 Thess. i. 11. That the ἐκλογή was thought by the Theologians of that day to imply the κληρονομία, is plain from Chrys. and Theoph. here.

12. εἰς τὸ εἶναι—Χριστῷ] Render: 'In order that we, who first hoped and trusted in Christ, should be to the praise of his glory,' i. e. 'an occasion for his praise and glorification.'

Locke and many recent Commentators understand ἡμεῖς of the Gentiles; but though a plausible case is made out, the προ must thus be sunk, or have assigned to it a frigid sense. Hence it is better to suppose (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) that it refers to the Jewish Christians. The προ may be best explained, before (in time).

13. ἐν ᾧ καὶ—τῷ ἁγίῳ] There is here a seeming irregularity, which several Commentators seek to remove, by supplying something after ὑμῖν, either ἡλικίαν from προηλπ., or ἐκληρώθημεν at ver. 11. This, however, is harsh, and it is better to suppose a parenthesis, and then a resumption, after the Apostle's usual manner; the sense being, 'In whom ye also (i. e. the Gentile Christians) believed, after ye heard the word of truth, the glad tidings of your salvation; in whom [I say] ye also [having believed] have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise (which is the earnest of our inheritance) unto the redemption,' &c. The expression τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς σωτηρίας ὑμῶν (with which compare the words of 1 Cor. xv. 2, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον δι' οὗ σώζεσθε) is explanatory of τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας: the Gospel being considered as the instrumental cause whereby God is pleased to show forth his power for the salvation of every one who believeth, Rom. i. 16. By being sealed by the Holy Ghost is meant being confirmed and attested as true believers, through the promised gift (τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, for τῷ ἐπαγγελίῳ), that gift promised by the Prophets, nay, by Christ himself before his ascension. On the force of the metaphor in ἔσφρ., and the nature of this sealing, see notes at John vi. 27, and 2 Cor. i. 22, and compare infra vi. 30. Considering the persons of whom this is said, we are, I think, bound to understand the extraordinary and supernatural gifts of the Spirit, as well as his ordinary influences and graces; though most recent Commentators take it of the latter only.

14. ὅς] for δ; the masculine being here used for the neuter, doubtless with reference to the Holy Spirit, as one of the persons of the Godhead: thereby supplying a strong, though undesigned, proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit. This, however, will depend on the reading. For δς MSS. A, B, E, F, G, J, and 15 cursives (to which I can make no addition), have δ, adopted by Lachm., and by Tisch. in ed. 1, who in his 2nd ed. restored δς, with good reason; since internal evidence, as well as external, is quite in its favour; inasmuch as why the Critics should have altered δς into δ is easy to see; and why St. Paul should have written δς I have already shown. On ἄρρ. see note on 2 Cor.

ρονομίας ἡμῶν, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως, εἰς ἔπαινον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ.

15 <sup>a</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο κἀγὼ, ἀκούσας τὴν καθ' ὑμᾶς πίστιν ἐν τῷ <sup>a</sup> Phil. 1. 2. Col. 1. 5, 4. Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, <sup>a</sup> Rom. 1. 9. Phil. 1. 8, 4. 16 οὐ παύομαι εὐχαριστῶν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, μνεῖαν ὑμῶν ποιούμενος ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου <sup>a</sup> 1 Thess. 1. 2. 3 Thess. 1. 3. 17 ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ <sup>a</sup> Col. 1. 9-12. 2. 2. 3. James 2. 17, 18. Χριστοῦ, ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης, δῶῃ ὑμῖν πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως ἐν ἐπιγνώσει αὐτοῦ <sup>a</sup> 18 πεφωτισμένους τοὺς ὀφθαλ-

v. 8.—εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιπ. The second of the two interpretations which I have heretofore brought forward, without expressing any preference, is more likely to be the true one, and on this ground, that, though it involves equal harshness, it is far more agreeable to the context. The sense will thus be 'reaching, or lasting, until the complete redemption of the purchased possession, even the peculium, or peculiar property of God purchased by Christ with his own blood, and forming his CHURCH, shall be consummated.' So Acts xx. 28, τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἣν περιποιήσατο διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος. This view of the sense I find supported by the opinion not only of T. Aquin., Calv., Hyper., Bulling., Crell., and Grot., but also of Œcumen. and Theophyl., who (after Chrys.) explain τῆς περιπ. by ἡμῶν οἷοντις ἐσμὲν περιποιήσις καὶ κτήσις. Calv. well points out the reason why this peculiar use of eis for usque ad, as iv. 14, was here employed,—namely, for the consolation of those whom he was addressing, 'ne grave sit illis expectationem suam foreve usque ad diem adventus Christi.'

15. Having in the former part of this chapter instructed the believing converts at Ephesus in the certainty of their election and predestination to the privileges of the Christian church, and put them in mind of those extraordinary gifts, which they received as the earnest of their inheritance, the Apostle now proceeds to assure them that their steadfast continuance in the faith (of which he had been informed) was to him matter of joy and thanksgiving; and that he continually prayed for them that they might have a more thorough knowledge of the nature and invaluable benefits of Christianity.—διὰ τοῦτο, i. e. 'because ye were sealed with the promised Spirit.'

16. μνεῖαν ὑμῶν ποιούμενος ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου] Koppe and other German Commentators regard this as if it were a plonastic expression of the common Greek = 'praying for any one.' But it is a stronger expression, and one that comes more to the heart. It is any thing but ordinary Greek, for I have noted it in one of the most refined of the Attic poets, namely, Eurip. Bacch. 46, δὲαί μ', ἐν εὐχαίῃ τ' οὐδαμῶν μνητῆς ἔχει, scil. ἡμῶν. We may render ἐπὶ τ. προσ. μ., 'at my prayers,' i. e. 'prayer times.'

17. ὁ Θεὸς—Χριστοῦ] The best Expositors are agreed that our Lord is here spoken of only in his human nature, as when he speaks of his God at John xx. 17. 1 Cor. xi. 3. iii. 23; see notes. In confirmation and illustration of this view of a peculiar expression, see Thom. Aquin., Calv., Hyper., and Est.—Ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης. Some interpret, 'the glorious Father;' understanding the expression δόξα of the eternal and unchangeable glory of the Deity. But it is better, with others, to take πατὴρ to signify here, as often, author, cause, and source; He being the Fountain of all glory, and to whom it is primarily to be ascribed. See 2 Sam. xxii. 4. Ps. xviii. 3. See the able note of Calv., who well explains the phrase as a title emerging from the former, 'elucet enim in eo gloriosa Dei paternitas, quod Filium suum conditioni nostræ subjecit, ut per Ipsum fieret Deus noster.'—Δῶῃ ὑμῖν πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλ. On further consideration of these words, I am ready to admit that the absence of the Article would seem to forbid our referring the πνεῦμα to the Holy Spirit directly; and thus we may render, with Chandel. and Bp. Middl., 'a spirit of wisdom and revelation.' But then the term will have to be almost alienated; and yet the influence of the Holy Spirit is almost implied in the next words, πεφωτισμένους τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῆς καρδίας ὑμῶν.—words which advert by allusion to the Holy Spirit as the medium through whom this deep wisdom of spirit is conveyed as a gift from 'the Father of lights' (James i. 17), and Who is in that view promised as the Spirit of truth who shall teach us all things, even τὰ βῆθη τοῦ Θεοῦ, probably alluded to in the term here employed, ἀποκαλύψαι. And this I find fully supported by the opinion of Chrys. and Theophyl., Hyper. and Bulling. Thus, according to either interpretation, the doctrine of the influence of the Spirit is inherent in the passage, either directly or by implication.

18. πεφωτισμένους—ὑμῶν] This is explanatory of ἀποκαλ., as denoting the effect of it. Instead of πεφ. τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, strict propriety would require τοὺς πεφωτισμένους. The construction is, εἰς τὰ ὅσα πεφωτισμένους τοὺς ὀφθ. ['as to the eyes'] τῆς καρδίας ὑμῶν αἰδέαι, &c.—Ἐλπίς τῆς κλήσεως αὐτοῦ is for ἐλπ. εἰς ἣν ἐκλήθητε ἐκ' αὐτοῦ, or δι' αὐτοῦ. Comp. Phil. iii. 14, τῆς ἀνὰ κλήσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Χρ. Ἰησ. In πλουτοῖς τῆς δόξης there may be a Hebraism for 'rich glory.' And so Rom. ix. 23, τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, and Eph. iii. 16, τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης. The question, however, is, whether τῆς δόξης is to be taken with the words preceding, or with those that follow. The construction calls for the latter. And this is confirmed by the parallel passage of Col. i. 27, τίς ὁ πλοῦτος τῆς δόξης τοῦ μυστηρίου τούτου ἐν τοῖς ἰδνισι, where the construction is exactly the same as in this passage of Eph.; and in each ὁ πλοῦτος is connected, not with the second noun, but with the third, τῆς κληρ. and τοῦ μυστ., the intermediate noun qualifying the noun after it, and having the force of the cognate adjective ἰσοδοξος. Thus the sense will be: 'and to know what (i. e. how great) is μοὺς τῆς * καρδίας ὑμῶν, εἰς τὸ εἶδέναι ὑμᾶς τίς ἐστὶν ἡ ἐλπίς

 τῆς κλησεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τίς ὁ πλοῦτος τῆς δόξης τῆς κληρονομίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις. 19 καὶ τί τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς τοὺς πιστεύοντας, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ 20 ἣν ἐνήργησεν ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, 21 ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, καὶ δυνά-

the rich and glorious inheritance obtained, or appointed, by him among, &c. Taking however into consideration such passages as Rom. ii. 7 and 10. iii. 23. v. 2. 1 Pet. i. 7; and v. 10, ὁ καλῶς ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν αὐτοῦ αἰώνιον δόξαν, I am inclined to think that τῆς δόξης is meant to be taken simply as a noun, the sense being, 'And what is the richness of the inheritance of glory;' meaning, 'how rich is the inheritance of glory, bestowed by him on the saints,—that inconceivable and eternal weight of glory laid up for, and to be bestowed on, them!' See Rom. viii. 18. 1 Cor. ii. 9.—Of τῆς κληρονομίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις the sense is, 'the inheritance which through him ye have among (i. e. in common with) the saints, or sons of adoption.' See more in Crell. and Est., and especially Calv., who well remarks that 'high-wrought expressions like these are not poured forth by the Apostle sine delectu, and only resorted to in order to magnify the grace of God, that it may be worthily regarded; but that, where faith is treated of, he then (because it is a thing superior to the world) lifts us up into admiration of the Divine power.'

19. Of this passage the sense mainly depends upon the construction of the words κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—αὐτοῦ, which many Expositors, ancient and modern, construe with τοὺς πιστ. But the sentiment thus arising is so little agreeable to the context, that the best Commentators have been long of opinion that those words must be referred to τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος, and that κατὰ signifies 'according to,' i. e. similarly to, ἡμᾶς τοὺς πιστ. meaning 'us believers.' They are not, however, agreed as to the nature of this comparison; namely, whether it is meant of Christ's resurrection (namely, as understood of God's power exerted in their conversion, and subsequent support by Divine grace), or, in the natural sense, as understood of the power to be exerted in the resurrection of believers; meaning, that the future resurrection of believers shall be accomplished, according to the working of that mighty power which God exerted in Christ, when he raised him from the dead. This last mode of understanding the words seems most agreeable to the context. For, as Chandl. observes, 'as this is the hope of our Christian calling, and the peculiar promise of the Gospel, so it is one of the noblest instances to which even Almighty power itself can reach.' I am inclined, however, to think, with Hamm. and Mackn., that both comparisons may have been intended. As to the last clause, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—αὐτοῦ ἣν ἐνήργησεν, the sense is, 'answering to' ('correspondently with,' 'similarly to') the exertion of strength of his power, which he exerted in the case of Christ, by raising him from the dead.' The comparison intended is twofold: 1. physical, of the resurrection and glorification of the just, as Christ was raised and glorified; 2. moral and spiritual, the being raised from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, and, through this newness of life, to the inheritance of the saints in light. This latter comparison must be chiefly intended, as is plain from the preceding context; since the Apostle intimates, that the persons he is addressing attain to it through the medium of the same power as that whereby Christians are raised, &c. Some eminent Commentators regard the terms as mere synonyms, and conjoined by way of expressing the greatest degree of the Divine power. But, not to mention that that is always an objectionable principle (see Calv., supra v. 18), ἐνέργεια is by no means a synonyme of κράτος or ἰσχύς. Dr. Peile, indeed, would construe τοῦ κράτους (which he regards as here equiv. to κρατοῦσαν) with τὴν ἐνέργειαν, rather than (as all other Commentators do) with τῆς ἰσχύος. But the usus loquendi is, in both cases, against him. And, moreover, the construction of κράτ. with ἰσχύ. is placed beyond doubt, by a similar passage, infra, vi. 10, ἐνδυναμοῦσθαι ἐν Κυρίῳ καὶ ἐν τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ: also by several passages of the Sept., e. g. Isa. xl. 26. Dan. iv. 27, et al. Nor is it confined to Alexandrian Greek, since it occurs occasionally in the purest Classical writers. So excellent a Grecian, and espec. one so intimately acquainted with the Greek Tragedians, as Dr. Peile, might have brought to mind Soph. Phil. 594, ἡ μὲν ἦν λόγῳ Πάσιαντες ἄετι, ἢ πρὸς ἰσχύος κράτος, where there is not, any more than here, a mere pleonasm (the sense being, 'by the use of downright force'), nor is there any such pleonasm in Thucyd. vii. 66, 3, παρὰ ἰσχύον τῆς δυνάμεως ἐνδιδόσασιν.

20. καὶ ἐκάθισεν] Strict regularity would have required καὶ καθίσας, but prob. ἐκάθισα was used, because verbs have a far stronger effect, in expressing the important truth couched in the next two verses, than would Participles. It is true that the very reading seemingly required is presented in MSS. A, B, and 14 cursives, and was received by Lachm., and by Tisch. 1, but rejected, and the t. rec. restored, in Tisch. 2; rightly; for a more rash and ill-judged change in the text was never made, even by Lachm.

21. In the Substantives ἀρχή, ἐξουσία, &c. we have abstracts for concretes, to denote the persons who fill those dignities, and such as those. By ἀρχή and ἐξουσία we may understand the superior, and by δύναμις and κυρ. those next in rank. See note on Matt. xxviii. 18. The Singular in this use of ἀρχή is very rare; though I have noted it also in Æschyl. Suppl. 480, κατ' ἀρχῆς ('magistracy,' 'government') φιλαίτιος Λαῶν, and, with the Article, in Demosth. 1145, 26, ἡ ἀρχή ('the magistrate') παραλαβούσα παρὰ τῆς προτέρας ἀρχῆς, ἡμῖν παρέδοκε.—Οὐδὲ μεως καὶ κυριότητος, καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου οὐ μόνον ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι<sup>22</sup> καὶ τὰ πάντα ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτὸν ἔδωκε κεφαλὴν ὑπὲρ πάντα τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ,<sup>23</sup> ἣτις ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ, τὸ πλήρωμα † Ps. 8. 6. 5.

Col. 1. 16-18.
Matt. 28. 18.
1 Cor. 15. 27.
Heb. 2. 8.
Rom. 15. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 6.
27.
ch. 4. 12, 15, 16. & 5. 23, 30. Col. 1. 18. & 2. 11.

ματος, title of authority. See Phil. ii. 9. In the next words, ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, and ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι, it is intimated that the power of Christ is infinitely above all created power, whether human or angelic.

22. By the words πάντα ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοῦ πόδας αὐτοῦ (on which compare Matt. xxviii. 18) we have graphically represented the complete subjection to which Christ's enemies must be reduced, and its results in their punishment. See 1 Cor. xv. 27. On this is then engrafted another and more striking view under which Christ's power may be considered,—namely, as it is exercised towards his friends; wherein it is suggested that, in his capacity of supreme Head over the Church Catholic (namely, believers of every age and nation, compare Heb. xii. 23), he will use his power,—not in the way that earthly supreme Potentates usually do, for his own good, but exercise it solely for the benefit of his people, as the head exerts itself for the benefit and support of the other members of the body, of which it is chief, and with which it is indissolubly united.—ἔδωκε, for τέθεικε, or ἔστησε, by an idiom formed from the use of the Heb. יָרַם.—ὑπὲρ πάντα, 'over all persons and things.' See Dr. Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. ii. p. 210.

23. τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ] 'his body.' 'Namely, because, 1. he formed it by himself and his Apostles; 2. he quickened it by his power and the gifts of the Holy Spirit; 3. he purchased it by his own blood; 4. he has bound together all its members by the same laws, the same faith, the same sacraments, the same hopes of a resurrection to life eternal, and, above all, by mutual charity, the very bond of perfectness.' (Dr. Jortin.)—τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν π. κλ. These words are in apposition with σῶμα; and the Church is called his fulness, as consisting of many members; being an exceedingly numerous society, under the government of Him 'who filleth all with all [things]'; for so τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρ. should be rendered; by which is meant, 'filleth all his members each with their peculiar spiritual gifts and graces,' each 'receiving out of his fulness grace for grace.' See John i. 16, and 1 Cor. xii. 6, and comp. infra iv. 10—13. Est. complains of the difficulty of the passage arising from ambiguity of expression, which he traces to this, that πάντα may be taken either as a Nomin. or an Accus., and πληρουμένον either in a Passive or an Active sense. And, in fact, to this supposed ambiguity may be ascribed the great diversity of interpretations. After all, however, it may be questioned whether there be any real ambiguity. It is true that πληρουμένον of itself admits of being taken either Passively or Actively. But the former mode (adopted, from the Vulg., by most of the old Commentators) will require that at πάντα should be supplied κατὰ; an ellipsis which, however approved of by Eras., Camer., Est., and Hamm., is one too arbitrary to be admitted, and which, in the present advanced state of philological science, is such as no Commentator of note would think of proposing: not to say that the sense thus arising is forced and jejune. Accordingly, the Active sense in πληρ., regarded as Midd. Depon. (recognized by Theophyl. and Œcumen., and adopted by Theodor. and the framers of the Pesch. Syr. Version, and most of the modern Expositors, from Beza, Calv., and Grot. downwards), is best to be adopted, espec. as it is more agreeable to the context and the matter of this Epistle, and the twin Epistle to the Colossians. See iv. 10, and Col. ii. 9 and 10. But, although the ambiguity in question is thus dispelled, yet another may be thought to remain,—namely, whether πᾶσι is to be understood of persons or of things, since it may be of either the masculine or the neuter; also whether πάντα, if a neuter form, is to be taken in a neuter sense. Several early modern Commentators take πάντα in a neuter sense (understanding it of all spiritual benefits and blessings, such as the context calls for), and, accordingly, they take πᾶσι as a masculine, understanding it of 'all the members of Christ's body, the faithful,' meaning generally that 'Christ fills all the members of his Church with these benefits.' But this sense, however good, is such as cannot be elicited from the words without violence; for how otherwise can πληρ. πάντα ἐν πᾶσι be made to mean to impart all such things unto the persons in question? Thus the ἐν (found in all the MSS.) would be worse than useless; and the construction would be quite unprecedented. Hence I acquiesce in the opinion of Dr. Chandler, Abp. Newc., and Dr. Mackn., that πάντα is to be taken of persons, and πᾶσι of things, the full sense being, 'who filleth all the persons in question (the members of this spiritual body) with all things,' viz. all things necessary to their well-being, all spiritual and heavenly blessings. In short, the true way of translating it is that adopted by Dr. Mackn., 'who filleth all with all.' Here, however, the use of ἐν may fall under the head of what the grammarians term the usus redundans; though there is really no redundancy at all, but only an idiom by which the Dat. with ἐν is used by some writers, where others would use the Dative of mode, or means, or instrument; which is alone, I believe, used in Latin. However, the ἐν is used by good writers, from Homer downwards; and, so far from being thus redundant, it is rather more significant, as serving to bring the means more fully prominent than the mere instrumental or modal dative. But the passage most to the present purpose (and which, with iv. 10, serves to determine the construction and sense here) is Eph. v. 18, πληροῦσθε ἐν ψαύματι, where see my note. As to the use of the Middle form in an Active sense (as if a Dependent), and said by Olsh. to be unprecedented, there are not wanting examples, though very rare, such as Hdor. vi. 2, 14, τὰς ναῦς ἐκπληροῦντο. Ismus, p. 89. Dem. 1208. The use of a Col. 1. 31.

 & 2. 13.
 b ch. 5. 6.
 & 6. 12.
 c Luke 16. 8.
 John 7. 7.
 & 8. 33.
 & 15. 10. Rom. 12. 2. 1 Cor. 5. 10. Gal. 1. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 10.

τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου. II. <sup>1</sup> Καὶ ὑμᾶς, ὄντας νεκροὺς τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ τοῖς ἁμαρτίαις, <sup>2</sup> (ὃ ἐν αἷς ποτε <sup>c</sup> περιεπατήσατε κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, κατὰ τὸν

the Neuter for the Masc. is confirmed by the passage at iv. 10 (quite akin to the present): ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα, 'that he might fill all the persons (i. e. believers) with the gifts and graces necessary to them.'

II. Having mentioned, in the preceding Chapter, the great privileges to which the Ephesians became entitled by their conversion to Christianity, the Apostle now takes occasion to enhance the greatness of the Divine mercy towards them, by putting them in mind of their former state of corruption and guilt. (Chandler.)

1. καὶ ὑμᾶς, ὄντας—ἁμαρτίαις. Here some doubt has existed as to the connexion of these words with the context, also as to their construction, and the verb to be supplied. Many ancient and most modern Expositors connect them with ver. 5, supplying ἐξωποιοῖσιν from συνεξωποιοῖσιν after, where there is thought to be a repetition. Thus what follows, up to ver. 4, and καὶ at ver. 5, must be taken as pleonastic (after the manner of the Hebrews, who often so use their v, which signifies et and etiam), or the et is to be rendered inquam, and the etiam. By others, however, consisting of the ancient Commentators generally, the words are connected with πληρουμένου in the last verse of the preceding Chapter; both being so united together, that only a comma is placed after πληρουμένου, the sense assigned being, 'He who filleth all [his members] with all [spiritual gifts and graces] hath also filled you who were dead in,' &c. Of these two methods, the former (confirmed by various similar instances of anacoluthon, and also by the parallel passage at Col. ii. 13) is the more natural and probable, and is supported by the authority of Hyper. and Calv., of whom the latter ably traces the connexion and scope of the passage thus: 'Here we have an explanation with illustration of what went before; in which the Apostle, in order the better to bring home to the Ephesians what he has been saying thus generally of the grace of God, now proceeds to remind them of their former state. This application consists of two particulars: You were once lost; now God hath of his grace rescued you from destruction. These, however, instead of being brought together, are disjoined by the intervention of further considerations dilating on the main and primary one.' Dr. Peile well regards καὶ ὑμᾶς ὄντας, &c. as 'a particular exemplification of that general act of Divine grace of which the Apostle had just spoken in the words τοῦ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου;' and he thinks it plain from Col. i. 21, and ii. 13, that 'our Translators have rightly sought in ver. 5 the completion of the sentence from which he digresses in vv. 3 and 4.' But the irregularity is too deeply seated to be so easily got rid of. If the resumption of the sentiment at ver. 1 be supposed to take place at ver. 5, then the words of ver. 4, though they seem to amalgamate with those at ver. 3, will have no termination, for want of a Verb in oratione directa. Now that might have been avoided by writing ἦν instead of ὄν. But, as it is, the words must be associated with those at vv. 5 and 6, as they are in all the ancient Versions and Commentaries; and it would seem that the writer himself intended them to be so taken; though, by prefixing the words ὁ δὲ Θεὸς—ἡμᾶς, he made the resumption of the incomplete construction at συνεξωποιοῖσιν very obscure. The reader will observe that I include ver. 2, as well as 3 and 4, in the digressive portion; for which I have the support of Griesb., Scholz, and Paley, Hor. Paul. p. 112, ed. Tate. He truly remarks that, 'if here we take away the parenthesis, we have left a sentence nearly the same as in Col. ii. 12, 13. We have (continues he) the same sentiment in nearly the same words; but in the Ephesians twice interrupted by incidental thoughts, which St. Paul (as his manner is) enlarges by the way, and then resumes the thread of his discourse. It is interrupted the first time [at vv. 20—23] by a view, which breaks in upon his mind, of the exaltation of Christ, and the second time by a description of heathen depravity; or rather, a retrospect of their sad state when sunk in heathen depravity. By νεκροὶ ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις is meant, 'to be entirely enslaved to sin, as a dead body is to the power of death, and to be incapable of rising from it to spiritual life, as a corpse is of being restored to natural life.' See Matt. viii. 22. Luke xv. 14, and notes.

2. ἐν αἷς ποτε περιεπατήσατε. That sin had formerly reigned in them he now evinces from its effects, or fruits; the power of sin not being sufficiently perceptible to men, until it shows itself in outward action. (Calv.)—κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τ., 'according to the way or course of the world: what Tacitus calls saeculum (so German. i. 9, 'corrumpere et corrumpi saeculum vocatur'); meaning, 'in conformity to its corrupt principles, and wicked practices.'—Κατὰ τὸν ἀρχ. τῆς ἐξ. τοῦ δέους. The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, that ἐξουσίας is here put for ἀρχῆς, 'power' being put for 'those who exercise the power, or rule, throughout the various degrees of subordinate agency.' So Theophyl. explains, ἀρχόντα τῶν ἰσχυρίων δυνάμεων, the leader of those powerful spirits who hold their residence in the air; see Jude 6. Indeed, Mede, Whitby, and Weta. have shown at large that both the Jews and the Gentiles (espec. of the Pythagorean sect) believed the air to be peopled with genii, or spirits, under the governance of a chief, who there held his seat of empire. These spirits were supposed to be powerful, but malignant, and exciting men to evil. That the Jews held the opinion in question is plain from Philo, p. 31, 28, ἵσται δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸν αἶρα ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων ἱερώτατος χορός, and Diog. Laert. viii. 52, ἐναὶ τε πάντα τὸν αἶρα ψυχῶν ἑπαισιν; also from the Rabbinical writers. So, in Pirke Aboth. fol. 83, p. 2 (cited by Weta.), they are represented as filling the whole air, ranged in troops, and under regular subordination; which illustrates the ἐξουσίας of the Apostle. This belief was transmitted to the early

ἄρχοντας τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ αἵρος, τοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ νῦν ἐνεργούντος ἐν τοῖς υἱοῖς τῆς ἀπειθείας· <sup>3</sup> ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς πάντες ἀνεστράφημεν ποτε ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις τῆς σαρκὸς ἡμῶν, ποιούντες τὰ θελήματα τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ τῶν διανοῶν, καὶ ἤμεν τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς, ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποί· <sup>4</sup> ὁ δὲ Θεὸς, πλούσιος ὢν ἐν ἐλέει, διὰ τὴν πολλὴν ἀγάπην αὐτοῦ, ἣν ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, <sup>5</sup> καὶ ὄντας ἡμᾶς νεκροὺς τοῖς παραπτώμασι, συνεζωοποίησε τῷ

d Col. 3. 7.
Tit. 2. 2.
Wisd. 13. 1.
e Rom. 10. 12.
f Rom. 5. 6.
g 10.
h 10. 4, 5, 8.
i 11.
Col. 2. 13, 14.
Acts 13. 11.
Titus 2. 5.

Fathers (so Ignatius Ep. to Ephes. § 13, ἐν ᾧ πᾶς πόλιμος καταργεῖται ἀέριον καὶ ἐπιγίγειν πνεύματων), and came down even to modern times. We are not, indeed, warranted in ascribing to St. Paul the wild dreams of the Rabbin; but neither are we justified in supposing him to have disbelieved the above notion, and yet countenanced it for a temporary purpose.—τοῦ πνεύματος, for πνεῦμα, by a slight anomaly in construction; and that, I apprehend, occasioned by the use of the κατὰ just before, to signify, 'according to the will of,' which, in thought, involving a Genit., so the case of πνεύματος is accommodated to that, rather than to the grammatical construction.—τοῦ νῦν ἐνεργούντος, meaning, 'exerts his energies, and manifests his influence.' So Matt. xiv. 2, αἱ δυνάμεις ἐνεργούσιν ἐν αὐτῷ, because he had risen from the dead. Hence demoniacs were called ἐνεργούμενοι. Thus it is meant, that the Evil Spirit powerfully and manifestly, by their actions, operates in the disobedient, with reference to the Gentiles, who are here called οἱ υἱοὶ τῆς ἀπειθείας, an expression not merely synonymous with ἀπειθεῖς, but a stronger term, to denote 'devotedly and habitually disobedient.' So Luke xvi. 8, οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ αἵματος τούτου, 'devoted to this world,' and Matt. xxiii. 15, υἱοὶ τῆς γαλήνης, used like υἱοὶ θανάτου in the Old Test.

3. The Apostle here applies what he has just said to the Jews also; and shows (as in Romans, ch. ii.), that they, too, as well as the rest of the world, had been under the dominion of sin.—ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς π. Expositors are not agreed whether οἷς is to be referred to υἱοῖς τ. αἵρ., or to παραπτώμασι at ver. 1. But though the latter has much to countenance it, more may be urged against it; and the objection, as to the construction of ἀναστρέφειν with a Dat. of person, not thing, will not hold good, because it is here construed with ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ. τ. σ. (which words, according to the other view, would be useless). And as here we have ἀνίστρ. ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ., so at 2 Cor. i. 12, we have ἐν ἀπλότητι καὶ ἐλικρινείᾳ Θεοῦ ἀναστρέφμεν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. Nor need we strictly interpret the ἐν by inter; but we may suppose it taken in a laxer sense for sub, meaning, 'as well as they.'—ποιούντες τὰ θελ. is strangely rendered by Dr. Peile, 'acting on the suggestions.' The sense is plainly, 'doing the wills,' performing the behests of the dispositions of the flesh,—those things to which we are inclined by our corrupt nature, as denoted by the term τῆς σαρκός. This plural of θελ. (occurring also in Acts xiii. 22) is not found in the Class. writers, though it occurs in the Sept.—τῶν διανοῶν is wrongly rendered, 'the mind.' It denotes the passions, as σαρκὸς does the appetites, of our corrupt nature. This natural corruption is implied in θελ. (which should be rendered propensities), and is expressed in the next words, which seem added for the very purpose of inculcating that truth. For though φύσει there is tortured by many learned Commentators, to yield some such sense as shall exclude the doctrine of the natural corruption of the human heart (namely, by explaining it either custom, or acquired habit), yet in vain; for in all the passages cited the sense natural disposition is ever apparent. In short, a far greater portion of learning and ingenuity, than has been employed in the cause in question, would be insufficient to set aside the common interpretation, and establish a sense unsupported by the usus loquendi, and at variance with the context. And all merely to get rid of a doctrine plainly revealed in Scripture, and confirmed by the experience even of the most virtuous and pious persons; nay, acknowledged by the heathens themselves, as might be shown by many examples, one of which must here suffice: Eur. Beller. frag. ix. 1, 'Ὅς ἔμφυτος μὲν πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις κᾶκῃ. The expression (derived from the Hebr.) τέκνα ὀργῆς signif. 'persons worthy of wrath and punishment.' So 2 Pet. ii. 14, κατὰρας τέκνα. Isa. lvii. 4, τέκνα ἀπωλείας. The same idiom has place in υἱός' but sometimes the Subst. following is found not in a Passive sense, as here, but in an Active one, as ver. 2, οἱ υἱοὶ ἀπειθείας. Moreover, οἱ λοιποὶ should be rendered, not others, but 'the rest [of mankind],' the other nations.

4—6. This may be regarded as the second particular spoken of in the note at ver. 1, of which the general import is, that God has preserved the Ephesians from the destruction to which they were devoted. This, however, the Apostle has expressed in other words, by way of further enlarging on the love of God, and thus (as Chandler observes) 'setting before them their obligations to the Divine mercy and goodness, in their recovery to the knowledge and operation of true religion and virtue by the gospel of Christ.' In fact, he now returns to the subject he was treating of at ch. i. 19; and what is there only indirectly intimated, he here distinctly propounds; namely, that as God raised Christ from the dead, so he will raise us up.

5. The term here, συνεζωοποίησι, is well explained by Whitby: 'hath quickened us together with Christ,'—namely, not only by giving us a new birth, or renovation of life, but an assurance also of eternal life; according to what is said by Christ himself, John xiv. 19, 'because I live, ye shall live also,' and by the Apostle elsewhere, Rom. v. 10, 'we shall be saved by his life.' See Calv. and Hyper. The interposed words χάριτι ἰστέ εἰσασημένιοι are meant to forcibly impress the great truth, of God's free gift of eternal life to as many as submit themselves to be saved by the plan of salvation set

f. Matt. 16.
17.
Rom. 2. 5.
8 & 4. 16.
Titus 2. 5.
h Rom. 2.
26, 27. 3 & 4.
2 & 11. 6.
1 Cor. 1. 26.
30.
2 Tim. 1. 9.
Titus 2. 5.
i Deut. 22. 6.
Jsa. 100. 3.
Jsa. 29. 23.
2 Cor. 5. 17.
ch. 4. 24.
Titus 2. 14.
J Col. 1. 21.

Χριστῷ, (χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι) <sup>6</sup> καὶ συνήγειρε, καὶ συνεκάθισεν ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>7</sup> ἵνα ἐνδείξηται ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τοῖς ἐπερχομένοις τὸν ὑπερβάλλοντα πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστότητι ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>8</sup> Ἐτὴ γὰρ χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι διὰ τῆς πίστεως· καὶ τοῦτο οὐκ ἐξ ὕμῶν, Θεοῦ τὸ δῶρον. <sup>9</sup> οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἵνα μὴ τις καυχῆσθαι.
<sup>10</sup> Αὐτοῦ γὰρ ἔσμεν ποίημα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεός, ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπα-τήσωμεν.

<sup>11</sup> Διὸ μνημονεύετε, ὅτι ὑμεῖς ποτὲ τὰ ἔθνη ἐν σαρκί, (οἱ

forth by God himself. See Theophyl. on Rom. iii. 24. Here, and at ver. 8, the words χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι should be rendered 'by grace (i. e. an act of grace) ye are placed in a state of salvation.' This has been evinced by many eminent theologians, including Bp. Bull, Harm. Evang. c. xii., and is further established by a very accurate Greek scholar, Mr. Green, in his Gram. N. Test. D., p. 317.

6. συνεκάθ. ἐν τοῖς ἰουρ. Hereby is intimated the great dignity of our Christian profession, by opening out our participating with Christ in the Society of God and the angels, and that by right of citizenship obtained by Christ; so that we are entitled to all the privileges of the Church and family of God.

7. ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τ. ἐπερχ. 'in all future ages (i. e. all futurity) both of this world and the next.' In τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστ. ἐφ' ἡμᾶς a participle is to be understood; the sense being, 'his richly abundant grace and mercy shown towards us,' in the blessings conferred, through Christ and his atoning merits, through the Gospel. This passage is thus beautifully alluded to by Irenæus, p. 181: 'Temporalia fecit (Deus) propter hominem, ut marescens in iis fructificet immortalitatem, et eterna superinducit propter suam benignitatem, ut ostendat seculis supervenientibus,' &c.

8—10. 'These verses are closely connected together, and contain the same sentiments, expressed in other words.' (Koppe.)

8. τῇ γὰρ χάριτι, &c. Agreeably to the view stated, supra, ver. 5, I would render: 'for it is by grace (i. e. a system of free grace) that ye have been brought into a state of salvation through faith (as the medium); and that [salvation by grace] not arising from yourselves [i. e. any thing that ye do], not [pertaining to you] on the score of works done, so that no man can boast, that being precluded.' This eventual sense of ἵνα, as expressing a logical conclusion, was long ago adopted by me in my Recena. Syn. and Gr. Test., and I have since found that it had been previously promulgated by Dr. Mackn., who with reason objects to our Common Version, 'lest any man,' &c., on the ground that 'it represents God as appointing our salvation to be by faith in order to prevent man's boasting; which certainly were an end unworthy of God in so great a matter.' I must not omit to notice the debated question as to the reference of τοῦτο. I am still of opinion that it is neither to πίστεως, nor to χάριτι, but to the subject of the foregoing clause,—salvation by grace, through faith in Christ and his Gospel: a view, I find, confirmed by Dr. Chandl., Dean Tucker, Dr. Mackn., and Dr. A. Clarke. And to show that this interpretation is not a mere novelty, I need only refer the reader to Theophyl., who thus explains: Οὐ τὴν πίστιν λέγει δῶρον Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὸ διὰ πίστεως σωθῆναι· τοῦτο δῶρόν ἐστι Θεοῦ. Such also is the view adopted by Chrys. and Theodor. And that it is the true one is clear from ver. 10, where see note.

10. αὐτοῦ γὰρ ἡ ποίημα The γὰρ serves for confirmation and explication; that being, as Bp. Bull points out, the scope of the verse. There is here a clause omitted, which may be supplied as follows: 'Salvation (i. e. the being placed in a state of salvation) was the gift of God, not for any works that we had done, nor with a view to any that we might do. So that boasting is excluded. Do them, however, we must; for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus [our mystical Head, Prototype, and Ensample], for [the purpose of performing] good works,—namely, such as (in the words of our Twelfth Article) 'follow after justification, and spring out necessarily of a true and living faith in Christ.' The strong term κτισθέντες, used also infra 10, must not, with some recent Expositors, be lowered, since it has reference to that union of Christians with their Lord, which forms the essential condition of their Christian existence.—οἷς προητοίμασεν—περιπ., 'for which good works (i. e. with a view to their performance) God hath aforetime (all along from the first) provided, so as that in them we should walk.' I would thus render, being of opinion, with Dr. Peile, that 'the words ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπ. declare the object of οἷς προητ.' This providing must be referred to the Providence of God, who in the Gospel fore-ordained, with reference to Christian works, that we should walk in them. A similar use of προητοίμ. is found in Philo, p. 17, ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ πάντα προητοίμασεν εἰς ἔργα αὐτοῦ.

11. Having spoken to them of the general state of fallen man, and the salvation of all believers by the rich grace and mercy of God, the Apostle next proceeds to set forth to the Gentiles converts the peculiarity of their case, which had placed them much further out of the way than the Jews had been. He illustrates the mercy of God in their conversion, by showing them that God was under no previous obligation, by virtue of any special covenant he had entered into with them, to confer so great a hap-

λεγόμενοι ἀκροβυστία ὑπὸ τῆς λεγομένης περιτομῆς ἐν σαρκὶ χειροποιήτου,) <sup>12</sup> ὅτι ἦτε ἐν τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ χωρὶς Χριστοῦ, <sup>k</sup> Rom. 9. 4 ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι τῆς πολιτείας τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ ξένοι τῶν διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες, καὶ ἄθεοι, ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. <sup>13</sup> <sup>l</sup> νυνὶ δὲ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὑμεῖς οἱ ποτὲ ὄντες μακρὰν, ἐγγὺς ἐγενήθητε ἐν τῷ αἵματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>14</sup> <sup>m</sup> Αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν, ὁ ποιήσας τὰ ἀμφοτέρα ἐν, καὶ τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ λύσας, <sup>15</sup> <sup>n</sup> τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ, τὸν νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι, καταργήσας ἵνα

<sup>l</sup> Col. 1. 20.
<sup>k</sup> 1. 4.
<sup>m</sup> Isa. 9. 4, 6
John 10. 16.
<sup>n</sup> 16. 32.
Acts 10. 35.
Rom. 5. 1.
Col. 1. 20.
Gal. 3. 28.
1 Cor. 5. 17.
Gal. 6. 15.
Col. 2. 14.

peace upon them; since they were wholly unacquainted with, and strangers to, the only peculiar covenant he had entered into with any part of mankind.

11. διὸ μνημονεύετε, &c. &c.] The full sense is, 'Wherefore [that ye may understand the magnitude of the benefits ye have received, and the obligation ye lie under to the performance of good works], remember, &c.—ἐν σαρκί, 'by natural descent, or carnal origin.' The words οἱ λεγόμενοι—χειροπ. are exegetic and parenthetical; thus at &c. ἦτε there is a resumption of the construction.—Οἱ λεγόμενοι ἀκροβ., i. e. 'who are contemptuously styled the uncircumcised'—ἀκροβυστία, for ἀκρόβυστοι, abstract for concrete; as περιτομή, just after, for οἱ περιτετμημένοι. The expression ἐν σαρκὶ χειροποιήτου ('made by hand, in the flesh') is very significant, alluding to another circumcision, that of the heart, and spiritual, ἀχειροποιήτου. See Col. ii. 11.

12. χωρὶς Χρ.] for χωρισθέντας ἀπὸ τοῦ Χρ., 'without communion with Christ.' The sense is further developed in the next words, ἀπῆλλοτρ. τῆς πολ. τ. 'I., 'aliens from the citizenship of Israel.' Ἀπῆλλ. is a stronger term than ἀλλότριος, though that word is by Aristotle opposed to συμπολιταί. Πολιτεία is a word used of ecclesiastical, as well as civil polity; espec. since, in the case of the Jews, the one was closely united with the other.—ἔξουσι is used for ἀπεξισωμένοι (to correspond with ἀπῆλλ.), and consequently it carries the regimen of a Particip.; see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 30, 6. So Soph. Œd. Tyr. 219, ὁ γὰρ ἔξουσι μὲν τοῦ λόγου τοῦδ' ἔξερῳ. In διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγ. the Genit. of the noun has the force of an Adject. By these διαθηकाί we are to understand 'the patriarchal and the Mosaic covenants.' See note on Rom. ix. 4.—ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες, 'having no [assured] hope of eternal life and salvation:' meaning, that they had been out of covenant with God, and were consequently destitute of any hope of pardon and acceptance with him.—καὶ ἄθεοι, ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, 'and thus without God,'—namely, 'either by knowing him not, or not worshipping him as God.' By a similar mode of expression, Joa. (Antt. xvii. 5, 6) describes the wicked man as doing what he does ὅτι ἐν ἐρημίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'as if there were no Deity every where present.' The words ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ are added by way of magnifying their offence, as living in a world created and preserved for blessing by God, and yet not knowing him, or worshipping him, as its Creator and Preserver.

13. ἐν Χρ. 'I.] 'by Christ and his religion.'

Or we may, with Koppe, supply ὄντες; q. d. 'having been united to Christ,' 'become Christians;' comp. Rom. viii. 1.—μακρὰν εἶναι and ἐγγὺς εἶναι were figurative expressions, denoting, respectively, the pious worshippers of God, and therefore favoured with admittance to his presence, and those who neglected it (i. e. the Gentiles), and were consequently far removed from his presence and favour. See Isa. lvii. 19, and notes on Acts ii. 39, and on Luke xv. 13.

14. ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν] Put, by metonymy, for ὁ ποιῶν εἰρήνην ('the Author of our peace [and reconciliation with God]') occurring in the next verse; just as the Jews call the Messiah their Peace.—At τὰ ἀμφοτ. supply μέρη or γένη, 'both of the parties.' The words following are illustrative of the sense of the foregoing, by an allusion to the partition wall in the Temple, which separated the Court of the Gentiles from that of the Jews. The word μεσότ. is very rare in the Class. writers, though an ex. (and that similarly figurative) occurs in Athen. p. 281, τὸν τῆς ἡδονῆς καὶ ἀρετῆς μεσότοιχον διορύττειν.—Τοῦ φραγμοῦ is a Genit. of explication, for διαφράσσειν ἡμᾶς ἐξ ἄλλων ἰδιωτῶν. It here alludes to the ritual law of Moses, which was intended only to keep the Jews apart from the Gentiles, but which, in fact, produced that mutual enmity to which the Apostle proceeds to advert.

15. τὴν ἔχθραν may be taken either with the preceding, or the following words; for the same sense will arise. But it seems more natural to connect them with the following.—τὸν νόμον is in apposition with ἔχθραν, denoting the cause of enmity. This the Law was, since it generated in one party an antisocial and supercilious spirit, and in the other a deadly hatred.—ἐν τῇ σαρκί α., i. e. by the sacrifice of his body on the cross,—namely, to bring in that 'everlasting righteousness,' of which Daniel prophesied. The terms ἐστ. and δόγμ. refer to the ceremonial part of the law; and are specified as being the cause of the disunion. On καταργ., see Rom. iii. 31. Gal. iii. 17, and Notes.—ἵνα τοὺς—ἐνθ., lit. 'in order that [thereby] he might, by himself, form the two classes of men into one new mankind.' At τοὺς δύο sub. ἀνθρώπους, from ἀνθρώποι following. The two classes would be one man, by being one in friendship, and having a common spirit of affection;—as a man is inseparable from himself;—and 'one new man,' since each party would be brought to a new and reformed religion, with new and infinitely better principles.—ἐν ἑαυτῷ, i. e. 'through his means,' i. e. 'by his death on the cross.'

ο Rom. 6. 6. & 8. 3. Col. 1. 20. & 2. 14. p. Ps. 145. 14. Isa. 57. 19. q John 10. 9. & 14. 6. Rom. 5. 2. ch. 3. 12. Heb. 4. 16. & 10. 19. 20. r Gal. 6. 10. Phil. 4. 20. Heb. 12. 22, 23. s Ps. 118. 22. Isa. 55. 16. Matt. 16. 18. 1 Cor. 2. 9, 10. 1 Pet. 2. 4, 5. Rev. 21. 14. 1 1 Cor. 3. 17. & 6. 19. 2 Cor. 6. 16. ch. 4. 16.

τοὺς δύο κτίσῃ ἐν ἑαυτῷ εἰς ἓνα καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, ποιοῦν εἰρήνην 16 ° καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξῃ τοὺς ἀμφοτέρους ἐν ἐνὶ σώματι τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν αὐτῷ 17 ° καὶ ἔλθων εὐηγγελίσαστο εἰρήνην ὑμῖν τοῖς μακρὰν καὶ τοῖς ἐγγύς, 18 ° ὅτι δι' αὐτοῦ ἔχομεν τὴν προσαγωγὴν οἱ ἀμφοτέροι ἐν ἐνὶ Πνεύματι πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα. 19 ° Ἄρα οὖν οὐκέτι ἐστὶ ξένοι καὶ πάροιχοι, ἀλλὰ συμπολῖται τῶν ἁγίων καὶ οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ, 20 ° ἐποικο-δομηθέντες ἐπὶ τῷ θεμελίῳ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ προφητῶν, ὧς ἀκρογωνιαίον αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ 21 ° ἐν ᾧ πᾶσα ἡ οἰκοδομὴ

16. ἀποκαταλλ.] This is more significant than καταλλ., and refers to the enmity previously existing; the term denoting 'a transition from the state of enmity to that of friendship.'—ἐν ἐνὶ σώματι, 'by composing one body;' i. e. Christ's mystical body, the Church.—ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθρ. is not synonymous with καταργήσας τὴν ἔχθραν just before, but is a stronger expression, denoting that 'it is annulled for ever.'

17. εὐγγ., εἰρήνην, &c.] As Christ did not himself preach this peace to the Gentiles, we must understand it as done through the medium of his ambassadors, the Apostles. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι εἰρήνην (proclaim a mode of obtaining peace and reconciliation with God) is a phrase occurring also at Acts x. 36.—After μακρ. καὶ ἁλ. Lachm. and Tisch. insert εἰρήνην, from A, B, D, E, F, G, and some 4 cursives (to which I can make no addition), the Vulg. and Ital., and other Vers., and some Fathers. But they were not warranted in so doing, since internal evidence is at least as much against as for the word. It certainly was not in the copies used by the Peab. Syr. Translator; and I regard it as an interpolation of Revisers, who thought that the sense was thus improved. Had the word been there from the first, few would have thought of removing it; and even they would prob. not have done the thing.

18. τὴν προσαγωγὴν, meaning, by the force of the Article, 'the access which we have.' See notes on Rom. v. 2, and on 1 Cor. xii. 13. In προσάγ. there is an allusion to our introduction to a king, or great man.—ἐν ἐνὶ Πνεύματι, i. e. 'by the intervention of one and the same Holy Spirit in his office of Paraclete.'

19. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] Here we have the inference drawn from what has been said at vv. 15—18: 'So, or now, then,' &c. The terms ξένοι and πάροιχοι differ; the former being applied to a city or country, the latter to a family; thus corresponding respectively to the Latin terms peregrinus and hospes. In the words following, συμπ. refers to the ξένοι, and οἰκεῖοι to the παρ.; comp. ver. 12. The meaning is, that they 'all have now every privilege which the Jews had, of being the people and family of God.'—For ἀλλὰ συμπ. Lachm. and Tisch. adopt ἀλλὰ ἵστα συμπ. from all the most ancient uncials, and 3 cursives, (to which I can make no addition); but on insufficient grounds, espec. since internal evidence is by no means in favour of the word. In fact this is a case precisely like that of the εἰρήνην at v. 17; and what I have said there exactly applies here.

20. On the οἶκος, implied in οἰκεῖοι just before, the Apostle engrafs a figurative comparison of the Church to a House or Temple of God; having in mind, it is supposed, the Temple of Ephesus. The present passage is worthy of admiration, from the skill with which the architectural figures are applied to the subject. By προφητῶν most ancient and early modern Expositors understand 'the prophets of the Old Testament,' as being the heralds of the Gospel. Since, however, the term is put after ἀποστόλων, and the Old Testament prophets could hardly be said to form part of the Christian edifice with the Apostles, the most eminent modern Commentators, from Grotius downwards, seem right in understanding it (as indeed the 5th verse of the next chapter requires) of the προφῆται, or 'inspired teachers of the New Covenant,' mentioned in various parts of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. See also iv. 11. Acts xi. 27.—ὧς ἀκρογωνιαίον. Called in the ancient prophecy (see Matt. xxi. 42), κεφαλὴ γωνίας. In order to understand this expression properly, we must bear in mind that 'the strength of buildings lies in their angles; and that the corner-stone is that which unites and compacts the different sides of them; and that the chief corner-stone is that which is laid at the foundation, upon which the whole angle, or quoin, of the building rests, and which, therefore, is the principal support and tie of the whole edifice. Now Christ is the chief corner-stone; the main stress of this spiritual building lies and rests upon him, who by his death hath united Jews and Gentiles, the two different constituent parts of it, into one compact, regular building and temple.' (Chandl.) In the same manner the expression is explained by the ancient Commentators. And that such is the idea intended to be conveyed, appears from the term συναμολογουμένη in the verse following; comp. also vv. 14—18. Ἀκρογωνιαίον I would render, not, the 'the chief corner-stone' (for all such corner-stones must be equal), but rather (what is confirmed by the absence of the Article), 'a corner-stone; meaning an extreme angular stone, a stone at the extreme angle, the end of the sides; q. d. 'Jesus Christ being like unto a corner-stone, any corner-stone of that kind.' See 1 Pet. ii. 5—7.

21. ἐν ᾧ πᾶσα ἡ οἰκ.] Render: 'by whom,' i. e. 'by means of whom, &c.—συναρμ.—'framed together,' so that the stones shall fit in (λογίζω); according to the ancient manner of building, in which the stones were not squared, but laid λογάδην; see my note on Thucyd. iv. 4. The term is rare, and never found in the Class. writers (though the simple ἀρμολ. occurs twice in the Anthol. Gr., while it is not unfrequent in συναρμολογουμένη αὐξῇ εἰς ναὸν ἅγιον ἐν Κυρίῳ <sup>22</sup> ἢ ἐν ᾧ καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομεῖσθε, εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύματι.

III. <sup>1</sup> Τούτου χάριν ἐγὼ Παῦλος ὁ δέσμιος τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν—<sup>2</sup> εἶγε ἡκούσατε τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς δοθείσης μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, <sup>3</sup> ὅτι κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν ἐγνώρισέ μοι τὸ μυστήριον (καθὼς προέγραψα ἐν ὀλίγῳ <sup>4</sup> πρὸς ὃ δύνασθε ἀναγινώσκοντες νοῆσαι τὴν σύνεσίν μου ἐν τῷ μυστηρίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ) <sup>5</sup> ὃ δ' [ἐν] ἐτέραις γενεαῖς οὐκ ἔγνωνρίσθη τοῖς υἱοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς νῦν ἀπεκαλύφθη

u 1 Pet. 2. 5.
a Acts 21. 83.
ch. 4. 1.
Phil. 1. 7, 18,
14, 16.
Col. 1. 21, 24.
8. 4. 3.
3 Tim. 1. 8.
& 2. 10.
Philim. 1.
b Acts 9. 18.
& 13. 2.
Rom. 1. 8.
1 Cor. 4. 1.
Gal. 1. 16.
ver. 8.
c Acts 22. 17,
21. & 26. 16,
17.
Rom. 16. 25.
Gal. 1. 11, 12.
ch. 1. 9, 10. Col. 1. 26, 29. d Acts 10. 33.

the Fathers. The ἡ before οικοδομή is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., from seven uncial, and several cursive MSS. (to which I can add nearly all the Lamb. and some of the Mus. copies); perhaps rightly. See note, infra, iii. 15.—αὐξῇ εἰς ναὸν, &c., crecūt, assurgūt, a metaphor (Grot. and Koppe observe) taken from animal and vegetable growth, to denote edificial increase. The term was, we may suppose, suggested by the two ideas, of a body and a building, being still in the Apostle's mind.—ἐν Κυρίῳ. This serves to complete the idea in ἅγιον, meaning, 'a temple holy to the Lord.'

<sup>22</sup> ἐν ᾧ] This may, with some, be referred to Κυρίῳ, just before; but better by others to ναόν, which is confirmed by a similar use of the rare word συνοικοδ. in Thucyd. i. 93 (of the walls of Athens), ἐνσυνοικομημένοι μεγάλοι λιθοὶ καὶ ἐντομῇ ἰγγύωνιοι. On εἰς κατοικητ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, see Rom. viii. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 16. 1 John iv. 13, and notes.—ἐν Πνεύματι is by most recent Commentators taken for πνευματικόν. But the sense assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors ('by the Holy Spirit') is far more agreeable to the context, and to the general tenor of the reasoning.

III. The Apostle, having now fully declared that it was the eternal purpose of God to call the Gentiles to be partakers of the privileges of his Church, proceeds to speak of the dignity of his own Apostolical character and office, and of the extraordinary manner by which he was called to, and fitted for, it; that hereby he might not only give his readers a fuller assurance of the truth of the doctrine he had laid down, but prevent their being offended and prejudiced against him, on account of his persecutions and sufferings.

1. ἐγὼ Παῦλος—ἐθνῶν] There is here a seeming deficiency, which the Translators variously supply. Most suppose an ellipse of ἐμὶ, which, however, is evidently inadmissible. It is better, with many eminent Expositors (as Abp. Newc., Bp. Middl., and others), to regard vv. 2—13 inclusive as parenthetical, the thread of the reasoning being resumed by a repetition of τούτου χάριν ('on account of this equal admission of both Jews and Gentiles'). The argument is well stated by Bp. Middl. in the following paraphrase. 'For this cause, I, Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ; for, or 'since' (εἰς equiv. to εἰ—quidem) indeed ye cannot but have heard both of my divine commission, and of the nature of the doctrine which I am commanded to teach (vv. 12, 13), for this cause (τούτου χάριν repeated vv. 14—19) I pray to God, who has been thus merciful in calling you, that ye may be strengthened with might by his Spirit (v. 16), that so Christ may dwell in your hearts.' After this prayer is subjoined a doxology (20, 21), with the concluding Amen.

2. τὴν οἰκονομίαν τ. χ. τ. Θ.] The full sense is: 'the dispensation of the grace of God [committed] to me [by apostleship] for your sake.' Comp. Col. i. 25, κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν δοθείσαν μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς. The εἰς ὑμᾶς is rendered in our Authorized Version, 'to you-ward;' by Abp. Newc., 'towards you;' by Dr. Peile, 'in relation to you.' And certainly the words are capable of that sense: nevertheless, on account of the ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν in the preceding verse, and the εἰς ὑμᾶς in the parallel passage of Col., where the rendering of our Authorized Version is 'for you'—I prefer to render 'for you,' i. e. 'for your sake;' which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr., and all the other ancient Versions.

3. ὅτι [also] that.—κατὰ ἀποκάλ., for ἐν ἀποκαλύψει. Comp. Gal. i. 12.—τὸ μυστήριον, of the calling of the Gentiles.—καθὼς, for καθ' & προεγρ. ἐν ὀλίγῳ, 'according to what I have before briefly glanced at.'—For ἐγνώρισαι, many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have ἐγνώρισθη, which has been received by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but, I apprehend, wrongly; for it has every appearance of being a mere alteration to smoothen a slight ruggedness of style. Internal evidence is, however, rather difficult to balance; because either reading might have arisen from an error of scribes. Moreover, the united suffrages of the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg. attest the extreme antiquity of the reading.

4. πρὸς ὃ] This may be taken, with Koppe, for ἐν ᾧ, or resolved into ὃ ἀναγινώσκοντες δύνασθε νοῆσαι πρὸς αὐτῷ, i. e. ἐν αὐτῷ.—Σύνεσιν. The word signifies intelligence and sagacity (whether natural or acquired, but chiefly the former) as evinced in a thorough knowledge of any thing.

5. ὡς νῦν ἀπεκαλ.] I would still render ὡς, 'in the same manner as,' i. e. 'to the same extent, fulness, and clearness as.'—τοῖς ἀγ. ἀποστ. αὐτοῦ. Olsh. thinks it singular that the Apostle here calls the Apostles, and, consequently, himself, along with them, 'holy'; and De Wette finds in that a mark of the non-apostolical original of this Epistle; 'which, however,' Olsh. says, 'is certainly carrying the thing too far.' Very true! But is not the use of so mild an expression carrying the thing too far? It surely does not follow, that, because an expression is unusual, it must be regarded as not genuine; a Gal. 2. 29.

C c

30. & 2. 14.
ch. 2. 15, 16.
f Rom. 1. 4.
Col. 2. 12.
g Acts 9. 15.
h 12. 2.
i 22. 21.
j 25. 17.
1 Cor. 15. 9.
Gal. 1. 10.
k 2. 8.
l 1 Tim. 1. 12.
15. & 2. 7.
m 2 Tim. 1. 11.
n John 1. 2.
o Rom. 16. 26.
ch. 1. 9.
Col. 1. 10, 26.
p 2 Tim. 1. 10.
q Tit. 1. 2. &
Heb. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20.

τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀποστόλοις αὐτοῦ καὶ προφήταις ἐν πνεύματι. <sup>6</sup> * εἶναι τὰ ἔθνη συγκληρονόμα καὶ σύσσωμα καὶ συμμέτοχα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. <sup>7</sup> * οὐ ἐγενόμην διάκονος κατὰ τὴν δωρεάν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. <sup>8</sup> * ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων [τῶν] ἁγίων ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις αὕτη, ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν εὐαγγελισασθαι τὸν ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>9</sup> * καὶ φωτίσαι πάντας, τίς ἡ * οἰκονομία τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ ἀποκεκρυμμένου ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ τὰ πάντα much less stamp unguineness on the whole work in which it is found. But the expression does occur once elsewhere, in Rev. xviii. 20, εὐφρ. ἰ. αὐ., οὐρανὸν, καὶ οἱ ἄγιοι ἀπόστολοι καὶ οἱ προφ., 'his holy Apostles and Prophets.' It is true that the reading there is doubtful; but see my note. See also Rev. xxii. 6. As to the difficulty here found, or rather made, Olsh. would remove it by regarding the Apostles and Prophets as a Corporation; and hence he says the predicate dy. is subjoined to them in their official character. But there is no need to resort to that θεὸς ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, for the Apostles were as frequently styled ἄγιοι as the Prophets. And they are fully entitled to the appellation, being, as Luke describes them, Acts i. 2, Christ's chosen vessels for conveying to the Church the πνεῦμα δωσιμένης. See more in Dr. Peile's note, who remarks, that the reference is here to their consecration, recorded in John xx. 21, 22, where see notes.

6. By σύσσωμα is denoted 'the union of many members in the same body;' and συμμέτ. (on which see my Lex.) are meant joint heirs, and joint-partakers, of the promise of salvation by Christ. The term σύσσωμα is introduced by way of expressing the idea of close union, so as to form one body.

7. ἔγεν. διάκονος i. e. 'had committed to me the διακονία' mentioned at ver. 2. The same expression occurs at Col. i. 23. Of κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τῆς δυν. the full sense is, 'by the great [and supernatural] efficacy of his power.' See supra i. 19, 20.—τὴν δοθεῖσαν. Six of the most ancient uncial MSS., and ten cursives, the Vulg., Ital., and Copt. Versions, and some Latin Fathers, have τῆς δοθείσης, which was approved by Griesb., and has been received into the text by Lachm. and Tisch. Now, this reading might arise either from negligence on the part of the scribes, who thought that δοθ. belonged to τῆς χάριτος, or from certain Critics, who, having in view the words supra, ver. 2, τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς δοθείσης, supposed the Apostle must have so written here. But that does not follow, since the context there is not quite the same as here. I quite agree with Dr. Peile, that the Apostle did not intend to say, 'which grace has been given me.' But I cannot agree with him, that the Apostle meant to say, 'of which grace there has been given me in proportion to the inworking of his power.' The rendering which Dr. Peile in his note thinks might be adopted (namely, 'according to the gift of God's grace with which I have been gifted') is as good as can be desired. And that he should not have preferred it is strange, considering that he acknowledges that St. Paul has here employed his frequent construction of a cognate noun and verb. The received reading is strongly supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version; and, as respects the Vulgate Version, even Est. rejects it, and prefers the reading δοθείσαν, which is also restored by Tisch. in his 2nd edit. As serving to illustrate this use of ἐνέργ., which signifies lit. inworking, meaning, 'effecting on the inner man, the soul and spirit,' we may compare supra, i. 19, κατὰ τὴν ἐν. τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, and Col. i. 29, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργ. ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν δυνάμει. Here the word δύναμις is implied, since it is from the Holy Spirit that the ἐνέργεια in question proceeds; and, accordingly, Chrys. uses the phrase ἐνέργ. τοῦ Πνεύματος. Even in the Class. writers ἐνέργ. is sometimes used de præsente ore Divina, e.g. Diod. Sic. l. xi. 44, ὥστε καταπληγνύσθαι τὴν τῶν Θεῶν ἐνέργειαν, φηγὺν ἐκ τῶν τόπων.

8. ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων τῶν ἁγ. [to me [I say] who am beyond comparison the least of all saints.—ἐλαχιστ. A comparative formed on a superlative (ἐλάχιστοι), like πρώτιστος. 'Ελαχιστότατος' is found in Sext. Emp. The Apostle means to say that, of all persons now Christians, he was, by reason of his former bigoted adherence to Judaism, and persecution of the Gospel, humanly speaking, the least worthy of the supernatural call, and Divine illumination, which had been vouchsafed to him.—τῶν before ἁγίων, absent from A, C, D, E, F, G, J, K, and many cursives (to which I add all the Lamb. and several Mus. copies), is with reason cancelled by all the Critical Editors.—ἀνεξιχν. πλ. τ. Χρ., 'the inscrutable, unsearchable, riches of Christ,' meaning, the unfathomable depth of his wisdom and mercy, as shown in the mystery of human redemption by Christ; which could have been known only from revelation, and was disclosed to Paul κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, as it is said ver. 3; comp. Rom. xi. 33, ὡ βάθος πλοῦτον—Θεοῦ ὡς ἀνεξιχνίαστοι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ, meaning, his ways of mercy and compassion just before adverted to.

9. φωτίσαι πάντας lit. 'to bring the light to all men,' 'to cause them clearly to see,' show them clearly.—τίς ἡ οἰκον. τοῦ μυστ., &c., meaning, 'what [and how great] is that dispensation which reveals the mystery, that had been hidden in [the secret counsels of] God.'—τῷ τῷ πάντα κτίσαντι, 'who created all things,' i. e. both physically (see Col. i. 16) and morally, by regeneration. See supra, ii. 10, κτισθέντες ἐν Χρ. Ἰησοῦ; see also iv. 24. Strange it is that κτίσαντι [διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] <sup>10</sup> ἵνα γνωρισθῇ νῦν ταῖς <sup>11</sup> Pet. 1. 12.

 ἀρχαῖς καὶ ταῖς ἐξουσίαις ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας <sup>k John 10. 9.</sup>
 ἡ πολυποίκιλος σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ, <sup>11</sup> κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, <sup>2</sup> Rom. 5. 2.
 ἣν ἐποίησεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν <sup>12</sup> ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν <sup>ch. 2. 18.</sup> τὴν παρρησίαν καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐν πεποιθήσει διὰ τῆς <sup>Heb. 4. 14—</sup> πίστεως αὐτοῦ. <sup>13</sup> Διὸ αἰτούμαι μὴ ἐκκακεῖν ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι <sup>10. 19—32.</sup> <sup>1</sup> ch. v. 1.
<sup>2</sup> Phil. 1. 14.
<sup>3</sup> 1 Thess. 3. 2.
<sup>4</sup> Col. 1. 24.

Dr. Peile should have been so far misled by the flimsy reasonings of Mackn. as to retain the t. rec. κοινωνία, which is destitute of any external authority of weight, and is at direct variance with internal evidence. Οικονομία, which I long ago adopted, I have now found in all the Lamb. and in the best Mus. copies. As to transcribers substituting οικονομία for κοινωνία, strange were it that almost all should have taken a liberty which, in point of fact, they hardly ever did. That was reserved for the Critics, who undertook to revise and improve texts. If the transcribers had any hand in this matter, it was rather by mistaking οικον. for κοινωνία. Dr. Peile, indeed, avers that the view of the passage taken by Mackn. is confirmed by the Apostle's use of φωτισαί here and elsewhere; for which observation he was indebted to Calv. But, although Calv. takes for granted that κοινωνία is the true reading, yet in his exposition he is compelled to give it a sense quite unheard of,—namely, promulgation. But the argument as respects φωτισαί depends entirely on that interpretation, and, therefore, is wholly baseless, since it would be reasoning in a circle. It was pardonable in Mackn. to battle so hard for κοιν., since it may be thought to afford some countenance to his notion that the 'Apostle is here contrasting the discoveries made in the Gospel with those in the heathen mysteries, and the Christian Church with their religious societies, or fellowships.' But that (like very many others proceeding from the same writer) is too fanciful to merit any serious attention.

10. ἵνα γνωρισθῇ — ἐπουρανίοις Render: 'to the intent that now (i. e. in these latter days, as it is said Heb. i. 2) to the princedoms and powers in the heavenly [mansions];' meaning those various orders of angels alluded to supra, i. 21 (and of which fuller mention is made in Col. i. 10), all equally created by him. Thus here by ταῖς ἀρχαῖς we are to understand the ἀρχαί, 'princedoms,' so created.—διὰ τῆς ἐκκλ., 'by,' or 'through, the Church,' i. e. simply by what is going on therein.—namely, the Church (agreeably to the words of Christ, Matt. xvi. 13) now (νῦν) already built up, founded on a rock, 'against which the gates of hell shall not prevail.'—γνωρ. imports the communication of more light and knowledge, even to beings of such great wisdom. See Chandi.—πολυποίκιλος. This is not well rendered manifold; a sense which would rather require πολύπλοκος. I should prefer multifarious, 'immensely diversified,' as denoting what is 'conspicuously excellent.'

11. I have now pointed Θεοῦ, κατὰ πρόθ., and would not object to even Θεοῦ κατὰ (with Rob. Steph., in his edit. O mirif.), which may be preferable, on the ground that there is an ellipsis of some particip. pass., such as δηλουμένη, δεικνυμένη, or such like, to be fetched out of γνωρισθῇ, at ver. 10. Render: 'according to his most ancient purpose, (counsel, plan, and dispensation), which, having formed from eternal ages, he executed by Christ Jesus our Lord;' meaning, 'that the angels understood the manifold wisdom of God, by the gathering the Christian Church, in that disposition of the ages which He formed or settled by Jesus Christ; all which had a reference to him, and led on to the accomplishment of the Divine purposes of mercy and favour towards mankind, in and by him.'—κατὰ πρόθ. may be for ἐν προθέσει, i. e. 'displayed in the predisposition, foreordering of the ages or ordinations of Divine Providence.' Considering, however, that the passages alleged to establish this use of κατὰ have only an accus. of person, not thing, and are, besides, not of the same character, it may be best to retain the usual signification, according to, in conformity with (in the way of fulfilment).

12. τὴν παρρησίαν καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν Wakef. renders, 'this plainness of speech and admission.' But that sense would require ταύτην τὴν. However, considering that neither παρρησία nor προσαγωγή can be regarded as strictly abstract nouns, the Article should certainly be expressed by rendering, 'the freedom, or free privilege, of address in prayer, and the introduction to the throne of grace.' I agree with Mr. Green (Gram. N. T. p. 23), that the Article at προσαγ. is used by way of intimating that it is employed in the well-known technical sense (on which see my Lex. N. T.), and as, therefore, necessary to preserve the allusion. See my note supra, ii. 18. The same remark applies, mutatis mutandis, to παρρ., on which also see my Lex. N. T.

13. The connexion is well laid down by Theophyl. thus: 'Wherefore [since great is the mystery of your calling, and as great things are committed to me to preach to you, and I must needs suffer bonds and injurious treatment from those who understand not this mystery], I desire that ye faint not, i. e. be not troubled and disconcerted, as if something unexpected had happened.'—In αἰτούμαι μὴ ἐκκακεῖν there is an obscurity arising partly from extreme brevity, but chiefly from the want of some pronoun at αἰτ. Several recent Commentators supply με, and take αἰτ. in the sense 'I pray God that I may not faint,' &c. Yet the context rather requires αἰτ. to be taken in the sense 'I earnestly intreat,' which necessarily implies ὑμῖν. The difficulty, however, chiefly turns on the words ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι μου ἐπὶ ὑμῶν, ἧτις ἐστὶ δόξα ὑμῶν: but it will disappear if we regard the sentence as consisting of three clauses compressed into one; and which, when dilated in a paraphrase, will yield a very plain sense, thus: 'I intreat you not to be discouraged in your Christian profession, at the evils I suffer (which, however, I suffer for

μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ δόξα ὑμῶν—<sup>14</sup> Τούτου χάριν κάμπτω
τὰ γόνατά μου πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>15</sup> ἐξ οὗ πᾶσα πατριὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς ὀνομάζεται <sup>16</sup> ἵνα δῶῃ ὑμῖν, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, δυνάμει κραταιωθῆναι διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, <sup>17</sup> κατοικῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν <sup>18</sup> ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ τεθεμελιωμένοι, ἵνα ἐξισχύ-

m Rom. 2.
29. & 7. 22.
2 Cor. 4. 16.
ch. 6. 10.
1 Pet. 2. 4.
n Col. 2. 7.

your sake and in your cause, by preaching the equality of the Gentiles with the Jews); since those afflictions are so far from being a reproach to me or you,—that they are rather matter of glory to you, in behalf of whom I suffer, when you consider the firmness with which I endure them as an attestation of my sincerity in the Gospel I preached to you; so that ye may be proud of being converted by me.—'Εκκαεῖν signifies properly to be tired out (see note on Gal. vi. 9), but figuratively, 'to despond,' 'to despair,' as here and in 2 Cor. iv. 16, where see note. The Class. term is ἐκκαμνει τινι. Griesbach and Scholz have most carelessly omitted to specify the var. lect. ἐγκαεῖν, though noticed by Wetst., and found in A, B, D, E, and several cursive MSS.,—nay, received into the text by Lachm. and Tisch., both here and in all the other passages where εκκ. occurs in the t. rec.; but, as I have already shown, without any sufficient reason.

14. τούτου χάριν] I would refer this, not, with most Commentators, to what immediately precedes; but, with Crell. and Bp. Middl., to ver. 1, where see note.—κάμπτω τὰ γόνατά μου. An Oriental form of expression, denoting humble and fervent prayer.—Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν 'I. Xp.' 'This is,' as Rosenm. remarks, 'used instead of Θεόν, to intimate that it is on account of this mysterious connexion that salvation redounds to Christians. From the mention (continues he) of this connexion subsisting between God the Father and the Son, the Apostle was led to introduce that which subsists, though of a very different kind, between all created beings and the Father.'

15. ἐξ οὗ πᾶσα πατριὰ, &c.] 'Εξ οὗ may refer, either (as some suppose) to the Father, from whom both men and angels are named, i. e. denominated the family and sons of God, ii. 19. Luke xx. 36. John i. 12, or (according to others) to Christ, by whom saints and angels are incorporated into one family, or society, of which he is the Head. But the former mode is preferable. 'From whom,'—namely, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, God the Father; since both his family above, even his angels, and that below, his saints, are alike called after him, sons of God. By the use of the singular, πατριὰ with πᾶσα, it is intimated that these different families form in effect but one united family, alike οἰκεῖσι τοῦ Θεοῦ, and forming the household of God.

16—19. This portion contains the substance of the prayer, and may be compared with a parallel passage of Col. ii. 1—10.

16. κατὰ τὸν πλ. τ. δ. α.] The sense seems to be, 'according to his abundant beneficence and mercy, which is his glory; δυνάμει being for δυνατῶς. This is not to be understood, with Chandl., merely of firmness of resolution and courage in professing the Gospel amidst persecution, but must comprehend (as Mr. Scott suggests) 'all the holy dispositions of their renewed souls, in faith, reverential fear, love, gratitude, hatred of sin, hope, and patience; that thus they might be steadfast amidst temptations and persecutions, enjoy comfort, and glorify God in every situation.' On the expression τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, see notes on Rom. vii. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 16. So Plato said, p. 589, τοῦ ἔξω ἀνθρώπου ὁ ἐντὸς ἀνθρώπος ἵσταται ἱγκρατίστατος. Read —ερος.—'ἵνα δῶῃ ὑμῖν. Most of the uncial MSS. have δῶ, which has been edited by Lachm. and Tisch.; but wrongly; since in favour of the unusual form, and very rare construction, ἵνα, followed by Opt.; for δῶῃ is the com. Gr. form for Attic δότην. Rare, however, as is the form δῶῃ, it occurs with ἵνα supr. i. 17 (where Lachm. reads δῶ from only one MS.), also, but without ἵνα, in Rom. xv. 8. 2 Thess. iii. 16. 2 Tim. i. 16, 18; all sine var. lect. This is not the only passage where δῶῃ has offended the Critics and been altered, e. g. at 2 Tim. ii. 7. into δῶσαι, found in 6 uncials, and 3 cursives, and adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.; but, as I have shown, wrongly. At 2 Tim. ii. 25, δῶ is in the t. rec.; but δῶῃ is found in A, C, D, F, G, and several cursives, and is edited by Lachm. and Tisch., and, as I have shown, is prob. the true reading.

17. κατοικῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν—καρδίαις ὑμῶν] 'so that Christ may by the exercise of lively faith [through the Spirit] dwell in your hearts,'—namely, as in a Temple consecrated to his service. Comp. supra, ch. ii. 22. Thus the heart of the Christian believer is compared to a temple fit for the abode of God (by an allusion, as we may suppose from the verse following, to the celebrated temple of Diana at Ephesus); the faith of a Christian being considered as a building, wherein God and Christ dwell by the Holy Spirit. Of course it is implied that the Heavenly Guest is received (as says Calv.) 'animæ nostræ complexu,' embraced with the whole heart. The words following, ver. 18, advert to the other principle of the Christian life besides faith,—namely, love, meaning the love of Christ and his Gospel; and the terms ἐρριζ. and τεθεμελ. intimate that it should be deeply rooted and firmly grounded; the former being a metaphor derived from trees, the latter from buildings. Both terms occur in Col. i. 23.

18. ἵνα ἐξιχύσῃται, &c.] Here is represented the result of this love. The meaning being, that in proportion as these feelings are rooted in the heart, they shall, under the teaching of the Spirit, be able to comprehend, &c. The expressions τὸ πλάτος καὶ μήκος, καὶ βάθος, are meant simply to intimate the vast extent, viz., of the love of Christ; for at ὑψος the thread of the construc-

σητε καταλαβέσθαι σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις, τί τὸ πλάτος καὶ μήκος καὶ βάθος καὶ ὕψος,—<sup>19</sup> γινῶναι τε τὴν υπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ. <sup>20</sup> Ὁ Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ ὑπὲρ πάντα ποιῆσαι ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ ὧν αἰτούμεθα ἢ νοοῦμεν, κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τὴν ἐνεργουμένην ἐν ἡμῖν, <sup>21</sup> αὐτῷ ἢ δοῖα ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς τοῦ αἰῶνος τῶν αἰῶνων!
 ἀμήν.

IV. <sup>1</sup> Παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ, ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ, ἀξίως

tion is, from intensity of feeling, dropped; and the words are wanting which ought properly to have followed, τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ, and are to be supplied from the words of the new construction taken up at γινῶναι τε—ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ver. 19, where we have a brief form of expression for what, at full length, would stand thus: 'and [in short] to know [as far as is attainable by man] the love of Christ, though completely to know and fathom it surpasses all human powers.' For 'there is (as observes Bp. Sanderson) such a height and depth, and length and breadth in every part, as nought but an infinite understanding can fathom. "So God loved the world." But how much that so containeth, no tongue can tell, no wit of man can reach. It is a love incomprehensible. It swalloweth up the sense and understanding of men and angels; fitter to be admired and adored with silence, than blemished with any of our weak expressions.'

19. γινῶναι—τοῦ Χριστοῦ] This has been thought to involve a contradiction, and has given rise to no little discussion. The difficulty, however, may be effectually removed by considering this as a brief mode of expression; of which the sense, conveyed in a few more words, is as follows: 'And [in short] to know the immense love of Christ' (i. e. the immensity of redeeming love); though, indeed, to completely know it surpasses the powers of all finite beings. The next words ἵνα πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ suggest the result of the foregoing,—namely, their being filled εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'unto all the fulness of God'; an unusual form of expression, capable of more than one sense, but here to be understood of what was before spoken of,—namely, the in-strengthening by the power of the Spirit, obtained by the spiritual in-dwelling of God the Father, and Christ the Son, ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις ἢ πιστοῖς (comp. iv. 6), implying 'all the gifts and graces of the Spirit which flow therefrom.'

20, 21. Of this noble doxology the general sense is clear, and therefore no petty exceptions are to be taken at the phraseology; as, for instance, ὑπὲρ πάντα and ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ; since this accumulation of the same or similar phrases, like the repetition of words, serves to strengthen the sense. The most correct mode of viewing the phraseology is to consider that if ἐκ περισσοῦ had been away, there would have been a simple repetition of ὑπὲρ, of which ὧν would have been governed; and thus ὑπὲρ ὑπὲρ would have corresponded to longè longè in Latin. As it is, ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ is a stronger term than ὑπὲρ or ἐκ περισσοῦ would have been separately, though having the same regimen as either,—namely, a Genit., which here may be resolved into ικένων δ; and as the ἐκ περισσοῦ enhances the sense here, so in Plato de Legibus, l. v. p. 219, we have ἐκ περισσοῦ ὑπάρχει τοῖς ἄλλοις. Two clauses here seem blended into one. When separated, the passage will run thus: 'Now unto him who is able to do for us all things that we can ask—nay, who is able to do all things infinitely beyond what we can ask, or even conceive.'

21. ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] The expression is very emphatic, intimating that 'it is through Him alone we are to offer up all prayers and praises,' Heb. xiii. 15; 'all intercourse (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson) between heaven and earth, God and man, being through him.' So that if any grace come from God to us, it is through him; if any glory come from us to God, it is through him: q. d. 'according to the powerful influence of his Spirit, that now is working in us [by his gifts and graces, see 1 Cor. xii. 6 and 11. Phil. ii. 13. 1 Thess. ii. 13], to him [I say] be glory in the Church, through Christ Jesus (namely, as Mediator, see Heb. xiii. 15), throughout all generations, to the latest period of eternity.'

IV. Having concluded the doctrinal and argumentative part of the Epistle,—showing God's gracious design in the Gospel dispensation, and the benefits and privileges that appertain to all the faithful in Christ Jesus; as also the manner of his calling the Gentiles into his Church, and how precious was the blessing,—the Apostle now subjoins (agreeably to his custom) various practical directions, and, with affectionate earnestness, exhorts his readers to walk, live, worthy of their high calling. And first he presses upon them the duties of unity and concord, from the consideration of their being all alike members of the same body, of which Christ is the mystical Head. I. To cultivate a unity of spirit amidst the diversity of gifts imparted by the Holy Spirit, vv. 1—16. II. To evince the difference between their former and their present state, both by shunning the vices to which the heathens were so prone, and by cultivating the opposite virtues, vv. 16—38. v. 1—33. vi. 1—9. To this is, at ch. vi. 10—20, subjoined a final and general exhortation to manfully maintain the spiritual warfare as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

1. οὖν, &c.,] accordingly such being your high privileges and hopes.—ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ: lit. 'the person who is a prisoner,' &c.; for that is the force of the Article, which has here the use κατ' ἐξοχήν. Ἐν Κυρίῳ is for διὰ τοῦ

o Rom. 16.
20.
Jude 24.
p ch. i. 6.
1 Chron. 29.
Ps. 29. 1, 2.
& 73. 19.
& 118. 1.
Isa. 6. 3.
& 43. 12.
e ch. 4. 1.
Phil. 1. 27.
Col. 1. 10.
1 Thess. 2.
12.

b Col. 1. 11.
 & 2. 12, 15.
 & 2. 12.

c Rom. 12.
 5, 10.
 1 Cor. 12. 4.
 11.
 ch. 2. 16.
 d 1 Cor. 8. 4.
 & 12. 5.
 e Mal. 2. 10.
 1 Cor. 12. 6.
 f Rom. 12. 5.
 6.
 1 Cor. 12. 11.

περιπατήσαι τῆς κλήσεως ἧς ἐκλήθητε, <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> μετὰ πάσης ταπεινω-φροσύνης καὶ πραότητος, μετὰ μακροθυμίας ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλων ἐν ἀγάπῃ, <sup>3</sup> σπουδάζοντες τηρεῖν τὴν ἐνότητα τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐν τῷ συνδέσμῳ τῆς εἰρήνης. <sup>4</sup> <sup>c</sup> Ἐν σῶμα καὶ ἐν Πνεύμα, καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν μιᾷ ἐλπίδι τῆς κλήσεως ὑμῶν <sup>5</sup> <sup>d</sup> εἰς Κύριος, μία πίστις, ἐν βάπτισμα. <sup>6</sup> <sup>e</sup> εἰς Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ πάν-
 των, ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων καὶ διὰ πάντων καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν ὑμῖν. <sup>7</sup> <sup>f</sup> Ἐνὶ

Κυρίου, 'in the Lord's cause.'—περιπατήσαι, denoting habitual life and practice.—κλήσεως, namely, the state to which they were called and admitted by the grace of God; i. e. that of the Gospel; meaning that they should walk worthy of the privileges it bestows, and suitably to the duties it enjoins. So Phil. i. 27, ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε. Compare also 1 Thess. ii. 12. Col. i. 10.

2. The Apostle now, with admirable address, slides into the mention of those duties in which the Ephesians, it seems, were most deficient.—ταπειν. καὶ πραότ. The two terms are nearly synonymous in use (and so our old English writers treat them; e. gr. Chaucer says that 'humility, or meekness, is the remedy against pride'; and Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. 10, 'he humbly louded in meekes lowliness'); but they so far differ, as that the latter arises out of the former. Aristot. (Rhet. ii. 31) defines πραότ. as the contrary disposition to passionalness (δρ-γυλότης), and thus ταπειν. is the opposite to pride and arrogance. So Est. well observes, 'Mansuetudo est iracundiae contraria, sicut humilitas superbiae.' However, it need not be confined to anger, but extended to any other violent emotion. So Jerome well remarks, 'Mansuetudo illa est, quae nulla passione turbatur, et specialiter ira non rumpitur,' meaning any passionate affection that might cloud the judgment, and so prejudice the mind, as to render the person unreasonable, or iniquitable; thus destroying that candour and impartiality, which are so indispensable to duly bearing with each other. This is confirmed by Ambrose: 'Perturbatio enim et inquietudo contentione facit; hinc oritur discordia, quae corrumpit pacis foedera.' So also Thom. Aquin. explains the words as not confined to pride and anger, but extended to impatience of spirit, and also to inordinate zeal, whereby those, who are turned away by it, 'omnia quae vident iudicantes nec tempus nec locum servantes, conciliantur turbatio in societate.' Whereas, observes Ambrose, by bearing with each other's infirmities, 'cum lenitate animi monendo corriguntur delinquentes, et pax fratribus, per quam filii Dei non immerito vocabuntur, quia dixit Dominus, μακάριοι εἰρηνοποιοί, οἱ αὐτοὶ υἱοὶ Θεοῦ κληθήσονται.'

3. τ. τὴν ἐνότητα τοῦ Πνεύμ.] 'Anxiously striving after the unity so suitable and agreeable to the dictates of the Holy Spirit,' whose influence they possessed. Thus 'unity of spirit,' = 'spiritual unanimity,' the Article having in this case no force: as also, infra, ver. 13, εἰς τὴν ἐνότητα τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς ἐκγνώσεως, 'unity of sentiment, that of faith and knowledge;' comp. Phil. i. 27, ὅτι στήκετε ἐν ἑνὶ πνεύματι μιᾷ ψυχῇ, &c., meaning, 'by the cultivation of unanimity,' ὁμονοῦντες καὶ ὁμοψυχοῦντες. Unity of spirit is what is here especially intended; though that of unanimity, one-heartedness, should be included.—ἐν τῷ συνδ. τῆς εἰρήνης, i. e. 'by the cultivation of that peaceable spirit, which binds all together.' So Ovid, Metam. i. 25, cited by Wetst., 'Dissociata locis concordia pace ligavit.'

4—16 form the reason on which the injunction at ver. 3 is founded. At vv. 4—6 the Apostle urges the cultivation of Christian unanimity by reference to the oneness which prevails in the Gospel system. And the general sense intended in this verse is, 'There is one and the same body (meaning the Church Universal) sanctified by one Holy Spirit, even as also ye were called [by that Spirit] unto one hope of your calling,—namely, the hope of the resurrection to life and glory.' That the Holy Spirit is here meant, and not, as some understand, the spirit of Christ, still less spirit or mind simply, is certain from the words supra, ch. ii. 18, ὅτι δι' αὐτοῦ (i. e. Christ) ἔχομεν τὴν προσαγωγὴν—ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα. The word εἰς, repeated throughout this whole passage (vv. 4—6), means, 'one and the same;' for the Apostle is here enumerating every thing in the religion wherein there is an isότης.

4. καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε, &c.] Render: 'even as also ye were called [by one Spirit] unto one hope of your calling;' i. e. to one hope of the blessings resulting from that calling.—ἐν μιᾷ ἐλπί., for εἰς μίαν ἐλπίδα, 'to one common hope.'

5. εἰς Κύριος] meaning, 'one and the same Lord Jesus Christ, your common Saviour.'—μία πίστις, 'one and the same faith,' as containing one settled and fixed substance of truth, such as was taught by the Apostles, and soon afterwards embodied in the Apostles' Creed, and formed the fundamental principles of belief necessary to be professed in order to receive Christian baptism. Hence baptism is immediately subjoined. Moreover, by ἐν βάπτισμα it is intimated that all Christians, however they may differ in opinion, are initiated into the Christian society by the same ceremony, and with the same form of expression.

6. ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων] 'In answer to those who would draw these words to exclude Christ from being God, we deny not that God the Father is one God over all, or that there is one who is both one God and the Father; only we add, that there is also One, who is one God of the same essence, and the Son, and hath his principality in all things; and so also say we of the Holy Spirit; and that as the one Lord and one Spirit here do not exclude the Father from being both Lord and Spirit, so neither doth the one God and Father exclude the Son or Holy Spirit from being God, but only from being God the Father.'

δὲ ἐκάστω ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ Χριστοῦ.—<sup>8</sup> Διὸ λέγει· Ἀναβὰς εἰς ὕψος ἡχημαλώτευσεν <sup>Ps. 18. Col. 2. 15.</sup> αἰχμαλωσίαν, καὶ ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.
<sup>9</sup> Ἡ Τὸ δὲ, ἀνέβη, τί ἐστίν, εἰ μὴ ὅτι καὶ κατέβη [πρῶτον] εἰς <sup>John 8. 12. 3 d. 62.</sup>

(Whitby).—διὰ πάντων, i. e. 'filling all things with his presence, and overruling them by his Providence.'

7. ἐνὶ δὲ—δωρ. τοῦ Χρ.] This is intended to encounter an objection—namely, that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are different in different persons; which might occasion envy, and be unfavourable to unity. The sense is, '[It is true that these gifts are not the same in all:] but then to each one of us is given the gracious aid of the Spirit according to the measure [not of faith, or natural endowments, but] of the gift of Christ'; i. e. in such measure and proportion as Christ thinks fit to bestow. Being, therefore, freely bestowed, they ought to excite, not conceit and arrogance, but thankfulness to God for his 'unspeakable gift.'

8. The Apostle now proceeds to prove the gift of the Spirit to be from Christ, by an appeal to Ps. lxxviii. 18, taken mystically. The argument is this: 'In the Scriptures some one is said to have ascended up into heaven, and from thence to have distributed gifts unto men. But since God himself cannot be said to have ascended unto heaven, inasmuch as he always is in heaven, and never descended from it, the Prophet must necessarily have had in mind some other Person, who, after he had descended from heaven to earth, ascended from thence unto heaven. And he can be no other than Jesus the Messiah, whom we know to have descended from, and again ascended up to, heaven.' At λέγει supply ἡ γραφή; a frequent ellipsis. The λέγει, however, does not necessarily imply a regular quotation; and the passage following is clearly not intended to be such; as appears from the change of the second person into the third. The only variation is, that for ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, the Sept. has ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ. The ἀνθρώπῳ, however, agrees neither with the Hebrew nor the Greek of the Apostle, and yields no tolerable sense; and, in short, is corrupt. Some MSS. have ἀνθρώποις, which is doubtless the right reading. But the error rests chiefly in the ἐν, for which I would read ἐπ', answering to the for of our English Version. Now ἐν and ἐπ' are perpetually interchanged. Thus the only variation will be in the use of ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις for ἔλαβες δ. τοῖς ἀνθρώποις (for so, I apprehend, the Apostle read in the Sept.); and that is no discrepancy, the meaning being the very same; for the sense of the Hebr. וְיָתַד מִן הַשָּׁמַיִם וְעָלָה בְּאָדָם δ. ἐπ' ἀνθ. can be no other than 'thou hast received gifts on account of men'; i. e. to give to men. And the Apostle only says ἔδωκε to make the sense plainer; as also does the Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Syriac and Arabic Translators. After carefully weighing what Dr. Peile has alleged against my interpretation of these words, I see no reason to alter my opinion as to the general sense intended by the Sept. Translator and the Apostle. Dr. Peile strenuously contends for the common reading in the Sept., ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ, which he would render, 'after the fashion of a man.' But this involves a harshness intolerable. It is difficult to imagine how so accomplished a Greek scholar, and so excellent a grammarian, could have seriously brought himself to trace the construction of the last clause in ver. 18 of the Sept. (namely, καὶ γὰρ ἀπειθύντες τοῦ κατασκευάσαι) thus: καὶ γὰρ ἀπειθύντες [ἔλαβον δόματα] τοῦ (equiv. to ὥστε) κατασκευάσαι ἐν αὐτοῖς (1) τὴν Δόξαν, 1 Sam. iv. 21, 22. Rom. ix. 4; (2) τὸν ὕλον τὸν μονογενῆ, John iii. 16; (3) τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, Acts v. 32. It is impossible to deny this the praise of great ingenuity, but it is needless to say that it can by no means be received. With respect to the rest, Dr. Peile takes for granted (what ought to be shown as at least probable) that the Apostle meant to direct the thoughts of his readers to vv. 29—32 of the Psalm. If so, why should he not have made that meaning plain by partial quotation or otherwise? I grant, indeed, that the Sept. Translator may have, in writing ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ, intended only a literal version of the Hebr., i. e. 'in the man.' But that would have required וְעָלָה. With respect to the last clause of the verse in the Sept., which Dr. Peile, by a sort of Procrustean process, attempts to bring to some tolerable construction, even by almost re-writing, it is undoubtedly very corrupt; nor is the corruption to be excused by supposing less than this, that the original here was (if ἀνθρώπῳ be the true reading just before) καίπερ ἀπειθύνει, τοῦ κατασκευάσαι (scil. τὸν Κύριον to be supplied mentally from v. 16). I have adopted καίπερ from the Version of Aquila, which derives some confirmation from that of Symm., and which, I doubt not, was formerly read in the Sept. And certain it is that γὰρ and καίπερ are frequently confounded by the scribes. Supposing, however, the Sept. to have written ἀνθρώποις, then I would read from Symm. ἀπειθύνει, which is supported by the reading ἀπειθεῖς of Aquila, who probably wrote ἀπειθύνει. Of course the words ἐν αὐτοῖς (namely, the dwellers in Mount Zion, see ver. 16) are left to be supplied from the context. Thus the Hebrew and the Sept. will, in this clause, be well reconciled. It is not necessary to make the words of the Sept. and the Apostle exactly tally, since the Apostle did not intend to cite, but only to apply the words of the Psalmist to his present purpose. Now such application allows of partial modification. And surely here the liberty does not run into licence, inasmuch as the Chaldee Paraphrast and the Syr., Arab., and Æthiopic Translators confirm the Apostle's view. Nay, even the Jewish Expositor, Solomon Jarchi, in his Comment. in loc., explains וְעָלָה to mean 'acceptisti munera, ut illa dares filiis hominum.'

9. τί ἐστίν] 'what does it infer or imply?' The Apostle's argument is, that if Christ ascended into heaven, he must have first descended and been on earth. For the original abode in heaven of the Messiah was not doubted even by the Jews themselves. The expression τὰ

1 Acts 2. 33. τὰ κατώτερα [μέρη] τῆς γῆς; <sup>10</sup> <sup>1</sup> Ὁ καταβάς αὐτός ἐστι καὶ
 ὁ ἀναβάς ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα.
 —11 <sup>k</sup> Καὶ αὐτὸς ἔδωκε, τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλους, τοὺς δὲ προφήτας, τοὺς δὲ εὐαγγελιστάς, τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους, <sup>12</sup> <sup>1</sup> πρὸς
 τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων εἰς ἔργον διακονίας, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν

κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς was, by many of the old Expositors, taken of Hell. That interpretation, however, has been overturned by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 229, and by some other of our great Divines. Many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, understand it of the grave, agreeably to the frequent use of the expression in the Old Test. Since, however, that sense is not very suitable to the Apostle's argument, the best Expositors are now generally agreed, that τὰ κατ. μέρη τῆς γῆς means 'the lower regions,'—namely, of the earth; τῆς γῆς being a Genit. of explanation. Thus the expression καταβάς εἰς τὰ κατώτ. μέρη τῆς γῆς will refer, not to Christ's descent into the grave, but to his descent to earth, and incarnation on earth, terminating with his descent into the grave.

10. ὁ καταβάς—ὁ ἀναβάς] meaning, 'Now he who thus descended, is the same as he who [at his resurrection] ascended far above all the heavens;' i. e. to the highest heaven; compare Heb. vii. 26. Ps. viii. 1. cviii. 4, 5. In ἵνα πληρ. τὰ π. the neuter is for the masculine; and the sense is, 'that thus he might fill all persons (i. e. all believers) with the gifts and graces necessary for them;' see i. 23, and iii. 19. The reason why the neuter was employed in preference to the masculine, seems to have been this, that the Apostle regarded the persons in question as members (μέρη) of the same mystical body of Christ,—the Church. So at ver. 12, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χ. Also ver. 16, τὸ σῶμα—ἡ μήτηρ ἐνὸς ἑκάστου μέλους.

11. The Apostle now illustrates and exemplifies this πλήρωμα, in its various degrees; and shows that in all cases the gifts were given [not to excite self-conceit, but] πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων. Now as we have here only an enumeration of the variety of spiritual gifts, we must not expect any such exact detail, as that in 1 Cor. xii. 8—11, 28—30. The οἱ πνευματικοί, however, are evidently placed in the order of dignity, as in 1 Cor. xii. 29, 30, to which last passage this bears a strong affinity. And the προφ. and διδάσκαλοι here seem exactly to correspond to the προφ. and διδ. there. With respect to the εὐαγγ., however, much difference of opinion exists. In the only two other passages where the word occurs in the New Test. (Acts xxi. 8, and 2 Tim. iv. 5) it simply denotes a preacher of the Gospel. But here some more special sense is evidently meant. Now we learn from Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. v. 9, and other writers cited by Suicer, that, in the Apostolic Church, εὐαγγ. was the appellation given to those preachers who aided the labours of the Apostles (and we may suppose also the προφῆται, or principal Teachers, of 1 Cor. xii.), not by taking charge of any particular Church, but by acting as itinerant preachers and teachers, wherever their labours might be needed, and thus building on a foundation previously laid by the Apostles or Prophets. This is the account which the ancients give of the duties of the εὐαγγελισται. But when we consider what were the duties of the Seven εὐαγγελισταί only a few years before, of whom Philip was one (Acts xxi. 8), we can scarcely doubt, that to those above mentioned may be added that of evangelizing the heathen,—in fact, discharging the kind of duty performed by the Missionaries of modern times. To these εὐαγγελισταί there is, I apprehend, nothing corresponding in the enumeration at 1 Cor. xii. Or perhaps the διδάσκαλοι there may include the εὐαγγ.; for it would seem that the διδάσκαλοι here are not the same with those in 1 Cor., and that the term is here closely conjoined with ποιμένες, to show that it was not, properly speaking, a separate order; though the ποιμένες appear to have been superior in dignity to the διδάσκαλοι, and are supposed to have been the same with the κυβερνήται at 1 Cor. xii. 28 (see, however, the note there), or the οἱ προϊστάμενοι at Rom. xii. 8, and the ἐπίσκοποι of Acts xx. 28. It is thought that the ποιμένες were those who had the more important pastoral charges in cities and large towns; the διδάσκαλοι, the smaller ones; see Theodoret. Thus it would happen, that the κύρι ποιμένες would have first an influence with, and then an authority over, the country Pastors. Hence gradually their offices would vary and become distinct; the ποιμ. at first discharging all the ordinary pastoral duties, and afterwards, when they became regarded as superintendents,—and were then styled ἐπίσκοποι,—they either discharged them, or not, according to circumstances. The ἰδωκε here corresponds to the ἰθετο of 1 Cor. xii. 28; but the former is here used with reference to the ἰδωκε δόματα at ver. 8.

12. The Apostle here adverts to what is the sole intent of these divers gifts, namely, πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν, &c., 'for the setting right, putting in due order of the saints, by fully instructing them in the doctrines and discipline of the Gospel.' Such is the use of καταρτίζεσθαι at 2 Cor. xiii. 11, and Gal. vi. 11, comp. with Luke vi. 40. The next words express the same sense, with adaptation to the foregoing imagery, ch. ii. 20—22, by which the body of the Church universal is compared to a grand edifice (such as the temple of Diana at Ephesus) forming an habitation of God through his Spirit. The words εἰς ἔργον διακονίας seem thrown in between κατ. τῶν ἁγίων and εἰς οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ σώμ. τ. Χρ., by way of explaining the nature of that καταρτισμὸν, and may be rendered, 'as regards the work and office of ministering to them,' viz. to their souls; comp. εἰς διακονίαν τοῖς ἁγίοις in 1 Cor. xvi. 15. Here, then, the work of the ministry is spoken of as the means for effecting the end in question,—a means, as is intimated in the words following,—which must continue to be employed 'until we all [at length] attain unto the unity of the faith (see vv. 2—5), and know-

τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ <sup>13</sup> μέχρι κατανήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς τὴν ἐνότητα τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς ἐπυνώσεως τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ <sup>14</sup> ὡς ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ μηκέτι ὤμεν νήπιοι, κλυδωνιζόμενοι καὶ περιφερόμενοι παντὶ ἀνέμῳ τῆς διδασκαλίας, ἐν τῇ κυβείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐν πανουργίᾳ πρὸς τὴν μεθοδεῖαν τῆς πλάνης· <sup>15</sup> ἀληθεύοντες δὲ ἐν ἀγάπῃ αὐξήσωμεν εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα, ὃς ἐστὶν ἡ κεφαλὴ, ὁ Χριστός· <sup>16</sup> ὅς ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα συναρμολογού-

Ms. Isa. 29. 9.
Matt. 11. 7.
Eph. 1. 10.
1 Cor. 3. 1. 2.
Eph. 1. 23.
Heb. 13. 9.
n ch. 1. 23.
Eph. 1. 23.
Col. 1. 18.
o Rom. 12. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 27.
Col. 2. 19.

ledge of the Son of God,' meaning, 'unto unity as to faith in, and knowledge of,' &c.; in other words, 'both unity of faith as to doctrines, and of knowledge of Christ, or recognition of him as to his true person, glory, and work in the economy of grace.'

13. μέχρι καταν. οἱ πάντες, &c.] Οἱ πάντες, 'we all,' viz. who form the body of the Church. On the sense of καταν. see note on Acts vi. 1. Ἀτ μέχρι καταν. supply, from the preceding, καταρτίζοντες καὶ οικοδομοῦντες. Ἀτ τῆς ἐπιγ. τ. γ. τ. θ. repeat τὴν ἐνότη. The sense of ἐνότη.—τῆς ἐπιγ. seems to be, 'agreement in doctrine and views respecting salvation by the Son of God.' The words εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον, &c., are further explanatory of the καταρτισμός, q. d. 'unto complete and mature spiritual manhood, settledness in faith, and maturity in knowledge.' Comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Phil. iii. 15. Heb. v. 14. In the next words, εἰς μέτρον—Χριστοῦ, there is a further development of the metaphor. Render: 'even unto the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ;' meaning the standard of spiritual advancement that his Church is destined to reach.

14. By the same metaphor as that by which those who have attained unto unity of faith and maturity of knowledge were just before designated as those full-grown in Christ, so here, by an implied caution against the seductive arts of false teachers, who apply themselves to sow divisions, those so drawn from the unity of faith are designated first under the opposite idea of inexperienced children, and then under that of sailors carried to and fro, κλυδωνιζόμενοι (see my Lex. in v.), in a vessel without ballast, by violent gusts of wind (comp. Max. Tyr. Diss. 31. ἡ ναὺς περιφεύρεται), so as to go no where; and those by whom they are thus deceived are, by another metaphor, designated as jugglers and mountebanks, practising (as the words πρὸς μεθοδεῖαν import) their cunning trickeries and sleights with concerted planning of deceit. In κυβείᾳ the metaphor is one taken from playing at dice, with some allusion to the loading of the dice, as practised by gamesters. The above use of κυβείᾳ is so very rare, that the Commentators have not adduced a single ex. of it. The following, which I have noted, will therefore be acceptable. Menander, in his Τρωβόλ. fr. ii. 10, who, after characterizing human life as 'a holiday, a pleasure-sojourn,' subjoins, ἐν ᾧ ὄχλος, ἀγορά· κλέπται (I would read κλωπαί), κυβεῖται, διατρίβει. There is here a manifest allusion to the false teachers. Indeed the same metaphor is used by Epiphanius in Manichæos, who terms the vain subtilities of those heretics κυβευτικὴν διδασκαλίαν.

15. ἀληθεύοντες ἐν ἀγάπῃ] This phrase has been variously interpreted. Considering that the words have reference to Christians in general, not ministers, the sense usually assigned to them, 'speaking the truth,' is manifestly inadmissible. The true sense is that put forward by Calvin, Hyper., Est., and Bp. Sanderson, according to whom, I render: 'holding the truth (meaning the truth in Jesus, as implied in unity of faith) in love,' meaning, a spirit of Christian charity; so as to let no professed love of Christian truth militate against Christian charity. The next words point at the result of this keeping themselves steady in the unity of the faith, namely, that they "will thus attain to a true spiritual growth in all things (both of faith and practice), a growth adapted unto that of Him who is the Head, even Christ, even 'unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ,'" before spoken of, ver. 13.

16. ἐξ οὗ πᾶν, &c.] The Apostle here returns to the figurative representation at vv. 12, 13 (interrupted by the hortatory matter in vv. 13, 15); and, agreeably to the proper sense of καταρτ., employs the same image, derived from the human body, that he had before done at ii. 21; comp. Col. ii. 19. The words may be thus construed, πᾶν τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὐξησιν τοῦ σώματος ποιεῖται, equiv. to τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὐξ. αὐτοῦ π., by an idiom derived, it is said, from the Hebrew, but, in reality, common to the artificial style in all languages. The full sense intended is: 'from whom the whole body, fitly conjoined and compacted, through every joint and ligature of supply (whereby mutual aid is afforded), according to the efficaciousness of each individual part, or member, in [the] measure [of its power] maketh (i. e. causeth) the increase of the body, unto the edification [of itself] by love.' The force of the Article τῆς before ἐπιγ. is difficult to be traced. Yet, on comparing this passage, Matt. xxiv. 15, τὸ βέβλυσμα τῆς ἱερουσ., and another, Eph. iv. 29, πρὸς οικοδομὴν τῆς χηλίας, we may perceive a faint reference; though the Article is used only because it would be so used with the cognate Participle; for which the Genit. Subst. is employed. Thus here it stands for τῆς ἐπιχορηγούσης, 'every supplying joint,' or 'every joint by which aid is ministered.'—There is here a remarkable anomaly of construction, by a sort of anacoluthon, τοῦ σώματος being put instead of αὐτοῦ, 'maketh increase of itself, i. e. thriveth. In συναρμολ. and συνεβιβ. we have a metaphor taken from carpenter's work for buildings, in which the various pieces of wood are so fitly joined by straight lines, square niches, or dove-tailing, as to form one harmonious whole. The term here employed, συναρμ., alludes to the joints of the μενον καὶ συμβιβάζομενον, διὰ πάσης ἀφῆς τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας κατ' ἐνέργειαν, ἐν μέτρῳ ἐνὸς ἐκάστου μέρους, τὴν αὐξησιν τοῦ σώματος ποιεῖται εἰς οἰκοδομὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ.

p Rom. 1. 9.
18, 21.
1 Pet. 4. 2.
q ch. 2. 12.
Rom. 8. 7.
Gal. 4. 8.
Col. 1. 21.
1 Thess. 4. 6.
James 4. 4.

human body, called ἄρμολ, and sometimes ἄρμολοι. So in Epierat. Antil. frag. ii., age is said τὰς ἀρμολίας διαχαλᾶν τοῦ σώματος. On the term ἐπιχορ., see Col. ii. 19, and note there.—κατ' ἐνέργειαν, bears the same sense here as at ch. i. 19. iii. 7, and Phil. iii. 21, having reference to the operation of the Spirit on the mystical body of Christ. With ἐν μέτρῳ, &c., comp. supra, ver. 7, ἐν ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἰδὸθῃ ἡ χάρις κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρίας τοῦ Χρ. The general sense here intended is, that 'as the human body grows to maturity, and thrives by the mutual aid of the various members, so the mystical body of Christ, which is the Church, grows and prospers by the exercise of the gifts and graces of individual members for the good of the whole; thus becoming a complete spiritual body fit for the service of Christ; and thus is upheld by the mutual support and love of the members, being preserved by the authority and care of the Head, Christ.' As to the words εἰς οἰκοδομὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ, these, like κατ' ἐνέργειαν, and μέρους, have reference not only to the mystical body of Christ, but are meant to inculcate the weighty lesson,—that 'the mutual working of each member for the good of the whole tends to promote the edification of the Church.' (See 1 Cor. xiv. 4, 5, 12.) And the particular ἐν ἀγάπῃ is meant to advert to the principle by which alone this knitting together, or this mutual ἐπιχορηγία, will ever be consistently made,—namely, that of Christian love. For μέρους, A, B, and several cursives, have μέλους, which was commended by Griesb. and adopted by Tisch. 1; though in his 2nd Edit. he restored μέρους; very properly; since μέλους is evidently a gloss, or false correction, proceeding from some Critic who did not see that μέρους was adopted rather with reference to the Church than to the human body, and for a good reason, considering that this was what the Apostle had chiefly in view.—τὴν αὐξησιν τοῦ σώμ. ποιεῖται. Render: 'maketh (causeth) the increase of the body,' for αὐξ. is not a noun taken in its most abstract sense; nor is it, as far as I know, ever so taken, except as a technical term in rhetoric, to denote exaggeration, as oft. in Polyb. In all other cases the word has usually a reference expressed or implied, nay, even in cases where the Article is not used, e. g. 2 Macc. v. 16. Jos. Antt. i. 2, 2. ii. 10, 1. This view is confirmed by the parallel passage in Col. ii. 19, αὐξῇ τὴν αὐξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.

17. Having exhorted his readers to walk worthy of their vocation, and espec. to cultivate unity among themselves, as being all members of one body, the Church of Christ, the Apostle proceeds to caution them against the corruptions of the Gentiles, and to inculcate other duties and virtues suitable to their Christian profession. Τοῦτο λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι. A very energetic expression, denoting 'This I charge and earnestly entreat.'—ἐν Κυρίῳ, 'by the Lord,' i. e. 'by the love you bear and the duty you owe to him.'—ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοῦ α. Render: 'in vanity of mind,' i. e. 'in modes of thinking and feeling that are foolish.' So Rom. i. 28, παρῶδες αὐτοῦ εἰς δόκimon νοῦν, where see note. On the exact sense, however, of ματ. Expositors are not agreed; some explaining it of fully, or error of opinion and reasoning; others, of error in practice; improbability; and others, again, of idolatry. The first interpretation deserves the preference; but the second may be included. The present passage may be best illustrated by a very similar one at Rom. i. 21, where it is said of the heathens ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐκατέστη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν καρδία, i. e. νοῦς. Folly of imagination and reasoning led to idolatry, and that to immorality; as, on the other hand, immorality darkened the understanding and perverted the judgment. A subject on which Bp. Warburton has ably treated in various parts of his works.

18. In this verse the Apostle illustrates the nature, and intimates the cause, of this mental foolishness.—ἑσκατισμένοι, lit. 'befooled.' See note on Rom. i. 21, and my Lex. in v.—ἀπηλλοτριμμένοι. This may be considered in the light of an Adjective (so the Pesh. Syr. has 'alieni'); and we may render, 'alienate from'; as Milton, Par. Lost, 'O alienate from God.'—τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ, for τῆς κατὰ Θεὸν ζωῆς, 'such a life as is according to the will of God.' And as the will of God is our sanctification (1 Thess. iv. 3), so it denotes, as Theodor. explains, τὴν ἐν ἀρετῇ ζωὴν. The words διὰ τὴν ἀγνοίαν, &c. suggest the cause of their blindness and aversion to true religion. The full sense is, 'because of the ignorance that is in them, owing to the callousness of their hearts.' It is well remarked by Zanch., 'Excursio propria ad mentem refertur, cuius esse videre; obduracy ad cor, cuius esse fleet.' See note on Rom. xi. 7. Zanch., Beza, Calv., Hyper., and Bulling., are, with reason, agreed that the obduracy in question is here spoken of by the Apostle as the origin and root of the ignorance and blindness above mentioned, because men wilfully close their eyes to the light falling upon them, and choose darkness rather than light. Thus it is intimated that this blindness of heart is seated in their very nature, corrupt as it is. This self-produced πῶρωσις is at ver. 19 further developed in its effects as expressed by the term ἀπηλ., which denotes the being devoid of all sense of shame, or having so far ceased to feel the pricks of conscience, as to rush into the most unbridled licentiousness (see Rom. i. 24—28), 'committing iniquity with greediness.' And, delivering themselves (ἑαυτοὺς παρὶδ.) over to this state, they διὰ τὴν πώρωσιν τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν <sup>19</sup> ὅτινες ἀπηληγκότες, <sup>r Rom. 1. 24, 26.</sup>

 ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τῇ ἀσελγείᾳ εἰς ἐργασίαν ἀκαθαρσίας πάσης ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ. <sup>20</sup> Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐχ οὕτως ἐμάθετε τὸν Χριστὸν 21 εἶγε αὐτὸν ἠκούσατε, καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ ἐδιδάχθητε, καθὼς ἐστὶν <sup>r Rom. 6. 4 oh. 2. 2, 4.
Col. 2. 11.
2 Cor. 1. 6.
1 Rom. 6. 4.
2 Cor. 1. 6.
2 Cor. 1. 18.
Col. 2. 10.</sup>
 ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ <sup>22</sup> ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς, κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀναστροφήν, τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν φθειρόμενον κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης <sup>23</sup> ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ are by God delivered over to a reprobate mind, Rom. i. 28, and a self-hardened heart, Rom. ix. 18.

19. ἀπηληγκότες] This term has been variously interpreted, but generally taken in too limited a sense. The notion implied in it is, indeed, very complex; but as the term seems to have been meant to be a further development of πώρωσις, it may chiefly denote 'being past all feeling of remorse or shame,' insensible to the stings of conscience, callous to all sense of right and wrong. On this sense of ἀπὸ in composition (by which it denotes ceasing from the action expressed by the verb), see my note, on the same use of ἀπαληγάντες, in Thucyd. ii. 61, fin., and ἀπολοφράμηναι, ii. 46.—ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τῇ ἀσελγείᾳ, 'abandoned themselves to all sorts of lasciviousness,' such as are described in Rom. i. 29, seqq.—ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ is meant to further develop the idea in καρδίᾳ ἑαυτοῦ; q. d. 'not only gave themselves up to the perpetration of all vice, but with a greediness of sensuality never to be satisfied.' For here, as Chrys. and Theophyl. point out, πλεονεξία is equiv. to ἀμετρία.

21. εἶγες] Most Commentators take εἶγες in the sense si modo, which is very agreeable to what follows in this verse. But thus there will be a considerable difficulty as to the construction of ἀποθέσθαι at the beginning of the next verse, which cannot, without great harshness, be supposed to depend upon λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι at ver. 17. It is better to take εἶγες (with the best Commentators for the last century) in the sense inasmuch as; which occurs also at iii. 12. By αὐτὸν and αὐτῷ we are to understand the doctrine of Christ, as corresponding to Χρ. in the preceding verse. Though the Apostle does not express that they had been taught by him, yet he intimates it in the words following, καθὼς ἐστὶν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰ., being very suitable to the instruction of one who was taught by personal revelation from Jesus Christ (see Gal. i. 12, and the note), and who therefore must be supposed to know fully the pure doctrine of the Gospel.

22. ἀποθέσθαι is to be referred to ιδιδάχθ., the sense being, 'have been taught to put off.' The construction is, ιδιδάχθ. [ὥστε ὑμᾶς ἀπ.], 'that you should put off.' The words κατὰ τὴν προτ. ἀναστ. are closely connected with those which follow, τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον, there being a transposition for τὸν παλ. ἄνθ. τὸν κατὰ τὴν προτ. ἀναστ., to be taken for τὸν κατὰ τὴν προτ. ἀναστροφήν παλ. ἄνθ. τὸν ἐν ἀμαρτίαις, the expression τὸν παλ. ἄνθ. being here used, not, as at Rom. vi. 6, to denote the corrupt nature, there called 'the body of sin,' which we derive from Adam, but τὴν τῆς ἀμαρτίας ἐνέργειαν, the working of actual sin consequent on original sin. This is evident from the term προτέραν, and espec. from Col. iii. 9, ἀπεκδυσάμενοι τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον σὺν ταῖς πράξεσιν; compare also 1 Pet. i. 18.—τὸν φθειρόμενον. This is added, because ἀναστρ. is a term of middle signification, though here evidently used in a bad sense. Render: 'which was corrupt,' had become corrupt. Thus κατὰ τὰς ἐκ. will be for διὰ τῶν ἐκ., 'through the influence of deceitful lusts'; τῆς ἀπάτης being for ἀπατήλας. There is here a reference to that deceit, which the sensual appetites practise upon the understanding, by the gratification of those lusts, which delude men by vain appearances and fallacious hopes, always ending in disappointment and shame; and pervert them into the belief that they are harmless, notwithstanding they will be their ruin in this world, and their perdition in the next. On ὁ παλαιὸς and ὁ καινὸς ἄνθρ., see notes on Rom. xii. 2. vi. 4.

23. ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοῦς ὑμῶν] 'to be renewed in the spirit of your mind'; meaning, as Theodor. explains, τὴν ὁρμὴν τοῦ νοῦς, 'spiritual' (i. e. spiritual, as distinguished from material) animi motionem, the main disposition of the mind. Here we may suppose, with Doddr., that νοῦς stands for 'the whole soul,' and πνεῦμα for 'its intellectual and leading faculty,' on which the Spirit of God might chiefly operate; yet not exclusive of a certain influence on the inferior powers. Be that as it may, thus it is shown that this ἀνακαινώσις must reach to the very 'ground of the heart,' consequently involving a thorough putting away of the old leaven spoken of 1 Cor. v. 7, 8; and to this purpose is the prayer of David, Ps. li. 11, πνεῦμα εὐδὲς ἱγκαίνισον ἐν τοῖς ἱγκάτοις μου. The result of this renewal is adverted to in ver. 24, καὶ ἰνδύσθ. τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, 'and [thereby] to put on the new man,' meaning those new and holy affections and just works suitable to the καινὴ κτίσις (see 1 Cor. v. 17. Gal. vi. 16) proceeding from the inmost heart to the every action of the life, and thus attesting the work of regeneration on the soul, alluded to in the term κτισθέντα, which is best explained from the fuller expression in the parallel passage of Col. iii. 10, ἀνακαινούμενον—κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτὸν, with which compare 2 Cor. iii. 18, τὴν αὐτὴν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα—καθ' ὅσον ἀπὸ Κυρίου Πνεύματος, regeneration being considered as the recreation or reformation of the image of God, lost by sin, and only to be restored through Christ and the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete (see Rom. viii.), through whose aid alone this mortification of sin, and regeneration of heart, can be attained.

νοὺς ὑμῶν, <sup>24</sup> καὶ ἐνδύσασθαι τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθέντα ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ ὁσιότητι τῆς ἀληθείας.

u Zech. 8.
16.
Rom. 12. 5.

<sup>25</sup> u Διὸ ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος, λαλεῖτε ἀλήθειαν ἑκα-στος μετὰ τοῦ πλησίον αὐτοῦ ὅτι ἐσμὲν ἀλλήλων μέλη.

x Ps. 4. 4.
Deut. 24. 16.

<sup>26</sup> x Ὁργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε ὁ ἥλιος μὴ ἐπιδυέτω
ἐπὶ τῷ παροργισμῷ ὑμῶν <sup>27</sup> * μὴδὲ δίδετε τόπον τῷ Διαβόλῳ.

y James 4. 7.
1 Pet. 5. 9.

24. τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθ. ἐν δικ., &c.] I would now render, 'after the image of God as in Christ' (see Rom. viii. 29. 2 Cor. iv. 4; v. 19. Col. i. 15. Heb. i. 3); for I agree with Olshaus. that the words, 'characterize the new man as a re-establishment of the Divine image, and, at the same time, give the specific tokens of that image'; also, that in the words κατὰ Θεὸν κτ., there is allusion to the creation of man, as described in Gen. i. 27. "The new birth (continues Olsh.) is the second creation, wherefore the new man is called καινὴ κτίσις. Now as God, in the beginning, created man after his own image, so too in the new birth He again created him after the same, because sin had dimmed the image of God. That κατὰ Θεὸν here stands for κατ' εἰκόνα Θεοῦ is plain from the parallel passage in Col. iii. 10. The archetype, however, 'after which man is made in the new birth,' is Christ, the second Adam, εἰκόνα τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου (Col. i. 10. 2 Cor. iv. 4). Therefore, the new man is also called 'Christ in us.' Christ makes his likeness in every [regenerate] human heart, begetting Himself again."

25. The Apostle now proceeds to specify some of those evil habits and propensities, which are most of all opposed to that state of renewal and sanctification just inculcated; and he places foremost a vice to which the corrupt nature of man is peculiarly prone—falsehood of every kind.—ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος. So Lucian, Vit. i. p. 370 (Hemst.), ἀποθεῖν τὸ ψεῦδος, 'the practice of lying.' Under the term ψεῦδος is comprehended deceit and fraud of every kind, as is clear from the reason subjoined,—'for we are mutually members [of one and the same body], [and, as such, are bound to help each other].'

Whereas deceit of every kind promotes the contrary; and, by destroying confidence, tends to unloose the bands of society.—λαλεῖτε—αὐτοῦ. Taken from Zech. viii. 16, as the words in the next verse, ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, from Ps. iv. 4.

26. ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε] Many take this interrogatively; q. d. 'Are ye angry, and sin not? [impossible.]' However (καὶ), let not, &c. But this is doing violence to the construction. Neither, indeed, is it necessary to resort to so harsh a method of explanation, for the laudable purpose in view—that of removing an objection—since, from the air of the sentence, and that of the context (which is all prohibitory), it is sufficiently evident that here we have not a command to be angry, but merely an implied concession, joined with a caution to beware of sinning by the use of that concession. Thus Winer reckons this among the examples of Imperatives permissive. The words are, indeed, equiv. to οὕτως ὀργ. ὥστε μὴ ἁμαρτάνειν [ἐν αὐτῷ]: the Imperat. being only inactive as regards the regulation of anger. And here we have an instance of the sense of a term being qualified by some words following, with which it is closely connected; as in Eurip. Suppl. 557, γνόντας οὖν χρεῶν τάδε, Ἀδίκουμένους τε μέτρια, μὴ θυμῷ φέρειν, Ἀδικεῖν τε τοιαύτῳ, οἷα μὴ βλάψαι πόλιν. Thus, then, the sense here intended will be nearly the same with that expressed in Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 4, where the Essenes are spoken of as ὀργῆς ταμίαι δίκαιοι (i. e. just regulators of anger, so as not to let it exceed due bounds), θυμῷ καθεκτικοί. The words are taken from Ps. iv. 4; yet there is no little difficulty connected with them in that place. The word ἤνι is rendered 'contremiscite,' 'stand in awe,' in both our Versions. How, then, are we to account for ὀργίζεσθε? It is not true that ἤνι never has the signification of ὀργίζεσθαι; for it has it in Prov. xxix. 9. Ezek. xvi. 42. Such a signification, however, is inapplicable here. Schleusner, indeed, would have the term here taken for metu perculli, perterriti, as the word is used generally of any vehement commotion of the mind; and he refers to 2 Kings xix. 7. But that is a very insufficient proof; nor is the credit of the Sept. Translators to be saved by so harsh a mode of interpretation. It would seem that they mistook the force of the word in this passage, and assigned a sense which they had often done elsewhere, though it has no place here. It is plain that the credit of the Apostle is not at all concerned; for he only applies the words to his own purpose, which does not necessarily imply approbation. Besides, the sense in question, though not a good one, is not absurd. Whereas, if we adopt the sense of ὀργ. proposed by Schleusner, it will follow that the Apostle mistook the true sense of the Sept., and consequently might have mistaken that of the Hebrew.—ὁ ἥλιος μὴ ἐπιδυέτω ἐπὶ τῷ π. ὑ. An adagial form of expression, signifying that we should not extend an action beyond the day. So Deut. xxiv. 15, 'Thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it (namely, unpaid.)' Thus Plutarch tells us it was a maxim of the Pythagoreans, when hurried into anger and abuse, to shake hands and make up the difference before sunset. From the Apostle's language, then, it is plain that he considered a sudden feeling of resentment, in a Christian, as excusable, but not settled hatred. In which view I would compare what Tacitus says, Agric. 22, 'apud quosdam acerbior in conviciis narrabatur—ceterum ex iracundiā nihil supererat; honestius putabat offendere, quam odire.'

27. μὴδὲ δίδ. τόκ. τ. Δ.] Many recent Commentators take τῷ Διαβ. to mean 'the adversary.' Such a sense, however, is at once frigid and unsuitable, and the only true interpretation is that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, 'the Devil': a use of the word found (and always with the Article) in 2 Tim. ii. 26. Heb.

28 <sup>a</sup> Ὁ κλέπτων μηκέτι κλεπτέτω, μάλλον δὲ κοπιάτω ἐργαζόμενος τὸ ἀγαθὸν ταῖς χερσίν, ἵνα ἔχη μεταδιδόναι τῷ χρεῖαν ἔχοντι. 29 <sup>a</sup> Πᾶς λόγος σαπρὸς ἐκ τοῦ στόματος ὑμῶν μὴ ἐκπορευέσθω· ἀλλ' εἴ τις ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρεῖας, ἵνα δώῃ χάριν τοῖς ἀκούουσι. 30 <sup>b</sup> καὶ μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον

<sup>a</sup> Acts 20. 34. <sup>b</sup> Matt. 12. 24—27. ch. 5. 3, 4. Rom. 2. 13, 14. Col. 4. 6. Eccl. 10. 18. Eccles. 31. 10. b Isa. 7. 12. & 63. 10. 1 Cor. 1. 22. & 8. 5. ch. 1. 13, 14.

ii. 14. It is also (as Koppe admits) supported by the constant tenour of Scripture, which inculcates the existence of a Being who, by himself and his agents, tempts men to sin, and especially makes his attacks when any of the violent passions are put in motion. Why I have adopted μηδὲ for μή τε, with Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., will appear from note on 2 Thess. ii. 2.

28. ὁ κλέπτων] Theft was then very prevalent among the heathens, and in some countries is said to have been tolerated by the law. But see my Recens. Synop. At any rate, here the Apostle means only such a sort of pilfering as was practised by necessitous, because idle persons. Thus the Apostle enjoins industry as the best preservative from this sin, since then there would be no temptation to commit it. The construction and exact sense of κοπιάτω—χερσίν would seem to be as follows: κοπ. ταῖς χερσίν, ἐργ. τὸ ἀγαθόν, 'let him labour with his hands [if need be], working at what is good,' i. e. some honest occupation. Some, indeed, take ἀγαθόν to mean 'a livelihood.' But of this signif. there is no proof, and little probability; whereas the former one (supported by many of the best Expositors) is liable to no objection, for ἐργον may very well be supplied.—τὸ ἀγαθόν is equivalent to ἀγαθόν τι ἔργον; meaning (as Theodor. explains) ἀγαθὴν ἐργασίαν, as opposed to the evil industry and pernicious activity of the thief. The above sense is also very suitable to the context; and it is confirmed by what is said in the next verse, where the discourse is enjoined to be 'what is good,' as here the occupation is to be what is honest and creditable.

29. πᾶς—μή] for μηδεῖς, by a Hebraism, as also πᾶς οὐ common in the New Test. See note on Matt. x. 29.—Σαπρὸς (like putidus in Latin) may mean (as most Interpreters explain it) obscene; but, from its own proper signification, and the λόγος ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν, to which it is here opposed, the term must be also meant of 'any kind of bad and unprofitable discourse,' as 'brawling,' 'slandering,' and 'the foolish talking and jesting,' mentioned at ver. 4.—ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν may be rendered, 'adapted for edification.' So Pausan. l. vi. 26, 4, χώρα εἰς καρποὺς φέρων ἀγαθὴ, and thus Arrian, Epict. ii. 15, opposes σαπρὸς λόγος to what is ὕγιος ἐς οἰκοδομὴν, probably with the present passage in mind.—With τῆς χρεῖας, just after, Expositors have been not a little perplexed. In some of the ancient Versions and MSS. it is omitted, while D, E, F, G, & al., have τῆς πίστιος; a manifest change to get rid of a difficulty: though that, and even the omission of the word, has been supported by eminent Critics; but in vain. Both external and internal evidence are strongly in favour of the t. rec.; which might be explained, with some, as put, per hypallagen, for πρὸς χρεῖαν τῆς οἰκοδομῆς, if we could conceive why the sense should have been so expressed in preference. But that is scarcely possible. Indeed thus the χρεῖας would be almost useless. Hence we may best, with Grot. and Wahl, take τῆς χρεῖας, by a frequent idiom, as a Genit. Subst., put for its cognate Adjec. Thus, then, it is meant that 'what is said must not only be edifying in itself, but suitable to the occasion and the person.' So Plutarch (cited by Wetstein) says that Pericles prayed to the gods that no expression might fall from him πρὸς τὴν παρακείμενῃν χρεῖαν ἀνάρμοστον.

29. ἵνα δῷ χάριν τοῖς ἀκ.] On reconsidering the interpretation of χάριν, which I have heretofore given, after most eminent Expositors, from Theodor. downwards, I am inclined to doubt whether the common interpretation, 'may communicate spiritual grace,' be not preferable. Certainly it is more natural, and more suited to the mode of thinking and speaking found in the Apostle's writings, and is, when properly understood, quite as agreeable to the context. It is, moreover, supported by the Pesch. Syr. and Vulgate Versions, also by Chrys., and by Theophyl., as is plain from his gloss, ἵνα κεχαριτωμένους ἐργάσῃται ὁ λόγος. Chrysa. had evidently in mind the words of the Apostle supra, i. 6, τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ἐν ᾗ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, 'hath bestowed his grace.' As respects the usus loquendi, there we cannot expect any confirmation from the Class. writers; and, as to the Scriptural, why should it not mean the spiritual grace conveyed by edifying discourse, namely, as being (Calv. observes) 'admiracula salutis'? Of course, the Divine blessing, and the aid of the Spirit of grace, are to be supposed. The above view I find confirmed by Est., in an able note.

30. μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον] This injunction seems given with a reference to the foregoing vices and all similar ones; containing a reason why they should abstain from them,—namely, because they would, by committing them, grieve the Holy Spirit, and cause Him to depart from them; q. d. 'do not [by any such evil practices] so grieve the Holy Spirit as to provoke Him to depart from you.' So in Hermas Past. p. 210, we have, μὴ λύπει τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τὸ κατοικοῦν ἐν σοί, μήποτε ἀποστήτῃ ἀπὸ σοῦ. Comp. also Is. lxiii. 10 (a passage probably present to the mind of the Apostle here), αὐτοὶ δὲ ἠκείθεν, καὶ παρῆξυναν τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐστράφη αὐτοῖς εἰς ἔχθραν.—ἐν ᾧ. Render: 'by or through whom;' not whereby, as in our Common Version, which was wrongly altered from the by whom of all the old English Versions. And this (as Bp. Middleton has shown) is required by the use of the Article. Of course this will prove the personality of the Holy Spirit. Many eminent Commentators, however, for the last century, take τὸ Πν. τ. δ. τ. Θ. as put for τὸ θεῖον, i. e. τὸν Θεόν. But why it should have been so written, they do not tell us. It would seem that this is

e Col. 3. 8 & 19.
 d Matt. 6. 14.
 Col. 3. 12, 13.
 a Matt. 5. 48.
 65.
 Luke 6. 20.
 b John 12.
 84.
 & 15. 13.
 1 Pet. 3. 18.
 1 John 2. 11.
 32. & 4. 21.
 Lev. 1. 9.
 c ch. 4. 20.
 Gal. 5. 19.
 Col. 3. 5.

τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐν ᾧ ἐσφραγίσθητε εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως.
 31 <sup>c</sup> Πᾶσα πικρία καὶ θυμὸς καὶ ὀργὴ καὶ κραυγὴ καὶ βλασφημία ἀρθήτω ἀφ' ὑμῶν, σὺν πάσῃ κακίᾳ· 32 <sup>d</sup> γίνεσθε δὲ εἰς ἀλλήλους χρηστοί, εὖσπλαγχοι, χαριζόμενοι ἑαυτοῖς, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν Χριστῷ ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν. V. 1 <sup>a</sup> Γίνεσθε οὖν μιμηταὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὡς τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, 2 <sup>b</sup> καὶ περιπατεῖτε ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἡγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, καὶ παρέδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν, τῷ Θεῷ εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας. 3 <sup>c</sup> Πορνεία an expression (perhaps occurring no where else) compounded of two forms of speaking, each very frequent, viz. τὸ Πνῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, and τὸ Πνῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. Thus τοῦ Θεοῦ is absent from some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, which at least shows the sense the ancients put on the passage. That Πνῦμα must be taken in the personal sense, is clear from the kindred passages of 2 Cor. i. 22, ὁ καὶ σφραγ. ἡμᾶς, καὶ δότε τὸν ἀρροβῶνα τοῦ Πνῦματος, and Eph. i. 13, ἐν ᾧ (scil. Χριστῷ) πιστεύσαντες, ἐσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνῦματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ, on all which passages see the notes on this important point of theology.

31. πικρία] See note on Rom. iii. 14. In the placing of this and the following words, the Apostle intended, I conceive, a sort of climax, proceeding from acerbity of spirit and roughness of manner, to brawling and gross abuse. How utterly unsuitable to the character of a Christian must be all brawling and clamour, we may imagine from the light in which it appeared, even to well-disposed Jews. So Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 5, says of the Essenes, οὐτὰ κραυγὴ ποτε τὸν οἶκον (the common dining-hall) οὐτὲ θόρυβοι πολύειν. It is well said by Chrys., that 'clamour is the foaming steed on which anger pursues its impetuous course: throw down the steed, and the rider will fall to the ground.'—βλασφημία, meaning, as Bp. Taylor explains, 'all words that are injurious to God or man.'—σὺν πάσῃ κακίᾳ, meaning, 'together with all other vices of the same class'; namely, violations of the principle inculcated in the next verse. See note on Rom. i. 29, from which it will appear why κακία is put last; and that it denotes 'malignity,' i. e. 'mischievousness,' proceeding from the heart and intention. That κακία may denote intentional and habitual mischievousness, is plain from Eurip. Hippol. 1334, τὴν δὲ σὺν ἁμαρτίαν τὸ μὴ εἰδέναι—ἐκλύει κάκῃς. So Thucyd. i. 32, ἐγγνώμη, εἰ μὴ μετὰ κακίας, δόξει δὲ μάλλον ἁμαρτία τολῶμεν.

32. In this verse, as Hyper. observes, we have accumulated, by way of antithesis, the contrary virtues, which ought to succeed in the place of the foregoing vices.—χρηστοί, εὖσπλαγχοι, &c. These terms are not (as they are regarded by Koppe) synonymous; but the latter is the stronger term (see note on 2 Cor. vi. 8, and Gal. v. 22). Render: 'gentle (or kind), compassionate, mutually forgiving.' The words following suggest the reason for this, where the Ephesians are enjoined to be as forgiving to others, as God had been to them, by graciously placing them, through the atoning merits of Christ, in a state of salvation. Comp. Matt. xviii. 21—35.

V. 1. This verse is closely connected with the last of the preceding Chapter; q. d. 'Be ye, therefore [as being thus mercifully accepted], imitators, in this respect, of that God, who hath set you an example, which, as children beloved and favoured, you are bound to follow.' Children, it is presumed, will follow the example of their parents (compare Matt. v. 45—48); and children beloved are doubly bound to attend to their injunctions. In τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, there seems an allusion to the visio and its benefits, on which see Rom. viii. 15, and compare 19 and 21, and ix. 11. Gal. iv. 5. Eph. i. 5.

2. περιπατ. ἐν ἀγάπῃ] This is a more significant expression than ἀγαπᾶτε ἀλλήλους would have been, since it denotes the whole tenour of life. With the words καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χρ. ἡγάγ. ἡμᾶς comp. supra iv. 32, and 1 John ii. 6, ὁφείλου, καθὼς ἐκείνους περιπατήσῃ, καὶ αὐτοὶ οὕτως περιπατήσιν. This love of Christ is imputed in his delivering himself to death for us (see Rom. viii. 32), yea, as is implied in the next words (with which comp. Ps. xxxix. 6, Sept.), giving himself as an expiatory sacrifice, προσφορὰ and θυσία being sacrificial terms united in order to further strengthen the sense. Agreeably to these sacrificial terms we have εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας, an expression derived from the Jewish sacrifices, and denoting such as God would receive with approbation; see Gen. viii. 21.

3. πορνεία δὲ, &c.] The Apostle here reverts to the immoralities which they had formerly been addicted to, and into which, by the evil communication of their heathen neighbours, they were still likely to fall.—Ἀκαθαρσία has reference to those horrible abominations mentioned or alluded to at Rom. i. On the sense of the term following, πλεονεξία, some difference of opinion exists. Most Commentators understand it, in the common acceptation, of covetousness. This, however, not suiting well with πορνεία καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, many recent Expositors take it to mean prostitution for lucre's sake, or getting money by acting as panders to the lust of others. But of such a signification no proof has been adduced; and, indeed, the sense is not a little forced and frigid. Again, some ancient, and many eminent modern Commentators, from Hyper., Est., and Hamm., downwards, explain it, 'greediness in the indulgence of the lewdness just mentioned.' An interpretation, however, liable to insuperable objections, which have been stated by Salmasius, Wolf, and Scott. The expression may be understood to denote an insatiable desire of, or intemperance in, even lawful carnal gratifications. So iv. 19, ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ. Nor is what is said in ver. 5 at variance with δὲ καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, ἡ πλεονεξία, μὴδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, (καθὼς πρέπει ἀγίοις) <sup>4</sup> καὶ αἰσχροτύτης, καὶ μωρολογία ἡ εὐτραπελία, τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστία. <sup>5</sup> Τοῦτο γὰρ † ἐστὲ γινώσκοντες, ὅτι πᾶς πόρνος, ἡ ἀκάθαρτος, ἡ πλεονέκτης, —ὅς ἐστιν εἰδωλολάτρης, —οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῇ βασι-

d ch. 4. 30.
Prov. 13. 23.
Eccl. 10. 13.
Matt. 12. 34
e 1 Cor. 6. 10.
Gal. 5. 21.
Col. 3. 5.
Rev. 22. 15.

this view; for surely sensuality is as much idolatry as concupiscence; see Phil. iii. 19, where of sensual worldlings it is said, 'whose god is their belly.' But, after all, it may be doubted, whether the common interpretation be not preferable; and that for reasons which appear from the note on Col. iii. 5. And the passages are so entirely parallel, that whatever can be proved to be the sense there, must be received here; and as the former is more in detail, so it must regulate the interpretation of the latter. This interpretation is by no means to be objected to on the score of novelty; since that St. Basil so took the expression is pretty certain. And such, since his time, was the view adopted by Bp. Sanderson and Dr. Dodd. The words μὴδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν are best rendered, 'let it not be spoken of [as existing] among you,' let them not be heard of among you; this being nearly equiv. to, but a stronger expression than, μὴ ἴστω ἐν ὑμῖν. The μὴδὲ here stands for μηδὲ ὅλων, nullo modo, 'not at all': the idiom was prob. almost confined to the language of common life, like our 'never' as used for 'not at all;' though it is occasionally found in the best writers; as Thucyd. vii. 49, 1, ἐπικηρυκεῖσθαι πρὸς αὐτόν, ὥστε μὴδὲ (so in 17 MSS.) ἀπαίστασθαι.

<sup>4</sup> αἰσχρο-, καὶ μωρολ. ἡ εὐτραπ. These terms seem meant to emphatize the λογος σαπρὸς a little before, iv. 29. Αἰσχρο- denotes 'obscenity of speech'; and μωρ. and εὐτραπ. signify lit. 'foolish trifling, talking, and jesting,' but are here used, per ὑποκορισμὸν (a figure very frequent in the phraseology of antiquity; on which see my note on Thucyd. iii. 82, 4), the former to denote what the Hebrew expresses by תפלת, 'the naughtiness of the mouth,' the stultiloquium of Plautus; the latter what the Greeks call βωμολοχία, scurrile joking (so Aristot., Eth., defines εὐτραπελία by παπαιδευμένη ὕβρις), or perhaps, the double entendre, in which (as Chandl. says) 'indecenty is couched in a witty turn, and is, by being thought ingenious, the more dangerously corrupting.' With these words we must repeat ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, with a slight accommodation of sense; i. e. 'let none of these be heard of among you.' So 1 Cor. v. 1, σπορέτω—ἥτις οὐδὲ ἐν ἔθνεσιν ὀνομαζέται.—Τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκ. may be rendered, 'things which are not suitable [viz. to our holy calling, as children of God, members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost].—At ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστία supply from the subject-matter ἴστω, but let there be (practised) proper and decorous discourse,—namely, as opposed to the αἰσχροτύτης just before spoken of; or, as referred to μωρολογία and εὐτραπελία, urbainity, as opposed to 'scurrility' or 'indecent jesting.' The former interpretation, however, is preferable; and there may be an adjunct notion of what is edifying, or what 'ministers grace to the hearers;' a view confirmed by what is said supra, iv. 29, and Col. iii. 6.

<sup>5</sup> τοῦτο γὰρ ἰστί γινώσκ. For ἰστί several uncials, and not a few cursive MSS. have ἴστα, which is preferred by the recent Commentators, and edited by Griesb. and Scholz; but without sufficient reason; for in external evidence it is inferior to the common reading, Versions in such a case being of no weight, and Fathers but slender authority. Internal evidence, too, is quite against it; for the words are frequently confounded by the scribes; and ἴστα is just such an emendation as would be likely to occur to the ancient Critics. The t. rec., then, must be retained. After reconsidering the point of reading for the ninth edit., I continue of the same opinion. The superiority in external authority of ἴστα (which, however, does scarcely exist) is overbalanced by its inferiority in internal evidence, for thus the word γινώσκοντες would be no other than useless; and the words are often confounded. Hence I still, with Matth., retain ἰστί γιν., taking, however, ἰστί γιν. as put for an imper., since the context here, as in certain other similar passages in 1 Cor. vi. 9, and Gal. v. 21. vi. 70 (as Koppe remarks), 'verba sunt denunciantis malum, quod cavere debeant.' There may be in ἰστί γινώσκοντες a peculiar, and emphatic, expression, nearly equiv. to, but somewhat stronger than γινώσκειτε would have been, which is often used by St. Paul in such formulas of warning, but never ἴστα. Thus the sense will be equiv. to ἴστα, scilicet, which Jerome reads. I suspect that ἴστα was originally a gloss proceeding from those who meant to express the force of ἰστί by a plainer term.—οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῇ βασ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ. Comp. the similar phrase, 1 Cor. vi. 10, βασ. Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσι.—Τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ. Render, not as in our Common Version, 'of Christ and of God,' but 'of Christ and God.' As to the rendering of Bp. Middl., 'of Him who is Christ and God,' it is scarcely admissible; for, though it might be sustained grammatically, it would well-nigh lead to a sense unwarranted by Scripture. The expression ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Χριστοῦ nowhere occurs; while that of ἡ βασ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is very frequent. Yet this kingdom is often designated as Christ's, because it is held in concert with God the Father; e. g. Matt. xx. 21, ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ σου; as in Luke xxii. 30, it is said ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ μου, though it is true that βασιλεία there denotes only the mediatorial kingdom of Christ, whereas here bas. must mean Christ's eternal kingdom in heaven, as designated in 2 Pet. i. 11, ἐπιχορηγήσεται ὑμῖν ἡ εἰσόδος εἰς τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, meaning, 'the kingdom which he will, as God, one with the Father, ever possess in heaven with God, after having delivered up his mediatorial kingdom on earth to the Father.' In accordance with this is, I find, the view of the sense adopted by Est., who remarks, that 'this is not said as if Christ were not God, or as though there were one kingdom of Christ, and another of God; the Apostle only denoting one and the same celestial kingdom, which is that of God, as King by nature, while it is that of Christ, considered as man constituted King by God (see Pa. ii.), and thus subordinate to God the Father, according to the doctrine of the Apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 24, et al.

ῥ' Matt. 24. 4. λεία τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ. <sup>6</sup> Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς ἀπατάτω κενοῖς λόγοις· διὰ ταῦτα γὰρ ἔρχεται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας. <sup>7</sup> Μὴ οὖν γίνεσθε συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν. <sup>8</sup> ἦτε γὰρ ποτε σκότος, νῦν δὲ φῶς ἐν Κυρίῳ· ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπατεῖτε <sup>9</sup> (*ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς τοῦ *φωτὸς ἐν πάσῃ ἀγαθῶσυνῃ καὶ δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ ἀληθείᾳ*) <sup>10</sup> δοκιμάζοντες τί ἐστὶν εὐάρεστον τῷ Κυρίῳ. <sup>11</sup> Καὶ μὴ συγκοινωνεῖτε τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς

6. κενοῖς λόγοις] Alluding, we may suppose, to the empty reasonings of the heathen sophists, who, as Hyper. observes, 'used subtle words to extenuate the vices in question; comp. Col. ii. 4. Hence the Apostle, by a sort of pre-occupation, forewarns them that the wrath of God cannot but fall upon those guilty of such offences.'—The second clause of the verse is meant to give a reason why such deceivers should not be listened to, and why the vices in question should be avoided; and that deduced from the condign punishment to be inflicted on those who commit such things. The term ἔρχεται is emphatical; intimating that some even urged that the denunciation was not so formidable,—since God would never put his threats into execution against these, which they represented as comparatively slight offences.

7. μὴ γίνεσθε συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν, &c.] The full sense in Paul's mind is, 'Be ye not, then, partakers with them [in their vices], if ye would not be partakers in the punishment which must attend them.' Comp. Rev. xviii. 4, ἔξέλθετε ἔξ αὐτῆς, ὁ λαὸς μου, ἵνα μὴ συγκοινωνήσῃτε ταῖς ἀμαρτίαις αὐτῆς, καὶ ἡ τῶν πληγῶν αὐτῆς λάβῃτε; and see Thucyd. i. 39, ἐγκλημάτων δὲ μόνων ἀμετόχους, οὕτω τῶν μετὰ τὰς πράξεις τούτων μὴ κοινωνεῖν.

8. ἦτε γὰρ ποτε—Κυρίῳ] Another argument deduced from their present state, and serving to point out the inconsistency of such a conduct; q. d. 'For ye are not, as formerly, in a state of moral darkness [which might extenuate your vices], but are now enlightened in the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ.' The Apostle exhorts them to remove the inconsistency, by living suitably to their high calling.—σκότος is for ἐν σκότει, or ἐσκοτισμένοι in Rom. ii. 19, and 1 John i. 6, ἐν τῷ σκότει περιπατοῦμεν; and φῶς for πεφωτισμένοι, though perhaps a stronger expression.—Ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπατεῖτε. The expression τέκ. φωτὸς is equiv. to υἱοὶ φωτὸς, and υἱοὶς ἡμέρας, in 1 Thess. v. 5. It seems to have been derived by the Apostle from its use by our Lord, Luke xvi. 8, υἱοὶ τοῦ φωτὸς, and espec. John xii. 35, 36, ἐτι μικρὸν χρόνον—τὸ φῶς μὲθ' ὑμῶν ἔστι, περιπατεῖτε ὥστε τὸ φῶς ἔχητε—ἵνα τὸ φῶς ἔχητε πιστεύετε εἰς τὸ φῶς, ἵνα υἱοὶ φωτὸς γίνεσθε, and comp. an altogether parallel passage in 1 Thess. v. 4; see also 2 Cor. vi. 14. Hence it is plain that Calv. was wrong in understanding the expression 'sons of light' to denote 'those who are illumined by the Spirit of God.' It must mean rather those who are light in the Lord Jesus, who is 'the light of the world,' 'the true light,' John i. 4, 5, 9, in short, those who believe in that light, and walk in it; according to the explanation I have given on the first mentioned passage of John. Of course, the way to walk as children of light is to walk in the light, and direct our steps by the light. Light and darkness were, from the earliest ages, familiar images to denote good and evil. Thus the ancient Magians (or worshippers of the Deity by fire) made fire the symbol of the good principle, and darkness that of the evil principle.

9. In this verse we have a third reason for obeying the above injunction, and that deduced from the effects of the Holy Spirit, once received by believers.—ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς, &c. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. 'Live as children of the light [and this, if ye be children of light, ye will do], for the effect of that light and the Spirit is,' &c. The Apostle (as Calv. observes) means to point out the way in which children of the light should walk,—touching, by way of exemplification, on some of the principal component parts of a holy life.—ὁ καρπὸς τοῦ φ. On carefully reconsidering, for this ninth edition, the debated question as to the reading here, it now appears to me that internal evidence is far more against Πνεῦμ. than I was formerly of opinion, inasmuch that I can scarcely admit that the reading may be considered an open one; and accordingly I am now induced to receive that adopted by all the Editors from Griesbach to Scholz, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, for which considerable external authority exists in six of the most ancient uncial MSS., and ten cursives, to which I add two of the best Lamb. MSS., confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg. Versions, and some Fathers. The quarter whence the Apostle derived what is said in vv. 8 and 9, calls for φωτὸς. As to Πνεῦμ. it may have been, as Koppe and others suppose, an alteration proceeding from some whose purpose it was to make the passage square with that at Gal. v. 22; though there Πνεῦμ. is as much required by the context as here is φωτὸς.

10. δοκιμάζοντες, &c.] These words are closely connected with those at ver. 8, ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπ.—Δοκιμ. (the exact sense of which has been disputed) may be rendered, 'proving by trial or search [in order to know and practise]; [thereby] approving and practising what is acceptable to the Lord.'

11. καὶ μὴ συγκοινωνεῖτε, &c.] This is meant as a counterpart to the exhortation at ver. 8, ὡς τέκνα φωτ. περιπ., q. d. 'on the contrary, have no fellowship,' &c. The expression συγκ. τοῖς ἀκάργοις τοῦ σκότους, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἐλέγχετε. <sup>12</sup> τὰ γὰρ κρυφὴ γινόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν αἰσχρὸν ἐστὶ καὶ λέγειν. <sup>13</sup> τὰ δὲ πάντα, ἐλεγχόμενα ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτὸς, φανεροῦνται· πᾶν γὰρ τὸ φανερούμενον φῶς ἐστὶ. <sup>14</sup> Διὸ λέγει· *Ἐγειρε, ὁ καθεύ-

1 John 2. 20.
21.
2 m Isa. 26. 12.
& 60. 1.
John 6. 26.
Rom. 6. 4, 6.
& 13. 11.
1 Thess. 5. 6.

ἔργοις, &c. (like κοιν. τοῖς ἔργοις πονηροῖς at 2 John 11, and κοιν. ἀμαρτίας at 1 Tim. v. 22), signifies, 'to partake in evil deeds, either by practising, or by approving and countenancing them.' See Rom. i. 32.—ἀκάργ. denotes, by a litotes, that which is pernicious and mischievous. See my Lex. in v., also my note on Rom. iii. 12, and my note on Thucyd. i. 91; ἀξυμφορον.—Ἐλέγχις. Most Expositors supply αὐτοῖς, meaning the doers of the works; and they render ἐλέγχις, reproves, viz. by wholesome correction. This, however, is so harsh, that it is better (with Theodor., Phot., the Pesch. Syr., Wakef., and Schlenan.) to supply αὐτὰ (i. e. ἔργα τοῦ σκότους), and to interpret ἐλέγχις 'bring to the light, and evince their evil nature,' namely, by showing in contrast the opposite virtues. This sense is required by ver. 13, with which the present closely connects; and v. 12, which, as Dr. Peile has shown, throws light on both. The interpretation which I have adopted of ἐλέγχις here, and of ἐλέγχεται at v. 13, is much confirmed, and no little light thrown on this somewhat obscure passage, by a passage of Menander in his Ὑποβολ. Fr. v. τοῦτο ἐπισκοπεῖ ('throws into the dark, makes unseen') καὶ δυσχεραίνει καὶ τρόπος τονηρία, καὶ πᾶσιν οἷς ἐσχηκεν ἀνθρώποις κακοῖς, τὸ πολλὰ κεκτῆσθαι· τὰ δ' ἅλλ' ἐλέγχεται ('are brought to light').

<sup>12</sup> τὰ γὰρ κρυφῇ—λέγειν.] This is meant to place in a strong point of view the abominable vices of those persons, with whom he has just exhorted them to have no society. The γὰρ has reference to a clause left implied; 'For [as to censuring their actions in words,] it were a shame to,' &c. The sentiment contains one of the most cutting reproofs ever penned, and is espec. pointed by the emphasis on γιν. and λέγειν, of which several parallel instances have been adduced. Here there is supposed to be an allusion to the abominations of the nocturnal mysteries, on which see Whitby.

<sup>13</sup> τὰ δὲ πάντα—φανεροῦνται.] The sense is here disputed, and, indeed, is not very clear. By τὰ πάντα, however, must be meant all the evil deeds just mentioned; and, in fact, v. 13 is closely connected with the μᾶλλον δὲ ἐλέγχις at ver. 11. Rosenm. and Koppe are of opinion that a reason is here meant to be given why Christians should study to correct the bad morals of the heathens. But it would rather seem that as at ver. 12, the Apostle mentions how those deeds of darkness could not well be reprov'd and made to appear what they are,—so in ver. 13, he shows how they might be most effectually made to appear in their true character; viz. by being brought into contrast with the deeds of light from the children of light, or true Christians. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: 'Now all these [deeds of darkness and vice] being made to appear what they are by the light [of the Gospel, as evinced in the children of light] are made manifest or exposed (by their moral turpitude being discovered).' With respect to the words πᾶν γὰρ—ἐστὶ, they have been variously explained. The preference has generally been given to the interpretation of Grotius, 'For it is the light [of severe truth] which makes every thing manifest and in its true colour.' But though the sense thus arising is good and suitable, it cannot, I think, be extracted from the words without great violence; nor can φανερ. be taken for φανερῶν. The Apostle would thus have written φῶς γὰρ ἐστὶ τὸ φανερῶν τὸ πᾶν. And the common interpretation (as concerns φανερ.) lies open to the same objection, though the sense yielded is very suitable. The true interpretation seems to be that of the ancient Expositors almost universally, by whom φανερ. is taken in a passive or a reflected sense; q. d. 'Whatever shows itself [to the world and does not seek concealment], as the life of true Christians may do (so Matt. v. 14, 'ye are the light of the world: a city set on a hill cannot be hid'), that is light, [and adapted to discover darkness,] i. e. by the contrast.'

<sup>14</sup> διὸ λέγει, &c.] There has been no little controversy as to these words; which, while they seem to be introduced as a quotation from Scripture (for wherever else the form διὸ λέγει occurs in St. Paul, it serves to introduce a citation), are no where found in Scripture. The ancient and many modern Expositors regard the words λέγει—Χριστὸς as a quotation from Isa. xl. 1, 2. Others, again, suppose them taken either from a lost canonical, or an apocryphal book. But that a canonical book should be lost, is of all improbable suppositions the most improbable. And that the Apostle should speak of an apocryphal book in the same manner as of a canonical, is not for a moment to be supposed. Many recent Commentators take λέγει for λέγεται, and suppose that the words form part of a spiritual song, then sung or recited in the churches. This, however, rests on mere conjecture. The words may, I think, best be regarded as formed upon Scripture. In short, we seem to have here not a citation, but an application of, by way of inference, from the words of the Prophets in general, espec. Isa. lx. 1—5, and Ps. xvii. 28, what is there said being applied, in the mystical sense, from the case of those in Israel, who 'turn from transgression,' and receive the light of the Messiah (for of him the Jews themselves have understood the words), to the case of those among the Gentiles, in every age, who turn to the Lord; the general sense intended being, in other words, 'Wherefore, in this view, the words of Holy Writ may be regarded as enjoining sinners to come to a right understanding,—as one awakened out of a deep sleep, to go out of darkness and have light,—and that from their Redeemer, CHRIST.' In which words, as the Prophet exhorts them, he may be supposed virtually to address them, when he says, Ἐγειρε, &c. Accordingly, at λέγει the Apostle, of course, means ὁ Κύριος to be supplied. At ἐπιφάνῃ σοι ὁ Χρ. the Apostle had probably in mind the words of Ps. xvii. 28, Sept., σὺ φωτιστὴς ὁχλῶν μου, Κύριε· ὁ Θεὸς μου, φωτιστὴς (read φωτιστῆς) D D

δων, καὶ ἀνάστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ
 ἁ Col. 1. 9. Χριστός. <sup>15</sup> ὁ Βλέπετε οὖν πῶς ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, μὴ ὡς
 ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί. <sup>16</sup> ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, ὅτι αἱ σκότος μου. Comp. also 2 Sam. xxii. 29. I have now deferred, though with hesitation, to the united authority of all the Critical Editors, from Griesb. to Lachm. and Tisch., who regard ἡγέραι as the genuine reading. The form ἡγέραι is the aor. I middl. in a reciprocal sense, 'Rouse thyself,' and may have been adopted by some revisers as a plainer term than ἡγέραι, in which there is the use of the neuter for middl. reciproc., as in our verb to rouse, but (as in the Classical use of ἡγέραι) only in the poets, as Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden, Prior, and Pope, e. gr. 'Morpheus rouses from his bed.'

15. Here, I apprehend, we have not (what many Commentators suppose) a new admonition, namely, to Christian prudence; but (as others have well pointed out) a continuation of the precept at ver. 3: or the words may form, as Hyper. supposes, a conclusion to the whole of the present subject, referring partly to what has just been said, about reproving offenders, and partly to what was introduced in the early part of the Chapter, where the Apostle in a general way admonished them against fornication and uncleanness.—'Ακριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, 'conduct yourselves circumspectly, minding your steps, or behaviour.'—πῶς is for ὅτι,—a blending of two modes of expression, βλέπετε πῶς περιπ., and βλέπετε ὅτι ἀκριβῶς περιπ. In μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί we have an antithetical parallelism (such as is found in the Class. as well as the Script. writers), where, for emphasis sake, a proposition is expressed both affirmatively and negatively, as in John i. 20, ἀμολόγησε καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσατο. By ἄσοφοι and σοφοί are meant the persons just before denoted by σκότος and φῶς, and a little after termed ἄφρονες and συνίστες, by a frequent Hebrew idiom, whereby wisdom stands for virtue, and folly for vice.

16. ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, &c. On the exact import of these somewhat obscure words considerable difference of opinion exists. Not a few eminent Commentators explain them of the caution to be observed in avoiding persecution; the sense being, 'that they should draw out their time as long as they could, by not provoking their enemies to cut them off.' This view, however, is neither suitable to the context, nor in accordance with the parallel passage of Coloss. iv. 5, adduced in illustration; besides, it yields a sense little agreeable to the manner of the Apostle. The more usual interpretation is, 'endeavouring to recover (lit. 'buy back') the time that has been lost, by diligently making use of what remains, and improving it to the most valuable purposes.' Yet this, though it yields an excellent sense, has no support from the context, and does not suit with the parallel passage of Colossians. In order to ascertain the sense here intended, we should first trace the connection; according to which ἐξαγορ. τ. κ. will, I apprehend, be found to have reference to ἀκριβῶς περιπ. in the preceding verse. And that expression must also refer to ἐπίγχετε, and the whole of ver. 14. In short, the Apostle means to teach his readers how that ἐπαγχε and φανέρωσις might be brought about,—namely, by walking circumspectly; and the words μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί and ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν are, I conceive, meant to further urge this circumspection, by showing that thereby they will act like truly wise men,—namely, 'by diligently making use of the opportunity afforded them of evincing in their conduct such a contrast, as may rouse those who are in the deep sleep of pagan ignorance and vice; so that, standing reproved thereby, they may be brought to Christ, who will give them the light of the Gospel and the aid of the Holy Spirit.'—The remaining words, ὅτι αἱ ἡμέραι πονηρὰί εἰσι, are somewhat obscure, and admit of more than one suitable sense. If they be referred to ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν, the meaning will be, 'because the times are dangerous, the season of their usefulness is precarious, and consequently the opportunity offered ought to be carefully made use of.' If referred to ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, it will be, not that 'the times are dangerous to their safety, but to their virtue; being full of temptations, trials, and various hindrances to religion: so that they will have need of all their circumspection and care to walk aright.' This, however, is far less suitable to the context and the parallel passage of Colossians than the former view, which is accordingly to be preferred. Correspondent to ἐξ σοφίας περιπατεῖτε in the above passage of Colossians, there is ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε: and though we have not here expressed what is added there, πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, yet such may be understood in what is here evidently to be supplied, πρὸς αὐτοὺς, as referred to αὐτῶν at v. 12, which relates to the designation at v. 6, τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἐπίδοσης, and that cannot but refer to the heathens, who are unquestionably meant at ver. 14. The admonition, then, clearly is, that 'they should adopt a discreet and circumspect conduct towards their heathen neighbours; thereby making use of the opportunity afforded of bringing them to the light of the Gospel; and that because the season for their usefulness is precarious, and the opportunity for exercising it is to be carefully seized.' This view of the sense is much confirmed by a most able discussion on the import of the terms by the late very learned Dr. Samuel Parr, in his Sermon on this text, Works, vol. ii. p. 704. He commences by observing that the use of the phrase here, ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν, is acknowledged to be founded on Dan. ii. 8, where the sense is, 'I know of a certainty that you would, by all means, obtain a more favourable opportunity for avoiding explanation altogether, or attempting it with better effect, because ye see that the thing is gone from me,—namely, the particulars of the dream; for it seems the king had only a confused recollection of what he had dreamed.' The expression ἐξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν (continues he) became almost proverbial among the Hellenistic Jews. It acquired the signification of gaining favourable opportunities; and the specific use to which those opportunities were to be applied may sometimes have been expressly stated

ἡμέραι πονηραὶ εἰσι. <sup>17</sup> Ὁ Διὰ τοῦτο μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ
 συνιέντες τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Κυρίου. <sup>18</sup> καὶ μὴ μεθύσκεσθε οἴνῳ, ἐν ᾧ ἐστὶν ἀσωτία· ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι <sup>19</sup> ὡς λα-οὗτοι ἐαυτοὺς ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς,
 Col. 3. 12. 1 Thess. 4. 1-2. 3. 15. 5. 18. 6. 2. 1 Pet. 2. 1. 1 Cor. 12. 13. 13. 1. 14. 1. 15. 1. 16. 1. 17. 1. 18. 1. 19. 1. 20. 1. 21. 1. 22. 1. 23. 1. 24. 1. 25. 1. 26. 1. 27. 1. 28. 1. 29. 1. 30. 1. 31. 1. 32. 1. 33. 1. 34. 1. 35. 1. 36. 1. 37. 1. 38. 1. 39. 1. 40. 1. 41. 1. 42. 1. 43. 1. 44. 1. 45. 1. 46. 1. 47. 1. 48. 1. 49. 1. 50. 1. 51. 1. 52. 1. 53. 1. 54. 1. 55. 1. 56. 1. 57. 1. 58. 1. 59. 1. 60. 1. 61. 1. 62. 1. 63. 1. 64. 1. 65. 1. 66. 1. 67. 1. 68. 1. 69. 1. 70. 1. 71. 1. 72. 1. 73. 1. 74. 1. 75. 1. 76. 1. 77. 1. 78. 1. 79. 1. 80. 1. 81. 1. 82. 1. 83. 1. 84. 1. 85. 1. 86. 1. 87. 1. 88. 1. 89. 1. 90. 1. 91. 1. 92. 1. 93. 1. 94. 1. 95. 1. 96. 1. 97. 1. 98. 1. 99. 1. 100. 1. 101. 1. 102. 1. 103. 1. 104. 1. 105. 1. 106. 1. 107. 1. 108. 1. 109. 1. 110. 1. 111. 1. 112. 1. 113. 1. 114. 1. 115. 1. 116. 1. 117. 1. 118. 1. 119. 1. 120. 1. 121. 1. 122. 1. 123. 1. 124. 1. 125. 1. 126. 1. 127. 1. 128. 1. 129. 1. 130. 1. 131. 1. 132. 1. 133. 1. 134. 1. 135. 1. 136. 1. 137. 1. 138. 1. 139. 1. 140. 1. 141. 1. 142. 1. 143. 1. 144. 1. 145. 1. 146. 1. 147. 1. 148. 1. 149. 1. 150. 1. 151. 1. 152. 1. 153. 1. 154. 1. 155. 1. 156. 1. 157. 1. 158. 1. 159. 1. 160. 1. 161. 1. 162. 1. 163. 1. 164. 1. 165. 1. 166. 1. 167. 1. 168. 1. 169. 1. 170. 1. 171. 1. 172. 1. 173. 1. 174. 1. 175. 1. 176. 1. 177. 1. 178. 1. 179. 1. 180. 1. 181. 1. 182. 1. 183. 1. 184. 1. 185. 1. 186. 1. 187. 1. 188. 1. 189. 1. 190. 1. 191. 1. 192. 1. 193. 1. 194. 1. 195. 1. 196. 1. 197. 1. 198. 1. 199. 1. 200. 1. 201. 1. 202. 1. 203. 1. 204. 1. 205. 1. 206. 1. 207. 1. 208. 1. 209. 1. 210. 1. 211. 1. 212. 1. 213. 1. 214. 1. 215. 1. 216. 1. 217. 1. 218. 1. 219. 1. 220. 1. 221. 1. 222. 1. 223. 1. 224. 1. 225. 1. 226. 1. 227. 1. 228. 1. 229. 1. 230. 1. 231. 1. 232. 1. 233. 1. 234. 1. 235. 1. 236. 1. 237. 1. 238. 1. 239. 1. 240. 1. 241. 1. 242. 1. 243. 1. 244. 1. 245. 1. 246. 1. 247. 1. 248. 1. 249. 1. 250. 1. 251. 1. 252. 1. 253. 1. 254. 1. 255. 1. 256. 1. 257. 1. 258. 1. 259. 1. 260. 1. 261. 1. 262. 1. 263. 1. 264. 1. 265. 1. 266. 1. 267. 1. 268. 1. 269. 1. 270. 1. 271. 1. 272. 1. 273. 1. 274. 1. 275. 1. 276. 1. 277. 1. 278. 1. 279. 1. 280. 1. 281. 1. 282. 1. 283. 1. 284. 1. 285. 1. 286. 1. 287. 1. 288. 1. 289. 1. 290. 1. 291. 1. 292. 1. 293. 1. 294. 1. 295. 1. 296. 1. 297. 1. 298. 1. 299. 1. 300. 1. 301. 1. 302. 1. 303. 1. 304. 1. 305. 1. 306. 1. 307. 1. 308. 1. 309. 1. 310. 1. 311. 1. 312. 1. 313. 1. 314. 1. 315. 1. 316. 1. 317. 1. 318. 1. 319. 1. 320. 1. 321. 1. 322. 1. 323. 1. 324. 1. 325. 1. 326. 1. 327. 1. 328. 1. 329. 1. 330. 1. 331. 1. 332. 1. 333. 1. 334. 1. 335. 1. 336. 1. 337. 1. 338. 1. 339. 1. 340. 1. 341. 1. 342. 1. 343. 1. 344. 1. 345. 1. 346. 1. 347. 1. 348. 1. 349. 1. 350. 1. 351. 1. 352. 1. 353. 1. 354. 1. 355. 1. 356. 1. 357. 1. 358. 1. 359. 1. 360. 1. 361. 1. 362. 1. 363. 1. 364. 1. 365. 1. 366. 1. 367. 1. 368. 1. 369. 1. 370. 1. 371. 1. 372. 1. 373. 1. 374. 1. 375. 1. 376. 1. 377. 1. 378. 1. 379. 1. 380. 1. 381. 1. 382. 1. 383. 1. 384. 1. 385. 1. 386. 1. 387. 1. 388. 1. 389. 1. 390. 1. 391. 1. 392. 1. 393. 1. 394. 1. 395. 1. 396. 1. 397. 1. 398. 1. 399. 1. 400. 1. 401. 1. 402. 1. 403. 1. 404. 1. 405. 1. 406. 1. 407. 1. 408. 1. 409. 1. 410. 1. 411. 1. 412. 1. 413. 1. 414. 1. 415. 1. 416. 1. 417. 1. 418. 1. 419. 1. 420. 1. 421. 1. 422. 1. 423. 1. 424. 1. 425. 1. 426. 1. 427. 1. 428. 1. 429. 1. 430. 1. 431. 1. 432. 1. 433. 1. 434. 1. 435. 1. 436. 1. 437. 1. 438. 1. 439. 1. 440. 1. 441. 1. 442. 1. 443. 1. 444. 1. 445. 1. 446. 1. 447. 1. 448. 1. 449. 1. 450. 1. 451. 1. 452. 1. 453. 1. 454. 1. 455. 1. 456. 1. 457. 1. 458. 1. 459. 1. 460. 1. 461. 1. 462. 1. 463. 1. 464. 1. 465. 1. 466. 1. 467. 1. 468. 1. 469. 1. 470. 1. 471. 1. 472. 1. 473. 1. 474. 1. 475. 1. 476. 1. 477. 1. 478. 1. 479. 1. 480. 1. 481. 1. 482. 1. 483. 1. 484. 1. 485. 1. 486. 1. 487. 1. 488. 1. 489. 1. 490. 1. 491. 1. 492. 1. 493. 1. 494. 1. 495. 1. 496. 1. 497. 1. 498. 1. 499. 1. 500. 1.

In speaking or writing, though we are left to collect it from the context, in the passages of the New Test. as well as of Daniel. The learned writer is of opinion that both here, and in the passage of Colossians, the same duty is inculcated,—of circumspection and prudence; 'the same ground existing for it in the immoral habits and malicious dispositions of the adversaries to Christianity.' The Ephesians were to walk circumspectly, and ἡγοράζετε τοὺς καιροὺς, 'because the days were evil.' The Colossians were to 'walk in wisdom to those without,' and ἡγοράζετε τοὺς καιροὺς, because, in the reign of Nero, St. Paul was thrown into bonds for speaking the mystery of Christ, and because the dangers which had already overtaken St. Paul impended over the Colossians. Now the opportunity for gaining a more serious hearing to the preachers of the Gospel would be the result of the wisdom with which they and their followers walked towards those that were without; and the want of such wisdom would have occasioned the loss of such opportunity,—would have occasioned additional obstacles to the propagation of the Gospel, and additional difficulties to those who were already converted to it. On repeated reconsideration of this difficult question, I am entirely of the same opinion as heretofore, that the sense is, 'carefully and diligently making the most use of the present opportunity,' viz. for evidencing in their conduct such a contrast as might rouse those who were in the deep sleep of heathenism, ignorance, and vice; so that they might turn to Christ, who would be light to them, by his Word in the Gospel, and by his holy enlightening Spirit. Of course the next clause subjoins the reason for promptly using the opportunity,—namely, that it might otherwise be lost, the times being evil and unfavourable.

17. μή γίνεσθε ἀφρονεῖς, ἀλλὰ [&c.] Here we have a repetition of the preceding μή ὡς ἀσσοφοί, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί at ver. 15, though, in the present case, the sense is carried still further; ἀφρ. being a stronger term than ἀσσοφοί; there being, it is supposed, an allusion to the feasts of Bacchus, or rather, it would seem, to the Bacchanalian orgies of the heathens; which enables the Apostle to introduce the admonition against drunkenness. Thus the sense is, 'Wherefore [such being your obligations as children of light, live accordingly, and] act not like persons out of their mind [but play a wise and sober part], like circumspect persons, cautiously looking to their ways, to shun the snares laid in them; not acting as foolish and rash persons, who rush blindly into dangers, but as wise persons, who bear them in mind, and seek to escape them'.

18. μὴ μεθύσκ. οἴνω lit. 'be not drunken by the use of wine' (Dat. of instrument); ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι, 'be filled, i. e. seek to be filled, with the holy influence of the Spirit (not the fumes of wine), endeavour to attain its influences.' It must, however, be borne in mind, that this seeking and endeavouring must be extended to the diligent use of all the appointed means of grace, especially earnest prayer, public and private, and especially the right use of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the highest of all those means. Thus we gain a solution of the difficulty here found, or rather made, by many Expositors, on the same principle as that which will apply to the debated words of Philipp. ii. 12, 13.—ut in vobis dormia. 'A*gria* is not well rendered excess, that import being implied in μηδύκ. The term is a very comprehensive one, denoting 'the disposition of a person abandoned to intemperance.' Render: 'in which [drunkenness] there is a [tendency to] dissoluteness,' or 'profligacy,' see Prov. xxiii. 30. Such, too, is the view of the sense taken by Hyper., who says, 'there is here a ratio mavoria ab effectis, sive a damno.' And so Calv. remarks, 'Admonet quid mali pariat ebrietas, nempe dormiar; quo nomine intelligo lascivias omne genus et dissoluteness.'

19. καλοῦντες αὐτοὺς ψαλμοῖς, &c.] These words are intended to illustrate and exemplify the preceding verse; and the meaning that, when in their families, or in society, they felt elevated beyond ordinary conversation, and sought for hilarity, they should not express this feeling, as did the heathens, in singing or reciting dissolute songs (called scotia), but in the use of 'psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs'; either by recitation, to each other, or by singing them, singly or in chorus. On the discrimination of sense in ψαλμ., ὕμν. and ὠδ. πν. I have fully treated in Rec. Syn. It would seem that by ψαλμ. we are not to understand the Psalms of David only; but also the compositions of those persons who had the spiritual gifts (see 1 Cor. xiv. 26, ᾠδὴ ψαλμὸν ἔχει, where see the note), which are in Euseb. (Hist. Eccl. l. v. 28) distinctly adverted to: ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἐν ἁρχῇ ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφείσαι, which composition, he says, τὸν Λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὸν Χριστὸν, ὕμνουσι ('celebrate the Logos of God, Christ', θεολογούντες 'speaking of him as God'). Accordingly these ψαλμοὶ differed in no material respect from ὕμνοι; see Rec. Syn. How far the ὠδαὶ πνυμ. differed from both is by no means clear. The difference would seem to have been,—that the two former celebrated the praises of God in strains adapted to be sung in chorus; while the ὠδαὶ were poems on some religious subject, and, it is probable, were usually only recited; or, if sung, sung as are our solo anthems, in which there is much of recitative. This the Apostle directs to be done ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, ἢ ε. so that 'the inward affections of their hearts' should go with the outward expressions of their voices; meaning, that this was not to be performed in a cold and formal manner, or be regarded as always to be done, but only when they felt so inclined. Thus we shall fully comprehend the force of the admonition at James v. 13, at r Col. 2. 17.

1 Thess. 5.
18.
Heb. 12. 14.
Ps. 34. 1.
1 Pet. 2. 5.
Col. 2. 13, 20.
2. 4. 1.
1 Gen. 2. 10.
1 Cor. 14. 24.
Col. 2. 18.
Tit. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 2. 1.
u Rom. 12. 5.
1 Cor. 11. 2.
10. 8. 12. 27.
ch. 1. 23. 25.
2. 15. 15.
Col. 1. 18. 24.
x Gal. 1. 4.
ch. 2. 2.
Col. 2. 18.
1 Pet. 2. 7.
y John 2. 5.
2. 15. 2.
Tit. 2. 5.
1 Pet. 2. 21.

ἄδοντες καὶ ψάλλοντες ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ 20 ἔυχασ-ριστοῦντες πάντοτε ὑπὲρ πάντων, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ 21 ὑποτασσόμενοι ἀλλήλοις ἐν φόβῳ † Θεοῦ. 22 Αἱ γυναῖκες, τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν υπο-τάσσεσθε, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ 23 ὅτι [ὁ] ἀνὴρ ἐστὶ κεφαλὴ τῆς γυναικὸς, ὡς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς κεφαλὴ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστὶ σωτὴρ τοῦ σώματος. 24 Ἄλλ', ὥσπερ ἡ ἐκκλησία ὑποτάσ-σεται τῷ Χριστῷ, οὕτω καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν ἐν παντί. 25 Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησεν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν καὶ ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς 26 ἵνα αὐτὴν ἀγιάσῃ, καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ which so many have stumbled, εὐθυμεῖ τις;

ψαλλέτω.

20. εὐχαριστ., &c.] This forms another head of admonition as to their private conduct, and is illustrative of the walking circumspectly. It must relate solely to the expression of thankfulness 'to God even the Father' in private devotions, or in family prayer, and that under all circumstances, whether prosperous or adverse; see two admirable Discourses of Dr. Isaac Barrow on this text, vol. i. 91, 121, entitled, 'On the Duty of Thanksgiving,' where, after observing that "the words may, without violence or prejudice on either hand, be separated from the context, and considered distinctly by themselves," he remarks that "every single word of the sentence carries with it a notable emphasis and especial significancy. The first expresses the substance of the duty to which we are exhorted; the next (namely, in order of construction) denotes the object to which it is directed (God). The following term 'always' determines the main circumstances of this and all other duties, the time of performance. The last, 'for all things,' declares the adequate matter of the duty, and how far it should extend."—The subsequent expression ἐν ὀνόματι (little attended to by most recent Commentators) is to be understood with reference to the mediation of Christ (see Chrysost. and Theophylact), 'through whom alone all blessings flow' to sinful man, and through whom all praises are accepted that ascend from earth.

21. ὑποτασσόμενοι ἀλλήλοις] This forms another head of admonition, namely, to that natural, civil, and ecclesiastical subordination, the violation of which was, there is reason to think, not unfrequent among the early Christians. They are, therefore, exhorted 'to submit themselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake'; that those in subordinate situations should render due obedience and subjection to their superiors; and that ex animo, and on account of the duty they owe to God, as is enjoined further on to servants. From this verse to chap. vi. 10, the Apostle (following up the general injunction ὑποτάσσεσθαι, with particular ones) adverts to various kinds of subordination,—both natural and social,—each in order, and exhorts to the discharge of the relative duties. Comp. 1 Cor. vii. 10—19, and 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2.—ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ, from reference to the authority of God.' So Rom. xii. 11, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες. Here, indeed, there is great reason to think that Χρι-

στοῦ (instead of Θεοῦ), found in very many of the best MSS., ancient Versions, and early Fathers (and which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.), is the true reading.

22. ἰδίοις] The expression is not to be rigidly interpreted, it merely standing (as Col. iii. 18) for ἑαυτοῖς; a use, however, not found in the Classical writers.—ὅτι τῷ Κυρίῳ, meaning, 'as a duty rendered to the Lord, your common Lord and Master, and therefore to be discharged willingly and cheerfully.'

23. ἐστὶ κεφαλὴ τῆς γυναικὸς, &c.] See 1 Cor. xi. 3, 7, and notes.—κεφαλὴ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, 'Head of the body of the Church' (see Rom. xii. 5, and note). Thus intimating that as Christ is the preserver of the body of the Church, so is the husband to be the safeguard and protector of his wife and family; an idea which our language well expresses by the significant term husband; i. e. house-band, or bond of the family.

25. The Apostle here points to the reciprocal duty, by which the submission before enjoined would be rendered more easy and effectual; namely, by kindness and affection, as a liberal indulgence to the frailty of the weaker sex.

26. ἵνα αὐτὴν ἀγιάσῃ—ῥήματι] i. e. 'that he might [by his Spirit] consecrate it to his service, having cleansed it by the washing of the water (i. e. by that baptism which is the laver of regeneration; see Tit. iii. 5), and through the word, i. e. the Gospel, as the means of their conversion and sanctification.' The expression ῥήματι has been variously, but not satisfactorily explained. It might mean this, or that, did the context permit. But the question is, what it does mean? The Fathers, Greek and Latin, and several modern Commentators, refer it to the words of the form in baptism. But that is open to objections insuperable. The one which I have above stated, according to which ῥήμα is referred to the Gospel, is supported by many of the best Expositors; though they, for the most part, expound but vaguely. Strictly speaking, the term should be explained—as it is by Augustin on St. John, Trac. 80, and Est.—to denote 'the word of evangelical doctrine,' inasmuch as that is received by faith in Christ; what is called by Paul himself, Rom. x. 8, τὸ ῥήμα τῆς πίστεως. Comp. v. 17, τὸ ῥήμα. And as calculated to further illustrate the force of καθαρίσας, as used with ῥήματι so explained, August. well subjoins Acts xv. 9, τῇ πίστει καθαρῶς τὰς ὑδατος ἐν ῥήματι 27 ἵνα παραστήσῃ † αὐτὴν ἑαυτῷ ἑνδοξόν <sup>z Cant. 4. 7. ch. 1. 4. 2 Cor. 1. 14. & 11. 2. Col. 1. 22. 28. Jude 24.</sup> τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, μὴ ἔχουσαν σπῖλον ἢ ῥυτίδα, ἢ τι τῶν τοιούτων, ἀλλ' ἵνα ᾗ ἁγία καὶ ἄμωμος. 28 Οὕτως ὀφείλουσιν οἱ ἄνδρες ἀγαπᾶν τὰς ἑαυτῶν γυναῖκας, ὡς τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα. Ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα, ἑαυτὸν ἀγαπᾷ. 29 οὐδεὶς γάρ ποτε τὴν ἑαυτοῦ σάρκα ἐμίσησεν, ἀλλ' ἐκτρέφει καὶ θάλπει αὐτήν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ † Κύριος τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. 30 ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ. 31 β' Ἄντι τούτου καταλείψει ἄνθρωπος τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν μητέρα, καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν. 32 Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστίν ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν καρδίας αὐτῶν, and 1 Pet. iii. 21, where see note. This enlarged view of the force of the expression has been, I find, recently adopted by Mr. Conyb., who remarks that the meaning is, that 'the Church, having been purified by the waters of baptism, is hallowed by the revelation of the mind of God imparted to us, whether mediately, or immediately.' Comp. Heb. xii. 13.

27. ἵνα παραστήσῃ—ἄμωμος] There is here some variety of interpretation, occasioned prob. by a misconception of the metaphor. Koppe takes παραστ., simply for περιποιεῖσθαι or κτᾶσθαι, 'make her his own.' But this is merely avoiding the difficulty. Considering the words of the foregoing verse, in conjunction with Oriental marriage customs (among which was this, that the bride should be carefully washed, and in every way purified, previously to the marriage), there is here doubtless a matrimonial allusion. And, viewing the present passage in conjunction with 2 Cor. xi. 2, παρβίνον ἀγὴν παραστήσαι τῷ Χριστῷ, we may well suppose that there is such here. The words μὴ ἔχουσαν σπῖλον ἢ ῥυτίδα allude to the Oriental methods of making the skin so clear and smooth, by removing all freckles, wrinkles, or other blemishes, as to be ἄμωμον. So Solomon's Song iv. 7, καλὴ, καὶ μῶμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν σοί. 'Παραστήναι is thought to be used either of the father-in-law's introducing the bride to the bridegroom, or of the bridegroom's taking her home when espoused.' It would seem, however, that the expression has reference to the Παραμυθία, ὁ φίλος τοῦ νυμφίου, John iii. 29, who originally selected the bride for the bridegroom, and afterwards formally introduced her to him, first for his approbation as a wife (see John iii. 29, and note), and finally when formally brought home to his house on the wedding night; see Psalm xiv. 14. And as in John iii. 29, the Baptist compares himself to the παραμυθία, and Christ to the bridegroom; so here, it would seem from the expression ἑαυτῷ, Christ is considered as paranymph to himself, with respect to his spouse the Church.—Instead of αὐτήν, 6 uncials, and 15 cursives, with the Vulg., Coptic, and Italic Versions, with some Fathers, have αὐτόν, which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., but though the reading is very precious, it would seem to be only a correction of those who stumbled at the irregularity of the expression in this sense; not perceiving that the irregularity was occasioned by τὴν ἐκκλησίαν being thrown in to make what is meant by αὐτήν, which is personified, more plain. The passage may be literally rendered, 'That he might present her [namely], the Church, unto himself glorious.' &c. On reconsidering the question for my ninth edit., I am ready to admit that internal evidence is equally balanced between the two readings; but the want of more external evidence for αὐτόν (I do not find it in any one of the Lamb. and Mus. copies), and the strong authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version, induce me still to follow Matthæi, in retaining the t. rec.

28. The argument in this and the three following verses is founded on the nature of the conjugal union, whereby the husband and wife become, as it were, 'one flesh.' Thus the wife is regarded as the husband's second self.—τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα is for ἑαυτοῦς, conformably, Koppe says, to the preceding figure; but rather, it would seem, in order to make the application in the next verse the stronger, by the use of σάρκα. As illustrative of the argumentation here (which is popular, taken, as Calv. says, ἀ πατρῷ, and therefore not to be too much pressed on), may be noticed the words of Aristot., Eth., p. 233, where he says, 'any one's son is ὅσῳ πατρὶς αὐτοῦ,' and then adds, αὐτὸν δὲ προαιρεῖται βλέπειν οὐδεὶς. Comp. Hom. Il. 9, 340.

29. ὁ Κύριος] Instead of this, 5 uncials, and 20 cursive MSS. (to which I add Lamb. 1183, 1, m.), and several ancient Versions and Fathers, have ὁ Χριστός, which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. I have, however, chosen, with Matthæi, to retain the t. rec., since internal as well as external evidence is in its favour.

30. ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν—αὐτοῦ] The sense is prob. to be completed from the preceding verse, as follows: '[The Lord so nourishes and supports us who are his Church] because we are [in that view] members of his body.' The next words, ver. 31, carry the comparison further, by an allusion to what Adam said of Eve, Gen. ii. 23; thus representing the relation as being equally close as that of Eve to Adam. And then, to place what is said in a stronger point of view, the Apostle introduces the very words spoken of the woman.

32. τὸ μυστήριον—ἐστίν] lit. 'This mystery

o Col. 2. 19.
1 Pet. 2. 6.
a Col. 3. 20.
Prov. 20. 22.
b Exod. 20.
12.
Deut. 5. 16.
Matt. 15. 4.
Mark 7. 10.
c Gen. 18. 19.
Exod. 12. 26.
27.
d 13. 14, 15.
Deut. 6. 7, 30
—34.
e 11. 19—31.
Pa. 78. 6—7.
Prov. 19. 18.
e 20. 17.
Ecclus. 7. 28.
Col. 3. 21.
d Col. 3. 22.
1 Tim. 6. 1.
Tit. 2. 2.

καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. <sup>33</sup> Ὡς ἡμεῖς οἱ καθ' ἕνα, ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα οὕτως ἀγαπάτω ὡς ἑαυτόν ἢ δὲ γυνὴ ἡ φοβῆται τὸν ἄνδρα.

VI. 1. <sup>1</sup> Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσιν ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον. <sup>2</sup> Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ τὴν μητέρα· ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντολὴ πρώτη ἐν ἐπαγγελίᾳ. <sup>3</sup> ἵνα εὖ σοι γένηται, καὶ ἔσῃ μακροχρόνιος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. <sup>4</sup> Καὶ, οἱ πατέρες, μὴ παροργίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, ἀλλ' ἐκτρέφετε αὐτὰ ἐν παιδείᾳ καὶ νοουθεσίᾳ Κυρίου.

<sup>5</sup> Οἱ δούλοι, ὑπακούετε τοῖς κυρίοις κατὰ σάρκα μετὰ φόβου

is a great one; 'in this is [contained] a great mystery, representing a most important truth [though long unknown].—namely, with reference to the mystical union between Christ and the Church, as alluded to in the next words, ὡς δὲ λέγεις εἰς, &c., 'I mean with reference to,' &c. The Apostle, it is plain, recognizes an allegorical sense in that passage, involving an image of the intimate union between Christ and his Church.—λέγεις εἰς—ἐκκλ., meaning, it would seem, 'But in saying this, I especially advert to [the union between] Christ and his Church [that you may apply it to yourselves].' Dr. Chandi. remarks, after Calv., that the Papists would fain prove from this passage that marriage is a sacrament; whereas μυστήριον in the N. T. is never a sacrament. It would have been more correct to say 'some Papists;' for I do not find all Papists of this opinion; certainly Thom. Aquin. and De Lyra were not. Cardinal Cajetan and Est. both admit that the doctrine cannot be proved from this passage; and they remark (what ought to have no little weight), that neither did the ancient Catholic divines adduce it in proof. Indeed, Est. adopts the sense assigned by the best Protestant Commentators.

VI. 1. ἐν Κυρίῳ i. e. in reference to the authority of the Lord, (ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ, v. 21.)—τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δ., meaning, that this is right and just, both by the law of nature and that of revelation.

2. τίμα τ. πατ. Τίμα properly signifies, 'to perform dutiful attention to any one;' and here reverence must comprehend the cognate offices of affection, care, and support. The same complexity of sense is observable in the Class. phrase τίμα τὸν λαόν. In ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντ. πρ. ἐν ἐπ. some limitation is intended. Most of the best modern Commentators understand by πρώτη 'the first with a special and appropriate promise annexed to it;' that contained in the second commandment being only a general declaration of God's mercy to all who keep the commandments. If this be thought unsatisfactory, we may, with the ancient and some eminent modern Commentators, take πρώτη ἐν to mean, 'a principal commandment,' as, from its peculiar importance, it may very well be termed. Thus ἐν ἐπαγγ. will mean, 'and that, too, with a promise annexed.' This latter mode, however, is not necessary; for as to the objection that some have made, that the former sense would require the Article, that has been refuted by Bp. Middl., who has shown that πρώτη may very well be taken for ἡ πρώτη.

3. ἵνα εὖ—τῇ γῇ Many recent Expositors represent the import of the promise to be, that 'the Jewish state would be flourishing and permanent, if the children were educated.' And that the education of children is of great consequence, both to the welfare of families, and benefit to the community at large, cannot be denied; but there is nothing said here of education; nor was the commandment meant for children in age, but offspring, whether children or adults. Hence there is no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and early modern Expositors, that the promise was meant for individuals; though it would, of course, apply likewise to whole societies, as composed of individuals. We are not, however, hence to infer, that the same temporal blessing may now be with certainty expected to attend the performance of this duty; for the promise is only mentioned as a proof of the high importance of the commandment. Still it seems to be implied, that what was attended with so marked a blessing under the Mosaic law (even the performance of a precept which constituted part of the Moral law engrafted into Christianity), would experience a corresponding portion of blessing under the Gospel of Christ, though the reward might be not so much of this world, as of the next.

4. μὴ παροργίζετε i. e. 'do not irritate by undue austerity, or needless severity.' For such seems to be the force of the παρ. At the parallel passage of Col. iii. 21 is added ἵνα μὴ ἀθυμῶσιν, i. e. 'lest they fall into that discouragement, and despair of doing their duty, which unmerited harshness occasions.' The words following seem meant to suggest the mode whereby the duty and obedience of children might be most effectually secured,—namely, by giving them such a course of discipline and instruction as properly belongs to a religious education, which ought to be employed in forming them for the Lord, by laying a restraint upon the first appearances of every vicious passion, and mourning them up in the words of faith and of good doctrine; see 1 Tim. iv. 6.—παιδεία καὶ νοῦθ. should be rendered 'education and discipline;' the former terms seeming to regard the instruction part of education, and the latter the corrective part, by forming their morals. Κυρίου is added, to suggest that the whole of this education and moral training should be suitable to their Christian profession.

5. κατὰ σάρκα 'earthly;' said with allusion to

καὶ τρόμου, ἐν ἀπλότῃ τῆς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς τῷ Χριστῷ <sup>6</sup> μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλείαν ὡς ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, ἀλλ' ὡς δούλοι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ποιοῦντες τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ ψυχῆς, <sup>7</sup> μετ' εὐνοίας δουλεύοντες, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώποις. <sup>8</sup> εἰδότες ὅτι <sup>9</sup> δ' εἰάν τι ἕκαστος ποιήσῃ ἀγαθόν, τοῦτο κομῆται παρὰ [τοῦ] Κυρίου, εἴτε δούλος εἴτε ἐλεύθερος. <sup>9</sup> Καὶ, οἱ κύριοι, τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς, ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν· εἰδότες ὅτι καὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν ὁ Κύριός ἐστιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ προσωποληψία οὐκ ἔστι παρ' αὐτῷ.

<sup>10</sup> Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, ἐνδυναμούσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ ἐν <sup>11</sup> ε ch. 2. 10.

their common Master in heaven. Thus the Apostle does not interfere with any established relations, however (as in the case of slaves) morally wrong, but only enjoins the discharge of duties, which the very persons themselves recognized.—μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου, 'with diffident anxiety and self-distrust.' See note on 2 Cor. vii. 15, and espec. on Phil. ii. 12.—ἐν ἀπλότῃ. τ. κ., 'with hearty sincerity and good-will.'—ὡς τῷ Χρ., 'as if the service were unto Christ, the heavenly Master, who is, in a more eminent sense, the Lord of the Christian.'

<sup>6</sup> μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλίαν, &c.] This is further illustrative of the preceding verse. They are first told how the service is not to be rendered, and then how, and on what principle, it is to be rendered. The terms ὀφθ. and ἀνθρωπ. are both of rare occurrence, and denote a service and obedience rendered only when the master is present, and to gain the praise of men.—ἐκ ψυχῆς is equiv. to ἐν ἀπλότῃ. τῆς καρδίας in the foregoing verse. Koppe, and most recent Editors, point thus: τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ ψυχῆς, μετ' εὐνοίας, δουλεύοντες [ὡς] τῷ Κυρίῳ. But this seems to do some violence to the construction. Moreover, that ἐκ ψυχῆς was meant to be taken with the preceding, not the following, words, is plain from the parallel passage of Col. iii. 23, καὶ πάντες τι τὰν ποιήτε, ἐκ ψυχῆς ἰργάζεσθε (i.e. 'work it out with your whole soul') ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ, &c. Again, the course of thought in this passage requires that μετ' εὐνοίας should be taken with δουλεύοντες. Finally, the ὡς before τῷ Κυρίῳ, which I have admitted, with all the recent Editors, on strong authority (to which I add all the Lamb. and Mus. copies), is required by the same course of thought, as also by the parallel passage of Col. above noted. The passage may be rendered, 'but, as servants of Christ, doing from the heart the will of God (what it is God's good pleasure you should do), and, accordingly, with good-will doing such service as [done] unto the Lord, and not to men, considered apart from God.' See Dr. Peile's foot-note, where he adds that the καὶ is so used here as to connect 'obedience unto men with obedience unto God in Christ, and unto Christ in the Paterfamilias, the temporal and the spiritual Pastor and Master,—each in his own order and place of responsibility and trust.' And thus, continues he, 'the καὶ becomes the exponent of a far higher principle, which our great Poet (greater herein than his Critic Bentley) has so happily expressed, when of Adam and Eve he says, 'He for God only, she for God in him.' Par. Lost, iv. 299.

<sup>9</sup> τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖτε πρὸς αὐτούς i.e. 'discharge your duties to them as conscientiously and religiously as they are required to do to you.'—ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν. The sense here must depend upon that assigned to ἀπειλήν, a term often in the Sept. used of wrath and angry oburgation; and we might here take it to mean, 'a threatening, oburgatory demeanour.'—ἀνιέντες will then signify forbearing (as in Pa. xxxvii. 8, 'leave off wrath, let go displeasure'), or moderating it, as the margin expresses it. Thus, however, the Article will have no force; and, after a careful examination of all the passages of the Classics where I could meet with the word, I have not been able to find any instance of the Article being used without some reference. Now, as ἀνιέναι often in the Scriptures signifies to remit, but scarcely ever to leave off, I am inclined to think that the sense is, 'remitting the severity of punishment you had threatened,' or intended, or which is denounced by the Law. So in Xenoph. Mag. Eq. i. 14, ἡ ἀπειλή signifies the punishment awarded by Law. Also Plutarch, Alex., cited by Wetstein: ὡς δὲ ἰσῶρα τὸν Ἰππону ἀφαικότα τὴν ἀπειλήν, 'had shaken off all fear of the punishment denounced.' This interpretation is placed beyond doubt by the words following; the argument being, 'Show a forgiving spirit towards your bond-servants, knowing that you stand in great need of forgiveness from that common Master in heaven, in whose sight you are equally servants, and who will make no distinction of persons.'

<sup>10</sup>—<sup>17</sup>. The Apostle here draws his practical exhortations to a close by a general admonition, couched in a figure derived from military affairs. He bids them 'be strong and of good courage;' and at the same time, well knowing that all human strength is but weakness, he points to the alone source of competent strength and courage, in the Lord. As the soldiers of Christ, the Ephesians are called upon to stand firm against their various spiritual enemies, in the exercise of all the Christian virtues and graces (see 2 Cor. vi. 6, and notes), aptly designated by the panoply, or complete suit of armour, provided for every true believer; clothed in which they are to fight under the banners of the great Captain of their salvation against sin, the world, the flesh, and the Devil. Without this they would have been unequal to the contest; and they can only be strong in the Lord by seeking his strength, as

h. Wied. 5. τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ<sup>11</sup> ἡ ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν
 17. τοῦ Θεοῦ, πρὸς τὸ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς στήναι πρὸς τὰς μεθοδεῖας
 Rom. 12. 12. τοῦ Διαβόλου. 12<sup>10</sup> Ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν ἡ πάλῃ πρὸς αἷμα καὶ
 2 Cor. 6. 7. σάρκα, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὰς ἀρχάς, πρὸς τὰς ἐξουσίας, πρὸς τοὺς
 1 Thes. 5. 2. κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους [τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου], πρὸς τὰ πνευ-
 1 Luke 22. 53.
 55.
 John 15. 51. & 14. 30.
 & 16. 11.
 Acts 26. 16.
 ch. 2. 2. Col. 1. 13.

communicated by his Holy Spirit, and that can alone be obtained by fervent 'prayer of faith' to the throne of Grace.

10. ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρ., &c.] This has the same sense as κραταίωσθε in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xvi. 13.—κράτ. τ. ἰσχ. may be rendered 'through the force (i. e. efficacy) of his strength.' The Apostle first compares generally the strong motives to steadfastness in the profession of the Gospel, supplied by the consolation and aid it imparts here, and the glorious hopes it reveals hereafter; and then follows up this military metaphor, evolving it into an allegory, in which he compares the moral and spiritual arms, with which the Christian ought to be furnished, with the panoply of the Greek warrior.

11. τοῦ Θεοῦ] i. e., as it were, 'supplied by God,' just as the πανοπλία of the ancients was by the monarch or the state.—στήναι ('to withstand, oppose') is properly applied to persons, but metaphorically to things, when closely connected with persons.—μεθόδ. must, in this context, be regarded as a military term, denoting manœuvres, espec. as in some passages cited by the Commentators μάθοδοι and τείχνη are used as synonymous. See supra iv. 14, and note.—τοῦ Διαβόλου. In vain is it that many recent Commentators would here exclude all notion of Diabolical agency, by explaining Διαβ. to mean 'an adversary.' Taking this in conjunction with what follows, and what we find in other parts of Scripture, we cannot but recognise a reference to the great Author of evil, and consequently trace a proof of his personality and power. There may, however, be an indirect reference, though only a subordinate one, to the arts of malicious adversaries; not only Jews and heathens, but also those of the false Judaizing teachers.

12. ὅτι—ἡ πάλῃ] Literally, 'for to us the contest is not with,' &c.; i. e. the struggle which we have to maintain is not, &c. 'Thus (says Calvin) expressing the greatness of the danger, by indicating the nature of the enemy;' thereby intimating that the difficulty is beyond human strength to grapple with. Πάλῃ is properly a gymnastic term; but the Apostle often unites military with agonistic metaphors; and here the agonistic is not less suitable than the military. So in a similar passage of Max. Tyr. Diss. v. 9. vol. i. 79, Ed. Reisk., we have mention of Socrates wrestling with Melampus, with bonds and poison; next, the philosopher Plato wrestling with a tyrant's anger, a rough sea, and the greatest dangers; then, Xenophon struggling with the prejudices of Themaphernes, the snares of Arimus, the treachery of Meno, and the royal machinations; and, lastly, Diogenes struggling with adversaries even more formidable, namely, poverty, infamy, hunger, and cold.—At αἷμα καὶ σάρκα supply μόνον, 'merely human enemies,' ἀνθρώπων ὁμοιοπαθεῖς ἡμῖν καὶ ἰσοδυνάμους, as Theophyl. explains, namely, as opposed to Dæmoniacal foes. See Matt. xvi. 17, and Gal. i. 16. So Heb. ii.

14, πάλῃ πρὸς σάρκα. That Dæmoniacal opponents are adverted to is clear by the force of the antithesis, as also from the words τὰ βέλη τοῦ πονηροῦ at ver. 16. By τὰς ἀρχάς—τὰς ἐξουσίας, the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, must be meant (by an ἐπιτροπαλία frequent in the case of good angels) the various orders of evil angels (as is plain from the τοῦ Διαβόλου in the preceding verse), who had long revolted from, and been in opposition to, God and his kingdom. See Rom. viii. 38, and note. The words πρὸς τοὺς κοσμ. τ. εκ. τ. αἰ. τ. are by some recent Commentators supposed to refer to the Jewish rulers. It would, however, seem that they are merely meant to designate more particularly the above-mentioned evil angels, and show how they are connected with this world, and are enabled to oppose the maintainers of the truth; namely, as being the rulers and directors of the spiritual darkness of this world; namely, of those who uphold ignorance and vice therein.—κοσμοκ. is a strong term, properly used of the Emperors of Rome, the Kings of Persia, and other powerful monarchs. So Satan is in John xii. 31 called ὁ ἀρχὴν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, and examples of this use are adduced by Weststein from the Rabbinical writers. Irenæus, too, says, Διάβολον, ὃν καὶ κοσμοκράτορα καλοῦσιν. The words τοῦ αἰῶνος, not found in 5 uncials, and 3 cursives, as also several Versions and Fathers, have been cancelled by Griesb., Lachm., and Tisch. But, supposing the words to have no place here, it is difficult to see what suitable sense can be assigned to τοῦ σκότους τούτου, or how 'this darkness' can properly be said, considering that no darkness has before been mentioned. Were τούτου away, there would be some sense in τοῦ σκότους (which might designate the world as dark; so supra, ch. v. 8, we have, ἦτι γὰρ τότε σκότος), though that would be not a very apposite one. Hence the words (which I find in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies) are best retained, and their omission may be accounted for by supposing them to have been inadvertently passed over by some copyist, owing to the τοῦ—τούτου, the latter word being expressed by an abbreviation very much like τοῦ; and thus αἰῶνος would be omitted, and then τοῦ, having no sense, would be altered into τούτου. Or τοῦ αἰῶνος might intentionally be suppressed by some half-learned Critics, who supposed them to be superfluous as being contained (as regards sense) in κοσμοκρ., and did not perceive that this, though a seeming, is not a real tautology; the words τοῦ σκότους τοῦ αἰῶνος τοῦ, being meant to be explanatory of the unusual and obscure term κοσμοκρ. Thus the persons here designated as ἀρχαί, ἐξουσίαι, and κοσμοκρ., must be the under-rulers of darkness, holding rule under Satan, 'the prince of this world,' who accordingly is styled by St. Paul elsewhere (2 Cor. iv. 4), ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, where αἰῶν. is said (as here), from its being ματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις. <sup>13</sup> <sup>k</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο ἀναλά- <sup>k</sup> 3 Cor. 10.

 βετε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα δυνηθῇτε ἀντιστῆναι ἐν τῇ <sup>1</sup> Luke 8. 15.
 ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, καὶ, ἅπαντα κατεργασάμενοι, στήναι. <sup>14</sup> <sup>1</sup> Rev. 2. 10.
 Στήτε <sup>2</sup> 2. 17.
 οὖν περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὁσφύν ὑμῶν ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι <sup>1</sup> 1 Jas. 11. 5.
 τὸν θώρακα τῆς δικαιοσύνης, <sup>15</sup> <sup>m</sup> καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι τοὺς πόδας <sup>2</sup> 2 Cor. 6. 7.
 ἐν ἐτοιμασίᾳ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς εἰρήνης· <sup>16</sup> <sup>1</sup> Luke 12. 35.
 ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἀναλα- <sup>1</sup> 1 Thess. 5. 8.
 ῥα τὸν θώρακα τῆς δικαιοσύνης, <sup>1</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 12.
 καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι τοὺς πόδας <sup>1</sup> 1 Jas. 5. 7.
 ἐν ἐτοιμασίᾳ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς εἰρήνης· <sup>1</sup> Rom. 10. 15.

a more forcible term than κόσμον, and as denoting this world that lieth in wickedness (1 John v. 19), called at Gal. i. 4, ὁ ἰσχυρὸς αἰὼν πονηρός. How strong a term is αἰὼν plainly appears from Ephes. ii. 2.

13. Here we have a repetition, for greater impressiveness, of the foregoing admonition.—ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, meaning, 'the day of persecution and temptation.' See supra v. 16. On the exact sense of κατεργασάμενοι some difference of opinion exists. The ancient Commentators in general, and most of the early modern ones, explain it, 'having accomplished all things,' i. e. connected with this contest; while Beza, Zanch., Kypke, Weta., Koppe, and almost all the more recent Expositors, assign as the sense, 'having conquered all our spiritual enemies,' namely, the world, the flesh, and the devil. The former interpretation is permitted by the usus loquendi, and may seem the more simple and agreeable to the thing signified, but the other is required by the context, there being a military metaphor, as is certain from various passages of the Classics adduced by the Commentators. We may suppose the neuter here (as often) put for the masc., or rather ἄπαντα may be taken adverbially for omnino. Moreover, the above interpretation of κατεργ. is required by the antithetical term στήναι, which must signify 'to stand victorious over, survive the contest.' So Thucyd. v. 102, καὶ οὖν τὸ μὲν εἶπαι εὐδὲν δειλίπιστον, μετὰ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου εἶπαι καὶ στήναι ἔλπις ὁρᾶν, where see my note, and that on 2 Cor. iv. 8. Perhaps the Apostle had in view Pa. xx. 8, where the Sept. has καὶ ἀνωρθώθημεν. But the true sense of γίγαι, I think, that expressed by Piscator and Gigueus, detinimus, (or tenemus) inmoti of victores. See Josh. vii. 12. The next word πρωτῶν is exegetical of the preceding, and it is well rendered by Tirin. concordantibus. It would have been better translated in the Greek by ὁμοίᾳ ἰσότητι.

14. The Apostle now repeats for the third time his exhortation, and that in order to develop the nature of the duty by tracing its various parts. In the accommodation of the figure employed we may observe consummate skill and address. Στήτε means 'stand to your arms!' the first thing soldiers learn. Περιζωσάμενοι is for περιζ. τ. ὁ. ὅ. ἐν δ. ὡς ζωστήρι, or περιζώμεναι, there being an allusion to the belts with which the flowing vests of the Orientals require to be girded up for any active employment.—ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, 'in truth and sincerity,' true and sincere belief, the bracer up and support of religious constancy. Similar metaphors occur in Philo-Jud. and Josephus. By δικ. must here be meant the constant practice of the moral and Christian virtues, which would be the surest external safeguard against the calumnies of Pagan adversaries, as it would also be the best internal support and comfort. In this noble passage we may suppose the Apostle to have had in mind a similar one of Wisd. v. 17—20; also Ia. lix. 17, ἐνιδύσατο δικαιοσύνην ὡς θώρακα, formed on Isa. lii. 7, according to the Greek version employed by St. Paul at Rom. x. 15.

15. καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι—ἐπὶ πᾶσιν, meaning, it would seem, 'And [like as soldiers have their feet shod with sandals armed with iron, as a defence against the roughness, and a security against the slipperiness, of the roads,] so do ye arm yourselves against the rough or slippery temptations of your Christian course, by being, as it were, shod with the preparation and defence supplied by the Gospel of peace (i. e. which alone gives peace), even the strong motives to constancy in religion and a holy life supplied by the Gospel.'—τῇ εἰρήνῃ is added (as Theodor. observes) simply because war had been just mentioned, and so intimates, 'that while we are to manfully fight against sin, the world, and the devil, we are to cultivate peace with each other, and with our common Lord.'

16. ἐπὶ πᾶσιν. The MS. B and 10 cursives have ἐν πᾶσιν, which derives confirmation from the Vulg. and Ital. Versions, and some Fathers, and has been adopted by Lachm., but without sufficient reason. External authority is quite in favour of ἐπὶ (which I find in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies); and so is internal evidence, considering that ἐν was prob. a mistake of scribes for ἐπὶ, since ἐν would be more likely to occur to them than ἐπὶ (and the two words are very often confounded); which may more easily be imagined than that St. Paul should have used a word so much less suitable than ἐπὶ, which signifies super, 'besides, and above all [the rest]'; a sense far stronger, and more apt, than 'in all'; and certainly the air of the context requires a very strong sense. This preference is admitted even by Est., and he remarks that this is confirmed by a kindred passage of Col. iii. 14, ἐπὶ πᾶσι δὲ τὴν ἀγάπην [ἐνδύσασθε] ἥτις ἐστὶ σύνδεσμος τῆς τελειότητος. So here, why it should be necessary above all to take the shield of faith, is shown in the subsequent words, which express that by the use of this we 'can [alone] extinguish the fiery darts of the evil one.' It is well observed, too, by Bodius (apud Poli Syn.), 'Favet etiam matris fides, usque hic ei adscriptus, qui est non ad vulgaria, sed ad perniciosissima, tela, retundenda.' The expression 'super,' 'ante omnia,' may further be accounted for, since, as Bodius remarks, no part of our spiritual panoply can avail to repel the temptations of the devil but faith. If you oppose to him pureness, righteousness, &c., he will readily answer that 'all those virtues are imperfect and polluted, and therefore cannot please God, &c. But these objections easily fall before the shield of Faith, whereby, being grafted in Christ, we are accepted by God, and are accounted pure and perfect in Christ. Erasmus remarks that εβρίσκει

βόντες τὸν θυρεὸν τῆς πίστεως, ἐν ᾧ δυνήσεσθε πάντα τὰ βέλη τοῦ πονηροῦ τὰ πεπυρωμένα σβέσαι. 17<sup>a</sup> Καὶ τὴν περικεφαn Isa. 59. 17.

1 Thess. 5. 8.
Heb. 4. 12.
Rev. 1. 16.

o Matt. 26.
61.
Col. 4. 2.
Luke 18. 1.
1 Thess. 5.
17.

p Acts 4. 30.
Col. 4. 2.

q Acts 26.
30.
2 Cor. 8. 30.
r Acts 20. 4.
Col. 4. 7. 9.
s Tim. 4. 12.
Tit. 2. 12.

λαιαν τοῦ σωτηρίου δέξασθε, καὶ τὴν μάχαιραν τοῦ Πνεύματος, ὃ ἐστὶ ῥῆμα Θεοῦ 18<sup>a</sup> διὰ πάσης προσευχῆς καὶ δεήσεως προσευχόμενοι ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ ἐν πνεύματι καὶ εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτερήσῃ καὶ δεήσει περὶ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων, 19<sup>a</sup> καὶ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, ἵνα μοι †δοθῇ λόγος ἐν ἀνοίξει τοῦ στόματός μου ἐν παρρησίᾳ, γνωρίσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγε-λίου, 20<sup>a</sup> ὑπὲρ οὗ πρεσβεύω ἐν ἀλύσει ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ παρρησιά-σμαι, ὥς δεῖ με λαλήσαι.

21<sup>a</sup> Ἴνα δὲ εἰδῆτε καὶ ὑμεῖς τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ, τί πράσσω, πάντα is used 'impropiè,' since we should rather have expected such a term as exspectandi, or dispectendi; but there is no incongruity, since the Apostle expresses more when he says σβέσαι, wherein he had an eye to the epithet he had just before used; q. d. 'Satan's darts are not only sharp and sure to penetrate, but (what is more destructive) also armed with fire. But faith will suffice not only "ad retundendum acumen, sed resurgendum etiam ardorem." The βέλη πεπρω. (a very rare expression occurring elsewhere only in Apollodorus) were slender arrows of cane, to which ignited combustible matter was attached, which, when shot, would set on fire wood-work, tents, &c. So Thucyd. ii. 75, πυρ-φοροῖς δίστοῖς βάλλασθαι: see Hdtot. viii. 52. Now it was the aim of the persons so assailed to intercept and quench these burning arrows; and that could by nothing be so effectually done as by the use of their assides (espec. the large oblong shield here meant, and called θυρεός, from its resemblance to a door, which would quite extinguish them), since they were easily put out by a sudden jerk.

17. τοῦ σωτηρίου] for τῆς σωτηρίας, as in Isa. xxxvii. 11. Pa. lxxxiv. 7. Luke ii. 30. iii. 6. Acts xxviii. 28. Here it must mean the hope of salvation, as in 1 Thess. v. 8, ἀδυσσάμενοι περι-κεφαλαιᾶν ἱλπίδα σωτηρίας.—Τὴν μά-χαιραν τοῦ Πνεύμ. The best comment on this expression is to be found in Heb. iv. 12, ὧν γὰρ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πάσαν μάχαιραν δίστομον, q. d. 'As the Word of God proceeds from the Holy Spirit, so what it effects and brings about may be said to come from the Spirit; and accordingly the sword, by which it is typified, may not unaptly be termed the sword of the Spirit.' Now this ῥῆμα Θεοῦ would supply the best defensive weapon against all the attacks of adversaries, as supplying abundant matter to refute every infidel objection.

18. Having thus equipped the Christian soldier with the spiritual panoply, the Apostle proceeds to show him how he is to use it,—namely, by the exercise of fervent prayer.—ἐν πνεύματι, 'in spirit,' i. e. really, heartily, and truly. So John iv. 23, προσκυνήσουσιν ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ.—Προσκαρτερήσῃ is a stronger expression than προσευχῆς, signifying a long continuing, unremitted perseverance in prayer. The words following, εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες, serve to further develop the preceding ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ; denoting, as Theoph. says, τὴν νῆψιν τῆς ψυχῆς. To frequent and earnest application for spiritual aid, under the various trials they might be exposed to, they are to add prayers for the support and welfare of Christians in general.

19. δοθῇ] This reading, for δοθείη, is found in many of the best MSS. (to which I add nearly all the Lamb. and Mus. copies), Fathers, and early Editions, and has been edited by Griesb., Matthæi, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., in deference to whom, and in consideration of strong external evidence, I long ago received δοθῇ; but, on reconsidering the question, I must say that internal evidence is quite in favour of δοθείη, as will appear from what has been said on the reading δόη supra, ch. i. 17, and iii. 16. It is well observed by Mr. Green, Gr. N. T., p. 73, that 'the remarkable correspondence of δοθείη here with δόη supra, ch. i. 17, and iii. 16, in the idea contained in the words preceding the clause (where the idea of a wish is involved in those words) would lead to the belief that the received reading has here been unnecessarily disturbed.' I would add that it is defended by the weighty authority of the uncial MSS. B and C, together with a vast majority of the rest. The words ἐν ἀνοίξει—παρρησίᾳ may best be rendered, 'by opening my mouth with freedom.' Probably St. Paul expected soon to be brought to a public hearing, and then to be permitted to vindicate both himself and the Gospel. On the expression τὸ μυστ. τοῦ εὐαγγ. see note on 1 Cor. ii. 7.

20. πρεσβεύω] i. e. 'I sustain the office of πρεσβεῖν, or ambasciare.' So ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ πρεσβεύομεν at 2 Cor. v. 20. In ἐν ἀλύσει there is supposed to be an allusion to the custom of all nations of holding inviolate the person of an ambassador. Whenever ἀλ. is used with ἐν, it has a generic sense, to denote chains, or, figuratively, imprisonment. The words ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ—λαλήσῃ are further explanatory of those at ver. 19, where see note.

21. τί πράσσω] This is exegetical of the foregoing, τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ, scil. πράγματα. It is a popular phrase, occurring also in 1 Sam. xvii. 18.—ὁ ἀγαπητός should not be rendered 'a beloved,' as in almost all our Versions; for that is neglecting the Article; nor 'the beloved,' with Wakefield; though the common Version so renders at Rom. xvi. 12, Παρεῖδα τὴν ἀγαπητὴν, and 3 John 1, Γαίῳ τῷ ἀγαπητῷ. It is clear from Rom. xvi. 12, that the Article cannot be meant to mark notoriety, or celebrity, and therefore the cannot be tolerated. It is, I conceive, ὑμῖν γνωρίσει Τυχικὸς ὁ ἀγαπητὸς ἀδελφὸς καὶ πιστὸς διάκονος

 ἐν Κυρίῳ. <sup>22</sup> ὃν ἐπεμψα πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ἵνα γνῶτε <sup>1</sup> 1 Tim. 4
 τὰ περὶ ἡμῶν, καὶ παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν. <sup>23</sup> Εἰρήνη
 τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καὶ ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστεως ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ <sup>1</sup> 1 Cor. 16.
 Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ! <sup>24</sup> Ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἀγα- <sup>2</sup> 2 Cor. 13. 14.
 πόντων τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ! ἀμήν. <sup>3</sup> Col. 4. 12.
<sup>4</sup> 2 Tim. 4. 22.
<sup>5</sup> Tit. 2. 15.
<sup>6</sup> Heb. 12. 20.

used for the possessive pronoun. Thus in Philem. 1, 2, our common Version rightly renders Φιλ. τῷ ἀγαπητῷ and Ἀ.τ. τῇ ἀγ. by 'our beloved Philemon and our beloved Appia.'

<sup>22.</sup> παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν] This is not to be understood of exhortation, but in the usual sense to comfort or console, namely, by freeing them from excessive anxiety on his account. Καρδία is here said to be put, per synecdochen, for the person himself, as in other passages where various affections or passions are attributed to the heart; as John xvi. 22, χαρήσεται ὑμῶν ἡ καρδία, and Acts ii. 26, εὐφράνθη ἡ καρδία μου.

<sup>23.</sup> ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστει] The μετὰ is emphatic, the sense being, 'love conjoined with faith, and not, as too often, separated from it.' Thus, as in 1 Pet. i. 5, we are directed to add to faith virtue, so here St. Paul might have written, 'Add to your love faith,' as it were, 'informans et ad operationem excitans,' according to the explanation of Est. So that, as true faith worketh by love (Gal. v. 6), so is love formed or fashioned and set to work by faith.

<sup>24.</sup> ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ] The Common rendering, 'in sincerity,' cannot be fairly elicited from ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ. And the Marginal Version 'incorruptibly' is open to grave objection, which has been well stated by Dr. Peile. I should willingly adopt the rendering, 'in incorruptness' (which would derive confirmation from James i. 27, θρησκεία καθαρὰ καὶ ἀμικτὸς), i. e. 'uncorrupted by any admixture of sinister motives, pure and without worldliness or hypocrisy' (see James iii. 17), but that the term ἀφθαρσία is not susceptible of such a sense; and vain were it to seek to support it from Tit. ii. 7, since there ἀφθαρσίαν is admitted to be not genuine. I am more inclined to receive the rendering of Dr. Peile, 'grace be with all that love our Lord Jesus Christ [and abide with them] imperishably.' According to this, ἐν ἀφθ. will stand for eis ἀφθαρσίαν, 'in immortality.' And this view of the construction is confirmed by the authority of Muscul. (who refers ἐν ἀφθ. not to τῶν ἀγαπώντων, but to ἡ χάρις, 'gratia sit!') and by Beza, who explains ἐν ἀφθ. to mean ad vitam æternam, as denoting the measure of devotion of that grace which he prays for to the faithful. Thus we may point, Ἰ. Χριστὸν, ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ ἀμήν. What tends to confirm this view is, that the words of this verse form a sort of doxology, where grace (namely, the grace of our Lord) is prayed for certain persons, as in Rom. xvi. 20. 2 Cor. xiii. 13. Gal. vi. 18. Phil. iv. 23. Col. iv. 18. 1 Thess. v. 28. 1 Tim. vi. 21. 2 Tim. iv. 22. Tit. iii. 15. Heb. xiii. 25. Rev. xxii. 21.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΦΙΛΙΠΠΗΣΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

a 1 Cor. 1. 2.
b Acts 16.
1-4.

1 Cor. 16. 10.

2 Cor. 1. 1. Col. 1. 1.

Ι. <sup>1</sup> ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ <sup>b</sup> Τιμόθεος, δούλοι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίπποις, σὺν ἐπι-

THIS is evidently one of the later Epistles of St. Paul; though on its exact date no little difference of opinion exists. Some ascribe it to a date as early as A.D. 58, others as late as 65. The most probable date seems, for the reasons I have given in the Introduction to the Ephesians, to be that of 62; since it was evidently written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. That it was then written, is plain from i. 7, 13. iv. 22, and from various intimations in it (i. 12. ii. 26). The church of Philippi was founded by St. Paul, A.D. 50 (Acts xvi. 9-14); and that he again visited them in 57, we learn from Acts xx. 6. They had been all along very liberal in imparting to him of their substance, and had, on various occasions, though but a poor community, aided him with money, that he might be enabled to carry on his great designs for the evangelization of the principal cities of Greece and Asia Minor, without incurring the imputation of interested motives, by becoming chargeable to his converts. Accordingly, when they heard of his imprisonment at Rome, they evinced the same good dispositions towards him as formerly,—and sent Epaphroditus, one of their Presbyters, with a present for the relief of his necessities, which, it appears from the Epistle, were great. The more immediate purpose of this Epistle (sent on the return of Epaphroditus) was to return thanks to the Philippians for their kindness. Of this Epistle the genuineness has never been doubted except recently, by some German unbelievers, or misbelievers, as Baur and others; whose attacks, observes Dr. Davidson, are too absurd to deserve notice. The general purpose of it was to express to the Philippians his feelings of gratitude for their bounty, and his esteem and affection for their zeal and Christian virtue, and at the same time to confirm them in the pure faith of Christ, and encourage them to continue to walk worthy of their high calling. As to the order in which the present Epistle was written, among the four which were written by Paul during his two years' confinement at Rome, there is every reason to think that the Epistle was written, as Dr.

Burton and Dr. Davidson think, last of the four [prob. in the autumn of A.D. 62], towards the end of Paul's imprisonment at Rome, and not long after the Ephesian Epistle, to which it bears no inconsiderable resemblance in character and manner (though not in composition); to account for which, we have only to bear in mind that the circumstances, as to the persons addressed, were very similar, and espec. that the polemic spirit was not called forth; and that there was, espec. in the case of the Philippians, little or nothing to call for Apostolic censure. To advert to its characteristics and manner. 'The Epistle,' Dr. Davidson thinks, 'does not exhibit the same regularity of structure, or sequence of argument, as mark the writings of the Apostle generally.' But they were here not called for, since the Epistle was not meant to be argumentative; for which reason there is less of logical succession of ideas than in the other Epistles; and the nature and purpose of the Epistle rendered any artificial plan unnecessary. Presenting, as it does, a most interesting, and even affecting delineation of the Apostle's calm resignation under the persecution he was enduring, and of his ardent affection towards those converts for whose edification it was written, the warm-hearted affection of the Apostle is exhibited in genuine tenderness of spirit oozing out in much natural and unadorned beauty of expression. There is nothing formal, or consecutive; and its general tone is that of deep earnestness, couched in practical exhortation. 'Hence (as observes Bp. Shuttleworth), although it contains no points of doctrine which have not been discussed in the Apostle's former Epistles (espec. that to the Ephesians, to which this bears no little resemblance in manner and spirit), yet it is highly interesting and instructive, as presenting a brief summary [as compared with that more enlarged one in the Ephesian Epistle] of Christian faith and practice.'

I. 1. ἐπισκόποις] On this word see the note on Acts xx. 17, 28.

σκόποις καὶ διακόνοις· <sup>2</sup> χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ <sup>3</sup> Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

<sup>3</sup> <sup>4</sup> Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνηαῖ ὑμῶν, <sup>4</sup> πάντοτε, ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει μου, ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέξιν ποιούμενος <sup>5</sup> ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν <sup>6</sup> ὁ πεποιθὼς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅτι ὁ ἐναρξάμενος ἐν ὑμῖν ἔργον ἀγαθόν, ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρις ἡμέρας Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>7</sup> Καθὼς ἐστὶ δίκαιον ἐμοὶ τοῦτο φρονεῖν

Eph. 2. 1. Col. 4. 2, 12. 3 Tim. 1. 3. 2. 2. Heb. 12. 2.

2—4. See Rom. i. 7—9, and note. Eph. i. 15, 16.

3. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ, &c.] 'I return thanks to God'; for χάριν ἔχω—ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνηαῖ ὑμῶν, 'on every remembrance of you'; meaning, 'as often as I bring to my mind the various circumstances of your case and condition.' Comp. 1 Cor. i. 4, and Eph. i. 15, 16.

3—11. These verses contain the exordium, commencing, as usual, with congratulation; 'and in the present case for two reasons: 1. that Paul may thereby evince his love to them; 2. that, by praising them for what is past, he may animate them to go on in like manner for the future.'

4. δέξις.] The expression is not, as some consider it, synonymous with προσευχῇ, but denotes supplicatory prayer, or intercession.—τὴν δέξιν. Render: 'the' or 'my supplication'; meaning, that whenever he offers up supplication for them, he offers it with joy.—By πάντ. ὑμῶν is meant the community of Christians forming the Church at Philippi.

4, 6. μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέξιν ποιούμε. ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον.] Render: 'making with joy the request [I make], on account of (lit. 'on the score of') your fellowship with the Gospel,' meaning their admission unto and participation in its benefits and blessings. See more in Calv. and Hyper. The same construction (though with a different sense) occurs in 2 Cor. ix. 13. Considering, however, a certain incongruity which seems to exist between δέξιν ποιούμε. and ἐπὶ τῇ κοιν., I am now inclined to think that the words ἐπὶ τῇ κοιν. were meant to be connected with εὐχαριστῶ, &c., as showing particularly what that was for which he gave God thanks. According to this view, we may point thus, Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνηαῖ ὑμῶν πάντοτε, ἐν πάσῃ δέξί μου ὑπὲρ π. ὑμῶν, μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέξιν ('the supplication') ποιούμενος, ἐπὶ τῇ κοιν. I agree with Wiesinger, that the phrase ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν is not to be joined with what follows, since it serves as a limitation to the words preceding, ἐν πάσῃ δέξί μου, with which comp. Col. i. 3. 1 Thess. i. 2. I have pointed accordingly. The view which I have taken of the context, and of the connexion of ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ (as propounded in my Supplementary Volume), I have since found confirmed by the suffrage of Wiesinger. In adverting to his thanks to God for their present (ἀρχὴ τοῦ νῦν) ready acceptance of the Gospel—admission to the participation of Gospel privileges and benefits (so κοινωνία 1 John i. 3, 6, 7), the Apostle seems, from the next verse, to have had in view their fuller admission thereto; which, however, he does not expressly enjoin them to seek,—but conveys it, by implication, under a persuasion that such, by the good pleasure and grace of God, will take place. This construction is confirmed by the kindred passage in 1 Cor. i. 4—8. The foregoing view of the force of κοινωνία εἰς τὸ εὐαγγ., 'your fellowship in reference to the Gospel,' is confirmed by the suffrages of Calv. and Hyper., and the most eminent of the later Expositors.

6. πεποιθὼς, &c.] This states the grounds of his alacrity in praying for them, as ὅτι ὁ ἐναρξ. does the object of his confident hope. Render: 'being persuaded (i. e. by a confident expectation, founded on moral certainty, conjecturing of the future from the past) as to this very matter, that he who, &c.' The same idiom in αὐτὸ τοῦτο occurs in 2 Cor. ii. 3 and Gal. ii. 10. By 'this very matter' is meant 'what I have even just said as to the sincerity and constancy of your Christian profession.' Of the next words, ὁ ἐναρξ. ἐν ὑμῖν ἔργον ἀγαθόν, &c., the full sense is, 'he who hath begun a good work in you [see Eph. ii. 10], i. e. in your hearts, will carry it forward unto the end,—meaning the day of the Lord, (virtually at death,)—when justification and sanctification will be completed in glorification; at the day of his second advent, when Christ will be revealed in glory. See John xvii. 17. 22—24, and comp. 1 Cor. i. 8, where I have shown that ἐναρξ. was originally a sacrificial term, employed in the phrase ἐναρχίσθαι τὰ Κανῶ, and that afterwards, in the use with the Accus. case, there was still an allusion thereto. See more in my Lex. By ἔργον ἀγαθόν, we are to understand faith, in its result, by the regeneration, through grace here implied, in a holy life (see 1 Tim. ii. 15) throughout the gradual progress of 'sanctification through the Spirit,' sent by Christ; the ἀρχὴ τοῦ πνεύματος καὶ σωτηρίας, as it is said Acts iii. 15. Heb. ii. 10, where see notes. In ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρις, &c. there is at ἐπιτελ. a signif. pray., the full sense being, 'will go on with it unto, and finish it at,' &c.; meaning, 'will carry it forwards till it has reached completion;' for, as Bengel observes, 'initium est pignus consummationis.' Comp. 1 Cor. i. 8, ὅς βεβαιώσιν ὑμᾶς ἰσὺς τιλοῦν, &c.—By ἡμέρας Ἰ. Χρ. is meant, either 'the day of judgment,' when Christ shall appear in his glory, or 'the day of death,' which is to every one, as it were, 'the day of the Lord.'

7. καθὼς ἐστὶ δίκαιον—ὑμῖν.] 'Even as it is suitable for me to stand thus affected to you all;' meaning, to feel this confident hope in you.—Δίκαιον here, according to the popular acceptance of the term, means 'suitable in respect of consistency, by tallying with, something

h Rom. 1. 9. ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμᾶς, ἕν τε
 9. 1. τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγε-
 3 Tim. 4. 1. λίου, συγκοινωνοὺς μου τῆς χάριτος πάντας ὑμᾶς ὄντας. 8<sup>h</sup> Μάρ-
 1 Eph. 1. 8. τυς γάρ μου ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς, ὡς ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγ-
 6 5. 17. χνοις Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 9<sup>i</sup> Καὶ τοῦτο προσεύχομαι, ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη
 Col. 1. 2. ὑμῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ μᾶλλον περισσεύῃ ἐν ἐπignώσει καὶ πάσῃ
 3 2. 10. αἰσθήσει. 10<sup>i</sup> εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα, ἵνα ἦτε
 3 Pet. 1. 5, 6. εὐλκρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, 11<sup>k</sup> πεπληρω-3 2. 18.
 1 Rom. 2. 18.
 8 12. 3.
 1 Cor. 10. 23.
 1 Thess. 3.
 12.
 k John 15. 4.
 5. 8.
 Eph. 1. 13.
 30. & 2. 10.

else; here 'what may justly be expected from him to feel for them,' from the relation in which he stands to them. On the sense of φρονεῖν see my Lex. The clause διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με—ὑμᾶς is meant to intimate wherefore it is that he entertains so assured an expectation, and confident hope, respecting them;—namely, because he considers it incumbent upon him, as being a duty bound upon him by heartfelt affection for them. —The words ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς—τοῦ εὐαγγ. may be taken, with Storr and Dr. Peile, in the sense, 'as being in my bonds for (and so, my defence and corroboration of) the Gospel, all of you my helpers in grace,' meaning, 'because even in my bonds, in which I defend and confirm the Gospel, ye are all assistants to me in my duty.' 'The Philippians,' as Storr observes, 'might properly be styled συγκοινωνοὶ τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Παύλου, because, whilst he was employed in teaching the doctrines of the Gospel without charge to others (2 Cor. xi. 7), and now was defending those doctrines even in bonds (vv. 13, 17. Eph. iii. 1), they by their liberality had sustained and refreshed him.' Of course, the above interpretation proceeds on the view of those who take τῆς χάριτος to denote the contribution sent by the Philippians for Paul's use, under his severe trials in defence of the Gospel. But this view involves too great harshness to be safely adopted; and the passage by which it is mainly sustained, — namely, 1 Cor. xi. 23, — is quite as capable of such a sense as will confirm the view taken by the ancient and early modern Expositors, by which the term denotes, in a general way, 'the Divine grace exercised towards mankind in the benefits and blessings of the Gospel, including both the gifts and the graces of the Spirit;' which is much confirmed by the parallel passage in 1 Cor. xi, according to the more natural and obvious view of the words; — 'that so I may be a fellow-sharer of the blessings and privileges of the Gospel.' See my note there.

8. γάρ] This refers to the words διὰ τὸ ἔχειν—ὑμᾶς in the preceding verse; q. d. '[I say, I have you in my mind, and bear you in my heart, as fellow partakers of Divine grace] for,' &c. On the phrase μάρτυς μου ἐστὶν ὁ Θεός, see Rom. i. 9, and note. —ἐπιποθῶ is a stronger term than ἀγαπάω; see note at 2 Cor. ix. 14. In ἐν σπλάγχνοις Ἰησοῦ Χρ. we have a strong Hebraism, denoting the most ardent Christian love; meaning, in a general way, such as Christ had for the human race.

9—11. Here is contained a sort of brief epitomes of the prayers which he is accustomed to address to God on their behalf; and the τοῦτο points at the main purpose of the prayer. By ἀγάπη we are to understand, not 'love to himself,'—as some Expositors, ancient and modern, suppose;—but, in the most extensive sense of the word, 'love to God, his religion, commands,' &c., and of man for God's sake; involving the principle of love so finely described in 1 Cor. xiii. This view is confirmed by Wiesinger, who remarks that ἀγάπη is 'the love which has been awakened in them through the preaching of the Gospel;' and has regard, first of all, to the Lord, and then, together with him, to all that belong to him, and his service—thus forming the root of the Christian life. In ἐπignώσει we have a stronger term than γινώσκω, denoting full knowledge of any thing; by which we may understand knowledge generally, espec. that of Divine things. In the use of αἰσθ. there seems a popular idiom, by which the word denotes 'a quick perception of truth and falsehood, and here a spiritual discernment;' on which the best comment is to be found in Heb. v. 14. In short, the general sense seems to be this, 'I pray that ye, having love, may also have faith, competent [Christian] knowledge, and all [requisite] spiritual discernment,' namely, so that they might mutually redound one to the other. Thus, then, the Apostle prays that their knowledge and spiritual understanding may keep pace with the increase of their love and affection; since, by that means, Christian love produces the better fruits. I find this view confirmed by Wiesinger, who shows that both ἐπignώσει and αἰσθenois, understood as above, are necessary to produce ἀγάπη in its full evangelical sense, so that it may rightly discriminate τὰ διαφέροντα, by the aid of that due measure of knowledge and spiritual discernment, by which Christian love will not become the sport of every impulse of the heart, and lead to those aberrations, of which we find too many ex. in every age.

10, 11. εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν τὰ διαφέροντα, &c.] In δοκιμάζειν we have an allusion to the effect of knowledge and discernment in that εμπειρία which often enables us to decide at once on the comparative difference of things. The general sense is, 'in order that ye may prove (i. e. put to proof, weigh, try, and form an estimate) as to what things are excellent or praiseworthy,' quæ sint expetenda pro veris bonis (comp. Rom. xii. 2, εἰς τὸ δοκ. τί τὰ ἀγαθὰ), or rather quæ sint bona excellentia sint. Comp. 1 Cor. xii. 31, and Rom. ii. 18, γινώσκεις τὸ θέλημα (Θεοῦ), καὶ δοκιμάσεις τὰ διαφέροντα. In the next words, ἵνα—εὐλκρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι, the former term refers to 'purity of faith, and soundness of doctrine,' denoting that sincerity and genuineness which is devoid of the leaven of hypocrisy, is not swayed by vanity, or other corrupt motives (see note on 1 Cor. v. 5); lit. 'what will bear to be examined under the strongest and most

μένοι † καρπῶν δικαιοσύνης τῶν διὰ [Ἰησοῦ] Χριστοῦ, εἰς δόξαν
καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ.

<sup>12</sup> Γινώσκειν δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ μᾶλλον εἰς προκοπὴν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐλήλυθεν <sup>13</sup> ὥστε τοὺς <sup>14</sup> δεσμούς μου φανεροὺς ἐν Χριστῷ γενέσθαι ἐν ὧν τῷ πραιτωρίῳ καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι, <sup>15</sup> καὶ τοὺς πλείονας τῶν ἀδελ-φῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, περισσοτέρως τολμᾶν ἀφόβως τὸν λόγον λαλεῖν. <sup>16</sup> Τινὲς μὲν καὶ διὰ φθόνον

m Eph. 2.18.
R 6. 19, 20.
Col. 4. 4.
1 Thess. 2. 2.

searching light.' See more in my Lex. The latter term, ἀπρόσκοποι, here used intransitively (nearly equiv. to διεμύπττοι), has reference solely to prædictus in moral conduct; and by πειληρ. καρπῶν (ver. 11) it is intimated that these actions should be not only good in quality, μιστ. καρπῶν ἀγαθῶν, but abundant in quantity (comp. 1 Cor. xv. 58. 2 Pet. i. 8). The term καρπῶν points at the obligation to render them, implying the test of the goodness of the tree of faith which produced them. The phrase εἰς αἰῶνα Χρ. marks the destination and purpose of action; lit. 'for the final decision at the great day,' and with an especial reference to that decision. By διὰ Ἰ. Χ. it is intimated that these works are, however, only the effects of his grace, by the Holy Spirit, and alone accepted through his mediation. By εἰς δόξ. κ. ἰ. θ. is meant 'which would redound to the glory of God, and the recommendation of his religion.' For καρπῶν—τῶν nearly all the uncial, and 25 cursive MSS., with some Versions, have καρπῶν—τόν, which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but without sufficient reason; since the singular seems to have arisen from the Vulgate and Latin copies, and to have been adopted from inattention to the idiom of the Latin language, by which the word fructus rarely occurs in the plural in a metaphorical sense. As to the other Versions, they are chiefly such as usually follow the Vulgate; and the MSS. are such as Latinized; not to mention that u and o are perpetually confounded. The t. rec., too, is more agreeable to the style of the New Test. (see James iii. 17), and is supported by the authority of the Pesh. Syr. Version. And although καρπῶν—τόν be the more difficult reading, and on that account may seem entitled to the preference, yet that canon cannot be applied where a manifest violation of propriety of language is involved. As far as the authority of the Vulg. goes, we may remark, that many of the most ancient Latin copies (perhaps from the Italic Vers.) have fructus, which arose, I suspect, from an abbreviation of fructibus. Est., indeed, pleads strongly for his Vulg. fructus, but must have felt hard set for an argument, to resort to one of straw, by arguing 'that Paul is only speaking of one fruit of righteousness, i. e. ἀκαμψύτης;' wherein Est. stands, in a manner, alone. On the force and propriety of the plural see the able note in Calv. However, on attentive reconsideration of the question, I am ready to admit that καρπῶν may be the true reading. The Critical canon need not here be made void, since there is no violation of propriety of language, as is certain from Col. i. 9, ὡς πληροῦντες τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν.

<sup>12</sup> The Apostle now adverts to matters personal,—his present state and future prospects; and that in order to introduce an earnest exhortation, 1. to follow in his steps and walk worthy of the Gospel (vv. 27—30. ii. 1—16); and 2. though he should be sacrificed in its cause, to rejoice with him at the result.—γινώσκειν δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, &c. A form of expression serving to introduce some interesting communication. By τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ is meant here 'the events that have happened to me, my present condition,' q. d. 'So far from my bonds and other trials and tribulations proving (as you might apprehend) obstructions to the progress of the Gospel, they have rather tended to its advancement and promotion.'—ἐλήλ. for ἐπίβησιν, as Mark v. 26. The words ὥστε τοὺς δεσμούς—φανεροὺς ἐν Χριστῷ are meant to intimate the manner in which this furtherance to the cause of the Gospel had been produced (ἵνα—γενέσθαι standing for εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι, equiv. to ἐν τῷ γενέσθαι),—namely, by his imprisonment being publicly known, together with the occasion of it, even by the preaching of a religion so full of hope and consolation to men. Besides that persecution naturally rather furthers the cause it is intended to suppress; and courageous endurance of persecution for religion's sake recommends it, by showing its reality, and displaying its efficacy.

<sup>13</sup> ἐν ὧν τῷ πραιτωρίῳ By πραιτ. some understand the camp, or quarters, of the Prætorians; others, the Palace called Prætorium, being the residence of the military governor of Rome, the commander of the Prætorian bands, the body-guards of the emperor; others, again, the royal or imperial palace, or Court, meaning its inhabitants. Thus τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι will mean the rest of the inhabitants of the city at large.

<sup>14</sup> πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου] 'having taken courage at the intrepid manner in which I bore and do bear my bonds.'—τοὺς πλείονας, 'very many,' implying more than would otherwise have 'ventured to declare themselves.'

<sup>15</sup> 'The Apostle proceeds to open up a painful circumstance, connected with the preaching of the Gospel, which he had to experience.' (Wiesinger.) This and the ensuing verses seem to indicate the existence of a party at Rome (like that at most other places where Paul preached the Gospel), which was hostile to him. The persons who composed it are supposed to have been Judaizers, who concealed part of their sentiments, and preached the substance of the Gospel, in order to form a party under their influence, and in opposition to the Apostle and his friends, that so they might gradually impose the Mosaic law on the Gentile converts. They must have been, in some measure, insincere in their

καὶ ἔριν, τινὲς δὲ καὶ δι' εὐδοκίαν τὸν Χριστὸν κηρύσσουν.

n 1 Cor. 2.
16, 17.
Gal. 2, 7, 8.
1 Tim. 2, 7.
2 Tim. 1, 11.
12 & 4, 6, 7.

16 Οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἐριθείας τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν, οὐχ ἄγνως, οἰόμενοι θλίψιν ἐπιφέρειν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου 17 οἱ δὲ ἐξ ἀγάπης, εἰδότες ὅτι εἰς ἀπολογίαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου κείμεν. 18 Τί γάρ ;

profession of the Gospel. From the researches, however, of Dr. Davidson, and the writers whom he compiles, it would appear that there was, properly speaking, no Judaizing party at Philippi; though there might be some persons, converted Jews, who were anxious to instil their peculiar views of the Gospel into the Gentile Christians, at least so far as to induce them to submit to circumcision. But that the persons here alluded to were Judaizers, we have no reason to think. That the τινὲς must be the part of the brethren mentioned at v. 14, is quite certain. As to the kind of opponents here meant, they cannot have been of a Judaizing party wishing to gradually impose the Mosaic Law on the Gentile converts; for then they could not be sincere Christians at all; and the Apostle could not, as we find, have rejoiced in their preaching, and its success. In fact, the joy of the Apostle would (as Van Hengel and Wiesinger observe) be inexplicable, if the Gospel were not preached by them in its integrity (at least, substantially so). In short, I agree with able Expositors, that all we are here told of the motives and objects of these opponents is of so personal a nature, as to oblige us to come to the conclusion that these were not Judaizing Christians (much less a Judaizing party) that are here spoken of, but preachers agreeing (mainly) with the Apostle in doctrine, but seeking to damage him by their preaching. Their motives, it would seem, were, envy of the Apostle, contentiousness, and intrigue,—motives of a purely personal nature, as opposed to good-will and love, and proceeding from insincerity of mind (οὐχ ἄγνως), such as would distinguish those whose hearts were not right as to the root of the matter,—though they might preach what was substantially true, and edifying to their hearers. Thus there must have been two parties of those who preached the word; one party actuated, in what they did by envy of Paul's popularity, and by contentiousness, δι' ἔριν (for ἐξ ἔριδος, or ἐξ ἐριθείας of the next verse; like the οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας at Rom. ii. 8); others, δι' εὐδοκίαν, out of good-will and love to man (espec. Paul) for God's sake, as opposed to a sectarian spirit.

16, 17. These verses are explanatory of the preceding: ver. 16, of the τινὲς μὲν, &c., and ver. 17, of the τινὲς δὲ, &c. Though in MSS. A, B, D, F, G, and 10 cursives, with some Versions and Fathers, they are transposed, which has been approved by most Critics, and adopted by Griesb., Knapp, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but without sufficient reason; for though the transposed order is more agreeable to Classical usage (by which μὲν is referred to the nearer, and δὲ to the more remote, and is found in 2 Cor. iii. 16), yet the other is more accordant with Scriptural expression. And, indeed, the usual position is the more likely to have been adopted by St. Paul, as being the more natural one, by which the placing of the two kinds of preachers would correspond to that in ver. 15. This is much confirmed by 2 Tim. ii. 20, where αὐτὸς μὲν has reference to what precedes, & δὲ to what follows. On again carefully reconsidering, for my ninth Edition, this somewhat perplexing question, I cannot yet see cause to alter the opinion heretofore formed, espec. considering that the uncial MSS., on which this change mainly rests, are too full of alterations, made for the purpose of introducing classical symmetry, to enable me to give implicit assent to the presented arrangement; though, in deference to the opinion of so many Critical Editors, I am willing to consider the point as an open question.—ἐξ ἐριθείας (in which the ἐξ denotes the moving cause, 'out of') is a phrase of the same character as ἐκ διαφοράς in Thucyd., and here, just after, ἐξ ἀγάπης.

16. οὐχ ἄγνως] 'not from pure motives, of genuine affection for the cause of Christ, but those of selfishness and hostility to Paul.' The words οἰόμενοι—μου are usually supposed to mean, 'thinking to add yet more affliction to that of my imprisonment, by strengthening the hands of my adversaries.' But the ancient and many modern Expositors take the sense to be, 'thinking to bring upon me severity of treatment, in addition to confinement.' Both senses may be admitted, since either motive may have actuated different persons, or even the same persons at different times. For ἐπιφέρειν, MSS. A, B, D, F, G, and 3 cursives, with some Versions and Fathers, have ἐγείρειν, which is edited by Lachm. and Tisch., as being the more difficult reading; but wrongly. It is plainly an alteration, which arose from the somewhat unusualness of ἐπιφέρειν in this sense, though it occurs in the best writers. To the examples adduced from Philo and Aristotle, I add Thucyd. iii. 56, vii. 55. There, however, and perhaps here, the sense is not superadd, but 'bring upon,' as in Thucyd. i. 70. iii. 46. Indeed, it was this misconception of the true sense, which led (as in a thousand other cases) to this Critical correction, though it brings in an expression half poetical, and not at all in the manner of St. Paul; whereas ἐπιφ. is quite so, when employed as here, and in Rom. iii. 5, 'to bring upon, occasion.' See my note there, in which I have adduced other exx. Here, then, the sense intended is 'to bring affliction, by severity of treatment, upon one [already] suffering imprisonment.'—ἐξ ἀγάπης. The full sense intended is, 'out of love [to me and to the Gospel].' For those who really loved the Gospel could not but love Paul, as being appointed for its defence.

17. κείμεν] lit. 'I am set, or placed (where I am)'; meaning, 'am appointed to this office, or, am ordained to this ministry.' So 1 Thess. iii. 3, αὐτὸ τοῦτο γὰρ κείμεθα. See note on Luke ii. 54.

18. τί γάρ;] The force of the phrase is well illustrated by Steiger, who observes, that 'in such interrogations and exclamations γάρ has the conclusive sense quid ergo?' answering to the French donc, quoi donc? and so is equiv. to τί οὖν; How it comes to have this signif. has been variously explained. According to some philoloπλὴν παντὶ τρόπῳ, εἴτε προφάσει εἴτε ἀληθείᾳ, Χριστὸς καταγέλλεται καὶ ἐν τούτῳ χαίρω, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρίσομαι. <sup>19</sup> ° Οἶδα <sup>ο 1 Cor. 1. 11.</sup> γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτό μοι ἀποβήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως, καὶ ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>20</sup> ρ κατὰ <sup>ρ Rom. 5. 5.</sup> τὴν ἀποκαταδοκίαν καὶ ἐλπίδα μου, ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχυνηθήσομαι, ἀλλ' ἐν πάσῃ παρρησίᾳ, ὡς πάντοτε, καὶ νῦν μεγαλυνθήσεται

Χριστὸς ἐν τῷ σώματί μου, εἴτε διὰ ζωῆς εἴτε διὰ θανάτου— <sup>21</sup> 1 Cor. 1.
<sup>21</sup> 9 ἐμοὶ γὰρ τὸ ζῆν Χριστὸς, καὶ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος. <sup>22</sup> Εἰ δὲ <sup>Gal. 2. 30.
& 6. 14.</sup>

gists, we are to suppose an ellipsis of διαφέρει, i. e. 'but no, they are mistaken, for what is that to me?' The true force of the idiom depends on the sense of the added πλὴν, which is not well rendered nevertheless, or 'notwithstanding'; it rather stands for πλὴν ὅτι, attamen, which, indeed, is found in several MSS. and Fathers; but, doubtless, from a gloss. Render: 'Be it by pretext, or in appearance,' with a pretended zeal for the Gospel, but in reality so to preach the Gospel as to abate Paul's influence with the people. The next words, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ χαίρω, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρίσομαι, must be taken with the necessary qualification, namely, 'In this spread of the Gospel, though it has partly proceeded from improper motives,—envy, ill-will, and hatred,—yet do I rejoice,' &c.

19. οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτο] Render: 'for well I wot that this state of things (the preaching of Christ in every way) will turn out good for me' (lit. 'beneficially, whether for soul or body'), through your praying for, and obtaining for me, a supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, according to my earnest expectation and hope that I shall in no wise be put to shame (i. e. by those hopes being frustrated). To advert to a few points of disputed philology, τοῦτο must not be confined to Paul's captivity, but to be understood of the whole matter just before mentioned, the harm done, or meant to be done, to Paul, by the hatred and jealousy stirred up against him.—σωτηρίαν here, though generally understood to mean salvation, may rather have the sense assigned to it by the ancient and many eminent modern Commentators, including all the recent ones, temporal deliverance. So 2 Cor. i. 6, ἐπὶ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας. And so Job iii. 16 (a passage probably here had in view by the Apostle), καὶ τοῦτό μοι ἀποβήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν. Yet the words following, [διὰ] ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος. 'I. Xp., seem to call for the other interpretation. To remove this difficulty, the best course will be to take σωτηρ. in the most general sense of the word, of weal, or benefit, and thus be understood in the two senses of temporal and of spiritual benefit; the former as adverted to in διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως (comp. 2 Cor. i. 11, and Acts xii. 5); the latter in ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος. 'I. Xp., which must mean, 'by the supply of the Holy Spirit of Christ [procured by our prayers]'; see Chrys., Theophyl., Calv., and Hyper., and comp. Gal. iii. 5, ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, and 2 Cor. ix. 10. The Spirit, meaning the grace of the Spirit, is said to be of Christ, as being procured by him; see John xvi. 7. And that Christ is considered as the bestower of the Spirit is plain from 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18 (see also John i. 16), though, as He proceeds from the Father and the Son (see Matt. iii. 16. John xv. 26), he is often called τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

VOL. II.

20. 'This expectation, which the Apostle here expresses, harmonizes with an accompanying hope, whereby it is confirmed. The expectation is founded on the hope.' (Wiesinger.)—ἀποκαταδ., 'anxious expectation,' as in Rom. vii. 19, where see note.—ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχ., i. e. 'that in no respect shall I have reason to be ashamed [by being frustrated in my endeavours], but shall rise superior to all my difficulties.' In this manner the word is used in 2 Cor. x. 8. 1 John ii. 28. Eccles. xxiv. 30. li. 24. To show that he seeks not his own glory, in any success, he adds, μεγαλυνθ. Xp.—Ἐν τῷ σώματί μου is more energetic than ἐν ἐμοὶ would have been, since martyrs and saints are said to glorify God 'in their bodies.' See John xxi. 19.

21. ἐμοὶ γὰρ—κέρδος] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And whether one or the other result shall befall, is all one to me,] for,' &c. On the sense of the words following, some difference of opinion exists. According to the interpretation most generally adopted, the meaning here (the same as in the latter clause of the preceding verse) is, that 'both in life and death Christ is his gain'; i. e. that his death and life are alike consecrated to Christ, Χριστῷ: being considered as the subject of both members, and κέρδος the predicate to both, and the construction being as in Heb. vii. 4. Yet, after all, it may be doubted whether there was any sufficient reason to forsake the interpretation of the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, which is well expressed in our Common Version. Nor is it any sufficient objection to it to urge (with Pierre) that 'thus the Apostle only clears away one part of his assertion, and says nothing of the other'; for in an acutè dictum like the present, it were injudicious to demand a strict logical correspondence of the second member to the first. Allowing something for the sacrifice of strictness of expression to point, the full sense intended would seem to be this: '[and whether the one or the other befall me I care not,] for my life [if I live] will be devoted to the service of Christ, and [if I die] death will be a gain to me, [since I shall be released from the miseries of this wicked world].' According to this interpretation, τὸ ζῆν is for ἡ ζωή μου, denoting simply the action of living. With this sentiment I would comp. Ælian, Var. Hist., οὐκ ἦν ἄρα τοῖς κακοῖς οὐδὲ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος. Jos. Ant. xv. 5, κέρδος δ' ἂν θησκόμην, τὴν συμφορὰν τὸ ζῆν, πρὸς ὅμαινον. See Wiesinger, who well observes, that 'up to this point it is all one to the Apostle, whether he

E 2

τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκὶ τοῦτο μοι καρπὸς ἔργου, — καὶ τί αἰρήσομαι οὐ γνωρίζω. <sup>23</sup> ἰ συνέχομαι * δὲ ἐκ τῶν δύο· τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχων εἰς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι, καὶ σὺν Χριστῷ εἶναι, πολλῶ μᾶλλον κρείσσον <sup>24</sup> τὸ δὲ ἐπιμένειν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ ἀναγκαιότερον δι' ὑμᾶς. <sup>25</sup> * Καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα, ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπαραμενῶ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν, εἰς τὴν ὑμῶν προκοπὴν καὶ χαρὰν τῆς πίστεως. <sup>26</sup> ἵνα τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν περισσεύῃ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐν ἐμοί, διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς παρουσίας πάλιν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. <sup>27</sup> ὁ Μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγε-shall magnify Christ by his life, or by his death; only the fruit which his Apostolic labour produces keeps him from choosing death. Of course death is gain only in consequence of the higher life to which it conducts (or subserves), the ἔργον and the καρπός.

<sup>22</sup> εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν—γνωρίζω Here, again, there is a certain obscurity (arising, as often from extreme brevity), which has occasioned variety of interpretation. The ancient and the best modern Expositors are, however, with reason, agreed that εἰ δὲ means 'quod si,' 'but if'; and that the sense is as follows: ['To die, I say, would be gain to me]; but if my living in the flesh be profitable [for the work of the ministry], what can I say? q. d. 'be it so.' In this highly elliptical sentence there is evidently an apostrophe, from extreme pathos, after ἔργον. The καὶ before τί is far from being, what Heinrichs considers it, pleonastic. It has the not unfrequent sense yea, or verily, and its full force may be thus expressed: 'But if my life in the flesh be useful for the ministry of the Gospel, [what can I say?] verily, what I should choose I wot not.' Several recent Expositors, however (as Van Hengel and Wiesinger), regard καὶ τί, &c., as a subsequent member of the sentence; adding as an ex. of this καὶ in the apodosis 2 Cor. ii. 2. It may be so; but thus there will be a very harsh anacoluthon.—ἔργον is often used of the office of a Christian teacher (as 1 Thess. v. 13), and καρπός denotes the fruit or utility, thence resulting. Moreover, this use of γνωρίζω for γινώσκω, though rare, is occasionally found in the later writers, and occurs in Job xxxiv. 25 and Prov. iii. 6.

<sup>23</sup> συνέχομαι δι' ἐκ τῶν δύο Render: 'but (or however) I am held in suspense from these two [opposite motives].' Here ἐκ is used for ἀπὸ, lit. 'out of.'—συνέχεσθαι properly signifies 'to be hemmed in,' see note on Luke xii. 50, but is often, as here, used figuratively for to be held in straits. In ἀναλῦσαι we have a nautical metaphor; the word properly signifying to loose cable, but sometimes simply to depart, and, like many other words denoting departure, is used of departure from the world by death. So Philo in Flacc. p. 991, ἀνάλυσαι ἐκ τοῦ βίου, and Ælian, V. H. v. 6 uses ἀπολῦσαι, and a Rabbinical writer cited by Schöttgen uses the phrase 'dissolvat ex hoc mundo.' So here ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς is to be supplied from the antithetical ἐν σαρκὶ. See Calvin's masterly note; and my note at Luke xii. 36, and comp. 2 Cor. v. 8.—In πολλὰ μ. κρείσσον there is no pleonasm, but rather a more forcible form of expression (like πολλὸ μᾶλλον κρείσσον in Isocr.), of which the sense is, 'very far better.'

<sup>24</sup> τὸ δὲ ἐπιμ.—ὑμᾶς 'but, on the other hand, to remain is the more needful, or expedient for you (because of you);' a peculiar idiom, of which Loesen. adduces a passage of Philo, where ἀναγκ. is followed by ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, as if by way of explication; to which I add Apoll. Tyan. Epist. 55, οὐχ οἶδ' ἐν τῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ πλείονα γράψαι· καὶ οὐδὲ (I conjecture οὐδὲν) εἶχον ἀναγκαιότερα (—ov) τούτων, for χρῆσιμ. τούτων, 'more absolutely expedient for you to know.' To the present purpose there is a fine observation of Seneca (cited by Weist.), 'Bono viro vivendum est, non quamdiu vivat, sed quantum oportet. Ingentis animi est, alienā causā, ad vitam reverti;' meaning, as it were, to return back to life, by interesting oneself in its concerns.

<sup>25</sup>, <sup>26</sup>. 'Whatever uncertainty the Apostle might feel as to which he should choose, he speaks with the utmost confidence as to what is to befal him; and is equally prepared for either event; though what he has characterized as "more needful,"—namely, "his abiding,"—he feels sure will take place.' (Wiesinger.) The expression τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα denotes, not "certain knowledge," from positive certainty, but merely "a full expectation." (Wiesinger.)—ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπ. v. δ., meaning, 'that I shall remain [in this life], and continue with you all in the enjoyment of your society.'

<sup>25</sup> εἰ τὴν ὑμῶν πίστιν. Of these words there have been various translations; most of which, I agree with Bp. Middl., are liable to the objection, that they disjoin προκοπὴν and χαρὰν, as if πίστ. did not depend on the former, as well as the latter; as may be inferred from the omission of the Article before χαρὰν. So supra ver. 7, ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Thus the learned Prelate well renders, 'to promote your advancement and joy in the faith,' i. e. for your religious improvement and your religious comfort. And so Calvin.

<sup>26</sup> ἵνα τὸ καύχ.—ὑμᾶς 'so that your glorying, on account of Christ [and his Gospel], may be increased for me by my return again to you.'

<sup>27</sup>. Having said thus much of himself, his own views and hopes, and their glorious prospects, the Apostle now, with much address, turns the discourse to exhortation, expressing how alone they can attain this joy in the Lord, and his earnest wish that they may attain it.—μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, &c., 'only do but live and act worthy of the Gospel.' There is here a peculiar use of μόνον, unnoticed by Expositors, and which I have noted elsewhere only in Jos. Antt. iv. 8, where Moses, addressing the Israelites just before his death, says, μόνον, οἱ ἐμὲς δ' ὁ Θεὸς βούλεται ἔκτισθαι, τοῖς τοῖς πιθερχεῖ. It has here great force, 'introducing (observing λίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε ἵνα εἴτε ἔλθων καὶ ἰδὼν ὑμᾶς, εἴτε ἀπὸν, ἀκούσω τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, ὅτι στήκετε ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύματι, μὴ ψυχῇ συναθλοῦντες τῇ πίστει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου <sup>28</sup> καὶ μὴ <sup>x Matt. 5. 10</sup> πτυρόμενοι ἐν μηδενὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντικειμένων (ἦτις αὐτοῖς [μέν] <sup>-12.</sup> ἐστὶν ἑνδείξεις ἀπωλείας, ὑμῖν δὲ σωτηρίας, καὶ τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ <sup>Rom. 8. 17.</sup>

<sup>2 Thess. 1. 5.</sup>
<sup>2 Tim. 2. 11.</sup>
<sup>12.</sup>
<sup>29</sup> ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μόνον τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν <sup>y Acts 5. 41.</sup>
 πιστεύειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν <sup>Rom. 8. 3.</sup> <sup>30</sup> τὸν αὐτὸν ὁμῶνα ἔχοντες οἷον † ἴδετε ἐν ἐμοί, καὶ νῦν ἀκούετε ἐν ἐμοί.
 II. 1<sup>a</sup> Εἰ τις οὖν παρακλήσις ἐν Χριστῷ, εἴ τι παραμύθιον <sup>a 1 Cor. 2. 18.</sup>
<sup>b 4. 19, 20.</sup>
<sup>c 12. 15.</sup>
<sup>2 Cor. 12. 14.</sup>
<sup>Col. 2. 12.</sup>

Wiesing.) that on which all depends, the indispensable condition of the coming again to them, for the joy of their faith, supra vv. 25, 26.' On the sense of πολιτεύεσθε see note on Acts xxiii. 1, and my Lex. in v.—ἵνα εἴτε ἔλθων, &c. The full sense is, 'so that, whether coming and visiting you [I may see], or being absent from you, and only hearing of you, [I may learn] that ye stand fast,' &c.: an elliptical mode of expression adopted in order to avoid tautology. There is in ἐκείνων the figure called zeugma; as in 1 Cor. iii. 2. In στήκ. ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύματι we have simply a figurative description of Christian unity and concord. See Theophyl., and comp. Hdian. viii. 5, 15, ὅτι Ἰταλὶα πᾶσα συμπατριῶται μία γνώμη καὶ ψυχῇ, &c. However, I quite agree with Meyer, that this unity of the human spirit is to be considered as the effect of the Holy Spirit's working. The expression is thought to contain an agonistic metaphor, further developed in the next clause. The simple import, however, seems to be, 'striving together [strenuously] (comp. iv. 5) for the furtherance of the Gospel; to which the living worthy of it would not a little contribute.

28. καὶ μὴ πτυρόμενοι—ἀντικειμένων] Expositors are not agreed whether πτυρ. is to be understood of terror at the cruel persecutions of the opponents of the Gospel (which is the common interpretation), or to be explained 'being startled, and shaken from the faith by the sophisms and calumnies of your opponents, the Judaizers.' See Zanch., Estius, Locke, and Pierce. Of these two senses the latter is too far-fetched to be admitted. The former is much more simple and natural. It is, besides, more agreeable to the ratio significatiois in πτυρ. πύσθαι, a term properly used of horses who take fright, and then applied to men who are scared, frightened. The above Expositors, indeed, rest much on the connexion with the preceding words. But that is not so close as they choose to represent it, by passing over the καὶ, which, according to their interpretation, ought not to be there; and, instead of μὴ, ought to have been written ἐν. As it is, the syntax seems to be that of participle for verb; and, on account of the μὴ prohibitive, the verb must be in the Imperative. In this metaphorical sense πτυρ. occurs in Plut. Fab. Max. 3. Diod. Sic. i. xvii. 34, 57, 58, and Plato, Axioch. § 16. To consider the sense of the next words, ἦτις αὐτοῖς—σωτηρίας, the only interpretation that will bear examination is this: 'which freedom from terror, and intrepid maintenance of the truth,—as it shows the truth of that Gospel which ye believe,—is to your adversaries a proof that they deservedly suffer destruction for rejecting it and persisting in their wickedness; while to you it is a proof, that the God who now sustains, will hereafter reward, you.' As to the sentiment, it has an exact parallel in 2 Thes. i. 5, where the tribulations which, through the envy of the Jews, the Thessalonian Christians suffered, are termed an ἰνδעיγμα τῆς δικαίας κρισεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, meaning, 'a sure token or proof that God will inflict heavy punishments on the adversaries of the Christian faith, and will reward the oppressed faithful even unto death with the crown of life that fadeth not away.'—The words καὶ τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ are meant to strengthen the preceding encouragement, and intended to suggest the highest ground of comfort; 'that so (as Calv. expresses it) the taste of the grace of God may alleviate the bitterness of the cross,—with reference to God as the great Author of their salvation.'

29. ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη, &c.] meaning, that 'to suffer affliction is granted by God (lit. "at the hands of God") as a special privilege, and therefore to be rejoiced in; inasmuch as when we hear of faith and constancy in the faith being the gift of God, we are led to hope well, and believe that, by the help of God, nothing will be difficult; being assured that 'he who hath begun a good work will complete it.' As to the construction here, it will be much cleared by ὅτι being taken (with Van Hengel and Wiesing.) as illustrative of the whole sentence preceding; which is evident from the resumption of the τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ at ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ. 'The Apostle (observes Wiesing.) was just going to say, "for to you is the grace given to suffer for Christ," but he then interposed the additional words, "not only to believe in Christ," in order more clearly to show what that is, in which the ἰνδειξις consists.'

30. Here the Apostle confirms what he has just been saying by his own example, directing them to it for their encouragement. Of ἰδὲτε the full sense is, 'ye have seen, and do see,' said with reference to his sufferings for the Gospel, as recorded Acts xvi. 19—40, and his present imprisonment. This was the conflict they had seen him contend with: and they now heard of another and severer, in his imprisonment at Rome as an evil doer.—For ἰδὲτε, A, C, D, E, and 20 cursives (I add 4 Lamb. and 4 Mus. copies), with several Fathers, have εἰδὲτε, which is adopted by Griesb., Matth., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., perhaps rightly; but the reading of the great body of the MSS. is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version.

II. The Apostle now, resuming the indirect, E = 2 b Rom. 12. ἀγάπης, εἴ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εἴ † [τινα] σπλάγχχνα καὶ 10, 16.

 & 15. 6.
 1 Cor. 1. 10. οἰκτιρμοί. 2<sup>b</sup> πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαρὰν, ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρονήτε, ob. 2. 16. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

but not the less urgent, admonition commenced at i. 27, proceeds, from generals to particulars, to exhort them, if they hope for any of the consolations of the Gospel, or if they have any such fellow-feeling as even nature instils, and natural religion inculcates, to fulfil the various duties of Christian humility, cultivate a oneness of spirit, diligence in working out their salvation, and espec. the adorning the Gospel of Christ by their life and example. The Apostle has, supr. i. 27, pressed on their attention 'the standing in one spirit' as so indispensable to success in the contest, which he says at v. 30 they have to sustain. He does so, because this was, it seems, the very point on which the Philippian Christians were defective,—as also in Christian humility,—since it appears that they gave way to strife and vain glory; all prob. springing from the bitter root of spiritual pride.—Εἰ τις οὖν παράκλησις, &c. Much energy is imparted to the sentence by its being composed of clauses commencing with εἰ. But, in determining the true sense intended, it is of importance to ascertain the force of the εἰ. I formerly thought, with many Expositors, that, so far from expressing doubt, it is strongly affirmative. But, on further consideration, I am of opinion, that the circumstances of the case forbid its being brought in here. It is true, that there is here a formula loquendi suitable to obtestation, not unusual in the best writers; e. gr. Virgil, Æn. i. 603, 'Dī tibi, si qua pios respectant numina; si quid Uaquam iustitia est, et mens sibi conecia recti, Premia digna ferant.' But the very exercise of the obtestation, as it implies earnest entreaty (espec. to unify; see Hyperius' able note), cannot but point at the present existence of dissension, more or less; and this is confirmed by iv. 1, 2. But we are not warranted in supposing any violent dissension amounting to exacerbation of feeling, as Conyb. supposes; q. d. 'If you can be entreated in Christ; if you can be,' &c. The true sense may best be expressed thus: 'By whatever, then, there is of consolation in Christ, by whatever there is of comfort in love, by whatever there is of fellowship of the Spirit, by whatever there is of bowels and mercies, fill up, I beseech you, my joy;' q. d. 'give me full occasion for joy in you.' By παράκλησις seems meant 'consolation under the sufferings endured for Christ's sake,' as supra i. 29.—εἰ τι παραμ. ἀγάπης, 'whatever of comfort in Christian love there is in you,' ἀγάπης ψυχῶν, as Theodor. explains; meaning, 'the solace and comfort arising from the pardon of our sins by Christ's love.' But, to advert to these four particulars (about which there has been needless debate) more at large. The first two are closely conjoined, and are well explained (after Chrys.) by Theophyl. thus: εἰ βούλεισθε παράκλησιν τινα δοῦναι μοι ἐν τοῖς πειρασμοῖς μου, εἰ τινα παραμύθιας ὅταν ἡ ἀγάπη γένῃ; except that this is passing over ἐν Χριστῷ, which is meant to advert to the sources of both those feelings, 'in Christ,' so as to convert them into Christian feelings. But to advert to a matter of reading,—I still continue, with Tisch., to retain the reading τι, which I find in all the Lamb. MSS.

except one (1184), and all the Mus. copies; though Griesb. and Matth. edit τις, but without sufficient support from external authority, only 18 copies. If, however, the Apostle wrote τις, one may be sure that he also wrote παραμύθια; and certainly he does use the term elsewhere, 1 Cor. xiv. 3 (sine v. l.), and it is observable that α and ο are perpetually confounded by the scribes. Accordingly, I am inclined to think that εἰ τις παραμύθια &c. was written by Paul. When παραμύθια came to pass into παραμύθιον, then τις was sure to be changed into τι. This is not the only passage in which παραμύθια and παραμύθιον have been confounded by the scribes to the injury of the sense. Thus in Xenoph. Agæ. v. 3, σομίζων πάντα τοιαῦτα (meaning the sharing in hardships, the bearing of heat and cold, the labouring by the side of the working soldiers) παραμύθιας τῶν τοῖς στρατιώταις, the case of the plurals before requires us to read παραμύθια, which emendation is confirmed by Dionys. Hal. Antiq. ii. 3, p. 239, edit. Reiske; τι παραμύθιον is confirmed by Joa. Bell. vi. 3, 1; for although it may seem required by the Critical Canon, that the more difficult reading is to be preferred, yet that has an exception in cases where a violation of propriety of language, and still more of good sense, would be involved; which is plainly the case here. With respect to the reading of the next words, εἰ τινα σπλάγχχνα, &c., Tisch. agrees with me in rejecting (notwithstanding its being strongly supported) the reading εἰ τις, though received by Matth., Griesb., Scholz, and Lachm. Rejected, indeed, it must be. However, the variety of readings in the Greek text, and the harshness involved in one reading, the τις, almost amounting to barbarism, makes me suspect that the Apostle thought fit to place no pronoun, since the nature of the expression σπλάγχχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί make it difficult to employ αὐτῶν. This suspicion of mine is strongly confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version, in which no pronoun is found, as if in the copy the Translators had ἐν σπλ. καὶ οἰκτ., leaving the pronoun to be supplied from the context. To advert to the next and very important, though least satisfactorily explained particular, εἰ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, where almost all the recent Expositors, from the absence of the Article, explain it consensio, or confectio animorum, by an interchange of heart with heart, so as to produce Christian unity; which may seem agreeable to the context; but not more so than the sense assigned by all the ancient and earlier modern, and also some eminent recent Expositors,—'fellowship of the Holy Spirit,' by mutual participation in his gifts and graces. See the notes of Calv., Hyper., Bulling., and also Van Hengel and Wiesinger. The next particular, εἰ τινα σπλ. καὶ οἰκτ., forms the topstep of the climax; q. d. 'Whatever there be of yearning and tender feeling, by which Christians are drawn together in the bonds of holy love.'

2. πληρ. μ. τ. χαρᾶς [Fulfil ye my joy, 'complete the joy I felt in your conversion, and have since experienced in your Christian progress; namely, by cultivating the mutual agree-

τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες, σύμφυχοι, τὸ ἐν φρονούντες <sup>3</sup> μὴ δὲν κατὰ ἐριθειαν ἢ κενοδοξίαν, ἀλλὰ τῇ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ ἀλλήλους ἡγουμένοι υπερέχοντας ἑαυτῶν <sup>4</sup> μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος <sup>5</sup> σκοπεῖτε, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐτέρων ἕκαστος. <sup>6</sup> τοῦτο γὰρ φρονέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν ὃ καὶ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ <sup>6</sup> ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ

o Rom. 12. 10.
d 1 Cor. 10. 24 & 18.
e Matt. 11. 29.
John 15. 18.
1 Pet. 3. 21.
1 John 3. 6.
e John 1. 1.
2 & 5. 18.
& 17. 6.
Col. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 3.

ment in doctrine and concord of sentiment before enjoined.—τὸ αὐτὸ φρον. and τὸ ἐν φρον. are, indeed, by Photius, Heinrichs, and Schleusn. supposed to be synonymous; and, indeed, the two words are conjoined in Polyb. 441 (cited by Wets.), λέγοντες ἐν καὶ ταῦτο φάντες, and Aristid. p. 569, ἐν καὶ ταῦτο φρονούντες. But I apprehend that the phrases τὸ αὐτὸ φρ. and τὸ ἐν φρ. are, here at least, not synonymous. If I mistake not, the admonition to concord or unanimity is first propounded generally, in ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῇτε (which expression is well explained by Steiger, 'la concorde l'harmonie des sentiments,' implying harmony in doctrinal views), and then specially, by way of explanation, as resolved into its parts, i. e. τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες and σύμφυχοι, where we may understand ὅτι.—Σύμφυχοι is well explained by Photius ὁμόφυχοι, 'like-minded;' lit. 'fellow-souled.' Theophyl. (after Chrys.) well expresses the result thus: ταῦτα πάντα ἐν τούτῳ μοι ἀπόδοτε, ἐν τῷ ἀλλήλους ἀγαπᾶν, and then well remarks, 'Ὅσα δὲ πᾶς τὸ ὁμοιοῦν ἐκείνου οὐκ εἶναι ἐνεργείας, καὶ ὡς αὐτὸς ἡλίου δεινύμενος τίθεται. He then similarly explains the χαρὰ as 'joy' οὐχ ἵνα τὸν κινδύνον ρυθῶ, ἀλλ' ἵνα ὁμοίᾳ τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῇτε.

3. μὴδὲν κατὰ ἐριθ. ἢ κενόδ. scil. ποιούντες, or φρονούντες; referring chiefly to the former of the two sorts of agreement above-mentioned, in allusion, perhaps, to the vain ambition, and consequent jealousy and strife, sometimes attendant on the possession of the higher spiritual gifts. See Gal. v. 26. 1 Cor. xii. xiii. xiv. The next words, τῇ ταπειν. &c., suggest the best cure for these evil dispositions, inherent in the cultivation of a spirit of unaffected modesty,—namely, 'by,—through lowliness of mind,—making higher account each of the other respectively (i. e. in some points of view), than of yourselves.' Comp. 1 Pet. v. 5, πάντες δὲ ἀλλήλους ὑποτασσόμενοι, τὴν ταπεινοφροσύνῃν ἡγουμένους, where see note. However, by 'making higher account of,' seems meant, the 'being as far as the frailty of human self-love will permit, disposed to make more account of the claims of others on our consideration, than of those which may be due to ourselves.' Comp. Rom. xii. 10. Instead of ἢ κενοδοξίαν, A, B, C, and a very few cursives (to which I can make no addition), have μὴδὲ κατὰ κενόδ., which reading has been received by Lachm. and Tisch.; but wrongly; for it, I suspect, arose from a grammatical correction of style, as respects ἢ. Perhaps St. Paul wrote ἢ κατὰ κενόδ., which seems to have been in the copies used by the Pesch. Syr. Translator.

4. μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν—ἕκαστος] This is commonly understood as an admonition against selfishness, and inculcating a disinterested spirit; but considering what precedes and follows, it would rather seem that the words contain, not an injunction to a free duty, but an admonition, which might enable them better to perform what had been just enjoined, as to the cultivation of modesty. They are recommended to attend to the gifts or endowments and excellencies of others, as well as their own (μόνον being here evidently understood); for want of which it was that so many gave way to vanity and spiritual pride. Such is the view of the sense adopted not only by many of the best modern Expositors, but by the ancient ones almost universally. For ἕκαστος and σκοπεῖτε, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. read ἕκαστο and σκοποῦντες. I am disposed to admit σκοποῦντες, as strongly supported by both external authority (to which I add Lamb. 1185), and internal evidence, but I reject ἕκαστο, as not so well supported by external authority, and opposed by internal evidence, confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version.

5-11. Here the Apostle has indicated the antidote to these divisions,—humility, and an unselfish spirit; of both which the example is set before them in Christ, the great Exemplar of self-denying love.

5. τοῦτο γὰρ—X. 'I.] Φρονέσθω is by recent Expositors regarded as used impersonally; but it is rather put for φρόνημα ἴστον, understanding by φρόνημα 'disposition, way of thinking.' The expression must, of course, be meant of the particular disposition here espec. adverted to,—humility. But to attend to a variety of reading. The γὰρ after τοῦτο is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., on the authority of A, B, C, and 2 cursives, with some Fathers. But the state of the evidence does not justify that step. It would seem quite genuine, and meant to point at the ratiocination; for, as Hyper. well saw, we have here an 'argumentum ab exemplo Christi, a majore ad minus.' It is almost certain that the Pesch. Syr., Vulg., Italic, and Arabic Translators had the Particle. I suspect that the word was lost in those five copies, by its being absent from the Lectionaries, for here there commences a new reading.

6. ὃς ἐν μορφῇ—ἴσα Θεῷ] Render: 'who being in the form of God (i. e. of the nature of God) thought it [as he justly might] no robbery or usurpation, to claim equality with God, and yet (v. 7), nevertheless, emptied himself of, &c. In this passage the ancient Expositors almost universally, and by far the greater part of the modern ones, are of opinion that ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχ., signifies, '[though] being, or existing in the form and nature of God, i. e. being really God; μορφῇ being taken to denote, by metonymy, the φύσις and οὐσία, the nature and essence: and, indeed, when applied to God, the term can have no other meaning, since the Deity has properly no form nor shape. Of this signification of μορφῇ several exx. have been adduced both from the Class. writers and Joseph.; which see in my Lex. That the Fathers took the word μορφῇ in this sense, appears from Suic. Thea. ii. 377, and Bp. Bull's Defens. Fid. Nic. p. 37,

g. Isa. 48. 1.
 & 52. 14.
 & 53. 2, 11.
 Zech. 2. 8.
 Matt. 20. 28.

ὑπάρχων, οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἰσα θεῷ ἢ ἄλλ' ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων seqq. Thus the sense will be, 'subsisting in the real form of God, one with and equal to the Father;' as is ably evinced by the most eminent of the earlier modern Expositors, espec. Bps. Pearson, Bull, and Burnet, and recently by Abp. Magee (on the Atonement, i. p. 71, and ii. 479), Bp. Burgess, Dr. P. Smith, and others. Some considerable Commentators, however (as Whitby, Wolf, Carpzov, and Mackn.), think the above view cannot be admitted; since Christ, when he became man, could not divest himself of the nature of God; and with respect to the government of the world, we are, they say, led by what the Apostle tells us, Heb. i. 3, 'to believe that he did not part even with that, but in his divested state still upheld all things by the word of his power.' By μορφὴ Θεοῦ, therefore, they understand that glorious form, 'the visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell,' 1 Tim. vi. 16, and by which he manifested himself to the Patriarchs of old, Deut. v. 22, 24, which was commonly accompanied with a numerous retinue of angels, Ps. lxxviii. 17, and which is called the similitude of the Lord, Num. xii. 8, the face, Ps. xxxi. 16, the presence, Exod. xxxiii. 15, and the shape, John v. 37. This interpretation is, they think, supported by the term μορφή, here used, which signifies a person's external shape or appearance, and not his nature or essence. But the learned Commentators seem here to confound the signification with the sense of a word. That μορφή has not properly the signification in question, — essence, may be admitted; but that it was sometimes so used by the writers on philosophy and theism, is attested by the examples adduced by Elsner and others, and its use here in the above sense is confirmed by what is elsewhere said in Scripture. Thus Heb. i. 3, the Son is similarly called χαράκτήρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, 'the express image of God's person;' evidently with reference to his nature and essence. To the exx. I have already adduced of μορφή for φύσις, I now add Eurip. Bacch. 54, μορφὴν τ' ἑμὴν μετέβαλον εἰς ἀνδρὸς φύσιν. — Οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἰσα θεῷ. The ancient Expositors generally, and most modern ones, explain, 'did not think it a robbing God of his glory to be,' &c. Several Interpreters, indeed, ancient and modern (as Orig., Theodor., Rufin., Pisc., Grot., Maldon., Wolf, Wetst., Abp. Newc., Bp. Middl., and Dr. P. Smith), take the sense to be lit. 'He did not esteem it a prey, a thing to be caught at and coveted, a great prize.' But that interpretation presents a sense at variance with the context, and in many respects objectionable. And as to what the above Expositors say, that ἀρπαγμός is here put for ἀρπαγμα, that they merely take for granted. Abp. Newc., indeed, thinks this has been evinced by G. Wakef. from the genius of the Greek language. But unless the genius of the language be something different from the usus linguae, I must deny this. For after carefully examining all the words in — γμος (about a hundred), I find scarcely any instance of words in γμος being put for the cognate form in γμα, when that form has a passive sense. Of a number

there are some examples; but in at least four-fifths of the whole, an active sense in the — γμος is assigned by the Lexicons, of course agreeably to the usage of the best writers; and there is almost always a cognate form in — γμα, which has regularly a passive sense. I confess, however, that one ex. of ἀρπαγμός, in a passive sense, occurs in Cyrill. Op. vol. i. pars 2, p. 25. Ed. Par. 1638. In οὐχ ἡγήσατο there is that sort of concessive sense, which oft. belongs to such words as think, judge, &c., as used of what is thoroughly admitted and acknowledged, and of which no doubt can be entertained. The use of the word, in such cases, is subservient to argument, and may be especially observed in a train of reasoning, wherein the person arguing is sensible that he has the advantage. Thus it appears that the clause οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἰσα θεῷ is not a principal, but a secondary part of the sentence; the proposition mainly resting on the clause ὅς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων and ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, and this clause serving to point the argument. By εἶναι ἰσα θεῷ is meant the being possessed of the same Divine attributes and perfections. Thus ἰσος here signifies, 'the same in nature;' and ἰσα, though not, strictly speaking, put for ἰσος, is equivalent to it in sense. And no wonder; since ἰσα εἶναι τι is for (κατ') ἰσα [μέρη] εἶναι, 'to be at equal shares with, to be on an equal footing with, to be on a parity with, an equality with.' That ἰσα has sometimes this use has been proved by many examples. The scope of the reasoning in the whole passage is well stated by Chrys., Theophyl., and Œcumen., thus: 'When any one usurps any dignity, he is afraid to lay it down, lest he should lose it, as being not his own; but when any one has it by nature, he can very well disregard it, knowing that he has something which he cannot lose; and if he chooses to lay it down, he can take it up again.' The general meaning, therefore, is: 'The Son of God was not afraid to descend from his own dignity, since he had not this (namely, the being equal with God the Father) by usurpation, but knew it was his natural rank.'

7. ἐκένωσε] 'seipsum inanivit,' as the Vulgate renders; 'emptied himself, divested himself' [of his Divine natural glory], as the Pesch. Syr.; and, by implication, 'seipsum ad statum tenuem depressit.' — μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, 'by taking the form of a servant, and by appearing on earth as one of no dignity or reputation, but of lowly condition;' said with allusion to the humility of human nature, as compared with the Divine. So Test. xiii. Patr. p. 744, τὸν βασιλέα τῶν οὐρανῶν τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς φανέντα ἐν μορφῇ ἀνθρώπου ταπεινώσας. The words following should be rendered, 'after having become like unto man;' i.e. by assuming a human body; and they intimate the Divinity of Jesus Christ,—being meant to show the difference between Christ's former glorious and his present humble state. Ὁμοίωμ., however, imports not resemblance only, but real nature. See Note on Rom. viii. 3, and comp. Heb. ii. 14.

γενόμενος<sup>8 h</sup> καὶ σχήματι εὐρεθεὶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος, ἐταπείνωσεν<sup>h Matt. 26. 30, 42.</sup>
 ἑαυτὸν, γενόμενος ὑπήκοος μέχρι θανάτου, θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ.<sup>h Heb. 12. 2.</sup> <sup>9 i</sup> Διὸ καὶ ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ὑπερίψωσε, καὶ ἐχαρίσατο αὐτῷ ὄνομα<sup>i Isa. 55. 12.</sup> τὸ ὑπὲρ πᾶν ὄνομα<sup>John 10. 17.</sup>
<sup>10 k</sup> ἵνα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ πᾶν γόνυ<sup>k 17. 1, 2, 5.</sup>
 κάμψῃ ἐπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων καὶ καταχθονίων<sup>h Heb. 1. 4.</sup><sup>11 l</sup> καὶ πᾶσα<sup>h Isa. 45. 22.</sup>
 γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσῃται, ὅτι ΚΥΡΙΟΣ Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, εἰς<sup>Rom. 14. 11.</sup> δόξαν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς.<sup>12 m</sup> Ὡστε, ἀγαπητοὶ μου,—καθὼς πάντοτε<sup>1 Cor. 8. 6.</sup> ὑπηκούσατε, μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ νῦν πολλῶ<sup>2 Heb. 4. 11.</sup>
<sup>13 n</sup> καὶ πάντοτε—[μὴν]<sup>3 Pet. 1. 5—10. & 5. 15.</sup>

8. σχήμ. εὐρ. ὡς ἄνθρ.] i.e. 'remaining what he was, he took what he was not'; his nature was not changed, but he was changed, ἐν σχήματι, i.e. ἐν σαρκί. (Theophyl.) The ὡς is not put for tanquam, but is used with allusion to the wide difference between the σχῆμα which our Lord assumed, as compared with the μορφή Θεοῦ. Nay, the term εὐρεθεὶς may be thought to have some allusion thereto, though it is by the recent Commentators in general considered as merely equiv. to ἔν. The scope of the verse seems to be to represent the humiliation and condescension of our Lord, as the preceding verse does his emptying himself of his glory; see Dr. Routh's Reliq. Sac. vol. i. p. 328. And as there μορφ. δούλ. λαβὼν and ἐν ὁμοίᾳ. ἄνθρ. γεν. show how that took place, so here σχῆμ. εὐρ. ὡς ἄνθρ. and γενόμε. ὑπῆκ. μ. θαν. show the nature and extent of the condescension; namely, in his taking upon him the human nature, and in submitting to death.

9. διὸ] i.e. 'wherefore, in reward of this obedience,' &c. Since (observes Hyper.) thus much has been said of the extreme humiliation and the cross of Christ, there was an opportunity afforded, as was also fit, to subjoin something respecting his great exaltation. Accordingly this is added by way of showing that that lowliness detracted nought from the Divinity and dignity of Christ.—ὑπερίψωσε, 'has exceedingly exalted him.' 'Since (observes Theodor.) one who is God cannot properly be said to be exalted, the exaltation in question must be understood of his human nature,' see John xvii. 1—5. Acts ii. 33. Heb. ii. 9.—ὄνομα is by the best Expositors interpreted dignity, (as in Rom. ix. 17, and Achmet Oneir., ἐν ᾧ οὐκ ἔστι καὶ ὄνομα πλείον τῶν ἄλλων βασιλείων), denoting the exalted dignity of our Lord in his quality of Mediator. Eph. i. 20, 21.

10, 11. These two verses mark the result of this superexalted ὄνομα, and point at the boundless extent of the dignity,—namely, the bowing of every knee, of whatever rank (here implying, as appears from Eph. iii. 14, religious adoration), and the confession of every tongue by the ascription of the title ΚΥΡΙΟΣ, Lord, supreme over all persons, and in all causes. This view is confirmed by 1a. xlv. 23, which Paul had in his mind. The expression ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ most Protestant Commentators regard as simply equivalent to τῷ Ἰησοῦ; while the Romanists convert the bowing the knee (not kneeling, as Conyb.) at the name of Jesus to a mere ceremony. A middle course will here, as often, be found the safest. The Apostle may have meant to represent the supreme dignity of Jesus by such a form of expression as would designate that of a man in the highest dignity; namely, in not only having the bending of the knee to him when present, but even at the pronouncing of his name; which is, I believe, an Oriental custom. At all events, the words designate the profound subjection of all created beings to the supreme dignity of Jesus; but they by no means direct, though they may be thought to justify the Romish ceremony of bowing the head, in public worship, at the name of Jesus, a practice in itself not at all objectionable, though by abuse liable to produce evil.—ἐπουρανίων—καταχθονίων. Render: 'of heavenly, and of earthly, and of under-earthly beings;' meaning, all intelligent creatures. Van Hengel thinks that the Son is not here considered as an object of worship, but only in the light of Mediator: an utterly baseless view, occasioned by a difficulty,—which, however, disappears if we consider, with Wiesing, that the ἐξομολόγησις, though universal, is not necessarily universally voluntary—that result of Jesus' Κυριότης being reserved for the Apocalyptic period, ushering in the Millennium.—εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, meaning 'that such a confession redounds to the glory of God the Father;' since, as Œcumenius observes, it is to the glory of the Father, who has exalted the Son to such a Κυριότης.

12—18. 'The Apostle now engraves on the example of Christ a comprehensive and pointed exhortation, having a retrospective reference to vv. 2—4.' (Wiesing.)

12, 13. καθὼς πάντοτε—[μὴν] Here is inculcated obedience on their part to him, in imitation of the obedience of Christ, the Son, to God, the Father; but the argument is obscured by extreme brevity of expression, two clauses being blended into one. Expressed at full length, the sentence would stand thus: καθὼς πάντοτε ὑπηκούσατε, μὴ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου; ἀλλὰ νῦν πολλῶ μάλλον ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου, ὑπακούετε,—καὶ κατηργ., &c. where the νῦν should, properly, come in before ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ, and the καθὼς should as properly be followed by οὕτως before νῦν (as in John iii. 14. 2 Cor. i. 5. 1 Thess. ii. 4); but, instead of this, we have, by a sort of anacoluthon, the ἀλλὰ hortative quasi age (as often in Script. and Class. writers), which must be construed with μετὰ φόβ. κατηργ. Thus it is not unfrequently, as here, employed to introduce an exhortation, which exhortation is, in the present case, 'to stir up themselves vigorously in working out their salvation;' where κατηργ. (on which see my Lex.) implies, by the force of the κατὰ, a notion of zeal and diligence in effecting this great object (comp. Luke xiii. 24), or, at least, of endeavouring to effect it; for this is one

2 Cor. 2. 5.
Heb. 12. 21.
James 1. 16
—18.
o Rom. 12.
17.
1 Pet. 2. 12.
At 4. 2.
p. Matt. 5. 14.
46.
Dent. 32. 5.
Eph. 6. 5.

μᾶλλον ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου, — μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου τὴν ἐαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργάσθε<sup>13</sup> ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ ἐνεργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ τὸ θέλει καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας. <sup>14</sup> Πάντα ποιεῖτε χωρὶς γογγυσμῶν καὶ διαλογισμῶν <sup>15</sup> ἵνα γένησθε ἄμεμπτοι καὶ ἀκέραιοι, τέκνα Θεοῦ ἀμώμητα ἐν μέσῳ γενεᾶς

of the many examples of verbs of action being used of strenuous endeavour to perform the action. See note on Eph. v. 18, πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι. The phrase μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου is united with κατὰ (though placed first in the sentence) by way of intimating the momentous nature of the concern in question, and the extreme peril of miscarriage therein,—thereby presenting an effectual check to a self-righteous spirit on the one hand (see 1 Cor. x. 12. Rom. xi. 20), and an unwarrantable confidence on the other. See note on 1 Cor. ix. 27. The next words, ver. 13, ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ ἐνεργεῖ, seem to have a twofold bearing, being meant partly (as referred to κατεργάζ.) to encourage the faint-hearted to vigorous exertion, on the ground that God is 'He who worketh in them, he who exerts his influence on them (see Eph. ii. 2), both to will and to work' (i. e. to carry that will into work or effect), but chiefly, and as referred to μετὰ φόβου, to check self-confidence, and infuse diffidence, humility, self-distrust, and holy fear,—lest, by their blind security and negligence, they shall have received this Divine aid in vain. See 2 Cor. vi. 1, and Heb. x. 38. This latter view is further strengthened by the added words, ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας (equiv. to those at Eph. i. 5, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ), which signify 'of his own will and pleasure,' and accordingly imply the sovereign freedom of God's inworking (whether by his Word, or by his Spirit of Grace), of his own gratuitous mercy, apart from all claims of human merit. From these words, then, justly may we feel encouraged to 'work out our own salvation' on the ground, that herein Divine power worketh with us (and for us), as it is said in Isa. xxvi. 12, 'Thou hast wrought all our works in us and for us,' for so I would there render, meaning 'in so far as to further our work.' On the other hand, however, as justly may we feel diffidence in ourselves and humility towards God, when we consider, that 'God it is who worketh in us, of his own sovereign will and pleasure,' and that from him proceed both the will and the power to carry the will into work as regards our salvation. It is worthy of observation that even Calv., in his annotation on the present portion, admits that this is no place in which to seek the doctrine of gratia præveniens, nor, on the other hand, is it any suitable instrument by which to 'beat down the doctrine of free-will.' Nay, even Augustin de Dono Persev. c. xiii. (cited by Est.) admits as much. To this purpose true is the remark of Prof. Hey, Lect., vol. iii. 241, that 'free-will and grace, however seemingly opposite to each other, are not really opposed; they may both be received, they seem both to be received by our Church, as also by Augustin.' It is obvious how perfectly the above view of the sense coincides with the doctrine of our Tenth Article, of which the moderation, considering the circumstances under which it was drawn up, reflects no little credit on its framers. See Bp. Burnet there, and also Prof. Hey's Lectures in Divinity, vol. iii. 243, who truly remarks, that 'it is of great importance to set all expressions respecting grace in such a just and clear light, that they shall leave the efficacy of rewards and punishments undiminished, and shall afford no pretence for remissness in spiritual diligence.' [In which view comp. 2 Pet. i. 5, σπουδὴν πάντων κατεργάζεσθαι.] So long as our part, in working out our salvation, is disentangled from mystery, the part of God may safely be committed to those inscrutable counsels which may be termed 'the clouds and darkness which surround his throne,' Ps. cxvii. 2. I must not omit to add that before θεοῦ the Article ὁ is absent from seven uncials, and some cursives, MSS., and from Damasc., and is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; perhaps rightly; the suppression of the Article having arisen, I imagine, from the prominence meant to be given to the idea of the Creator, as opposed to the creature; as in Heb. i. 2, ἀδελφόν ἡμῶν ἐν Υἱῷ, 'by his Son.' And so in Heb. vii. 28. These two, and the present passage, then, form a class, to which may be applied the remark of Mr. Green, Gramm. N. T., p. 182, that 'as the presence of the Article is an impediment to the inherent signification of a word to which it is prefixed, having any prominence or point in the sentence, so there are passages containing words to which the Article might rightly be placed, but where it is withheld for this reason.' He adduces as exx. Heb. i. 1, and vii. 28.

14. πάντα ποιεῖτε — διαλ.] Having given this earnest exhortation to Christian humility and anxious diligence, the Apostle now reverts to the subject of concord and unanimity, modesty and humility, treated of at vv. 2, 3, 4. By the words γογγ. and διαλ. seem designated the effects of the ἐριθεία and καυνοδοξία, against which he had there cautioned them; the former of the two terms denoting 'a murmuring and unacquiescent spirit, one against another,' and the latter 'that internal debating, leading to external disputation, which seeks to excuse itself from performing the duty of meekness and brotherly love, by starting doubts (based on some flimsy reasonings), which prevent the carrying aught into performance, alluded to in the πάντα ποιεῖτε.'

15. ἵνα γίν. ἄμ.] Ἀκέραιοι is equiv. to the 'integer vitiis acclerisque purus' of Horace. On διαστρ. see note on Matt. xvii. 17. Acts ii. 40.—For ἀμώμητα, Lachm. and Tisch. (1st Ed.) read ἀμωμια, from 3 of the most ancient MSS. and 2 others, and some Fathers; but on insufficient grounds; since all the other uncials MSS., together with nearly all the cursives, with Chrysa., Theodor., Theophyl., and several other Fathers, have ἀμώμητα, which is restored in Tisch. 2nd Ed.; and very properly; since it has quite in its favour internal evidence, as existing in the greater likelihood that ἀμώμητα should be altered to ἀμωμια, than the contrary. And, indeed, the word has been so altered in one of the 3 fore-mentioned very ancient MSS.,—namely, the Alex., at 2 Pet. iii. 14. And so in Hesych. the word ἀμώμητος is explained by ἀμωμος. No reason can be imagined why ἀμώμητος should not have been used by St. Paul. It was a word in use from the time of Homer to that of Cyril. of Alexandria, though of very rare occurrence; whereas ἀμωμος was in frequent use, and occurs nearly a hundred times in the Sept., while ἀμώμητος occurs not once. Hence, as ἀμωμος is found several times in New Test., four of them in the writings of St. Paul, ἀμώμητα was here likely to be altered into ἀμωμα. As regards the next words, ἐν μέσῳ, Lachm. and Tisch. edit μέσῳ, from strong external authority confirmed by internal evidence. And this reading I should be ready to admit, could I find that such an elliptical form of expression for κατὰ μέσῳ was ever in use. But that is not the case; and hence I suspect that the word is corrupt, and that the true reading is μέσῳ, for ἐν μέσῳ, which is an expression occurring several times in Homer (e.g. Od. viii. 66 and 473, εἰς δ' ἄρ' αὐτὸν Μέσῳ δαιτυμόνῳ), and occasionally, though rarely, in later writers. The expression γυναιὲς σκολιάς καὶ διεστραμμένης seems formed on Deut. xxxii. 5, γυνεὶ σκολιά καὶ διεστραμμένη, which I would render, 'wicked and perverse,' meaning 'obstinately wrong,' i.e. 'turned from righteousness.' In φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ, there may be an allusion, as Saurin and Doddr. suppose, to light-houses; but rather to the heavenly luminaries, which give light to the world, and are so called in Gen. i. 14, 16, and elsewhere. The metaphor is frequent both in the Scriptural (as Matt. v. 14, 16. Eph. v. 8, 1 Thess. v. 5) and the Class. writers. By 'ye,' I would understand, 'ye Christians,' not 'ye Philippians,' as most Expositors suppose, which occasioned others to take φαίν. as an Imperative. But their duty to be such is rather implied than expressed.

σκολιάς καὶ διεστραμμένης ἐν οἷς φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ, <sup>16</sup> λόγον ζωῆς ἐπέχοντες· εἰς καύχημα ἐμοὶ εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον, οὐδὲ εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπλάσα. <sup>17</sup> Ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ καὶ λειτουργίᾳ τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, χαίρω καὶ συγχαίρω πᾶσιν ὑμῖν <sup>18</sup> τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ ὑμεῖς χαίρετε καὶ συγχαίρετέ μοι.

<sup>19</sup> Ἐλπίζω δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, Τιμόθεον ταχέως πέμψαι ὑμῖν, ἵνα καὶ εὐψυχῶ, γνοὺς τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν. <sup>20</sup> οὐδένα γὰρ ἔχω ἰσόψυχον, ὅστις γνησίως τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει· <sup>21</sup> οἱ

<sup>16</sup> In ἐπέχοντες (where there may be an allusion to men holding out a lantern to light others) there is an evident reference to the words of our Lord, Matt. v. 16, οὕτως λαμψάτω τὸ φῶς ὑμῶν—ἵνα ἰδῶσιν ὑμῶν τὰ καλὰ ἔργα, meaning by φῶς the light of Divine knowledge, here denoted by the expression λόγος ζωῆς, denoting, as often, 'the Gospel.' Comp. 2 Cor. iv. 4. The phrase ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ occurs also in Artemid. On. i. 5 and 16. ii. 15.—In εἰς καύχ., &c., εἰς denotes end or result; and the phrase stands for ὥστε καύχησά μοι ὑμεῖς γινίσθαι, 'so that your conversion to the faith, and your constancy therein, may be a matter for my rejoicing in the day of Christ;' i.e. 'the day of judgment.' On καύχ., in this sense, see note on 1 Cor. xv. 31. In εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπλάσα there is an agonistic allusion, as at 1 Cor. ix. 26, and Gal. ii. 2. The expression ἐκωρ. is well illustrated by the phrase ἐν κόποις, &c., at 2 Cor. vi. 5.

<sup>17</sup> ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι—καὶ λειτ. Here the Apostle (as Wiesing. observes) lays aside momentarily the representation of what is to befall him, in order to say that in the other case too, that, namely, of death, he joys and rejoices with them; and they are to do the same.—There is at σπένδ. a sacrificial allusion (similar to that of Eurip. Orest. 188—190, 'Ἐξίθου' δ' Φοῖβος ἡμᾶς Μίλων, ἀτόφονον αἷμα δόνε Πατροφόνου ματρός), prob. suggested by the association of ideas with the preceding mention of the labours and sacrifices which the Apostle had made for the Gospel's sake; and by which he means to intimate, that for the same glorious cause he is ready to sacrifice life itself. In short, the faith of the Philippians is supposed to be a sacrifice offered to God; and his own life is compared to a drink-offering of oil and wine poured upon the sacrifice (Exod. xxix. 40, sq.). Thus it is meant, that if his very life's blood should be poured forth as a libation by martyrdom, in promoting so acceptable an offering to God as their faith,—he should rejoice, as they would have reason to do, in the consolations of the Gospel; or, if he be even offered up in sacrifice for the service of their faith, that he may present them as a sacrifice to God accepted in faith. There is the same figurative use of the kindred sacrificial term καθοσίωσις in Dionys. Hal. vii. 48, δίδεται γὰρ ἡδὲ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τὸ σῶμα τοῦτον, καὶ καθοσίωται τοῖς ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως ἀγῶσιν.

<sup>19</sup> Verses 19—30 form the second part of the Epistle, containing an announcement of his intention to send Timothy, and of his having sent back Epaphroditus.—ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰ., to whom he refers his hope and trust, as well as every thing else. The words following the καὶ γὰρ are used elliptically; the full sense being, 'to send Timothy, that not only you may be fully assured of my state, but that I also, being assured of your condition, may be easy in my mind.'

<sup>20</sup>—<sup>22</sup> show the reason why he sends Timothy, and no other,—because he has besides him no one ἰσόψυχον.

<sup>20</sup> ἰσόψυχον] i.e., as it were, one endued with the same soul and disposition, a second self. The word is very rare, though occurring in Pa. liv. 13, and the Schol. on Eurip. Androm. 419, ἰσόψυχα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις εἰσι τὰ τέκνα.—γνησίως τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει, 'who will with genuine follow-feeling care for your wel-u ch. 1. 25.

Phillem. 22.
x ch. 4. 18.
Phillem. 2.
2 Cor. 11.
7—9.

πάντες γὰρ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ζητοῦσιν, οὐ τὰ [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ.
23 Τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε, ὅτι, ὡς πατρὶ τέκνον, σὺν ἐμοὶ ἐδούλευσεν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. 23 Τούτου μὲν οὖν ἐλπίζω πέμψαι, ὡς ἂν ἀπιδῶ τὰ περὶ ἐμὲ, ἐξαυτῆς. 24 «πέποιθα δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὅτι καὶ αὐτὸς ταχέως ἐλεύσομαι. 25 x' Ἀναγκαῖον δὲ ἡγησάμην Ἐπαφρόδιτον τὸν ἀδελφὸν καὶ συνεργὸν καὶ συστρατιώτην μου, ὑμῶν δὲ ἀπόστολον, καὶ λειτουργὸν τῆς χρείας μου, πέμψαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς. 26 ἐπειδὴ ἐπιποθὼν ἦν πάντας ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἀδημονῶν, διότι ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἡσθένησε. 27 καὶ γὰρ ἡσθένησε παραπλήσιον θανάτῳ· ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἠλέησεν οὐκ αὐτὸν δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμὲ, ἵνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ † λύπῃ σχῶ. 28 Σπουfare.' Comp. 2 Maccab. xiv. 8, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀνγκόντων τῷ βασιλεῖ, γνησίως φρονῶν, and Eurip. Hippol. 309, φρονῶντα γνήσια. I add another,—comp. an inscription ap. Boeckh. Inscr. Græc., vol. ii. p. 258, 48, εὐλακρινῶς γνησίαν ἔχοντι πρὸς πάντας φιλοστοργίαν, 'a sincere, genuine (such as it professes to be) tender affection.'

22. τὴν δοκ. αὐτοῦ γιν. meaning, 'the proof of him (i. e. his fidelity and constancy) ye have had and known.' So 2 Cor. ii. 9, ἵνα γινῶ τὴν δοκιμὴν ὑμῶν.

23. μὲν οὖν. The force of this Particle is resumptive: 'Him, then, &c.—ὡς ἂν, 'as soon as.' So 1 Cor. xi. 34, ὡς ἂν ἴδῃ. The full sense is, 'as soon as I shall have seen and ascertained the state of my affairs [so as to be enabled to say something positively].'

25. ἀναγκαῖον δι-ὑμᾶς. The full sense is, 'But (since these things, though probable, are yet uncertain, that you might not be any longer ignorant of the state of my affairs), I judged it necessary to send Epaphroditus, though he be not quite restored to health; yet, lest you should hear any false tidings of my fate or his, I thought it better to send him now, without waiting for another opportunity.'—συστρατιώτην, 'colleague;' lit. 'comrade in the warfare of the Gospel.' It is not agreed whether ἀπόστολος signifies messenger, or bishop, or teacher, i. e. 'minister.' The first-mentioned sense, occurring in John xiii. 16, and adopted by Theodor. and some eminent modern Expositors, seems to deserve the preference; for of the other significations there is very slender proof.—λειτουργ. τῆς χρ. is, I conceive, intended to complete the designation of Epaphroditus' office,—namely, that of legate from the Philippians to Paul on the affairs of the Church, and bearer of the contribution which they had sent for his relief and support. See 2 Cor. ix. 12.

26. ἐπιποθὼν ἦν—ἀδημονῶν. Here we learn why Paul thought fit to send back Epaphroditus, i. e. because 'he has been longing [to see] you all; and was much troubled on [learning that] ye had heard he had been sick.'—ἀδημονῶν is a word of very rare occurrence out of the Scriptures; we find it, however, in Hippocr., ἀλύων καὶ ἀδημονίων ὁ θυμός.

27. Here Paul confirms the news they had received of the dangerous sickness of Epaphroditus. For παραπλ. θαν., Heinrichs thinks propriety of language would require ὡς θανάτου, as in Isa. xxxviii. 1. This, however, is hypercritical. The Greek Versions and MSS. there differ; and, prob. in the time of St. Paul, some copies might have had παρ. τῷ θανάτῳ. That the Apostle had that passage in view is very probable, espec. since he has no where else used the word. To the adverbial use of παραπλήσιον for παραπλήσιως, no reasonable objection can be made, since it occurs in Thucyd., Herodot., Polyb., and Lucian; and sometimes with a Dative, as in Polyb. iii. 33, 17. That it should be used with θανάτῳ is not strange, since Xen. Cyrop. v. 1, 11 (Ed. Thiem.), has παραπλήσιως διακρίσθαι, and Aristot., ap. Steph. Thes., speaks of a disorder as μανίᾳ παραπλήσιον. But what decides this point is, that Hippocrat., Epid. i. (cited by Wetst.), has καὶ οὗτος γε πλησίον ἦκε τοῦ θανάτου κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν—πλησίον ἀφίκετο θανάτῳ, where πλησίον is, in like manner, an Adverb; and here propriety of language would require ἀσθενῶν γ. παρ. ἦκε τοῦ θαν.—Αὐτὸν ἠλέησεν. An expression used agreeably to the uniform doctrine of the Holy Scriptures,—that recovery from dangerous diseases is to be regarded as proceeding from Divine interposition, and as a mark of God's mercy.—ἵνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ λύπῃ σχῶ. The expression may be compared with one in Æschyl. Pers. 537, μὴ κἄτα πρὸς κακοῖσι πρόσθῃται κακόν. These words strongly attest the affectionate tenderness of the Apostle's heart; as the words ἀδημονῶν—ἦσθ. in the verse preceding do that of Epaphroditus.—ἐπὶ λύπῃ. Almost all the uncial MSS., and upwards of 20 cursives (to which I add Lamb. 1183), together with Chrys. and Theophyl. in MSS. and Œcumen. have λύπην, which was edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., while the former was retained by Matth. Propriety of language is in favour of λύπῃ; but that consideration is, in a writer like St. Paul, of little weight in comparison with the usage of the New Test. writers. And even Matth. acknowledges that 'æpe in ejusmodi locis in N. T. est Accusativus.' The reading λύπῃ prob. arose, not so much from a correction on the part of Critics, as from an interlinear gloss of a Scholiast. So that, upon the whole, I am inclined to receive λύπην, and should have done so, had I not observed—ην and—γ continually confounded by scribes.

28. σπουδ.] This is well rendered by the Vulgate, festinans, and by Theophyl. ἀν- δαιοτέρως οὖν ἐπεμψα αὐτὸν, ἵνα ἰδόντες αὐτὸν πάλιν, χαρήτε, <sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐν Κυρίῳ μετὰ <sup>2</sup> πάσης χαρᾶς, καὶ τοὺς τοιοῦτους ἐντίμους ἔχετε. <sup>3</sup> 30 * ὅτι διὰ τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Χριστοῦ μέχρι θανάτου ἡγγίσε, † παραβουλευσάμενος τῇ ψυχῇ, ἵνα ἀναπληρώσῃ τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα τῆς πρὸς με λειτουργίας.

III. 1 * Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ· τὰ αὐτὰ

James 1. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 13.

παραβουλεύσθαι, i. e. 'more hastily [than I otherwise should],—namely, for the reason mentioned at ver. 25. The words ἵνα ἰδόντες—αὐτὸν contain another instance like those noticed on the preceding verse.—ἀγῶν ἄλυν. α., viz., by knowing that the person so much beloved by us all is restored to health again.

29, 30. Epaphroditus here recommended to their Christian reception.

30. διὰ τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Χριστοῦ] Some MSS. omit τοῦ, and others have, for Χρ., Κυρίου; while others, again, have Χριστοῦ. Iachm. receives ἔργον Χριστοῦ, as did Tisch. (1st ed.), though in his 2nd ed. he has ἔργον, without any addition; which can by no means be approved; for some such adjunct as Χριστοῦ, or Κυρίου, or Θεοῦ, is here indispensable to make out the meaning; not to say that τὸ ἔργον never occurs in the New Test. used absolutely to denote the Gospel. Of the three readings, Χριστοῦ, Κυρίου, and Θεοῦ, the last has little or no authority; Κυρίου has very slender, except that of the Pesch. Syr., and was prob. brought in by those Critics who wished to make the passage square with the parallel ones at 1 Cor. xv. 58, and xvi. 10. Thus Χριστοῦ has internal evidence no less than external authority (espec. that of the Vat. MS. B) in its favour, and ought to be retained. The τοῦ may seem required by propriety of language; but it is absent from every MS. at 1 Cor. xvi. 10, though found in every MS., except one of mean order, at 1 Cor. xv. 58; and I find that elsewhere in this very construction, where the Article has been used with the former Subst. on which this depends, though the Article is generally used, yet it is sometimes dispensed with. Not so, however, where Χριστός occurs; in which case I believe the Article is always used with the latter Subst. I say 'always'; for I do not reckon the passages where Ἰησ. Χρ. occurs as exx.; for there Ἰ. Χρ. is really a proper name; and hence the Article is dispensed with; e. gr. Acts ii. 38, ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰ. Χρ., and iv. 10. viii. 12. xvi. 18. Heb. x. 10, τοῦ σώματος Ἰ. Χρ. 1 John i. 7, τὸ αἷμα Ἰ. Χρ. Rev. i. 9, τὴν μαρτυρίαν Ἰ. Χρ. In μέχρι θανάτου ἡγγίσε we have an expression savouring of Hebraism, and prob. formed on Pa. lxxvii. 5, comp. with Job xxxiii. 22, ἡγγίσαν εἰς θάνατον. The phrase μέχρι θανάτου is found also in Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 7.—παραβουλ. τῇ ψυχῇ, 'not regarding his life'; lit. 'consulting amidst for his life,' by disregard to his safety; if, at least, παραβουλ. be the true reading; but A, B, D, E, F, G, and a few cursives (to which I add 5 Lamb. MSS.), a few Versions, and some Fathers, have παραβολ., which is preferred by most Critics; and has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Iachm., and Tisch. The t. rec. has, however, been ably defended by Hamm., Wolf, Bengel, Elsner, Matthæi, Michaelis, Schleusner, Storr, and Rinck, who urge, that though παραβουλεύσθαι does not elsewhere occur, yet no authority is required for so ordinary a compound. I would add, that as to the authority of MSS. and Versions for the other reading, the MSS. are comparatively few in number, and, though very ancient, are such as have been every where altered by the early Critics, who changed the popular expressions into Classical ones. And with respect to the Versions, they are worded so ambiguously, that it cannot be pronounced with certainty what the Translators read; though the sense 'not regarding his life,' or 'despising his life,' seems more to favour the old than the new reading. As to the authority of celebrated Greek Scholars, such as Salmas., Scalig., and Casaubon, it cannot decide a question of this kind; for we may account for their predilection, in the same way as for the correction of those Critics who altered the MS. A, B, &c.,—namely, from the perpetual occurrence of παραβόλος and παραβάλισθαι in a sense not unsuitable to the present passage; and the very great rarity of παραβουλεύσθαι, which has been found nowhere else, except in the Greek Fathers. But that is no valid argument against the existence of it, since it is formed analogically, being derived from παραβόλος, synonymous with κακόβουλος; and, though that word be rare, it is found in Du Cange's Gloss. Græc., accompanied with two authorities, and δυσπαραβόλος, in the sense here required, occurs in Æchylus, Suppl. 113. Also κακόβουλεύσθαι in Eurip. Ion 877, ψυχὰ δ' ἀλγεί, κακόβουλεύεισ' ἄκ, &c., and κακόβουλία in Jos. Bell. i. 32, 3, though no example is adduced, even in the enlarged Paris edition of Steph. Thesaur.—On again reconsidering this puzzling question, I see no reason to alter my decision in favour of παραβουλ., espec. since I find that Tisch. has, as oft. elsewhere, by his second thoughts recalled παραβουλ., which has internal evidence in its favour, and must have been read in the copy used by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, which entirely precludes the supposition of Wiesinger and others, that παραβουλ. was introduced from the Greek Fathers. From the nature of the expressions following, the best Commentators are inclined to think that the danger of life above adverted to was brought on by Epaphroditus' hastening forward to reach Rome, in order to fulfil his commission from the Philippians, in spite of a severe fit of illness which seized him, and with which he struggled so as to reach his destination and fulfil his commission, though almost at the expense of his life, since the disorder had become so aggravated as to prove nearly fatal.

b. 10m. 28. 10.
2 Cor. 11. 18.
Gal. 3. 15.
c. Deut. 10.
16. & 30. 6.
Jer. 4. 4.
John 4. 34.
Rom. 2. 28.
& 4. 11, 12.
Col. 2. 11.

γράφειν ὑμῖν ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐκ ὀκνηρὸν, ὑμῖν δὲ ἀσφαλές. <sup>2</sup> Ὁ βλέπετε τοὺς κύνας, βλέπετε τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργάτας, βλέπετε τὴν κατατομὴν <sup>3</sup> ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομή, οἱ πνεύματι † Θεῷ λατρεύοντες καὶ καυχώμενοι ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐν σαρκί

III. 1. τὸ λοιπὸν, δδ.] This is best regarded as a form of transition to the subsequent matter, where χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ is not a mere formula of valediction, as is plain both from what goes before, and from the repetition of the phrase at ch. iv. 4 (avowedly a repetition), as also πάντοτε, which, of course, is to be here understood. It must, then, have the same sense as at 1 Thess. v. 16, and be regarded as hortatory. The Apostle prob. had in mind those various passages of the Old Test. where this rejoicing in the Lord is spoken of, and occasionally inculcated, implying such a cordial profession of the Gospel, as results from an adequate conception of the love of Christ.—τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν—οὐκ ὀκνηρὸν. Render, 'is to me not irksome.' Thus the antithesis (which in the original is very strong) is fully brought out in the version. This use of ὀκν. in an active sense, as applied to things which occasion trouble or annoyance, is very rare; but it occurs, and also with gen., in Soph. Œd. T. 834, 'ἡμῖν μὴ—ταῦτ' ὀκνήρ.' By τὰ αὐτὰ are meant 'the same things which we have urged to you before': viz. by word of mouth.—ἀσφαλές ὁ, lit. 'makes you safe'; since, in the words of the adage, 'littera scripta manet,' 'remains for use.'

2. 'Here follows the motive that has induced the Apostle again to call upon his readers to rejoice in the Lord,—namely, the danger which threatens them from those who do not rejoice in Christ, but have their confidence in the flesh. In opposition to them he exhorts the Philippians to rejoice in the Lord.' (Wiesing.) The Apostle now subjoins an exhortation to depend on the Gospel alone for salvation, to the entire disregard of the Law; and warns them of the evil arts of deceivers.—βλέπετε is a strong expression, in which we have a metonymy of antecedent for consequent, and may be rendered, 'look to'; i.e. 'beware of.' So 2 John 8, βλέπετε ἑαυτοὺς. The more usual Syntax is with δὲ and a Genit., as in Mark viii. 16. The persons designated by the term 'dogs' (a word of reproach common to both the East and the West, and expressive of impudence and rapacity), are supposed to have been the Judaizers who had privily crept in, and were sowing the seeds of Judaism. The appellation is applied to them by way of retort, inasmuch as, we have reason to think, they used it of the Gentiles, even when converted: though, considering the persons here had in view, there may be supposed a twofold allusion both to their impudence (in which view comp. Is. lvii. 11, οἱ κύνες ἀναδείξουσιν τῇ ψυχῇ, with Rev. xxii. 15), and to their rapacity and greediness. See Hom. II. vi. 344, 356, and Od. xxii. 55, comp. with Is. lvi. The same are also characterized as κακοὶ ἐργάται—ol, i.e. 'those who are performing an evil work,' viz. the introducing of the law. So Theodor., who explains, οὐ γὰρ οἰκοδομοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν οἰκοδομίαν κατασκάπτουσιν ἐπιχειροῦσι. To the reproachful appellation τοὺς κύνας the Apostle subjoins a sarcastic one in τὴν κατατομὴν, which the recent Expositors in general regard as denoting the action itself, and as opposed to περιτομή; q. d. 'beware of this mangling of the flesh [for it is no more], which they call circumcision.' But that is inadmissible; and, on account of τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργ., preceding,—to which this corresponds,—τὴν κατ. must refer to persons; as indeed is plain from the next verse, ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομή. The expression seems rightly regarded by Gatak., Grot., Rosenm., and others, as abstract for concrete, to denote 'those who maintained the necessity of circumcision,' which is styled circumcision (or 'mangling') by way of contempt. Three instances of a similar 'deterioratio vocis in deterius' may be seen adduced in the note on Heb. iv. 9, σαββατισμός.

3. ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτ.] Render, 'for we are the Circumcision'; i.e. we Christians are alone the professors of true circumcision; q. d. 'They ought not to arrogate to themselves alone the title of circumcision; for we Christians are (i.e. possess) the true circumcision, even that of the spirit and the heart.' See Rom. ii. 10.—Οἱ πνεῦμα Θεῷ λατρ. Render, '[we are those] who worship God spiritually'; i.e. pay that spiritual service enjoined by Christ, John iv. 23, or the 'reasonable service' mentioned in Rom. xii. 1, 'and which (observes Bp. Middl.) made the essence, as distinguished from the barren ceremonial observances, on which principally the Jewish opponents of Christianity appeared to set a value.' Thus here is denoted the service of the mind and heart, the inner man, the internal worship which especially constituted the spiritual service of the Gospel, as opposed to the carnal and external observances of the law and its fleshly ordinances.—To advert to a matter of reading. For Θεῷ all the uncial MSS. have Θεοῦ, which has been received by Matth., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., but the former is retained by Griesb., and rightly; for, although external authority is rather in favour of Θεοῦ, internal evidence is decidedly in favour of Θεῷ; for if Θεοῦ be read, it cannot be supposed governed of λατρ., since no instance have I noted, either in the Sept. or class. writers, of λατρεύειν followed by a genit. Consequently it must be governed of πνεύματι. Yet the expression is incapable of any such sense as will suit the context. The context requires an expression such as shall be in opposition to τῇ σαρκί; and Matth. says it is so opposed. But how the Spirit of God can be shown to be in opposition to circumcision in the flesh I see not,—at least not without employing considerable violence. See Est., who in an able annotation examines and refutes the various modes of interpretation which have been supposed to arise out of Θεοῦ. Upon the whole, I still acquiesce in the received reading Θεῷ, which is confirmed by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and the other ancient Versions, as also of Chrysa. (who, from his commentary, evidently so read) and Theophyl., Theodor., Œcumen., and the Cod. D of the sixth century.

πεποιθότες <sup>4</sup> αἰπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων πεποιθήσιν καὶ ἐν σαρκί. Εἰ <sup>4</sup> 2 Cor. 11.
 τις δοκεῖ ἄλλος πεποιθέναι ἐν σαρκί, ἐγὼ μᾶλλον <sup>5</sup> 10. 22.
 ὁκταήμερος, ἐκ γένους Ἰσραὴλ, φυλῆς Βενιάμιν, Ἑβραῖος ἐξ <sup>11</sup> Rom. 11. 1.
 Ἑβραίων, κατὰ νόμον Φαρισαῖος, <sup>6</sup> 12. 6.
 ἐκκλησίαν, κατὰ δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐν νόμῳ γενόμενος ἀμεμπτος. <sup>13</sup> Gen. 17. 12.
 7 <sup>7</sup> Ἄλλ' ἄτινα ἦν μοι κέρδη, ταῦτα ἡγῆμαι διὰ τὸν Χριστὸν <sup>14</sup> Luke 2. 21.
 ζημίαν. <sup>8</sup> Ἄλλὰ μενοῦν[γε] καὶ ἡγοῦμαι πάντα ζημίαν εἶναι <sup>15</sup> John 7. 21—24.
 Col. 2. 2. Wied. 7. 9.

4. 'In this and the following verses the Apostle proceeds to combat his opponents with their own weapons. He himself, he argues, possesses all to which they attach so much value; nevertheless, he has renounced it all for the sake of Christ.' (Wiesing.) At καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων, &c. supply αὐτοῖς, and render: 'Although I am one having (i. e. one who has) confidence; meaning, 'the trust arising from glorying in the flesh; see note on 2 Cor. iii. 4. The Apostle does not mean that he feels this confidence; but that he has, or should have, this ground of confidence, if such existed; and that he does not recognise such grounds, appears by the δοκεῖ of the following sentence; which, therefore, is not, as some supposed, pleonastic. He means to hint, that he does not depreciate such grounds of confidence because he possesses them not. Nay, he goes still further,—declaring that he has more grounds of such confidence than any other; for that is the sense of the words εἰ τις—μᾶλλον, which are generally considered as a mere Hebraism. Yet I have remarked something similar in Diog. Laërt. iii. 43, where he gives us the Inscription on the tomb of Plato, Εἰ δέ τις ἐκ πάντων σοφίης μίαν ἔσθιν ἰπαινον, τούτων (scil. τὸν ἰπαινον) ἔχει πλείστον. The brevity at ἐγὼ μᾶλλον appears to have arisen from the writer's wish to avoid seeming to recognise such grounds.

5. In proof of the assertion in ἐγὼ μᾶλλον, the Apostle here states the principal grounds of confidence on which the Jews trusted.—περιτομῇ, ὁκταήμερος. The sense of this idiomatical clause is, as Bp. Middl. remarks, 'being, in respect of circumcision, [circumcised] on the eighth day.' On the reading here, however, there has been some doubt. The Edit. Princ. has περιτομῇ; while the Editions of Erasmus, Stephan., Beza, and Elzev. have περιτομή. Yet περιτομῇ was afterwards introduced into the l. rec.; and the MSS. would seem to be decidedly in favour of it. It is moreover preferable; since (as Bp. Middl. observes) περιτομή would require the Article ('my circumcision was an eighth-day one'), and thus the usus loquendi, by which adjectives of time in -ημερος and -αιος are applied to persons, not things, would be violated. The Jews regarded circumcision before the eighth day as no circumcision, and after that time as of little avail.—ἐκ γέν. Ἰσρ., φυλ. Βενιάμιν. Render: 'by nature an Israelite, by tribe a Benjaminite.' I would comp. what Joseph. says of himself in his Preface to Bell. Jud. § 1, γένει Ἑβραίων. This he mentions, in order to show the genuineness of his Judaism, viz. as being a Jew by birth, not one become so by proselytism; and that birth of a tribe not contaminated by foreign admixture.—Ἑβρ. ἐξ Ἑβρ., scil. πεφυκώς, 'a Hebrew descended from parents who were both Hebrews.' By the same idiom it is said, Eurip. Alc. 677, Θισσαλὸν κ' ἀπὸ Θισσαλῶ πατρός οἰοῦντα. Property iv. 2, 'Tuscan ego Tusci origin.' By νόμον must be meant the ἴθνη peculiar to Pharisaism: a very rare signif., but of which I have noticed two examples, in Aristoph. Av. 1343, and Thucyd. vi. 16.

6. κατὰ ζῆλον διώκων τὴν ἐκκλ.] The sense is: 'As to zeal, that was attested by my persecution of Christians.' On the reading ζῆλος, edited by Lachm. and Tisch. from a few uncials, see note on 2 Cor. ix. 2.—κατὰ δικαιοσύνην—ἀμεμπτος. It is commonly supposed that δικ. here denotes a diligent observance of the law; q. d. 'as far as regards an exact observance of the law, I was irreprehensible.' But the sense seems to be: 'As far as regards any justification to be obtained by the law, I was irreprehensible.' See the able note of Calv.

7. The Apostle having shown how superior he is to all his opponents, even when measured by their own standard, proceeds to say:—ἄλλ' ἄτινα—ζημίαν. The full sense is, 'But such things as were to me (in my sight) matter of gain, have I accounted as (so much) loss for Christ.' The terms κέρδη and ζημία are mercantile terms, profits and losses acquired or incurred in trade; and thus understood they import a very forcible and striking sense to the passage: 'for thus,' as observes Mackn., 'it is as if the Apostle had said, In making the voyage of life for the purpose of gaining salvation, it was my first purpose to purchase it with my circumcision, and my careful observance of the ritual observances and moral precepts of the Law; and I put a great value on these things, on account of the gain and advantage I was to make by them. But, when I became a Christian, I willingly threw them all overboard, as of no value in purchasing salvation. And this I did for the sake of gaining salvation through faith in Christ, as my only Saviour.' Paul, however, means somewhat more; q. d. 'I regarded them not only as useless, but injurious.' So, in the next verse, he says he accounts them as not merely valueless, but contemptible.

8. ἄλλα μενούργα—Κυρίου μου] This is partly explanatory of the preceding, with which it is closely connected, and partly said per epianorthosin. The full force of the words is, 'nay rather (imo vero utique), I do even account all things to be so much loss for (or 'in comparison with') the excellency, &c. It was the supereminent excellency of that knowledge, which induced the Apostle to make the sacrifice of whatever came in competition with it. As to ἀκύβαλα, on which see my Lex., I am now of opinion, that it is best rendered, with Dr. Peile, 'offal,' q. d. 'which I have done well to throw away.' So Apuleius, cited by Wets., 'rem familiarem abijcisse, velut onus stercoris.'—The ἴσως

δια τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου μου
 δι' ὃν τὰ πάντα ἐξημιώθην, καὶ ἡγοῦμαι σκύβαλα εἶναι, ἵνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω, <sup>9</sup> καὶ εὐρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ, μὴ ἔχων ἐμὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ νόμου, ἀλλὰ τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει <sup>10</sup> τοῦ γνῶναι αὐτὸν, καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν παθη-μάτων αὐτοῦ, † συμμορφούμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ, <sup>11</sup> εἶπω

After σκύβαλα, not found in four uncial MSS., and the Vulg. and Italic Versions, has been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., 1st Ed., but restored in Tisch., 2nd Ed.; very properly; since external authority is very greatly in its favour; and internal evidence preponderates, considering that it was more likely to be removed by the earlier Revisers of the text in MSS. B, D, F, G (as removing a tautology between ἡγιασέναι εἶναι and σκύβαλα εἶναι), than to have been introduced from a marginal scholium. But the repetition of εἶναι rather strengthens the expression.—ἵνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω, 'obtain the benefits purchased by the sacrifice of Christ.'

9. καὶ εὐρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ, &c.] This is explanatory of the nature of the benefit from Christ, and has an allusion to the mode by which it is effected.—Εὐρ. is not (as most recent Commentators suppose) put for as, but there seems to be an allusion to the judgment of the great day. Thus the sense is: 'and be [at the last] recognised by, or found united to him in faith and obedience.'—ἐν αὐτῷ denotes the spiritual union mentioned by our Lord in John vi. 56, ἐν μοι μένει, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ, and the next words hint at the means by which it is to be effected.—μὴ ἔχων, &c.; i. e. 'not having, as a dependence, a righteousness of my own obtainable by the law (see Rom. iii. 20), but the justification [obtained through faith in Christ].' The next words, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικ. ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, are exegetical of the preceding, where at ἐκ Θεοῦ sub. δοδόμενον.—ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, 'on the score of, or condition of faith.'

10. 'The Apostle now proceeds to describe wherein that righteousness consists, of which he had just spoken, God's free gift of grace—designed for all, and effectually realized unto all, such as simply believe, and hopefully wait on him for salvation. It is not merely that they all should have life in Christ, who in Adam all had sinned, and all become subject to God's wrath and condemnation; but more than this—comp. John x. 10. Rom. v. 17—where Christ is truly known and realized as "the power of God and the wisdom of God," there (see on 1 Cor. i. 30) is not exculpation only for past guilt, but positive consecration also to a new state of Innocence; there is not the righteousness of Justification only, once for all "conveyed through the laver of Regeneration;" but the righteousness of Sanctification also, begun in "babes in Christ;" continued in those who steadfastly continuing in all the means of grace which God has provided for them, "grow up into entire conformity with him who is their Head;" and, finally, made perfect in those who, as men, having suffered and died with him carnally unto Sin, shall also, as in him made partakers of the Divine Nature, be spiritually raised up in him, and with him live for ever unto God.' (Peile.) By γνῶναι is denoted, not a bare theoretical, but an emphatically experimental knowledge of Christ, i. e. his person and office, the knowing (as is intimated in the next words) the force and efficacy of his resurrection, and its august purpose; namely, to raise us from the death of sin to the life of righteousness. By γνῶναι τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν παθημάτων αὐτοῦ is meant, as the words following further explain, the knowing, by our own experience, those παθήματα, or the being made as conformable to his sufferings by enduring similar sufferings from the world, as we are made conformable to his death, by dying unto sin. See more in Calv., Hyp., and Est.—Συμμορφούμενος. For this, MSS. A, C, D, and 3 cursives, have συμμορφιζόμενος, which is received by Lachm. and Tisch.; but external authority is insufficient; and internal evidence is in favour of the t. rec., which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version, Chrysa., Theodor., and Greg. Naz. The sense is, 'by being brought into conformity with his dying.' See Estius.

11. εἶπω κατατήσω εἰς τὴν ἔξανάστ. τῶν νεκρῶν] Here the MSS. are divided; some having the t. rec. τὴν ἔξαν. τῶν ν., others τῶν ἐκ, and others, again, τὴν ἐκ νεκ., which last has been received by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., from A, B, D, E, and 10 cursives; to which I can make no addition. Thus external authority is in favour of the t. rec., though internal evidence is equally balanced; for τὴν ἐκ may have been a correction proceeding from those who thought that the sense which the context requires, 'the resurrection from the dead,' could not be extracted from ἔξαν. τῶν νεκρῶν. The τὴν has both force and propriety, by a use of the Art., found also in Luke xx. 35, τυχεῖν τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῆς ἐκ νεκρῶν, as also Acts iv. 2, τὴν ἀνάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν, where, however, many inferior MSS., and some Versions, and Fathers, have τὴν ἀν. τῶν νεκρῶν. The phrase ἀνάστ. ἐκ νεκρῶν occurs also in 1 Pet. i. 3; and we have ἔξανάστασις also occasionally in the Class. writers; e. g. Strabo, p. 102. But I see not why ἔξανάστ. τῶν νεκρῶν should not of itself have the same sense as that conveyed, with more propriety of expression (and for that reason likely to be adopted in the early uncial MSS.), ἔξαν. τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν. Little prob. is it that the reading ἔξανάστ. τὴν ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν should have been altered to ἐξ. τῶν νεκρ. There is great reason to think that the ἐκ arose from those who thought it necessary to the sense, and did not see that it could be fetched from the ἐξ in ἔξανάστ. Hence I cannot but still retain ἔξαν. τῶν νεκρ. as a popular and familiar mode of expression (suitable to the persons addressed), according to which the expressions εἰς τὴν ἔξαν.

καταντήσω εἰς τὴν ἐξανάστασιν † τῶν νεκρῶν. <sup>12 m</sup> Οὐχ ὅτι <sup>m 1 Tim. 6. 12.</sup> ἤδη ἔλαβον, ἢ ἤδη τετελειώμαι· διώκω δὲ εἰ καὶ καταλάβω, <sup>Heb. 12. 33. & 12. 31. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 3 Pet. 1. 8 —5. & 3. 18. n Ps. 45. 11. Luke 9. 62. 1 Cor. 9. 24. 1 Tim. 4. 7, 8. Heb. 12. 1. Rev. 3. 21. 1 Cor. 2. 6. Gal. 6. 10.</sup> ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ κατελήφθην ὑπὸ [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ [Ἰησοῦ]. <sup>13</sup> Ἀδελφοί, ἐγὼ ἑμαυτὸν οὐ λογίζομαι κατεληφέναι· <sup>n</sup> ἐν δὲ, τὰ μὲν ὀπίσω ἐπιλανθανόμενος, τοῖς δὲ ἔμπροσθεν ἐπεκτεινόμενος, <sup>14</sup> κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω ἐπὶ τὸ βραβεῖον τῆς αἰῶν κλήσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>15 o</sup> Ὅσοι οὖν τέλειοι, τοῦτο φρονῶμεν καὶ τῶν advert—as at Rom. iv. 16, and elsewhere—to the state of the persons in question, that state, or kind, of resurrection unto life of those who have died in the Lord, and whose resurrection from the dead will be a resurrection unto life and glory, their bodies being raised incorruptible, and both body and soul united for ever with the Lord. See 1 Thess. iv. 6—18. The εἴπω before καταντ. cannot justly be thought to imply any doubt, but only intimates a humble striving after, as opposed to a false security; hence we should render: 'that I may by whatever means; the idiom only implying, as Calv. observes, the difficulty of the thing, in order thus to excite them to grapple with it. There is another ex. of this ellipt. use of εἴπω, with an implied notion of striving, in Acts xxvii. 12, εἴπω δὲ οὐκ ἔλαβον καταντ., &c., and sometimes in the best Class. writers, e.g. Thucyd. iv. 11, εἴπω δὲ σάμντοι ἴλοιεν τὸ τεῖχος, and Homer, Od. xvi. 459, seqq. That Theodor. and Theophyl. (after Chrys.) saw this implied sense, is evident from their expositions.

12. οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη ἔλαβον] The ὅτι has reference to ver. 8, the principal proposition. In short the full sense of this elliptical expression is, 'Not that I mean to say, I have already attained [the certainty of salvation].' See 1 Cor. ix. 27.—τατελ. is usually rendered, 'were made perfect.' But the best Expositors are agreed that in this (as well as in διώκω, καταλάβω, and other terms occurring in this and the next verse), there is an agonistic metaphor, as in Luke xiii. 32, and Philo, p. 74, ὅταν, ὡ ψυχῇ, τελευθῇ, καὶ βραβεῖον καὶ στεφάνον ἀξιώσῃ. From which, and other passages, it is clear that τελευθῆναι was a word denoting to reach the goal as victor, and receive the prize.—In the next words, ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ κατεληφέναι, &c., there is another application of the term καταλαμβάνω, the sense being, 'in order that I might obtain that for the attainment of which I was laid hold of (i. e. impressed into the service) by Jesus Christ.' The Apostle here alludes to the extraordinary circumstances under which, being impressed into the Christian stadium, his conversion took place. Perhaps he had here in mind Isa. xli. 8, 9, σὺ δὲ Ἰσραὴλ—ὃν ἠγάπησα· οὐ ἀνταλαβόμεν ἀπ' ἄκρων τῆς γῆς, where ἀνταλαβόμεν and the Hebr., תְּרַחֲמִי, alike express the sense, 'whom I laid hold of [by the hand], and brought ἀπ' ἄκρων τῆς γῆς, from the ends of the earth.' Here the MSS. exceedingly vary. See Tisch. and Scholz, who edit ὑπὸ Χριστοῦ. But no good reason is there for rejecting Ἰησοῦ, which occurs at ver. 14, and is supported by the Alex. MS., and the Pesch. Syr. Version. The τοῦ may not be genuine, but it should only be bracketed.

13, 14. Here the agonistic metaphor is yet further developed, and in the terms ἐπιλανθ. and ἐπεκτεινόμενοι we have terms appropriate to the racer, whether on foot or on horseback, or in the chariot, who stretched himself forward in his anxiety to reach the goal, agreeably to the description in Horace, 'Instat equis auriga extremos inter eutem vincentibus illum Præteritum temens.' In this and other passages here cited, the racer is graphically described as thinking not of the space already run ('nil actum reputans, si quid superesset agendum,' as says Lucan, Phars. ii. 657), but looking solely to what remains; and, regardless of the progress made, stretching forward to traverse that which separates him from the goal. I add, in further illustration of ἐπικτ., Basil. Mag. t. iii. p. 20, ἐν τοῖς δρόμοις τοῖς ἔμπροσθεν ἐπικτίζομαι, ἐπίτερος ἐσ, and Diog. Laert. vi. 2, 6, where it is recorded, that when one said to Diogenes, then advanced in years, 'You are an old man; now rest from labour.' 'What' (answered he), 'εἰ δολιχὸν ἴδραμον' ('if I have run the long course'), πρὸς τῷ τίλει ἵδαι με ἀνίβαι ('to relax') καὶ μὴ μάλλον ἐπιτεῖναι; where for ἐπιτεῖναι I would read ἐπικτίζαι, 'me porrigere ac contendere summo studio, eniti,' where ἐπικτ. has a neuter sense, as in Greg. Nyss., vol. ii. p. 843.—κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω, 'I press onward right to (lit. over against) the object, viz. the goal in view.' In ἀνὰ κλῆσιν there is an allusion, not, as has been supposed, to the lofty seat of the βραβεῖντης, but, rather, to the thing signified, since ἀνὰ signifies on high, i. e. heavenly. For ἐπὶ Lachm. and Tisch. read εἰς, but on insufficient evidence.

15. One cannot but observe the address with which the Apostle passes from the indirect admonition of the preceding verses, 8—11, to the direct exhortation contained in the present; and that first introduced, per κοινωνίαν, with 'we,' but immediately changed to 'ye.'—τέλειοι many eminent Commentators interpret of 'full growth in Divine knowledge,' the sense being, 'fully instructed in the Christian religion,' as in 1 Cor. ii. 6. So also ταῖς φρεσὶ τέλειοι γίνεσθαι, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. But it may better, with others, be taken of persons who have attained to a comparative perfection, by far advancement in moral and religious knowledge and Christian virtue, espec. the latter. So Matt. v. 48, xix. 21. Col. i. 28, iv. 28. James i. 4, iii. 2. Ephes. iv. 13. So Ecclesi. xiv. 17. Isocr. Panath. p. 239, τελείους ἀνδρας εἶναι, καὶ πάσας ἔχειν τὰς ἀρετὰς, and Simplic. on Epict., p. 289, who says, 'Make it your study to live ὡς τέλειον, οὐχ ὡς τέλει ἀπληρότα,' &c., i. e. the life of a perfect man, not as though you had already attained perfection, but as always advancing towards it.—

εἰ τι ἐτέρως φρονεῖτε, καὶ τοῦτο ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῖν ἀποκαλύψει.
 16 <sup>p</sup> Πλὴν εἰς δ' ἐφθάσαμεν, τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν [κανόνι, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν].
 17 <sup>q</sup> Συμμιμηταὶ μου γίνεσθε, ἀδελφοί, καὶ σκοπεῖτε τοὺς οὕτω περιπατοῦντας καθὼς ἔχετε τύπον ἡμᾶς. 18 <sup>r</sup> πολλοὶ γὰρ περιπατοῦσιν, οὓς πολλάκις ἔλεγον ὑμῖν, νῦν δὲ καὶ κλαίων λέγω, τοὺς ἐχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. 19 <sup>s</sup> ὧν τὸ τέλος ἀπτοῦτο φρ., 'let us aim at being thus disposed.' See Calv. The next words, καὶ εἰ τι—ἀποκαλ., are obscure, from the construction being somewhat perturbed, which stands thus: εἰ φρονεῖτέ τι ἑτέρας, 'if ye regard (or attend to) any thing otherwise, i. e. in a less perfect manner.' Thus the sense is, 'And if there be aught wherein ye are of different sentiments from the foregoing views, this error, God will, I trust, even remove, and thus open your minds to the light of truth.' (Calv. and Mackn.)

16. πλὴν εἰς δ'—φρονεῖν.] Of this passage both the reading and the interpretation have been controverted. Some ancient MSS. and Versions omit κανόνι—φρονεῖν; others, κανόνι only; others, again, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν; and in some the words are transposed. Griesbach has cancelled all the words; proceeding, doubtless, on a rule in criticism,—that a passage which is variously read in the MSS. is most probably spurious. That rule, however, has many exceptions; and, among others, when a passage is very obscure, and there are many alterations, whether by omission, alteration, or transposition, all tending to remove the difficulty. Now to cancel such a passage would be as uncritical as cancelling a passage merely because it is difficult. Of this kind is the passage before us; and therefore I agree with Wetst., Matthæi, Rinck, and Scholz, that the words must not be cancelled, nor even altered; for neither of which courses do I find any countenance in the Lamb. and Mus. copies; since the transposition arose from certain words being first omitted, ὁ ἡμετέρευστος, and then introduced in the wrong place. The forementioned Critics take for granted that the words were introduced from Gal. vi. 16, and Phil. ii. 2, and iv. 2. But I cannot, any more than Rinck, bring myself to regard the words as an addition, inasmuch as the sense requires that the passage should be read in full; for, as Rinck adds, 'the interpretation which they assign is one involving no inconsiderable harshness. Had the Apostle (continues he) meant what they suppose, he would have written ἐν τούτῳ (or ἐν αὐτῷ) καὶ στοιχεῖν, nearly as in Col. ii. 6.' But ὁ αὐτὸν means idem, and serves to intimate an exhortation to unity of doctrine. The particle πλὴν restricts the sort of diversity admitted at ver. 15 (τι ἑτέρας): 'quo minus tamen à norma generali dicendi, neque in concordia morum discedatur.' Thus πλὴν will have the sense, 'but, however (for πλὴν ἀλλὰ)'—meaning, 'be that progress what it may, be that diversity more or less—as in Luke x. 20, πλὴν ἐν τούτῳ μὴ χαίριτε, &c. (where see my note.) On the terms στοιχ. and κανόνι, see my note on Gal. vi. 16. As to the question whether στοιχεῖν is Infinit. for Imperat., the idiom is by no means so frequent in the New Test. as is supposed. See note on Rom. xii. 15. The only positively certain ex. is Luke ix. 3, ἔχουσιν, and hence I prefer to suppose στοιχεῖν to be suspended in construction from the foregoing φρονεῖν. In short, the passage will be best understood by regarding it as one of the many in St. Paul's Epistles, where two clauses are found blended into one, and consequently there is a peculiarity of phraseology as well as a brevity. If written at length, the passage would have run thus: πλὴν εἰς δ' ἐφθ., τούτῳ [δὲ] στοιχεῖν τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι. The rule here adverted to is that of the right doctrine of faith, just laid down.

17. συμμιμ. μου γίνεσθε.] The Apostle concludes with a weighty exhortation: 'Be joint imitators of me,' i. e. unite in following my example.—σκοπεῖτε—ἡμᾶς, 'And observe [for imitation] those who so act, as you see us acting, and have us for an example [therein].' On τύπον see Acta vii. 44.

18, 19. These verses are in some measure parenthetical. After περιπ. many Expositors suppose an ellipsis of καθὼς, or ἑτέρας; but there seems rather to be an aprosiopesis, for delicacy's sake. In the place of a term to characterize their conduct, the Apostle chooses to describe the persons,—first generally, as enemies of the cross of Christ; then under their principal individual characteristics. First, then, they are designated generally, as the enemies of the cross of Christ; i. e. inimical to the doctrine of a crucified Redeemer, through the sacrifice of whose death circumcision was become unnecessary (see notes on Gal. v. 11. vi. 12, 14), and in general utterly averse to the humbling and spiritual doctrines of the Gospel. Of these it is first said, for warning to others, that their end is destruction; meaning, that their conduct, if persisted in, must terminate in their perdition. See Jude 13. They are then characterized by their chief personal traits,—sensuality, a shameless impudence in glorying in their false doctrines and licentious practices, and a general worldly-mindedness. Of these the first is expressed by a comparison used in Rom. xvi. 18, where see note, and elsewhere. Several parallel sentiments are adduced by Grot., Wolf, Alberti, and Wetst. the most apposite of which are the following: (Europ. Cyclop. 335, 2) γὰρ τινὲς θεῶν, πλὴν ἡμοῖ (θεοῖσι δ' ὅς), καὶ τῇ μεγίστῃ γαστρὶ τῷδε δαιμόνως. 'Ὅτε τοῦ πνίψ γε καὶ φαγεῖν τοῦθ' ἡμῖραν ζεῖν οὕτοι ἀνθρώποις τοῖσι σέφροσι.'

18. τοὺς ἐχθροὺς.] The want of correspondence in case (since strictness of construction may be thought to require τοῖς ἐχθροῖς) seems to have arisen from abruptness of expression, which is to be ascribed to warmth of feeling,—namely, the indignation felt by the Apostle at the shameful conduct of the persons in question. Never-ὥλεια, ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ἡ κοιλία, καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχύνῃ αὐτῶν, οἱ τὰ ἐπὶ γαῖαν φρονούντες. <sup>20</sup> Ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρα-νοῖς ὑπάρχει, ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. <sup>21</sup> ὃς μετασχηματίζει τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, [εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ] σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ δυνάσθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι ἑαυτῷ τὰ

t Eph. 3. 6.
Col. 3. 2.
1 Thess. 1.
10.
Tit. 2. 12.
Heb. 12. 14.
u 1 Cor. 15.
48, 51.
Col. 3. 4.
1 John 3. 2.

theless the nominat. would be quite as suitable, nay, even more so, as appears from the passages of 2 Pet. ii. 13, and Jude 19, which I have cited. There is in either case an ellipsis of the partic. of the verb. subst., i. e. either ὄντας or ὄντες, q. d. 'those enemies [as they are] of the cross.' Thus as the words now stand the construction is that of the accus. absol., as in Acts xxvi. 3, γνώστην ὄντα σε. Had οἱ ἐχθροὶ been written, the construction would have been that of nomina. absol., which would have been more suitable to the warmth of feeling inherent in the words, which borders on exclamation (q. d. 'those enemies I call them'), such as that which we observe in the passages of 2 Pet. and Jude.

19. ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ἡ κοιλία I cannot agree with Ambrose, Calv., and Hyper., in referring these words to the false brethren who wished to bring in the law of meats, &c.; but I consider them, with Theod., Theophyl., Est., and Grot., as pointing at the one grand object for which those men live,—namely, the sensual gratification of the mere animal man, without any thought or care of the spiritual part of man. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 13 and 14; and see espec. the able note of Est., who remarks: 'Ventrem habent pro Deo, non quod improprie ventrem Deum suum reputantes: ut non eo sensu, quod in ventre fiduciam collocant, sicut hominis avari Deus est pecunia quatenus sperat et confidit in pecunia thesauris; sed quia ventris causâ omnia faciunt, i. e. finem constituent in deliciis cibusque ut proinde ventricolæ dici possent juxta illud Apostoli de Iliadem, Rom. xvi. 18, τῷ Κυρίῳ—οὐ δουλεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ.' So, too, the passage was taken by Hooker, who in his Eccles. Pol. i. xi. 4 (cited by Dr. Peile), says: 'Man doth seek a triple Perfection, 1. a sensual, consisting in those things which even life itself requireth, either as necessary supplements (or supplies), or as ornaments thereof: 2. an intellectual, consisting in those things which none underneath man is either capable of or acquainted with; 3. a spiritual and divine, consisting in those things whereunto we tend by supernatural means here, but cannot here attain unto them. They who make the first of these three the scope of their whole life, are said by the Apostle to have no god, but only their own belly.'—καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχύνῃ αὐτῶν, denoting a hardened insensibility to shame,—a glorying in that of which they ought to be ashamed. So Polyb. viii. 23, φ' οἱ ἐχθρὸν αἰσχύνεσθαι, ἐπὶ τούτοις ὡς καλοῖσι, σεμνύνεσθαι καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖν.—Οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρ. Render: 'whose minds are devoted to earthly things'; of course, to the neglect of heavenly ones. See Col. iii. 2, and comp. Hom. Od. xxi. 85, ἐφημέρια φρονούντες.

20. This verse connects with ver. 17, to which the γὰρ refers, vv. 18 and 19 being parenthetical. —πολίτ. might, did the context permit, denote VOL. II.

either conduct, manner of living, ἀναστροφή, as it is commonly interpreted, or, as others, 'community,' 'political society.' But the best Expositors are mostly agreed, that it means 'citizenship,' which implies that of a community, or country; as the context points out.—ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα K. l. X. The ἐξ οὗ is for ἐξ ὧν, scil. οὐρανῶν, by a common figure. The words have reference to the omitted clause, and suggest a reason why we should give our attention, as a heart-concern, to heavenly things, namely, because we expect from thence the Saviour, who will richly reward all our patient endurance here; see 2 Tim. iv. 18.—ἀπεκδεχόμεθα denotes anxious expectation.

21. In touching on the redemption to be bestowed on all who make good their title to the heavenly citizenship, the Apostle, with consummate address, adverts to that which is (as we learn from 1 Cor. xv.) to be the commencement of the rewards Christ will bestow, thus forming, as it were, a pledge for the rest. On this point he has, with great judgment, taken his stand; since it suggests a strong motive to resist temptations to sensuality and worldly-mindedness; as much as to say, "Why should I take so much thought for this wretched and perishable body—this paltry self—when by resisting temptations I may expect that this very body will by my Saviour be changed into a body similar to his glorious body, and be made capable of pleasures, such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive?"—μετασχηματίζει. A metaphor taken from putting off one dress and taking another instead. See more in my Lex., and espec. Jos. Antt. vii. 10, 5. viii. 11, 1. I have not found the phrase μετασχημ. τὸ σῶμα any where else except in Diod. Sic. t. i. 201. Here the figurative sense alludes to the putting off of corruption and the putting on of incorruption, as one dress is changed for another. The words εἰς τὸ γαστρίσθαι, not found in many ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have been cancelled by Griesb., Lachm., and Tisch., and with some reason, since internal evidence is against them.—σύμμορφον, observes Steiger, 'indicates the result of the μετασχημ., and the term means 'of the same form and nature (see Rom. viii. 29) with Christ's' (a change necessary previous to our admission, 'for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality,' 1 Cor. xv. 25); namely, 'his glorified nature.' Moreover, 'as Christ,' observes Steiger, 'has taken the μορφή of the human nature in all the misery of that μορφή, so shall we obtain the μορφή of the nature of Christ in all its glory;' for, as Bengel observes, 'non mors salutem dabit sed gloriam.'—κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—πάντα. We have here 'an argument à majori ad minus, meant to silence all unbelief,—the power he hath to subdue

F f

a 1 Cor. 15.
26, 27.
b Cor. 1. 14.
ch. 2. 10.
1 Thes. 2.
10, 20.
c Exod. 22.
22, 23.
Dan. 12. 1.
Luke 10. 20.
ch. 1. 27.
Rev. 2. 6.
& 14. 5.
& 20. 12.
& 21. 27.
e Rom. 12.
12.
f Cor. 13. 11.
1 Thes. 5.
16.
g ch. 2. 1.
d Heb. 10. 26.

πάντα. IV. 1<sup>a</sup> Ὡστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ καὶ ἐπιπόθητοι, χαρὰ καὶ στέφανός μου, οὕτω στήκετε ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀγαπητοί. 2 Εὐδοκίαν παρακαλῶ, καὶ Συντύχην παρακαλῶ, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν Κυρίῳ. 3<sup>b</sup> *Ναὶ ἐρωτῶ καὶ σέ, σύζυγε γνήσιε, συλλαμβάνου αὐταῖς, αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθησάν μοι, μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν συνεργῶν μου, ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς.

4<sup>c</sup> Χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ πάντοτε· πάλιν ἐρῶ, χαίρετε. 5<sup>d</sup> Τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν γνωσθήτω πᾶσι ἀνθρώποις· ὁ Κύριος ἐγγίς.

all things having subdued even death' (Theophylact); see 1 Cor. xv. John xi. 25.

IV. Ver. 1 of this chap. ought to have formed ver. 22 of ch. iii., since it is the inference to the foregoing, as intimated by the οὕτω, which signifies 'so then, such being the case,' viz. 'as I have already said,' i. e. supra, ch. i. 27, where, as at ch. iii. 20, and iv. 1, is intimated the πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανῷ, and the standing fast in the faith of the Gospel, here denoted by the expression στήκ. ἐν Κυρίῳ, which occurs also at 1 Thes. iii. 8. 2 Thes. ii. 15.—Ἐπιπόθ. is not so much synonymous with ἀγαπ., as it is a stronger term,—which may be rendered exoptati; also denoting Paul's great desire to see them again; see i. 27—30.—χαρὰ καὶ στίφανος, i. e. a cause of rejoicing and of glorying to me. On the expression στ. ἐν Κυρίῳ, see 1 Cor. xv. 1. xvi. 13. Gal. v. 1.

2. τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν Κυρίῳ] This expression may denote both unanimity in doctrine, and concord in views and objects. The persons in question were probably deaconesses of the Church.

3. ναὶ ἐρωτῶ] So I have edited for καὶ ἐρ., with all the Critical Editors from Weta. to Tisch.; not only because external authority is very strong (to which I add all the Lamb. and nearly all the Mus. copies), but because internal evidence is quite in its favour, since it is more agreeable to the context, and is confirmed by a similar use in Philem. 20, and Rev. xxii. 21. The καὶ arose, I suspect, from a blunder of the scribes.—σύζυγι. On the sense of this word Commentators are not agreed. It seems rightly taken by Heinrichs to denote a closer connexion than συναργός, supra ii. 25. Otherwise it might be supposed to designate Epaphroditus. It would, therefore, seem to mean colleague, and to be meant for the Bishop, or principal presbyter, of Philippi, perhaps Timothy (vide supra i. 1), who was, in some sense, Paul's colleague; comp. Arist. Plut. 945, τὰν δὲ σύζυγον λάβω τινα. And this is confirmed by the use of γνησίως, supra ii. 20. See Dr. Peile.—αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθησάν μοι, 'such as strove with, co-operated with me, in the cause of the Gospel,' viz. by furthering in some way or other its propagation or acceptance. See note, supra, ch. i. 27.—Κλήμεντος. This is said by the ancients to have been Clomens Romanus, afterwards Bp. of Rome, who wrote the Epistles to the Corinthians, one of the Apostolical Fathers; but the tradition has been generally rejected by the moderns, though on no sure grounds. In fact, we have the positive assurance of Irenæus, ap. Euseb. H.

E. v. 6, 2, to the following effect: τρίτη τέτη ἀπὸ ἀποστόλων τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν κληροῦται Κλήμη, ὁ καὶ ἱερακὸς τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, καὶ ἰμπεριβληκὸς αὐτοῖς where Conyb., who refers to the passage, conjectures συμβιβηκός. The true reading seems to be συμβιβηκός, 'who had met with them,' i. e. in ecclesiastical communication and conference.—ἐν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς. This expression may be thought employed in accommodation to the image by which the future life is represented a little before (iii. 20) as a πολίτευμα, which supposes a list of the citizens' names, from which the names of the unworthy are erased; see Rev. iii. 5, and the note there. Thus the names of the virtuous are often represented as registered in heaven; see Luke x. 20, and espec. Rev. xiii. 8. Comp. with Mal. iii. 16.

4—9. The Apostle now again addresses the Church at large. Again, he strikes the key-note of the Epistle, calling upon them all to rejoice; and with this the special exhortations, which follow on till v. 7, stand in close connexion. These exhortations are summarily contained in a concluding one at v. 9. (Wiesing.)

5. τὸ ἐπιεικὲς] For ἡ ἐπιεικεία, meaning that 'moderation,' lit. 'reasonableness of mind' (answering to the μετριοπάθεια of philosophy) which holds such a complete control over the passions,—comprehending the due restraints of desire or anger, fear or sorrow,—as will produce forbearance, mildness, and kindness, as to others, and, as to ourselves, an equanimity or holy indifference to the things of this world,—from the consideration that the time is short, and the world (no continuing city), in its ever-shifting scene, fast passing away (1 Cor. vii. 31); but that the Lord is at hand for judgment, that 'he cometh quickly to judge every man according to his work.' (Rev. xx. 12).—ὁ Κύριος ἐγγίς. Most recent Expositors take the meaning to be, 'The Lord (i. e. God) is at hand [for help; and therefore there is no cause for over-anxiety];' comp. Ps. xxxiv. 18. This is, however, not a little harsh. Far better is it, with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, to understand the words as spoken of Christ. The words must not be connected with what follows, but, as is most natural, with what precedes; and the internal connexion will readily be apparent, if we consider the true force of τὸ ἐπιεικὲς, as above explained; and whether 'the coming of the Lord' be taken of the coming of the day of judgment, or, what is tantamount, of the hour of death to any one, matters not, and the latter is implied in the former.

6 ° Μὴδὲν μεριμνᾶτε, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ τῇ προσευχῇ καὶ τῇ δέήσει μετὰ εὐχαριστίας τὰ αἰτήματα ὑμῶν γνωρίζεσθω πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. p. Ps. 32.
Matt. 6. 25.
1 Pet. 5. 7.

7 ° καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡ ὑπερέχουσα πάντα νοῦν, φρουρήσει τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. 1 John 14. 27.
3 Cor. 13. 11.
Gal. 5. 22.
Col. 3. 15.
Rom. 1. 7.
3 Rom. 12.
17. & 13. 13.
1 Cor. 13.
4-7.
1 Thess. 4.
3. 4. 5.
3. 5. 22.
h Rom. 15.
32.
3 Cor. 13. 11.
13 Cor. 11. 9.
Gal. 5. 6.

8 ° Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί! ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνὰ, ὅσα δίκαια, ὅσα ἀγνὰ, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, ὅσα εὐφημα, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε. <sup>9</sup> ἡ δὲ καὶ ἐμάθετε καὶ παρελάβετε, καὶ ἡκούσατε καὶ εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί, ταῦτα πράσσετε· καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν.

10 ° Ἐχάρην δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ μεγάλως, ὅτι ἤδη ποτὲ ἀνεθάλετε

6. μηδὲν μεριμνᾶτε] 'be not anxiously solicitous about any thing.' These words are connected with the foregoing τὸ ἐπιαιεῖς—ἀνθρώποις, and are meant to carry forward the injunction from μετριοπάθεια to its result in ἀμεριμνία; and the next words suggest, that when the mind has been thrown off its balance, and anxious solicitude, the opposite to quiet equanimity, creeps in,—the best cure is prayer, with thanksgiving, viz. for what God shall have been pleased to grant, implying acquiescence as to what he may see fit to withhold, and both from an entire acquiescence in all that has happened (ἐν παντί, scil. πράγματι), together with a putting up of requests for future needs, made known to God, and not confined to secret wishes, but finding expression in uttered prayer. The result of this course is stated in the words which follow, ver. 7, of which the most probable sense is: 'And [thus] the peace of God (meaning that which the God of peace bestows by the Gospel, and sustains by his Spirit of grace, obtained through Christ Jesus) will fortify, &c.

7. This interpr. of ἡ εἰρ. το. Θεοῦ, is confirmed by Hyper. in a masterly note. Eat., indeed, thinks the peace of God here meant is, that tranquillity of mind, (as opposed to anxious fears and troubles,) arising from reconciliation with God (Rom. v. 1), and the observance of his commands. But this falls short of the full sense intended;—which seems to have been in Hyper.'s mind, though not expressed in words. He rightly conjoins peace of conscience with peace of mind. But that can arise only from reconciliation with God. Now if peace of conscience, founded on that reconciliation, be conjoined with the sense above laid down, it will present the whole meaning intended.—Of the next words, φρουρ.—ὑμῶν the true sense is well rendered 'fortify (lit. 'garrison') your hearts and minds against all such ταραχαί as break in on that peace.'—The last words, ἐν Χρ. 'In,' import that this all-surpassing blessedness is centred alone in the grace of God, through Christ, 'quæ ipse (says Calv.) non cognoscitur, nisi per Verbum, et interiorem arrham Spiritus.' And truly, the experience of that peace which the God of peace imparts by the Gospel is the mind's best safeguard against distrustful anxiety. We thus feel fulfilled in us the words of the Prophet (Isa. xxvi. 3), 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee.' It is worthy of observation, that two terms, καρδίας and νοήματα, are here made use of, though one might have seemed sufficient; but, as Calv. and Hyper. well point out, the Apostle, by taking both terms, meant to comprehend the whole of the immaterial part of man, consisting both of the intellectual faculties and the affections or passions; both of which require to be fortified, the former against the deceits of carnal reasonings, the latter against the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

8. The foregoing exhortations to faith and holiness are here, in conclusion, briefly summed up in one comprehensive practical injunction to the uniform observance of all the moral duties enjoined in the Gospel; thus intimating that Christian faithfulness cannot rest on the discharge of any one virtue, but on the uniform observance of the whole of what is enjoined in the Gospel, and hath been urged upon them by himself.—ὅσα ἴστιν ἀληθῆ, &c. 'Αληθῆ signifies, 'truly virtuous,' ἐνάρστα, as Theodor. explains. Σεμνὰ, 'honourable, or respectable.' Προσφιλῆ, 'amiable,' meaning that quality which conciliates love and respect. By this the Apostle seems to advert to that in which religious persons are too often deficient, who, by an austere and ascetic demeanour, not a little prejudice the cause of religion.—εἴ τις ἀρετῇ, &c., meaning, 'Whatever else there be of what is virtuous and praiseworthy, think of and study to practise them.' So St Peter, 2 Epist. i. 5, enjoins believers to add to their faith virtue,—αὐθροῦν, as here, a brief summary of the chief virtues which adorn the Christian character. Here the terms employed are only general ones. By the things (as the neut. is necessarily rendered) understand the ἥθη, i.e. moral properties, or habits of actions. Of λογίζεσθε ταῦτα the sense is, 'so think on, or study them, as to practise them.' Then, to prevent mistake, with ταῦτα λογ. here, is in ver. 9 interchanged ταῦτα πράσσετε, 'practise, i.e. habitually perform, these things.'

9. Here the Apostle refers them to his own doctrine, precepts, and example; which, according as they follow, so will they attain the peace of God. The terms ἐμάθετε and παρελάβετε are not the same in sense, but are well distinguished by Grot., the latter as being the more formal and special term, denoting 'knowledge gained by actual instruction.' Of ἡκούσατε καὶ εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί the full sense is, 'have heard to be in me and see to be in me'; i.e. 'practised by me.'—πράσσετε should be rendered, not do, as if ποιεῖτε had been written, but practise; the term being used of a course of action, of what is done continually and habitually.

τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ ἐφρονεῖτε, ἡκαιρεῖσθε δέ.
 11 J Tim. 6. 11 J Οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστερησιν λέγω· ἐγὼ γὰρ ἔμαθον, ἐν οἷς εἰμὶ,
 11. αὐτάρκης εἶναι. 12 K Οἶδα [δὲ] ταπεινοῦσθαι, οἶδα καὶ περισ-
 12 Cor. 11. 27. σεύειν ἐν παντὶ καὶ ἐν πᾶσι μεμύημαι καὶ χορτάζεσθαι καὶ
 1 John 15. 5. 2 Cor. 12. 9. πεινᾶν, καὶ περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι 13 I πάντα ἰσχύω ἐν

10. ἀναθάλλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν] lit. 'ye are re-blossomed as to your care for me;' a peculiar, and almost poetic permutation for 'your care for me hath revived,' 'grown green again;' lit. 're-flourished' or 're-blossomed,' as a tree, seemingly dead, again shoots forth in leaves and sprouts; or as an annual plant is reproduced in the spring. There may seem some harshness in thus applying to a person what is properly applicable only to a thing and a state. But it is not greater than what is found in a universally admired passage of Shakspeare's Henry VIII.: 'This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms, and bears his blushing honours thick upon him.' The next words, ἐφ' ᾧ—ἡκαιρεῖσθε are meant to suggest the excuse that might be alleged for this long neglect; and their sense is best represented by the Vulg. and Syr. Versions, 'sicut etiam curam habebatis,' 'inasmuch as although ye had even a care for me,' &c. In ἡκαιρεῖσθε, there is, as Theophyl. points out, a term of common life, for οὐκ ἡκαιρεῖσθε. The Apostle means to suggest the best excuse for them, by presuming that they had not before had an opportunity of sending, or were destitute of the means.—ἡκαιρ. may be understood of either. See note on Acts xxviii. 14—16.

11. οὐχ ὅτι εἶναι] meaning, 'I do not say this with reference to any necessity to which I have been reduced; for I have learnt, in whatever circumstances I am, therein to acquiesce, and accommodate myself thereto.'—αὐτάρκης is used both of a thing sufficient for the purpose intended, and of a person who feels sufficiency, and is therefore content; see my Lex. These deeply affecting words show that the Apostle had been suffering under a decrease of his usual means of subsistence; yet that he had been endeavouring to reduce his desires to a level with his means, so as to be content. The true character of the words has been well seen by Hyper. and Calv., who notice that they are said per correctionem, to preclude any supposition that what he had said was meant to reproach them with his penury, or as if he himself had not sufficient fortitude to bear it. This is ably opened by Bp. Sanderson, in two Sermons on this text. He regards this and the following verses, up to ver. 19, as a prolepsis to prevent any unjust opinion of the Apostle, as if he sought theirs more than them; q. d. 'True it is when I received from Epaphroditus the things that were sent from you, it was no small rejoicing to my heart, to see your care of me (after some years' intermission) to flourish again; and I cannot but warmly commend your charity, for you have done well to communicate with my afflictions. Yea, I should derogate from the grace of God, which worketh in you, if I should not both acknowledge your free benevolence towards me, and approve it as an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable to God; which I speak not with a greedy mind, to make a gain of you, nor for a cloak of covetousness

(God is my witness), nor any other way so much in reference to my own private interest as for the glory of God and the comfort of your consciences; inasmuch as this fruit of your faith, thus working by love, redounds to the honour of the Gospel in the mean time, and shall in the end abound to your account in the day of the Lord Jesus. Otherwise, as to myself particularly, although my wants were supplied, and my bowels refreshed through your liberality (which, in the condition I was in, was some comfort to me), yet if that had been all I had looked after, the want of the things you sent me could not have much afflicted me. The Lord whom I serve is God, All-sufficient; and his grace had been sufficient for me, though your supplies had never come. He that enables me [however unable of myself to do any thing, yet] to do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me, hath framed my heart by his Holy Spirit, and trained me heretofore in the school of affliction, to rest contented with his allotment, whatsoever it be, and to have a sufficiency in myself, though in never so great a deficiency of outward things [not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content].'

12. δὲ is, in several Versions and Fathers, not found, and has been cancelled, on strong authority (to which I add all the Lamb. and several Mus. copies), by most Editors; perhaps rightly. Internal evidence is certainly against it. Moreover, the Apocryphal here has great strength, and is much in the Apostle's manner.—ταπεινοῦσθαι. This term signifies, 'to be in lowly and necessitous circumstances,' as the antithetical one, 'to have a superfluity.' The sense is rendered plainer by the words following, καὶ χορτάζεσθαι καὶ πεινᾶν. In περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι we have a more significant expression than ταπ. καὶ περισσ., ὅτι. signifying, 'to be in utter want of the necessities of life.' In the expression μεμύημαι ('I am initiated'), there may be, as many Commentators suppose, an allusion to initiation into the Heathen mysteries; but that is very uncertain, and not very probable. Its literal sense is, 'I have been initiated, have learnt, fully know.' A very strong metaphor, denoting the possession of perfect knowledge as acquired from long study. So Plut. Moral. p. 795, τὰ μὲν πρῶτα μαθητῶν ἐν πολυπραγμοσύνῃ καὶ μυστήριον. The Apostle, however, seems to have had chiefly in view that use of the word by which it denotes the being taught Divine truths, viz. 'by the wisdom from above, through the Holy Spirit.' So Dionys. Arcop. de Celesti Hier. C. iv. No. 4. p. 49, τὸ θεῖον τῆς φιλοθεωρίας μυστήριον ἀγγελοῖς πρῶτον ἐμνήθησαν.

13. πάντα] i. e. all things connected with my Christian duties. He then shows the source of his ability, as springing from the aids afforded to him by Christ, through the Holy Spirit.—ἰσχύω, lit. 'in strengthening him.' See on 1 Tim. i. 12.

τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με [Χριστῷ]. <sup>14</sup> Πλὴν καλῶς ἐποιήσατε συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τῇ θλίψει. <sup>15</sup> Ὅϊδατε δὲ καὶ ὑμεῖς, Φίλιπποι, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ὅτε ἐξήλθον ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας, οὐδεμία μοι ἐκκλησία ἐκοινώνησεν εἰς λόγον δόσεως καὶ λήψεως, εἰ μὴ ὑμεῖς μόνοι. <sup>16</sup> ὅτι καὶ ἐν Θεσσαλονικῇ καὶ Ἀπαξ καὶ εἰς τὴν χρεῖαν μοι ἐπέμψατε. <sup>17</sup> Οὐχ ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ τὸ δόμα, ἀλλ' ἐπιζητῶ τὸν καρπὸν τὸν πλεονάζοντα εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν. <sup>18</sup> Ἀπέχω δὲ πάντα, καὶ περισσεύω πεπληρωμαι, δεξάμενος παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν, ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας, θυσίαν δεκτὴν, εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ. <sup>19</sup> Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς μου πληρώσει πᾶσαν χρεῖαν ὑμῶν, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ ἐν δόξῃ, ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>20</sup> Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ ἡμῶν ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων ἀμήν. <sup>21</sup> Ἀσπάσασθε πάντα ἄγιον ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ ἀδελφοί. <sup>22</sup> ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι, μάλιστα δὲ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας. <sup>23</sup> Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Φίλιππησους ἐγράφη ἀπὸ 'Ρώμης δι' Ἐπαφροδίτου.

14. πλὴν—θλίψει] This is added to preclude any idea of his depreciating the gift, or misconceiving the intentions of the donors. Though he had learnt to endure poverty without murmuring, he was not the less entitled to assistance. And they had done a good work in communicating aid to him in his distress; for that is the sense of the words συγκ. μ. τ. θ., which are for συγκ. μοι ἐν τῇ θλ. μου.

15. ἐν ἀρχῇ τ. εὐαγγ.] 'at the beginning of the Gospel's being preached among them.' In εἰς λόγον δός. καὶ λήψ. there is an allusion to the ratio acceptorum et datorum among the Romans, and that to intimate a regular reciprocation of giving and of receiving; q. d. 'If any other Church gave, it was something not worth noting down.'

16. ἀπαξ καὶ δις] In the passages cited by Expositors from Sept. (Neh. xiii. 20. 1 Mac. iii. 30) we have only ἀπαξ καὶ δις, without the first καὶ, though even in the latter passage the sense is, 'not once only, but twice,' where I would point thus: καὶ ὑλαβήθη μὴ οὐκ ἔχῃ, ὡς ἀπαξ καὶ δις, εἰς τὰς δαπάνας καὶ τὰ δόματα: suppl. διδόναι & ἰδίδου ἔμπροσθεν δαψιλεῖ χειρὶ.

17. ἀλλ' ἐπιζητῶ—ὑμῶν] q. d. 'I feel pleasure in the gift; not so much on my own account, as yours; considering the fruit that will redound from it, in the praise of men and the recompense of God.'

18. ἀπέχω δὲ πάντα] I am now of opinion that the force of ἀπέχω here is the same as at Matt. vi. 2 and 5, where I have fully treated on this peculiar idiom, and have shown that here it is rightly rendered by accepi, or acceptum teneo; of which I find another ex. in Aristid. l. ii. 435,—where we have φάσκων ἀπέχειν ('acceptisse') ἅπαντα παρ' αὐτῶν. Περλ. is added in order to strengthen the sense, and to show that he wants no more. On the expression ὁσμὴ εὐωδ., see at Eph. v. 2. 2 Cor. ii. 14; and on θυρ. δεκτ. see at Rom. xii. 1.

19. πληρώσει—ὑμῶν] Render: 'will abundantly supply all your need,' spiritual and temporal. Of the phrase χρεῖαν πληροῦν another example occurs in Thucyd. i. 70, ἢν δ' ἄρα πον καὶ πείρα σφαλῶσιν, ἀνταλπίσαντες ἄλλα, ἐπλήρωσαν τὴν χρεῖαν. By the riches here spoken of may be meant riches of grace and beneficence; for τ. πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, as is fully expressed at Eph. i. 7, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ: comp. Eph. ii. 4, πλοῦσις ὡν ἐν ἐλπί, and Rom. x. 12.—ἐν δόξῃ may be construed either with πληρώσει, and taken adverbially for ἐνδόξως, or with πλοῦτον, and taken adjectively for ἐνδοξον; but the latter is the more natural construction, and is confirmed by Eph. iii. 16.—ἐν Χριστῷ, 'per Christum,' Christ being considered as the medium 'through whom all blessings flow.'

ΠΑΤΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΚΟΛΟΣΣΑΕΙΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

a Rom. 1. 7.
Gal. 1. 2.
Eph. 1. 2.
1 Pet. 1. 2.

Ι. <sup>1</sup> ΠΑΤΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός, <sup>2</sup> τοῖς ἐν † Κολοσσαῖς ἀγίοις

COLOSSÆ was a large, populous, and wealthy city of Phrygia (whose site has been at length determined to be the present Khons), at which there was a flourishing Christian church; but by whom planted, we have no certain information. From some passages in the Epistle (as i. 21, 25. ii. 5, 6), and from the probability that it should have taken place at some period when Paul visited Phrygia, there would seem reason to think that it was founded by the Apostle; while, from other parts of the Epistle (as, for instance, ii. 1), the contrary would appear: and as there seems to be something like positive proof that he was not the founder,—while there are only arguments of probability that he was, we seem authorized to rather embrace the negative. Yet, though not literally the founder, he might, in a qualified sense, be termed such; since the Gospel dispensed to the Colossians (i. 21—25) came mediately, though not immediately from him. Who was the actual founder, the learned are not agreed. Some say Epaphras; others, Timothy. The latter supposition has more of probability in its favour. Be that as it may, it seems that the Church at Colossæ had been planted and watered, and brought to a flourishing state, perhaps by both those two active fellow-labourers with Paul in preaching the Gospel. With respect to the date of the Epistle, the internal evidence supplied by the Epistle itself shows that it must have been written at nearly the same time as that to the Ephesians, but, according to the general opinion, a little after it. At any rate, the two are, as Paley says, twain Epistles, being written nearly together; inasmuch that many expressions in the one were made use of in writing the other.' This, however, will not determine the question as to priority. Be that as it may, the present Epistle is evidently mainly directed against the tenets and practices of certain false teachers, who had crept in, and disseminated erroneous and superstitious notions respecting the worship of angels, self-mortification, and the observance of the Jewish Festivals, and indeed of the Mosaic ritual Law in general, as necessary to salvation. Who these persons were is not agreed. See the Introductions of Schott and Boehmer, and espec. of Dr. Davidson. The truth seems to be, that, though the notions of the Essenes were most in accordance with the errors here condemned, yet that the false teachers were not of one particular class, but were composed of ascetics of various classes, chiefly Judaizers, and for the most part such as had taken up the dogmas of the Essenes,—but also Platonizers, Gentile converts, who blended Platonic notions with the doctrines of the Gospel. Nor probably were there wanting some who had been professors of what is called the Oriental Philosophy (for asceticism has been ever prevalent in the East), and had, on becoming Christians, retained several of their superstitious and ascetical notions. Accordingly, one main purpose of the Apostle's writing was, to counteract the spreading evils of mystical fanaticism (in a highly imaginative people) on the one hand, and a false philosophy nearly allied to Gnosticism, on the other; which latter corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel, as the former did its pure morality. This purpose the Apostle strives to effect, by exposing the gross chimeras of the former, and by refuting the doctrinal errors of the latter; at the same time inculcating the pure doctrines of the Gospel, and urging the pure morality thereof, without which its doctrines would be a dead letter. Thus the scope of the Epistle is, 1. to lay down the grand purpose of the Gospel, and to show how far it surpasses the law of Moses as well in glory, as in wideness of comprehension; and especially to point out that all hope of man's redemption is founded on CHRIST, our Redeemer, in whom alone all fulness, perfection, and sufficiency are contained. 2. To caution the Colossians against the insinuations of the Judaizing or philosophizing teachers, as inconsistent with the main doctrines of the Gospel: after which follows an interesting description of believers acting uniformly under the influences of the Gospel, and an earnest exhortation to walk in their steps.

From a comparison of this Epistle with that

καὶ πιστοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν [καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ].

<sup>3</sup> <sup>b</sup> Εὐχαριστοῦμεν τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ πάντοτε, περὶ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, <sup>4</sup> <sup>c</sup> ἀκούσαντες τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας

<sup>b</sup> Eph. i. 15.
<sup>c</sup> Phil. i. 2.
<sup>d</sup> 1 Thess. i. 2.
<sup>e</sup> 2 Thess. i. 3.
<sup>f</sup> Eph. i. 15.
<sup>g</sup> Phil. i. 2.
<sup>h</sup> Phil. i. 2.

to the Ephesians, it will be obvious that the substance of the former is found in the latter. The two consequently reflect great light upon each other, espec. the former upon the latter, of which it is indeed often the best comment. As to the disputed subject of the communion between the two Epistles, and which had the priority, see the Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians.—As to the place and time at which this Epistle was written, there is no doubt that it was written at Rome during the Apostle's confinement there, and at nearly the same time with, probably a little before, the Ephesian Epistle, and both in the first half of A.D. 62.—As to the authenticity and genuineness of the Epistle, it is amply attested by quotations from Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Tertullian, and by various allusions in Justin Martyr, and Theophilus of Antioch. Its authenticity, however, has recently been denied not only by the infidel writers Baur and Schoeffer, but by others; who, however, have been ably refuted by Olsh. and Meyer, nay, by De Wette himself; and I agree with Dr. Davidson in 'thinking it strange that in replying to them so well, he was not led to question the soundness of his own rejection of the authenticity of the Ephesian Epistle; for the Critic who doubts of the one may as well carry his doubts into the other.' However, we need not the aid of one so utterly incapable of weighing the value of testimony, and so incompetent a judge as to where truth is to be found—'non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis.' I quite agree with him, that the stamp of authenticity is impressed on every paragraph; and that the fabrication of it would be a phenomenon perfectly inexplicable.—Before I conclude, a few words may be permitted on the style and composition of the Epistle. In this respect there is, I apprehend, an inferiority to the Ephesian Epistle. The present seems to have been written with some haste, on the spur of the occasion, and currentis calamo, to stop the further spread of the dangerous errors promulgated by the false teachers. Accordingly, there is far less of the finish of regular composition, though the plan and arrangement are all that could be desired.

I. 2. Κολοσσαῖς] A, B, K, and 40 cursives (I add all the Lamb. except 1186, and several Mus. copies), and early Editions, and several Versions and Fathers, read Κολασσ., which is preferred by most Critics, and adopted by Matthæi, Lachm., and Tisch.; while Griesb. retains o. There can, I think, be but little doubt that the t. rec. is correct, at least according to the orthography of the inhabitants themselves, as we find from the coins, of every age, which may be seen in Eckhel, Doctr. Num. Vet., vol. iii. p. 147, sq.; and as the o is found in all writers down to the time of Polymnus (in whom we first find the α), there is little doubt that, after the time of St. Paul, the spelling was altered, prob. from provincial pronunciation, and it seems likely that the alteration was introduced by those who lived distant from the place, and knew not its true spelling. After ἐν Χριστῷ 5 of the most ancient uncials, and 3 ancient cursives (I add Lamb. 1196), with the Syr., Copt., and Vulg. Versions, subjoin Ἰησοῦ, admitted by Lachm. (not Tisch.), and on far better grounds than many of his insertions. The words καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, absent from B, D, E, J, K, and several cursives (I add Lamb. 1185, 1195), together with several ancient Versions, including the Pesch. Syr., have been cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; perhaps rightly; for internal evidence is rather against them: the words being probably introduced from the parallel passages in the other Epistles (e.g. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. i. 2. Gal. i. 3. Eph. i. 2. Phil. i. 2. 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 2. 1 Tim. i. 3. 2 Tim. i. 2. Tit. i. 4. Philem. i. 3). Certainly we can thus easily account for their insertion, though by no means for their omission; unless, indeed, we suppose that the Apostle wrote ἐλθὼν ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, where the recurrence of the words ἡμῶν might, as in a thousand other instances, occasion the accidental omission of the scribes; and as this is not improbable, I have chosen to leave the words in the text but inclosed within single brackets.

3. The punctuation at πάντοτε—προσευχόμενοι is doubtful, most Editors placing a comma after Χριστοῦ, and thus connecting πάντοτε with προσευχόμενοι; while others place it after πάντοτε, thus connecting πάντοτε with εὐχαριστοῦμεν. Of these two methods, the former is supported by Rom. i. 10 and Phil. i. 3; but the latter by many other passages, as Eph. i. 16. 1 Thess. i. 2. ii. 13. 2 Thess. i. 3. ii. 13. Philem. 4, and those more parallel.

4. ἀκούσαντες τὴν πίστιν, &c.] 'since or because we have heard,' &c.; thus serving more particularly to denote the cause or subject of the action of thanksgiving just before mentioned. Theophyl. and Hyper. explain ἀκούσαντες by διότι ἠκούσαμεν. It were scarcely necessary to mention this, but that some eminent Critics wrongly place v. 4 in a parenthesis; thus uniting προσευχόμενοι with ἀδὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα.—Τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν, &c., 'your faithfulness,' or constancy in the faith (comp. v. 2), a sense of πίστις, as is shown by Locke and Pierce, required by the context.—εἰ πάντας τοὺς δούλους, i.e. to all faithful Christians, whether Jews or converted heathens. It is truly remarked by Boehm., that genuine faith is always faith working by love (Gal. v. 6. James i. 22), consequently it is extended to all who are created in the image of God (James iii. 9); though it is especially due τοῖς ἐκλεκτοῖς τῆς πίστεως, Gal. vi. 10.

41 Pet. 1. 4.
2 Tim. 4. 8.

6 Mark 4. 8.

8 16. 15.

John 15. 16.

Phil. 1. 11.

Eph. 4. 12.

Phil. 2. 16—32.

8 Rom. 12. 2.

1 Cor. 1. 8.

Eph. 1. 10.

8 & 5. 10, 17.

21.

8 & 4.

Heb. 10. 20.

8 & 12. 21.

τοὺς ἁγίους, <sup>5</sup> διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τὴν ἀποκειμένην ὑμῖν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· ἣν προηκούσατε ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, <sup>6</sup> τοῦ παρόντος εἰς ὑμᾶς, καθὼς καὶ ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ· καὶ ἔστι καρποφορούμενον καὶ αὐξανόμενον, καθὼς καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας ἠκούσατε, καὶ ἐπέγνωτε τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ· <sup>7</sup> καθὼς καὶ ἐμάθετε ἀπὸ Ἐπαφρᾶ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ συνδούλου ἡμῶν, ὃς ἔστι πιστὸς ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διάκονος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>8</sup> ὁ καὶ δηλώσας ἡμῖν τὴν ὑμῶν ἀγάπην ἐν πνεύματι. <sup>9</sup> Ὡς διὰ

5. διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα, &c.] Some doubt exists as to the construction of these words. By many modern Translators and Expositors they are connected with εὐχαριστοῦμαι—προσευχόμενοι at ver. 3; ver. 4 being regarded as parenthetical. This, however, is quite inadmissible: not, indeed, for the reason usually assigned, that no example is to be found of εὐχαριστεῖν followed by διὰ with an Accus., but because the method in question involves a considerable harshness of construction, and yields a sense somewhat jejune. Hence it is better to refer the words to the verses immediately preceding, espec. as the most simple and natural construction is always, ceteris paribus, to be preferred. Yet the reference is, I apprehend, not to ἀγάπην, &c. only, as some Expositors suppose, but to πιστὸν also; the latter springing out of the former,—love being ever the fruit of a true faith (see Gal. v. 6), and both together forming, as Gomar observes, the two members of the Christian religion. Now this hope (meaning, as at Tit. ii. 13, the thing hoped for,—the object of this hope), is by the διὰ represented as the impulsive cause of their faith and love; q. d. 'which faith and charity ye have exercised in consequence of,' &c.: for, as Dr. South well observes, 'Hope and fear are the great handles by which the will of man is to be taken hold of, when we would either draw it to duty, or draw it from sin.' In the expression ἀποκειμένην there is, as at 1 Pet. i. 4, τῇ ἐλπίδι (by way of expressing the certainty of the thing), an allusion to money or rewards laid up in a treasury, to be distributed to conquerors in the games; and which they are so certain of receiving, that each one's share may be said to be laid up ready for him. So Plutarch, cited by Heinrichs, τοῖς αὐ βιβλικόνισ ἀπόκειται γίγαι ἐν ἔδον. Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Of the next words, ἣν προηκούσατε—εὐαγγέλιον, the full sense is, 'which [hope] ye first heard of in the preaching to you of the true doctrine of the Gospel' (comp. Eph. i. 13). The words of v. 6 may be thus rendered: 'which has come to you (been brought unto you) as [it has to others] in all parts of the [civilized] world, and is [now] bringing forth the increase of fruit; as among others, [so] among you, from the day when ye first heard of it (so as to give ear to it), and had made known to you the grace of God in truth,' equiv. to the true gospel of grace. Such is the general sense. To advert to a few matters of philology. Παρόντος, Partic. Imperf., for δ παρίσται, meant for Pass., 'being brought.' In παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ there is no hypérbole, the expression being used to denote the whole of 'the civilized world;' thus almost making good the words of Ps. xix. 4.

6. ἔστι καρποφορ.] 'is bearing fruit' ('the fruits of righteousness,' Phil. i. 11, that of reforming men here, in order to their salvation hereafter) as elsewhere, so also among you.—τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, i. e. 'the true Gospel of grace.' I have followed the recent Editors, Griesbach, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., in introducing after κόσμῳ the words καὶ αὐξανόμενον, which are found in very many MSS. (to which I add 1 Lamb. and 2 Mus. copies), many Versions, together with the Pesch. Syr., the Italic, and several Fathers, though it is not quite certain that they are genuine. They may have been (West. and Matth. think they were) introduced from the parallel passage at ver. 10; but it is more probable they were accidentally omitted by the scribes on account of the similarity in ending between καρποφ. and αὐξάνω.

7. καθὼς καὶ ἐμάθετε, &c.] meaning, 'which extensive success of the Gospel ye have [doubtless] learnt from,' &c. The καὶ after καθὼς, not found in several ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but injudiciously; since for its insertion we cannot account, but for its omission we may very easily,—namely, from its seeming to be useless, and the sentence to be overloaded with the copula; whence it was removed by the Alexandrian Critics. But in reality such a use of καὶ (found in the very best writers) imparts no little nerve and vigour to the sentence.—ἐπὶ ὑμῶν, 'for your [spiritual] good.' The expression (observes Hyperius) is very emphatic, as intimating the care and solicitude of Epaphras for their salvation; and meant also to suggest the correspondent high value they ought to set on him.

8. ἐν πνεύματι.] This may have the sense assigned by Chrys., Beza, Calv., Hyper., Casaub., Crell., and almost all recent Expositors, spiritual; not meaning, however (as most of them explain), merely heartfelt and sincere, but, as Hyper. and Calv. understand it, spiritual love; so called by way of distinguishing it from that which is only carnal, external, and unaccompanied with any motions of faith, or it may mean according to the explanation of some ancient Commentators, as Theophyl., and several eminent modern ones, as Grot., Whitby, Boehmer, and Steiger, 'wrought in you by the Spirit, whose fruit is love;' see Gal. v. 22—26. This latter interpretation has most to recommend it, because it will embrace the former, but not vice versa; and the most extensive is, ceteris paribus, preferable. The sense which has been assigned by Mr. Conyb., after Chrys., 'in the fellowship of the Spirit,' is entitled to attention, but can only come in 'quasi ex conjuncto,' and by implication, as a secondary sense.

τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας ἠκούσαμεν, οὐ παύομεθα ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, καὶ αἰτούμενοι ἵνα πληρωθῆτε τὴν ἐπί-γνωσιν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συνέσει πνευ-ματικῇ <sup>10</sup> ἡ περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν <sup>h Eph. 3. 16.</sup> ἀρέσκειαν ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ καρποφοροῦντες, καὶ αὐξανόμενοι <sup>11</sup> εἰς τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ <sup>12</sup> ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει δυναμούμενοι, κατὰ τὸ κράτος τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, εἰς πᾶσαν ὑπομονὴν <sup>h Eph. 4. 1.</sup>
 καὶ μακροθυμίαν μετὰ χαρᾶς <sup>13</sup> εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Πατρὶ τῷ <sup>1 Thes. 2. 1.</sup>
<sup>1 Thes. 3. 1.</sup>
<sup>John 15. 16.</sup>
<sup>2 Pet. 1. 2, 3.</sup>
<sup>3. 13.</sup> <sup>1 Acta 28. 18.</sup>

9—23. These verses form together one single rhetorical period, wherein the Apostle begins with expressing his earnest wishes and prayers relatively to the progress which they had yet to make, whether in sanctification or in the true knowledge of God, which he tacitly opposes to that knowledge (γνώσις) by which the false teachers promised the Colossians they would make astonishing advances. This latent polemic, as it may be recognized in the first part of this period, so espec. may it from ver. 12, where the Apostle reminds the Colossians that spiritual progress ought to be ever accompanied with gratitude to God; for it is God who hath fitted them to pass from death to life by converting them. Then, ascending to the source of salvation, he adds, 'and it is his Son who hath redeemed us,—his only and eternal Son, creator of the world.' At ver. 16 he enlarges on the exalted character of the Saviour as respects the creatures and the great work achieved by him for our salvation; concluding with an indirect, but most impressive, exhortation, to persevere in the primitive and universal doctrine. (Steiger.)

9. διὰ τοῦτο] 'wherefore [since I have heard so good an account of you].—ἀφ' ἧς ἡμέρας—προσευχόμενοι. Comp. Eph. i. 15, 16. The substance of his prayer is, that they may have such an increase of knowledge in Divine things as shall be accompanied with a conduct worthy of their high calling. By the expression ἡ ἐπίγνωσις τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ may simply be understood, a knowledge of what God would have men to believe, and what to do, in order to be saved; comp. Acta xvi. 30. xxii. 10: though in the phrase πληρωθῆτε τὴν ἐπίγ. there may be, as Steiger supposes, an allusion to the favourite terms of the Gnostics, πλήρωμα and πληροῦσθαι, γνώσις and ἐπίγνωσις. On the words ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συνέσει πνευματικῇ, comp. Eph. i. 8, 9, and notes. By πνευματικῇ we are to understand, not any wisdom, but spiritual wisdom, even that suggested by, or proceeding from, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, as 1 Cor. ii. 13. Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.

10. περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς, &c.] Supply ἵνα καὶ οὕτως, for eis τὴν—Eis πᾶσαν ἀρίσκειαν. Supply αὐτοῦ, for ὅσα πάντα ἀρίσκεισθαι αὐτῷ, 'so that ye may entirely please God.' The expression is generally used in a bad sense, but sometimes, in the later writers, in a good one. So Polyb. has ἡ τοῦ βασιλέως ἀρίσκεια, and Philo, p. 33, says of Adam, πάντα καὶ λέγειν καὶ πράττειν ἰσχυρότατον eis ἀρίσκ., &c. The words following suggest how this ἀρίσκεια may be accomplished; namely, 1st, by perseverance in rendering the fruit of good works; 2ndly, by patience and constancy in temptation and adversity.—ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ καρποφ. Render: 'being fruitful in [the performance of] every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God;' i. e. of his will, ver. 9; one particular being closely connected with the other; for a life and conduct worthy of Christ and his religion was the fruit to be expected from a right knowledge. We have here that allusion to a fruit-tree which is also found at ver. 6.—αὐξανόμενοι eis τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν. We have here a blending of two modes of expression, the sense being, 'increasing in and attaining unto;' compare 2 Pet. iii. 18. Had Griesb., Lachm., Scholz, and Tisch., seen this, they would not have admitted into the text, from a few ancient MSS., and some Versions and Fathers, the reading ἐν τῇ ἐπίγνωσιν, which is manifestly an alteration, to produce an easier sense. In such a case as this, the authority of Versions and Fathers is very slender. Besides, the expression is defended by a similar construction in Eph. iv. 15, αὐξήσωμεν eis αὐτὸν (i. e. Christ), where see the note. When the nature of the term αὐξάνειν is considered, such a construction will not seem strange. The Apostle has placed the two particulars together, the increase of knowledge and that of virtue, well knowing that they always tend to mutually produce each other. See the able note of Calv. Tisch. has, I find, in his 2nd Ed. restored the t. rec.

11. ἐν πάσῃ δυν. δυνατούμενοι] This adverts to something far beyond knowledge; namely, that mighty energy of the Spirit, whereby they might be enabled not only to know God's will, and act according to it, but to suffer in fulfilling it,—and that not only with patient endurance, but cheerfulness. That the strength in question is the strength of the Holy Spirit, is clear from the parallel passage of Eph. iii. 16, where see note.

12. εὐχαριστοῦντες, &c.] This is meant to show the grounds of that joy, and to intimate how it should find expression; namely, by thankfully acknowledging in prayer the mercy of God, who had enabled them to obtain the glorious inheritance laid up for all faithful Christians. However, I am inclined to think, with Mr. Conyb., that ἡμᾶς is used with reference to both the writer and the readers; and the particular case of the readers, as formerly heathens, is referred to at v. 21, καὶ ὑμᾶς. In the term ικαν. there is a conjoint notion of enabling and fitting, there being a certain pregnancy of sense in the verb, the full meaning being, 'hath fitted, made fit or meet, by imparting the grace of the Spirit.' Comp. the kindred passage at 2 Cor. iii. 6, ὅς ἰκανῶσιν ἡμᾶς διακ. κ. δ., where see note. Indeed, almost all the best Commentators, from Hyper. and Calv. downwards, prefer the above sense. Indeed, Hyper. is of opinion that ικαν. here is, in reality, a stronger term than ἐξ-

1 Acts 30. 15.
1 Thes. 2.
12.
1 Pet. 2. 9.
1 Acts 30. 15.
Eph. 1. 7.
m John 14. 9.
2 Cor. 4. 4.
Phil. 2. 6.
Heb. 1. 3.
Rev. 3. 14.

ἰκανῶσαντι ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῇ φωτὶ. <sup>13</sup> ὃς ἐβρύσατο ἡμᾶς ἐκ τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους, καὶ μετέστησεν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Υἱοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ <sup>14</sup> ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν [διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ], τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν <sup>15</sup> ὃς ἐστὶν εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου,

αἰζῶτο in Eph. i. 4, 5, and he well points out how this fitness or meetness is imparted and obtained. To the same effect Calv. remarks, 'Nascimur filii iræ, exsules regni Dei: sola est Dei adoptio quæ nos efficit idoneos.' Adoptio autem à gratuità electione pendet. Spiritus regenerationis est adoptionis sigillum: 'as much as to say, that 'this meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light is, as the result of the adoption (springing from gratuitous election), the seal of which is the Holy Spirit of regeneration, whereby those who were dead in sin are made new creatures,' 2 Cor. v. 17. Hence we learn, then, as says the learned Expositor, Boehmer, that, 'whereas by sin all men had become unmeet to be partakers, an all-merciful as Almighty God hath made them meet in this manner: that, without any merit of their own, he, for Christ's sake, hath remitted sin to them, hath rescued them from the dominion of sin, hath made them new creatures (καὶνὰς κτίσεις) by the Holy Spirit. Accordingly, such only as are the regenerate in the Spirit [justified and sanctified] will, or can, have an entrance to the kingdom of glory.' This is precisely the doctrine contained in the Articles of our Church, and which may be recognised in the Collect (13th Sunday after Trinity) wherein we pray: 'Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service, grant that we may so faithfully serve thee in this life, that we fail not finally to attain thy heavenly promises;' meaning the inheritance spoken of in the present passage.—By φωτὶ is meant the light of Divine knowledge, as respects both the present and the future state, in which the light possessed in the former state will be exchanged for a far clearer manifestation (as it were, 'face to face') of the glory of God. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

13. The Apostle now adverts to the mode whereby this blessed change had been effected, and that in words containing a noble amplification of the power of God and his goodness to man. 'Here (says Calvin) we have indicated what may be called the origin of our salvation, when God snatches us from the depth of that destruction in which we were sunk.'—τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους, meaning, the dominion of ignorance and idolatry, and the tyranny of sin and its author; a sense of ἐξ. occurring in Rom. xiii. 1. Heinrichs remarks on the aptness of the term ματίστησι, 'since it is not only used of transferring persons from one country to another, but of changing the form of government under which they live, as from despotism to freedom. So here those who had been under the tyranny of ignorance and Satan are represented as being transferred to the kingdom of knowledge, virtue, and Christ.' By the term ἐξουσία is here denoted, not, as most modern Commentators explain it, 'power,' or 'force used over;' it is better by others interpreted 'dominion,' i.e. 'domination.' But the antitheton βασιλείαν requires some yet more definite term, namely, regno, meaning 'absolute will,' nearly equiv. to τυραννίδος, by which Theophyl. and Œcumen. explain it; and Theodor. by δυναστείας, very nearly equiv. to διοποτείας. I would not explain σκότους, with many modern Expositors, of a thing, 'moral darkness,' or 'ignorance, by sin and its concomitant misery,' but (taking σκότους as abstract for concrete) of a person (as is its use at Luke xxii. 33. 2 Cor. vi. 14. Eph. v. 8); and, as is clear from the opposition in βασιλεία τοῦ Υἱοῦ τ. δ. αὐτοῦ, that person who is the author of all evil,—the devil, Satan. And this view of the sense derives confirmation from Eph. vi. 12, where ἐξουσία and κοσμοκρ. denote 'the evil angels,' or 'demons, who exercise rule in this world of sin,—a rule delegated to them by ὁ διάβολος, 'the ruler of darkness.'

14. 'Jam ordine persequitur, omnes salutis nostræ partes in Christo contineri; et ipsum solum, ut est principium omnium et finis, debere eminere, et conspicuum cerni supra omnes creaturas.' (Calv.)—ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, 'in whom we have our redemption (lit. "deliverance by ransom").' Jos. Ant. xii. 2. 8. This has been explained at Eph. i. 7. The words placed in brackets are in very many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found, and have been cancelled by almost every Editor; and, I think, rightly: for we may better suppose them to have been brought in from Eph. i. 7, than to have been omitted by accident.

15. The Apostle, now rising to a higher strain, proceeds to set forth the dignity of Christ as superior to that of every creature,—in order to explain how it has come to pass, that in him, and him alone, God has saved us; and that is, that he is the Son of God. (Steiger.)—ὃς ἐστὶν εἰκὼν—κτίσεις, meaning, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, 'who (i. e. Christ) is [in his human nature] the image, exact representation, of the invisible God; 'i. e., as Dr. Peile explains, 'who is the Image of,' 'the One Personal Manifestation (rather, 'Representation') under which it hath ever been given to man, to see that God who (as God) is invisible.' The expression has already occurred at 2 Cor. iv. 4, and is used by Philo, p. 823, where he says, that the Logos is εἰκὼν Θεοῦ. Comp. Heb. i. 3, χαρὰ τῆς ὑποστάσεως, i. e. 'a true copy, similitude, or delineation of the Father,' as fully representing his substance, essence, and attributes, as the impression answers to the seal. See the able note of Calv. On the interpretation of πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως the opinions of Expositors are very various. But the most natural and best founded view is that of almost all the ancient, and most eminent modern, Commentators, who take πρωτότοκος for πρῶτος (as in John i. 15, 30), and assign as the sense, 'begotten before every creature,' i. e. before any created being had existence; correspond-

John 1. 18.
 2. 24, 25.
 1 Cor. 12. 20
 —22.
 ch. 1. 9.
 Eph. 4. 10.
 Rev. 1. 8, 18.
 2 Eph. 1. 10.
 2 Cor. 8. 18.
 Eph. 2. 14.
 10.
 Rom. 8. 1, 10.
 2 Eph. 2. 1.
 2. 15.
 2 Eph. 2. 15.
 10.
 Luke 1. 78.
 Eph. 1. 4.
 2. 24, 27.
 Titus 2. 14.

τοῦ σώματος, τῆς ἐκκλησίας ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχή, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, ἵνα γένηται ἐν πᾶσιν αὐτὸς πρωτεύων. 19 Ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ εὐδόκησε πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατοικῆσαι, 20 καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι τὰ πάντα εἰς αὐτὸν, εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ σταυροῦ αὐτοῦ, δι' αὐτοῦ, εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, εἴτε τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. 21 καὶ ὑμᾶς ποτὲ ὄντας ἀπηλλοτριωμένους καὶ ἐχθροὺς τῇ διανοίᾳ ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς πονηροῖς νυνὶ δὲ ἀποκατήλλαξεν 22 ἐν τῷ σώματι τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, διὰ τοῦ θανάτου, παραστήσαι ὑμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώμους καὶ ἀνεγκλήτους

18. From the natural, the Apostle now passes to the moral or evangelical creation. 'Having (says Theophyl.) spoken of the Divine dignity of the Son, he now speaks of his condescending humanity.' So Theodor. remarks, ἀπὸ τῆς θεολογίας εἰς τὴν οἰκονομίαν μετίβη. —Καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστιν, &c. Render: 'He is, moreover, the head of the body,—namely, the Church.' (See Rom. xii. 5. Eph. i. 22, sq.) '[He it is] who is the beginning (or author and first cause) of all things.' So Rev. iii. 14, he is called ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ. Christ is then said to be πρωτός. ἐκ τ. νεκρῶν, as at 1 Cor. xv. 20 he is called ἀρχὴ τῶν κοικομένων, the first who was raised from the dead, never to die again. See note on 1 Cor. xv. 20, and Smith's Scrip. Test., vol. i. p. 592. iii. p. 500.—ἐν πᾶσι may be referred to both persons and things, and denote 'in all points of comparison.' See Eph. i. 10, 22, 23.

19. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ—κατοικ.] There is here thought to be an uncertainty as to the nominative to εὐδόκ., which some suppose to be Χριστός. But that is neither agreeable to the context, nor to the tenour of Scripture. Others imagine it to be τὸ πλήρωμα; q. d. 'in him all the fulness [of the Godhead] was pleased to dwell,' comparing ii. 9, ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικῶν πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς. Such a sense, however, of εὐδόκ. would be very harsh, and the sentiment unsuitable to what follows. It would seem that the true nominat. is ὁ Πατήρ, taken from vv. 12, 13; and indeed vv. 14—18 inclusive are in some measure parenthetical; which is indeed required by the construction in the next verse.—It is not so certain what is meant by τὸ πλήρωμα. It may denote either 'the fulness of the Godhead,' or, as Whitby explains, 'the fulness of Divine power and authority, namely, to create, preserve, and redeem the Church, which is his body.' So Bp. Sherlock explains it to mean, 'that Christ should be all in all, the head of the second as well as the first creation.' Comp. i. 23, and note. The latter sense is more agreeable to what follows; but it may include the plenitude of Divine perfections as a Saviour. Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test. vol. iii. p. 261) explains it, 'the rich abundance, the perfection of all those blessings which the context represents as bestowed by Christ on those who believe in him.' If this view be adopted, I would substitute the Absolute Perfection, with Dr. Peile, even that of Deity Himself. Comp. ii. 9. John i. 16. This is, as Dr. Peile remarks, an ex. of abstractum pro concreto.

20. δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι, &c.] Repeat εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός. On the expression ἀποκατ. τὰ πάντα, see note at Eph. i. 10.—εἰρηνοποιήσας is a modification of the sense of ἀποκαταλλάξαι, denoting the bringing about mutual peace. By the αὐτὸν some understand God; others, more properly, Christ. In διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ σταυροῦ we have a very significant term, meaning, 'by his bloody death on the cross.' See Eph. ii. 14.—εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τ. γῆς—ἐν τοῖς οὐρ. must be construed with τὰ πάντα, meaning all intelligent creatures, whether on earth or in heaven, both men and angels. We are not, however, by εἰρηνοῦν. to understand any reconciliation of the angels to God, but only the restoration of that amity between angels and men, which had been interrupted by the fall of man, and which could only be restored by the reconciliation of man to his offended Maker; so that both angels and men might, in virtue of that peace (purchased by the sacrifice of Christ on the cross), worship God, as forming one society under one Head. See Eph. i. 10. Heb. xii. 22.

21. The Apostle now applies what has been said to the state of the Colossians, as formerly Gentiles, and now the favoured people of God.—ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι, i. e. 'aliens from God,' and consequently alienated, or separated from, deprived of the Divine promises and benefits. See Eph. ii. 12. iv. 18, and note. In ἐχθροὺς τῇ διανοίᾳ we have a stronger expression; q. d. 'nay, enemies,' &c.—τῇ διανοίᾳ, 'at your hearts and minds'; viz. considered as the seat and source of the evil actions, just after spoken of.

22. ἐν τῷ σώματι—θανάτου.] An energetic mode of expression to signify, 'by his fleshly or incarnate body given up to death:' so said as opposed to his mystical body. See the able note of Calv. Of the terms ἁγίους, ἀμώμους, and ἀνεγκλήτους, the 1st has reference to what takes place between God and man; the 2nd and 3rd, to what passes between man and man: and there is, as Theophyl. and Hyper. observe, an incrementum, or auxilium,—an advance from weaker to stronger terms; q. d. 'not only holy, but also unblamable and unreprouvable (ἀμώμους, for ἀμύπτους), not only by the world, but even in the sight of God; their sanctification being rendered as complete as their justification had been. Comp. Eph. i. 4, and v. 27. The force of the expression παραστήσαι will best appear from a comparison of parallel expressions at v. 28. 2 Cor. iv. 14. xi. 2. Eph. v. 27, and espec. Jude 24, τῷ δὲ θανάτῳ φυλάττει ὑμᾶς ἀπαισέτοντες, καὶ στήσαι κατωτέρων τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἀμώμους, which passage seems to have been written with a view to this of St. Paul and κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ· <sup>23</sup> ἔγχε ἐπιμένετε τῇ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι + John 9. 10.

καὶ ἑδραῖοι, καὶ μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ εὐαγγε-λίου οὐ ἠκούσατε, τοῦ κηρυχθέντος ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει τῇ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανόν· οὐ ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ Παῦλος διάκονος. <sup>24</sup> Ὑν χαίρω ἐν τοῖς παθήμασί μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, καὶ ἀνταναπληρῶ τὰ ὑστερή-ματα τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου ὑπὲρ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ὃ ἐστίν ἡ ἐκκλησία· <sup>25</sup> ἥς ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ διά-κονος κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, <sup>26</sup> τὸ μυστήριον τὸ ἀποκεκρυμμένον ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν γενεῶν, νυνὶ δὲ ἐφανερώθη τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ· <sup>27</sup> οἷς ἠθέλησεν ὁ Θεὸς γνωρίσαι, τίς ὁ πλου-τος τῆς δόξης τοῦ μυστηρίου τούτου ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, ὃς ἐστὶ
+ John 9. 10.
+ Acts 20. 32.
Acts 11. 23.
+ Acts 22.
Rom. 2. 7.
Gal. 4. 11.
+ Acts 13.
+ Acts 17.
Eph. 3. 11.
Acts 5. 41.
+ Acts 13.
+ Acts 14.
Phil. 3. 10.
+ Tim. 1. 5.
+ Eph. 3. 2.
+ Matt. 12.
+ Rom. 16. 35.
Eph. 3. 9.
+ Tim. 1. 10.
Titus 1. 3.
+ 1 Pet. 1. 20.
+ Rom. 9. 23.
+ 1 Cor. 2. 14.
Eph. 1. 7.
+ Acts 1. 1.

the passage at Eph. i. 4. The nature of the metaphor has been pointed out in the note on Eph. v. 27.

23. Here we have an exhortation to perseverance in faith and hope, from the consideration that without it all grace hitherto conferred will be fruitless. (Calv.)—εἰς, &c. An elliptical mode of expression, differing from ἐν, and which is thus to be supplied: 'And so it will be with you, if at least,' or 'seeing that,' &c. On the next words, ἐπιμένετε τῇ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι, see note at Eph. iii. 18 and 1 Cor. vii. 37. The scope of the portion from this verse to ii. 7 is, as Hyper. says, confirmation. It is well observed by Calvin, 'Graphice depingit fidei certitudinem, quum in ea jubet Colossenses fundatos esse ac stabiles. Neque enim similis est fides opinatio, quæ variis motibus quatitur; sed habet firmam constantiam, quæ omnibus inferorum machinis resistat.'—μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τ. ἐλπίδος, lit. 'not stirred or moved away from the hope'; a metaphor which I formerly supposed taken from any one's shifting his quarters, changing his abode, as in Hdor. ix. 61. Now, however, it appears to me that the metaphor is rather one taken from a statue which is stirred from its basis, and removed from its standing; a view confirmed by the opposite term, ἑδραῖοι infra, also by 1 Cor. xv. 58, ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, ἀμετακίνητοι. Comp. Jos. Ant. v. 3, 2, μετακινήθητε γὰρ ἅπαρ [ἀπὸ] τοῦ κόσμου τῆς πολιτείας ἐπαφρόντο πρὸς τὸ καθ' ἑαυτὸν.

24. Ὑν χαίρω—ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου The full sense is, 'Now I rejoice at my sufferings [undergone] for you [Gentiles]; and [I consider that] I [thereby] fill up in my flesh what remains of the afflictions to be endured by me for Christ's sake.' His sufferings and his rejoicings therein seem mentioned to show that his profession is founded on solid self-conviction. Comp. v. 11. The ἀντι in ἀνταναπληρῶ is not, as it is usually regarded, pleonastic, but may have the sense assigned by Abp. Newc. in the following paraphrase: 'I, who formerly persecuted the Church, now, in my turn, fill up, by my bodily sufferings, what remains behind; or, in the words of Dr. Peile, 'what is yet wanting to complete the counterpart of the afflictions of Christ in my person,' who then subjoins the following able remark: 'That καὶ ἀνταναπληρῶ, &c. is no more than an enlargement upon the preceding clause, Ὑν χαίρω—ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου (in which light comp. v. 21, ch. ii. 13), and that the Apostle is to be understood as though he had written καὶ ἀνταναπληρῶν. This Calvin had seen, when he wrote 'copulam accipio vice causalis, reddidit enim rationem cur patiendo lætus sit; quia socius in ea re sit Christi: nihil autem hac societate beatus optari potest.' See the whole of the masterly note of Calv., where, Dr. Peile observes, 'he ably, on sound Theological grounds, defends the Apostle's assertion against every Papistical and anti-Scriptural perversion of it.'

25. The Apostle now drops the image by which the Church was just before compared to a body, and uses terms suited to a house; to which, indeed, the Church is compared at 1 Tim. iii. 15. Now over this house God presides as supreme οικονόμος (so it is called τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, see Eph. iii. 2, and note); committing, however, this οἰκονομία to others (as here to Paul) who are called διάκονοι.—Πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. The complete sense of the expression is to fully make known by giving its full operation, and, under grace, due effect to the word (or message of RECONCILEMENT) from God. Comp. Acts x. 36. Rom. xv. 19. See Calv. and Hyper.

26. τὸ μυστ. 'even the mystery;': namely, that of admitting the Gentiles into the Christian Church, which had been comparatively concealed from preceding ages and generations of men. See notes on Matt. xiii. 35 and Eph. iii. 3—6.

27. οἷς ἠθέλη, &c., meaning, 'to whom God has been pleased to make known what are the glorious riches and preciousness of this mystery among the Gentiles.' The mystery is the free grace of God, and the remission of sins alone through the blood of Christ.—ὅτι ἰσχυρὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, ἡ ἐλπίς τῆς δόξης. For ὅς, some of the most ancient MSS., together with the Vulg. and Italic Versions, have ὅς, which was edited by Lachm., and by Tisch. in his first ed., though in his second he has restored the ὅς, very properly; for external authority is quite in its favour, and internal evidence for it so strong (considering that the ὅς is plainly an alteration to suit the gender in μυστ.) as to overbalance almost any external evidence. In short, the ὅς is put, per attractionem, for ὅς; and the full sense intended is, 'which mystery consists in preaching Christ aa Acts 29.

31.
3 Cor. 11. 2.
Eph. 4. 27.

bb ch. 2. 1.
Eph. 1. 7, 30.

a Phil. 1. 30.
1 Thess. 2. 2.
b 3 Cor. 1. 4
—4—
ch. 2. 14.
§ 1. 9.
1 Thess. 4. 3.
§ 1. 14.
3 Thess. 2.
14, 17.

Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, ἡ ἐλπίς τῆς δόξης· <sup>28</sup> αα ὃν ἡμεῖς καταγγέλλομεν, νουθετοῦντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον, καὶ διδάσκοντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, ἵνα παραστήσωμεν πάντα ἄνθρωπον τέλειον ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ <sup>29</sup> bb εἰς δὲ καὶ κοπιῶ ἀγωνιζόμενος κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐνεργουμένην ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν δυνάμει.

II. 1<sup>a</sup> Θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς εἶδέναι ἡλίκον ἀγῶνα ἔχω περὶ ὑμῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ, καὶ ὅσοι οὐχ ἑωράκασι τὸ πρόσωπόν μου ἐν σαρκί· <sup>2</sup> b ἵνα παρακληθῶσιν αἱ καρδίαι αὐτῶν, † συμβιβασθέντων ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καὶ εἰς πάντα πλοῦτον τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς

among you as the Author of the hope of eternal glory. To turn from words to things, Hooker (as cited by Dr. Peile on this passage) well remarks, 'that God is Christ is, to speak generally, the medicine that doth cure the world; and Christ in us is the receipt of the same medicine, whereby we are every one particularly [individually] cured; inasmuch as Christ's incarnation and passion can be available to no man's good who is not made partaker of Christ, neither can we participate him without his presence.'

28. ὃν ἡμεῖς καταγγέλλομεν, &c.] The full sense is, 'which Gospel we preach, admonishing every man [of whatever nation] of its claims [to his attention], and teaching every man [who attends to the admonition] the duties it enjoins:' probably thereby intimating the manner of the thing,—namely, by first preaching the fundamental heads of Christian doctrine, and then building thereon the knowledge of Christian duties. By σοφία must, of course, be understood spiritual wisdom, that which 'maketh' men 'wise unto salvation' (see Pa. xc. 12), and which is drawn from him who is emphatically Wisdom, and 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom.' Hyper. here well observes that there is in the repetition of πάντα ἄνθρωπον and πάσῃ σοφίᾳ no little emphasis. By σοφία is to be understood the knowledge of God as he is in Christ (see supra, ver. 25). By πάσῃ it is intimated that the wisdom in question is complete, and wanting in nothing to make a man τέλειον ἐν Χριστῷ, possessed of a perfect knowledge of Christ and his Gospel. On the expression παραστ. see note at 2 Cor. iv. 14 and Eph. v. 27.

29. εἰς δὲ ἵνα πρᾶγμα. Render: 'unto which purpose also I strenuously labour, according to the energy which operates in me powerfully.' See Phil. iv. 13, and compare 1 Cor. xv. 10. In κοπιῶ we have a strong expression, illustrated by what is said at 2 Cor. xi. 28, that he has the care of all the [Gentile] churches.—ἀγωνιζόμενος is an agonistic and highly energetic term, expressive of the extreme earnestness with which the Apostle is exerting himself to counteract the efforts of the false teachers.

II. Ceasing to speak of himself, the Apostle now adverts to the Colossians, admonishing them to abide constantly by the pure Christian instructions which they had received from Epaphras, and not to suffer themselves to be led away by the devices of false teachers: an admonition, on account of the many errors of doctrine with which they were carried to and fro, highly necessary. (Heinr.) It is well observed by Steiger, that in the first five verses of this Chapter St. Paul appeals to the sympathy of the Colossians. 'He testifies (says Calv.) his love to them, that he may have more credence and authority with them; for we willingly believe those who are solicitous for our salvation.' The labours he underwent for their sake are, by amplification, called contests.

1. θέλω γάρ, &c.] This has reference to ἀγωνιζόμενος just before; q. d. 'I say, labour earnestly; for, &c.—ἡλίκον ἀγῶνα ἔχω περὶ ὑμῶν, 'how great an anxiety I have on behalf of you;' lit. 'how great a conflict of anxiety I sustain.' This was natural, on account of the dangers they were in from the arts of wily seducers, both of the Judaizing and Paganizing Christians, who had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel. In ἵνα τὸ πρόσωπόν μου ἐν σ. there is a Hebraism, signif. 'to have personal knowledge of.' It is generally supposed that the words καὶ δεοὶ οὐχ ἴσω, show that Paul had not been to Colosse and Laodicea. But thus we must supply ἄλλοι, which is harsh; and yet it is highly improbable that he should have gone throughout Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6. xviii. 23) without visiting two of its most considerable cities.

2. ἵνα παρακληθῶσιν αἱ καρδίαι α. ] 'that their hearts may be comforted and strengthened.' Here there seems an allusion to the deprivation of the sustaining comforts of the Gospel, arising from the doubts and fears infused by false teachers; whence it was necessary to knit the discordant parties together (συμβιβάζειν), and thus close up the schism. On the expression συμβιβ. see note at Eph. iv. 16, where it is intimated that these divisions are best to be closed up by that which he there speaks of as the great cure of schism, and that for want of which schisms arise,—namely, CHARITY. By the εἰς before ἀγάπῃ is denoted the manner, and by the εἰς, just after, the scope and end to which they are to be united, which is the 'being imbued with knowledge far more elevated than these teachers possessed, or could communicate.' For the t. rec. συμβιβασθέντων, I am half inclined to receive, with all the recent Editors, the reading συμβιβασθέντες, because it is supported, besides external authority, by internal evidence, as existing in the greater probability that the early Critics should seek to remove than that they should apply themselves to introduce the anacoluthon, though this is found infra, iii. 16. Eph. iii. 17. iv. 2. 2 Cor. ix. 10. In order to heighten the representation, the Apostle, instead of εἰς πάντα or εἰς πλήρη σύνεισις, says, εἰς τὴν πληροφορίαν τῆς συνείσεως, and, what is yet more, εἰς πάντα πλοῦτον τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνείσεως. Then, by apposition, he at εἰς ἐπίτ. τοῦ συνέσεως, εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ [καὶ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ], <sup>3</sup> ἐν ᾧ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροὶ τῆς σοφίας καὶ τῆς γνώσεως ἀπόκρυφοι. <sup>4</sup> Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, ἵνα μή τις ὑμᾶς παραλογίζηται ἐν πιθανολογίᾳ. <sup>5</sup> εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῇ σαρκὶ ἄπειμι, ἀλλὰ τῷ πνεύματι σὺν ὑμῖν εἰμι, χαίρων καὶ βλέπων ὑμῶν τὴν τάξιν, καὶ τὸ στερῶμα τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως ὑμῶν. <sup>6</sup> Ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον, ἐν αὐτῷ περιπατεῖτε, <sup>7</sup> ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ ἐποικοδομούμενοι ἐν αὐτῷ, καὶ βεβαιούμενοι ἐν τῇ πίστει, καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε, περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

<sup>8</sup> Βλέπετε μή τις ὑμᾶς ᾖται ὁ συλαγωγῶν διὰ τῆς φιλο-

μυστηρίου subjoins the cause why he ascribes πλούτ. and πληροφο. to Christian knowledge; namely, inasmuch as it leads men to understand the μυστήριον, or divine decree, for blessing men by Christ, hitherto hidden.

3. ἐν ᾧ] Supply Χριστῷ or μυστηρίῳ. According to either, a good sense will arise, but much depends upon whether the words preceding, καὶ Πατρός καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, are, or are not, genuine. Now there is, I apprehend, nothing like sufficient evidence to authorise any one word to be omitted; though Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., have cancelled them all. Render: 'of God even the Father, and of Christ;' see i. 26, 27. The ᾧ is better, with most Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to Χριστῷ. 'It respects (says Whitby) the person of Christ as Mediator, the knowledge of whom, the Apostle declares, hath an excellency beyond all other knowledge, Phil. iii. 8; for ἐν ᾧ περιετμήθητε, in whom ye are circumcised, ver. 11, and ἐν ᾧ συνεγέρθητε, in whom ye are risen again, ver. 12, plainly relate to Christ's person, and his merits as Mediator; and the whole of the following Chapter treats of him, and of the benefits we have received by him. The Apostle also applies this to him by saying (ver. 6), as you received the Lord Jesus Christ, so walk in him; and by warning us against the deceit of vain philosophy, because in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the God-head.'—ἐν ᾧ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροί, &c., meaning, 'in whose Gospel are the most precious doctrines of Divine wisdom and knowledge; all laid up as in a treasury.' Comp. Eurip. Alc. 614, ἐν τοῖς ἀγαθοῖσι δὲ πάντ' ἐνεστὶν σοφίας (δῶρα). The Apostle here alludes, as Mr. Conyb. observes, 'to those who (like the Colossian false teachers) professed to be in possession of a higher γνῶσις. In opposition to them, he asserts that the depths of the γνῶσις are to be found only in the "Mystery of God," viz. the Gospel, or (as he defines it, i. 27) Χριστός ἐν ὑμῖν.'

4. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, &c.] Here there is a reference to ver. 2 (ver. 3 being parenthetical); and the literal sense is, 'This I say, meaning that,' &c.; = 'I mean to say that.'—παραλ. signifies, 1. 'to reckon wrong, make a wrong account; 2. to cause a person to judge wrongly, by presenting a false reckoning, to deceive.'—πίστω, signifies a plausible but false representation. See my Lex. So χρηστολογία in Rom. xvi. 18.

5. εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῇ σαρκὶ—εἰμι] Comp. a kindred sentiment in 1 Cor. v. 3, 4, and see note.—χαίρων καὶ βλέπων. An Hendiadys for, 'rejoicing while I see;' comp. Jos. Bell. iii. 9, 2, ὅμῃς πρὸς τὸ παρόν εὖ ἔχοντας χαίρων καὶ βλέπων. The term βλέπων may be understood, figuratively, of the certain information received by Epaphras and others; see 2 Cor. vii. 8.—τάξιν is for εὐταξίαν, denoting (by a military metaphor) subordination to their spiritual pastors and masters; and στερῶμα denotes 'steadfastness in faith.' See 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

6—15. To praise the Apostle now subjoins exhortation, to remain constant in the doctrine of the Gospel, to persevere in the faith, by being on their guard against false teachers. And here we may distinguish three several parts: verses 6, 7 contain a positive, verse 8 a negative exhortation. In vv. 9—15 we have certain reasons which come in aid of his exhortations, forming an exposition of the orthodox doctrine. (Steiger.)—ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε, &c., 'As, therefore, ye have received the doctrine of Christ, walk, continue to walk in it, and by it regulate your whole conduct.—παραλαβ. is used of acquiring knowledge of every kind, both oral and by writing; see 1 Cor. xi. 23, &c.—περιπατεῖν here denotes, not so much the habitual regulation of the life, as the regulation of the profession and the doctrine professed; so that there should be the στερῶμα τῆς πίστεως mentioned supra 5.

7. ἐρριζ. καὶ ἐποικ. ἐν αὐτῷ] These are Participles of manner; i. e. 'by being rooted and founded,' or 'grounded up on Him (as on a foundation), on which see Gal. iii. 13, and note. Comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 3, 7 (scil. πιστεύει) τὴν γνῶσιν ἐποικοδομεῖ ἡ ἀλήθεια.—βίβαι, 'being stayed,' 'steadfast,' = στεριστοὶ τῇ πίστει, 1 Pet. v. 9.—πισσ. ἐν αὐτῇ. They are not merely to adhere to the faith, but to increase in it (see Calv.); and that increase is to be accompanied with thankfulness of heart, and thanksgivings of tongue, for God's grace in imparting to them the pure truth by the Spirit of truth. See Calv., Hyper., and Olsh.

8. 'Postquam hactenus (i. 23. ii. 7) confirmavit Colossenses in doctrina quam semel acceptant, jam advocat a falsa doctrina, quam proponebant adversarii.' (Hyper.) 'Iterum cum veneno antidotum a se datum opponi debeat, admonet.' (Calv.) As the foregoing portion served for confirmation, so does the present serve for confirmation.—βλέπετε μή τις, &c., meaning, 'See

1 Cor. 1.
24.
2 Eph. 5. 6.
ch. v. 18.
1 Cor. 3.
2, 4.
14. 40.
1 Thessa. 2.
17.
1. Jude 2.
g Rom. 11.
17, 18.
1 Cor. 1. 8.
Eph. 2. 30—
12. & 2. 8.
18. 3. 2. 17.
Jude 12.
h Jer. 22. 8.
Matt. 15. 2.
Gal. 4. 5, 9.
Eph. 5. 6, 18.
ver. 20.
Hab. 12. 9.

1 John 1. 14.
ch. 1. 19.
2 John 1. 10.
Rom. 5. 23.
Eph. 1. 31.
1 Deut. 10.
10. & 20. 6.
Jer. 4. 4.
Rom. 2. 29.
& 6. 6.
Eph. 4. 22.
ch. 3. 5. 9.
Phil. 2. 2.

σοφίας καὶ κενῆς ἀπάτης, κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, κατὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ οὐ κατὰ Χριστόν <sup>9</sup> ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλῆρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς <sup>10</sup> καὶ ἔστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι, ὅς ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλὴ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας <sup>11</sup> ἐν ᾗ καὶ περιετμήθητε περιτομῇ ἀχειροποιήτῃ, ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος [τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν] τῆς σαρκὸς, ἐν to it, lest any delude you by means of an empty and deceitful philosophy [whether Gentile philosophy, or Jewish theosophy], which rests merely on what is handed down as wisdom, or what is agreeable only to the imperfect doctrines of the world, and not the Gospel of Christ; compare Matt. xxiv. 4.—σὺλαγωγῆναι here signifies 'to lead off captive,' make spoil of, by depriving you of your Christian liberty. It is well observed by Calvin, 'Verbo utitur admodum proprio: alludit enim ad pronesones, qui dum violententer rapere gregem nequeunt, fraude abigunt pecudes.' Comp. 2 Tim. iii. 6, αἰχμαλ. τὰ γυναῖκα.—In διὰ τῆς φιλοσ. καὶ κεν. ἀπ. most recent Commentaries recognize a Hendiadys for φιλ. τῆς ἀπατηλῆς: for the Apostles, they maintain, does not condemn philosophy itself, but only out of its proper limits, and exercised upon matters beyond its scope; see Hyper., Schoettgen, Archbp. Newc., and Lord Bacon's Advancement of Learning, l. ii. 5. p. 5; and last, but not least, Sir T. Browne, Rel. Med. p. 22, who there says, with reference to this text, 'Beware of philosophy, is a precept not to be received in too large a sense; for in this mass of nature there is a set of things that carry in their front (though not in capital letters, yet in stenography) something of divinity; which, to wiser reasons, serve as luminaries in the abyss of knowledge, and to judicious belief, as scales and runnels [i. e. steps of a ladder] to mount the pinnacles and highest pieces of divinity.' This observation I admit to be marked by the talent which distinguishes a writer of no ordinary power; but I see not how it can here apply, since the philosophy of which the Apostle speaks is no other than heathen philosophy, as regarded matters of religion, which, from the ignorance of the persons, was sure to deceive, and could not but be a vain deceit, by professing to be what it was not, and promising what it did not perform. This view is, I find, supported by no less an authority than Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. l. iii. § 4, who observes that 'the Apostles always speak in terms of contempt, or abhorrence, of the Grecian philosophy.' And he shows at large that they had good reasons for so doing. See more in Calv.; not failing to consult Olsh., who steers a due medium between the two extreme views. The στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου (on which see note at Gal. iv. 5), as well as the παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, may relate to both Jews and Gentiles, referring, in the case of the latter, to those systems of religion and philosophy which had been handed down from generation to generation, but rested only on the opinions and authority of men.

9. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ, &c. The connexion is, '[Beware of any who would draw you away from the truth as it is in Jesus], for, &c. The expression σωματικῶς is susceptible of three several senses: 1. corporally; 2. truly; 3. substantially;

one or other of which has been adopted by the best Expositors. But it has been well shown by Hyper. and Wolf that these merge into one another. And so Whitby, who remarks, 'In Christ the Deity dwells in fulness, as nothing could be added to it; and so in him, bodily,—that is, as the sun dwells in the firmament, where the body of it is. The whole Divine nature is not only in part, but fully, without absence of any part of it, in Christ; and that not by species, or image only, but really and substantially; and consequently the will of God must be supposed to be so revealed in Christ, that there can be no need of any addition from the Heathen philosophy, or from the Jewish Law;' see also Bp. Beveridge. The full sense will thus be, 'For in him all the complete perfection essential to the Godhead abides corporally, substantially, and really, and not in the manner of shadows.' If this association of three several significations should be thought barbarous, we may take only the second and third,—truly or really, and essentially; in opposition to types and shadows, mere resemblances. So Aristot., Rhet. i. 1, says that 'argument is the essence (σῶμα) of proof.'

10. πᾶσι [i. e. 'amply provided by him, or by his doctrine,' with whatever is necessary to salvation; without needing any additions from heathen philosophy, or from Jewish theosophy.—ἡ κεφαλὴ—ἐξουσίας, meaning, 'who is supreme over every order of intelligent beings, that exercise authority and power.'

11, 12. The Apostle here encounters those who endeavoured to bring in circumcision, and shows how, in Christ, all that the believer can possess in spiritual blessings is already imparted to him by Christ. In the expressions περιτομῇ ἀχειρ., and ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκὸς, and ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χρ., we have the principal traits of the true spiritual circumcision required by Christ, or which has Christ for its author and object; whereon see Rom. ii. 29. Phil. iii. 3, and compare Deut. xxx. 6. Jer. ix. 26. The second and third of the above particulars are exegetical of the first. Thus the sense is, 'Through whom ye have been circumcised with a circumcision not corporeal [but spiritual],—namely, that which consists in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh (i. e. in renouncing the sins to which the body and the flesh are prone), even with the circumcision of Christ (i. e. that spiritual circumcision which he requires) as it is typified by baptism, [which corresponds to circumcision].' On the metaphor in ἀπαικ. and the sentiment contained therein, comp. Eph. iv. 22, ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς—τὸν παλαιὸν ἀνθρώπον. Here the words τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, not found in most of the uncial MSS. and several cursive ones, as also some Versions and Fathers, have been cancelled by Griebach, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. But I suspect that the

τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, <sup>12 m</sup> συνταφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν τῷ βαπτίσματι ἐν ᾧ καὶ συνηγέρθητε διὰ τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐνεργείας τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἐγείραντος αὐτὸν ἐκ [τῶν] νεκρῶν, <sup>13 n</sup> καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς ὄντας ἐν τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν συνεξωποίησε σὺν αὐτῷ χαρισάμενος ὑμῖν πάντα τὰ παραπτώματα, <sup>14 o</sup> ἐξαλείψας τὸ καθ' ἡμῶν χειρόγραφον τοῖς δόγμασι, ὃ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν, καὶ αὐτὸ ἥρκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου, προσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ <sup>15 p</sup> ἀπεκδυσάμενος τὰς ἀρχὰς n Rom. 8. 3. Eph. 1. 19. 2. 1. 5. 2. 7. Gal. 2. 20. Eph. 2. 1, 11. Eph. 2. 14. Heb. 7. 13. 2. 12. 2. 10. 2. 15. Ps. 69. 13. Isa. 64. 12. Matt. 12. 20. Luke 11. 22. John 12. 31. 2. 12. Heb. 2. 14.

words were only removed in order to get rid of a difficulty, or rather to relieve the passage of what seemed an exuberance, by removing τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν. This suspicion is confirmed by the circumstance, that in four very ancient Fathers (Origen, Cyrill, Tertull., and Cypr.), and the Pesch. Syr. Version, τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν is retained, and τοῦ σώματος expunged. Yet those Critics who took that view of the true text were prob. but indifferent theologians. The propriety and force of τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν even with τῆς σαρκὸς was long ago well pointed out by Chrysa., Theophyl., Theodor., and Œcumen., and, of the modern Expositors, by Calv., Hyper., Est., and Bulling., who have shown that it is a much stronger mode of expression than it would be without τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν or τοῦ σώματος, and that τὸ σῶμα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν is equiv. to τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας in Rom. vi. 6; also that each expression is tantamount to the Pauline ὁ παλαιὸς ἀνθρώπος, our corrupt human nature. However, it would seem that τὸ σῶμα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν is a somewhat stronger expression, the plural being used by way of denoting the complexity, and, consequently, power, of the sins, which differ no less one from another in species than the various members of the body. And hence in the next chap., ver. 5, the various vices of our corrupt nature are called τὰ μέλη, scil. τοῦ παλαιῦ ἀνθρώπου. So that, on the whole, the plain sense here intended is, 'by renouncing and casting off the practice of the sins to which the body and flesh of our corrupt nature are prone.' Finally, the extreme antiquity of the reading so injudiciously discarded is certain from its being found in the Pesch. Syr. Version of the second, and the Arabic of the fourth, century. The words are, moreover, decidedly favoured by external evidence, as existing in its being easy to account for their having been expunged, but not for their having been interpolated. In ver. 12 the Apostle illustrates this by a fresh image, also employed at Rom. vi. 2—4, where see note.

[12. συνταφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν τῷ βαπτ.] meaning, 'having engaged at your baptism to renounce sin, and walk in newness of life.'—ἐν ᾧ καὶ συνηγέρθητε, &c. The sense here is the same as at Eph. ii. 5, 6, where see note.—διὰ τῆς πίστεως—νεκρῶν. Render: 'through faith in, and dependence on, the power of God, who raised him from the dead, [and can therefore raise you].'

[13. καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς—παραπτ., &c.] This moral reformation is here illustrated by another figure, found in a kindred passage of Eph. ii. 1—5; see Rom. vi. 3.—τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ, i. e. 'your carnal and corrupt state as heathens,' as opposed to περιτομῇ δειροῦ. at ver. 11. See VOL. II.

ral MSS., and some Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, after συνιζ. Have added ὑμᾶς, which has been received by Griesb. and Scholz; and others, for ὑμῶν, have ἡμῶν, which has been edited by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but, I think, injudiciously; for, as Rinck justly observes, this is closely connected with the preceding; q. d. 'You who were dead in your sins, are quickened, your trespasses being forgiven.' After which, at ver. 14, the general subject is resumed, with the introduction of the first person Pronoun Possessive.

[14. ἐξαίψας—σταυρῷ] Comp. the parallel passage at Eph. ii. 15. The Apostle here considers the Law as a note of hand, or bond, given by a debtor to his creditor; and, by way of explanation, he adds, τοῖς δόγμασι, where Bp. Middl. supposes an ellipsis of σύν; which is, however, quite unexampled in the New Test.; and the sense arising, 'together with all its covenants,' is too feeble for so vigorous a writer as St. Paul. It is better to suppose an ellipsis of ἐν, which is expressed in the parallel passage of Eph. ii. 15, τὸν νόμον τῶν ὑπολοίπων ἐν δόγμασι, καταργήσας. Thus it is for δ ἦν ἰν τ. δ. Render: 'consisting of the covenants, namely, contained in the various expiations prescribed by the Levitical law.' These ordinances, it is added, 'were in full force against us;' for that is undoubtedly the sense of καθ' ἡμῶν, notwithstanding that some render, 'with respect to us.' The words δ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν seem meant to explain καθ' ἡμῶν, as ἥρκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου (from the Latin ex medio tollere) is exegetical of ἐξαίψας, in which there is an allusion to blotting, and thus annulling, a writing; corresponding to our expression, crossing out. In προσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ there is an allusion to the ancient custom of annulling covenants or bonds, by driving a nail through them. Thus the sense is, 'having driven a nail into it, and through it, by his cross' (i. e. the atonement through his cross), and therefore annulled it. 'But,' observes Dr. Peile, 'to trace the spiritual application which St. Paul has made of this strong metaphor, we must turn to Rom. ii. 15. iii. 4. vii. 15, 16; and finding both Jew and Gentile inwardly "consenting each one unto his Law, that it is good," we shall see that what God has against us, and in strict tenor of Law must exact without abatement, is no "hand-writing of ordinances" (as has been said), ceremonial or moral; but a bond antecedent to, and independent of, every lex scripta.' See Calvin's able note, which is well worthy of attention.

[15. ἀπεκδυσάμενος—ἰδεύειν.] Here there is a succession of military metaphors. Ἀπεκδ. alludes to the stripping and plundering of vanquished q Lev. 11. 2.

 & 23. 2, &c.
 Rom. 14. 3.
 10, 13.
 Gal. 4. 10.
 r Heb. 8. 5.
 & 10. 1.
 s Jer. 22. 2.
 Ezek. 13. 2.
 Matt. 24. 4.
 Eph. 5. 6.
 2 Thess. 2. 2.
 1 John 4. 1.
 Rev. 2. 11.

καὶ τὰς ἐξουσίας, ἐδειγμάτισεν ἐν παρρησίᾳ, θριαμβεύσας αὐτοὺς ἐν αὐτῷ.

16 <sup>q</sup> Μὴ οὖν τις ὑμᾶς κρινέτω ἐν βρώσει ἢ ἐν πόσει, ἢ ἐν μέρει ἑορτῆς, ἢ νομηνίας, ἢ σαββάτων <sup>17</sup> ἃ ἐστὶ σκιά τῶν μελόντων, τὸ δὲ σῶμα [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ. <sup>18</sup> Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς καταβραβεύετω θέλων ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ καὶ θρησκείᾳ τῶν ἀγγέλων,

foes; ἰδειγμ. to their being 'expressed to public gaze and derision.'—παρρησία signifying 'openly, publicly,' as in John vii. 4. xi. 54.—θριαμβεύσας is added by way of completing the idea. So Plut. i. p. 153, 1, βασιλεὺς ἰδριάμβυσεν. By τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰς ἐξουσίας are meant those so called at Eph. vi. 12; namely, 'the evil spirits and their agents.' See John xii. 31.

16. We have here an inference from the foregoing arguments; what had been before said of circumcision being now extended to the discrimination of meats and days. (Hyper. and Calv.)—μὴ οὖν τις ὑμᾶς, &c. Render: 'Wherefore [such being the case with the ceremonial law] let no one judge you in [respect of any rite connected with] meats.' Although almost all Expositors regard μέρι here as having the same force as μέρι in the expression ἐν μέρι τούτῳ, 2 Cor. iii. 10, and 1 Pet. iv. 16, yet I doubt the correctness of that view. There μέρι signifies parts, particular, which cannot be the case in the present passage, where the expression may best be rendered, as I have heretofore done, 'in respect of,' though ἐν λόγῳ, 'on the score of,' would have been better Greek: for though ἐν μέρι is used by the best Class. writers, as here, with some Genit., as ἀρετῆς, χάριτος, δωρεᾶς, &c., yet only in conjunction with a Verb., as τίθεσθαι, ποιῆσθαι, &c. The only parallel instance of this use known to me is Philo, p. 156, ἐν μέρι λόγου.

17. ἃ ἐστὶ σκιά—Χριστοῦ meaning, 'which things [as compared to the future evangelical blessings to be obtained by Christ] are a mere shadow; but the substance is what appertains, or relates, to Christ and his Gospel.' The best Commentators are agreed that the Genit. Χρ. is put for the Dat. with ἐν; q. d. 'the thing (i. e. the truth itself), the future blessings themselves subsist in Christ, resulting from his person, work, and salvation'; for it is not to be understood that these and all other of the ritual constitutions of the Law of Moses shadowed forth some Christian mystery, but only that they were as mere shadows compared to that solid and substantial truth, which Christ, by his Gospel, hath discovered to us.

18. The Apostle, having cautioned them in the last two verses against that slowness of heart to believe only on Christ crucified for their acceptance with God,—which was the stumbling-block of Judaism,—reverts now to that subject which he had so much at heart (ver. 1): that those Gentiles, namely, who had embraced the saving doctrine, should not be drawn aside from a single-hearted devotion unto Christ (2 Cor. xi. 3) by adopting the specious and self-imposed observances, by which seekers after the wisdom of the Greeks—and such were the early Gnostic and Platonistic corrupters of Christianity—would have disguised the apparent simplicity of the means whereby the very foolishness (as it seemed to them) of God was to prove itself wiser than men (1 Cor. i. 25).—Καταβραβεύντω. This term (called by Jerome a Cilicianism, though it is found in Demosth., Polyb., and Plut.) has been variously interpreted, chiefly from want of a clear notion of the import of the word, which signifies, 1. 'to give the βραβεῖον, or "prize," wrongly,' or 'to artfully disappoint any one of the prize he seeks'; 2. 'to circumvent,' like παρολογίζεσθαι, supra v. 4. And although some recent Commentators suppose the sense here to be 'to oudeinai, or "demeanify," or "tyrannize over," yet it seems to be rather that commonly assigned, 'to defraud, chouse you of the prize ye seek'; namely, 'by drawing you off from the true doctrine to a false one': a sense supported by the similar expression, Rev. iii. 11, κραταιὸν ὁ ἔχει, ἵνα μηδεὶς λάβῃ τὸν στίφάνον σου. Of θίλω the sense is far from clear. By many Expositors it is taken with ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ, and explained, 'delighting in'; while others interpret it, 'affecting'; viz., by a pretended humility and modesty. I prefer to take the expression, as it has been by some ancient Commentators, with καταβραβεύντω, though not in the sense they assign; for the meaning seems to be, 'Allow no one to gain his will (succeed in his wish),' or 'defraud you of your reward.' From the context it is evident that ταπεινοφροσύνη must here be taken in sensu deteriori, to denote 'an over-strained self-abasement,' 'humiliation'; like that, observes Mr. Conybe, 'which has often been joined with ascetic practices, and has shown itself by the devotees wearing rags, exposing himself to insult, living by beggary,' &c. Of θρησκεία τῶν ἀγγέλων the sense is disputed. Some, regarding ἀγγ. as a Genit. of object, render, 'a worshipping of angels' (see Test. xii. Patriarch., cited by Brotschn. Lex. in v. ἰελο-θρησκεία); others, 'a worship of angels,' meaning, such a worship as angels render, a sort of ecstatic devotion, called at ver. 23, ἰελοθρησκεία. But that is quite opposed to the context. According to the former interpretation (adopted by the ancient and most modern Expositors) the persons in question (supposed to be Gnostics), adopting the opinion of the Essenes, Pythagoreans, and Platonists, maintained, from a sentiment of affected humility, that direct access of prayer to the Deity was presumptuous and impracticable, and that prayers could only be presented and accepted through the mediation of the angels; to whom, of course, as mediators at least, worship was to be paid; see Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 7, fin. On again carefully reconsidering the subject, it appears to me that no other interpretation, than the one just mentioned, is tenable. It has been ably supported by Bahr, Bohmer, and Olsh., who have proved that it designates Angelolatry, and which was attempted to be jus-

ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, εἰκὴ φυσιοῦμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ νοὸς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, <sup>19</sup> καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλὴν, ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα διὰ τῶν ἀφῶν καὶ συνδέσμων ἐπιχορηγούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον, αὔξει τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ. <sup>20</sup> Ὡς εἰ [οὖν] ἀπεθάνετε σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων τοῦ κόσμου, τί, ὡς ζῶντες ἐν κόσμῳ, δογματίζεσθε; <sup>21</sup> “Μὴ ἄψῃ, μηδὲ γέυσῃ, μηδὲ θίγῃς;” <sup>22</sup> ἃ ἔστι πάντα εἰς φθορὰν τῇ ἀποχρήσει, κατὰ τὰ

tified in the same manner as the worship of the Virgin Mary, angels, and saints, is usually justified in the Romish Church. ‘This self-chosen (observes Olsh.) and invented worship is called, sup. v. 23, ἰδελοθησκεία, which term also there recurs in conjunction with ταπεινοφροσύνη.’ That this Angelolatry continued for some time, notwithstanding the Apostle’s earnest caution, there is reason to believe. Theodor. speaks of it as existing in the region of Colosse, until at length it was put down by a council held at the neighbouring town of Laodicea, in the fourth century. The next words, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, seem meant to censure generally that prying and speculative spirit, on points not revealed, which had been introduced by the Gentile converts; for ἐμβατεύω signifies ‘to go in unto,’ and is followed by an Accus. of place, with or without a preposition of motion, or its equiv., a dat. without a preposition. But it is sometimes, though rarely, used figuratively of ‘going into, by investigating’ a matter, with the idea of care, diligence, and study. So Philo de Plant. Noe. p. 225 (cited by Loesner), ἐπιπλέον ἐμβατεύοντες ταῖς ἐπιστήμασι. I add Philo, p. 16, and 2 Macc. ii. 30, τὸ ἐμβατεύειν, καὶ περὶ πάντων ποιῆσαι λόγον, καὶ πολυπραγμονεῖν, which serves to confirm the common version ‘intruding,’ that term carrying with it the notion of ‘prying into any matter without right or welcome.’ Thus the sense here of ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων is ‘intruding or prying into matters which he has not known, and does not know’ (see 1 Tim. i. 7), namely, the state of the invisible world. The words following trace this spirit to its origin; namely, in vanity, lightly, inconsiderately, and causelessly taken up, and afterwards fostered by a carnal disposition.—φυσιοῦμενος, ‘puffed up and proud.’ So 1 Tim. vi. 4, ταπεινὸς καὶ ἡδὴ ἐπιστάμενος.

19. καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλὴν [These words refer to the whole of the preceding verse; intimating, that ‘by such worship of angels, and presumptuous intrusion into the secrets of the Lord, they did not hold fast their allegiance to Christ,’ the Head and sole Mediator between God and man, and the Revealer of what was proper to be known; but abandoned the grand principle of the Gospel by seeking other mediators. See 1 Tim. ii. 5–7. Of the words following, ἐξ οὗ πᾶν—συμβιβ., the sense will appear from the note on the parallel passage at Eph. iv. 16.—ἐπιχορηγούμενον, i.e. ‘ministered unto by the mutual aid supplied by its members.’ On this term and on ἀφῶν, see note on Eph. iv. 16.—τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ. My interpretation of this somewhat peculiar phrase is confirmed by the suffrage of Bohmer, and Olsh., who well remarks, that ‘the sentiment thus elicited is an expression of the truth that the growth of the Church proceeds from God, and not, as the Colossian false teachers thought, from inferior powers, as angels, authorities, and powers, who are, in 1 Pet. iii. 22, said to be subject to him; the infinite superiority of whom to the angels is stated in Heb. i. 4, ἀγγ.’ Thus the genit. τοῦ Θεοῦ is one of instrumentality, as if παρὰ were expressed, just as τὸ σωτήριον or ἡ σωτηρία τοῦ Θεοῦ or Κυρίου is put for παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ or Κυρίου. See note on Luke iii. 6.

20—23. We have here a conclusion, introducing an exhortation pointed by interrogation, and the general sense contained in these verses may be this: ‘If ye be [as ye profess yourselves at baptism] dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world (i. e. have renounced Jewish ordinances), abolished through Christ (see Eph. ii. 15), why, as if living in conformity to the world, do ye subject yourselves to carnal ordinances, such as, “Touch not [this], taste not [that kind of meat]” (1 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Tim. iv. 3), handle not [that as unclean]?”’ &c. On the expression τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, see note at Gal. iv. 3.—δογματίζεσθε, ‘ye suffer ordinances [namely, those of the Jewish law] to be imposed on you.’ In μὴ ἄψῃ, &c., we have specified some of the δόγματα in question. Yet the expressions are not (as some consider them) synonymous. ‘Ἄψῃ and θίγῃς seem to refer to a greater or less contact with things ceremonially unclean, though the former might denote the same as γέυσῃ; on which see my note on Thucyd. ii. 50. The terms are supposed to have reference to certain meats, and, indeed, animal food in general, which was forbidden by the Pythagoreans to be eaten; but surely they must chiefly be meant of what was forbidden by the Jewish law. As to the words following, ἃ ἔστι πάντα εἰς φθορὰν, if ἃ πάντα refer to the meats prohibited, we may best explain, with the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, ‘which things are all so far from polluting the user, that they rather themselves perish by using, and tend only to corruption,’—and consequently do neither good nor harm (see Rom. xiv. 17), conformably to the words of our Lord, Matt. xv. 17, 18. Yet this yields a sense not sufficiently apposite, and it would rather seem that the reference is to the prohibitory ordinances, and that φθορὰν is to be taken in a figurative sense. Thus the meaning will be, ‘All which sort of ordinances or restrictions tend only, in use, to the destruction of those who adopt them; being [only] framed according to the commandments and precepts of men, [not of God].’ By this method of exposition (supported by the authority of Augustin, Estius, and Wolf) we not only obtain a sense worthy of the Apostle, but also a good construction; for, according to the first-mentioned interpretation, the next words, κατὰ τὰ ἰντάλματα

3 ver. 18.
1 Tim. 4. 8.
2 & 32.

ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων. 23 * ἅτινά ἐστι λόγον μὲν ἔχοντα σοφίας, ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ καὶ ἀφειδίᾳ σώματος, οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ τινι, πρὸς πλησμονὴν τῆς καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, cannot be referred to what immediately precedes, but to δογματίζεσθαι at ver. 20, which is exceedingly harsh. I have in this ninth edition pointed as I have, because the words μὴ ἀψη-θίγγει form an appendage to τί—δογματίζεσθαι, and are only meant to furnish a specimen of the kind of δόγματα, or authoritative injunctions, spoken of. But considering that we have μὴ—μηδέ—μηδέ, and that there is, as the particles suggest, a gradation in the descending scale,—which was well pointed out by Calv. and Kypke,—I prefer to render, 'No castaveria, ne gustaveria, neque attigeria.' So Bulling. renders by 'ne—ne—neque,' for 'ne quidem,' 'not even.' Thus, as Calv. remarks, there is here an allusion to the gradual progress of morosity and those who entangle their consciences by laws of their own making. Ab initio (adds Calv.) jam plus æquo rigidi—imo esse laqueos, qui sic initio stringunt, ut successu tandem temporis strangulent.' As respects the use of ἀπειθεῖν for obey, I need not say that it is indubitable, being found in the best writers, from Homer, Thucyd., and Xen. downwards (though it is strangely neglected by the Lexicographers, not even appearing in Liddell's Lex.); nor is its use confined to the pure Greek Class. writers; but it occurs, if not in the Sept., at least in Joseph. (c. gr. Antt. iv. 8, 21). Philo, p. 794 and 931; also in Arrian, Jamblichus, Porphyry, sæpe, Diog. Laert., Pausanias, Ælian, Arrian, and, lastly, Plutarch; c. gr. in Vit. Cæs. et de Sanitate Tuend. a. m. ἀπειθεῖν γὰρ αὐτῶν διὰ χρόνων παρῆναι καὶ γυῖσθαι, where the two terms ἀπειτ. and γυῖσθαι are conjoined, as here; though I see no reason why they should have been, except for the purpose of making the meaning of ἀπειτ. more determinate. However, though this use is, we see, found in many good writers, yet it is scarcely to be there recognized more than once or twice in each. Its antiquity, however, is certain, from the circumstance of its occurrence in Homer, Od. iv. 60. It was evidently held in no favour by the purest Greek writers; though it was used somewhat more by the inferior writers; and we find it in Joseph. and Philo, and also the writings of St. Paul, in the last-mentioned case, prob. from its having, we cannot doubt, always been freely used in the language of common life. As regards the words at v. 22, ἅ ἐστι—ἀποχρήσαι, on again carefully considering the disputed question concerning the reference in 2, whether that be to 'prohibited meats,' or to 'prohibitory ordinances,' I must finally acquiesce in the former view, as was done by all the Greek Fathers and the Latin ones, with the exception of Augustin, and several of the most eminent of the modern Commentators. Thus the sense will be, 'which things [however] are all [so far from polluting] only meant to perish in the using, thus passing away without leaving any inward defilement,' thus constituting no other than the doctrine contained in Matt. xv. 17, sq., and Mark vii. 18, sq., and also 1 Cor. vi. 13, τὰ βρώματα τῇ κοιλίᾳ, καὶ ἡ κοιλία τοῖς βρώμασιν' δὲ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ ταύτην καὶ ταῦτα καταργήσει. It was a frivolous question agitated by the early Commentators, whether ἀποχρ. signifies 'use' or 'abuse.' Properly speaking the term imports neither, but a 'using up,' equiv. to 'consumption by use;' on which sense of the noun, and its verb ἀποχρησάσθαι, I have fully treated in my note on Thucyd. i. 68. vi. 17. vii. 42, adducing examples from Dio Cass., Appian, and Josephus.

23. ἅτινά ἐστι λόγον μὲν, &c.] It is well remarked by Calv., that 'we have here a pre-occupation of what might be urged by the contrary party; wherein, while he concedes to the adversaries what they might urge in excuse, simul id totum pro nihilo ducit.'—λόγον μὲν ἔχοντα σοφ., 'a show, mere semblance of wisdom,'—namely, as opposed to the δύναμις or ἀλήθειαν. Comp. 2 Tim. iii. 5, ἔχοντες μόρφωσιν εὐσεβίας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν ἠρημίνοι. I agree with Dr. Peile on the forcible opposition in which the Apostle has set ἵνα λόγον μὲν and οὐκ [ἔστιν] ἐν τιμῇ, where οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ τ. cannot mean (as our Common Version expresses it), 'not in any honour.' This I had myself noticed long ago in Recens. Synop., where I censured St. Jerome for imputing, from this passage, to the Apostle an ignorance of grammatical propriety, which he often elsewhere ascribes to him. How unfounded is this charge of ignorance here, appears by considering, that we have here a certain idiom which comes under the canon in Kühner's Gr. § 734, that 'the adverbative δὲ, answering to μὲν, is sometimes suppressed when the word to which the δὲ would be attached implies in itself the opposition sufficiently,' which is the case here; for the οὐκ, by its position, implies the δὲ.—'Εν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ may be rendered, 'as evinced in an affected sanctity,' lit., 'a would-be worship,' an over-scrupulosity of worship.—ταπεινοφρ. must, from the context, denote that 'spurious humility, under which lurks spiritual pride.' With respect to ἀφειδ. σώμ., it denotes 'harshly treating' (see 2 Cor. xiii. 2) by neglecting the comfort of the body as to other things besides food,—namely, clothing, warmth, rest, &c.; and the words οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ—σαρκός are meant to be explanatory of ἀφειδία. And here it would seem, that as the Apostle has shown in what Christian wisdom did not consist (namely, in unnecessary and affected austerities), so now he shows in what it does consist, or is consistent with,—namely, τιμῇ, a just τιμὴ τοῦ σώματος πρὸς πλησμ. τ. σ., where τιμὴ denotes 'attention to, or care of, any thing or person;' as in 1 Cor. xii. 23, 24, where it is used, as here, of the body, τιμὴν περισσ. περιτίθειν, aptly designating 'the attentive care of cherishing the body, by the supply of its wants,' in opposition to the ἀφειδία, 'the neglect of that due care and attention, by ascetic severities.' The subjoined words, πρὸς πλησμ. τ. σαρκός are exoetical, and may best be rendered, 'as respects the satisfying of the wants of the flesh.' Comp. Prov. xiii. 25, 'the righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul,' i. e. 'of himself,' 'his bodily wants,'—namely, to keep up strength for the performance of the duties of life, so that the body may serve the spirit, which an extreme σαρκός. III. 1<sup>a</sup> Εἰ οὖν συνηγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ, τὰ ἄνω ζη- a Ps. 110. 1.

Rom. 8. 5.
Eph. 1. 30.
Ac 2. 6.
ch. 3. 12.
b Rom. 8. 2.
Ac.
Gal. 2. 20.
c 1 Cor. 15.
Phil. 2. 21.
1 John 3. 2.
d Rom. 8. 18.
Ac 6. 12.
Ac 7. 22.
Eph. 4. 22.
Ac 5. 5. 1 Thess. 4. 5.
τεῖτε, οὐ ὁ Χριστός ἐστιν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ καθήμενος <sup>2</sup> τὰ ἄνω φρονεῖτε, μὴ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς <sup>3</sup> ἀπεθάνετε γὰρ, καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν κέκρυπται σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ ἐν τῷ Θεῷ. <sup>4</sup> ὅταν ὁ Χριστὸς φανερωθῇ, ἡ ζωὴ ἡμῶν, τότε καὶ ὑμεῖς σὺν αὐτῷ φανερωθήσεσθε ἐν δόξῃ.

5<sup>d</sup> Νεκρώσατε οὖν τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, πορνείαν, either way would prevent. The above view is confirmed by the authority of Chrysa., Theophyl., Theodor., and Œcumen.; also by Calvin., in a most masterly note; and so, mainly, Est., but, for obvious reasons, he does not come so closely to the point as his illustrious co-interpreter. It is plain that the Apostle, upon the whole, affords here no support to monkish austerities or ascetic abstinence from the use (in moderation) of the things which the body needs, both for its own support, and to bear up the mind. What he inculcates is the use in measure due, without the abuse. With ἀφειδὲν σώμ. here comp. Plut. de Sanit. 25, ἀφειδὲν καὶ ἀμελίαν τοῦ σώματος. I cannot but notice the ambitious interpretation of Mr. Conyb., especially since it professes alone to remove an acknowledged difficulty. He affirms that the literal sense is, 'in reference to the indulgence of the flesh'; and in his free version he renders 'and are of no value to check the indulgence of fleshly passions.' He then remarks, that no Commentator, as far as he is aware, has suggested the interpretation he has adopted. He might have been aware of Dr. Doddridge, who has used words tantamount to those employed by Mr. Conyb. and of Thom. Aquin., who uses nearly the same; but contrary to the scope of the context, as will appear from the able logical tracing of Calvin.

III. This Chapter commences with the general conclusion to the whole of the first portion of the Epistle, wherein the Apostle, resuming (as Dr. Peile says) the brief argumentation from what had been advanced at ii. 12,—from which, if we comp. ii. 21, we shall see he had digressed at vv. 21—23,—briefly exhorts them that, waving all terrene and corruptible things,—such as the deccres about meats and drinks,—they should aspire alone after heavenly and incorruptible ones. The general sense contained in the first four verses is this: 'If, then, ye have really died with Christ unto the observance of Jewish rites (see ii. 20), and have risen with him to better hopes, and, by his example, profess to pursue better aims,—no longer grovel in worldly and carnal superstition, but seek after those observances which are spiritual and heavenly; set your affections on heavenly, not on earthly objects, aiming at those blessings which are deposited where your Redeemer will dispense them, who there sitteth at the right hand of God now and for ever, to bless and reward all his faithful servants.'

1. εἰ οὖν συνηγ.] 'If then ye have been raised with Christ.' Comp. Phil. iii. 20.—ιστ.—καθήμ., 'abideth—seated.'

2. φρονεῖν is a stronger term than ζητεῖν, meaning, 'to seek earnestly,' and is so used at Rom. viii. 5. Phil. iii. 10.

3. ἀπεθάνετε, &c.] q. d. 'I say, mind not earthly things, since ye have died to the things of this world (ii. 12); and as Christ is invisibly with God, so your life is with God deposited, or treasured up, with Christ.' See Calvin's able note.—ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν κέκρυπται—Θεῷ. Brethren, well renders, 'Vita vestra (i. e. felicitas) simul Christi vitâ latet quidem nunc in cælo [ibi] recondita, et asservatur apud Deum.' Comp. Pa. xxxi. 19.—σὺν here signifies 'through the instrumentality of'; as in 1 Cor. v. 4, σὺν τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χρ. This salvation is said to be laid up, because prepared for them, ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, apud Deum; also as being procured through his mediation, and preserved by his continual intercession. See Heb. vii. 25. 1 Pet. iii. 2.

4. ὅταν ὁ Χριστὸς—δόξῃ] 'But when Christ, who is our life (i. e. the author of it, John xi. 25), shall be made manifest at his second advent, as Judge, then shall ye be made manifest with him in glory.' I have rendered φανερ. as I have, following the Pesch. Syr., because it seems called for by the propriety of the term φανερωθῆναι. I agree with Mr. Conyb., that this advent of Christ in glory is = ἀποκάλυψις τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Rom. viii. 19, intimating, as he subjoins, 'that the real nature and glory of Christ's people (which is now hidden) will be manifested to all mankind when Christ shall come again, and force the world to recognise him, by an open display of his majesty.' The above view is confirmed by Chrysa., who, after the exhortation, μὴ τιμάς ἐν ταῦτα ζητεῖτε καὶ δόξας ἰκαὶ γὰρ ἡ δόξα ὑμῶν, then subjoins the following fine comparison derived from the pearl oyster, ὁ μαργαρίτης κέκρυπται ὡς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ ὅσπρῳ; ὅταν δὲ περιθραυσθῇ ἰκαῖω, τότε λάμπει ἐν δόξῃ οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς, &c.

5. νεκρώσατε οὖν τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν] i. e. 'obtain a complete mastery over the earthly and carnal lusts which war in your members.' see Eph. v. 5. To make his meaning clearer, the Apostle now subjoins some enz. of the lusts to be mortified, and commences with the general terms τὰ μέλη ὁ. τ. ἰ. τ. γ.—Τὰ μέλη τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, for ἐπίγεια. The full meaning is, 'given for earthly purposes,' as opposed to heavenly ones: for there is an allusion to the antithesis, existing supra, ver. 2, between τὰ ἄνω and τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. By τὰ μέλη are denoted 'the members of the body,' 'the body itself,' considered as the seat of the passions and desires (see James iv. 1); the members being considered as the instruments, or tools, to do what the spiritual part of man wills or consents to, whether good, or, as here, bad. See Rom. vi. 13, 19. vii. 5, 23. As to ἐπιθυμῶν κακῶν, 'evil concupiscence,' the expression μὴ ἐπὶ signify, in a general way, 'the lust after any forbidden gratification'; for there is, as Theophyl.

e Eph. 3. 6.
 Rev. 22. 15.
 f Rom. 6. 19,
 30, & 7. 5.
 1 Cor. 6. 11.
 Eph. 3. 1.
 & 5. 7, 8.
 Tit. 2. 5.
 g Eph. 4. 23.
 1 Pet. 2. 1.
 James 1. 21.
 h Lev. 19. 11.
 Zech. 8. 16.
 Eph. 4. 23,
 26, 29.
 & 5. 4.
 i Gen. 1. 20.
 Eph. 2. 10.
 & 4. 24.
 k Rom. 10.
 15.
 1 Cor. 7. 31.
 32. & 12. 13.
 Gal. 3. 28.
 & 5. 6. & 6. 13.

ἀκαθαρσίαν, πάθος, ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν, καὶ τὴν πλεονεξίαν, ἥτις ἐστὶν εἰδωλολατρεία· <sup>6</sup> οὐδὲ ἄ ἔρχεται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας· <sup>7</sup> ἐν οἷς καὶ ὑμεῖς περιπατήσατέ ποτε, ὅτε ἐζήτε ἐν αὐτοῖς. <sup>8</sup> Νυνὶ δὲ ἀπόθεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς τὰ πάντα, ὀργὴν, θυμὸν, κακίαν, βλασφημίαν, αἰσχρολογίαν, ἐκ τοῦ στόμα-τος ὑμῶν. <sup>9</sup> Μὴ ψεύδεσθε εἰς ἀλλήλους, ἀπεκδυσάμενοι τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον σὺν ταῖς πράξεσιν αὐτοῦ· <sup>10</sup> καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι τὸν νέον, τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν· <sup>11</sup> ὅπου οὐκ ἐνὶ Ἑλλην καὶ Ἰουδαῖος, περιτομὴ καὶ ἀκροβυστία· βάρβαρος, Σκύθης· δούλος, ἐλεύθερος· remarks, an ἐπιθυμία καλή [and he just before observes, πᾶσα γὰρ ἐπιθυμία κακή, where, for πᾶσα should be read οὐ πᾶσα]. Considering, however, the preceding context, it is best to refer it, with Hyper., Est., Crell., and others, to the above-mentioned sensual lusts, as they exist in the heart and imagination, though not carried out into acts.—κακή is added with reference to the baseness of the lusts in question, and not meant (as Est. supposes) to intimate that there is any such thing as a good lust. In short, the purpose of the Apostle is no other than to carry out the lesson of his Divine Master, Matt. v. 28, πᾶς ὁ βλάπτων γυναικα πρὸς τὸ ἐπιθυμῆσαι αὐτῆς, &c., regarding the deliberate evil desire as action.—πορνείαν may include adultery.—By καθ. and πάθος may be meant, those abominations mentioned in Rom. i.; and that such is the sense, would appear from the only two other passages where St. Paul uses the word, Rom. i. 26, παρίδωκεν αὐτοὺς εἰς πάθος ἀτιμίας, and 1 Thess. iv. 5, μὴ ἐν πάθει ἐπιθυμίας, and as in those two passages πάθος is so connected with other words as to show that it must be taken in a bad sense, so here the words following, ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν, seem to determine the sense. By τὴν πλεονεξίαν most Expositors, ancient and modern, understand covetousness; while others, consisting of some ancients (as Hilary) and moderns (as Est., Hamm., Jortin, Dodd., Locke, and others), objecting that such cannot well be reckoned among the lusts in the members, interpret it of 'that insatiable desire, up to greediness, of even lawful sensual gratification, which constitutes a kind of idolatry.' This latter view may be well founded; but the argument for its adoption, derived from the incongruity of supposing covetousness to be ranked among the lusts in the members, is not very strong, since the term members is, as Calv. observes, used 'improprie, sed eleganter,' to designate the vices of our corrupt nature; that being considered as a mass composed of different vices. They are called 'earthly,' inasmuch as they drag us down, and keep us down to earth, as the poet says, 'Atque affigit humo divinx particula aure.' See more in Hyper., Hamm., and Mackn. And though from what is said at Phil. iii. 19 it is certain that sensuality may, as well as covetousness, be regarded as idolatry, yet the latter is in Scripture especially represented in that light; and though covetousness be not a work of the body, yet it is a work of the flesh; and as the preceding term ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν designates 'evil concupiscence' generally, so does this particularly, adverting to its most dangerous species, 'inasmuch as (observes Scott), though it be as contrary to vital Christianity as the grossest sensualities, it is more plausible, and not so easily defined.'

6. τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας] meaning the heathens, as Eph. v. 6.

7. ἐν οἷς] Referring to the 8 (i. e. which vices and sins) at ver. 6.—ἐν αὐτοῖς has the same reference, meaning the children of disobedience, the heathens. On this and the next three verses, see Eph. iv. 22—29, and comp. 1 Cor. vi. 11.

8. On the terms ὀργή and θυμὸς, see Rom. ii. 8; and on κακίαν, see note at Eph. iv. 31. Comp. Eph. iv. 25, which is the best comment on this verse.

9. μὴ ψεύδ. εἰς ἀλλ.] In the Lamb. MS. 1182, the εἰς had originally no place,—not, indeed, from any error on the part of the scribe, but by the alteration of some Critic, who stumbled at the construction, accounting it not Class. Greek, as in Soph. Œd. C. 528, 1512. Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 3, in order to make it such, he put out the εἰς; and thus the sense will be, 'lie,' 'deceive each other;' but though this construction occurs in the Sept., Isa. lvii. 11. Deut. xxx. 27. Ps. lxxx. 18. Hab. ix. 2, the removal of the εἰς was both unauthorized and injudicious.

10. ἀνακαινούμενον—κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος α.] See note on 2 Cor. iii. 18.—εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ κτίσ. stands for ἵνα ἐπιγνώτε τὸν κτίσαντα.

11. ὅπου οὐκ ἐνὶ—ἐλεύθερος] q. d. 'in which new creation, or regeneration, it matters not whether any one be Jew or Gentile, &c. See a similar passage in Gal. iii. 28, and comp. Acts x. 34. The omission here of καὶ between βάρβαρος and Σκύθης, and between δούλος and ἐλεύθερος is remarkable, and has not a little perplexed Interpreters. One thing is certain,—that what is said in the second clause, βάρβαρος—ἐλεύθερος, is, as Calv. says, per amplificationem; and thus the copula was omitted, not for brevity so much as for spirit, to which the asyndeton so much contributes. Of βάρβαρος, Σκύθης, Heinr. thinks they are not opposites, like the former; but that there is a kind of climax; q. d. 'barbarians, nay, the most barbarous of them,—Scythians.' But this climax would involve such an intermingling of climax with antithesis, as we can hardly suppose the Apostle to have intended. It would rather seem that there is an opposition;

ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἐν πᾶσι Χριστός. <sup>12</sup> <sup>1</sup> Ἐνδύσασθε οὖν, ὡς <sup>1</sup> Eph. 4. 22.
 ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἅγιοι καὶ ἡγαπημένοι, σπλάγχνα * οἰκτιρμοῦ, <sup>2</sup> Gal. 5. 22.
 χρηστότητα, ταπεινοφροσύνην, πραότητα, μακροθυμίαν <sup>13</sup> <sup>m</sup> Matt. 5.
 ἐχόμενοι ἀλλήλων, καὶ χαριζόμενοι ἑαυτοῖς, ἐάν τις πρὸς τινα <sup>14</sup> <sup>Mark 11. 35.</sup> ἔχη μομφήν καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἔχαρίσατο ὑμῖν, οὕτω καὶ <sup>15</sup> <sup>Eph. 4. 2.</sup>
 ὑμεῖς <sup>16</sup> <sup>1</sup> Thess. 4. 9.
 ἐπὶ πᾶσι δὲ τούτοις τὴν ἀγάπην, ἥτις ἐστὶ σύνδεσμος <sup>17</sup> <sup>1</sup> John 3. 28.
 τῆς τελειότητος. <sup>18</sup> <sup>2</sup> <sup>3</sup> <sup>4</sup> <sup>5</sup> <sup>6</sup> <sup>7</sup> <sup>8</sup> <sup>9</sup> <sup>10</sup> <sup>11</sup> <sup>12</sup> <sup>13</sup> <sup>14</sup> <sup>15</sup> <sup>16</sup> <sup>17</sup> <sup>18</sup> <sup>19</sup> <sup>20</sup> <sup>21</sup> <sup>22</sup> <sup>23</sup> <sup>24</sup> <sup>25</sup> <sup>26</sup> <sup>27</sup> <sup>28</sup> <sup>29</sup> <sup>30</sup> <sup>31</sup> <sup>32</sup> <sup>33</sup> <sup>34</sup> <sup>35</sup> <sup>36</sup> <sup>37</sup> <sup>38</sup> <sup>39</sup> <sup>40</sup> <sup>41</sup> <sup>42</sup> <sup>43</sup> <sup>44</sup> <sup>45</sup> <sup>46</sup> <sup>47</sup> <sup>48</sup> <sup>49</sup> <sup>50</sup> <sup>51</sup> <sup>52</sup> <sup>53</sup> <sup>54</sup> <sup>55</sup> <sup>56</sup> <sup>57</sup> <sup>58</sup> <sup>59</sup> <sup>60</sup> <sup>61</sup> <sup>62</sup> <sup>63</sup> <sup>64</sup> <sup>65</sup> <sup>66</sup> <sup>67</sup> <sup>68</sup> <sup>69</sup> <sup>70</sup> <sup>71</sup> <sup>72</sup> <sup>73</sup> <sup>74</sup> <sup>75</sup> <sup>76</sup> <sup>77</sup> <sup>78</sup> <sup>79</sup> <sup>80</sup> <sup>81</sup> <sup>82</sup> <sup>83</sup> <sup>84</sup> <sup>85</sup> <sup>86</sup> <sup>87</sup> <sup>88</sup> <sup>89</sup> <sup>90</sup> <sup>91</sup> <sup>92</sup> <sup>93</sup> <sup>94</sup> <sup>95</sup> <sup>96</sup> <sup>97</sup> <sup>98</sup> <sup>99</sup> <sup>100</sup> <sup>101</sup> <sup>102</sup> <sup>103</sup> <sup>104</sup> <sup>105</sup> <sup>106</sup> <sup>107</sup> <sup>108</sup> <sup>109</sup> <sup>110</sup> <sup>111</sup> <sup>112</sup> <sup>113</sup> <sup>114</sup> <sup>115</sup> <sup>116</sup> <sup>117</sup> <sup>118</sup> <sup>119</sup> <sup>120</sup> <sup>121</sup> <sup>122</sup> <sup>123</sup> <sup>124</sup> <sup>125</sup> <sup>126</sup> <sup>127</sup> <sup>128</sup> <sup>129</sup> <sup>130</sup> <sup>131</sup> <sup>132</sup> <sup>133</sup> <sup>134</sup> <sup>135</sup> <sup>136</sup> <sup>137</sup> <sup>138</sup> <sup>139</sup> <sup>140</sup> <sup>141</sup> <sup>142</sup> <sup>143</sup> <sup>144</sup> <sup>145</sup> <sup>146</sup> <sup>147</sup> <sup>148</sup> <sup>149</sup> <sup>150</sup> <sup>151</sup> <sup>152</sup> <sup>153</sup> <sup>154</sup> <sup>155</sup> <sup>156</sup> <sup>157</sup> <sup>158</sup> <sup>159</sup> <sup>160</sup> <sup>161</sup> <sup>162</sup> <sup>163</sup> <sup>164</sup> <sup>165</sup> <sup>166</sup> <sup>167</sup> <sup>168</sup> <sup>169</sup> <sup>170</sup> <sup>171</sup> <sup>172</sup> <sup>173</sup> <sup>174</sup> <sup>175</sup> <sup>176</sup> <sup>177</sup> <sup>178</sup> <sup>179</sup> <sup>180</sup> <sup>181</sup> <sup>182</sup> <sup>183</sup> <sup>184</sup> <sup>185</sup> <sup>186</sup> <sup>187</sup> <sup>188</sup> <sup>189</sup> <sup>190</sup> <sup>191</sup> <sup>192</sup> <sup>193</sup> <sup>194</sup> <sup>195</sup> <sup>196</sup> <sup>197</sup> <sup>198</sup> <sup>199</sup> <sup>200</sup> <sup>201</sup> <sup>202</sup> <sup>203</sup> <sup>204</sup> <sup>205</sup> <sup>206</sup> <sup>207</sup> <sup>208</sup> <sup>209</sup> <sup>210</sup> <sup>211</sup> <sup>212</sup> <sup>213</sup> <sup>214</sup> <sup>215</sup> <sup>216</sup> <sup>217</sup> <sup>218</sup> <sup>219</sup> <sup>220</sup> <sup>221</sup> <sup>222</sup> <sup>223</sup> <sup>224</sup> <sup>225</sup> <sup>226</sup> <sup>227</sup> <sup>228</sup> <sup>229</sup> <sup>230</sup> <sup>231</sup> <sup>232</sup> <sup>233</sup> <sup>234</sup> <sup>235</sup> <sup>236</sup> <sup>237</sup> <sup>238</sup> <sup>239</sup> <sup>240</sup> <sup>241</sup> <sup>242</sup> <sup>243</sup> <sup>244</sup> <sup>245</sup> <sup>246</sup> <sup>247</sup> <sup>248</sup> <sup>249</sup> <sup>250</sup> <sup>251</sup> <sup>252</sup> <sup>253</sup> <sup>254</sup> <sup>255</sup> <sup>256</sup> <sup>257</sup> <sup>258</sup> <sup>259</sup> <sup>260</sup> <sup>261</sup> <sup>262</sup> <sup>263</sup> <sup>264</sup> <sup>265</sup> <sup>266</sup> <sup>267</sup> <sup>268</sup> <sup>269</sup> <sup>270</sup> <sup>271</sup> <sup>272</sup> <sup>273</sup> <sup>274</sup> <sup>275</sup> <sup>276</sup> <sup>277</sup> <sup>278</sup> <sup>279</sup> <sup>280</sup> <sup>281</sup> <sup>282</sup> <sup>283</sup> <sup>284</sup> <sup>285</sup> <sup>286</sup> <sup>287</sup> <sup>288</sup> <sup>289</sup> <sup>290</sup> <sup>291</sup> <sup>292</sup> <sup>293</sup> <sup>294</sup> <sup>295</sup> <sup>296</sup> <sup>297</sup> <sup>298</sup> <sup>299</sup> <sup>300</sup> <sup>301</sup> <sup>302</sup> <sup>303</sup> <sup>304</sup> <sup>305</sup> <sup>306</sup> <sup>307</sup> <sup>308</sup> <sup>309</sup> <sup>310</sup> <sup>311</sup> <sup>312</sup> <sup>313</sup> <sup>314</sup> <sup>315</sup> <sup>316</sup> <sup>317</sup> <sup>318</sup> <sup>319</sup> <sup>320</sup> <sup>321</sup> <sup>322</sup> <sup>323</sup> <sup>324</sup> <sup>325</sup> <sup>326</sup> <sup>327</sup> <sup>328</sup> <sup>329</sup> <sup>330</sup> <sup>331</sup> <sup>332</sup> <sup>333</sup> <sup>334</sup> <sup>335</sup> <sup>336</sup> <sup>337</sup> <sup>338</sup> <sup>339</sup> <sup>340</sup> <sup>341</sup> <sup>342</sup> <sup>343</sup> <sup>344</sup> <sup>345</sup> <sup>346</sup> <sup>347</sup> <sup>348</sup> <sup>349</sup> <sup>350</sup> <sup>351</sup> <sup>352</sup> <sup>353</sup> <sup>354</sup> <sup>355</sup> <sup>356</sup> <sup>357</sup> <sup>358</sup> <sup>359</sup> <sup>360</sup> <sup>361</sup> <sup>362</sup> <sup>363</sup> <sup>364</sup> <sup>365</sup> <sup>366</sup> <sup>367</sup> <sup>368</sup> <sup>369</sup> <sup>370</sup> <sup>371</sup> <sup>372</sup> <sup>373</sup> <sup>374</sup> <sup>375</sup> <sup>376</sup> <sup>377</sup> <sup>378</sup> <sup>379</sup> <sup>380</sup> <sup>381</sup> <sup>382</sup> <sup>383</sup> <sup>384</sup> <sup>385</sup> <sup>386</sup> <sup>387</sup> <sup>388</sup> <sup>389</sup> <sup>390</sup> <sup>391</sup> <sup>392</sup> <sup>393</sup> <sup>394</sup> <sup>395</sup> <sup>396</sup> <sup>397</sup> <sup>398</sup> <sup>399</sup> <sup>400</sup> <sup>401</sup> <sup>402</sup> <sup>403</sup> <sup>404</sup> <sup>405</sup> <sup>406</sup> <sup>407</sup> <sup>408</sup> <sup>409</sup> <sup>410</sup> <sup>411</sup> <sup>412</sup> <sup>413</sup> <sup>414</sup> <sup>415</sup> <sup>416</sup> <sup>417</sup> <sup>418</sup> <sup>419</sup> <sup>420</sup> <sup>421</sup> <sup>422</sup> <sup>423</sup> <sup>424</sup> <sup>425</sup> <sup>426</sup> <sup>427</sup> <sup>428</sup> <sup>429</sup> <sup>430</sup> <sup>431</sup> <sup>432</sup> <sup>433</sup> <sup>434</sup> <sup>435</sup> <sup>436</sup> <sup>437</sup> <sup>438</sup> <sup>439</sup> <sup>440</sup> <sup>441</sup> <sup>442</sup> <sup>443</sup> <sup>444</sup> <sup>445</sup> <sup>446</sup> <sup>447</sup> <sup>448</sup> <sup>449</sup> <sup>450</sup> <sup>451</sup> <sup>452</sup> <sup>453</sup> <sup>454</sup> <sup>455</sup> <sup>456</sup> <sup>457</sup> <sup>458</sup> <sup>459</sup> <sup>460</sup> <sup>461</sup> <sup>462</sup> <sup>463</sup> <sup>464</sup> <sup>465</sup> <sup>466</sup> <sup>467</sup> <sup>468</sup> <sup>469</sup> <sup>470</sup> <sup>471</sup> <sup>472</sup> <sup>473</sup> <sup>474</sup> <sup>475</sup> <sup>476</sup> <sup>477</sup> <sup>478</sup> <sup>479</sup> <sup>480</sup> <sup>481</sup> <sup>482</sup> <sup>483</sup> <sup>484</sup> <sup>485</sup> <sup>486</sup> <sup>487</sup> <sup>488</sup> <sup>489</sup> <sup>490</sup> <sup>491</sup> <sup>492</sup> <sup>493</sup> <sup>494</sup> <sup>495</sup> <sup>496</sup> <sup>497</sup> <sup>498</sup> <sup>499</sup> <sup>500</sup> <sup>501</sup> <sup>502</sup> <sup>503</sup> <sup>504</sup> <sup>505</sup> <sup>506</sup> <sup>507</sup> <sup>508</sup> <sup>509</sup> <sup>510</sup> <sup>511</sup> <sup>512</sup> <sup>513</sup> <sup>514</sup> <sup>515</sup> <sup>516</sup> <sup>517</sup> <sup>518</sup> <sup>519</sup> <sup>520</sup> <sup>521</sup> <sup>522</sup> <sup>523</sup> <sup>524</sup> <sup>525</sup> <sup>526</sup> <sup>527</sup> <sup>528</sup> <sup>529</sup> <sup>530</sup> <sup>531</sup> <sup>532</sup> <sup>533</sup> <sup>534</sup> <sup>535</sup> <sup>536</sup> <sup>537</sup> <sup>538</sup> <sup>539</sup> <sup>540</sup> <sup>541</sup> <sup>542</sup> <sup>543</sup> <sup>544</sup> <sup>545</sup> <sup>546</sup> <sup>547</sup> <sup>548</sup> <sup>549</sup> <sup>550</sup> <sup>551</sup> <sup>552</sup> <sup>553</sup> <sup>554</sup> <sup>555</sup> <sup>556</sup> <sup>557</sup> <sup>558</sup> <sup>559</sup> <sup>560</sup> <sup>561</sup> <sup>562</sup> <sup>563</sup> <sup>564</sup> <sup>565</sup> <sup>566</sup> <sup>567</sup> <sup>568</sup> <sup>569</sup> <sup>570</sup> <sup>571</sup> <sup>572</sup> <sup>573</sup> <sup>574</sup> <sup>575</sup> <sup>576</sup> <sup>577</sup> <sup>578</sup> <sup>579</sup> <sup>580</sup> <sup>581</sup> <sup>582</sup> <sup>583</sup> <sup>584</sup> <sup>585</sup> <sup>586</sup> <sup>587</sup> <sup>588</sup> <sup>589</sup> <sup>590</sup> <sup>591</sup> <sup>592</sup> <sup>593</sup> <sup>594</sup> <sup>595</sup> <sup>596</sup> <sup>597</sup> <sup>598</sup> <sup>599</sup> <sup>600</sup> <sup>601</sup> <sup>602</sup> <sup>603</sup> <sup>604</sup> <sup>605</sup> <sup>606</sup> <sup>607</sup> <sup>608</sup> <sup>609</sup> <sup>610</sup> <sup>611</sup> <sup>612</sup> <sup>613</sup> <sup>614</sup> <sup>615</sup> <sup>616</sup> <sup>617</sup> <sup>618</sup> <sup>619</sup> <sup>620</sup> <sup>621</sup> <sup>622</sup> <sup>623</sup> <sup>624</sup> <sup>625</sup> <sup>626</sup> <sup>627</sup> <sup>628</sup> <sup>629</sup> <sup>630</sup> <sup>631</sup> <sup>632</sup> <sup>633</sup> <sup>634</sup> <sup>635</sup> <sup>636</sup> <sup>637</sup> <sup>638</sup> <sup>639</sup> <sup>640</sup> <sup>641</sup> <sup>642</sup> <sup>643</sup> <sup>644</sup> <sup>645</sup> <sup>646</sup> <sup>647</sup> <sup>648</sup> <sup>649</sup> <sup>650</sup> <sup>651</sup> <sup>652</sup> <sup>653</sup> <sup>654</sup> <sup>655</sup> <sup>656</sup> <sup>657</sup> <sup>658</sup> <sup>659</sup> <sup>660</sup> <sup>661</sup> <sup>662</sup> <sup>663</sup> <sup>664</sup> <sup>665</sup> <sup>666</sup> <sup>667</sup> <sup>668</sup> <sup>669</sup> <sup>670</sup> <sup>671</sup> <sup>672</sup> <sup>673</sup> <sup>674</sup> <sup>675</sup> <sup>676</sup> <sup>677</sup> <sup>678</sup> <sup>679</sup> <sup>680</sup> <sup>681</sup> <sup>682</sup> <sup>683</sup> <sup>684</sup> <sup>685</sup> <sup>686</sup> <sup>687</sup> <sup>688</sup> <sup>689</sup> <sup>690</sup> <sup>691</sup> <sup>692</sup> <sup>693</sup> <sup>694</sup> <sup>695</sup> <sup>696</sup> <sup>697</sup> <sup>698</sup> <sup>699</sup> <sup>700</sup> <sup>701</sup> <sup>702</sup> <sup>703</sup> <sup>704</sup> <sup>705</sup> <sup>706</sup> <sup>707</sup> <sup>708</sup> <sup>709</sup> <sup>710</sup> <sup>711</sup> <sup>712</sup> <sup>713</sup> <sup>714</sup> <sup>715</sup> <sup>716</sup> <sup>717</sup> <sup>718</sup> <sup>719</sup> <sup>720</sup> <sup>721</sup> <sup>722</sup> <sup>723</sup> <sup>724</sup> <sup>725</sup> <sup>726</sup> <sup>727</sup> <sup>728</sup> <sup>729</sup> <sup>730</sup> <sup>731</sup> <sup>732</sup> <sup>733</sup> <sup>734</sup> <sup>735</sup> <sup>736</sup> <sup>737</sup> <sup>738</sup> <sup>739</sup> <sup>740</sup> <sup>741</sup> <sup>742</sup> <sup>743</sup> <sup>744</sup> <sup>745</sup> <sup>746</sup> <sup>747</sup> <sup>748</sup> <sup>749</sup> <sup>750</sup> <sup>751</sup> <sup>752</sup> <sup>753</sup> <sup>754</sup> <sup>755</sup> <sup>756</sup> <sup>757</sup> <sup>758</sup> <sup>759</sup> <sup>760</sup> <sup>761</sup> <sup>762</sup> <sup>763</sup> <sup>764</sup> <sup>765</sup> <sup>766</sup> <sup>767</sup> <sup>768</sup> <sup>769</sup> <sup>770</sup> <sup>771</sup> <sup>772</sup> <sup>773</sup> <sup>774</sup> <sup>775</sup> <sup>776</sup> <sup>777</sup> <sup>778</sup> <sup>779</sup> <sup>780</sup> <sup>781</sup> <sup>782</sup> <sup>783</sup> <sup>784</sup> <sup>785</sup> <sup>786</sup> <sup>787</sup> <sup>788</sup> <sup>789</sup> <sup>790</sup> <sup>791</sup> <sup>792</sup> <sup>793</sup> <sup>794</sup> <sup>795</sup> <sup>796</sup> <sup>797</sup> <sup>798</sup> <sup>799</sup> <sup>800</sup> <sup>801</sup> <sup>802</sup> <sup>803</sup> <sup>804</sup> <sup>805</sup> <sup>806</sup> <sup>807</sup> <sup>808</sup> <sup>809</sup> <sup>810</sup> <sup>811</sup> <sup>812</sup> <sup>813</sup> <sup>814</sup> <sup>815</sup> <sup>816</sup> <sup>817</sup> <sup>818</sup> <sup>819</sup> <sup>820</sup> <sup>821</sup> <sup>822</sup> <sup>823</sup> <sup>824</sup> <sup>825</sup> <sup>826</sup> <sup>827</sup> <sup>828</sup> <sup>829</sup> <sup>830</sup> <sup>831</sup> <sup>832</sup> <sup>833</sup> <sup>834</sup> <sup>835</sup> <sup>836</sup> <sup>837</sup> <sup>838</sup> <sup>839</sup> <sup>840</sup> <sup>841</sup> <sup>842</sup> <sup>843</sup> <sup>844</sup> <sup>845</sup> <sup>846</sup> <sup>847</sup> <sup>848</sup> <sup>849</sup> <sup>850</sup> <sup>851</sup> <sup>852</sup> <sup>853</sup> <sup>854</sup> <sup>855</sup> <sup>856</sup> <sup>857</sup> <sup>858</sup> <sup>859</sup> <sup>860</sup> <sup>861</sup> <sup>862</sup> <sup>863</sup> <sup>864</sup> <sup>865</sup> <sup>866</sup> <sup>867</sup> <sup>868</sup> <sup>869</sup> <sup>870</sup> <sup>871</sup> <sup>872</sup> <sup>873</sup> <sup>874</sup> <sup>875</sup> <sup>876</sup> <sup>877</sup> <sup>878</sup> <sup>879</sup> <sup>880</sup> <sup>881</sup> <sup>882</sup> <sup>883</sup> <sup>884</sup> <sup>885</sup> <sup>886</sup> <sup>887</sup> <sup>888</sup> <sup>889</sup> <sup>890</sup> <sup>891</sup> <sup>892</sup> <sup>893</sup> <sup>894</sup> <sup>895</sup> <sup>896</sup> <sup>897</sup> <sup>898</sup> <sup>899</sup> <sup>900</sup> <sup>901</sup> <sup>902</sup> <sup>903</sup> <sup>904</sup> <sup>905</sup> <sup>906</sup> <sup>907</sup> <sup>908</sup> <sup>909</sup> <sup>910</sup> <sup>911</sup> <sup>912</sup> <sup>913</sup> <sup>914</sup> <sup>915</sup> <sup>916</sup> <sup>917</sup> <sup>918</sup> <sup>919</sup> <sup>920</sup> <sup>921</sup> <sup>922</sup> <sup>923</sup> <sup>924</sup> <sup>925</sup> <sup>926</sup> <sup>927</sup> <sup>928</sup> <sup>929</sup> <sup>930</sup> <sup>931</sup> <sup>932</sup> <sup>933</sup> <sup>934</sup> <sup>935</sup> <sup>936</sup> <sup>937</sup> <sup>938</sup> <sup>939</sup> <sup>940</sup> <sup>941</sup> <sup>942</sup> <sup>943</sup> <sup>944</sup> <sup>945</sup> <sup>946</sup> <sup>947</sup> <sup>948</sup> <sup>949</sup> <sup>950</sup> <sup>951</sup> <sup>952</sup> <sup>953</sup> <sup>954</sup> <sup>955</sup> <sup>956</sup> <sup>957</sup> <sup>958</sup> <sup>959</sup> <sup>960</sup> <sup>961</sup> <sup>962</sup> <sup>963</sup> <sup>964</sup> <sup>965</sup> <sup>966</sup> <sup>967</sup> <sup>968</sup> <sup>969</sup> <sup>970</sup> <sup>971</sup> <sup>972</sup> <sup>973</sup> <sup>974</sup> <sup>975</sup> <sup>976</sup> <sup>977</sup> <sup>978</sup> <sup>979</sup> <sup>980</sup> <sup>981</sup> <sup>982</sup> <sup>983</sup> <sup>984</sup> <sup>985</sup> <sup>986</sup> <sup>987</sup> <sup>988</sup> <sup>989</sup> <sup>990</sup> <sup>991</sup> <sup>992</sup> <sup>993</sup> <sup>994</sup> <sup>995</sup> <sup>996</sup> <sup>997</sup> <sup>998</sup> <sup>999</sup> <sup>1000</sup> <sup>1001</sup> <sup>1002</sup> <sup>1003</sup> <sup>1004</sup> <sup>1005</sup> <sup>1006</sup> <sup>1007</sup> <sup>1008</sup> <sup>1009</sup> <sup>1010</sup> <sup>1011</sup> <sup>1012</sup> <sup>1013</sup> <sup>1014</sup> <sup>1015</sup> <sup>1016</sup> <sup>1017</sup> <sup>1018</sup> <sup>1019</sup> <sup>1020</sup> <sup>1021</sup> <sup>1022</sup> <sup>1023</sup> <sup>1024</sup> <sup>1025</sup> <sup>1026</sup> <sup>1027</sup> <sup>1028</sup> <sup>1029</sup> <sup>1030</sup> <sup>1031</sup> <sup>1032</sup> <sup>1033</sup> <sup>1034</sup> <sup>1035</sup> <sup>1036</sup> <sup>1037</sup> <sup>1038</sup> <sup>1039</sup> <sup>1040</sup> <sup>1041</sup> <sup>1042</sup> <sup>1043</sup> <sup>1044</sup> <sup>1045</sup> <sup>1046</sup> <sup>1047</sup> <sup>1048</sup> <sup>1049</sup> <sup>1050</sup> <sup>1051</sup> <sup>1052</sup> <sup>1053</sup> <sup>1054</sup> <sup>1055</sup> <sup>1056</sup> <sup>1057</sup> <sup>1058</sup> <sup>1059</sup> <sup>1060</sup> <sup>1061</sup> <sup>1062</sup> <sup>1063</sup> <sup>1064</sup> <sup>1065</sup> <sup>1066</sup> <sup>1067</sup> <sup>1068</sup> <sup>1069</sup> <sup>1070</sup> <sup>1071</sup> <sup>1072</sup> <sup>1073</sup> <sup>1074</sup> <sup>1075</sup> <sup>1076</sup> <sup>1077</sup> <sup>1078</sup> <sup>1079</sup> <sup>1080</sup> <sup>1081</sup> <sup>1082</sup> <sup>1083</sup> <sup>1084</sup> <sup>1085</sup> <sup>1086</sup> <sup>1087</sup> <sup>1088</sup> <sup>1089</sup> <sup>1090</sup> <sup>1091</sup> <sup>1092</sup> <sup>1093</sup> <sup>1094</sup> <sup>1095</sup> <sup>1096</sup> <sup>1097</sup> <sup>1098</sup> <sup>1099</sup> <sup>1100</sup> <sup>1101</sup> <sup>1102</sup> <sup>1103</sup> <sup>1104</sup> <sup>1105</sup> <sup>1106</sup> <sup>1107</sup> <sup>1108</sup> <sup>1109</sup> <sup>1110</sup> <sup>1111</sup> <sup>1112</sup> <sup>1113</sup> <sup>1114</sup> <sup>1115</sup> <sup>1116</sup> <sup>1117</sup> <sup>1118</sup> <sup>1119</sup> <sup>1120</sup> <sup>1121</sup> <sup>1122</sup> <sup>1123</sup> <sup>1124</sup> <sup>1125</sup> <sup>1126</sup> <sup>1127</sup> <sup>1128</sup> <sup>1129</sup> <sup>1130</sup> <sup>1131</sup> <sup>1132</sup> <sup>1133</sup> <sup>1134</sup> <sup>1135</sup> <sup>1136</sup> <sup>1137</sup> <sup>1138</sup> <sup>1139</sup> <sup>1140</sup> <sup>1141</sup> <sup>1142</sup> <sup>1143</sup> <sup>1144</sup> <sup>1145</sup> <sup>1146</sup> <sup>1147</sup> <sup>1148</sup> <sup>1149</sup> <sup>1150</sup> <sup>1151</sup> <sup>1152</sup> <sup>1153</sup> <sup>1154</sup> <sup>1155</sup> <sup>1156</sup> <sup>1157</sup> <sup>1158</sup> <sup>1159</sup> <sup>1160</sup> <sup>1161</sup> <sup>1162</sup> <sup>1163</sup> <sup>1164</sup> <sup>1165</sup> <sup>1166</sup> <sup>1167</sup> <sup>1168</sup> <sup>1169</sup> <sup>1170</sup> <sup>1171</sup> <sup>1172</sup> <sup>1173</sup> <sup>1174</sup> <sup>1175</sup> <sup>1176</sup> <sup>1177</sup> <sup>1178</sup> <sup>1179</sup> <sup>1180</sup> <sup>1181</sup> <sup>1182</sup> <sup>1183</sup> <sup>1184</sup> <sup>1185</sup> <sup>1186</sup> <sup>1187</sup> <sup>1188</sup> <sup>1189</sup> <sup>1190</sup> <sup>1191</sup> <sup>1192</sup> <sup>1193</sup> <sup>1194</sup> <sup>1195</sup> <sup>1196</sup> <sup>1197</sup> <sup>1198</sup> <sup>1199</sup> <sup>1200</sup> <sup>1201</sup> <sup>1202</sup> <sup>1203</sup> <sup>1204</sup> <sup>1205</sup> <sup>1206</sup> <sup>1207</sup> <sup>1208</sup> <sup>1209</sup> <sup>1210</sup> <sup>1211</sup> <sup>1212</sup> <sup>1213</sup> <sup>1214</sup> <sup>1215</sup> <sup>1216</sup> <sup>1217</sup> <sup>1218</sup> <sup>1219</sup> <sup>1220</sup> <sup>1221</sup> <sup>1222</sup> <sup>1223</sup> <sup>1224</sup> <sup>1225</sup> <sup>1226</sup> <sup>1227</sup> <sup>1228</sup> <sup>1229</sup> <sup>1230</sup> <sup>1231</sup> <sup>1232</sup> <sup>1233</sup> <sup>1234</sup> <sup>1235</sup> <sup>1236</sup> <sup>1237</sup> <sup>1238</sup> <sup>1239</sup> <sup>1240</sup> <sup>1241</sup> <sup>1242</sup> <sup>1243</sup> <sup>1244</sup> <sup>1245</sup> <sup>1246</sup> <sup>1247</sup> <sup>1248</sup> <sup>1249</sup> <sup>1250</sup> <sup>1251</sup> <sup>1252</sup> <sup>1253</sup> <sup>1254</sup> <sup>1255</sup> <sup>1256</sup> <sup>1257</sup> <sup>1258</sup> <sup>1259</sup> <sup>1260</sup> <sup>1261</sup> <sup>1262</sup> <sup>1263</sup> <sup>1264</sup> <sup>1265</sup> <sup>1266</sup> <sup>1267</sup> <sup>1268</sup> <sup>1269</sup> <sup>1270</sup> <sup>1271</sup> <sup>1272</sup> <sup>1273</sup> <sup>1274</sup> <sup>1275</sup> <sup>1276</sup> <sup>1277</sup> <sup>1278</sup> <sup>1279</sup> <sup>1280</sup> <sup>1281</sup> <sup>1282</sup> <sup>1283</sup> <sup>1284</sup> <sup>1285</sup> <sup>1286</sup> <sup>1287</sup> <sup>1288</sup> <sup>1289</sup> <sup>1290</sup> <sup>1291</sup> <sup>1292</sup> <sup>1293</sup> <sup>1294</sup> <sup>1295</sup> <sup>1296</sup>

ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν, εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν ἐνὶ σώματι καὶ εὐχα-ριστοὶ γίνεσθε. <sup>16</sup> Ὁ λόγος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐνοικεῖτω ἐν ὑμῖν πλουσίως ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, διδάσκοντες καὶ νουθετοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς ἐν χάριτι ᾄδοντες ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ. <sup>17</sup> Καὶ πᾶν ὃ τι ἂν ποιῆτε ἐν λόγῳ ἢ ἐν ἔργῳ, πάντα ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ δι' αὐτοῦ.

<sup>18</sup> Αἱ γυναῖκες, ὑποτάσσεσθε τοῖς [ιδίοις] ἀνδράσιν, ὡς ἀνῆκεν ἐν Κυρίῳ. <sup>19</sup> Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας, καὶ μὴ πικραίνεσθε πρὸς αὐτάς. <sup>20</sup> Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσι κατὰ πάντα· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστιν εὐάρεστον * ἐν Κυρίῳ. <sup>21</sup> Οἱ πατέρες, μὴ ἐρεθίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, ἵνα μὴ ἀθυμώσω. <sup>22</sup> Οἱ δούλοι, ὑπακούετε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς κατὰ σάρκα κυρίοις, μὴ ἐν * ὀφθαλμοδουλείᾳ ὡς ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀπλότητι καρδίας, have Χριστοῦ, which has been adopted by every Critic and Editor from Matthæi to Tisch. The question is one not easily brought to any certain determination. Taking for granted that Χριστοῦ was the original reading, we may ask how came the reading Θεοῦ? Griesb. would answer, 'from the parallel passage of Phil. iv. 7.' But the Alexandrian MS. has there not Θεοῦ, but Χριστοῦ. However, that is more prob. than the conjecture of Matthæi, that Χριστοῦ came from the next verse. Upon the whole, I am now of opinion that critical reasons are in favour of Χριστοῦ, which, were there more cursive MSS. in its favour, I should have received.—ἡ εὐχήν τ. Θ. βραβυνίται ἐν τ. κ. On reconsidering the point of dispute in βραβ., I acquiesce in the following sense: 'Let that peaceable disposition enjoined by God to all true believers be, as it were, an empire to compose all differences between you, so as to be the director of your feelings, the ruling principle of your hearts.' Comp. Phil. iv. 7, ἡ εὐχήν τοῦ Θεοῦ φρουρήσαι τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, where see note. The only other ex. of this sense known to me, is in Plut. t. ix. 35 (Reiske), ἐστὶ τις ἐφορῶν καὶ βραβύνων, ὁ Θεός.—Εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλ., i. e. 'unto which [peace] also ye were called,' i. e. on becoming Christians, and being initiated into his religion who preached peace on earth.—ἐν ἐνὶ σώματι is for εἰς ἐν σώμα, scil. εἶναι, i. e. 'that you should be one body;' inasmuch as without peace and concord, unity is out of the question; see Eph. iv. 3.—εὐχάριστοι is by some ancient and many modern Expositors interpreted, gentle, courteous, amiable. But the sense assigned by the Greek Commentators and many modern ones, including Grot., Cassaub., and Heinr., is more natural, 'be ye thankful,' i. e. feel and express thankfulness to God, viz. for having called you to such privileges and blessings. So Tanchum, fol. 24, 8, cited by Schoettgen: 'Lex sedem figat in medio ipsorum;' comp. Col. i. 9, and Eph. i. 8.—πλουσίως, 'abundantly,' 'largely.'—διδάσκοντες. This is, by anacoluthon, for διδάσκουσι. Render: 'by teaching.' Comp. Eph. iv. 29; and on the whole passage see note on Eph. v. 18.—ἐν χάριτι ᾄδοντες, i. e. 'singing with the devotion which such spiritual songs are calculated to inspire, as opposed to the profane bacchanalian songs of the heathen.' Here the Apostle seems to intend to represent the natural effect of this ἰνοικ. πλουσίως. For as 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh,' so a mind thus filled and fervently exercised will, like a full fountain, well forth and overflow in praises and thanks to God.

<sup>17</sup> τῷ δ τι, &c.] 'quod attinet ad.'—ἐν ὀνόματι K. 'i. l., meaning, 'agreeably to his will and suitably to his Gospel;' comp. 1 Cor. x. 31. In how many ways, and in what particular respects, we may and ought to perform all we do in the name of the Lord Jesus, is well pointed out by Dr. Isaac Barrow, cited by D'Oyly and Mant.—δι' αὐτοῦ. This has been variously, but in general erroneously, explained by recent Commentators. The true import of the words seems best represented by the ancient Expositors, who interpret, 'by his mediation.'

<sup>18</sup>—<sup>25</sup>. From general Paul proceeds to particular precepts.—Comp. Eph. v. 22—33. vi. 1—9.

<sup>18</sup> ὡς ἀνῆκεν] Equiv. to the δίκαιον of Eph. vi. 1. The lit. sense is, 'as is right and just,' because it is agreeable to the commandment of the Lord.—Μὴ πικρ., ver. 19 (corresponding to μὴ παροργ. in Eph. vi. 4) signif. 'not to indulge in a spirit of bitterness and exacerbatation.' In this sense the word occurs in Philo, but very rarely in the Class. writers. At ver. 20, instead of the t. rec., τῷ Κυρίῳ, many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, have ἐν Κυρίῳ, which I have adopted with almost every Editor from Bengel to Tisch.; with reason; since internal evidence confirms competent external authority.—For ὀφθαλμοδουλείᾳ, at ver. 22, I have ventured, with Lachm., to edit, from many of the most ancient MSS., and Chrys. and Theophyl., as also the parallel passage of Eph. vi. 6, ὀφθαλμοδουλαίᾳ, which was preferred by Bengel, and has been approved by Griesb. It is probable that ε was subjoined from the word following. At ver. 24, εἰδότες—κλ., the argument is directed against a possible objection; viz., 'What shall we gain by such fidelity?' The answer to which is, 'Perhaps from your master nothing; but from the Lord ye will receive,' &c. In δυν. τῆς κληρ. the Genit. is exegetical, and signif. 'the reward which consists in the inheritance of heaven in return [for your obedience on earth]'; see Eph. vi. 8. 'Ὁ ἀδικῶν, ver. 25, must be referred, not, with some, to the master, but to the servant; though, by the words καὶ οὐκ ἔστι προσωποληψία, it is hinted, that if the master do wrong he shall be punished. To prevent, however, misapprehension, this is fortified with a strong direct injunction to the masters, in the words following.

φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεόν. <sup>23</sup> Καὶ πᾶν ὃ τι ἐὰν ποιήτε, ἐκ ψυχῆς ἔργάεσθε, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώποις. <sup>24</sup> εἰδότες ὅτι ἀπὸ Κυρίου ἀπολήψεσθε τὴν ἀναπόδοσιν τῆς κληρονομίας· τῷ γὰρ Κυρίῳ Χριστῷ δουλεύετε. <sup>25</sup> Ὁ δὲ ἀδικῶν κομμεῖται ἡ δίκαιος, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι προσωποληψία. IV. <sup>1</sup> Οἱ κύριοι, τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσότητα τοῖς δούλοις παρέχεσθε, εἰδότες ὅτι καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔχετε Κύριον ἐν οὐρανοῖς.

<sup>2</sup> Τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτερεῖτε, γρηγοροῦντες ἐν αὐτῇ ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ. <sup>3</sup> προσευχόμενοι ἅμα καὶ περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς ἀνοίξῃ ἡμῖν θύραν τοῦ λόγου, λαλήσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, δι' ὃ καὶ δέδεμαι. <sup>4</sup> ἵνα φανερώσω αὐτὸ, ὡς δεῖ με λαλήσαι. <sup>5</sup> Ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγοράζοντες. <sup>6</sup> Ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν πάντοτε ἐν χάριτι, ἅλατι ἡρτυμένος, εἰδέναι πῶς δεῖ ὑμᾶς ἐνὶ ἐκάστῳ ἀποκριθεῖσθαι.

Mark 9. 50. ch. 2. 16. Eph. 4. 32.

IV. 1. This first verse closes the foregoing exhortations, and accordingly ought not to have been separated from the preceding chapter.—τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσότητα may be rendered, 'the just and equitable thing.' So Thucyd. ii. 44, οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἴσον τι ἢ δίκαιον βουλεύεσθαι, &c. &c.

2. Here commences a brief conclusion to the whole Epistle, in which the Apostle recurs to various general exhortations, headed by the most weighty one, to prayer, by the impressive expression τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτ., where προσκαρτερεῖν signif. 'to assiduously persevere in any thing,' and is used of prayer in Acts i. 14. vi. 4; compare Rom. xii. 12. xiii. 6. The phrase γρηγ. ἐν αὐτῇ, which denotes 'watchful diligence in or about any thing,' is added, to strengthen the sense. So 1 Pet. iv. 7, νήφατοι εἰς τὰς προσευχάς. The same sentiment, more fully expressed, occurs in Eph. vi. 18, where see note.

3. προσευχ. ἅμα καὶ π. ἡ.] See Eph. vi. 19. The Apostle, it would seem, desires their prayers, partly to suggest the duty of praying for each other.—ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς ἀνοίξῃ ἡμῖν θύραν τοῦ λόγου. Wets. compares a similar form of expression in Pind. Olymp. vi., χορὴ πύλας ὕμνων ἀνατίναμιν αὐταῖς. He might more appositely have cited Pseudo-Theogn. 421 (edit. Gaisf.), πολλοῖς ἀνθρώποις γλώσση θύραν οὐκ ἐπικινεῖται ἀρμόδια, καὶ σφιν πολλὰ ἀμύλητα μέλει, where I would read, from Stobæus, θύρα—ἐπικινεῖται ἀρμόδιᾳ,—ἀλάλητα and πύλαι, the sense being, as appears from the next verses, that 'to many men there is no ready door of speech by the tongue, so that to them many things are found to be inexpressible.' There θύρα stands for θύρα λόγου, fucultas sermonis. The writer had probably in mind this very passage of the Apostle, or that of Rom. viii. 26, στραγαμοῖς ἀλαλήτοις. On θύραν, see note on Acts xiv. 27. 4. ὡς δεῖ με λαλήσαι.] On this passage the best comment is the parallel one at Eph. vi. 19, 20, where see notes. By ὡς δεῖ is meant, 'boldly,' 'authoritatively,' as one empowered to do so from being Apostle of the Gentiles.

5. ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω.] By σοφία is to be understood φρονήσις, 'a wise discretion in their conduct,' such as to afford no handle of accusation against them (see 1 Thess. iv. 12), nor give any unnecessary offence, by ascetic austerity or by a repulsive acerbity of demeanour. Thus, in 1 Pet. iii. 8, they are enjoined to be not only φιλᾶδελφοί, but φιλόφρονες.—Τοὺς ἔξω, i. e. 'those who are without the fold of Christ,' whether Heathens or Jews. On τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγ., see the note on Eph. v. 15, 16.

6. ἐν χάριτι.] The best Expositors are agreed that ἐν χάριτι is for ἐπίχαρις, or χαρίσις, 'congruous,' 'agreeable,' as opposed to 'ascetic austerity,' and therefore likely to make them esteemed. This will tend to fix the sense of the disputed phrase ἅλατι ἡρτ., which must not, with many, be interpreted of Divine wisdom, but have the sense 'seasoned with the savour of, made agreeable by being blended with, wisdom' (of which ἅλτι was the symbol), and thus made more palatable to the hearers. See note Matt. xiii. 50. The Apostle means, I conceive, that kind of talent, which shows itself in terseness of thought and smartness of expression. Comp. Plut. de Garrul. ch. xiii., χάριν τιὰ παρασκευάζοντες ἀλλήλοις ὥστερ' ἀλοιᾶς· ἐφθέρουνσι διατριβὴν καὶ τὴν πράξιν. Thus they would be better enabled, as the Apostle adds, to give an answer to any one who asked them a reason of the hope that was in them; and would f Acts 26. 4. 7 'Τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ πάντα γνωρίσει ὑμῖν Τυχικὸς ὁ ἀγαπητὸς

 Eph. 6. 21. ἀδελφὸς, καὶ πιστὸς διάκονος καὶ σύνδουλος ἐν Κυρίῳ. 8 ὃν
 3 Tim. 4. 13. ἔπεμψα πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ἵνα γινῶ τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, καὶ g Philem. 10. παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν. 9 ὃς ἐστὶν ἐξ ὑμῶν πάντα ὑμῖν γνωριούσι
 h Acts 18. 27. τὰ ὧδε. 10 h' Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἀρίσταρχος ὁ συναυχμαλώτος & 19. 29. μου, καὶ Μάρκος ὁ ἀνεψιὸς Βαρνάβα, περὶ οὗ ἐλάβετε ἐντολὰς, & 30. 4. (ἐὰν ἔλθῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, δέξασθε αὐτόν) 11 καὶ Ἰησοῦς ὁ λεγό-
 3 Tim. 4. 11. μενος Ἰούστος, οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περιτομῆς, οὗτοι μόνον συνεργοὶ εἰς Philem. 24. τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, οἵτινες ἐγενήθησάν μοι παρηγορία.
 1 Pet. 5. 13. 12 i' Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἐπαφρᾶς ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν, δούλος Χριστοῦ, 1 Rom. 16. 30. πάντοτε ἀγωνιζόμενος ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐν ταῖς προσευχαίς, ἵνα στήτε
 ch. 1. 7. τέλειοι καὶ πεπληρωμένοι ἐν παντὶ θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ. 13 μαρ-Philem. 28. τυρῶ γὰρ αὐτῷ, ὅτι ἔχει ζῆλον πολλὸν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν k 3 Tim. 4. 10, 11. Λαοδικείᾳ καὶ τῶν ἐν Ἱεραπόλει. 14 k' ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Λουκᾶς Philem. 24. ὁ ἱατρός, ὁ ἀγαπητὸς, καὶ Δημᾶς. 15 l' ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐν Λαοδι-
 1 Rom. 16. 2. κειᾳ ἀδελφούς, καὶ Νυμφᾶν καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτοῦ ἐκκλη-
 1 Cor. 15. 18. σίαν. 16 m Καὶ ὅταν ἀναγνωσθῇ παρ' ὑμῖν ἡ ἐπιστολὴ, ποιήσατε m 1 Thess. 5. 27. ἵνα καὶ ἐν τῇ Λαοδικέῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀναγνωσθῇ, καὶ τὴν ἐκ Λαοδιn Philem. 2. κείας ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀναγνῶτε. 17 n καὶ εἶπατε Ἀρχιππῷ. "Βλέπε τὴν διακονίαν ἣν παρέλαβες ἐν Κυρίῳ, ἵνα αὐτὴν πληροῖς."
 18 o' Ὁ ἀσπασμὸς τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου. Μνημονεύετε μου τῶν δεσμῶν. ἡ χάρις μετ' ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Κολοσσαεῖς ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης διὰ Τυχικοῦ καὶ Ὀνησίμου.

make it more effectual, by being appropriate, and adapted to circumstances.

7—18. This portion corresponds to Eph. vi. 21—24; where see notes. On ἀγασ. ἄδ. see note on Phil. ii. 25, and Eph. vi. 21. On the words παρακ. τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, see supra ii. 2, and notes.

9. ὃς ἐστὶν ἐξ ὑμῶν 'who is of you;' i. e. 'who is your countryman;' see infra v. 12. We learn from Theodoret that this Onesimus was the runaway slave of Philemon, converted by Paul, and concerning whom he wrote his Epistle to Philemon.—τὰ ὧδε, 'the present state of his affairs.'

10. Now commences the last portion of the Epistle, consisting of salutations and confirmations.

11. οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περιτ. i. e. 'who are Jewish Christians.'—οἵτινες must be resolved into καὶ οὗτοι, as was done by the Pesch. Syr. Translator.—παρηγορία is used, according to the popular idiom (found also in our own language), for παρηγοροί, or for οἱ περὶ μοι παρηγοροῦν.—Συνεργοὶ εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, not, 'as the kingdom of God,' as Wakef. and Mackn. render after the Syr. and Vulg. Versions (a sense which would require ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ), nor, 'as to the kingdom,' with Abp. Newc., but, as it is rendered in our authorized Version, 'unto the kingdom,' for the spreading of the kingdom of God in the Gospel. So Xen. Symp. viii. 38, εἰς ταῦτα σ., and Mem. iv. 3, 10, εἰς πόλεμον σ.

Thus it is nearly equivalent to σ. τῇ βασιλείᾳ, a construction occurring in 3 John 8, σ. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ.

12. πάντοτε ἀγωνιζόμενος ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐν ταῖς προσευχαίς] Render: 'continually striving for you in prayers to God on your behalf;' where we have a forcible expression to denote the most earnest and fervent prayer, such as that spoken of at James v. 16. Comp. Rom. xv. 30. Στήναι has here the same force as at Eph. vi. 13, καὶ πάντα καταργασάμενοι στήναι, and Phil. i. 27, and Gal. v. 1. On τέλειοι see 1 Cor. ii. 6, and Eph. iv. 13.—πεπλ. means 'thoroughly endued with all spiritual gifts and graces.'—ἐν παντὶ θελ. is for εἰς τὸ πᾶν θέλημα. So Eph. iii. 19, ἵνα πληρωθῇτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλῆρμα τοῦ Θεοῦ. There is, however, a blending of two modes of expression,—the sense being, fully 'complete in all the will of God.'

16. τὴν ἐκ Λαοδ.] These words have been thought to refer to a lost Epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans. But as no other certain instance is on record of a lost Epistle of the Apostle's, we may hesitate to admit that to have been the case here, and suppose that the Epistle in question was another copy of that to the Ephesians, that being in some measure a circular one.

18. μνημ. μ. τ. δεσμ.] q. d. 'Be so mindful, as to imitate my courageous constancy in the faith;' for such Paul's example would be a continual remembrance.

ΠΑΤΡΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΘΕΣΣΑΛΟΝΙΚΕΙΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ

Ι. 1<sup>a</sup> ΠΑΤΡΟΣ καὶ Σιλωνανὸς καὶ Τιμόθεος τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ<sup>a 2 Cor. 1. 19.</sup>
Θεσσαλονικέων ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ χάρις<sup>Eph. 1. 2.</sup>
<sup>2 Thess. 1. 1.</sup>
<sup>1 Pet. 5. 12.</sup>

CHRISTIANITY was first planted at Thessalonica,—a large, populous, wealthy, and commercial city, the metropolis of the Provincia Secunda of Macedonia, and the seat of a Roman President and Quæstor,—by St. Paul, on his second missionary progress through Asia Minor to Macedonia and Greece, during the autumn of A.D. 51. The Thessalonian Church was formed partly of Jews, but chiefly of Gentiles, mostly Jewish proselytes, esp. females of the higher ranks. The unbelieving Jews, however, having, as usual, excited a persecution against the Apostle, he was forced to leave the newly planted Church, after a stay of only four or five weeks [comp. Phil. iv. 16 with 2 Thess. ii. 2], (indeed his sojourn was too short to enable him to instruct the believers fully in the doctrines of the Gospel,) under great trials and many disadvantages, and to flee to Berœa, whither he was followed by the Thessalonian Jews, and from thence to Athens, and finally to Corinth; from which last place this Epistle is generally admitted to have been sent. The immediate occasion of its being written was the favourable report which Timothy, whom he had sent to visit them in his stead (1 Thess. iii. 1—6), had given of the steadfastness of the Thessalonians in the faith. But though St. Paul found in the state of things, as reported to him, much to commend, and nothing of great importance to censure, yet he thought proper, on account of the temptations to which the converts were exposed, from the evil communications of Jews and Heathens, to intermix cassations and warnings with his commendations and exhortations, and to establish and strengthen them in the faith of the Gospel. In short, one leading design of the Apostle, in writing this Epistle, was to confirm the Thessalonians in the faith, to exhort them to a courageous profession of it (notwithstanding the persecutions of the unbelieving Jews); and, above all, to excite them to such a practice of its moral duties, as was becoming their high and holy calling. This was the more necessary, since there is reason to think that they were not free from that uncleanness, which was a remnant of heathenism, and for which, as we learn from the Asians of Lucian, their city, like other wealthy commercial cities, was notorious. The genuineness of this Epistle has never been doubted, being attested by citations from or references to it in the early Fathers, from the time of Polycarp downwards. It is almost universally admitted to have been the first written of St. Paul's Epistles,—though on the precise date the learned, as usual, differ. Suffice it to say, it could not well be written earlier than the spring of 52, or the autumn of 51, nor later than 53. In style it is more simple and perspicuous than that of any other of St. Paul's Epistles; and it is characterized by deep earnestness, and an affectionate spirit. He first reminds them of the formidable difficulties which he had to encounter in accomplishing their conversion; and warns them against those heathen impurities, which they had so lately practised, and even now not fully abandoned. In order to account for the introduction of so much matter on a topic (that of the Resurrection), which, besides this and the second Epistle to the Thessalonians, Paul has not handled elsewhere, except in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, ch. xv. (there more at large), we must bear in mind certain peculiarities in the state of things among the Thessalonian converts, which may be gathered from various passages of this and the second Epistle, and may serve to account for the course which Paul adopted. The expectation of Christ's speedy re-appearance and advent (perhaps occasioned by misinterpretations of Paul's words on the subject of the ἰσχυραὶ ἡμέραι, or χρόνοι, see 2 Tim. iii. 1. Heb. i. 2. James v. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 3), would be likely to produce enthusiastic feelings in many, and a spirit of restless excitement in more, prejudicial to the regular perb Eph. 1. 16. ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ

 2 Thess. 1. 2. Χριστοῦ.

2<sup>b</sup> Εὐχαριστοῦμεν τῷ Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ πάντων ὑμῶν, μνησῶν ὑμῶν ποιοῦμενοι ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν ὑμῶν ἀδιαλείπτως, 3<sup>c</sup> μνημο-νεύοντες ὑμῶν τοῦ ἔργου τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης, καὶ τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν 4<sup>d</sup> εἰδότες, ἀδελφοὶ ἡγαπημένοι ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, τὴν ἐκλογὴν ὑμῶν, 5<sup>e</sup> ὅτι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον formance of the ordinary duties of life. And no wonder; since the very idea of the Lord's speedy and sudden coming might make them indifferent to the labours and cares of earth, and, by transporting them beyond the present life, so to engross their thoughts, as to indispose them for a due attention to secular affairs. I agree with Dr. Davidson, that the enthusiastic addresses of prophets (or those who affected to be such) had led to the opposite extreme, of a want of due toleration for such as were gifted with a genuine inspiration; so that thus an excessive dread of fanaticism had led many to class all utterances of spirit, whether genuine or not, under the same category. Hence we may well account for the injunction at ch. v. 19—21, τὸ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβέννυται· προφητείας μὴ ἐξουθενεῖται· πάντα δοκιμάζετε· τὸ καλὸν κατέχετε, where see notes. It only remains for me to remark, that the great object the Apostle had in view in addressing this Epistle to the Thessalonians, drawn up so suitably to their particular circumstances,—was to encourage, yet admonish; to strengthen, confirm, settle them; to encourage them to continue steadfast in the faith; and to seriously admonish and exhort them concerning many things which they ought to abandon, and others to reform and rectify. Then, after inculcating brotherly love, the Apostle settles some points with regard to the resurrection (on which sundry erroneous notions were entertained); and enjoins them to a due preparation for the advent of Christ to judgment; after which he concludes with various practical counsels and instructions.

1. Σιλβανός] Silvanus, or Silas, is first mentioned in Acts xv. 22.—Τιμόθεος. See note on Acts xvi. 1. At ἐν Θεῷ supply οὐσιν. At Θεσσαλ. the Article τῷ would, strictly speaking, be necessary; but it might very well be omitted.

2. Here commences the exordium; with which compare similar ones at Rom. i. 8—10. Eph. i. 16. 2 Tim. i. 3. 2 Thess. i. 3. ii. 13, where see notes.—ἀδιαλείπτως, for πολλάκις (as at ii. 15. v. 17),—namely, 'at every return of prayer;' see note on Rom. i. 9.

3. τοῦ ἔργου—ἐλπίδος] This is by Koppe and many of the more recent Commentators regarded as a mere periphrasis, equiv. to πίστεως, καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ ἐλπίδος. But surely ἔργου and κόπου must have an intensive effect, and denote, in the former case, zeal and constancy, and in the latter, alacrity and diligence. To advert to particulars: 'As (observes Prof. Schott in his excellent edition of this Epistle) in the words following, κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης and ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος are so used that the former Substantive indicates the thing as arising from the latter, so ἔργου τῆς πίστος ('opus quod ex fide proficiscitur') denotes 'sentendi agendique ratio ex persuasione Christiana oriunda;' nearly equiv. in sense to πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη in Gal. v. 6.' By τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης is meant 'that diligence of exertion which springs from love,' nearly equiv. to ἀγάπης κοτίσση. Thus, again, τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος denotes 'that constancy of endurance which springs from hope [in Christ for salvation].' Thus it is nearly equiv. to ἐλπίδος ὑπομονούσης.—Τοῦ Κυρίου is a Genit. of object, for eis τὸν Κύριον, 'hope reposed in the Lord, as the only bestower of salvation.'—ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c. This form is by many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to the three nouns, πίστ., ἀγ., and ἐλπ., and supposed to intimate, by a Hebraism, the purity and sincerity of those virtues. Others, however, connect the words with μνημ., and understand them of prayers to God. This latter view is supported by the Peach. Syr., and is, not without reason, preferred by the best Expositors, from Benson to Pelt, in his judicious Commentary on this Epistle. And so also Calvin, who well remarks, that 'this was added in order to give more weight to the affirmation.'

4. εἰδότες, &c.] Eidótes here, as well as μνημ. at ver. 3, depends on the words of ver. 2, εὐχαριστοῦμεν—προσευχῶν ὑμῶν ἐδ.—Ἐπὶ Θεοῦ must be construed, not with τὴν ἐκλογὴν, but with ἡγαπημένοι, as propriety of language almost requires, and the usage of the Apostle elsewhere (as 2 Thess. ii. 13, and Col. iii. 12) confirms. By ἐκλογ. some understand the absolute election of the persons, as individuals, to eternal life. But from iii. 5, and v. 14, and 2 Thess. iii. 11, it appears that some were disobedient, and in danger of falling away. Hence the best Commentators, from Chrysostom down to Pelt and Schott, interpret it of their election to external privileges as a Church.

5. The scope of this verse seems to be, to intimate a full persuasion that this conversion of the Thessalonians to the Christian faith was marked by the efficiency of Divine power, as attested by the most indubitable signs, which are then subjoined.—τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν, meaning, 'our preaching of the Gospel,' or 'the Gospel as preached by us;' as in ii. 4. Rom. xvi. 25. Gal. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 8. With ἐπεσθῇ eis ὑμᾶς ('ad vos pervenit'), Pelt compares Gal. iii. 14, ἵνα eis τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία γίνηται. The words ἐν δυνάμει καὶ ἐν Πν. ἁγ. (put for ἐν δυν. τοῦ Πν. ἁγ.) are by many eminent Expositors understood of the miracles worked, and the supernatural gifts imparted by St. Paul; see Rom. xv. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 4. The sense, however,

ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐγενήθη εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν λόγῳ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν δυνάμει
καὶ ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, καὶ ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ· καθὼς οἴδατε οἱ ἐγενήθημεν ἐν ὑμῖν δι' ὑμᾶς. <sup>6</sup> Καὶ ὑμεῖς μιμηταὶ ἡμῶν <sup>f1 Cor. 11. 1.</sup>
ἐγενήθητε καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, δεξάμενοι τὸν λόγον ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ, <sup>Heb. 10. 34.</sup> μετὰ χαρᾶς Πνεύματος ἁγίου <sup>Acts 13. 52.</sup> ὥστε γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς † τύπους πᾶσι τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐν τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ καὶ τῇ Ἀχαΐᾳ. <sup>8</sup> Ἄφ' <sup>g Rom. 10.</sup> ὑμῶν γὰρ ἐξήχηται ὁ λόγος τοῦ Κυρίου οὐ μόνον ἐν τῇ Μακε- <sup>13. & 1. 5.</sup> δονίᾳ καὶ Ἀχαΐᾳ, ἀλλὰ [καὶ] ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν ἡ <sup>Thess. 1. 4.</sup> πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἐξελέλυθεν ὥστε μὴ χρεῖαν ἡμᾶς ἔχειν λαλεῖν τι. <sup>g John 12.</sup> must not be confined to these; but the words are to be understood also, nay, chiefly, of the internal power of the Gospel, in its ordinary influences on the heart, effected by the Holy Spirit, and attested by the fruits of the Spirit.—ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ, scil. τῇ πίστει, equiv. to ἐν πίστει πεληροφορομένη, Heb. x. 22. In the last clause of the verse, καθὼς οἴδατε—δι' ὑμᾶς, there is an appeal to the knowledge of the readers themselves,—the Apostle adverting to another evidence of the truth of the Gospel preached,—namely, from the conduct of the preachers of it,—pointing to himself as an example,—who, by his purity, disinterestedness (as shown in working with his hands, ii. 9), and other moral virtues, had so fully proved his sincerity, and the truth of that Gospel which he preached.—οἷος here, as at 2 Tim. ii. 11, is used in a good sense, like the Latin 'qualis,' 'what manner of persons in our conduct.' See Theophyl. and Theodor. The sense here intimated is fully expressed infra ii. 10, ὑμεῖς μάρτυρες ὅτι δόξα καὶ δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἀμείψεται ὑμῖν ἐγενήθημεν. In fact, the general sense intended is, 'ye well know [and can testify] with what Divine power and πληροφορία we have taught you, and with what alacrity and patient endurance we have borne the sufferings we had to undergo for yours and the Gospel's sake.'—δι' ὑμᾶς, 'for your sakes, for your good, not for our own private interest.'

6. καὶ ὑμεῖς μιμ. ἡμ.—Κυρίου] 'yea, ye have become imitators of us, and [so] of the Lord.' The imitation here enjoined is not, I conceive (what most Expositors explain it), an imitation of Christ and the Apostles in bearing afflictions, but, as Zanch, Grot., Dodd., and Pelt, understand, in a general way, though, of course, including the other, as is plain from the words ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ, which form an intermediate semi-clause, thrown in, to note a circumstance attendant on the principal subject of the sentence,—their imitation of the Lord; namely, that it was 'amidst much tribulation;' = though under trib., for so I would render, with Abp. Newc. and Schott. See Acts xiv. 22, comp. with Rom. v. 3. When the Apostle says that they were imitators of him and the Lord, he, I think, means imitators of him, and thereby of the Lord, whom he imitated. This is confirmed by the parallel passage of 1 Cor. xi. 1, μιμηταὶ μου γίνεσθε, καθὼς καὶ γὰρ Χριστὸς. By μετὰ χαρᾶς Πνεύματος ἁγίου is meant 'a joy inspired by the Holy Spirit,' which accompanied and rewarded their alacrity in receiving the word, and their firmness under tribulation in adhering to it; which was an evidence of their election, and a pledge of their title to a happy immortality; comp. Rom. xiv. 17, and Acts xv. 41.

7. ὡςτι γιν.] 'inasmuch that ye became exemplars,' &c. On the term τύπους, see 1 Cor. x. 6, 11. Phil. iii. 17, and notes. For τύπων, MSS. B, D, and seven cursives, with some Versions, have τύπων, which is adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. But external authority is quite insufficient (for I find it not in a single Lamb. or Mus. copy, except that it is in Cor. 2, though passed over by Mill); and though internal evidence may seem in its favour, yet it is evenly balanced; for though Phil. iii. 17, and 2 Thess. iii. 9, may seem to confirm τύπων, yet there the plural is plainly used for the singular, not here; and I can scarcely believe that Paul would use so harsh an expression. However, I grant that the Pesch. Syr., Vulg., and Ital. Versions, strongly confirm τύπων, so that the reading may be considered an open question. Besides, in Lamb. 1185, the original reading seems to have been τύπων.

8. ἀφ' ὑμῶν] The Apostle now points at the excellent effects of this good example of the Thessalonians, whose fame had spread far and wide. (Schott.) This is explained by most of the more recent Commentators, 'by your instrumentality.' The literal sense (of place), however, adopted by the earlier Expositors, must not be excluded. In fact, both senses seem combined. 'From you the sound of the Gospel first issued, and by your means was spread abroad in all Macedonia.' With the construction, indeed, of the sentence, owing to the οὐ μόνον—ἀλλὰ καὶ, Expositors are not a little perplexed. They are, however, generally agreed in supposing a transposition of οὐ μόνον, which must be taken, they think, with ἐξήχηται; see Koppe, Pelt, and Schott. But it would rather seem that the true notion of the construction can alone be attained by considering the passage as blending two modes of expression, thus: 'For from you sounded the word of the Lord over all Macedonia and Achaia: and not only has your faith in God been well known there, but the report of it has been disseminated everywhere else;' namely, in most of the countries of the civilized world, with which Macedonia and Achaia had constant commercial communication. In ἐξήχ. there is an allusion to the κέρρυμα of the Gospel, and to that sonorous voice, as it were of a trumpet (see Isa. lviii. 1. Rev. i. 10), with which κέρρυκε (like our criers) were accustomed to speak. And so Hesych. explains ἐξήχηται

h ch. 2. 1.
1 Cor. 12. 2.
Gal. 4. 5, 9.

1 Phil. 2. 30.
2 Thess. 1.
10.
Rev. 1. 7.
Matt. 2. 7.
Luke 2. 7.
Heb. 10. 37.
a ch. 1. 5, 9.

9<sup>b</sup> αὐτοὶ γὰρ περὶ ἡμῶν ἀπαγγέλλουσιν ὅποιαν εἰσόδον * ἔσχομεν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ πῶς ἐπεστρέψατε πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδῶλων, δουλεύειν Θεῷ ζῶντι καὶ ἀληθινῷ, 10<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἀναμένειν τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῶν οὐρανῶν, ὃν ἡγείρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, Ἰησοῦν, τὸν ρυόμενον ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς τῆς ἐρχομένης.

II. 1<sup>a</sup> Αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἶδατε, ἀδελφοί, τὴν εἰσόδον ἡμῶν τὴν πρὸς

by ἐκνήχθη. How honourable it was for the Gospel to issue forth from any place first of all the places of a country, we may infer from 1 Cor. xiv. 36, ἡ ἐφ' ἡμῶν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθε; — ὥστε μὴ χρεῖαν ἡμᾶς ἔχειν λαλεῖν τι, 'so that we have no need (anywhere, wherever we go) to say any thing'; meaning, either in commendation, or congratulation, for there are everywhere those who speak of you. The sense is well expressed by Theodor., προλαβὼν ἡμᾶς ἡ φήμη, καὶ παρ' ἄλλων ἀκούομεν ὃ λέγειν ἐθέλομεν, ὅλην γὰρ ἅπασιν γέγονε τῆς ἡμετέρας διδασκαλίας ἡ ἐν ὑμῖν εὐκαρτία.

9. ὅποιαν εἰσόδον ἔσχομεν] The sense is, 'What a successful entrance we have had unto you'; i. e. what a favourable reception we have experienced at your hands (for that is implied by ὁποῖος, qualis). Comp. infr. ii. 1; q. d. (as Olsh.) 'we need praise you to none, for they themselves have already related to me how thoroughly ye have been converted, and how suitably ye walk.'—καὶ πῶς ἐπεστρέψατε, &c. These words are explanatory of the preceding ὅποιαν εἰσόδον ἔσχομεν, to evince the completeness of their conversion. In ἐπιστρ. πρὸς τὸν Θεόν we have a formula occurring also at Acts xi. 21. xiv. 15. 2 Cor. iii. 16, and denoting, by a Hebraic and figurative phrase, conversion from idolatry and paganism, or Judaism, to Christianity. The contrary is spoken of in 1 Cor. xii. 2, namely, a going πρὸς τὰ εἰδῶλα τὰ ἄφωνα. The words following show the purpose of this turning; [ὥστε, or εἰς τὸ] δουλεύειν, 'to worship and serve,' &c. On Θεῷ ζῶντι καὶ ἀληθ., see John xvii. 1—5.

10. καὶ ἀναμένειν, &c.] Here we have, conjoined with the former, those points espec. adverted to, which distinguish the Christian religion from Judaism; so that this with the preceding verse contain a brief summary of the most important doctrines of Christianity, theoretical and practical; 'for (as observes Olsh.) while in ἐπιστρέφειν faith is couched, δουλεύειν love (rather 'loving-service'), and ἀναμένειν hope; nearly equiv. to ἀπεκδέχεσθαι at Phil. iii. 20.' There is a remarkable brevity and pregnancy of meaning in the words ὃν ἡγείρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν—ἐρχομένης: the full sense intended to be suggested being (as Hyper. observes) that 'Christ first died, and then rose again, and ascended into heaven, and from thence as God is to be expected, as the Judge and Remunerator.' In the words which usher them in, ἀναμένειν τὸν Υἱὸν—οὐρανῶν (meaning, 'waiting for that second advent of Christ, when he shall come in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead'), we have a most expressive mode of speaking, to denote 'fully receiving him—as their Redeemer'; implying obedience to his precepts, and true faith. This implied sense of faith was well seen by Chrys. and Theophyl., and is expressed by them thus: ἐπειδὴ τὰ μὲν δεῖνὰ ἐν χειρσί, τὰ δὲ χρηστὰ ἐν ἑλπίσι, μεγάλης αὐτοῖς προσημαρτυρεῖ πίστιν εἶχε (niquidem) ἀναμύνουσι καὶ ἐλπίσουσι βεβαίως τὰ μέλλοντα. Here the expression has especial propriety, being meant, as Pelt suggests, to lead to the subject connected with the principal purpose of the Epistle; which was to correct the errors that had arisen as to Christ's return from heaven. The next terms, τὸν ρυόμενον—ὀργῆς must not be summarily wrapped up, as they are by Wakef. and Conyb., in the words, 'our deliverance from the coming vengeance.' They have a far deeper import, not unseen by Chrys. and Theophyl., and fully opened out by Calv., Hyper., and Est. Render τὸν ρύσιν, not 'who delivered' (as E. V.), nor 'will deliver,' as others; but, as the Pesch. Syr., Ambrose, and Calv., 'who delivereth us'; i. e. 'a pœna damnationis æternæ,' as Est., who further explains, 'eripit nos (meaning, as Calv. says, 'those alone who are by faith reconciled to God') ab æterna damnatione etiam in præsentia, quatenus eos per beneficium redemptionis suæ, durante hoc sæculo, eripit a potestate Diaboli;' for this deliverance, which commenced at our Lord's death and sacrifice, may be said to be continually carrying forward (so 2 Cor. i. 10, δε ἐκ τηλικούτου θανάτου ἡρρύσατο ἡμᾶς, καὶ ρύεται: εἰς ὃν ἡλπίκαμεν, ὅτι καὶ ἐντι ρύσεται); 'seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for us' (Heb. vii. 25), by himself our Advocate with the Father, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete; and this he will himself complete at the last day, when Death, spiritual as well as temporal, shall be swallowed up in victory, a victory achieved by 'him who loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood.' Rev. i. 5. However, the circumstance pointed at in the words τὸν ρύσιν—ὀργῆς. τ. ἄρχ., has another note-worthy reference, — as pointing at the great end and purpose of Christ's resurrection,—namely, as Calv. points out, 'ut ejusdem gloriæ nos omnes tandem consortes faciat, qui sumus ejus membra, significat Paulus, irritum fore resurrectionem, nisi iterum appareat suorum Redemptor, fructumque et effectum ejus quum in se exhibuit virtutis ad totum Ecclesiæ corpus extendat.'

II. Having at ch. i. 4, 5, briefly touched on the subject of his coming to the Thessalonians, the Apostle here enters into it more at large, both to give vent to the high feeling of satisfaction, which he, on retrospect, experiences at the success with which he had, under the Divine blessing, preached the Gospel to them, and if so to confirm the minds of the Thessalonians in that sound doctrine, which they had received from the Apostle and his colleagues, so that they might hold it fast, in spite of all the artifices of the false teachers; and further to excite them to imitate the fidelity, diligence, and truly Christian spirit of their teacher. (Schott.)

ὕμᾱς, ὅτι οὐ κενὴ γέγονεν <sup>2</sup> ἄλλὰ [καὶ] προπαθόντες καὶ ὑβρισθέντες, καθὼς οἴδατε, ἐν Φιλιπποῖς, ἐπαρρησιασάμεθα ἐν τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν λαλῆσαι πρὸς ὑμᾱς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν πολλῷ ἀγῶνι. <sup>3</sup> Ἡ γὰρ παράκλησις ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐκ πλάνης, οὐδὲ ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας, † οὔτε ἐν δόλῳ <sup>4</sup> ἄλλὰ, καθὼς δεδοκίμασμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ πιστευθῆναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, οὕτω λαλοῦμεν οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωποις ἀρέσκοντες, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ δοκιμάζοντι

1. αὐτοὶ γάρ, &c.] The γάρ may best be referred to ὅποιον εἶσθεν 189. at i. 9; q. d. '[I need scarcely have said what I did, on our ingress unto you, and the result of it;] for ye yourselves know,' &c.—οὐ κενή, 'not without effect, fruit, or success,' both in its nature and results, as regarded both the teachers and the taught. See Chrys. and Pelt. There is a μείωσις, so that the sense is nearly = ἐν δυνάμει, supr. i. 5.

2. Here, as Pelt remarks, 'e contrario idem probat.'—καὶ after ἀλλὰ, absent from all the uncials, and very many cursive MSS. (including all the Lamb. and Mus. copies), has been cancelled by almost every Critical Editor; and rightly. The προ in προπαθόντες is not pleonastic; the sense being anted, aforetime. The expression ὕβρισθέντες refers to Paul being scourged; a great insult to a Roman citizen.—ἐπαρρ. ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, &c. i. e. (as in Acts xiv. 3) 'we took courage, in dependence on the aid of our God, to speak,' &c. Of ἐν τ. ἀγῶνι the full sense is, 'amidst much struggle and anxious exertion.' Comp. Thucyd. ii. 45, 1, ὅρῳ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα, and Arrian. Epict., ἐν ἀγῶνι συνέχεται, τὴν διακρίσιν.

3, 4. Having thus put them in mind of the circumstances of his first entrance among them, Paul proceeds to show how unreasonable was the present opposition to his person and doctrine.—οὐκ ἐκ πλάνης, scil. ἡν. Here the negative is highly emphatic,—signifying 'not [as some say].' Comp. Jos. Ant. ii. 13, 3, δαίξω δὲ οὐ κατὰ πλάνην τῆς ἀληθείας δόξης τὰ ἡμᾶ, κατὰ δὲ Θεοῦ πρόνοιαν καὶ δύναμιν φαινόμενα: what is here said being meant as a reply to those who accused him of doing what he did either under the influence of error (πλάνης), or under the dictates of imposture (ἐν δόλῳ), or at least of being swayed by interested motives (ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας): charges which Calv., with ingenious analysis, distinguishes under the heads,—imposture, as regarded the substance of the doctrine; impurity, as regarded the affections of mind and motives; guile, as regarded the mode of action. These charges, then, the Apostle simply and gravely denies, and then shows how ungrounded they were, since his conduct would be quite unaccountable on the supposition of falsification, or of imposture, or of interested motives in general.—Ἀκαθ. denotes, in general, the being swayed by corrupt motives, whether of wealth, fame, &c. So Arrian, Epict. iv. 11, ψυχῆς ἀκαθαρσία, δόγματα πονηρά.—Δόλω means 'the knowingly beguiling men into error, by mis-stating, or adulterating, the truth; or at least 'undertaking and carrying on the work of evangelizing with fraudulent views, or to answer sinister ends.' In short, the Apostle means to say that he and his colleagues are neither themselves deceived, nor do they wilfully deceive others; they are neither fanatics, nor impostors or cheats. Moreover, the Apostle might here not only intend an answer to his accusers, but mean this as a reitor upon them; for ἡμῶν may be emphatic: since the false teachers of the Jews, or Judaizers, and the Philosophers and Sophists of the heathens, were, as Chandler has shown, themselves notoriously guilty of that very conduct which they imputed to the Apostles, being the greatest impostors and cheats, γοήται καὶ τεραταίαι μιστοί, says Lucian; who adds, that the impudence of their hypocrisy was intolerable. To advert to a matter of debated reading. For οὕτω, A, B, C, D, F, G, and 6 cursives (to which I add Cov. 2, 3, passed over by Mill), have οὕδ, which is adopted by Lachm. and by Tisch. ed. 1, who in his 2nd ed. restored οὕτω, rightly; for the other reading is evidently a Critical correction, since οὕδ is required by strict purity of Grecism, of which Paul is not very observant.

4. Here the Apostle declares what was really the origin of his instruction, and the disposition suitable to such an origin. (Schott.)—καθὼς δεδοκίμασμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ π. τὸ 4. The best Expositors are of opinion that this is an irregular construction, to be resolved into καθὼς ἐδοκίμασεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεός, ὥστε πιστεύειν ἡμῖν τὸ εὐαγγ. See Win. Gr. Gr. § 38, 1, note 2. Perhaps, however, there is a blending of two constructions, ὥς δεδοκίμασμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ and ὥς πεπιστεύμεθα. Comp. Joseph. Bell. i. 26, 2, ὥς δεδοκιμασμένοις ἰδέσθ. Reader: 'were approved, or judged fit to have the Gospel committed to us.'—ἀρέσκοντες, i. e. 'endeavouring to please;' corresponding to the similar expression of Ignat. ad Rom. C. 2, οὐ γὰρ θίλω ὑμῖν ἀνθρωποπαρεσκήσαι, ἀλλὰ Θεῷ ἀρέσαι. This use of ἀρέσκω is supposed to be Hellenistic, but I have noted it in Soph. Antig. 74, ἵναί πλείων χρόνος, 'Ὅν δαί μ' ἀρέσκουν τοῖς κάτω (scil. θεοῖς), τῶν ἰσθδῶ. The phrase ὡς δοκιμάζων τὰς καρδίας is equiv. to ὡς ἐκρινὼν τὰς καρδίας, at Rom. viii. 27, or ὡς καρδιογνώστης, Acts i. 24. See also Jer. xvii. 10. It is, indeed, as Schott says, 'solenne Dei predicatum' in V. et N. T.; q. d. 'Probe dignoscit pietatem veram.' In the addition here of ἡμῶν the reference is not to Paul, Timothy, and Silvanus only, but to all men, of whose hearts God is the searcher and trier. To touch on a point of considerable difficulty,—where, however, as Olsh. truly observes, one seeks in vain for explanation from Expositors,—we should take the words of v. 4 in a sense utterly contradicting St. Paul's doctrine every where else, were we to suppose the sense to be, 'I have been tried by God, who knows all hearts, seeking no man's honour.' In order, however, to find our way in this embarrassment, we are to bear in mind the following suggestions τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν. <sup>5</sup> Ὅτε γὰρ ποτε ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας ἐγενή-θημεν, καθὼς οἴδατε, οὔτε ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας (Θεὸς μάρ-τυς!) <sup>6</sup> οὔτε ζητούντες ἐξ ἀνθρώπων δόξαν, οὔτε ἀφ' ὑμῶν οὔτε ἀπ' ἄλλων δυνάμενοι ἐν βάρει εἶναι, ὡς Χριστοῦ ἀπόστο-

 λοι. <sup>7</sup> ἀλλ' ἐγενήθημεν ἡπιοὶ ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν. Ὡς ἂν τροφὸς

of our enlightened interpreter: 'All positive good St. Paul attributes to God as its real source; on the other hand, he derives just as decidedly evil only from the human will as the final cause; this will now can, in spite of the universal sinfulness, still be corrupted and polluted in a very different degree in different men: the one may be so far pure, that, when he sees the light, he receives it as such, without polluting it by a sinful taint; the other, on the contrary, has added so much of his own guilt to his innate sinfulness, that he pollutes even what is holy. According to this, then, St. Paul can say, perfectly in harmony with his fundamental ideas, that God committed the Gospel to him because he had found him approved; not as if St. Paul had been by nature good, but only so that he was in a state to receive in purity the holy matter which was committed to him, and not to corrupt it by mingling his sin with it; therefore on account of the negative good in him. Man in all his sinfulness can still, however, be sincere and upright, acknowledge good as good, evil as evil; such upright souls God can alone make use of as labourers in his kingdom, and as such St. Paul represents himself here.' (Olah.)

5, 6. The Apostle now proves this integrity and purity of motive, by adverting to two things which most usually sway men; vanity (or ambition) and avarice. Previously, however, to noticing these charges, he briefly pre-occupies that of flattery (of which his adversaries were notoriously guilty), and he proves himself not to be, as they said, a man-pleaser; and that by simply appealing to themselves as his witnesses, who, had he been guilty of base adulation (the surest mark of a sordid mind and corrupt motives), must surely have known it. To advert to a few points of phraseology, ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας is not, with some, to be regarded as a mere Hebraism, for ἐν κολακείᾳ; nor, with others, to be explained as standing for 'in accusations adulations', which would weaken the sense. We may best, with Koppe and Schott, take ἐν λόγῳ εἶναι for γίνεσθαι ἐν λόγῳ, 'to be conversant in words,' &c., and consider the Genit. κολακείας as put for the adjective κολακευτικῆ; the sense being, 'nunquam versati sumus in sermonis genere adulatorii,' 'were not conversant in words of flattery, used not flattering speeches.' Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 5, ἐν λόγῳ σόφίας.

5. On the import of the next words, οὔτε ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας, a difference of opinion exists. Some regard the προφάσει as merely pleonastic, while others think it serves to qualify πλεονεξίας; and others, again, assign to it various senses, more or less objectionable. We may, I think, best (with the Pesch. Syr. Trans., Beza, Grot., Bp. Sanderson, Benson, Chandler, Flatt, Schott, and Olah.) take ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας (supply ἐγνήθημεν) to mean ut prætextu avaritiæ, and thus consider this as a popular way of expressing the carrying forward any plan of co-vetousness under a fair pretence,—as the false teachers did, by fleeing their devotees, if not by themselves, yet through the medium of another; see 2 Cor. xii. 16, 17, where are to be noted, as particularly bearing on the case in point, the expressions δόξα ὑμᾶς λαβόν and ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς, q. d. 'I laboured among you, not with fair pretences, at the bottom of which was covetousness.' If this should be thought unsatisfactory, I would suggest whether the difficulty may not be removed by pointing the words thus: οὔτε ἐν προφάσει, πλεονεξίας. Thus the construction will be: οὔτε ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας, οὔτε [ἐν λόγῳ] πλεονεξίας: the expression ἐν προφάσει, 'under pretence [of holiness]' being subjoined by way of explanation. Such is the use of προφάσει in Luke xx. 47, and Thucyd. vii. 13, 2, and προφασιν in Eurip. Iph. A. 360. In the subjoined ὁδὲ μάρτυς there is a solemn appeal to the only Judge who cannot err, even the Searcher of all hearts. Comp. 1 Sam. xii. 5, and see note supra v. 4.

6. οὔτε ζητούντες ἐξ ἀνθρ. δόξαν The Apostle here adverts to another kind of covetousness, not the 'auri sacra fames', but the thirst of fame, styled by Milton, 'That last infirmity of noble minds.' At ζητούντες supply ἡμεν, from ἐγνήθημεν of the preceding verse; both being for ἐζητήσαμεν, on which δυνάμενοι ('though we might') is suspended. It may seem strange that the Apostle should write ἐξ ἀνθρώπων and ἀπ' ἄλλων, not ἐξ ἀνθρ. and ἐξ ἄλλων, nor ἀπ' ἀνθρ. and ἀπ' ἄλλων; but the reason will appear by considering the distinction of signifi. in ἐξ and ἀπὸ, which is well pointed out by Schott, who observes that ἀπὸ always has reference to the mediate origin (or second cause) (for examples to the thing or person that gave occasion to any thing said or done), but ἐκ (as also παρά) to the immediate, or first cause. With respect to the expression ἐν βάρει εἶναι, Expositors are not agreed whether it signifies 'to be burdened to you'; so v. 9. 2 Thes. iii. 8, or 'to use despotic authority over you.' The latter interpretation is adopted by most ancient and many modern Expositors, as being far more agreeable to the words preceding and following; and several exx. of this signifi. are adduced by the Commentators; but it would rather seem that the sentiment in the clause οὔτε ζητούντες—ἄλλων is subordinate to that in οὔτε ἐγνήθημεν ἐν προφ. πλεονεξίας, and that the words δυνάμενοι ἐν βάρει εἶναι, &c. (which are parenthetical) refer to the principal sentiment. This view is confirmed by the language of the Apostle elsewhere. So at v. 9, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαι τινα ὑμῶν: also 2 Thes. iii. 8, ἐπιβαρῆσαι. 2 Cor. xi. 9, ἐν παντὶ ἀβαρὴ ὅτιν ἐμυτὸν ἐτήρησα: whereas the other signifi. of βάρει is no where found in the New Test. The Apostle, however, may here have intended both senses; meaning that he might, in virtue of his authority and privileges as an Apostle, have ruled θάλην τὰ ἐαυτῆς τέκνα, <sup>8</sup> οὕτως, † ἡμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν, εὐδο- h 2 Cor. 12.

15.
Phil. 2. 17.
1 John 2. 18.
Acts 18. 3.
2. 30. 34.
1 Cor. 4. 12.
1 Tim. 4. 10.
κοῦμεν μεταδοῦναι ὑμῖν οὐ μόνον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ
καὶ τὰς ἐαυτῶν ψυχὰς, διότι ἀγαπητοὶ ἡμῶν * ἐγενήθητε. 9 | Μνη-them authoritatively and imperiously, and been chargeable to them, by taking pay for his services.

7. ἡπιοι] i.e. 'as it were a tender parent;' implying the most tender and affectionate feelings. So the Homeric πατήρ δ' ὡς ἡπιοι ἦεν. —'Εν μέσῳ ὑμῶν is a Hebraism for ἐν ὑμῖν, 'among you.' To avoid a confusion of metaphor, it is proper (as the best Expositors suggest) to take the next words with what follows, not with what precedes. The Apostle compares himself first to an indulgent father, and then to a tender nursing-mother. In the expression θάλην there is an allusion to the manner in which birds warm their young, by placing them under their wings (Dent. xxii. 6. Matt. xxiii. 37), or nursing-mothers cherish them in their bosoms; implying every necessary sustentation. And great we know was the mildness and tenderness of the Apostle to his converts, whom he regarded as his own dear children.

8. οὕτως, ἡμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν] 'thus having a strong affection for you.' Instead of ἡμῶν, almost all the uncials, and above 30 cursives (to which I add Lamb. 1185, 1186), have ὁμῶν, which has been edited by Matthæi, Griesb., Koppe, Scholz, Schott, Lachm., and Tisch.; but perhaps without sufficient reason. External evidence, indeed, is in its favour; but internal, I apprehend, is against it. It is, indeed, a word destitute of any authority, being found only in a few MSS. (not the text) of Job iii. 21, οἱ ἡμειρόμενοι τοῦ θανάτου; and, notwithstanding what Matthæi urges, it is, as Rinck says, contrary to analogy. Indeed Schott, who adopts ὁμῶν, has not proved that the word ever existed. He appeals, indeed, to Hesych., Phot., and Phav. But they, copying from the Scholiasts, manifestly had the present passage in view; and, therefore, to infer from them the existence of the word, would be reasoning in a circle. The same objection, also, applies to his argument, that 'ὁμῶν is entitled to the preference, as being the rarer word;' for that canon surely cannot hold good of words so rare as no where to be found, espec. if they would be formed contrary to analogy; indeed, ὁμῶν can easily be accounted for as a mere error of the scribes. See Rinck. It would seem that the o arose from the e preceding. In the passage of Job it arose evidently from the oi preceding, as the testimony of the text (almost all the MSS. having ἡμῶν) shows. Matthæi, indeed, says the word occurs in Symmachus' Version of Ps. lxii. 2. But the text there has ἡμῶν; and if even ὁμῶν were found in some MSS., ὁμῶν might be easily accounted for from the o preceding. The scribes, I suspect, fell into the error, because ἡμῶν never came into the common dialect, and is rarely found in any but the best writers. Thus when an o or e preceded, the scribes, thinking of the common word ὁμῶν ὑμῶν, easily manufactured ὁμῶν ὑμῶν; the ei and η being perpetually confounded. Finally, as to what Schott urges, that ὁμῶν is the stronger term, that may be doubted, for ἡμῶν is surely a very significant term; not to say that ὁμῶν would yield a sense little suitable, for it could only mean 'closely connected with;' whereas the sense intended by the Apostle is 'warmly attached to.' Thus far in my former edd. In this ninth, after further and more mature consideration, I am inclined to adopt ὁμῶν, espec. since internal evidence, if weighed in a just balance, is in its favour. The exception to the general rule of preferring the more uncommon in the case of manifest barbarisms does not apply here; for, though ὁμῶν may be formed contrary to analogy, so are not a few words of the common Greek dialect, nor is it so rare as to be found no where else. Hesych. in ὁμῶν ὑμῶν must have had in view some other passage, and not the present. It is also found in some MSS. of the Sept., in Job iii. 21, and in some of Symmachus' Version. Ps. lxii. 2. As to my remark, that the scribes may have brought in ὁμῶν from being less acquainted with ἡμῶν than ὁμῶν, there is no reason to think that ἡμῶν was unknown to such persons as the scribes, who must have had, from copying, some knowledge of the language of the lettered. On the other hand, ὁμῶν is so rare (not being found even in the Class. writers of the least pure Greek), that it may be doubted whether it was a term of the common Greek dialect every where in use. One may rather suspect that it was a provincialism, one of the Cilicisms admitted to occur in the writings of St. Paul.—εὐδοκοῦμεν, lit. 'we might have thought good,' 'should have been disposed:' a sense occurring at 2 Cor. v. 8, and occasionally found in the Sept. and the later Greek writers. The usual construction with μεταδοῦναι, the Genit. and Dat. is here altered to the Accus. and Dat., from the nature of the thing. For γὰρ γίνεσθαι I have now edited ἐγενήθητε, 'have been,' 'become' (which has been received into the text by Lachm. and Tisch.) from all the most ancient MSS. (to which I add two of the Lamb. and Mus. copies), with the Pesch. Syr. Version, and as propriety of language in the expression of the obvious sentiment requires. The forms of the preterite and aorist I pass, being written by abbreviations similar to each other, were frequently confounded by the scribes.

9. Having thus expressed the tenderness of his affection towards them, and his readiness to have imparted to them not only the Gospel of God, but even his own soul and life, had it been necessary, for their service, he proceeds to mention a circumstance which was the strongest proof of the strength and disinterestedness of his love towards them, and by personal appeal to their recollection was likely to prove effective.—Μνημονεύετε γὰρ —Θεοῦ. Comp. 2 Thess. iii. 7—9, μνημ., 'ye, no doubt, remember:—κόπον καὶ μόχθον, 'my labour and travail'; namely, his trade. Comp. 2 Thess. iii. 1.—συνετοὶ καὶ ἡμέτεροι the Commentators regard as merely equivalent to ἀδελφαί, assidui, early and late; but the expressions may be taken literally, and in their full acceptance. For in so speaking, the Apostle, we may suppose, alludes to the toilsome exercise of his trade, occasionally carried on through the hours of the night as well as day, in order to μονεύετε γὰρ, ἀδελφοί, τὸν κόπον ἡμῶν καὶ τὸν μόχθον νυκτὸς γὰρ καὶ ἡμέρας ἐργαζόμενοι, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαι τινα ὑμῶν, ἐκηρύξαμεν εἰς ὑμᾶς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. <sup>10</sup> Ὑμεῖς μάρτυρες καὶ ὁ Θεὸς, ὡς ὁσίως, καὶ δικαίως, καὶ ἀμέμπτως ὑμῖν τοὺς πιστεύουσιν ἐγενήθημεν <sup>11</sup> καθάπερ οἶδατε, ὡς ἓνα ἕκαστον ὑμῶν, ὡς πατὴρ τέκνα ἑαυτοῦ, παρακαλοῦντες ὑμᾶς καὶ παραμυθούμενοι, <sup>12</sup> καὶ * μαρτυρόμενοι, εἰς τὸ περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ καλοῦντος ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ βασιλείαν καὶ δόξαν. <sup>13</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς εὐχαριστοῦμεν τῷ Θεῷ ἀδιαλείπτως, ὅτι παραλαβόντες λόγον ἀκοῆς παρ' ἡμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐδέξασθε, οὐ λόγον ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ—καθὼς ἐστίν allow him an opportunity, at other times, to pursue his evangelical labours.

H u

10. 'Iterum Dei et eorum testimonio ad suam integritatem asserendam utitur: ac Deum quidem conscientiam, illos vero rei comperta testes facit.' Calv.—ὡς ὁσίως, καὶ δικαίως, καὶ ἀμ. ἔγεν. Comp. Demosth. C. Mid., οὕτως εὐλαβῶς, οὕτως εὐσεβῶς, οὕτως μετρίως διακίεσθαι.—'Ὅσίως regards duty towards God, δικ. that towards men; and ἀμέμπτως denotes by implication the repute of performing both.

11. καθάπερ οἶδατε—ὡς πατὴρ τέκνα i.] This is not a mere enlargement upon the foregoing ὡς ὁσίως, for I agree with Dr. Peile, that ὡς is better joined with ἓνα, to express the sense, 'taken individually,' 'one by one;' the sense being, 'even as ye well know, in respect to each one among you, how we were exhorting you (= 'used to exhort you') even as a father (doth) his children, that &c.' Accordingly, as at v. 7, he compares himself to a tender nursing mother, so now does he compare himself to a tender father, who brings up his children to all that is good, ἐκτρέφον αὐτοὺς ἐν παιδείᾳ καὶ νοῦσι τοῦ Κυρίου.

11, 12. The construction is here somewhat irregular, and can only be adjusted by repeating ἐγενήθημεν from ver. 10, or (which is better) supplying ἡμεν, to be fetched from ἐγενήθημεν.—Παρακ., παραμ., and μαρτυρ. These terms are not synonymous. Παρακ. and παραμ. differ as our exhort and persuade; namely, by 'heartening on to do a thing by the use of kind and encouraging words.' See Hom. II. viii. 470, 680. Aesch. Prom. 1063. Xenoph. Cynag. vi. 25. Aristoph. Vesp. 115. Μαρτυρ. is a stronger term than the former, meaning, 'to solemnly urge, urgently press,' as in a kindred passage of Eph. iv. 17, and also Thucyd. vi. 80, and viii. 53. For μαρτυρούμενοι I have, with Matthæi, Schott, and Tisch., edited μαρτυρόμενοι, from nearly all the uncial, and about 80 cursive MSS. (I add most Lamb. and Mus. copies). It is well remarked by Schott, that μαρτυρεῖσθαι cannot admit of the sense here required; 'and although (continues he) Expositors assert that μαρτυρεῖσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτύρεσθαι, yet they do not prove it.' The truth is, that though μαρτύρεσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτυρεῖσθαι in the sense testari, assert affirmare, yet there is no proof that μαρτυρεῖσθαι was ever used for μαρτύρεσθαι. See Poppe on Thucyd. viii. 53, 2, and note on Acts xxvi. 22.

On the words εἰς τὸ περιπ., &c., which serve to note the intent and effect of the foregoing admonition, comp. Col. i. 16.—βασιλ. καὶ δόξαν may be, as most Commentators suppose, for βασιλείαν ἐνδοξον; but I agree with Schott, that it is not necessary to resort to that principle here; since the word may retain its proper substantive force, so as to further explain and illustrate βασιλείαν; i.e. 'to call us to the duties, privileges, and final blessedness of the Christian life.'

13. 'Having thus appealed to God and them for the unblameableness of his conduct, and his zeal and fidelity in his ministry, he commends them for the just regard they paid to it, and their sincerity and cheerfulness in submitting to the great design of it' (Chandl.).—διὰ τοῦτο, 'wherefore [since we have been thus successful among you], we do thank God that,' q.d. it is on this account that we do it. In παραλαβόντες—Θεῷ there is a transposition usual in St Paul (and also in Thucyd.) by which the Genit. is separated from the noun which governs it by intervening words. The latter part of the verse, οὐ λόγον ἀνθρ.—πιστεύουσιν, represents the word of God as a mighty principle of action, in producing the περιπατῆσαι ἔξω τοῦ Θεοῦ of v. 12.—Λόγον ἀκοῆς is log (as most recent Commentators imagine) for λόγος or ἀκοή. It may be regarded, with Theophyl. and (Ecumen., as equiv. to κήρυγμα, ὡς διὰ τοῦ ἀκουσθῆναι πιστευόμενον, and thus ἀκοῆς is equiv. to ἀκουσθεῖς in Isa. liii. 1. Jer. x. 22. This is confirmed both by the passages of Isa. and Jer., and by the same idiom occurring at Heb. iv. 2, οὐκ ἀφίλησιν ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς ἱκίνοισι: so that there is no need to resort to Olshausen's solution of the difficulty,—too readily acquiesced in by Schott,—which goes on the supposition, that Paul here considers the phrase λόγον ἀκοῆς παρ' ἡμῶν as a joint idea, which virtually breaks up the construction. The difficulty solely arises from the strange position of Θεοῦ, which, however, as ἀκοῆς must necessarily have followed λόγον, was unavoidable, without re-writing the sentence.—In ἰδέξασθε, οὐ λόγον, &c. there is a brevity of expression, for ἰδέξασθε αὐτὸν ὡς οὐ λόγον. Δίχεσθαι differs from παραλαμβάνειν, as implying more or less of approbation. Thus Abp. Newe. well renders, 'ye embraced it.' So Thucyd. i. 95, ἰδέξαντο τοὺς λόγους, καὶ προσείχον τὴν γνώμην.—Ὅτι καὶ ἐνεργεῖται, &c. The δε is by some referred to Θεοῦ. But ἀληθῶς—λόγον Θεοῦ, ὃς καὶ ἐνεργεῖται ἐν ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν. m Acts 18. 17. 5. 13. Heb. 10. 34. n Matt. 23. 34. 37. Luke 18. 33. Acts 7. 52. Luke 11. 58. Acts 18. 50. 14. 5. 19. 17. 5. 13. 18. 12. 19. 9. 22. 21. 32. Matt. 24. 32.

 14 <sup>m</sup> Ὑμεῖς γὰρ μὴ μνηταὶ ἐγενήθητε, ἀδελφοί, τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ τῶν οὐσῶν ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὅτι τὰ αὐτὰ ἐπάθετε καὶ ὑμεῖς ὑπὸ τῶν ἰδίων συμφυλετῶν, καθὼς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων <sup>15 a</sup> τῶν καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἀποκτείναντων Ἰησοῦν καὶ τοὺς [ἰδίους] προφήτας, καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐκδιωξάντων, καὶ Θεῷ μὴ ἀρεσκόντων, καὶ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ἐναντίων, <sup>16 o</sup> κωλυ-

the best Expositors are in general agreed in referring it to the more remote antecedent λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, which, indeed, is required by the words following, as Hyper. ably evinces, who shows that there is here a proof à signis, sive effectibus.—ἐνεργεῖται is by some taken Actively, in the sense worketh, as a powerful principle producing its genuine effects; while others take it Passively, to signify 'is made effectual,' or shows itself in its effects,—namely (as is just afterwards shown), by producing an imitation of the best examples of Christian piety and virtue. This latter mode is preferable, and indeed Schott maintains that ἐνεργεῖσθαι is never in the New Test. used as a Middle form, with an Active sense, but always (espec. in St. Paul's writings) as a Passive. Nay, Bp. BULL, Examen, p. 9, goes yet further, and asserts that it is scarcely ever so used, even in the Classical writers, but always in a Passive sense; and after adducing, as exx. of the New Test. use, Rom. vii. 5. 2 Cor. i. 6, he rescues 2 Cor. iv. 12 from the misinterpretation by which an active sense is by many there attributed to ἐνεργεῖται. He also vindicates the same sense to Eph. iii. 20 and Col. i. ult., and finally in the present passage, 2 Thess. ii. 7, and James v. 16; and though Bp. Bull in these passages renders ἐνεργ. by perfici, while Schott adopts efficac reddi, yet both are agreed on the sense: the latter explaining it of passing from the mind and understanding into the life and actions, and thus bringing forth fruit (see 2 Pet. i. 8); while the former ably elicits the full sense with the weighty remark, 'Scilicet tum demum in homine Dei Verbum ἐνεργεῖσθαι, sive perfici, dicitur, cum finem obtinet, et effectum sibi destinatum, quæ est FIDÆI OBEDIENTIA.'

14. In this verse the reference may be, as Hyper. and others suppose, to the last clause of the preceding one; and thus what is here said will be a proof of the foregoing, as to the efficacy of the word. But it would rather seem (according to the opinion of Calv., Chandl., Koppe, Pelt, and Olsh.) to have reference to the whole of the verse preceding; being meant, we may suppose, to illustrate the efficacy of the faith of the Thessalonians, by their courageous endurance of persecution, and to suggest a strong reason for their constancy therein, by noticing their resemblance in this respect to the primitive Christians of Judæa, and even to the Lord himself.—Ὑμεῖς γὰρ μνηταὶ ἔγεν., &c. Render: 'for ye have become followers of,' &c.; namely, by bearing the same troubles and persecutions as the persons in question did. So supra i. 6, μνηταὶ ἡμῶν ἐγενήθητε καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, διὰ τὸν λόγον ἐν θαλίᾳ πολλῇ. On the expression τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c., see i. 1, and Acts viii.

1—4.—συμφυλετῶν is for the purer Greek ὁμογενῶν, 'fellow-countrymen.'

15. ἰδίους] This has been cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but rashly. We can hardly suppose that a marginal gloss should have crept into nearly all the MSS. (I find it in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies). It is far more probable that it was cancelled in a few copies, from a groundless fear lest it might countenance the dogma of Marcion,—that the Jewish Prophets were not the Prophets of the true God; and, as an excuse for the omission, they would be likely to plead a corruption of the text; and to cast that on Marcion himself would clench the argument. Or perhaps it was thrown out by some over-nice Critics of Grecism; this use being not very Classical. Or finally, it might, as Schott observes, have arisen by homoteleutism with the preceding word. Certainly, the expression carries with it great emphasis, as in Tit. i. 12, ἰδίους αὐτῶν προφήτην. Indeed, it is necessary to the argument, the very force of which, as is shown by Chrys., Hyper., Chandl., Calv., and Schott, rests on ἰδίους; the design of the Apostle being to evince, that it is no wonder they persecuted the Christian converts every where, since they are a persecuting and murderous race. They put to death 'the Lord of life and glory' himself; nay, they even murdered their own prophets, whose Divine authority they acknowledged (however they might reject that of Jesus); and hence no wonder they should persecute these his followers. In the words καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐκδιωξάντων there is, as Schott remarks, a transition from past events to present; the sense being, 'they have persecuted and do persecute us.'—ἐκδιώκ., we may observe, is a more significant expression than διώκ.; denoting 'to chase away from place to place by bitter persecution.' Comp. Luke xi. 49.—καὶ Θεῷ μὴ ἀρεσκόντων, καὶ &c. Μὴ ἀρεσκόντων must not be taken (as it is usually) in the sense, 'do not seek or care to please God.' The expression is best explained by many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, per meiosis, to signify, 'are in utter disfavour with God'; are θεοστυγίαι, as their historian Josephus himself admits them to have been. There is here a diminutiv; the καὶ—καὶ having an intensive sense, both—and; it being meant, that they are both in disfavour with God, and are in a state of hostility to all men. I have pointed accordingly. In πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ἐναντίων there is an allusion to that unsocial, or rather antisocial, spirit towards other nations, which Tacitus expresses by 'adversus omnes alios hostile odium,' nay, 'odium generis humani,' and of which the later Greek and the Latin Class. writers furnish striking proofs, some of them here adduced by the Commentators; see Diod. Sic. xxxiv.

όντων ἡμᾶς τοῖς ἔθνεσι λαλῆσαι ἵνα σωθῶσιν εἰς τὸ ἀναπλη-ρᾶσαι αὐτῶν τὰς ἀμαρτίας πάντοτε. † ἔφθασε δὲ ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἡ ὀργὴ εἰς τέλος.

17 Ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοί, ἀπορροφανισθέντες ἀφ' ὑμῶν πρὸς καιρὸν

p. 524; Josephus, c. Apion. ii. 14. Philostr. Vit. Ap. v. 53. Tacit. Hist. v. 5; and espec. Juvenal, Sat. xiv. 103, 4. We are, however, to bear in mind, that, as Olsh. suggests, 'all this, according to Paul's manner, is not couched in the Jewish national character, nor in the influence of the Mosaic institutions, but solely in the perverted Pharisaical spirit, which had taken full possession of the people [all, at least, who made any profession of religious seriousness]. For ἵνα-τίων the more Class. use would be (what is, indeed, found in several MSS., and some Versions, and which would better correspond to μη ἀρσκούτων before) ἵνα-τιομένων. But the former is a somewhat more forcible term, being used like contrarius in Latin (as Phædr. iv. 10, 16, 'quos ipse alueris, Tibi inveniri maxime contrarios'), intimating that 'they are the common enemies of the rest of the human race.' The next words (v. 16) have a close connexion with the foregoing, showing how they evince this hostile spirit towards other nations, viz., by 'hindering the Gospel from being preached to them, that they might be saved.'

16. εἰς τὸ ἀναπληρῶσαι] This is put for ἵνα ἀναπληρῶσαι, and the sense may be, 'in order that they may fill up,' = 'as if they would [thereby] fill up [the measure of] their iniquities.' See Matt. xxiii. 32, comp. with Gen. xv. 16. Deut. ix. 34. However, I am, on further consideration, now inclined to agree with those who refer the construction to that of εἰς with an Infinitive, and regard the Article τὸ as put, not of command or intent, but of event or effect, as in 2 Cor. viii. 6. Heb. xi. 3, et al. So Est., who remarks, that it is as much as to say, 'and so, while they cease not to sin, they always heap sins upon sins, until at length they fill the measure to the brim, when nothing else will remain for them but the terrible judgment of God, since punishment can no longer be avoided or deferred.'—πάντοτε, 'at all times': i. e. now as well as formerly. It is well remarked by Schott, that the word is put last in the sentence for the purpose of more strongly intimating their perpetual obstinacy, which admitted of no repentance. By the term ἔφθασε it is denoted that the punishment will come upon them suddenly, and when they little expect it; and the Aorist is here, as in other passages like the present partaking of the prophetic, employed to denote certainly and speediness of accomplishment. Finally, by the expression εἰς τέλος it is intimated that the punishment should go on and terminate only ad internecionem, at their utter destruction; which literally took place, according to the prophecy of Daniel, ix. 27, by which it was foretold that 'the city and the sanctuary should be cut down,—as with an inundation, and overwhelmed, and even to the end (ἵως τέλους πολέμου, Sept.) of a decisive war should be 'destruction upon destruction': καὶ ἵως τῆς συντέλειας καιροῦ—δοθῆναι ἐπὶ τὴν ἰρήμειον. The signal fulfilment of these words, only a few years after, is fully attested by the great Jewish historian.—To advert to a matter of criticism, as to the reading. For ἔφθασε MSS. B, D, have ἔφθακε, adopted by Lachm., and also by Tisch. in his 1st edit.; though in his 2nd he restores ἔφθασε, which is found, it would seem, in all the other MSS., including the Lamb. and Mus. ones, except that I find ἔφθακε in Covell. 2, omitted by Mill. Yet internal evidence would seem to be in favour of ἔφθακε, from the great infrequency of the form, which could not have arisen from scribes. It is indeed so rare, that I can find no other example of it except in 2 Chron. xxviii. 9, καὶ ἵως τῶν οὐρανῶν ἔφθακε (scil. ἡ ὀργὴ αὐτῶν), so written in all the copies except the Compl., which has ἔφθασε, seemingly from the alteration of a Critic who wished to introduce the more usual form. I know of no other example; but the Pluperf. form (which implies the Perf.) occurs in Plut. Galb., ἔφθακε προσηλφὺς τὸν Ο., and Synes. ap. Steph. Thes., ἔφθακεν παθόμενος; and also the Particip. Perfect, as πεφθακὸς in Tzet. Exeg. in Hom. Iph. 119, 4. However, ἔφθακε may have been a critical emendation of the framer of the text of the Cod. B, and that it was such is confirmed by the circumstance that ἔφθακε seems to have been read by the writer of the Acta Thomæ (who lived several hundred years before the Cod. B was written), who at § 33 has closely imitated the present passage as follows: ἔφθασε (sine v. l.) γάρ σοι τὸ τέλος τῆς ἀπειρίας, unless the writer thought fit to alter the form. And considering that the passage of 2 Chron. seems to have been in the mind of the Apostle (as might also Dan. iv. 21), he might choose to adopt the form ἔφθακε, espec. as it is most agreeable to propriety of language.

17—20. Here the Apostle reverts from the Jews to the Thessalonians, and, agreeably to what he had said at ver. 8, expresses his great desire to again visit them, and tells them the reason why he has sent Timothy to them.—ἀπορφ. is a very significant term, and so rare a word that I have noted only one ex. elsewhere,—namely, in Æschyl. Choeph. 244, properly denoting 'the separation of children from their parents,' but sometimes, as here, 'of parents from their children.' The expression is, in the present case, peculiarly suitable, since, by a continuance of the metaphor at vv. 7 and 11, the Apostle is considered as their spiritual father. This use, however, as applied to parents, is so rare, that I know of only two exx. elsewhere,—namely, Soph. Trach. 941, κλάων ὀδύναις ἐκ δοῦνι ἐσοῖθ' ἅμα Πατρός τ' ἐκείνης τ' ὄρφανισμὸς βίου (where the poet must, I think, have written βίῳ ['in life' for βίον]); to which add Lycophr. Cass. 103, δοῦνι πλεισταὶν ὄρφανισμένην γονῆν. The reason why Paul here used the compound ἀπορφ. was, perhaps, that he had in mind Gen. xxvii. 45, μήποτε ἀποτεκνωθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν δύο ὑμῶν ἡμέρα μίᾳ.

17. πρὸς καιρὸν ὥρας] This is by many eminent Commentators taken for πρὸς καιρὸν, or πρὸς ὥραν. But it would rather seem that a blending of two synonymous expressions, in or-ὥρας, προσώπῳ οὐ καρδίᾳ, περισσοτέρως ἐσπουδάσαμεν τὸ

 πρόσωπον ὑμῶν ἰδεῖν ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ. <sup>18</sup> <sup>p</sup> Διὸ ἡθελήσαμεν <sup>p</sup> Rom. 1. 13.
 ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος, καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δὶς· καὶ ἐνἑκοσφεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Σατανᾶς. <sup>19</sup> <sup>a</sup> Τίς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἐλπίς ἢ χαρὰ ἢ <sup>a</sup> 3 Cor. 1.
 στέφανος καυχήσεως; ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Κυρίου <sup>a</sup> Phil. 2. 18.
 ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ παρουσίᾳ; <sup>20</sup> <sup>b</sup> Ὑμεῖς γὰρ ἐστε <sup>b</sup> 4. 1.
 ἡ δόξα ἡμῶν καὶ ἡ χαρὰ. III. <sup>1</sup> <sup>a</sup> Διὸ μηκέτι στέγοντες, εὐδοκή-
 σαμεν καταλειφθῆναι ἐν Ἀθήναις μόνοι, <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> καὶ ἐπέμψαμεν Τι-
 μόθεον τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν καὶ † διάκονον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ † συνεργόν

der to give a sense stronger than either would be separately,—namely, for a very brief season. In προσώπῳ οὐ καρδίᾳ there is a delicate turn; and at περισσ. ἑκοσφ. and ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ there is a blending of two modes of expression, denoting great desire, and earnest endeavours to satisfy it.—τὸ πρόσωπον ὑμῶν id. is a Hebrew, or rather primitive, expression for ‘to visit you.’ The full sense of the passage may be expressed thus: ‘But we, brethren, having been torn from you, or ‘bereaved of you, for a short space,—[and that] in face and presence only, not in heart,—have been the more solicitous (anxious) to see your face.’ Nothing short of this amplified version can draw forth the full sense intended by the Apostle in this passage, so pregnant with meaning, and in which words heaped on words serve to show the vehemence of his desire to see them again. It would seem, indeed, to have been the perturbation of his feelings which occasioned the removal of the phrase ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ out of its right position between περισσ. and ἑκοσφ., for I cannot agree with Schott, that the words were purposely so placed, gravitatis causa.—Περισσ. is not to be taken, with Est. and Olsh., simply as put for λίαν, nor even for ‘more;’ but, as the argument in the context requires, for ‘the more,’ as in Heb. ii. 1. xiii. 19; thus intimating that ‘even this brief absence had caused him the more vehemently (ἰκτανῶς) to desire their presence.’

18. διὸ ἡθελ. id.] For διὸ, A, B, D, G, and 7 cursives, have διότι, which is received by Olsh. and Lachm., and by Tisch., ed. 1, who, however, in ed. 2, has restored διὸ, with reason; since the other evidently arose from Critical correction, employed also at iii. 1 by the Reviser of the text of MS. B, where, however, he stands alone. This is not the only place where διότι has been introduced for διὸ. See 1 Pet. ii. 6, and note.—Εγὼ μὲν Παῦλος, ‘I, Paul, for my part.’ The insertion was made to prevent any mistake in the use here of the plural for the singular.—ἅπαξ καὶ δὶς, i. e. ‘not once only, but a second time,’ on which sense see note on Phil. iv. 16.—καὶ ἐνέκοσφεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Σατ., ‘but,’ attamen, ‘Satan hath thwarted our purpose.’ See Luke xxii. 3. 1 Cor. vii. 5, and note on Gal. v. 7.

19. τίς γὰρ—παρουσία:] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. ‘And no wonder we should be thus desirous of seeing you], for what,’ &c.? The sentence following would have been plainer, if expressed declaratively; but instead of this it is, with greater elegance and spirit, made interrogative (q. d. ‘who is our hope if ye are not so;’ implying, ‘ye are so, in the fullest sense’); after which there is subjoined, at v. 20, the same sentiment expressed declaratively, with γὰρ referring to the answer supposed to be given; q. d. ‘[Are not ye such, &c. I may with truth say that ye are], for ye are,’ &c. In ἰλπ., χαρὰ, and στέφ. καυχ. there seems to be a dimaz.

III. The Apostle now proceeds to recount what he had done, and espec. why he had sent Timothy. We have here a reference to what was a little before said, ii. 17, seq., of his earnest desire to see them, and his attempt to do so being impeded. And the present narration is, as Calv. observes, meant to further assure them of the earnestness of this his desire. Accordingly, this portion ought not to have been dis severed from the preceding context by commencing a new chapter.

1. μηκέτι στέγοντες] Here we may, with the best Commentators, supply from the subject-matter, τὸν πόθον ὑμῶν (‘the desire of seeing you’); q. d. ‘not being able any longer to hold out, or restrain the desire of seeing you, [and yet being unable to accomplish that desire],’—words which must be supplied from the subject-matter. The next words, εὐδοκήσ. καταλειφ-μόνοι, καὶ ἐπέμψαμεν, advert to the circumstances in which Paul thought fit to acquiesce, in the next desirable course to adopt,—namely, to remain alone at Athens, and send Timothy to Thessalonica in his stead. So Est., ‘visum fuit adventum et presentiam meam per alium mihi conjunctissimum, ac velut alterum me, suppleri.’ He further remarks, that the expression μόνοι καταλειφθῆναι was adopted to express his affection for Timothy, and ‘devotionem suam ob absentiam Timothei ad Thessal. missi.’

2. For διάκονον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ συνεργόν, Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., and Tisch. adopt καὶ συνεργόν τοῦ Θεοῦ, from a few uncial MSS. (to which I can make no addition). However, internal evidence is in favour of the reading, which, were there more authority of cursive MSS., I should be ready to receive; for I suspect that συνεργόν and διάκονον are only two readings of the same single term used by Paul; accordingly, one must be a gloss on, or an alteration of, the other. It should seem that συνεργόν is the original reading, and διάκονον the gloss, or Critical alteration. The origin of the change prob. was, that some Reviser stumbled, though causelessly, at the expression συνεργ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, as partaking too much of anthropomorphism, and, accordingly, substituted the correction διάκονον.

ἡμῶν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς τὸ στηρίζαι ὑμᾶς, καὶ παρακαλέσαι ὑμᾶς περὶ τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, <sup>3</sup> τῷ μηδὲνα σαίνεσθαι ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις· αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἶδατε ὅτι εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα. <sup>4</sup> Καὶ γὰρ ὅτε πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἤμεν, προελέγομεν ὑμῖν ὅτι μέλλομεν θλίβεσθαι, καθὼς καὶ ἐγένετο καὶ οἶδατε. <sup>5</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο κἀγὼ μηκέτι στέγων, ἔπεμψα εἰς τὸ γνῶναι τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν, μή πως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειράζων, καὶ εἰς κενὸν γένηται

Thus internal evidence is quite in favour of συμ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, the force of which phrase I have shown in my note on 1 Cor. iii. 9. Lachm. and Tisch. here cancel the second ὑμᾶς, and for περὶ read ὑπὲρ. For each reading there is considerable authority; and as internal evidence is somewhat in favour of the latter, it might be received were there more external authority for it. As respects the ὑμᾶς, internal evidence is so strong against it as to warrant its exclusion. It seems to have been cancelled for the purpose of removing a tautology; though here intensity of sense is communicated by the repetition. As to the sense to be ascribed to παρακ., I am now of opinion, that its being combined with στηρίζαι will not necessarily call for the sense 'to exhort,' or 'to admonish'; for though the two words are associated at Acts xiv. 22, yet there the construction is different from that of this passage,—where, I apprehend, the sense 'to comfort,' = 'to strengthen,' which I have inculcated at John xiv. 16, is the most suitable, and it is confirmed by 1 Pet. v. 10, στηρίζαι, θανατώσαι, where see note; and so the verb 'to comfort' in our older writers, even down to the time of Hooker, who writes, 'to comfort and confirm the assent of reason.' See more at large on this sense in note on Rom. i. 12.

3. The Apostle having told them that the design of his sending Timothy to them was to establish and comfort them in their Christian faith and profession, and to prevent their being either flattered or frightened out of their constancy, adduces two cogent reasons for their continued patience and resolution. (Chand.) 'It was,' observes Olah., 'but natural, and to be expected, that young Churches, not yet well confirmed (such as that of Thessalonica was), might easily be shaken by the vehemence of persecution. Hence the Apostle had, immediately after the founding of their Church, apprized them of the inevitableness of the thing.'—τῷ. The Dat. here denotes cause, like the Hebr. 'placed before Infinitives'; and thus the τῷ here will be equiv. to εἰς τὸ at ver. 6. As to the reading τοῦ, it is evidently a gloss, or correction. The expression σαίνεσθαι seems to be best explained by Chrysost. and the ancient Commentators by κινεῖσθαι, σαλεύεσθαι, ταράττεσθαι; a sense of the word often found in the Class. writers. So Diog. Laërt. viii. 1, 21, οἱ δὲ σαίνονται τοῖς λεγομένοις, ἰδόντων. Eurip. Rhes. 55, σαίνει μ' ἄνυχος φρυκτωρία. Those who so understand the term here, tell us it comes to mean this from the primitive signification of the word being 'to wag the tail,' as a dog does. But that idea, besides that it is not sufficiently primary, would rather lead to the sense of adulari, which would here be quite out of place. In fact, the original signification of σαίνει is the same as that of the cognate form σαίω, to move or stir, shake any thing from its place; and hence, in the figurative sense, to perturb, &c.; a view, I find, adopted by Pelt and Schott, of whom the former rightly observes that σαίνω comes from the old uncontracted form σαινω (with which compare λαίνω and μαίνω), and that, of course, from the primitive form σαίω. With respect to the exact sense here, I should say, that while some explain it 'to be perturbed,' others, 'to be moved [from the faith];' it will be best to unite both senses, the latter arising out of the former. Comp. Acts ii. 25, ἵνα μὴ σαλευθῶ, where see my note.—ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις, 'at these evils [suffered by me and you].' The reason for this is assigned in the next words, εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα, which must not be confined to the Apostle and the Thessalonians, but taken generally, as referring to the lot or condition of all true Christians, who, as Hyper. expresses it, 'omnes ad hunc usum sunt positi, ut gravior affligantur;' see 2 Tim. iii. 12. Acts xiv. 22. Luke xxiv. 26. I find this confirmed by Calv., and also by Olah., who well observes, that in the εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα is couched far more than the moral necessity of suffering; nay, that it points at the ordinance of God,—that Christians are to suffer:—inasmuch as suffering is for them a means of perfection, if endured in a right spirit. See 1 Pet. ii. 19—22. It is, indeed, the test of the true Christian; see 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12.

4. καθὼς καὶ οἶδατε. A somewhat harsh construction for καθὼς (put for ὅ) καὶ, ὅς οἶδατε, ἔγινετο, 'which also, as ye know, came to pass.'

5. Here there is a resumption of what was said at vv. 1, 2 (the third and fourth verses being, in some measure, parenthetical), and the words may be rendered 'On this account,' or 'for this reason, it was, that I, being no longer able to contain myself (out of anxiety for you, wrestling with trials and persecutions) to ascertain the state of your faith (constancy in your Christian profession).—μή πως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειρ., 'fearing) lest haply the Tempter may have by some means tempted you, and our labour should be in vain.' Or, as Prof. Scholefield expresses it, 'to know whether the Tempter have tempted you by any means, and lest (in that case) our labour be in vain.' He compares Eurip. Phœn. 91, 2, μή τις πολιτῶν ἐν τριβῇ φαντάζεται, Κάμοι μὲν ἔδην φαῖλος, ὡς δούλη, ψόγος, Σοῖ δ', ὡς ἀνάσσει, and he remarks that 'in both cases μή has different senses, according to the different moods with which it is connected: which is very true; but the question is, what are those different senses? Dr. Peile, appealing to the same passage of Eur., renders nearly as I have hitherto done. On mature consideration, however, I am now of opinion that the above view is ὁ κόπος ἡμῶν. <sup>6</sup> Ἄρτι δὲ ἐλθόντος Τιμοθέου πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀφ' ὑμῶν, καὶ εὐαγγελισαμένου ἡμῖν τὴν πίστιν καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην ὑμῶν, <sup>7</sup> καὶ ὅτι ἔχετε μνησίαν ἡμῶν ἀγαθὴν πάντοτε, ἐπιποθοῦντες ἡμᾶς ἰδεῖν, καθάπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς ὑμᾶς. <sup>8</sup> διὰ τοῦτο παρεκλήθημεν, ἀδελφοί, ἐφ' ὑμῖν, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει καὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἡμῶν, διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν πίστεως. <sup>9</sup> ὅτι νῦν ζῶμεν, ἐὰν ὑμεῖς στήκητε ἐν Κυρίῳ. <sup>10</sup> Τίνα γὰρ εὐχαριστίαν δυνάμεθα τῷ Θεῷ ἀνταποδοῦναι περὶ ὑμῶν, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ χαρᾷ ἣ χαίρομεν δι' ὑμᾶς ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, <sup>11</sup> νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ δεόμενοι εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν ὑμῶν τὸ πρόσωπον, καὶ καταρτίσαι τὰ ὑστερήματα τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν; <sup>12</sup> Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ

1 Cor. 11. 2.
Col. 4. 18.
2 Tim. 1. 3.
Heb. 12. 8, 7.

f Rom. 1. 10
—12.
e 15. 22.
3 Cor. 1. 15.
24
e 13. 9, 11.
Phil. 1. 25.

not so correct as strict propriety, as to the difference between the two constructions,—that with the Indicat. and that with the Subjunct,—requires. The principle on which this use of μή proceeds is ably pointed out by Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. Dial. p. 80, seq. thus: μή, when commencing a dependent clause, is sometimes found followed by the Indicative, that is, when the circumstance expressed by the Verb in the clause is one which is certainly not prospective, and therefore the notion of design is excluded; and the Particle is nearly deliberative, or dubitative.' After illustrating this principle from the passage of Eur., he adduces the passage now before us, which he pronounces to be exactly similar, and renders, 'I sent to learn the state of your faith; whether the Tempter had tempted you, and lest our labour should prove in vain.' And he then remarks, 'The Apostle sent, first, to learn whether they had been tempted, and, secondly, if that should prove to be the case, to prevent a failure of his past labours.' Lastly, he compares Ecclus. xix. 13, Ἐλεῖσθον φίλον, μήποτε οὐκ ἐποίησε, καὶ εἰ τι ἐποίησε, μήποτε προσθή.

6—8. 'The Apostle further describes, with a touching sensibility, how beneficially the good tidings which Timothy brought of their firm state of faith, and of their love, had operated on him; he says they are a comfort to him in all distresses; yea, they have brought him life in death.' (Olsch.) Render: 'But now that Timothy hath come to us from you, and hath brought us glad tidings of your faith and love, and that ye have a kind remembrance of us always—longing to see us, even as we you,—therefore, brethren, have we been comforted concerning you under all our affliction and distress (lit. 'pressure of difficulty=straits') through your faith; i. e. 'faithfulness to your Christian profession.' The reading ἀνάγκῃ καὶ θλίψει, adopted by Scholz, Iachm., and Tisch., from 6 uncials, and 4 cursives (to which I can make no addition), is a Critical alteration; whereas the t. rec. is confirmed by 2 Cor. vi. 4, in all the copies; where see note. To suppose all the copies here, except 10, to be altered from that passage, would involve an extreme improbability. The ὅτι in ὅτι νῦν ζῶμεν seems to refer to a clause omitted; q. d. '[We may truly say we were comforted in our distress;] for now (as things now stand), on hearing this good news of your steadfastness, we do indeed live, i. e., enjoy life; since our labour has not been in vain.' This sense of ζῆν, as of vivere in Latin, is frequent. Of this use of νῦν, Dr. Peile adduces an ex. from Thucyd. ii. 77. It is indeed frequent in that writer, and I have treated on it in lib. i. 68 and 123. The words following, ἰδὲν—Κυρίῳ, do not correspond in construction; but, in fact, there is a blending of two clauses, νῦν ζῶμεν ὅτι ἰστέκατε, and ζήσομεν ἰδὲν στήκητε. On στήκ., in the sense of 'being steadfast,' see Gal. v. 1, and Phil. iv. 1.

9. This joy felt at tidings (considered as the fountain of life) announcing the faith of the Thessalonians, leads the Apostle to bless Him who was the author of so good a work; after which act of thanksgiving, he offers up a prayer to Almighty God, that he would graciously favour his purpose of returning to Thessalonica. —τίνα εὐχαρ., for τ. ἀξίαν εὐχ., or πᾶς δυνάμεθα εὐχαριστῆν ἀξίως τῷ Θεῷ; There is an allusion to Ps. cxvi. 12.—ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ χαρᾷ, for ὑπὲρ π. χαρᾶς, 'on account of the great joy'; a use of πᾶς derived from the Hebrew.—ἔμπρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ should be joined with χαρᾷ; and, as Chrys. observes, the words are meant to refer to God as the Author of that joy; and to hint that it is His gift, and not to be ascribed to their own exertions.

10. ὑπερεκπ. δεόμενοι, &c.] The feeling of devout thankfulness to God for them was naturally accompanied with a desire and prayer to be permitted to revisit them, expressed in prayers to that effect; for in εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν the εἰς τὸ denotes end. In καταρτ. τὰ ὑστερήμ. τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν the senses of repairing and completing seem to be united; as Gal. vi. 1, and 2 Cor. xiii. 11. The full sense is, 'to repair what is incomplete, and fill up what is lacking.' However, in these ὑστερήματα τῆς πίστεως (lit. 'short comings of faith') is to be understood, not 'the power of faith' (for that had been, we find, hitherto ἐνεργῆς), so much as defects in the knowledge of faith, which admit of being gradually supplied through a longer intercourse with, and further instruction from, the Teacher. However, Paul, we may be sure, considered the καταρτίσαι practicable, not by his own power, but through the strength of the Holy Spirit.

11—13. 'Paul here utters explicitly the petition that God and Christ may prepare for him the way to his dear Christian brethren in Thessalonica, and fill them with love, and confirm them in sanctification.' (Olsch.)—καταυθ. τὴν ὁδόν does not mean merely (as some recent ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς κατευθῆναι τὴν ὁδὸν ἡμῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. 12 ε Ὑμᾶς δὲ ὁ Κύριος πλεονάσαι καὶ περισσεύσαι τῇ ἀγάπῃ εἰς ἀλλήλους καὶ εἰς πάντας, καθάπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς ὑμᾶς 13 ἡ εἰς τὸ στηριξάι ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας ἀμέμπτους ἐν ἀγιωσύνῃ, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων αὐτοῦ.

IV. 1 α [Τὸ] λοιπὸν οὖν, ἀδελφοί, ἐρωτῶμεν ὑμᾶς καὶ παρακαλούμεν ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, καθὼς παρελάβετε παρ' ἡμῶν τὸ πῶς δεῖ ὑμᾶς περιπατεῖν καὶ ἀρέσκειν Θεῷ, ἵνα περισσεύητε μᾶλλον.
 2 οἴδατε γὰρ τίνες παραγγελίας ἐδώκαμεν ὑμῖν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου

Commentators imagine) 'May God grant us to come unto you!' It is, in fact, a prayer; and it need not have been debated by Expositors whether there be an allusion to making a straight road, or to cutting out and levelling a road (on which see Matt. iii. 3, and Luke i. 79); for both may be understood; the 'directing of any one's steps' implying a removal of all impediments. The language (that of humble dependence) is founded on those passages of the Old Test., where God is said to direct the ways, or steps, of men, as Isa. xlv. 13. lxi. 8. Jerem. x. 23. Prov. iii. 6, and (which the Apostle appears to have had in mind) xvi. 9. And what is so often in the New Test. ascribed to God is here ascribed to Christ also; as also in the next verse there is another ascription of what pertains to Deity. On which see Whitby and Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test. vol. iii. p. 215, 221.

12, 13. Having thus expressed his anxious desire to be permitted to again see them, the Apostle concludes the first part of the Epistle, by subjoining pious wishes and ardent prayers for their spiritual advancement, espec. in charity and love, 'the very bond of all perfectness' (Col. iii. 14. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 1 Tim. i. 5. iv. 12), and hence here represented as tending (also) to procure our acceptance with God at the great day of account; see Matt. xxv. 35, 36. On the full sense of the present prayer see Hyper. and Calv.

12. πλεονάσαι καὶ περισσεύσαι] 'make to increase, yes, abound.' The two terms are here used in an active sense (see note on 2 Cor. ix. 8), as, indeed, words of this sense often are in all languages. On the doctrine see Calv. and Hyper.

13. εἰς τὸ στηριξάι—ἐν ἀγιωσύνῃ.] Render: 'that he may so establish your hearts (as to be) blameless in the sight of God.' On the force of στηρ. see note on Rom. xvi. 2. 2 Thess. ii. 17. iii. 3. James iii. 8. 1 Pet. v. 10. The phrase ἀμέμπτους ἐν ἀγ. is pregnant with meaning, chiefly by the use of ἐν, with which comp. 1 Cor. vii. 15, 22. Gal. i. 6. Eph. vi. 24; and on the force of ἀμέμπτ. see Eph. v. 27, and note. The last words, μετὰ πάντων, may be taken either with τ. παρουσίᾳ τ. Κυρ., or with the more remote antecedent ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας, see the notes of Calv., Hyper., and Est. The former construction is, however, the more natural, though I would not say that the latter may not be included, so that the words may belong to both. At any rate, the rendering of Mackn. and others, 'with all his holy angels,' is quite untenable. Est. well explains v. 12, and the first clause of v. 13, thus; 'Dominus vos abundare faciat cha-ritate, ita ut per eam confirmet corda vestra in omni bono; vos, inquam, reddendo irreprehensibiles, atque sine offensione viventes quoad externam conversationem, idque cum sanctimoniâ, i. e. puritate et munditiâ privatâ animi et corporis.' The sense of πάντων τ. ἀγ. is well explained, 'omnibus per ipsum (i. e. Christum) sanctificatis;' to whom he will say, 'Come ye blessed of my Father,' &c. 'Non dubito (says Calv.) quin sanctos ideo nominaverit Paulus, ut admoneret nos in eum finem vocari a Christo, ut cum omnibus sanctis colligamur: hæc enim cogitatio studium sanctitatis acueri in nobis debet.'

IV. Here commences the second part of the Epistle, which, as in the other Epistles, is parænetic. (Hyper.) Though the Apostle had seen reason to bestow high commendation on the Thessalonian Church generally, he at the same time judged it proper, by adverting to his own course of life, both to confirm those who had hitherto done well, and to admonish certain who might be inclined to follow the evil examples so frequent in this city. After which he then (ch. iv.) proceeds to various exhortations, giving them those rules and directions relating to the purity and holiness of the Christian life, the observance of which was necessary to their walking worthy of the Lord to all well-pleasing, and to their answering the obligations of their Christian profession. (Schott and Chandler.) After the prayer that God would, through his Spirit, fill the Thessalonians with Christian love, the Apostle now turns to them also,—calling upon them to do their part in the work of sanctification; so that here, as Phil. ii. 12, 13, human agency seems not to be annihilated by the Divine, but stimulated. Paul acknowledges their Christian walking, but exhorts them to still increase in the care and fidelity of their walk.

1. τὸ λοιπὸν οὖν] A formula of transition frequent in Paul's Epistles, espec. towards the close. The τὸ, however, is here cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., on strong external authority, confirmed by internal evidence.—ἐν Κυρίῳ, 'per Dominum.' The construction is, ἵνα, καθὼς παρελάβετε—Θεῷ, οὕτως (i. e. ἐν τούτῳ) περισσεύητε μᾶλλον.—τὸ πῶς, lit. 'the instruction how.'—περιπατεῖν καὶ ἀρέσκειν may be taken for οὕτως περιπατεῖν ὥστε ἀρ.; or there may be a Hendiadys for Θεῷ ἀρεσκόντες περιπατεῖν.—ἵνα περισσεύητε μᾶλλον, 'that ye may make greater and greater progress.'

Ἰησοῦ. <sup>3</sup> <sup>b</sup> Τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ ἁγιασμός ὑμῶν <sup>b</sup> Rom. 12. 2. Eph. 6. 17, 21.
ἀπέχεσθαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ τῆς πορνείας <sup>4</sup> <sup>c</sup> εἰδέναι ἕκαστον ὑμῶν <sup>c</sup> 1 Cor. 6. 15, 18.
τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκευὸς κτᾶσθαι ἐν ἁγιασμῷ καὶ τιμῇ <sup>5</sup> <sup>d</sup> μὴ ἐν πάθει <sup>d</sup> Rom. 6. 10. 1 Cor. 15. 34.
ἐπιθυμίας, καθάπερ καὶ τὰ ἔθνη τὰ μὴ εἰδότα τὸν Θεόν. <sup>6</sup> <sup>e</sup> τὸ <sup>e</sup> Eph. 4. 17, 18.
μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν ἐν τῷ πράγματι τὸν ἀδελφὸν <sup>f</sup> Lev. 19. 11. 12. & 28. 14.
αὐτοῦ διότι ἐκδικὸς ὁ Κύριος περὶ πάντων τούτων, καθὼς καὶ <sup>g</sup> Jer. 23. 13. 1 Cor. 6. 8.
προείπομεν ὑμῖν καὶ διεμαρτυράμεθα. <sup>7</sup> <sup>h</sup> οὐ γὰρ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς <sup>h</sup> 1 Lev. 11. 44. & 19. 3.
ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἐν ἁγιασμῷ. <sup>8</sup> <sup>i</sup> Τονγαροῦν ὁ ἀθε- <sup>i</sup> John 17. 9. 1 Cor. 1. 2. Heb. 12. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 14. 15. g Luke 10. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 40.

3—5. 'To this general exhortation the Apostle now causes the special moral precepts to succeed, and first of all those for sexual purity and chastity (vv. 3—8). The ἁγιασμός for "the state of holiness" is to be taken here in a special sense as "chastity," as it is also used at Rom. vi. 19. 1 Tim. ii. 15. The proper term for it is ἀγνεία, 1 Tim. iv. 12. v. 2. But, considered as true inward chastity, it is necessarily conjoined with universal moral purity; whence the justification for such a special application of the word proceeds. (Olish.) The earnest injunction to moral purity seems to have been suggested by the term ἀγιωσύνη in the last verse of the chapter preceding, where it is well expressed by Est., 'sanctimoniā,' meaning 'puritate et munditia privata animi et corporis.' The τοῦτο is not pleonastic, but serves to strengthen the expression, and ὁ ἁγιασμός is put per appositionem exegeticam; and γὰρ is best rendered quippe, or 'nempe, ex gratiā.'

4. What is here said is exegetical of the preceding. By τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος is meant, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, 'his body'; the body being thus considered as the ἀγγεῖον τῆς ψυχῆς (to use the expression of Philo), i. e. the receptacle of the soul. So Cicero, Tusc. Quæst. lib. i. cap. 22, 'Corpus quidem quasi vas est, aut aliud animi receptaculum'; and Hermas calls the body simply the vessel, without any adjunct for explanation. The expression, indeed, in this sense is not unfrequent in the Heathen Philosophers, and the Christian Fathers of the earliest period, as Barnabas; and it is, moreover, found in 1 Sam. xxi. 5 (which prob. suggested the use of it here), 'Women have been kept from us these three days, since I came out, and the vessels of the young men are holy.' How suitable, too, this sense is to the context, it is needless to remark. Accordingly, the undoubtedly true sense is, 'the vessel of himself, his body'; such being considered as the ἀγγεῖον, or 'receptacle of the soul,' which is appointed by the Creator to possess (κτᾶσθαι, for κατέχειν), and, by implication, to hold the mastery over the inferior part of the man. This use of κτᾶσθαι for κίεσθαι was perhaps popular and provincial, and prob. introduced, from the Latin use of possidere, for custodire (see the Glossaria), which is sometimes employed in the very sense here intended by the Apostle,—namely, to hold the mastery over. So Cicero, Verr. v. c. 68, says, 'totum hominem possideret,' made himself master of the whole man. Turretin here well remarks, 'Qui esse affectibus carnalibus dedunt, non possident corpus suum, non sunt ejus domini, sed sunt ejus servi.' I find this interpretation confirmed by Chrysa., who says, ἀρα ἡμεῖς αὐτὸ (τὸ σκεῦος) κτᾶμεθα, ὅταν μὴν καθαρὸν, καὶ ἱσθῆν ἐν ἁγιασμῷ ὅταν δὲ ἀκαθάρτον, ἀμαρτια, &c. κτᾶται αὐτό. In τιμῇ there is a reference to the abstinence and consequent dishonouring of the body by impurity. With the whole passage comp. Rom. i. 31, 32, which forms its best comment.

6. τὸ μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν ἐν τῷ πράγματι.] On the sense of these words no little difference of opinion exists. Most modern Expositors understand ὑπερβ. and πλεονεκ. of covetousness, or rather cheating and extortion; and by τῷ πράγματι, business generally, i. e. commercial transactions; or they take τῷ as put for τινι: a use, however, quite contra linguam; and τὸ πρᾶγμα in the sense business is negatived by the use of the Article (which, as Bp. Middl. truly observes, 'limits the sense to the matter in question,—namely, the conduct of the incestuous person'; see vv. 3, 4, 5, 8); or generally, that of seduction of chastity, with allusion to the base arts by which such infamous designs are brought about. Thus the true rendering (in which all the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) is, 'to circumvent and overreach as to the matter in question,'—namely, corrupting, by seduction, a brother Christian's wife or daughter, and so inflicting on him a grievous injury. To the exx. (not all of them to the purpose) which have been adduced of this use of τὸ πρᾶγμα, I add Lucian, Dial. Mor. viii. s. fin., καὶ αὐτὸς ἀναφλέγεται αὖτε τὸ πρᾶγμα. Indeed, I would go so far as to say, with Mr. Green, that 'proof' is required of πρᾶγμα being ever used in the Singular, to denote what the common interpretation affixes, 'worldly business in general;' while of the other sense abundant proof has been adduced. Somewhat scanty, however, has been the proof as respects ὑπερβαίνειν, and, therefore, the following ex. may be acceptable, Artemid. iii. 25, ὑπερβαίνειν τινα καὶ ἀδικῆσαι: πολλάκις—μοιχρὸν γενόμενον νόθου παῖδας λάθρα ποιῆσαι.—Διότι ἐκδικὸς ὁ Κύριος περὶ π. τ. Render: 'for the Lord is the avenger of all such,'—namely, by punishing those who commit them. So Jos. Ant. iv. 8, 24, has νόμος κολαστὴς γίνεται τῶν τοιούτων, and Hom. Batrach. v. 96, ἴχει Θεὸς ἐκδικὸν δῆμα.

7. οὐ γὰρ ἐκάλεσεν—ἁγιασμῷ.] Here is urged the second motive to enforce the above prohibition, in which we have, as Hyper. and Calv. remark, an argumentum à contrariis; q. d. 'God hath called us unto sanctification, therefore certainly not to uncleanness, because the two things are inconsistent with each other.' See 2 Tim. i. 9.—ἐν ἁγιασμῷ, meaning, 'under a dispensation of holiness,' which requires holiness.

8. τὸν γὰρ ἀθετῶν should be rendered, 'where-τῶν, οὐκ ἄνθρωπον ἀθετεῖ, ἀλλὰ τὸν Θεὸν, τὸν καὶ δόντα τὸ Πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ τὸ ἅγιον εἰς ἡμᾶς.

h Lev. 19. 18.
Matt. 22. 39.
John 6. 28.
8. 13. 34.
Eph. 6. 2.
1 Pet. 4. 8.
1 John 4. 11.
23. 3 & 31.

<sup>9</sup> Ἡ Περιὶ δὲ τῆς φιλαδελφίας, οὐ χρεῖαν ἔχετε γράφειν ὑμῖν αὐτοὶ γὰρ ὑμεῖς θεοδιδάκτοί ἐστε εἰς τὸ ἀγαπᾶν ἀλλήλους· <sup>10</sup> καὶ

1 Acts 90. 34.
Eph. 4. 23.
3 Thess. 2.
7, 12.

γὰρ ποιεῖτε αὐτὸ εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἀδελφούς τοὺς ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ. Παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, περισσεύειν μᾶλλον

1 Rom. 1. 13.
1 Cor. 10. 1.
8. 12. 1.
3 Cor. 1. 8.
3 Pet. 2. 8.

<sup>11</sup> καὶ φιλοτιμείσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, καὶ πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια, καὶ ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν ὑμῶν, καθὼς ὑμῖν παρηγγείλαμεν

<sup>12</sup> ἵνα περιπατῇτε εὐσχημόνως πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, καὶ μηδενὸς χρεῖαν ἔχητε.

<sup>13</sup> Οὐ θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν ἀδελφοί, περὶ τῶν † κεκοιμη-

fore he who despiseth,' scil. τὴν τοῦ ἀγιάσμοῦ κλήσιν, as the Pesch. Syr. Translator supplicat. On the force of the term ἀθετεῖ, see note at Gal. ii. 21.—οὐκ—ἀλλά, 'non tam—quam.' By ἄνθρωπον the Apostle means himself; intimating that any such disregard of him would be, in fact, disregard of God. Indeed he seems here to have had in mind the words of Christ, Luke x. 16, ὁ ἀθετῶν ὑμᾶς ἐμὶ ἀθετεῖ, &c. For ἡμᾶς, many MSS., some Versions, and several Fathers and early Editions have ὑμᾶς, which is adopted by Matth., Lachm., and Tisch.; but I rather agree with Griesb. and Pelt, that the t. rec. should be retained, being far more suitable and natural: and as to the superiority of MS. evidence for ὑμᾶς, the words are so perpetually confounded, that such authority is here of little weight. Internal evidence as to suitableness outweighs external, and the former is quite in favour of ὑμᾶς, which is required by ἡμᾶς in the verse preceding. By τὸ Πνεῦμα ἅγιον are not so much meant the extraordinary and supernatural, as the ordinary aids of the Spirit, given to every man to profit withal.

9. φιλαδ.] From the context it appears that we are chiefly to understand that sort of love to the brethren (i. e. Christians) which is evidenced in what is usually denoted by charity, in ministering to their temporal wants. By θεοδιδ. is meant not merely, or chiefly, the teaching of God by the precepts of the Gospel, but that teaching of God by the HOLY SPIRIT, whereby not so much the intellect is enlightened, as the heart is touched, and the affections swayed. Comp. Isa. liv. 13. John vi. 44.

11, 12. 'This one thing alone Paul entreats of them,—not to stand still at that point to which they had hitherto attained, but to increase in love, espec. to let their brotherly love expand into universal love—as shown πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω.' (Olsh.)

11. φιλοτιμείσθαι ἡσυχάζειν] 'that ye make it your study to be quiet. So φιλοτιμ. is used at Rom. xv. 20 and 2 Cor. v. 9. The term signifies properly 'to love honour,' and in the New Test. 'so to exert oneself in doing any thing as from a love or sense of honour.' In the passage now before us there seems an elegant allusion to the strivings of ambition with the quiet of private life, and that by a boldness of turn, and a sort of Oxyptosis, q. d. 'Honorem et laudem in eo ponite, ut vitam agatis tranquillam.' By ἡσυχ. is denoted the opposite to that restless and insubordinate spirit which, there is reason to suppose, was then very prevalent in the world, and such as would be likely to arise from the extreme excitement inseparable from a new and deeply interesting religion. With this is closely connected the following particular, πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια. So Hesychius places together ἰδιοπραγίᾳ, ἴδια πράττειν and ἡσυχάζειν: and Plato, p. 680, has ἡσυχίας ἔχον καὶ τὰ ἑαυτοῦ πράττων. Dio Cass. ix. 27, τὴν ἡσυχίαν ἔχον καὶ τὰ ἑαυτοῦ πράττων. Instead of ἴδια in this phrase, elegance of Grecism would rather require ἑαυτῶν; but an ex. of ἴδια has been adduced from Galen. Be that as it may, the Pronoun is very emphatical, and the full force of it is well shown by Dr. Barrow in two admirable Sermons on this text. On the expression ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν, see Eph. iv. 28 and note. Here ἰδίαις is added by way of strengthening the sense, and because of τὰ ἴδια before.

12. ἵνα περιπατῇτε εὐσχημόνως πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω] So Col. iv. 5, ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω. The expression, however, of the present passage, εὐσχημόνως, has a more special sense; meaning decently, respectably, or credibly, including the idea of regularity and order. So 1 Cor. xiv. 40, it is said πάντα εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξιν γινώσκειν: namely, lest the heathens should represent Christianity as a religion of sloth and disorder. Τοὺς ἔξω, scil. τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ; meaning, those out of the pale of the Church, as 1 Cor. v. 12, 13.—μηδενὸς χρεῖαν ἔχοντες. At μηδενὸς some supply πράγματα; others, ἀνθρώπων. The latter is preferable, as yielding the more extensive sense, and indeed comprehending the other; q. d. 'that ye may be beholden to no man for any thing; which is surely of human blessings one of the greatest. So it is said, Ps. cxxviii. 2 (a passage, perhaps, here had in mind by the Apostle), τοὺς πόνοι τῶν καρπῶν σου φάγεται: μακάριοι εἰ!

13—18. The Apostle now passes on to correct the errors of those who were altogether doubtful of the state of Christians already dead, or who should die before the solemn return of Christ to judgment (an event which they thought not very remote); namely, whether they would, equally with those whose earthly course should reach up to the coming of the Lord, be partakers of the resurrection of the dead; or, whether they would not be in a worse condition than those in the heavenly kingdom. Although we are not enabled to exactly trace the origin of this anxiety, μένων, ἵνα μὴ λυπήσθε καθὼς καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ οἱ μὴ ἔχοντες ἐλπίδα.

14 <sup>k</sup> Εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέστη, οὕτω k 1 Cor. 15.
13-23.
1 Cor. 13,
14.
Rev. 1. 18.
11 Cor. 15.
23, 51.
καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς κοιμηθέντας διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἄξει σὺν αὐτῷ.

15 <sup>l</sup> Τοῦτο γὰρ ὑμῖν λέγομεν ἐν λόγῳ Κυρίου, ὅτι ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες

yet, from what the Apostle says, we may collect that some such doubt existed among them at that time as to the matter in question; inasmuch that they mourned bitterly over those brother Christians who had already died, as if they were to be deplored; and themselves being ignorant of the fatal day, were in great fear of death, and accordingly were more prying than was proper in searching to know the time when Christ should come. (Schott.) To repress these vain doubts and fears, and, as far as he could properly do it, satisfy their curiosity, the Apostle repeats the doctrine he had already taught them of the resurrection of the pious dead to a happy immortality, as founded on their Lord's own resurrection. He further informs them, that those found alive at the coming of Christ will have no advantage or privilege over those already dead, as regarded the happiness of a future state; that they would, indeed, not die at all, but be changed into incorruptible, yet that they would not anticipate the dead by being first received up into heaven; nay, that the dead must first be raised, and then both they and the persons then alive would be taken up together, to meet the Lord in the air, and so be received into heaven.

13. οὐ θάλω δι' ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν] A form of soliciting earnest attention, frequent in St. Paul's writings. Comp. 1 Cor. xi. 3.—τῶν κοιμημένων, lit. 'of those who have gone to sleep,' i. e. departed in peace, in the faith and fear of the Lord. See note on John xi. 12. Strong authority, however, exists for κοιμημένων, which has been edited by Lachm. and Tisch., from A, B, and several cursives (I add Lamb. 1186). But since internal evidence is equally balanced, and external authority is insufficient, I have, with Griesb. and Scholz, retained the t. rec. For οὐ θάλω just before, almost all the uncial MSS., and many others, have θάλωμεν, which has been received by Lachm. and Tisch. But the t. rec. is not to be disturbed, since the formula loquendi, οὐ θάλω ὑμᾶς ἀγν., is frequent in the writings of St. Paul,—though it is possible he might here choose to employ the plural. However, the singular is strongly supported by the most ancient of all documents, the Pesh. Syr. Version. By οἱ λοιποὶ are meant 'the heathens,' who, having no rational hope of a resurrection, used to make a show of excessive grief for the departed. This, as well as the feeling itself, the Apostle forbids, as being inconsistent with the hope of the resurrection set forth in the Gospel. By the word ἐλπίς is here to be understood a sure and well-founded expectation; for that the heathens had a hope, and even a sort of expectation, has been proved by the Commentators, though that was, Bp. Warburton thinks, rather in the exoteric than the esoteric doctrines of the philosophers, and, withal, one very obscure and imperfect. Here, we may remark, the Apostle says, not (like the Stoical philosophers) that they ought not to grieve at all (which were unnatural and impracticable), but that they should not grieve as those who have no hope. See Eccles. xxii. 11. It is a fine observation of Bengel, 'Efficacia religionis Christianæ vel maxime ex eo patet, quod ea desiderium mortuorum, affectuum subtilissimum, non tollit aut exacerbat, sed suaviter temperat.'

14. εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν, &c.] The εἰ, as Est. well points out, is not dubitantis, but 'præsupponens, velut fundamentum firmissimum sequentium.' At οὕτω καὶ supply (with Theodor., and, of modern Commentators, Abp. Newc., Chandi., and Schott) πιστεύομεν, taken from πιστεύομεν just before; q. d. 'If we believe, as we must, in the death and resurrection of Christ, we have equal reason to believe,' &c. The argument is a popular one, as in 1 Cor. xv. 13, 18.—τοὺς κοιμηθέντας, meaning those who have died in faith, which is the import of the term supr. v. 13; and, accordingly, no adjunct is necessary, such as διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, standing for σὺν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, as some Commentators have supposed. Taking, then, διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ with the words following, and not with the preceding, we may render them 'per Jesum,' 'by his power and agency,' and thus the general sense will be, that 'it is by the power and agency of Christ that God will bring with him those of his people who are departed out of this life;' a doctrine taught in other parts of Scripture: e. g. John v. 28, sq.; vi. 39, 55. xiv. 3. 2 Cor. iv. 14. Phil. iii. 21. This is confirmed by the authority of Chrys., Est., and Hyper., which last-mentioned Commentator, after an able analysis of the sense of the context, explains the meaning to be, 'per potentiam Jesu, ipso Jesu autore, Pater adducet mortuos cum illo, i. e. Jesu.' This explanation is confirmed by the circumstance that κοιμ. is the term appropriated in Scripture to express the death of the righteous, whose death, as Hamm. observes, 'is but a repose of their bodies in the dormitory, and a rest of their souls in God's hands.' Hence it is not unfrequently in N. T. applied to those who have died in the faith of Christ: e. g. Matt. xxvii. 52, τῶν κοιμημένων ἀγίων. Acts viii. 60. 1 Cor. xv. 6, 21. 1 Thes. iv. 13. Ἀξί: must have a sensus præsens, 'will raise them up, and bring them along with him (i. e. Jesus) into heaven'; so that they may remain with him and partake of his glory. See John xiv. 3. 1 Cor. xv. 18, 23.

15—18. Here the Apostle announces more explicitly the progress of the occurrences as certain, revealed truth, assuring them that all true Christians shall be partakers not only of the resurrection, but also of the same salvation prepared for them in the kingdom of heaven, whether they be dead, or still alive, at the coming of the Lord Jesus. (Schott. and Olsh.)

15. τοῦτο γὰρ—κοιμ.] Render: 'Now this I tell you, on the revelation (or authority) of the Lord, that those who are alive and survivors at the coming of the Lord, shall by no means anticipate, take precedence of, those who shall have already died,'—namely, in entering into heavenly bliss. Every one, as the Apostle says at 1 Cor. xv. 23, will enter, 'in his own order.' The words may express (what some suppose them οἱ περιλειπόμενοι εἰς τὴν παρουσίαν τοῦ Κυρίου, οὐ μὴ φθάσω-μεν τοὺς κοιμηθέντας· <sup>16</sup> ὅτι αὐτὸς ὁ Κύριος ἐν κελεύσματι, ἐν φωνῇ ἀρχαγγέλου, καὶ ἐν σάλπιγγι Θεοῦ καταβήσεται ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ· καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χριστῷ ἀναστήσονται πρῶτον

m Matt. 24.

81.

1 Cor. 15. 51.

2 Thess. 1. 7.

to do) the Apostle's opinion that he should, or might, survive until the last day. But as we have no proof, from any other passage, that the Apostle did entertain such an opinion, many Expositors, ancient and modern, would take ἡμεῖς as said per κοινωσιν,—meaning, we Christians: though, in thus understanding the words as put hypothetically, not a little harshness is involved; and, as Schott observes, 'it is difficult to imagine any good reason why the Apostle should have adopted a mode of speaking always ambiguous, and in this context obscure.' And the passages here adduced in proof that ἡμεῖς may mean 'we Christians' (as Mark x. 3. John vii. 19, 22. Acts vii. 38) are perhaps not quite of the same nature. Hence it may be best to adopt a middle course; and suppose that, though the ἡμεῖς does not imply that the Apostle thought certainly he should live till the last day, yet it may serve to show that he thought it possible the last day was so near at hand, that some then living might see it; and that, having no certain revelation, he expressed himself indefinitely: a view, I find, supported by the opinion of Prof. Schott. That the Apostle had reference to those of his own age, involves, he thinks, no difficulty; for even our Saviour himself never spoke definitely as to the time when he should return, whether sooner or later, although some of his sayings seemed to import as much. Thus there was nothing to hinder the Apostle from supposing, with most Christians (who ardently desired the advent of Christ, and the great change it would bring), that the coming of the Lord might take place during the lifetime of some part of the persons then living. That St. Paul was strongly inclined to think so, seems evident from ver. 4. Nor is there thus any contrariety with what is said at 2 Cor. iv. 14. 1 Cor. vi. 14, if we do but consider that the Apostle was unwilling ever to pronounce any positive opinion respecting the time of Christ's coming; and the ἡμεῖς may very well include both all those who had died before the Apostle wrote this, and also those who should die before the coming of the Lord. By speaking obscurely he doubtless meant to express no certain expectation on the subject; for though he was himself inclined to think that some then alive should witness the coming of Christ, or, at least, that it was not far distant; yet he was well aware that it was not permitted to him 'to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath reserved to himself,' so we find that he sometimes refutes those who expected the Lord's return to be close at hand, and gladly anticipated it; and as the Apostle, at the time when he wrote this Epistle, was not yet far advanced in life, he might very well entertain the opinion that he should perhaps live to see that day.

16. 'To what has been said the positive side is now subjoined, from which follows the groundlessness of the anxiety of the Thessalonians for their dear ones dead in the faith; for at Christ's coming again these will rise first; consequently none can come before them.' (Olah.) Here we have a description of the solemn advent of Christ, expressed by images and types derived from the triumphal entry of an earthly king taking possession of a kingdom with an armed force. (Koppe).—ὅτι αὐτὸς ὁ Κύρ., 'because the Lord himself' (in person), as God-man and Mediator.—ἐν κελεύσματι.—Θεοῦ. Koppe and Rosenm. take this as standing for ἐν κελεύσματι διὰ φωνῆς ἀρχαγγέλου καὶ σάλφ. Θ., which might be admitted, could we take ἐν κελ., with Dr. Peile, for 'on a sudden'; but of that use there is no proof. Hence it is best to regard ἐν φ. ἀρχ., κ. ἐν σ. Θ. as exegetical of the foregoing ἐν κελεύσματι, which means lit. 'at the word of command, by signal given' (so Thucyd. ii. 92, ἀφ' ἑνὸς κελεύσματος ἐμβόησαντες, where see my note) even by the voice of the archangel and by the trumpet-sound' (uttering God's Fiat). See Matt. xxiv. 31, comp. with 1 Cor. xv. 52, where see notes. How far what is here said, espec. ἐν σάλπιγγι, may be referred to figures it were difficult to say, and presumptuous to pronounce; see note on 1 Cor. xv. 51. I agree with Calv., that the Apostle's intention here was no other than 'magnificam et reverentiam plenam Judicii speciem quendam præbere, donec eam plane cernamus.'—Καταβήσεται ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ. 'That this descent of Christ will be a visible one, as prepared ἐν κελεύσματι, is clearly shown by Matt. xxiv. 30 (where see note); but whether the Redeemer will tread the earth, or only show himself to men, is not openly declared. In Rev. xix. 12 is described this appearance of Christ for the Millennium; but there, too, the discourse seems only of a showing himself on the part of Christ, to the terror of the unbelieving, to the joy of the believing. How the appearing of the Lord will have an annihilating effect on the wicked, and their head, Antichrist, is declared in full detail at 2 Thess. i. 8. ii. 8; in accordance with which, the Lord is, in this Epistle, described as a heavenly στρατιῶν, coming not alone, but all his saints with him (supra iii. 13), who form, as it were, his heavenly army, which surrounds him, as in the case of the Old Test. יהוה (see Gen. xxxii. 2), and the description in Rev. xix. is quite in accordance with it.' (Olah.) By οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χρ., it is generally admitted, are meant those who have died in the faith and fear of Christ, equiv. to οἱ Χρ. κοιμηθ. 1 Cor. xv. 18; for the best Commentators are agreed, that nothing is said, either here or at 1 Cor. xv., of the wicked; since the time when they should rise could be of no moment to their friends, inasmuch as they would rise only to perdition. The πρῶτον has reference to the whole clause, not merely to οἱ νεκροί. It is meant that the resurrection of the dead in Christ shall take place first, and then the glorification, by incorruptibility, of the living, who shall be caught up, together with them, into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. This particular, the being caught up and introduced to the Lord in the air is, as Theophylact observes, a token of honour, as opposed to the state of the wicked, who shall

17 ἔπειτα ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περιλειπόμενοι, ἅμα σὺν αὐτοῖς
 ἀρπαγησόμεθα ἐν νεφέλαις εἰς ἀπάντησιν τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς ἀέρα· καὶ οὕτω πάντοτε σὺν Κυρίῳ ἐσόμεθα. 18 Ὡστε παρακαλεῖτε ἀλλήλους ἐν τοῖς λόγοις τούτοις.

V. 1 Ἀπερὶ δὲ τῶν χρόνων καὶ τῶν καιρῶν, ἀδελφοί, οὐ χρειάζεσθε ἔχετε ὑμῖν γράφεσθαι. 2 αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἀκριβῶς οἴδατε, ὅτι [ἡ] ἡμέρα ἔσται ὡς ἡ ἡμέρα.

await the sentence of the Judge below.—πορεύεσθε ἀπ' ἡμῶν—εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον, &c., Matt. xxv. 41. After all, however, attention, though not acceptance, is due to the interpretation of Dr. Burton (adopted by Dr. Peile), who with more than usual confidence pronounces the sense to be, not 'those who have died in Christ (our departed brethren in the Lord, 1 Cor. xv. 18), shall be first to rise,' but 'the resurrection of the dead shall take place first; and then the living shall be caught up:' 'though,' remarks Dr. Peile, 'he has, oddly enough, not told us what to make here of the words ἐν Χριστῷ.' These Dr. Peile would, after Schott, connect with ἀναστήσονται: which, however, as Olsh. has shown, is doing too much violence to the construction to be adopted. In short, it seems to me that neither Dr. Burton's view, nor Dr. Peile's modification of it, can stand, being beset by difficulties insurmountable, which my limits will not permit me to point out.

17. 'To this description of Christ's appearing are now annexed details as to the relation of those fallen asleep to the living, and stating the course of the events according to the revelation made to Paul on the subject. (Olsh.)—ἔπειτα ἡμεῖς—περιλ.—ἀρπαγ. Render: 'next in order,' or 'afterward, shall we who are alive, who remain over (i. e. the survivors), shall together with them be caught up in a cloud.' The best comment on these obscure words is the parallel passage of Rev. xi. 12, where, in describing the revival and ascent into heaven of the two Witnesses killed at Babylon, it is said καὶ ἤκουσαν φωνὴν μεγάλην ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λέγουσαν αὐτοῖς: 'Ἀνάβητε ὧδε! καὶ ἀνίστησαν εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἐν τῇ νεφέλῃ, 'in the cloud' (provided for them), or rather, 'on the cloud' (considered as a sort of vehicle). See also Rev. xiv. 14, ἐπὶ τῇ νεφ. καθήμενος, and comp. Dan. vii. 13 with Matt. xiv. 30. xxvi. 64, and Rev. i. 7. I find this confirmed by Olsh., who assigns the following as undoubtedly the meaning:—'The quick and the dead (both of whom are to be imagined clothed with their glorified body), borne by clouds, caught up from the earth by a sudden power, come to meet the Redeemer, descending from heaven, in the air, and thus (οὕτω = 'under these circumstances, in the given state of things') are gathered together unto the Lord (see 2 Thess. ii. 1, as to this ἐπισυναγωγή ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον), therefore not on the earth, but in the higher regions.—εἰς ἀπάντ., for ἀπαντάν, as in Matt. xxv. 1, 6. Acts xxviii. 15. 1 Sam. ix. 14. Jerem. xli. 6; in the other later Class. writers, also in Polyb., Diod. Sic., as a brief expression of common life. By this is denoted their being as it were introduced to the Lord, preparatory to their being for ever with him, implying participation in his kingdom and glory. See John xiv. 2, 3. The next words, καὶ οὕτω —ἐσόμεθα, seem meant to express the third and topmost step of the felicity of the saints. The Particle οὕτω is pregnant with meaning; the full sense of the words is, 'And when thus the preparatory judgment and sentence shall have been given, then shall we who are admitted to the heavenly kingdom be, and continue for ever, with the Lord.' See Luke xv. 31. John xii. 26. xiv. 23. xvii. 24. See Calv., Hyper., and Est.

18. ὥστε παρακαλ.—τούτοις] Here we have the conclusion of the foregoing, pointing at the scope of the whole of what has been said, and more plainly showing that (as Calv. remarks), 'in fide resurrectionis esse nobis justam consolationis materiam, modo Christi simus membra et illi tanquam capiti nostro verè uniti simus: quamquam Apostolus non modo unumquemque sibi querere doloris solatium jubet, sed aliis etiam ministrare.'

V. 1. The Apostle in this Chapter meant principally to anticipate the further inquiry of curious persons; q. d. 'When shall these things be?' &c. (see Matt. xxiv. 3), and (agreeably to the example of his Lord, see Luke xii. 23, 24) endeavours to turn their minds to something of far greater importance,—even the living such a life, as that they shall always be prepared for the advent of the Lord, however sudden and unexpected it might be; which, come when it might, would surprise the wicked, and fill them with terror; which, however, would only be the prelude to the execution of their condign punishment. The introducing of this circumstance of the terror of our Lord's appearance, proves, as Mackn. observes, that 'the Apostle had some further view than that of comforting the Thessalonian Christians under their bereavement of deceased relatives and dear friends.'

2. ἀρ. οἴδατε, &c.] Alluding to the saying of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 38, and perhaps still more to the knowledge they would already possess through the verbal instruction Paul had given them. Some, indeed, as Hammond and Schoettgen, understand this figuratively of the destruction of Jerusalem; but the context here will not permit us to understand it in any other than such a sense as will admit of a reference to the judgment, at least by implication, not, however, the general day of judgment, but, as Chrys. and several eminent modern Expositors are agreed, the particular day of each individual; for, as observes Bp. Jebb, Serm. p. 20, 'the day of his death is to each man, as it were, the day of judgment.' Not, indeed, that there is no intermediate state, but that our condition in the disembodied and intermediate state, no less than our final condition for all eternity, must be decided by the condition in which we shall die. So far, indeed (continues he), as from Scripture

c Luke 11. 24, 25.
 Isa. 13. 6-9.
 Jer. 13. 11.
 d Eph. 5. 2.
 e Luke 16. 8.
 Rom. 13. 12.
 Eph. 5. 2.
 f Matt. 24. 42. & 25. 13.
 Luke 21. 34, 35.
 Rom. 13. 11, 12.
 1 Cor. 15. 24.
 1 Pet. 5. 14.
 1 Eph. 5. 2.
 g Rom. 13. 12.
 h Isa. 59. 17.
 Rom. 13. 12.
 Eph. 6. 14, &c.

Κυρίου, ὡς κλέπτῃς ἐν νυκτὶ, οὕτως ἔρχεται. <sup>3</sup> ὅταν γὰρ λέγωσω "Εἰρήνη καὶ ἀσφάλεια," τότε αἰφνιδίως αὐτοῖς ἐφίσταται ὁλεθρος, ὥσπερ ἡ ὠδὴν τῇ ἐν γαστρὶ ἐχούσῃ· καὶ οὐ μὴ ἐκφύ-γωσιν. <sup>4</sup> Ἔμεις δὲ, ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἐστέ ἐν σκότει, ἵνα ἡ ἡμέρα ὑμῶν, ὡς κλέπτῃς, καταλάβῃ. <sup>5</sup> πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς υἱοὶ φωτός ἐστέ καὶ υἱοὶ ἡμέρας· οὐκ ἐσμέν νυκτὸς, οὐδὲ σκότους. <sup>6</sup> Ἄρα οὖν μὴ καθεύδωμεν ὡς [καὶ] οἱ λοιποὶ, ἀλλὰ γρηγορῶμεν καὶ νήφωμεν <sup>7</sup> οἱ γὰρ καθεύδοντες, νυκτὸς καθεύδουσι· καὶ οἱ μεθυσκόμενοι, νυκτὸς μεθύουσιν <sup>8</sup> ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἡμέρας ὄντες, νήwe may venture to pronounce, the great day of judgment will be for the most part declaratory, the distinctive feature, perhaps, of which will be, that before an assembled universe it will present a 'revelation of the righteous judgment of God.' So, too, Olsh., who observes, that 'as according to several passages of Scripture (John iii. 18. 1 Cor. vi. 3) the faithful are not judged at all, so whenever the idea of judgment is used of them, it is only to be so conceived, that by it the recognition of the faithful, as being really such, is expressed.' He is also of opinion that, 'though the dead will not experience the actual judgment till after their resurrection, yet there is also a preliminary decision given with death itself.' The η before ἡμέρα, not found in a considerable number of MSS., has been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., perhaps rightly, for the reasons which I have given on the parallel passage at 2 Pet. iii. 10. I would only further observe, that the use of the article with ἡμέρα, infra, ver. 4, will not prove that it was employed here, because there the case is different, the article having the force of renewed mention, q. d. 'the day before spoken of,' &c.

3-5. For greater impressiveness, the Apostle now adverts to the effect which the resurrection will have on the unprepared and wicked; and passing from the day of the Lord to the general notion of day, he, at ver. 4, graphically represents the character of the careless and disobedient, and of the watchful and obedient respectively, under the usual figures of light and darkness; and then, at ver. 6, he, on this figure, founds the earnest exhortation, 'Let us, then, as children of the day, not act like children of the night and of darkness, by sleeping at our post; much less by engaging in other pursuits usually thought appropriate to the night, as drunkenness; but be watchful and sober.' The Apostle (as Olsh. well observes) here takes Christ's coming, on its threatening, condemning, punishing side, in order to excite his readers to earnest watchfulness, that they may not grow like the God-estranged men of the world, whose souls' state is intimated by the exclamation εἰρήνη καὶ ἀσφάλεια,—in using which Ezekiel (xiii. 10) must have been in Paul's mind.

4. Ἰνα ἡ ἡμέρα ὑμῶν—καταλάβῃ] 'should surprise you, come upon you unawares,' as in Polyb. ix. 18, 3, τῇς ἡμέρας καταλαβούσης αὐτόν. Comp. John xii. 35, and see note. For κλέπτῃς MSS. A, B, and the Copt. Version have κλέπτας (approved by Grot.) which is adopted by Olsh. and Lachm., while Tisch., with Griesb., retains κλέπτῃς, rightly, since external authority is exceedingly slender, and internal evidence not, as Olsh. supposes, in favour of κλέπτας. To suppose κλέπτῃς, with Olsh., an alteration from ver. 2, is preposterous; for that the alteration should have been made in all the copies but two (for I find κλέπτῃς in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies) is too improbable to be thought of. As to the remark of Conyb. in favour of κλέπτῃς, that this sort of transition, where a word suggests a rapid change from one metaphor to another, is not unlike the style of St. Paul, there is nothing of cogency in the argument. We are not to bring in such a transition and change of metaphor here (where it would involve a harshness unprecedented even in St. Paul) on next to no authority. I doubt not that the reading arose from an error of scribes, the letters α and η being perpetually confounded.

5. υἱοὶ φωτός ἐστέ καὶ υἱοὶ ἡμέρας] On the force of these expressions, which are nearly convertible (as is shown by φωτός καὶ ἡμέρας being combined in Jos. Antt. vii. 8, 1), see note on Eph. v. 8, and John xii. 36. The expression υἱοὶ ἡμέρας does not elsewhere occur, and was only introduced here by way of corresponding to υἱοὶ νυκτὸς and σκότους just after.

6. Ἄρα οὖν μὴ καθεύδ., &c.] The full sense is well expressed by Dr. Peile, in paraphrase, thus: 'If it be so, then, with us, brethren, let us not be slumbering at our post, as do the great mass of men who know not him that hath called us to be his soldiers and servants (2 Tim. ii. 3, 4); but let us be vigilant and sober-minded.' 2 Tim. iv. 5. 1 Pet. iv. 7. v. 8.

7. νυκτὸς—μεθύουσιν] No wonder; for the being drunken in the day-time was accounted the greatest disgrace; so 2 Pet. ii. 13, and note. To this purpose Commentators have adduced several passages from ancient writers; to which might have been added others, from Athen. pp. 279, 433, and Hor. Sat. i. 4, 51, 'Ebrius et, magnum quod dedecus, ambulet omnis Noctem cum facibus.'

8. ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἡμέρ. ὄντες, νήφωμεν] The full sense is, 'But let us, being, as we are, at least (i. e. by profession), of the day, be sober.'—ἐν-δυστάμενοι θώρακα πίστεως, &c. The foregoing admonition to watchfulness suggested, it seems, here to the Apostle a figurative comparison of the Christian with the soldier at his post on guard; and accordingly the various virtues and graces, with which he is to work out his salvation, are compared to the various arms of a soldier; as at Eph. vi. 13—17 (see note), 'thereby,' as Dr. Peile observes, 'representing to us in φῶμεν, ἐνδυσάμενοι θώρακα πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ περικε-φαλαίαν ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας. <sup>9</sup> <sup>1</sup> Ὅτι οὐκ ἔβeto ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς εἰς

ὀργήν, ἀλλ' εἰς περιποίησιν σωτηρίας διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ·Χριστοῦ, <sup>10</sup> <sup>κ</sup> τοῦ ἀποθανόντος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ἵνα, εἴτε γρηγορώμεν εἴτε καθευδόμεν, ἅμα σὺν αὐτῷ ζήσωμεν. <sup>11</sup> Διὸ παρα-καλεῖτε ἀλλήλους, καὶ οἰκοδομεῖτε εἰς τὸν ὅνα, καθὼς καὶ ποιεῖτε.
<sup>12</sup> <sup>1</sup> Ἐρωτῶμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, εἰδέναι τοὺς κοπιῶντας ἐν

the abstract, Justification, Faith, Salvation, as so many different pieces of that Divine panoply, in which, for our encouragement at once and example, he has set the Christian warrior, as it were, objectively before us; standing (as we must stand) on the firm footing, which "the Gospel of peace" hath given us, against "the wiles of the devil," and furnished with weapons which the hand of God himself hath prepared for our use, to every one that seeketh of him, from the celestial armoury of Truth.—Θώρακα πτε-ταις και ἀνάγναι. Corresponding to the phrase θώρακα τῆς δικαιοσύνης at Eph. vi. 14. The phrase ἑλπίς σωτηρίας is found also in Jos. Antt. xvi. 8, 2—καὶ περιεχέ.—σωτ. Here ἑλπ. is in apposition with περιεχ., on which kind of apposition, = nampe, see note on Matt. xv. 9, and add to the passage adduced Jos. Bell. i. 20, 1, ἔχον τὴν ἀρετὴν τῆς σωτηρίας ἑλπίδα. 'Ἐρ' is used, instead of the apposition, at Heb. vi. 19. The expression ἑλπ. σωτ. is one of frequent occurrence in Jos., and is found in Thucyd. iv. 96, though in each case only as understood in the sense 'hope of preservation.'

9. ὅτι οὐκ ἴδωτο—ἀλλ' εἰς περιποίησιν, &c.] In these words the grounds and natures of this hope are set forth, and that by reference to the end of God's dispensation to us-ward; which is expressed (1) negatively, by οὐκ ἴδωτο; (2) positively, by ἀλλὰ, &c. As respects ἴδωτο εἰς, there is an expression, by Hebraism, equiv. to προώρισε, destinavit, as in 1 Pet. ii. 8, εἰς δὲ ἐτίθησαν, and oft. in Sept., e.g. Pa. lxvi. 9, τοῦ θεμέλιου τῆς ψυχῆς μου εἰς ζωῆν, also not unfrequently in New Test., as will appear by the exx. adduced in my Lex. N. T. The wrath of God involves the idea of punishment to the uttermost, even perdition. As respects the proposition positive, ἀλλ' εἰς περιτ. σωτηρ., it is put for εἰς τὸ περιποιῆσθαι ἡμᾶς τὴν σωτηρίαν, a use of περιτ. found also in 2 Thess. ii. 14, εἰς περιτ. δόξης τοῦ Κυρίου, and Heb. x. 39, εἰς περ. ψυχῆς, 'in acquisitionem, possessionem,' making one's own, viz., 'salutem animarum,' as opposed to 'perditionem' just before. It is plain that there is nothing in the use of ἴδωτο εἰς, as used for προώρισε, to countenance the notion of an absolute Divine decree, since the very purpose of the Apostle here is, as Eat. remarks, 'animos Thess. excitare per verba bona spei et fiduciae,' to rouse those whom he is addressing by suitable encouragement to exert themselves to 'make their calling and election sure,' to work out their salvation in humble dependence on the grace of God (here implicitly held forth) to enable them to work his will, and encouraged by the assurance hence to be gathered, that the design of God our Saviour in sending his Son was not to condemn the world, but to save the world. So Dr. Burton well expresses the sense thus: 'For God hath placed us in a state in which we are not ['as Predestinarians vainly talk,' Peile] exposed to his anger (rather, 'wrathful vengeance'), but in which we may obtain salvation.' See John iii. 36. See also Dr. Benson, as cited in my former Editions.

10. ἐπε γρη, ἐπε καθ' ὅ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is put for ἐπε ὧμαι ἐπε ἀποθνήσκωμαι, implying, as Peile explains, 'under all circumstances, and in all stages of our existence.' It is meant, that whether we be alive or dead at that day, it matters not; the living with Christ, or enjoying eternal happiness with him (see supra v. 17), shall be equally our portion. See Calv. and Hyper.

11. id., &c.) 'Such being the case.' Here we have subjoined the inference from the foregoing, and that by way of exhortation. Expositors are not agreed whether παρὰ should be interpreted comfort, or exhort. The term is susceptible of either sense; but the latter is more suitable to the context here, as the former is to the context in the parallel passage at iv. 18. And though it has been urged that there is here a repetition, per epianalepsin, of what was said there, yet that has by no means been proved. It is better, therefore, with the most eminent Commentators in general, to explain παρὰκαλῆς 'exhort each other to the duties of watchfulness, sobriety, perseverance in the faith, and a holy life.' Thus far in my former Editions; in which view Dr. Poile acquiesces, regarding the sense as 'hardly less applicable to the conclusion of the preceding Chapter, than to comfort;' and connects very well with οἰκδομ. just after. But there is another sense of παρὰ, which is far more applicable, and connects even better with οἰκδομ., I mean that which I have inculcated in note on supr. iii. 2 (where see my note); for surely to strengthen the heart, and confirm the reason, is the surest way to build up any one in faith, hope, and charity, so that the Christian professor shall become a holy Temple in the Lord. See 1 Pet. ii. 9. Jude 20. — καθὼς καὶ ποιεῖτε. This praise, mixed with the exhortation, is delicately thrown in, to make the latter more effectual. Of this an ex. occurs in Aristid. t. i. 232, 11, σχεδὸν δι' οὐδὲν ἄλλο, ἢ δ ποιεῖτε, παρῆντα. See also 2 Thess. iii. 1, ὡς δ λόγος τοῦ Κ. τρέχει καὶ δοξάζεται, καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

12-14 Having exhorted them to comfort and edify one another, the Apostle adds such other exhortations as he found, from Timothy, were necessary. Lest they should imagine they had no occasion for religious teachers, he enjoins them to show all due respect to their spiritual pastors and masters; and to those he hints their reciprocal duties to their people. (Grot and Benson). — sidenote: here includes the notions of ὑμῶν, καὶ προϊσταμένους ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ νουθετοῦντας ὑμᾶς, 13 καὶ ἡγείσθαι αὐτοὺς ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ διὰ τὸ ἔργον αὐτῶν. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. 14<sup>m</sup> Παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί· νουθετεῖτε τοὺς ἀτάκτους, παραμυθεῖσθε τοὺς ὀλιγοψύχους, ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν, μακροθυμεῖτε πρὸς πάντας.

 15<sup>n</sup> Ὁρᾶτε μὴ τις κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ τιλὶ ἀποδοῇ· ἀλλὰ πάντοτε respect and care, shown espec. in making due provision for their comfortable sustenance. This force of the term is found also in Gen. xxxix. 6, and Prov. xxvii. 23, where the Hebrew is yr. From this passage some learned Commentators have inferred the existence then at Thessalonica of the three distinct orders of the ministry. Koppe, however, maintains that the terms νοῦθετ. and προϊστάμενοι are not meant of various kinds of Presbyters (some Bishops, and others Pastors, see Acts xv. 17, comp. with 28. Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 2, seqq.), but of the same persons comprehended, in this verse, under the more general term κοπιῶντες. Κοπ. is, indeed, a very general term to denote, 'labouring in the promulgation of the Gospel;' as Rom. xvi. 6, 12. 1 Cor. xv. 10. xvi. 16. Gal. iv. 11. Phil. ii. 16. Col. i. 29. 1 Tim. iv. 10. v. 17. But, upon the whole, I see not how we can come to any determinate opinion on the nature of the ecclesiastical government of the Thessalonian Church, for want of more exact information than we possess. Yet it seems probable that by κοπιῶντες are denoted 'those who occupied the ordinary offices of teaching;' and by προϊστάμενοι 'the rulers of the church;' and that νουθετοῦντες is a general term applicable to both. See note on Rom. xii. 7, 8.

13. ἡγείσθαι αὐτοὺς ὑπερεκπ.] An expression corresponding to the Class. one περί πλείστον ἡγείσθαι or ποιεῖσθαι, 'to make very much of,' 'to hold in the highest honour.' Render: 'account them as very highly deserving of love and honour.' In ἐν ἀγάπῃ we have superadded to the idea of honouring that of loving—τὸ ἔργον α., meaning, either the work of instruction, or government, or both. The reading αὐτοῖς has no claim to be received; for (1) it is very inferior in external authority; and (2) internal evidence is in favour of ἑαυτοῖς, which is more suitable to the context, and does not, as the other, violate Grecism; for the prophetias lingua would require, not ἀπορρίβειν ἐν τινι, but μετὰ τιμῃς, as Rom. xii. 18; whereas ἐπ. ἐν ἑαυτοῖς (for ἀλλήλοις) is confirmed by Mark ix. 50, ἐπ. ἐν ἀλλήλοις. Besides, ἑαυτοῖς is confirmed by Clem. Alex. Ped. iii. 12, p. 263, Sylb., and by the Copt. and Goth. Versions. The var. lect. did not arise from an error of scribes, but a mistake of Interpreters and Critics, who erroneously connected the words with the preceding context, as if the Apostle meant to exhort the people to be at peace with their spiritual guides; which, however, were unnecessary, that sense being included in the preceding, 'velut minus in majores,' says Est.; for in exhorting them to pay deference to their spiritual instructors, and to love them highly, it was implied that they were to be at peace with them. Whereas there was need of a new, yet kindred exhortation to the people; i.e. that they should keep peace among themselves, one with another; for, as Benson observes, 'if the people quarrel among themselves, their spiritual guides cannot expect much love from them, or to do good to them.' Moreover, thus the exhortation here will be quite akin to that at the close of the 2nd Epistle to the Corinthians, where, after first exhorting the people to be at peace and concord among themselves, Paul adds, as a motive to follow the injunction, 'And then the God of love and peace shall be with you;' so here, after various other exhortations, he, at v. 23, concludes, not indeed with an assurance, but with an apprecatio, to the same effect, praying for them, of God, the peace he had before enjoined them to cultivate, and also holiness of life; the former being implied in the expression 'the God,' i.e. author, 'of peace,' as in 2 Cor. xiii. 11, 'the God of love and peace;' just as (observes Benson) in Rom. xv. 4, 5, having mentioned 'patience and consolation,' he then styles God 'the God of patience and consolation;' and having in Rom. xv. 12, adverted to 'trust' or 'hope, in God,' he calls him 'the God of hope;' and in each passage he joins it with prayer to God for the thing; whence it is plain that those passages are loci gemini gemelli.

14. ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί] meaning, as the best Expositors are agreed, those spiritual pastors and masters just before mentioned, and now apostrophized. To these the terms νοῦθ. and παραμ. are especially suitable; and ἀντίχ. may very well respect the Deacons.—ἀτάκτους is properly a military term, but is of general application, and denotes 'insubordinate.'—ὀλιγοψύχους, 'faint-hearted' (a word nowhere else found), is for μικροψύχ., a term of frequent occurrence in the Sept., where it signifies 'those who are labouring under such trouble, that their heart sinks within them.' The expression may be supposed to denote those who are fearful, even to despairing of working out their salvation; harassed by perplexities, fears, and misapprehensions.—ἀντίχεσθε τῶν ἀσθ. This must, from the context, mean, 'support the weak [in faith];' a sense of ἀσθ. occurring in Rom. xiv. 1, τὸς ἀσθ. ἐν πίστει, prob. meaning those who are weak in their notions of religious liberty.—μακροθ., 'be long-suffering and indulgent.'—πάντας, meaning, all persons of whatever disposition. There is, however, reason to suppose the above admonitions intended, not for ministers only, but for all, the Apostle here, as at Rom. xiv., meaning to give a general admonition, namely (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson, Sermon on Rom. xv. 5), 'that the strong should be more compassionate to the weak, and the weak more charitable to the strong; both weak and strong more patient and moderate, and more respective each of the other in all brotherly mutual condescensions.'

15. ὁρᾶτε μὴ τις κακὸν, &c.] This admonition (manifestly intended for ALL, both rulers τὸ ἀγαθὸν διώκετε, [καὶ] εἰς ἀλλήλους καὶ εἰς πάντας. 16 Ὁ Πάν-οτε χαίρετε. 17 Ἀδιαλείπτως προσεύχεσθε. 18 Ἐν παντὶ εὐχαριστεῖτε· τούτο γὰρ θέλημα Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς.

 19 Ὁ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβέννυτε 20 προφητείας μὴ ἐξουθενεῖτε.

ο Rom. 12. 12. Phil. 4. 4. 1 Cor. 12. 13. 12. Luke 12. 1. Rom. 12. 12. Eph. 6. 18. Col. 4. 2. 1 Eph. 5. 20. 1 Eph. 4. 20. 2 Tim. 1. 6. 1 Cor. 14. 1, 20.

and people) is founded on that of Christ, Matt. v. 39, 44, where see note.—διώκετε, not follow, but earnestly endeavour to follow, 'cultivate,' 'practise,' as Rom. ix. 30.—τὸ ἀγαθόν, as being in opposition to κακόν, must denote 'beneficence,' 'goodness,' as in Rom. xii. 21. Gal. vi. 10, = ἀγαθοσύνη. Rom. xv. 14. Gal. v. 22. Eph. v. 9. 2 Thes. i. 11, δ. δικαιοσύνη. The former phrase is so rare, that I find it elsewhere only in Plato, p. 480, and Xen. Cyr. viii. 1, 13, and ἀρετὴν δ. in Plato, p. 213.—εἰς πάντας, namely, not towards some, but all men. So at 2 Tim. ii. 24 the injunction is, 'be gentle [not unto some, but] unto all men;' and, Tit. iii. 2, to 'show all meekness to all men.'

16. πάντοτε χαίρετε] It is strange that some eminent Commentators should have explained this as equivalent to a sort of valediction, 'May you always be prosperous and happy!' Closely connected as the words are with those which follow, they must surely contain an admonition, not, indeed, as Dr. Burton's version expresses, to cheerfulness, but, as Expositors in general are agreed, to joy in the Lord (which latter words, indeed, are found added in some MSS., and have place in the parallel passages at Phil. iii. 1. iv. 4); meaning, that devout cheerfulness under all circumstances, prosperous or adverse, which results from a firm dependence on God's providence, a just appreciation of our Christian privileges, and the greatness of that hope to which we are raised by the Gospel promises; whereby alone we are enabled (in the words of Rom. v. 2) to 'rejoice in hope of the glory of God.'

17. Prayer is next enjoined, as the best means of maintaining this joy in the Lord; as is shown in Calvin's note on vv. 16, 17. By ἀδιαλείπτως is meant unintermittingly, i. e. never ceasing to pray both at all stated times for public or family prayer, and at all such seasons as are suitable, or required by circumstances, for private devotion; moreover, at all times carefully maintaining a prayerful frame of mind. See note on Luke ii. 37. xlviii. 1. Rom. viii. 1; and compare Eph. vi. 18. Col. i. 9.

18. ἐν παντὶ εὐχαριστεῖτε] Supply πράγματι, 'under all circumstances.' Comp. Eph. v. 20. This injunction is, as Calvin observes, subjoined to the foregoing 'quasi temperamentum, ut quæ desunt expetentes, non tamen desinamus gratias agere.' The connexion between these three rules of a Christian's life are well pointed out by Calvin, as also by Bp. Beveridge thus: 'As (says he) we are to rejoice in the Lord always, so, in order thereto, we must pray unto him without ceasing, that being the means whereby to keep our minds always fixed upon him, and so in a right frame and disposition to rejoice always in him; but for that purpose, as we pray unto him for what we want, we must likewise give him thanks for what we have; and therefore it is added, In every thing give thanks.'—τούτο γὰρ θέλημα, &c., in which clause

(serving to enforce the above exhortation) the τούτο may be referred to the conjoint injunction to unceasing prayer and continual thanksgiving. The sense is, 'For this is the will of God, signified by Jesus Christ respecting you: this is what God is pleased to appoint by Jesus Christ to be performed by you.' See more in Chandler.

19. τὸ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβ.] The ancient Expositors in general, and the most eminent modern ones, regard τὸ Πν. as relating solely to the supernatural Spiritual gifts, which, that some of the Thessalonians possessed, is plain from the verse following. They are not, however, agreed whether by σβέννυτε is meant the quenching them in others (by discouraging and disallowing them), or in themselves; namely, by neglect or abuse, or by evil living. Both may be intended, but chiefly the former. While, however, understanding principally the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit, we must, as respects the latter reference, include his ordinary sanctifying influences and graces, given to every one to profit withal. By the term σβέννυτε the Holy Spirit is here compared to a fire, as in Matt. iii. 11, αὐτὸς ὑμᾶς βαπτίσει ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρὶ, the purpose of which designation is to represent the sanctification as effected by the purifying influence of which we read in the next verse. See more in note there, and also 2 Thes. ii. 13. It is supposed that that fire may be quenched not merely by putting it out altogether by an evil life and conversation, but also by suffering it to go out for want of using it, by neglecting to stir it up for use. Comp. 2 Tim. i. 6, ἀνακατεργαζέτω τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

20. προφ. μὴ ἐξουθεν.] As the foregoing admonition was not to quench the Spirit in others and in themselves, so this, I apprehend, is solely not 'to quench,' i. e. 'repress it,' by disallowing and discouraging the manifestation of it in others. Here προφητεία may be used in the same sense as in the Chapters on the Spiritual gifts, in 1 Cor. xii. and xiv. (see note on xii. 10). If it is not certain, it is at least probable, from St. Paul's using the plural προφ. that he meant thereby to denote the χαρίσματα προφητείας. He may have intended thereby the exercising of the gift of prophecy in other ways besides that of foretelling future events. And there is the more reason to embrace this view, since the warning was not unneeded in the early Church, for as it is well observed by Mr. Conybeare, 'the gift of prophesying (i. e. in inspired teaching [and preaching]) had less the appearance of a supernatural gift than several of the other χαρίσματα, and hence it was thought little of by those who sought more for display than for edification.' I have inserted the words 'and preaching,' because that seems to have been the principal occupation of the προφῆταις, who, it would seem, taught by preaching the truths of the Gospel. Whether the 'prophets' did not sometimes act as Expositors of Scripture (which Calv. and Peile make the prin-

- <sup>a</sup> 1 Cor. 2. 11.
<sup>b</sup> 1 John 4. 1.
<sup>c</sup> Phil. 4. 8.
<sup>d</sup> Rom. 15.
<sup>e</sup> 22. ch. 3. 13.
<sup>f</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 8.
<sup>g</sup> & 6. 30.
<sup>h</sup> 1 Cor. 1. 9.
<sup>i</sup> & 10. 13.
<sup>j</sup> 3 Cor. 1. 18.
<sup>k</sup> Heb. 10. 23.
<sup>l</sup> Rom. 16.
<sup>m</sup> 16.
<sup>n</sup> 1 Cor. 10. 20.
<sup>o</sup> 2 Cor. 12. 12.
<sup>p</sup> 1 Tim. 1. 8, 18, & 5. 7, 21. & 6. 12, 17. 1 Pet. 5. 14.
- 21 * Πάντα δοκιμάζετε, τὸ καλὸν κατέχετε <sup>22</sup> ἀπὸ παντὸς εἵδους πονηροῦ ἀπέχσθε. <sup>23</sup> Ὁ αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἀγιάσαι ὑμᾶς ὁλοτελεῖς· καὶ ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα, καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ, καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἀμέμπτως ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τηρηθεῖ. <sup>24</sup> * Πιστὸς ὁ καλὸν ὑμᾶς, ὃς καὶ ποιήσει.
- 25 * Ἀδελφοί, προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν. <sup>26</sup> * Ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς

cipal sense in the way of lecturing thereon, by a sort of Homiletic discourses, I would not be positive. Indeed, it is not improbable that such was included in the duties of the προφήτης.

21. πάντα δοκιμάζετε—κατέχετε. In δοκιμάζετε we have a metaphor taken either from the assaying of metals, or rather from the trying of money, by ringing or the touchstone. To this there seems an allusion in the expression following, κατέχετε, which refers to the contrary of receiving, namely, the rejection of bad money when proffered. Here two remarkable diversities of reading exist. Several MSS. have πάντα δι δοκιμ.; many others, πάντα δοκιμάζοντες: of which the former has been edited by Gricab. and Scholz; but I see no reason to adopt either. Both appear to be mere marginal glosses, intended to indicate the connexion of these words with the preceding, and make the sense plainer, and accordingly deserve no attention, except as serving to show how the words were understood in the earliest ages. Considering that the admonition in question regards the doctrines of such spiritual persons, as well as the reality of their gifts, it may very well admit of being applied, mutatis mutandis, to the endowments and doctrines of the teachers and preachers of the Gospel in every age. This δοκιμασία is shown by Whitty and Benson to be indispensable to those on whom it is obligatory to 'hold fast that which is good;' and that the ancient Fathers allowed this trial to their hearers, is certain from the citations adduced by Whitty.

22. ἀπὸ παντὸς εἵδους πον. ἀπ. Expositors are not agreed whether εἶδους should be rendered appearance, or kind, i. e. sort. The former interpretation has been adopted by most modern Commentators, including Bp. Middl. (on account of the want of the Article); the latter by the ancient ones generally, and some eminent earlier moderns (as Hamm., Le Clerc, Buxtorf, Wets., and Benson), and, after them, by almost all recent Commentators, including Koppe, Schleusn., Polt, and Schott. And certainly the sense is one very agreeable to the usus loquendi. So in Jos. Antt. x. 3, 1, we have πάντες εἶδους πονηρίας ἐκιδεχάμενοι ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ, καὶ μηδὲν ἀσπίς παραλιπών. The sentiment will thus be parallel to that at Phil. iv. 8, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ—εὐφρῆμα, εἰ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἰ τις ἰκανὸς, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε: and that the expression was so understood by St. Polycarp, appears from an imitation of the present passage in his Epistle to the Philippians, c. ix. 'Keep yourselves from all evil; for he that in these things cannot govern himself, how shall he be able to prescribe them to another?' The connexion, however, of these words with the preceding is rather in favour of the other interpretation. Render (agreeably to the Vulgate and Bengel), 'from every evil appearance,' which may, in a popular sense, mean 'from every thing which has the appearance of being evil;' of course including the latter sense, which is confirmed and illustrated by a passage of Plut. de Vit. Pud. c. 1, εὐπαθὴς, καὶ ('even') πρὸς τὸ φαινόμενον αἰσχροῦ, ὁ εὐδυσώπῃτος, where εὐπαθὴς signifies 'sensitive in his impressions as to what even appears to be evil.'

23. To admonition the Apostle now subjoins prayer to God, as well knowing that his grace alone could produce in them the will and the power to do all those things to which he had exhorted them.—ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης. A highly significant expression, in which the word 'peace' bears a sense far beyond its acceptance in ordinary language, as used of peaceable persons; meaning 'the author of and enjoiner of peace' (see 1 Cor. xiv. 33), and the author of all peace to believers, both from within and from without; God being considered as, in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and therefore becoming 'their peace.'—ἀγιάσαι. On the full force of this term, see notes on John xvii. 17 and 1 Cor. vi. 11.—ὁλοτελεῖς, for ὁλοτελέω.—Ὁλόκληρον is put, as at James i. 4, for τὸ τέλειον. By the several terms τὸ πνεῦμα, ἡ ψυχὴ, καὶ τὸ σῶμα, the Apostle means to denote, by a periphrasis, the whole man, with all his faculties and powers both bodily and mental. Now all these the Apostle prays may be preserved each entire in itself, and altogether spotless, so as to be blameless to the coming of Christ; the spirit, by being kept pure from all ignorance, false principles, and bad affections, and adorned with all the sacred dispositions of piety and virtue; the soul, by being purified from all corrupt imaginations, passions, and evil habits; and the body, by being kept unpolluted with any criminal actions, by the subjection of all its appetites; in short, being habitually employed in all the good works of a Christian obedience. See more in Calv., Hyper., Whitty, and Benson.

24. To prayer the Apostle now subjoins a most comfortable assurance; namely, that God will do what he has promised, and thus act agreeably to the character of a faithful Creator. Compare 2 Thes. iii. 5 and Heb. x. 23. With vv. 24—26 compare 1 Cor. i. 9. Rom. xv. 31. xvi. 16.

26. ἀσπάσασθε—ἐν φιλήματι ἀγίῳ. This injunction occurs also at Rom. xvi. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 20. 2 Cor. xiii. 12, where see the notes. I have only to add, that we find a full account of this observance, as it was practised in the primitive Church, in the Constitutiones Apostolicæ, l. ii. ch. 57, from which it appears, that the men and the women were placed in separate parts of the place of worship; and that then, before re-ἀδελφούς πάντας ἐν φιλήματι ἀγίῳ. 27 * Ὁρκίζω ὑμᾶς τὸν Κύ- 2 Col. 4. 18.

ριον, ἀναγνωσθῆναι τὴν ἐπιστολὴν πᾶσι τοῖς ἀγίοις ἀδελφοῖς.
28 Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν.

ceiving the Holy Communion, the men kissed the men, and the women the women; moreover, that before the observance, proclamation was made by the principal Deacon as follows: μήτις κατὰ τινος, μήτις ἐν ὑποκρίσει; Εἶτα καὶ ἀσπαζίσθωσαν ἀλλήλους οἱ ἄνδρες, καὶ ἀλλήλας αἱ γυναῖκες, τὸ ἐν Κυρίῳ φιλήμα· ἀλλὰ μήτις δολίως: where κατὰ means 'towards.' After this repeated μήτις there is an ellipsis of ποιῶτω, or some such verb; the full sense being, 'Let no one do this in guile.' See Matt. vi. 3. Mark xiii. 15. Luke xvii. 3. The ἀγίῳ after φιλήματι is equiv. to the ἐν Κυρίῳ in the above passage.—At v. 27 the Epistle is addressed to the Rulers of the Church, and is directed to be read to all the members thereof as brethren; and accordingly it was, we may suppose, delivered to and read first by them, and then by them to the whole Church assembled together. 'But,' as observes Olsh., 'that Paul should lay the injunction on the elders with the formula of adjuration, is remarkable, and only to be accounted for by supposing, as we are warranted in doing, from supr. vv. 12, 13, that some slight differences had occurred between the Rulers of the Church at Thessalonica and the Church at large, from which Paul might apprehend that the Rulers might not communicate the epistle to the congregation at all.' As to the change of ὀρκίζω into ἑνὸρκ. by Lachm. and Tisch., from MSS. A, B, D, E, and a few cursives (to which I can only add Mus. 16, 184), it is not rightly preferred on merely the score of its rarity, inasmuch as the form is so rare as to occur nowhere else except in a Greek Inscript., Boeckh, vol. ii. p. 42, No. 1033, and that of a date long posterior to the age of Paul; and prob. the use of the word was confined to the common dialect, though well known to the early Revisers, who introduced it as a (to them) plainer reading.—The cancelling of ἀγίοις by Lachm. and Tisch., from 5 uncials, and 8 cursives, is not authorized by competent authority, espec. since the rarity of the expression, ἀγ. ἀδελφ., occurring elsewhere only at Col. i. 2, and Heb. iii. 1, makes it less likely to be introduced here from those passages, than to have been removed as unusual and unnecessary. Besides, it is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and Vulg. Versions.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΘΕΣΣΑΛΟΝΙΚΕΙΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

a 1 Thess. 1.
1.

b Rom. 1.7.
1 Cor. 1.3. &
1 Pet. 1.2.

I. <sup>1</sup> *ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ Σίλωνανός καὶ Τιμόθεος τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ Θεσσαλονικέων ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ ἡ χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

THIS second Epistle was evidently written not long after the first (probably only a very few months, and towards the end of Paul's stay at Corinth, towards the close of A.D. 53); and, it would seem, principally for the purpose of correcting a mistake which had arisen from the misunderstanding of certain expressions therein contained, as if the day of judgment were to be in that age: an error which, if not corrected, might have proved very dangerous. The circumstances which led to the drawing up (no doubt suddenly, and prob. hastily) of the present Epistle, and other matters which may throw some light on its occasionally dark contents, or at least account for that obscurity, have been ably set forth by Mr. Conyb. as follows: 'The excitement which Paul had endeavoured to allay by his first Epistle had increased, and the fanatical portion of the Church had availed themselves of the impression produced by Paul's personal teaching, to increase it. It will be remembered, that a subject on which he had especially dwelt while he was at Thessalonica, and to which he had also alluded in his first Epistle, was the second advent of our Lord. We know that our Saviour himself had warned his disciples that "of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but the Father only;" and we find these words remarkably fulfilled by the fact, that the early Church, and even the Apostles themselves, expected their Lord to come again in that very generation. St. Paul himself shared in that expectation; but, being under the guidance of the Spirit of Truth, he did not deduce any erroneous conclusions from this mistaken premise. Some of his disciples, on the other hand, inferred that if, indeed, the present world were so soon to come to an end, it was useless to pursue their common earthly employments any longer. They forsook their work, and gave themselves up to dreamy expectations of the future; so that the whole framework of society in the Thessalonian Church was in danger of dissolution. Those who encouraged this delusion, supported it by imaginary revelations of the Spirit (2 Thess. ii. 2); and they even had recourse to forgery, and circulated a letter purporting to be written by St. Paul (2 Thess. ii. 2) in confirmation of their views. To check this evil, St. Paul wrote his second Epistle. In this he endeavours to remove their present erroneous expectations of Christ's immediate coming, by reminding them of certain signs which must precede the second advent. He had already told them of these signs when he was with them; and then explains the extreme obscurity of his description of them in the present Epistle; for he was not giving new information, but alluding to facts which he had already explained to them at an earlier period.' Under existing circumstances the Apostle endeavours to effect his purpose, by showing that the day of judgment will not so speedily arrive as they imagined, but that, before it, an awful apostasy would prevail. Such was his principal and immediate purpose; though he did not omit to take the opportunity to reprove the disorderly conduct in some, which had been occasioned by the opinion in question, and to earnestly exhort them to the discharge of their Christian duties. The Epistle consists of three divisions (corresponding to the three chapters), of which the first is consolatory, the second partly prophetic and partly didactic, the third hortatory and caledictory.

I. 1, 2. On these verses see 1 Thess. i. 1, eq.

3 ° Εὐχαριστεῖν ὀφείλομεν τῷ Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, καθὼς ἄξιόν ἐστιν, ὅτι ὑπεραυξάνει ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν, καὶ πλεονάζει ἡ ἀγάπη ἐνὸς ἑαυτοῦ πάντων ὑμῶν εἰς ἀλλήλους·
 4 ° ὥστε ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν καυχᾶσθαι ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑπομονῆς ὑμῶν καὶ πίστεως, ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς διωγμοῖς ὑμῶν καὶ ταῖς θλίψεσιν αἷς ἀνέχεσθε· 5 ° ἔνδεγμα τῆς δικαίας κρίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς τὸ καταξιώθῃν ὑμᾶς τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὑπὲρ ἧς καὶ πάσχετε. 6 ° εἴπερ δίκαιον παρὰ ε Ph. 1. 18.

 Phil. 1. 2.
 Col. 1. 3.
 1 Thes. 1. 2.
 d 3 Cor. 7.
 14. & 9. 1.
 1 Thes. 2.
 10.
 e Phil. 1. 28.
 1 Thes. 1.
 14.
 1 Pet. 4. 14—
 18.
 f Rev. 6. 10.
 & 11. 18.
 & 15. 4.
 & 16. 5. d.
 & 18. 20, 24.
 & 19. 2.

3—12. After this introduction the Apostle, Hyper. observes, 'begins by the language of praise to exhort them to persevere in the faith.' He commends them for the steadfastness of their faith, and for their patience under persecution, comforting them with the assurance, that when Christ cometh to judgment, they would be rewarded, and their persecutors punished.

3. εὐχαριστεῖν, &c.] Comp. Rom. i. 8. 1 Cor. iv. 5. Phil. i. 3, 4. 'A mode of commendation,' observes Chandi., 'the most engaging and effectual that could have been adopted, and the proper way imaginable to establish and strengthen them.' The we here and throughout the Epistle is, as the best Expositors are agreed, to be understood of St. Paul only.—εὐχαριστεῖν ὀφείλομεν is taken by Chandi. and Koppe as a familiar mode of expression for αἰτίαν ἔχω τοῦ εὐχ., 'we have reason to,' &c.; but this lowers the sense: there being here, as Hyper. remarks, an emphasis in ὀφείλομεν, intimating that the thing is a matter of right, and that by not doing it we should be guilty of ingratitude. See Calv. and Bengel.—καθὼς ἄξιόν ἐστιν. The expression is, as often, for καθῆκον or δίκαιον, 'par est,' 'it is fit or proper.' This is added, Theophyl. observes, in order to prevent any undue self-complacency from the performance of such an act of thanksgiving, since in this we are doing no more than our duty. Comp. the injunction of our Lord, Luke xvii. 10, λέγετε ὅτι δοῦλοι ἀρχαίων ἵσμεν ὅτι ὁ ὀφείλομεν ποιῆσαι (surply μόνον), πακοῦκαμεν.—Ἡ ἀγάπη ἐνὸς ἑαυτοῦ, &c. Including all those kind offices by which Christians might assist their fellow Christians, and thereby mutually sweeten the bitterness of that cup of sorrow, which their profession of a new religion, every where spoken against, would be sure to expose them to.

4. ὥστε—Θεοῦ] Reader: 'Inasmuch that we ourselves are proud (or, may boast of) you among the Churches of God, on account of,' &c.—ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. 'inter cæteras eccl.'—καυχ. in 2 Cor. xii. 5, and oft. is so used. The ἐν means de; as in Gal. iv. 20, ἀπορροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν, and i. 24, ἰδοὺ ἐξομῶ ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν Θεόν, and sometimes in the Class. writers. In ὑπομονῆς καὶ πίστις there may be, as most of the later Commentators say, an Hendiadys for ὑπομονῆς τῆς πίστεως, as ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος: but it is better (with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors) to keep the terms distinct, as Olsh. shows to be proper; the latter being considered as productive of the former, since patience (as Calv. observes) 'is the fruit and testimony of faith.'

5. Having thus expressed the great satisfaction he felt in them on these accounts, the Apostle proceeds to set before them an argument the most powerful to confirm and establish their fidelity for the future. The words ἔνδεγμα τῆς δικαίας, &c., evidently refer to the preceding; but the connexion is not very clear. If, with some, we take ἔνδεγμα as a Nominat., it will be necessary to supply ὁ ἵστων; if, with others, as an Accusat., we may, with the Pesch. Syr., supply αἷς, which, indeed, is found in some MSS. Of these two methods the former is preferable. But still the reference will be the same; though what that exactly is has been disputed. Some refer the words to ὑπομονῆς, &c.: others, to διωγμοῖς and θλίψεσιν; q. d. 'Which [suffering of persecution and affliction] is a proof of the righteous judgment God will exercise at the last day.' For, as observes Calv., 'if we hold it as a first principle of faith, that God is the just Judge of the whole world, and that it is his office to reward every one according to his works, it necessarily follows that the present ἀταξία is an evidence of a judgment not yet apparent.' Thus the Apostle will be understood to say, 'God suffers you to be afflicted with troubles, in order that, by apportioning to you salvation in heaven, and adjudging them to punishment, he may set forth a demonstration of the justice of his judgment.' Yet the sense thus arising, however excellent, would, so introduced, involve no little harshness; and accordingly it seems best, with Schott, to unite both references thus: 'Which [your patient endurance of afflictions] is an evidence of the righteous judgment of God [to both you and your persecutors]; to you, by apportioning to you the rewards of an everlasting kingdom, to those the punishment of their sins.' Comp. Rom. ii. 5—8, and espec. Phil. i. 28. With respect to αἷς τὸ καταξ., it is by some referred to ἔνδεγμα, or δίκαιος,—by others to δέχεσθαι. The former method, however, is preferable. Indeed, the scope of the clause is to point out the happy consequences of thus bearing afflictions for the Gospel's sake with patience, even the being counted worthy of being made partakers of eternal bliss, as Luke xx. 35, seqq.

6—8. The Apostle now dwells at large on this sure expectation of a just judgment, introducing also a brief description thereof, as well for the purpose of speaking comfort and consolation to the persecuted Thessalonians, as also from thence to take occasion to rectify an erroneous notion of theirs concerning the day of judgment, &c. This assurance, that God would manifest his righteousness in the proceedings of a future judgment, the Apostle further illustrates, by adding εἴπερ δίκαιον, &c., where the εἴπερ is (as at Rom. viii. 9) confirmatory, not dubitative, and may be rendered, 'siguidem,' 'inasmuch as.'—παρὰ Θεῷ.

g Ps. 76. 9.
Rom. 1. 8.
2 Pet. 2. 7.

h Isa. 2. 10.
19. 21.
Matt. 16. 27.
24. 30.
i Acts 1. 11.
1 Thess. 1.
10.
Rev. 1. 7.

Θεῷ ἀνταποδοῦναι τοῖς θλίβουσιν ὑμᾶς θλίψιν <sup>7</sup> καὶ ὑμῖν τοῖς θλιβομένοις ἀνέσιν μεθ' ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ μετ' ἀγγέλων δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, <sup>8</sup> ἐν ἧ πυρὶ φλογὸς, δίδόντος ἐκδίκησιν τοῖς μὴ εἰδόσι Θεὸν, καὶ τοῖς μὴ ὑπακούουσι τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ <sup>9</sup> ὅτινες δίκην τίσουσιν, δλεθρον αἰώνιον, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, <sup>10</sup> ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐνδοξασθῆναι ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ θαυμασθῆναι ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς

'judice Deo.'—ἀνταπ. is a word of middle signification; but it has here more point than a term would have which has only a bad sense. —ἀνέσιν is also opposed to θλίψιν at 2 Cor. viii 13. The word properly signifies 'relaxation,' or 'release from labour, or affliction' (and thus is nearly equiv. to ἀνάπαυσις); but it is also figuratively used to denote 'the felicity promised to God's faithful servants;' which image is finely employed in a passage of singular beauty and pathos at Heb. iv. 1—11.

7. ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] So pointing out the time when this righteous judgment of God would take place. (Chandler.) Here ἀποκ. (on which see Luke xvii. 30) is nearly synonymous with φανέρωσις at Col. iii. 4, but is more significant than παρουσία.—Δυνάμει means, 'by whom he exercises his power.'—μετ' ἀγγέλων δυνάμει, i. e., with the angels who are the attendants on his majesty, or power,' as in Matt. xxiv. 30. Luke xxi. 27, et al. Comp. 2 Pet. i. 16, τοῦ Κυρίου—δύναμις καὶ παρουσία.

8. ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς may be construed either with the preceding words (as it is done by most recent Commentators); or with the following, as it is by the ancients and the moderns in general. In the former case it will denote 'the glory with which the Lord will be clothed at the last day;' in the latter it will be symbolical of 'the awful punishment to be inflicted on the wicked,' even 'the lake of fire,' mentioned in Rev. xx. 10. The words may, however, be said to belong to both. It is well observed by Hyper., 'Amplificat justitiam Dei, præsertim à pœnis impiorum, quas per circumstantias exaggerat, et velut hypotyposi quadam ponit divinam potentiam ob oculos.'—I am still of the same opinion as heretofore as to rejecting ἐν φλογὶ πυρὸς, received into the text by Lachm., Scholz, and Tisch. (1st Ed.), though in his second he has restored it to the text, and also, in Acts vii. 30, edited ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς in his 2nd Ed., for ἐν φλογὶ πυρὸς in his first. In Heb. i. 7, πυρὸς φλόγα is found in all the MSS., where the Sept. has πῦρ φλόγον, a free, but very faithful version. In the passage of Exod. iii. 2, cited by the Apostle in Acts vii. 30 (and present to his mind here), the MS. B and others have ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς; but the MS. A, and several other MSS., and early Editions, have ἐν φλογὶ πυρὸς. But ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς is found in Eccles. viii. 10, in all the copies. The reading ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς is more agreeable to the Hebrew; but, on account of its Hebraistic harshness, it was, I suspect, altered in the passage of the Sept., at Exod. iii. 2, also in Acts vii. 30 and this of 2 Thess. by some over-nice Critics, who wished to introduce purer Greek. Thus in Pind. Pyth.

iv. 400, we have φλόγα πυρὸς ἀπέπαιον; and in Eurip. Bacch. 8, πυρὸς φλόγα, and Cycl. 386, πυρὸς φλογί.—Διδόντος ἐκδίκησιν. The full sense is, 'awarding just retribution.' An Hellenistic expression for ἀποδοῦναι ἐκδικ., occurring in Numb. xxxi. 3; or ποιεῖσθαι ἐκδ. By τοῖς μὴ εἰδόσι Θεὸν are meant 'those who know not God at all,' as heathens, or 'know him not aright,' as Jews; implying that the means of this knowledge had been vouchsafed, but willfully neglected.—τοῖς μὴ ὑπακούουσιν, &c., meaning, 'those who, after having known God aright, as revealed in the Gospel of Christ, had not fulfilled what that Gospel enjoins.'

9. δλεθρον αἰών.] This is an exegetical apposition, showing the nature of the punishment, —even 'everlasting perdition.' 'Ὀλέθρον is for ἀνάσταν, implying 'misery the most extreme' (see Matt. vii. 15); 'utter and irremediable perdition.' The words ἀπὸ προσ. τοῦ Κυρίου, &c., depend upon δίκην τίσουσιν, and their sense must be decided by the force ascribed to the ἀπὸ, which many eminent Expositors suppose to be causal, explaining, 'punientur a Domino et a majestate ipsius vim suam exequentes;' in allusion to Levit. x. 2: or, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου being taken, by Hebraism, for ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου; as at Acts iii. 19. Comp. Jer. iv. 26. Others, however, of not less note, suppose the expressions to signify, 'far removed from,' 'excluded from' (as in Luke xiii. 28), with allusion to the words of Isa. ii. 19, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ φόβου Κυρίου, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ (with which compare Gen. iv. 14). This latter view seems preferable; since (as Schott observes) 'the words so understood yield a more weighty sentiment; whereas the former would make what is here said, the same sense, in other words, as had been already said at vv. 7, 8.'

10. Ἰνδοξ. ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ καὶ θαυμ. ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς πιστ. there is a kind of parallelism, of which the two members mutually illustrate each other; and the effect of both is to set forth, in a more striking point of view, the terrors of that vengeance, which shall overtake the ungodly, by the contrast of, what will be contemporaneous therewith, the glory and blessedness of God's faithful and elect servants; see Hyper., Calvin, and Chandler. 'Ἐδοξάζεσθαι τιμῇ is a phrase almost peculiar to the Sept., signifying, as used of God, 'to obtain glory' either in the punishment of the wicked (see Exod. xiv. 4. Ezek. xxviii. 22), or in the delivering and saving of the righteous, God's faithful people. Thus we may express the sense of Ἰνδοξασθῆναι ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις by 'to derive glory from the eternal happiness [which he will bestow on] all faithful Christians. — For t. rec. πιστεύουσιν, I have, with all the Critical Editors, adopted πιστεύσασι, from almost all the uncials, and many curves (to which I add Lamb. 1184, Cov. 2 and 4, omitted by Mill, and Mus. 11,836), confirmed by internal evidence, in its greater suitability to the context; for, as Schott observes, 'the subject here treated of is the time when the Lord shall show his majesty, by bestowing eternal felicity on his true worshippers, with reference to their past faith and obedience.' Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 8, τοῖς ἡγαπηκόσι. Besides, the reading is confirmed by almost all the ancient Versions. The t. rec. arose from error of scribes.—ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ. The words are transposed, as in Rom. ii. 12, κριθήσονται, to which, after a parenthesis of three verses, corresponds ἐν ἡμέρᾳ at ver. 16. So here the words ὅτι—ὑμᾶς are parenthetical; and the sense seems to be, 'because our testimony unto you (lit. 'apud vos') hath been believed by you.' Now the foregoing sentiment, which has respect to all believers, is in this parenthesis indirectly and mentally applied to the Thessalonians in particular.

* πιστεύσασι (ὅτι ἐπιστεύθη τὸ μαρτύριον ἡμῶν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς) ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ. <sup>11</sup> Εἰς δὲ καὶ προσεχόμεθα πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἵνα ὑμᾶς ἀξιώσῃ τῆς κλήσεως ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης καὶ ἔργον πίστεως ἐν δυνάμει <sup>12</sup> ὅπως ἐνδοξασθῇ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ [Χριστοῦ] ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐν αὐτῷ, κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

11. αἱς δὲ προσυχ., &c.] Render: 'For which end (or 'purpose') it is, that we pray always for you, that our God may make you worthy of your calling in Christ Jesus.' Comp. Phil. iii. 14, = ἱκανώσαντι at Col. i. 12. So many of the Expositors, as Olsh.; and also the Syr. Version. However, I continue to prefer, with other Expositors, to render, 'may account you worthy of,' 'vouchsafe to bestow upon you.' So καταξιωθῆναι is used supra v. 5, as also in the Class. writers. On κλήσει see my Lex.—καὶ πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν, &c. These words, somewhat obscure, have been variously interpreted; and, indeed, admit of a different sense, according to the reference supposed in εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης. If, as would seem most natural, we refer the expression (with the majority of Expositors, ancient and modern) to the preceding subject of God, the sense will be, 'That he would powerfully and fully accomplish by you all the designs of his goodness, and consummate your work of faith, i. e. make your faith complete in those things which are its proper fruits, a holy obedience;' comp. James i. 4. But though the above exposition is very agreeable to the usus loquendi of the words, and makes a very good sense, yet, Schott objects, that, 'since in the latter member of the sentence, καὶ ἔργον πίστεως, something is presented, which evidently belongs to the disposition and life of the Thessalonians, and closely coheres with the same verb πληρώσῃ, it would be harsh not to refer the antecedent formula also to the same,—as has been done by many Expositors,—ancient and modern. But the ἔργον does not evidently belong to the disposition and life of the Thessalonians, 'because here,' as Olsh. observes, 'the discourse is of God's work, not of man's;' and ἔργον πίστεως rather denotes here 'faith, as God's work in the souls of men, which is capable of continued development in respect to its discernment and depth.' He further well explains the sense of the foregoing words to be, 'That our God may fill you with all that good which is well pleasing to him;' meaning, all the good which is well pleasing to him in you. The adverbial phrase ἐν δυνάμει is to be referred to the whole of the preceding,—meaning, as Dr. Peile explains, 'the so filling up the measure of your faith (and its proper fruits, πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης) as to make it a real and effective principle.'

12. ὅπως ἐνδοξασθῇ τὸ ὄνομα—αὐτῷ] What is here said adverts to the effect of the preceding. In τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου there is not (as is commonly supposed) a pleonasm for the person, but a stronger expression, meant (as Bengel suggests) to ascribe as much as possible the honour to Christ in the work of man's salvation; in short, it cannot but, in this context, point at the dignity and majesty of Jesus Christ. Comp. Phil. ii. 9, 10. Heb. i. 4. The glorification in question is, by Benson and most recent Commentators, referred, in the case of ἐν ὑμῖν, 'through you, to this world;' in the case of ἐν αὐτῷ, 'through him,' to the world to come. But surely the parallelism of members requires that what is ascribed to the latter should also be ascribed to the former. Hence it is better to suppose the reference, in both cases, both to this world, and to the world to come. Nor can the sense be expressed with greater simplicity and exactness than in the paraphrase of Schott: 'In order that the name of Christ may be glorified in you, both by your present bold profession of his truth, and your holy conduct, and zealous labours to spread the Gospel; and, at length, in the sight of the whole world to all eternity; and that you may also be glorified in him, by perfectly bearing his image, enjoying his love, being owned as his brethren, and sharing all his honour, according to the infinite riches of the mercy and grace of God the Father, and the Lord Jesus.' See notes on John xvii. 22—26. By Christ's glorification being placed first we are, as Calv. says, reminded of the principal end of our whole life, even the glory of God, 'that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ,' 1 Pet. iv. 11. See also John xvii. 10, and Gal. i. 24; and also the notes of Hyper. and Bp. Beveridge. Now this great work so far exceeds all that could have been imagined, or the greatest human merit could have claimed, that it is well said in the words following to be κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c. See Calv. and Hyper. As to the a Rom. 12. 1.

1 Thes. 4.
14—16.
2 Tim. 4. 1.
b Jer. 20. 8.
Matt. 24. 4.
Eph. 5. 6.
Col. 2. 18.
1 John 4. 1.
c Matt. 24.
23.
Eph. 5. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 1. 1 John 2. 18. Rev. 12. 11.

Π. 1 <sup>a</sup>Ἐρωτῶμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, ὑπὲρ τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ ἡμῶν ἐπισυναγωγῆς ἐπ' αὐτόν, <sup>b</sup> εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχέως σαλευθῆναι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ νοός, * μηδὲ θροεῖσθαι, μήτε διὰ πνεύματος, μήτε διὰ λόγου, μήτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς, ὡς δι' ἡμῶν, ὡς ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ † Χριστοῦ. <sup>c</sup> Μήτις

concluding words, τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰ. Χρ., the omission of the second Article in this, as in the similar cases at Eph. i. 5. 1 Tim. v. 21. 2 Pet. i. 1, and Jude 4, will, as appears from what is said by Mr. Green, Gram. N. T. Dial., 215, 216, tend to show that 'the words are meant to be descriptive either of a single person, or of two persons united in joint agency.' On the former supposition the sense will be (as Mr. Grauville Sharp and others contend), 'of our God and Lord.' But that view Bp. Middl. (however favourably disposed to it) admits to be scarcely tenable; and the authority of antiquity serves to confirm the opinion, that it is meant of two persons, though strictly united in joint agency: thus designating, as observes Est., 'gratuitam beneficentiam Dei, tanquam largitoris, et Christi Domini velut hoc nobis promerentis'; thus effectually excluding all claims on the score of human merit, and also attesting the doctrine of the unity in person and office of the Father and the Son. On the full sense of the glorification here spoken of, see more in Est., and my note on 1 Pet. iii. 18.

II. The mention of the coming of the Lord paved the way for the Apostle to introduce that of the end of the world, and thus to correct the pernicious error, which had arisen from a misunderstanding of his former words, as if it were just at hand.

1. Ἐρωτῶμεν] meaning, 'we earnestly intreat you.' The ὑπερ must be taken, as often, for περί, quod attinet ad, concerning, 'on the subject of.'—ἡμῶν ἰπιο. ἰπ' αὐτόν, 'our gathering together unto him.' 'Ἐπισυναγωγῇ only occurs once elsewhere in the New Test.—namely, at Heb. x. 25, where it is used of a Christian congregation; but it is often used in the Apocrypha to denote the congregation of the Israelites. The term corresponds to πάντησις at 1 Thes. iv. 17—27, and is illustrated by Matt. xxiv. 31, συνέξουσιν τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ. It is well observed by Salmas, that 'the coming of Christ, and our gathering together unto him, are here united, as relatum et correlatum.' I have, with Schott and Scholz, pointed accordingly.

2. εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχ. σαλευθ. This depends upon ἔρωτ. in the preceding verse; εἰς τὸ being for τοῦ.—Σαλ. meaning 'to [suffer yourselves] to be troubled;' as Acts xvii. 13; comp. James i. 6. So Arrian, cited by Wetst., μὴ ἀποσαλεύσθαι διὰ τῶν σοφισμάτων, where the metaphor is taken from a ship torn from its anchorage, and carried out to sea; which, indeed, seems to be what St. Paul had in mind in this passage, ἀπὸ τοῦ νοός ('from your mind') being for ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγκύρας τοῦ νοός. In what that consists, has been ably shown by Hyper.; namely, faith in the revelation of God by his Apostle.—θροεῖσθαι (on which see my Lex.) is exogetical of σαλευθ. So Matt. xxiv. 6, ὁρᾶτε μὴ θροεῖσθε. The full sense will thus be, 'that ye be not shaken from the hitherto settled persuasion of your minds, nor be thrown into unreasonable perturbation.' The expression ταχίως, 'hastily,' carries with it an adjunct notion of rashness and precipitancy, as at 1 Tim. v. 22, comp. with Wisd. xiv. 28, and Prov. xxv. 8. Hence St. Paul rebukes the Galatians for such levity, by saying (Gal. i. 6), θαυμάζω ὅτι οὕτω ταχίως μετατίθισθε ἀπὸ, &c. I have, on further consideration, now chosen to adopt with Lachm. and Tisch., μηδὲ for μήτε, from A, B, D, F, G, Orig., and Theodor., to which I add Ros, 2 (No. 47), left unmentioned by Wetst., and consequently by Griesb., Scholz, and Tisch. Indeed Wetst. omits the Clar. D, and Griesb., with a not unusual carelessness, omits altogether to notice the reading, which, however, I find also in one of the Mus. copies, Harl. 5115, pr. manu. And I doubt not that it will be found in other copies at least as the original reading, though altered to μήτε by Revisers. Here μηδὲ has internal evidence in its favour, for it was likely to be brought in by the thrice repeated μήτε just after. Besides that it is demanded by propriety of language; and the idiom frequently occurs in the New Test., and I know of no ex. where the rule is broken; for as to Eph. iv. 27, there μηδὲ for μήτε has been adopted by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. (so I had before done before Tisch.), from all the uncials and most of the cursives; to which I add all the Lamb. and most of the Mus. copies, including Cov. 2, omitted by Mill; just as here θροεῖσθε is noted by Editors only from MS. B, though I find it in Cov. 2, collated most carelessly by Mill, and in Lamb. 1184, full of very ancient readings, generally passed over by Editors. The Apostle then adverts to the various modes by which they might be perverted,—namely, διὰ πνεύματος, διὰ λόγου, and δι' ἐπιστολῆς, where the first expression, διὰ πνεύματος, refers to a pretended revelation of the Spirit from a person who affects to speak under the influence of the Holy Spirit.—ὡς δι' ἡμῶν is to be referred to both διὰ λόγου and δι' ἐπιστολῆς. Of διὰ λόγου, ὡς δι' ἡμῶν, the sense is, 'by report as through us,' i. e. 'through the medium of some pretended message from us, or something purporting to have been said by us.' So Synes. Epist. 84, διδ.ξο μετὰ τῆς ἱμψύγου (meaning 'a word-of-mouth, verbal message') καὶ τὴν ἀψυχὸν ἐπιστολὴν, 'receive with the animate the inanimate epistle.' Synesius, who was, it must be remembered, a Christian bishop, seems to have there had in mind this passage of St. Paul; and, if so, must have taken the very view of the sense which I advocate. Of course δι' ἐπιστολ. refers to a letter purporting to have been written by Paul, but really forged. Comp. ch. ii. 15, εἴτε διὰ λόγου εἴτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς ὑμῶν (where see note).—ὡς ἔστι means 'as if' [affirming] that.

3, 4. 'The Apostle now solemnly warns his readers against all these forms of deceit (in whatὡμὰς ἐξαπατήσῃ κατὰ μηδένα τρόπον ὅτι, ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία πρῶτον, καὶ ἀποκαλυφθῇ ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἀμαρτίας, ὁ ever mode practised); and that, too, because the day of the Lord had necessary preliminaries, which must have first occurred before it could take place.' (Olah.) By ἡ ἀποστασία is meant the apostasy on which they had been previously instructed by word of mouth by the Apostle. As to the words following, there is plainly at the end of the sentence an omission of some words, to complete the sense, which, from the extreme length of the inserted portion, were left unsupplied. Now, from the ὅτι ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ Χριστοῦ in the preceding verse, it is plain that the Apostle meant to say 'that day will not arrive unless there be first the apostasy.' On the purport of this most difficult portion, vv. 3—12, which treats of the Apostasy, and the Man of sin, very great difference of opinion exists. Yet the various interpretations of Commentators, numerous as they are, may be distributed into two classes; 1. That of those who suppose the words to have respect to what was speedily to happen, and, in a comparatively short time, did happen, as the destruction of Jerusalem, or the great apostasy which preceded that event, or the revolt of the Jews from the Romans, or the prevalence of the heresy of the Gnostics; not to mention other less probable opinions. 2. That of others who regard the words as having respect to something which was to happen long after; and of the interpretations of this class, there are again two divisions; 1. that of those who suppose the apostasy and the Man of Sin to have already appeared, in Papery, or Mahometanism; 2. of those who think they are yet to come. The most general opinion is, that the passage has reference to the grand heresy of Papery, and the corruptions of the Romish Church (the Man of Sin being supposed to denote the Pope for the time being, i. e. the series of persons who have filled the Papal Chair), and that the apostasy here mentioned is to be understood of the gross corruptions of the Romish Church. But though this view has been supported by the ability of Mede, Benson, Bp. Newton, Mackn., and others, and is much countenanced by several striking coincidences, which exist between the characters of the apostasy, as compared with those of Romanism, yet it is liable to such serious objections as would seem to forbid its adoption.—As to that interpretation which refers the passage to Mahometanism, it may be considered utterly unfounded; for surely Mahometanism cannot be called apostasy from a religion with which it had never had any connexion. As to the interpretations comprised under class 1, they are all liable to insuperable objections, and deserve little attention. Before I venture to suggest where the truth probably lies, it may be proper to premise a few remarks on the nature of the passage, and to consider how far we are warranted in expecting to be enabled clearly to discern its full sense, and explain its complete application. And first, it is evident from the use of the Article with ἀποστασία in every one of the MSS., and the words οὐ μνημονεύεται, &c., of vv. 5, 6, that the Apostle does not here communicate any new declaration, but that he only repeats one before made; and equally clear is it, that when he bids them 'remember what he had told them,' it is therein implied, that something was then said, which is now omitted. The Apostle's words, too, are plainly meant for the Thessalonians only; and we may presume that, with the aid of what had been before said, they were enabled to sufficiently comprehend their meaning; but it does not follow that those words should be intelligible to such as are ignorant of what the Apostle had before said. Accordingly, much of obscurity must necessarily hang over the passage, and therefore some harshness may be expected in laying down the sense; wherein it is of no small consequence to ascertain what general points, and those unconnected with any particular hypothesis, admit of being regarded as fully established, and consequently fit to be made a foundation whereon to build whatever further may be propounded. That the day of the Lord here spoken of is not the destruction of Jerusalem (as some maintain), but the day of Judgment, seems to be quite certain. It is scarcely less so that the Man of Sin of St. Paul has reference to the very same character as the Antichrist of St. John (1 Epist. iii. 18, and elsewhere), and who seems intended, though not called by that name, in the Apocalypse, ch. xiii. That the ancient Commentators universally considered the prophecy as one of distant completion, and not to be understood till its fulfilment, is alike certain, and deserving of serious attention. The ancient and the most eminent modern Expositors are, with reason, agreed, that the prophecy has the same reference as that in Dan. viii. It is probable, then, that both St. John and St. Paul had in view the above portion, which manifestly relates to the coming of the Son of Man, and the events that should precede and accompany his advent. But that their descriptions were, as some imagine, solely founded thereon, may be doubted. It would seem that something was founded thereon, and that the same highly figurative, symbolical, and allegorical mode of expression was adopted; but that many other characteristics of the Apostasy and Anti-Christ, or the Man of Sin, were added by St. Paul (whose words in this whole portion, vv. 3—12, may be regarded as a further illustration of what was obscurely and very figuratively spoken of by Daniel) under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, or from actual, though limited, revelation. Upon the whole, there seems good reason to suppose, with many eminent Expositors for the last half century, that what is here spoken of has not yet taken place; though there is much to warrant us in thinking that the mystery, or secret principle, of iniquity and apostasy is now actually working, and that, when Almighty Providence shall please that the τὸ κατ' ἔχον,—never to be removed till the end of time,—shall no longer impede the full working of the principle,—the apostasy (no doubt consisting of a series of acts, though marked by the Article as one whole) will rapidly display itself; espec. when the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ, shall be revealed, or appear, as the great Agent of the Evil One in the whole transaction. But to proceed to the verbal interpretation of the most important words and phrases contained in d Dan. 7. 8.

25. 31. 3. 11.
e 11. 36.
Rev. 13. 6.

e Matt. 10. 9.
Mark 8. 18.
Luke 24. 6, 7.
Acts 20. 31.

υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, <sup>4</sup> ὁ ἀντικείμενος καὶ ὑπεραιρόμενος ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν ἢ σέβασμα· ὥστε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ [ὡς Θεὸν] καθίσαι, ἀποδεκνύντα ἑαυτὸν ὅτι ἐστὶ Θεός
· · · · · 5 * Οὐ μνημονεύετε, ὅτι, ἔτι ὢν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ταῦτα ἔλεγον ὑμῖν; 6 Καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, εἰς τὸ ἀποκαλυφθῆναι αὐτὸν this interesting portion, as paving the way for a better comprehension of the whole,—the word ἀποστασία properly signifies 'an abandonment of connexion with any person;' implying, in the case of a political ruler, 'rebellion.' But it may be used of a thing as well as a person, and in the Scriptures it almost always means 'abandonment of a religion,' by passing over to another, or to no religion; but it is very rarely, I think, used of 'corruption of a religion by persons still continuing in the profession of it.' Accordingly, the term seems here to denote, as it is explained by many ancient Commentators, and, of modern ones, Calvin, 'a very general defection from God by Atheism.'—ἀποκαλυφθῆναι denotes, not simply (what some explain it) appearance, but has an allusion to those secret workings of apostasy and sin, which should at various times precede the final public and general one. Schott observes, 'that St. Paul speaks of the apostasy and impiety as then latent, but hereafter to openly appear, and have its extremest measure at the appearance of the Man of Sin.' In the expression ὁ ἀντὶ τῆς ἀμαρτίας we may (with the ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors) trace a parallelism of Satan with Christ; q. d. 'As the Saviour, clothed in the human nature, appeared at the time decreed by God and Christ, so will the Power of Hell, introduced in the person of a man, appear, when the apostasy shall have become so ripe as to require his agency.' He is here called ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, as Judas is at John xvii. 12.

4. ὁ ἀντικείμενος—σέβασμα.] In these words the Apostle had doubtless in mind Dan. xi. 36. 'The ἀντ. and ὑπεραίρ. are (as Pelt, after Chrysa., Theophyl., Grot., and Koppe, observes) to be conjoined in one idea, denoting the exalting himself over, and opposing himself to, God, and consequently putting down all worship of the Deity, in whatever form,—claiming to himself that adoration which is due to the Deity alone, so as to be the only object of worship.'—By ὑπεραίρ. (on which see 2 Cor. xii. 7) is denoted the very extreme of pride. The term σέβας was used both of God, and of men; i. e. sovereigns, inasmuch as they were considered God's viceregents on earth. Accordingly σέβασμα signifies 'whatever object is worshipped or regarded as God.' Thus in Wisd. xiv. 20, and Acts xvii. 23, it is used of the idols of the heathens.—ὥστε αὐτόν, &c. ὥστε should be separated from the foregoing by a colon, since (as Pelt observes) 'minus consilium quam sequelam innuere videtur.' Render, 'inasmuch that.'—αὐτόν—καθίσαι is best rendered, on the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and several eminent Expositors, 'seat himself in the Temple of God as God;' i. e. in quality of God. The words following, ἀποδεκ. ἑαυτὸν ὅτι ὁ, are (as Chrysa. and Pelt explain) put for ἐπιτεκνῶνται πατρῷον, i. e. σπουδάζων Θεοὺς νομιζέσθαι, as Philo said of Caligula. Considering the highly allegorical and symbolical nature of the whole of this passage, there can be little difficulty in supposing that by 'the Temple of God' is meant (as almost all the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors understand) the Christian Church, as in 1 Cor. iii. 16. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 21; though the generality of modern Expositors understand it of the Temple of Jerusalem, or rather de sede sacra generally, understanding thereby that the Man of Sin will, as it were, fix his seat above God's holy place of worship, and affect Divine worship or authority.—The words εἰς Θεόν are not in MSS. A, B, D, and 10 cursives (to which I can only add Cov. 2, passed over by Mill), several ancient Versions (not the Syriac), and some early Greek Fathers. Internal evidence is against the words, which are prob., though not certainly, an insertion from a marginal scholium.

5. οὐ μνημονεύετε—ὑμῖν.] It now seems to have occurred to the Apostle, that what he has been saying might to some be new and unheard of. Accordingly he reminds them that this is no other than what he had before told them,—having communicated to them the substance at least of this information when he was with them (Pelt).—ἔλεγον, 'I told,' 'used to tell you;' q. d. 'And you have no need to stumble at this doctrine, or to wonder that you do not see the Man of Sin exerting his baleful force; for you are well aware that there is something which prevents him from making his appearance.'

6. καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, &c.] Nū is taken by Koppe, Platt, and Pelt, as a Particle of transition, or continuative, as in John xiv. 29. xvii. 5. Acts iii. 17. vii. 34. x. 5. xv. 37, et sup. al.; and so καὶ τὰ νῦν, Acts iv. 29. v. 38. xvii. 30. xx. 32. xxv. 11. 25. And though this may seem liable to the objection started by Olah., yet his own mode of taking it, as put for καὶ τὸ νῦν κατέχον, is much more objectionable; and so great is the obscurity which overhangs the context, that there is the more reason not to deviate from the usual force of a Particle, or a formula, like καὶ νῦν. One might have expected καὶ τὰ νῦν, but Paul does not use that form, and seems to have employed καὶ νῦν as I find Dr. Peile takes it. As to what is meant by τὸ κατέχον (well explained by Chrysa. τὸ καλῶν), it is impossible to pronounce with certainty, from the great obscurity which envelopes the subject; and, indeed, as the Apostle was speaking of what was well known to them, he had no reason to open it out very clearly, and therefore we cannot expect to thoroughly understand it. Upon the whole, the most probable opinion is that of Theodor., who understands this hindrance of the decree of God's Providence, which prevents the appearance of the Man of Sin until the 'fulness of time.'—εἰς τὸ ἀποκαλ. is suspended on κατέχον and is not put (as Koppe supposes) for ἀλλ' ὅμως ἀποκαλυφθήσεται: but there is a blending of two clauses into one; and the complete sense is, 'prevents him from being re-

ἐν τῷ ἑαυτοῦ καιρῷ. <sup>7</sup> τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον ἤδη ἐνεργεῖται τῆς ἀνομίας· μόνον ὁ κατέχων ἄρτι ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται. <sup>8</sup> Καὶ τότε ἀποκαλυφθήσεται ὁ ἄνομος—ὃν ὁ Κύριος † ἀναλώσει τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ καταργήσῃ τῇ ἐπιφανείᾳ τῆς παρουσίας αὐτοῦ—<sup>9</sup> οὗ ἐστὶν ἡ παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Σατανᾶ ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις καὶ τέρασι vealed, [as he will at length be] in his season,—namely, that agreeable to the counsels of Almighty Providence.' See John vii. 30.

7. τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον ἤδη ἐνεργ. τ. 4.] Render, 'for already is the mystery of iniquity at work,' 'beginning to be effective.' The Apostle saw a most pernicious principle of evil even in his time secretly insinuating itself among Christians; though, from the power which restrained it, not yet fully developed. (Pelt.)—τῆς ἀν. is rightly supposed by Pelt to differ little from the ἀποστασία at ver. 3; since ἀνομία may, by its etymology, very well signify ἀποστασία ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ Θεοῦ. So in 1 Macc. ii. 44, those are called ἄνδρες ἄνομοι whose ἀποστασία was mentioned at ver. 15.—τὸ μυστ. τῆς ἀνομ. must, with the ancient Expositors, be taken for κρυπτή μὴν ἀνομία, implying also a notion of evil, and of what consequently seeks concealment. See John iii. 19—21. So Schott well explains the phrase to mean, 'improbitas quæ adhibe efficientiam suam occultat, sive occultare debet, eo quod speciem præ se ferat honestatis, et acribus clandestinitis utatur.' Comp. what Joseph. Bell i. 24. 1, says of calling the life of Antipater μυστήριον κακίας, 'a mystery of wickedness,' and what Dion. Hal. says of Theopompus, that 'he developed the mysteries, or secrets, of falsely seeming virtue, and of concealed vice.'—ἐνεργεῖται may be rendered, 'is being carried into action (ἔργον), is being developed.' So the Pesch. Syr., 'is beginning to be effective.' See Note at 1 Thess. ii. 13. In the next words, μόνον—γένηται, there is an ellipsis common in the popular style; and the sense is only to be expressed by expanding the expressions as follows: 'Only there is one who for the present holds it back (obstructs its progress), [and who will continue to do so] until he is removed.'—ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται is an uncommon form of expression, which Schott says occurs in Marc. Anton. viii. 12; but I do not find it there. It certainly, however, occurs in an anonymous writer cited by Budæus in his Comment. l. Gr.

8. Here ὁ ἄνομος, lit. 'the lawless one,' designates, as Pelt remarks, the author of the μυστ. τῆς ἀνομίας. The words following are added for the consolation of true Christians. The first clause, ἀναλώσει—αὐτοῦ, is not a citation of, but formed upon, Isa. xi. 4 and Ps. xxxiii. 6, and ἀναλώσει is used for the ἀναλεῖ of the Sept., as being a stronger term, denoting 'total destruction,' 'utter consumption.' As to the reading ἀναλεῖ, here edited by Lachm., from A, B, D, and 10 cursives (I add Mus. 5116), it doubtless came from the Sept. After Κύριος, MSS. A, D, F, G, J, and 6 cursives, have Ἰησοῦς, which was adopted by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. (1 Ed.), though in his second Ed. he has removed it; rightly, for internal evidence is against it.

With τῇ ἐπιφανείᾳ τῆς παρουσίας α. comp. Jos. Antt. ix. 4, τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιφάνειαν. On the term ἐπιφ. see my Lex. N. Test. in v.—τὸ πνεῦμ. τοῦ στόματος is well explained by Vater, 'verbo, jussu suo efficacissimo;' which is confirmed by Chrysa., τῇ ἐπιφάνειᾳ μόνον ἀναλώσει, and Theodor., φθίγγεται μόνον, καὶ πανωλεθρία παραδώσει (read ἀναλώσει). The next clause designates the ease and speed of this destruction (here represented by the equiv. term καταργ., 'to utterly destroy any opposing force:' see 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. iii. 7) at his very appearance.—At ἐπιφ. τῆς παρ. there is a fuller expression for ἐπιφαν. (not, however, such as to involve pleonasm), but to impart more of gravity and dignity to what is said. Indeed the expression is often, both in the Scriptural and the Class. writers, used to denote Divine majesty. This will fully appear, by comparing the simple form ἐπιφάνεια as said of Christ and of God, in 1 Tim. vi. 14 (where see note). 2 Tim. i. 10, iv. 1, 8. Tit. ii. 13.

9. οὗ ἐστὶν ἡ παρουσία, &c.] This must, of course, be understood of the ἄνομος, and, as Hyper. well observes, 'Per antithesin mentione facta adventus Christi, qui erit in caritate, adjecit, adventum Antichristi fore secundum operationem Satanæ,' whose arts and methods of effecting his purposes are then described, both for warning and other purposes. See Matt. xxiv. 25. John xvi. 4. xiii. 19. This verse connects with v. 7, by the introductory οὗ ἐστὶν, being parenthetical; and the ἀποκάλυψις is now called, by analogy with Christ's advent, παρουσία.—Οὗ ἐστὶν ἡ παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργ. τ. 2. is (as Pelt remarks) for διὰ πάριστάς τὸν τῷ Σ. ἐνεργουμένην ἐν αὐτῷ, 'at whose presence Satan will work with great power.' So at Eph. ii. 2, he is said to be ἐνεργῶν ἐν τοῖς υἱοῖς τῆς πειρασίας. Moreover, the term is of great significance, denoting such forcible kind of operation and agency, as effectually secures the accomplishment of its purposes, which may well be applied to the devices of Satan. See Matt. xiii. 39. Luke xiii. 11. John xiv. 30. Eph. ii. 2. The words δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις καὶ τέρασι may be understood (as they are by almost all Commentators) in the same sense as those at Acts ii. 22, δυνάμει καὶ τέρασι καὶ σημείοις; but as πάσῃ is here added, it would rather seem that by ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει is meant, 'all conceivable power;' and by σημ. καὶ τέρ. are specified the kinds of power. The expression ψεύδους is intended for all three. In the next words, καὶ ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἀδικίας, other modes are adverted to, by which Antichrist and his agents and abettors will endeavour to advance their cause; namely, 'by every other unrighteous deceit and fraud, as well as that of pretended miracles.'

12 Cor. 2. 12. ψεύδους, 10<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ [τῆς] ἀδικίας, ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις ἀνθ' ὧν τὴν ἀγάπην τῆς ἀληθείας οὐκ ἐδέξαντο εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι αὐτοὺς. 11<sup>1</sup> Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο *πέμψει αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς ἐνέργειαν πλάνης, εἰς τὸ πιστεῦσαι αὐτοὺς τῷ ψεύδει. 12<sup>κ</sup> ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἀλλ' εὐδοκῇ-σαντες ἐν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ. 13<sup>1</sup> Ἡμεῖς δὲ ὀφείλομεν εὐχαριστεῖν τῷ

10. τῆς ἀδικίας] The τῆς, not found in MSS. A, B, F, G, and 5 cursives (to which I add Cor. 2, omitted by Mill), and some early Fathers, has been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch. The question of its genuineness is one of no easy determination; for, since ἀδικία is (as clearly appears both from Class. and Script. usage) a noun that admits of being used in its most abstract sense, it may, in that quality, take the Article (as at Luke xiii. 27. xvi. 3. xviii. 6. Rom. ii. 8. Acts i. 18. 1 Cor. xiii. 6. 2 Thes. ii. 12. James iii. 6), yet being here united with πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ (as it is in construction with πᾶσιν at Rom. i. 29. 1 John i. 9. v. 17), it comes under the rule of Middl. Gr. A. ch. vii. πᾶς, § 1 (for the context requires us to render, 'every species of unrighteous deceit and fraud'), and as such the Article is better away; at least, it may well be dispensed with; but whether it was used by Paul I would not say.—'Ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις' must, as Pelt says, be joined with ἐνεργεῖται, quod latet in παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργειαν. Now this implies a yielding to the arts of the Seducer, and therefore ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλ. may be rendered, 'Among those that are to perish,' meaning, 'must perish;' as in 1 Pet. i. 7, χρυσίου τοῦ ἀπολλυμένου, and 2 Pet. iii. 11, τούτων οὖν πάντων λυομένων. Yet the present signif. may be retained in the sense, 'to those who are in a perishing state, because' &c. At any rate, the consequence is, that they are not among the oppositis class, ἐν τοῖς ἀσφοδίοις, which class must have been here present to the mind of the Apostle; and of the two classes mention is made at 1 Cor. i. 18. 2 Cor. ii. 15, and ii. 3. Of the next words, ἀνθ' ὧν τὴν ἀγάπην τῆς ἀληθείας οὐκ ἰδέξ., the sense may best be determined by adverting to the true force of δέχισθαι, as distinguished from λαμβάνειν, on which see my Lex. in v. δέχισθαι. The sense will thus be, 'they have not cherished, with a desire to retain it, the love or care of the truth,'—namely, the truth as it is in Jesus.

11, 12. 'God punishes sin by means of sin; and therefore it is that he sends τοὺς ἀπολλυμένους, "to the lost ones" (those who are in the way to perish everlastingly)—who, through their own fault, do not allow the love of truth to be stirred up in their hearts—a strong delusion, that they may believe a lie.' (Olsh.)

11. διὰ τοῦτο] i. e. because they have had no love of or care for the truth; there being no effectual preservative from fatal error but the sincere love of truth and virtue. See two able discourses on this text by Dr. South, vol. iv. p. 825, seqq., wherein he shows that ill-disposed affections are both naturally and penally the cause of darkness and error in the judgment. The best Commentators are agreed that we are here to suppose that idiom by which God is figuratively said to do a thing which he only permits to be done. But this principle, always precarious and unsatisfactory, is here inapplicable, because there is plainly here a judicial and punitive infliction of blindness.—πέμψει. For this, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., edit πέμπει, from A, B, D, F, G, and only one cursive (for the et alii of Scholz is nought), but plainly from alteration. As to the authority of Basil and Cyril, it is of no great weight. That of Origen would be so, but that he elsewhere (teste Jacks.) cites πέμπει. We have besides the authority of Hippolytus, the disciple of Irenæus, for πέμπει in a passage cited by Jacks. But he must have written πέμπει, because he explains it to mean ἰγχεῖν (ὁ Θεὸς) γινώσκειν. That the Pesch. Syr. Translator had πέμπει in his copy is quite certain, and also the Vulg. In short, internal evidence is, I think, in favour of πέμπει, for reasons which I have not space to detail, further than that prediction (which Dr. Chandel. has shown is inherent in the expression) requires the Future. I doubt not that πέμπει arose from error of scribes, who perpetually confound π and ψ, for reasons which even the slightest acquaintance with Palaeography will point out. Olsh., indeed, prefers πέμπει, on the ground that Paul gives the whole description at v. 9, as the Present in prophetic wise. But the connexion of v. 11 is not with v. 9 (for vv. 9 and 10 are parenthetic), but with v. 8; and consequently the Fut. πέμπει matches with the Futures ἀσπλῶσαι and καταργήσαι. Besides, the use of Pres. for Fut. is not Pauline, scarcely ever occurring in his Epistles.—ἐνέργειαν πλάνης. This is to be understood, not of error arising from self-deceit, but of purposed fraud, which occasions error to others. Thus it is explained by Theophyl.; and so in the old glossaries the term πλάνη is explained not only of error, but also deceit, whereby error, or falsehood, is made to pass for truth. Such, indeed, is its acceptation both in the Script. (Matt. xxvii. 64), and the later Class. writers (as Diod. Sic.), and also Josephus.—τῷ ψεύδει, 'the lie' = 'that which is no better than a lie,' for τ. ψεύδ. does not mean falsehood generally, as Bp. Middl. maintains, but, as Dr. Peile explains, the anti-Christian and anti-Scriptural counterfeit, implied in vv. 9, 10, which the Man of Sin—the Mystery of Iniquity—passes off as, or in opposition to, 'the truth,' τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, namely, of God, mentioned vv. 10 and 12.

12. ἵνα κριθ. ] 'Ira here denotes, as oft, not end, or 'purpose, but effect. See Luke xi. 50.—κριθ., for κατακριθ. 'Ἄλλ' εὐδοκῶσαντες ἐν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ,' but who had pleasure in, had a liking for, the ἀδικία above mentioned. The ἐν is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., but on no good grounds.

13, 14. 'As at v. 12, Paul closes his prophetic communication, so he here reverts back to his

Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοὶ ἡγαπημένοι ὑπὸ Κυρίου, οἱ εἶλετο ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἀπ' ἀρχῆς εἰς σωτηρίαν ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύ-ματος καὶ πίστει ἀληθείας· <sup>14</sup> εἰς δ' ἐκάλεσεν ὑμᾶς διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἡμῶν, εἰς περιποίησιν δόξης τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>15</sup> Ἄρα οὖν, ἀδελφοί, στήκετε, καὶ κρατεῖτε τὰς <sup>m 1 Cor. 15.
 58, & 10. 13.
 11
 Phil. 4. 1.
 ch. 2. 6.
 n 1 Pet. 1. 8
 4.
 1 John 2. 2
 2</sup> παραδόσεις, ἃς ἐδιδάχθητε, εἴτε διὰ λόγου εἴτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς ἡμῶν. <sup>16</sup> Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ ἡμῶν, ὁ ἀγαπήσας ἡμᾶς καὶ δούς παράκλησιν αἰώνιαν καὶ ἐλπίδα ἀγαθὴν ἐν χάριτι, <sup>17</sup> παρακαλέσαι ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας, καὶ στηρίζαι [ὑμᾶς] ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ. <sup>o 1 Thess. 2.
 12
 Heb. 12. 9.
 1 Pet. 5. 10.
 Jude 24.</sup>

readers, and repeats his sense of obligation to give God thanks, that he had chosen them by an eternal election unto salvation in Christ, and consequently had preserved them from the πῶ-λει of those who allow themselves to be deceived by the πλάνη of Antichrist, v. 11' (Olah.)

13. ἡμῖν δὲ—ὑμῶν] Here we have a repetition of what was said at i. 3. Render: 'However, we are bound to give perpetual thanks to God for you, that God hath, from the beginning, chosen you. to salvation.—ἀπ' ἀρχῆς signifies 'from eternity' (as at 1 John i. 1, δὴν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς), alluding to the eternal purposes of God in calling the Thessalonians to the Christian faith. To advert to a matter of reading. MSS. B, F, G, and 5 curives, have ἀπαρχήν, which has been adopted by Lachm., and by Tisch. in his 1st ed., though in his 2nd he restores ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, rightly, considering that internal evidence exists to strengthen what is a vast superiority of external authority. And though ἀπαρχήν may seem confirmed by Rom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 16, and Rev. xiv. 4, ἀπαρχή τῷ Θεῷ, &c., yet such a sense would here involve no little harshness; whereas the other is quite suitable to the context. The expressions ἀπαρχῆς and ἀπαρχήν are not unfrequently confounded by the scribes; and hence the Editors have, when, as here, each reading yields a sense, been puzzled to decide (as for instance in Thucyd. vi. 20, 4. Jos. Ant. vii. 14, 10) which sense is the true one; that, however, is, we see, not the case here. In ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πν. is denoted rather the μέσος, or the mode of the salvation; or by under the sanctification of the Spirit, or, as others explain, 'on condition of sanctification of spirit'; but the former is preferable. So at Eph. i. 4, to election is added the end and condition of it, εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους, &c.; and at 1 Pet. i. 1, 2, Christians are termed ἑκλεκτοὶ κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος.—Καὶ πίστει ἀληθείας. Here δληθ. is a Genit. of object, as in πίστει εὐαγγελίου at Phil. i. 27, the sense being, 'faith reposed in the truth,'—namely, as it is in Jesus. See supra, ver. 10. Comp. Plut. Rom. C. 8, τὴν πίστιν ἰσχυρὰν τῇ ἐλπίδι, 'his faith (or 'sure trust') in the thing hoped for.'

14. εἰς δ] 'unto which,'—namely, election and its consequent, sanctification.—εὐαγγ. ἡμῶν, i. e. the Gospel preached by me; as 1 Thess. i. 5.—παριπ. δόξης, like παριπ. σωτηρίας at 1 Thess. v. 9.

15. 'Having thus expressed his thankfulness to God, for the assurance he had of their being preserved from delusion and imposture, and chosen to salvation, he adds an exhortation to steadfastness and constancy in that faith and profession to which they had been called by the Gospel of Christ.' (Chandl.)—στήκετε. See Gal. v. 1, and note.—κρατεῖτε τὰς παραδόσεις. Κρατ. is for κατέχετε, as 1 Cor. xi. 2, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε. By τὰς παραδ. are meant 'the doctrines and precepts delivered to the world by the Apostles, either in writing, or by word-of-mouth, as a revelation from God; and so παρίδωκα is used at Acts xvi. 4. 1 Cor. xi. 2. xv. 3. See the able notes of Calv., Hyper., and Benson. Such, too, is the sense (in opposition to the Romanist one) assigned by Theodor., who explains the passage thus: ἔχετε κανὼν διδασκαλίας τοὺς παρ' ἡμῶν ὑμῖν προσεβήθήντας λόγους, οὓς καὶ παρόντες ὑμῖν ἐκρού-μεν, καὶ ἀπόντες ἱγνάμεν. In εἴτα διὰ λόγου—ἐπιστολῆς ἡμῶν, the Pronoun belongs to both λόγου and ἐπιστολῆς, and the full sense is (as well expressed by Chandl.), this: 'whether by our word [of mouth], or 'by letter,' q. d. 'whether by us in person, when we were preaching the Gospel to you, or whether by our letters to you;' meaning either the former Epistle to the Thessalonian church, or that now written. See note on supra, v. 2.

16, 17. After the above exhortation, the Apostle, as usual, concludes the whole with an affectionate prayer for them; with which compare 1 Thessalonians iii. 11—13. v. 23, and Colossians ii. 2.

16. δοὺς παράκλησιν αἰώνιαν καὶ ἐλπίδα ἀγαθὴν ἐν χάριτι.] 'God is here depicted as the source of comfort in the distresses of the present, and of good hope for the future, by means of the operation of his grace. But if the παράκλησις is here called αἰώνιος, it is only to be understood in opposition to the transitory and deceitful comfort from the earth, espec. as hope is named besides. Comfort in general can find no application to eternity, as the sufferings which are presupposed by the application of it cannot have any place here.' (Olah.)—ἐν χάριτι must be construed with δοὺς, meaning, 'through [his] grace [alone], without any merit of ours.'

17. As to the force of παρακαλῆσαι here, it is the very same as at supra 1 Thess. iii. 2, where see note, and other notes elsewhere, there referred to.

a Eph. i. 18.
Col. 4. 2.
b Acts 23. 24.
Rom. 10. 10.
c 15. 81.
d John 17. 15.
e 1 Cor. i. 9.
f 10. 15.
1 Thess. 5.
24.

III. 1<sup>a</sup> Τὸ λοιπὸν προσεύχεσθε, ἀδελφοί, περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα ὁ λόγος τοῦ Κυρίου τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζεται, καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἵνα ῥυσθώμεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀτόπων καὶ πονηρῶν ἀνθρώπων οὐ γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις. 3<sup>c</sup> Πιστὸς δὲ ἐστὶν ὁ Κύριος, ὃς στη-

III. Having accomplished the more immediate design of his Epistle, the Apostle proceeds, at the close of it, to inculcate such practical injunctions as were suitable to the circumstances in which the Thessalonians were placed.

1. προσεύχεσθαι περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα, &c. Render: 'Pray respecting us' &c. The Apostle asks not their prayers generally, or for any temporal good, but for what would be to him the greatest blessing,—that the Gospel may, through his means, make its way rapidly, and be successful; for that, as the best Expositors are of opinion, is the sense of τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζεται. In the former of these terms there is the same metaphor (taken from a race-course), as in 1 Cor. ix. 26, and Ps. cxlviii. 15 (where the LXX. render, ἡμεῖς τάχους δραμεῖται ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ), which passage was probably in the mind of the Apostle. The same expression occurs in Eurip. Ion, 531, τρέχοντες ὁ μῦθος ἀν σοι Τάμτα σημήνεις &c. In δοξάζει, there is reference, not so much to the Gospel being admitted and embraced by many, as its being glorified in itself, by the suitable conduct of those who embrace the faith. Comp. supra i. 10, 12. The next words, καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, contain a delicate commendation of those whom he is addressing, and introduced, Est. remarks, by way of exciting them to make further progress in that for which he commends them.

2. καὶ ἵνα ῥυσθώμεν, &c. These words are closely connected with the foregoing ἵνα τρέχῃ, &c.; for, as Theophyl. observes, 'though the petition seem two-fold, it is, in effect, but one: since, on bad men being overcome, the word of truth will run swiftly.' The sense, then, is 'and [in order thereto] that we [meaning himself, Silvanus, and Timothy] may be delivered from [the opposition and persecution of], &c. In τῶν ἀτόπων καὶ πον. ἀνθ. the ἀτόπων is by most recent Expositors regarded as synonymous with πονηρῶν: a view of the sense adopted by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, and supported by the use of the word at Luke xxiii. 41; but, from the words following, some more special sense seems intended, and the term appears to comprehend the notions of unreasonable and perverse; the former regarding the heathens, the latter the Jews or Judaizing Christian teachers, described in 2 Tim. iii. 8 as ἀνθρώποι καταφθαρμῖνοι τὸν νοῦν. Thus the expression may be rendered irrational, and will thus be equiv. to the term ἄλογιστοι employed by Jos. Antt. xvi. 6, 8, to denote those prejudiced and irrational persons of the Gentiles who delighted in persecuting the Jews.—ὅς γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις. It does not mean, as some explain, 'There are few men of integrity, or persons whom we can trust': a sense neither permitted by the use of the Article, nor suitable to the context. The true interpretation is, I apprehend, that of the ancient in general and many eminent modern Expositors (espcc. Crell., Wolf, Le Clerc, Turretin, and Pelt), 'all have not the dispositions of mind to permit them to receive the truth,' i. e. the Gospel; q. d. 'the lovers of truth and virtue alone possess them.' And so the words are explained by Chrysa., Theophyl., Theodor., and Ecumen. It is, Theophyl. observes, equiv. to ὅς γὰρ πάντες πιστεύουσιν ἀλλ' οἱ ἄξιοι, the worthy and well-disposed (as Matt. x. 11, ἐξάγαγετε τίς ἐν αὐτῇ ἐξίστις), ἐπιτήδειοι, fit to receive the Gospel; and so Chrysa., ὅς δίδονται τὸ μὴ πιστεύειν, though that by no means destroys free-will; for, as Theodor. remarks, Θεοῦ ἰδίου τὸ καλεῖν, ἡμῶν δὲ τὸ πείθεσθαι: οὐ γὰρ ἀνάγκη βιάζεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τῇ γνώμῃ ἵπται. See John vii. 57. Luke ix. 23. The question, as Wolf observes, is whether the Evangelical faith here spoken of be said to be ὅς πάντων because it is put in no man's power, but is to be accounted as a Divine gift, or because it is not found among all. 'The latter view,' continues he, 'is preferable; for to those unreasonable persons in whom there was not faith the Apostle acts in opposition to the Thessalonian Christians as those who had faith; whence it follows that by πίστις is here meant the receiving of the Gospel.' The words are evidently meant not generally, but only of the persons just spoken of. Upon the whole, nothing is more certain than that the Calvinistic gloss, 'non a Deo electi sunt ut credant,' cannot stand. It is well said by the very learned and pious Turretin, 'Minime intelligit Apostolus fidem nonnulli quibusdam hominibus necessitate quadam infundi, ceteros vero homines ad non credendum prædestinatos esse; quæ idea Deo indignissima est, perfectiones ejus omnes auferret, denique omne ab incredulitate vituperium, uno verbo, judicium omne, omnem religionem amoveret.'

3. πιστὸς δὲ ἐστὶν ὁ Κύριος, &c. A sentiment suggested by the πίστις of the preceding verse. The connexion is ably traced by Pelt thus: '[Those bad men who oppose the truth do, indeed, lie in wait for us;] but God will, we trust, rescue us from their evil designs. Who of his faithfulness and truth will never forsake us.' Comp. 1 Cor. x. 13. i. 8, 9, and 1 Thess. v. 24, and notes. And so Calv., 'Postquam admonet non semper inveniri fidem in hominibus, ipsoe ad Deum revocat, ac fidelem esse dicit.' Render: 'but true and faithful [to his promises] is the Lord.—ὃς στήριξις ὑμᾶς—πονηρῶν, 'who [accordingly] will confirm you [in the faith], and preserve you from evil,' or, 'from the evil one,' the devil; for it is an open question as to which of these two interpretations should be adopted, each being well supported and suitable to the context. Of τὸ πονηρὸν in the sense evil we have an ex. at Rom. xii. 9, and of τοῦ πονηροῦ in the same sense one might be adduced from John xvii. 15, ἵνα τηρήσῃς αὐτοὺς ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ: in both which passages the context (which can alone decide in a case where the sens loquendi will admit of either of two interpretations) favours the nominal sense. For Κύριος, Lachm. edita, from MSS. A, D, F, G, and one cursive, the Vulg., and Italic Versions, Θεός, which may have been written by the Apostle; but, as ex-

ρίξει ὑμᾶς, καὶ φυλάξει ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. <sup>4</sup> <sup>a</sup> Πειποιθαμεν δὲ <sup>d</sup> <sup>3</sup> <sup>Cor. 7.</sup>
 ἐν Κυρίῳ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, ὅτι ἡ παραγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν, καὶ ποιεῖτε καὶ ποιήσετε. <sup>5</sup> <sup>e</sup> Ὁ δὲ Κύριος κατευθύνει ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας εἰς τὴν <sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup> <sup>Chrom.</sup>
 ἀγάπην τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ εἰς τὴν ὑπομονὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>6</sup> <sup>f</sup> Παραγ- <sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup> <sup>Thess. 4.</sup>
 γέλλομεν δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ <sup>11</sup> <sup>2</sup> <sup>6</sup> <sup>14</sup>
 Χριστοῦ, στέλλεσθαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀδελφοῦ ἀτάκτως περι- <sup>17</sup> <sup>11</sup> <sup>14</sup> <sup>18</sup>
 πατοῦντος, καὶ μὴ κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ἣν † παρέλαβε παρ' ἡμῶν.

ternal evidence is decidedly in favour of Κύριος (which must also have been in the copy used by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, and is found in the Vat. B), so is internal evidence, as existing in the greater likelihood of Θεὸς being an alteration than Κύριος. It may be supposed that the Critics who thus altered the reading were desirous of making the present passage square with another at 1 Cor. i. 9, πιστός ὁ Θεός, and x. 13. 1 Thess. v. 24, not bearing in mind that ὁ Κύριος may be understood of God the Father, as well of Jesus Christ. And I doubt not that the word was here meant to be taken (as T. Aquin., Hyper., and Calv. show) of the former, especially considering that (as Prof. Schott has well seen) the words have reference to supra, ch. ii. 13, εἰς εἴλετο ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, καὶ ἐκάλεισας, a reference indeed long ago discerned by Chrys. and Theoph.

4. παροῦ, &c.] Comp. Gal. v. 10. It is, Pelt observes, the manner of the Apostle to couch exhortation under exhortation.—ὑμᾶς, namely, as opposed to πάντων at ver. 2.—ἐν Κυρίῳ, i. e., says Chrys., 'in his benevolence; implying the necessity for the Divine assistance co-operating with our own earnest endeavours.' To trust, indeed, in the assistance of God, that they are doing what he enjoins, seems to involve something of incongruity. The most effectual method of removing which difficulty is to regard the sentence as containing two members blended into one. Thus the sense will be, 'Now we hope and trust that [upon the whole] ye are doing the things which we command you; and we trust in the Lord's assistance that ye will be enabled to continue to do them.' Certain it is that the Apostle every where urges the necessity of Divine grace, and yet, on the other hand, admits the existence of free will, or human liberty of action. See Phil. ii. 12, sq. 2 Cor. iii. 5.

5. ὁ δὲ Κύριος κατευθύνει—Θεοῦ] Notwithstanding the attempts that have been here made to establish a sense which differs widely from the one commonly assigned, the latter is, as I have shown in Recens. Synop., alone the true one. The words (which are quite in the Apostle's manner) may be rendered, 'And now [in order thereto] may the Lord [by his Holy Spirit] direct your hearts unto the love of God.' On κατευθ., see note on 1 Thess. iii. 11. Any seeming incongruity is removed by supposing Κύρ. to mean 'the Lord [working by the Holy Spirit].—τὴν ὑπόμ. τ. Χρ. is by most recent Commentators explained, 'such patience as Christ displayed in his sufferings.' But there seems no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and most modern Expositors, 'the patient endurance of tribulations such as Christ suffered, and which Christians must be prepared to endure in his cause.'

6—16. We may observe the address with which the Apostle first employs soothing language to show his affection for them, and thus to make palatable the reproofs he was about to introduce; which were meant to correct a spirit that the Apostle had remarked among some of them,—namely, a disposition to be idle, and throw themselves on the bounty of their richer or more industrious brethren for maintenance. These he had before enjoined to 'quietly work, and eat their own meat.' Since, however, his injunctions had been little attended to, he repeats them with greater authority and earnestness, strictly commanding the other Christians to break off all familiar intercourse with such, in order thereby to bring them to shame and repentance.—στέλλ. ὑμᾶς, 'that ye withdraw yourselves from,' ἀφίστασθαι, χωρίζεσθαι ἀπὸ, as the ancient Commentators explain. See note on 2 Cor. viii. 20. So Malachi ii. 5, ἀπὸ προσώπου ὀνοματίου μου στέλλεσθαι αὐτόν. By ἀτάκτως must here be meant the leading an idle life, unaccompanied by that regular industry, which the Almighty enjoined on man at the fall. See 1 Thess. v. 14. By the παράδ. are meant those spoken of at ii. 15.—To advert to some matters of reading.

6. Κυρίου ἡμῶν 'I. Xp.] Tisch. cancels ἡμῶν, from a few ancient MSS. It was, indeed, more likely to have been put in, than put out. But the state of the evidence does not warrant an Editor in doing more than bracketing it; for in so few as 6 MSS. it might easily be omitted by the carelessness of scribes; and it has strong support from the Pesch. Syr. Version. At the end of the verse the MSS. fluctuate between παρίλαβε (the t. rec.), παρίλαβον, παρίλαβον, ἰλάβουσαν. Schott and Scholz edit παρίλαβον, Griesb. and Tisch. παρίλαβουσαν, Lachm. παρίλαβετε. The reading παρίλαβε may have arisen from an abbreviation of παρίλαβετε, for which there is considerable authority. Nevertheless, it seems to have arisen from a correction of παρίλαβον, made by some half-learned Critic, who stumbled at the Plural as referred to the Singular δδελφῶν, not aware that, as παντὶς is associated with it, it may be taken generically for πάντων δδελφῶν, and so admit of a Plural being applied to it. Παρίλαβετε seems itself to have been another correction, proceeding from the same class of persons. The original reading, I doubt not, was παρίλαβουσαν, afterwards altered (as in a thousand and other cases in matters of, I had almost said, orthography) to παρίλαβον. In such cases Tisch. invariably introduces the antique Alexandrian form,—a course which I am more inclined to tolerate than to adopt; at least in the New Test. though not in the Sept., where it occ. freq.; inasmuch, that wherever the form -ουσαν is found in the MSS. (which it very oft. is) it may claim to be introduced into any

1 Cor. 4.
16. & 11. 1.
1 Thess. 1. 6.
& 2. 10.
& 4. 11.
1 Acta 18. 2.
& 20. 34.
1 Cor. 4. 12.
2 Cor. 11. 9.
12. 13.
1 Thess. 2. 9.
1 Matt. 10.
10.
1 Cor. 4. 10.
& 9. 5. 6.
& 11. 1.
1 Thess. 1. 6.
& 2. 6.
Phil. 2. 17.
1 Tim. 5. 18.
1 Gen. 2. 10.
1 Thess. 4.
11.
1 Eph. 4. 20.
1 Thess. 4.
11.
Ecclus. 2. 23.
m Gal. 6. 9.
n Matt. 18.
17.
1 Cor. 5. 9.
11. ver. 4.

7 Ἐὰν οἱ αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἶδατε πῶς δεῖ μμεῖσθαι ἡμᾶς ὅτι οὐκ ἡτακτῆσαμεν ἐν ὑμῖν, <sup>8</sup> οὐδὲ δωρεὰν ἄρτον ἐφάγομεν παρὰ τινος· ἀλλ' ἐν κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ, νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν ἐργαζόμενοι, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαι τινα ὑμῶν. <sup>9</sup> Οὐχ ὅτι οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν ἀλλ' ἵνα ἑαυτοὺς τύπον δώμεν ὑμῖν εἰς τὸ μμεῖσθαι ἡμᾶς. <sup>10</sup> Καὶ γὰρ ὅτε ἦμεν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, τοῦτο παρηγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν ὅτι, εἴ τις οὐ θέλει ἐργάζεσθαι, μηδὲ ἐσθιέτω. <sup>11</sup> Ἀκούομεν γάρ τινας περιπατοῦντας ἐν ὑμῖν ἀτάκτως, μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους, ἀλλὰ περιεργαζομένους. <sup>12</sup> Τοῖς δὲ τοιοῦτοις παραγγέλλομεν καὶ παρακαλοῦμεν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα μετὰ ἡσυχίας ἐργαζόμενοι τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον ἐσθίσωσιν. <sup>13</sup> Ὑμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοί, μὴ ἐκκακήσητε καλοποιοῦντες. <sup>14</sup> Εἰ δὲ τις οὐχ ὑπακούει τῇ λόγῳ ἡμῶν, διὰ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς, τοῦτον σημειώσθε καὶ μὴ συν-regularly formed text, if we should ever be so fortunate as to have such from the hand of an Editor of the Gr. Test., who would make it the labour of a long life, and more than emulate the fame of a Wets., a Matth., or a Griesb.

7. The Apostle here calls in his own example in aid of his precepts.—αὐτοὶ γάρ, &c. The sense seems to be that assigned by Bengel and Pelt, 'For you yourselves know what manner of life ye ought to pursue, in order to imitate us.'

8. ἄρτον φαγεῖν παρὰ τινος is a phrase meaning 'to be supported by any one.' Comp. 2 Sam. ix. 7, 10, Sept. and Heb.

9. ἐξουσίαν] scil. τοῦ δωρεὰν ἄρτον φαγεῖν παρὰ ὑμῶν. On which see 1 Cor. ix. 6.

10. εἰ τις οὐ θέλει—ἐσθιέτω] An adage, of which many exx. have been adduced.

11. ἀκούομεν γάρ] The γάρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[I am induced to give this injunction,] for I hear,' &c. At ἐργάζ. and περιεργ. there is a paranomasia, as in 1 Tim. v. 13, οὐ μόνον δι' ἄργα, ἀλλὰ καὶ περιεργοί, and Demosth. p. 150, 24, εἰς τὴν ἐργάζην καὶ περιεργάζην. Περιεργάζεσθαι signifies, 1. to labour exceedingly; 2. to devote superfluous labour. The sense may be freely expressed thus: 'doing nothing [in one sense], but over-doing [in another],' i. e. not busy at work, but busy-bodies [at play].

12. μετὰ ἡσυχ.] namely, as opposed to that unsettled spirit, which indisposed them for labour, and disposed them to a disorderly life. At the phrase τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον ἐσθίσαι an emphasis is meant to be laid on ἑαυτῶν, and the expression employed by St. Paul seems to have been one customary among the Jews. So in a Rabbinical writer, cited by Wets. (Aboth Nathan, 30) we have: 'Quo tempore homo panem proprium edit, animo composito et sedato (equiv. to μετὰ ἡσυχίας here) est: si vero panem parentum comedit, non animo tum sedato est, ne dicam de pane peregrino,' equiv. to ἀλλοτρίῳ, or τῶν ἑτέρων. Comp. Juven. Sat. v. 2, 'alienā vīvero quadrā.'—To advert to a matter of reading, for διὰ τοῦ—Χριστοῦ, several ancient MSS., with the Vulg. and Ital. Versions, have ἐν τῷ Κυρίῳ—Χριστῷ, received by Lachm. and by Tisch. (1st Ed.), though in his second Ed. he has restored διὰ τοῦ, very properly. The other reading was doubtless an alteration from 1 Thess. iv. 1, where it may be suitable, though here it is otherwise, since we have here a formula obtestandi, as at Rom. xv. 30, παρακαλῶ ὑμᾶς διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, nay, even stronger than there. This I find accords with the view taken by Est., who well annotates: "Est amplificatio per incrementum in verbis apostoli, q. d. 'Non precipio tantum, sed et obsecro, nec id quomodocunque, sed per Dominiā,' &c., quod est vehementer obtestantia."

13. μὴ ἐκκακήσητε καλῶν.] This is similar to the injunction at Gal. vi. 9, τὸ καλὸν ποιού-ντες μὴ ἐκκακῶμεν, 'let us not be weary of doing good;' i. e. by the exercise of charity; which passage, together with the connexion with the preceding (indicated by the εἰ), must determine the sense here to the subject of Christian charity; though most Expositors extend it to that of virtue in general; wrongly, for as to καλοποιεῖν occurring in that sense at Lev. v. 4, there the context and opposition with κακοποιεῖν as much require that sense as the context here does the other. The εἰ shows that the admonition was chiefly intended for persons above the working classes, and was meant to repress that disinclination to relieve and assist even the industrious and deserving, which was apt to be engendered by the idleness or unworthiness of some of the objects of charity. To advert to a matter of reading. Three of the most ancient MSS. have ἐγκ.—a reading received by Lachm. and Tisch., who have made the same alteration from the same MSS., at Gal. vi. 9; but see note there.

14. διὰ τῆς ἐπιστ.] Some Expositors connect this with σημειώσθε, placing a comma after ἡμῶν, in the sense, 'inform me of the delinquent by letter.' That, however, is negatived by the use of the Article; for (as Bp. Middl. has shown) if such had been the meaning, there would have been none, and σημειώσθε cannot well admit of that sense.—τῆς ἐπιστολῆς may be rendered (with Bp. Middl.) 'our Epistle,' lit. 'the Epistle which we wrote you.' The sense of σημ. required by this interpretation (namely, 'mark that man as one to be shunned'), is, indeed, not very frequent, but it is sufficiently supported by authority (being frequent in Polybius), and is confirmed both by the context here αναμίγνυσθε αὐτῷ, ἵνα ἐντραπή· <sup>15</sup> καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἡγείσθε, ἀλλὰ νουθετεῖτε ὡς ἀδελφόν. <sup>16</sup> Ὁ Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Κύριος τῆς εἰρήνης δώῃ ὑμῖν τὴν εἰρήνην διὰ παντὸς ἐν παντὶ τρόπῳ. Ὁ Κύριος μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν!

<sup>17</sup> Ὁ ἄσπασμος τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου, ὃ ἐστὶ σημεῖον ἐν πάσῃ ἐπιστολῇ· οὕτω γράφω. <sup>18</sup> Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Θεσσαλονικεῖς δευτέρα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ἀθηνῶν.

and the etymology of the word. On μὴ συναμιγ. see 1 Cor. v. 9, 11. The expression is equiv. to συγχρᾶσθαι at John iv. 9. Thus it was a sort of excommunication, such as was in use among the Jews. See Schöttgen on Matt. xviii. 17.—ἵνα ἐντραπή, i. e. 'that the shame thereof may bring him to repentance.' Comp. Tit. ii. 8, and 1 Cor. iv. 14, and notes.

<sup>15</sup> καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἡγ.] 'and yet regard him not as an enemy.' These words are meant to show the nature of this sort of punishment, and how far it should extend. It was to be considered only as a νουθεσία, having in view not so much the punishment, as the reformation of the offender. And the conduct adopted with regard to him was not to be so far removed from friendliness, as to approach to hostility. The term νουθ. is to be taken as at 1 Thess. v. 14. Comp. Levit. xix. 17.

<sup>16</sup> Comp. Rom. xv. 33, ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης: and on both passages remark, that nothing could be more suitable to close both those Epistles than a prayer for peace from the Lord, or God, of peace, who, as he carries it completely in himself, can abundantly impart it to others also, and ἐν παντὶ τρόπῳ, 'in every wise,' 'in every relation, and under all circumstances.' That Lachm. and Tisch. should have altered τρόπῳ to τόπῳ, from only 4 uncials and 12 cursives, was a mark of ἀκρισία the most extreme. The expression παντὶ τρόπῳ is one occurring in the best writers (including Thucyd.) in the sense omni modo, one very suitable and agreeable to propriety; whereas, had τόπῳ been written, an ἐν would have been required. Moreover, παντὶ τρόπῳ occurs in Phil. i. 18.

<sup>17</sup>, <sup>18</sup>. See note on Rom. xvi. 21—23. 1 Cor. xvi. 24.

o Rom. 15.
23. & 16. 20.
1 Cor. 14. 23.
2 Cor. 5. 19—
21. & 13. 11.
Eph. 2. 14—
17.
Phil. 4. 9.
1 Thess. 5.
22.
Heb. 7. 2.
1 Cor. 13.
21.
Col. 4. 18.

ΠΑΤΡΟΣ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΜΟΘΕΟΝ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

a Acts 9. 15.
b 28. 16—18.
Col. 1. 27.
Gal. 1. 1.

Ι. <sup>1</sup> ΠΑΤΡΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κατ' ἐπιταγὴν
Θεοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τῆς ἐλπίδος

WE are now arrived at the Pastoral Epistles, which deserve especial attention, from their containing many important particulars respecting the discipline of the Church, as the foregoing Epistles do respecting the doctrines. They are assuredly of great importance; for, although the erroneous notions of the Judaizing teachers (the immediate occasion of their being written) have disappeared, yet as Dr. Macknight observes, 'the Epistles to Timothy are still of use, as they serve to show the implety of the principles from which these errors proceeded; for the same principles are apt in every age to produce errors and vices, which, though different in name from those which prevailed at Ephesus in the Apostle's days, are precisely of the same kind, and equally pernicious.' They are indeed exceedingly important to the Church in every age, by giving its Ministers, of whatever community or denomination, the most perfect precepts as to the duties of their respective offices, pointing out the general qualifications necessary to such as are candidates for the ministry, and explaining the ends for which the offices were originally instituted, and ought still to be continued in the Church. The consideration of those matters is closely connected with four questions, (1) as to the persons to whom they are addressed, and for whom they were expressly intended, and their history, as far as can be gathered from the New Test.; (2) as to the time when, and place where, written, and the object of the writer; (3) as to the agreement of the contents with those objects; (4) as to their authenticity. Each of these points will, on the several Epistles, be discussed with a succinct brevity, demanded by the plan of this work. As to the Epistle which first occurs,—the notices we have of Timotheus in the New Test. are few, and far between. His conversion first took place at the time indicated in Acts xvi. 1. The notices of him after he was with Paul, and during the Roman imprisonment, must be familiar to my readers, both from the New Test. and from the ordinary authorities. The latter part of his history is either quite unknown, or shrouded in deep obscurity. As to the time when this Epistle was written, it is a much debated, and, indeed, debatable question. Eminent Critics vary from the earliest date, A. D. 52, to the latest, 63. Suffice it to say, that such strong reasons militate against the earlier date, as to make it quite untenable. There is much to countenance, but scarcely sufficient to substantiate, the very latest one. As to Dr. Davidson, strongly impressed with the difficulties lying against both the foregoing hypotheses, he, acting on the maxim 'in medio tutissimus ibis,' thinks fit to take an intermediate period, and, with more prudence than judgment, fixes the date at A. D. 56. For my own part, I am convinced that few competent judges of such a matter as the one in question, will rise from the perusal of Mr. Conybeare's paper (Appendix I.) on the dates of the Pastoral Epistles, without feeling all but convinced that they could not have been written earlier than A. D. 66, nor later than 68. My own impression is, that the former date is the true one;—I mean that of 1 Tim. and Tit.; for that of 2 Tim. must have been several months later, prob. in the summer of A. D. 67, at Rome, during the Apostle's last imprisonment. It is pretty clear that Tit. must have been written in the latter part of the autumn of A. D. 66, and 1 Tim. in the early autumn, or late in the summer, of that year. Of course, if Mr. Conybeare's view be adopted, the dates of 1 Tim. and Tit. will fall on the late summer and autumn of A. D. 67. As to the place where this Epistle was written, all is conjecture, and nothing really known. To advert to the object of the writer, and the design of the Epistle, it is generally supposed to have been to instruct Timothy in the discharge of his ministerial office; but it was prob. intended also to carry an indirect application to others; and the more immediate occasion of its being written seems to have been, to caution both him and others against the delusions of those false teachers (supposed to have been Essenes), who by their subtle distinctions had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel, and by their interminable controversies on speculative points had turned men's attention off from weightier matters. Hence the far greater part of the Epistle is occupied on matters of doctrine, and the remainder treats on matters of discipline, ceremonies, and Church government. Yet the former is every where kept paramount; and, accordingly, the Apostle presses on Timothy to keep continually in view (in his teaching and preaching) the interests of practical religion, and gives him the most salutary counsels and earnest exhortations to the discharge of his episcopal office. Hence the Epistle naturally divides itself into two Parts.—I. that wherein Timothy is instructed as to his conduct in the settlement and administration of the Church at Ephesus; II. that wherein some reasonable admonitions are given, for the benefit of the people at large; some of whom, it seems, had been disturbed by the seductive arts of false teachers, and others had been too little mindful of the sacred obligation incumbent on them, to 'adorn the doctrine of God in all things,'—the poor, by insubordination, sometimes rising to sedition, and the rich, by covetousness. Accordingly, the Apostle gives counsels suitable to both those classes; warning the one of the pernicious consequences of angry controversies on matters of no moment; the other, of the danger of resisting the ordinance of God, 'who maketh rich and poor,' and whose will it is that both should alike glorify him,' the rich 'out of his abundance, and the poor out of his poverty.'

ἡμῶν, <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Τιμοθέῳ γνησίῳ τέκνῳ ἐν πίστει χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη <sup>b</sup> Acts 16. 1.
 ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς [ἡμῶν] καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν. <sup>1</sup> 1 Cor. 4. 17.
<sup>1</sup> 1 Tim. 3. 2. <sup>2</sup> Gal. 1. 3. <sup>1</sup> Pet. 1. 2.

As to the agreement of the contents with the professed object of the writer, that has been abundantly shown, and is of itself too obvious to need pointing out. As to the style and composition of these Pastoral Epistles, it cannot be denied that they are inferior to those of the other Pauline Epistles. The structure is more tortuous and anomalous, prob. from less time having been taken with them; espec. as being private Epistles; the moulding is, generally speaking, somewhat rude, and the matter less carefully digested, the clauses being imperfectly arranged;—all which tends to produce no inconsiderable obscurity. There is also occasionally perceptible (espec. in 2 Tim.) a diminution of the writer's pristine vigour and energy, by the failure of physical strength, occasioned by advancing years; which could not but tell severely on a bodily frame originally feeble, and now borne down by such varied trials. Yet the same Pauline spirit is every where perceptible. Another important point here remains to be adverted to—that of the authenticity of this and the other Pastoral Epistles. It might be thought that the all but universal acknowledgment of their authenticity by those most competent to judge, and whose suffrage must have the greatest weight,—the ancient Fathers, from Irenæus and Clement of Rome downwards—should all but decide a question of this nature. And a long array of such authorities as adduced by Dr. Lardner, and Dr. Davidson, ought to decide the point in favour of the authenticity. They are, moreover, included in the Canon of Muratori, are contained in the Peasch. Syr. Version, and are reckoned by Eusebius among the ὁμολογούμενα, or Canonical Scriptures, universally acknowledged. Yet great objections have been made as to the authenticity of these Epistles, and strong denials thereof, not merely by the infidels (as in the case of the Ephesians), as Evanson and Baur, but by Eichhorn, Scheiermacher, De Wette, and Schwegler; whose arguments, however, are ably examined and satisfactorily disproved by Mr. Conybeare, also by Dr. Davidson, who sums up the case thus: 'External evidence, in favour of the authenticity, is most satisfactory of itself. Internal evidence accords with it. Every one sees, and even De Wette acknowledges, that the language and manner bear a close resemblance to Paul's. As to the alleged proof of their being composed by an imitator, what does it amount to? Does it not amount to this, that there are diversities of diction between them and other Pauline letters—that the writer is less doctrinal, and more practical—that there is less of exact arrangement, than in most others—that he speaks more of himself, or at least of the personal conduct of the individuals addressed—more of a certain class of errors, which should prevail in the Churches of Crete, Ephesus, and Asia Minor generally, than he had done in any other Epistle? In short, there is such diversity as frequently happens in the case of the same writer, who, in different circumstances, addressing different persons, and with different purposes in view, necessarily varies his mode of writing, to suit the alteration of circumstances. As to appealing to the many ἁρξ λεγόμενα, and peculiar words, found in these Epistles, of which lists are given by De Wette, and after him by Dr. Davidson, and Mr. Conybeare (the last of which is the most complete, or rather, the least incomplete), the Pauline origin is not to be disproved, as Dr. Davidson shows, in that way. To show the futility of such reasoning, it is sufficient to say, that on the same data we might argue against the authenticity of the Epistle to the Philippians, Galatians, Ephesians, and Colossians. The difference in question between Paul's other Epistles and these Pastoral ones, may (as Dr. Davidson observes) be amply explained by difference of design, leading to the treatment of different topics; difference of the parties addressed, of the relations sustained by the writer to those parties; and the general circumstances, objective and subjective, affecting both at the time of writing. But, according to the views of the German Critics, no matter what may be the outward circumstances, or inward promptings, of a richly stored mind like Paul's, he must, it seems, be confined to one set of words and phrases. The injustice of this would be admitted even in the case of an uninspired writer; how much more in that of a Sacred writer, whose inspiration controlled the exercise of the mental powers, without suspending it!

I. This first chapter forms a sort of Preface to K κ 2

c Acts 20.
1, 2.
Gal. 1. 4, 7.
d ch. 4, 7.
e 8, 4, 20.
f Tim. 2. 16.
Tit. 1. 14. & 2. 2.

3<sup>c</sup> Καθὼς παρεκάλεσά σε προσμεῖναι ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, πορευόμενος εἰς Μακεδονίαν, ἵνα παραγγείλῃς τισὶ μὴ ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, 4<sup>d</sup> μὴδὲ προσέχειν μύθοις καὶ γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις, αἵτινες

the whole Epistle; and in it the Apostle, after reminding Timothy of the sacred charge committed to him (i. e. to preserve the purity of the Gospel against the pernicious doctrines of the false teachers, whose notions led to empty speculations and frivolous controversies, and not to a holy life, and which, therefore, he in the next chapter warns them to shun and avoid), then shows the true use of the Law of Moses, agreeably to the representation of it in the Gospel committed to him to preach; on the mention of which he expresses at large his ardent gratitude to God, not only in calling him (who had been a bitter persecutor and insulter) to the Christian faith, but in entrusting him with the high office which he held in the Church.

1. κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ] 'according to,' or 'by the appointment,' or 'decree.' So also the most recent Commentators, who regard it as equiv. to κατὰ τὸ θέλημα Θεοῦ, or διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, elsewhere; but it is a stronger expression. By σωτήρος ἡμῶν is meant, 'the author of our salvation;' as iv. 10. Tit. ii. 10, &c. God is with reason so called, since, as Benson observes, 'the original of our redemption through Jesus Christ was the love and goodness of the Father, who planned, as well as of the Son, who effected it.' So Calvin also, who refers to John i. 16.—τῆς ἀλπίδος ἡμῶν, meaning, 'the ground of our hope of salvation;' as Col. i. 27. Comp. Eph. ii. 24. So in Jer. i. 7. Joel iii. 16, and also in the Class. writers, as Plut. de Superst. 7, ἀρετῆς ἀλπίς ὁ Θεός ἐστιν. From the parallel passage at Tit. i. 2, it would seem, as Wiesing. supposes, to glance at those false teachers, who virtually set aside that hope, not to say that the name σωτήρ implies this hope.

2. γνησίῳ τέκνῳ] 'my genuine,' or 'true son;' called son, as being converted by St. Paul (1 Cor. iv. 14, 15. Gal. iv. 19); and 'genuine son,' as, from his zeal in propagating the faith, and his other moral qualities, bearing that likeness to him, which true sons may be supposed to do to their parents.

3. καθὼς παρεκάλεσα.—Μακεδ.] The construction here is tortuous and elliptical.—πορεύς Μακεδ. must be construed between καθὼς and παρεκ., and the protasis as καθὼς is without its apodosis, οὕτως, which must be supplied. The simplest and most natural method is to understand οὕτως καὶ νῦν παρακαλῶ, Wiesing., and of this Dr. Peile approves.—παρεκάλεσα may be rendered, 'I directed;' as at Matt. xxvii. 33, et al.—πορευόμενος, 'when departing;'—μὴ ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, 'not to teach any other doctrines than such as are agreeable to the truth,' i. e. 'sound doctrine;' see more in Calvin and Hyper., and also in Estius, not to omit Theophyl. and Theodor.

4. μὴδὲ προσέχειν μύθοις] 'nor to give heed to fables;' meaning, the Rabbinical traditions and interpretations afterwards embodied in the Mishna, and called at Tit. i. 14, comp. iii. 9, 'Jewish fables;' as also is plain from the following words which, Dr. Peile observes, 'suggest inquiries, and put men on tracing their descent from Abraham;' rather, 'suggest what Christianity is.' The phrase προσέχειν μύθοις occurs also in Arrian, Epict. iii. 21, where the sense, as here is, 'to give ear to,' with the implied notion of following, or holding, certain opinions as positive truths. So ch. iv. 1, προσήκοντες διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων. Hence we may perceive what is meant by the expression following, γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις, which is by some referred to the Æons of the Gnostics; though, as the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors have seen, it must chiefly relate to that fondness for genealogical investigation which has ever distinguished the Jews. Thus the term μύθοις may, per Hendiadyn, have reference partly to the myths connected with the genealogies. So Polymb. ix. 2, ἐξαρθεῖσθαι τὰ περὶ τὰς γενεαλογίας καὶ μύθους.—Ἀπεράντος prop. signifies interminable, 'whose discussion might be endlessly spun out;' as in Plut. i. p. 255, λόγον πρὸς ἀπεράντους διαισθαιμονίας ἐκφύροντα: a term very applicable to genealogical disquisitions, because (as Calvin observes) the discussion itself is interminable, 'vain curiosity knows no bounds, but is hurried from one labyrinth to another.' That by μύθ. and γενεαλ. are espec. meant matters and subjects of a Jewish character, is plain from the passages of the Pastoral Epistles above referred to.—ζητήσιν παρίχουσι, 'which afford occasional matter for questions,' and those interminable. In this sense παρίχουσι occurs in Thucyd. vi. 46, 4, ἐκκλησίῳ παρίχουσι. In the next words I still retain the reading οικονομίαν (since for οἶκος there exists only the evidence of one MS., D<sup>8</sup>) to that of οικοδομίαν, though I grant the harshness of the construction; for the di-logia, like that in Thucyd. iii. 14, διδόντας, in παρίχουσι is, I believe, never found in Class. writers, except in two separate members, or opposite clauses, of a sentence, though there is, as I have shown, something tantamount to it here; μάλλον ἢ being put for καὶ οὐ. The harshness may, however, be lessened by rendering thus: 'which occasion controversial questions as to the Divine economy, rather than set forth the Divine dispensation,—God's gracious plan of salvation [in the Gospel as resting exclusively on faith in Christ Jesus].' Comp. Eph. iii. 2, τὴν οικονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ. So Est. admirably explains it to mean, 'dispensationem Dei, qua dispositus et ordinavit, ut mysteria fide suscipiantur, cum sint incomprehensibilia: cui ordinationi resistunt, qui quæstiones de iis movent, tanquam ratione comprehendendi poscent.' Dr. Peile observes, that, in so designating the economy of faith, Paul has described the characteristic principle of the Gospel nearly as Tacitus has described the idiosyncrasy of the Teutonic mind, 'reverentius est credere, quam scire.' Alas! how widely different is the idiosyncrasy of the Teutonic mind at the present day! Besides, the very expression οικονομία τοῦ Θεοῦ is found at Col. i. 25, κατὰ τὴν οικονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, and its equiv. τὴν οικονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, Eph. iii. 2. The reading οικοδομίαν, I have little doubt, arose from the ζητήσεις παρέχουσι μάλλον ἢ *οἰκονομίαν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει.

 5 • Τὸ δὲ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας ἐστὶν ἀγάπη ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας καὶ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς καὶ πίστεως ἀνυποκρίτου 6 ὧν τινὲς ἀστοχήσαντες, ἐξετράπησαν εἰς ματαιολογίαν, 7 θέλοντες εἶναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι, μὴ νοοῦντες μῆτε ἀ λέγουσι, μῆτε περὶ

8 Rom. 10. 4.
 12. 5. 10.
 Gal. 5. 14. 22.
 1 ch. 6. 4. 70.
 Rom. 1. 22.
 2 Tim. 4. 7.
 3 Pet. 2. 12.

carelessness of the scribes at a very early period, by which (as not unfrequently has taken place elsewhere) the letters Δ and Ν were confounded, which they might the more easily be, considering that the use of οικοδομή to denote 'Christian edification,'—a use found also at Rom. xiv. 10. xv. 2. Eph. iv. 12, 16, 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 5,—was one well known to them. The letters being, then, thus confounded, it seems that, by a singular accident, the word so altered yielded as good a sense, and one more generally intelligible than the genuine reading. The early Critics, however, perceived that the reading οικοδομίαν was incorrect, and accordingly altered it to οικοδομήν (which the above-cited passages would suggest), as found in Irenæus ap. Epiph., and supposed to be represented in the 'edificationem' of the Pesch. Syr. But whether the Pesch. Syr. Translator had not in his MS. οικοδομίαν may be doubted; for it is not, as some say, a barbarism, but may have been a common Greek term for οικοδομήν. That οικοδομίαν can be shown to be as ancient as the fifth century, is certain from the evidence of Chrysa. and Theodor., who seem not to have been aware of any other reading; also of the Alex. MS. I find it in all the Lamb. and all the Mus. copies, including Cov. 1 and 4, passed over by Mill.

5. τὸ δὲ τέλος—ἀνυποκρίτου Regarding this, with most Expositors, as a digression, from which the Apostle does not return until nearly at the end of the ch. (v. 18). Dr. Peile translates, 'Whereas the great end and aim of the Gospel message is, in one word, LOVE; comp. John xiii. 34, seq. Rom. xiii. 8—10. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 1 John iv. 1—21. But the digression is far from certain. Wiesing. and others regard v. 5 as standing in an adversative relation to v. 4 (as suggested by the δέ); and remarks, that 'the Apostle is specifying the aim of the παραγγελία, in order to show how far the things he speaks of at v. 4 deviate from this aim. Now, how remote from this aim are those myths and genealogies, with their subtle speculations, which take the place of the Dispensation of God that is in faith! This love, which is the aim of all precept, rests on the foundation of purity of heart, goodness of conscience, and faith unfeigned; while those ζητήσεις have nothing in common with that which is the subject-matter of faith.' But it is of some importance to fix the sense of the term παραγγελίας, which is by most ancient, and many modern Expositors, explained 'charge,' or 'exhortation,' which seems confirmed by v. 18, ταῦτην τὴν παραγγ., but that will all depend on the connexion at v. 5. But since the context evidently calls for the sense 'the revelation of God in the Gospel-message to man,' it seems best to regard τῆς παραγγελίας as put in the Sing. for the Plur. τῶν παραγγελημάτων, in order to designate those commandments and injunctions as a body or system. See Crell. The term παραγγέλματα is so used in the Plur. in

Jos. Antt. xvi. 2, 4, of the precepts of the Mosaic religion contained in the Holy Scriptures; but considered as a body of precepts, forming Holy Scripture. Τέλος here signifies, 'final purpose,' that to which all the parts of a whole tend, and in which all terminate; comp. Rom. x. 4. Ecclesi. xii. 13. The phrase ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας shows the kind of love enjoined. It is to be sincere (not founded on interested motives) and springing from (so ἐκ is used in 2 Cor. ii. 4) motives of conscience, and undissembled conviction of Gospel truth. Ἀπό for ἐκ would have been better Greek; so Æschin. 285, ἀφ' ἀγνῶς στόματος. Of course purity of heart can only arise from previous purifying by faith, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, Acts xv. 9. See Wiesing., who remarks that 'thus the pure heart is necessarily connected with the second thing which the Apostle mentions as presupposed in all true love,—the συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς (comp. iii. 9. 2 Tim. i. 3), or καλῆ, Heb. xiii. 18. It is (continues he) the conscience that is reconciled to God, by knowing its guilt removed; for a conscience unreconciled to God and man cannot love purely, because it cannot believe.' The third requisite to true Christian love is 'faith unfeigned,' an expression which, as Olsh. observes, 'adverts to the new-life power which dwells in such a heart and conscience,—and which, as to its quality, is to be viewed as springing from faith, which alone makes the evil conscience good, and which purifies the heart; but it does this only when it is itself unfeigned.'

6. This verse and those that follow give additional characteristics of the errors adverted to at v. 4, intimating that it is from the want of a pure heart, &c., that certain persons ἀστοχήσαντες, ἐξετράπησαν, i.e. ματ., where there are two metaphors blended; one that of missing a mark (suggested by the τέλος just before), the other, of wandering from a road. So Jos. Antt. i. xiii. 18, ἐξετράπησθε ὁδοῦ δικαίας. Hippocr. de Nat. Hom. i., ἐνίοι δὲ εἰς μακρολογίαν ἐξετράποντο, and de Facult. Med. Simpl. vii., εἰς μύθους γραῶδεις—ἐξετράπητο, and Porphy. de Abst. iv. 16, ματαιολογίαν ἡγοῦνται τὴν τοιαύτην παραίτησιν (excuse) καὶ, τὸ δὲ λέγουσιν, γραῶν ὄλον (gossip).—Ματ. has reference to the interminable and unprofitable ζητήσεις mentioned at v. 4, and called κενωφωνίας at vi. 20; this vain and empty talk being, by implication, opposed to the performance of substantial duties. What kind of 'vain talk' is meant we learn from v. 7.

7. θέλοντες] 'desiring to be [thought],' 'affecting to be;' as Col. ii. 18; intimating, as Hyper. observes, 'that they have not erred through ignorance, but, scientes et volentes, they having rushed to the office of teachers of the Gospel, to which they were wholly incompetent.'—νομοδιδάσκαλοι, meaning, 'doctors or teachers of the [Christian] law.' The term, indeed, pro-

g Rom. 7. 12. τίνων διαβεβαιούνται. <sup>8</sup> οὐδὲν δὲ ὅτι καλὸς ὁ νόμος, ἐάν
 h Rom. 4. 13. τις αὐτῷ νομίμως χρήται, <sup>9</sup> ἡ εἰδὼς τοῦτο, ὅτι δικαίῳ νόμῳ
 i 5. 30.
 k 5. 14.
 Gal. 3. 10—14, 19.
 l 5. 23.
 11 Thess. 2.
 4. ch. 6. 15.
 11<sup>1</sup> κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς δόξης τοῦ μακαρίου Θεοῦ, ὃ ἐπι-

perly signified a Doctor of the Jewish law; but it was prob. here used by Paul, because the persons in question were Judaizing Christians, and therefore likely to cling to the old term, rather than adopt πρὸςβύτερος, or other terms then in general use among Christians. However, since Wiesing, and Huther have gone far to show that these persons were not Judaizing Christians, the sense may be, as Wiesing. expresses it, 'desirous to be, in their way, what the Doctors of the Law were among the Jewish people.'—μή νοούντες 'though understanding not [what they say]' is a popular phrase, to which is subjoined the more recondite one μήτις περὶ τίνων διαβεβαιούνται, where διαβ. is used (as often in the later writers) of strongly affirming or strenuously maintaining any thing (see my Lex.); meaning here the true nature of the Law, and the real intent of the Gospel. To this the Apostle in the next words adverts,—in order to make his meaning the clearer, and also to show that he does not despise the law.

8. καλός 'excellent,' both in nature and intent, espec. the moral law; though even the ceremonial was such, as regarded its true scope.—οἶδμεν means, 'we well know [and admit].'
ἐάν τις αὐτῷ (scil. νόμῳ) νομίμως χρήται, 'if he uses it aright,' viz. by following it, living agreeably to its injunctions (so Eurip. Hip. 97, εἴπερ γὰρ θνητοὶ θεῶν νόμοις χρώμεθα. Thucyd. iii. 70, 6, τῷ νόμῳ χρῆσασθαι), and fulfilling its design, which was to restrain and check, by the carrying out of its moral precepts, vicious and evil habits; and, by its ceremonial ones, to lead men to that better law which was revealed in Christ.

9. 'From this verse we learn, first negatively, and then positively, what the design of the Law is; which he must know who would use it aright.' (Wiesing.) The sense is well expressed by Bp. Middl. thus: 'recollecting (rather, 'well aware') that neither the Mosaic, nor any other law, is directed (lit. 'fixed,' 'enacted') against the just and good, but only against the lawless and disorderly.' So also, observes the Bp. at Gal. v. 23, St. Paul having enumerated the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, &c., subjoins, 'against such there is no law,' οὐκ ἔστι νόμος, which appears to be exactly equivalent to the νόμος οὐ καίται in the present verse. 'I do not deny (continues he) that the Mosaic Law is comprehended in νόμος; I contend only, that νόμος in this place is not limited to that Law, but that it comprises every law, written and unwritten, human and Divine; nor could the argument of the Apostle be stated with greater force, than by his extending what was primarily meant of the Law of Moses to law universally: the Mosaic Law, says St. Paul, was intended to restrain the wicked; against the just neither it nor any other law was ever promulgated.' Thus

Aristotle, cited by Benson, says, 'The law is not against the virtuous, because the virtuous are a law unto themselves.' And so, I would add, it was a saying of Menander, δίκαιοι ἐάν τις, τῷ τρόπῳ (thy [good] disposition) χρήσῃ νόμῳ, as a law. In the subsequent enumeration of vices, the general terms ἀνόμ. and ἀνυποτάκτοι (lawless and unruly) are, by way of exemplification, followed up by special ones. These, however, are introduced by the connecting link of some which are partly general, and partly special;—as ἀσεβ. and ἀνός., ἀμαρτ. and βεβ.; and which rather consist in principle than in practice.—ἀμαρτ. may be taken, with some, to mean idolaters; but it is rather synonymous with ἀσεβ., with which term it is often connected in Scripture.—ἀνός. and βεβ. are also nearly synonymous, and may be rendered 'impious and heathenish.' Next come the special terms, commencing with murder, both of the worst kind, and the less criminal, manslaughter. By πόρνοι are meant adulterers as well as fornicators. To murder and sins of uncleanness the Apostle, in ἀνδραποδισταῖς, subjoins robbery of the worst kind,—by kidnapping free persons to be sold as slaves, or trafficking in them when so kidnapped—a crime universally regarded as of the deepest dye, and always punished with death. By ψεύσται and ῥυπαροὶ are denoted different modifications of the same crime (so Rom. i. 31, ἀνυπόθετοι, ἀσυνδοκίμοι), the latter rising beyond the former, as perjury exceeds perfidy; for by ψεύσται are, I apprehend, denoted not (as the expression is generally interpreted) liars, but deceivers, utterly faithless, as in Rom. iii. 4. 1 John ii. 4, 22. So Thucyd., in his inimitable description of the state of society in Greece at the time of the Peloponnesian war, l. iii. 83, assembles together these two vices (namely, ψεύσται and ῥυπαροὶ): thus: οὗτοι λόγοις ἰχυροῖς οὐτὰ ἔρκος φοβεροί.—Εἰ τι is for ἅ τι, meaning, 'whatever else.' By ὕμνημα, διδ. is meant, by metonymy, 'sound or wholesome doctrine.' So ὕμναιοντες λόγοι at vi. 3. 2 Tim. i. 13, and Philo. p. 32, τοῖς ὑμναιώσας λόγους.

11. κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον Dr. Burton rightly connects these words with τῷ ὑγ. διδασκ., supr., thus: 'and whatever else is opposed to that sound doctrine, which is in accordance with the Gospel, given for the glory of God; which Gospel has been entrusted to me; and I thank our Lord Jesus Christ, that he has thought me fit to be entrusted with it.' The connexion and scope of the words have been misunderstood, or perverted, by the German Commentators generally. Wiesing. remarks, that the designation τῆς δόξης, as also the epithet μακαρίου, is selected, in order to give prominence to the preponderating value of the Gospel—it being the revelation of the glory of Him who is blessed; and, conse-

στεύθην ἐγώ. <sup>13</sup> καὶ χάριν ἔχω τῷ ἐνδυναμώσαντί με Χριστῷ <sup>k John 9. 30.</sup> Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, ὅτι πιστόν με ἠγγήσατο θέμενος εἰς δια- <sup>Acts 8. 17.</sup> κονίαν, <sup>13 k</sup> τὸν πρότερον ὄντα βλάσφημον καὶ διώκτην καὶ <sup>2 & 5. 2. & 9. 1.</sup> ὑβριστήν. Ἀλλ' ἡλεήθην, ὅτι ἄγνοῶν ἐποίησα ἐν ἀπιστίᾳ. <sup>23. 4.</sup> <sup>14</sup> ὑπερεπλήονασε δὲ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν μετὰ πίστεως <sup>2 & 28. 6.</sup>
 καὶ ἀγάπης τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>15</sup> Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος καὶ <sup>1 Cor. 15. 9.</sup>
<sup>15</sup> <sup>Gal. 1. 15.</sup> <sup>Phil. 3. 6.</sup> <sup>1 Matt. 9. 13.</sup> <sup>2 & 18. 11.</sup> <sup>2 & 20. 25.</sup> <sup>Mark 2. 17.</sup> <sup>Luke 5. 26.</sup> <sup>2 & 10. 10.</sup> <sup>1 John 3. 5, 8.</sup>

quently, the revelation of his glory must be rich in blessings. However, from the use of μακάριος at vi. 15, it is plain that the epithet was adopted as one appropriated to designate the Deity. Accordingly, it is so used in the Class. writers, from Homer downwards, and also by Philo and Josephus.

12. 'Having appealed to the Gospel (committed to his trust) in opposition to the so-called νομοδιδάσκαλοι, the Apostle enters more fully into the manner in which this trust was committed to him, in order thus to show what certainty he has of the truth of the Gospel,—the certainty, namely, of a personal experience, in virtue of which he, who was a blasphemer and a persecutor, was transformed into a minister of Jesus Christ.' (Wiesing.) The Apostle, however, under the impulse of his deeply thankful heart (such as continually appears in all his Epistles), clothes his allegation for proof under the form of a thanksgiving. It is well remarked by Huther, that 'the Apostle enlarges (up to v. 17) on the grace experienced by him from the Lord, but in such a manner, as to make it clearly manifest, that the Gospel committed to his trust is truly a Gospel of the glory of the ever blessed God!' The words are well paraphrased by Wiesing, thus: 'And I thank Jesus Christ our Lord, who hath enabled me, that he counted me faithful, appointing me to the ministry, although I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious, says the Apostle, in explanation of the words which was committed to my trust, v. 11, Christ, who hath enabled me;—inasmuch as the strength for the ministry to which the Lord had appointed him, proceeds not from himself, but from the Lord, who hath called him to this ministry.' The full sense, however, of ἐνδυναμ. is, 'who strengthened me,' 'put into me the ability and qualifications for discharging the trust;' implying, of course, all that Divine illumination and supernatural power (called δύναμις, Acts i. 8) by which he was enabled to fully comprehend and effectually preach the Gospel. All this he constantly ascribes to Christ only. See Acts ix. 17. Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. v. 5. Gal. i. 1. —ὅτι πιστ. με ἦν. θείμ. σὺ διακ. is for ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ με, πιστόν ἠγγήμανος, σὺ διακ. In ὅτι πιστόν με ἦν., &c., there is a remarkable change of construction, and not the ordinary one, by which an Adject., or other word, which logically belongs to one construction, is grammatically united to another. See 2 Cor. v. 1. Acts v. 20. Rom. vii. 24, comp. with Thucyd. v. 89, 1, and iv. 126, 6.

13. Here the Apostle describes his former condition in words of deep humility that dictated such strong expressions; which were not, as Wiesing. supposes, merely meant to give effect to the contrast with the foregoing, 'putting me into the ministry.' For τὸν πρότερον Λαχμ.

and Tisch., from several MSS., some very ancient, edit τὸ πρότ. But internal evidence is against the above reading, since τόν was, on account of the adv. πρότερον, more likely to be changed to τό than τὸ to τόν. Moreover, St. Paul oft. uses the adv. πρότερον, but only once elsewh. τὸ πρότ. Again, the τόν is required to connect με before with ὄντα, as was seen by the Critic who formed the text of the Alex. MS. when he inserted με after ὄντα. In βλάσφ., διώκ., and ὑβρ., there is a climax; the spirit of ill-will, expressed in the first, being, in the second and third terms, carried into greater and greater effect. On βλάσφ. see Acts xvi. 11; on διώκ., Gal. i. 13, and on ὑβρ., Acts viii. 3. ix. 2. In ὅτι ἄγνοῶν—ἀπιστία there is an obscurity and seeming incongruity arising from brevity of expression; two clauses being blended into one. The full sense is, 'because I did what I did in simple ignorance [of the nature of my conduct], and in sincere [though unfounded] unbelief [of the truth of the Gospel].' The words, however, are, as Wiesing. observes, not intended as a palliation of his conduct, but only meant to show that there was that in him upon which Divine mercy might take hold; and so show how it was possible for mercy to be extended to one like himself.

14. ὑπερεπλήονασι—ἀγάπης The verse is, from brevity, obscure. The sense, fully expressed, is as follows: '[And not only was I pardoned,] but the grace of our Lord so superabounded, [beyond my deserts, compare Rom. v. 20, ὑπερεπέρσσειεν ἡ χάρις,] that I was also brought to believe and love Jesus Christ [whom I had blasphemed and hated].' See Acts viii. 3. xvi. 9. 1 Cor. xv. 9. The Apostle (as Wiesing. and Olsh. observe) here places in opposition to the state described supra v. 13, the new state,—that of grace,—which manifests itself in his life and labours,—and which has adorned these with faith and love, having their root in Christ Jesus,—both being the result of grace, which brings faith and love along with it.

15. We have here, as Crell. observes, a conclusion from the foregoing, in which the Apostle deduces, from his own example, that which he had above asserted as generally true; q. d. that from his own experience he can testify to the truth of what he says as to the power of saving grace, and redeeming love, in his strong assertion, that,—πιστός ὁ λόγος, &c., meaning, 'assuredly true and worthy of entire confidence is the assertion that,' &c. The formula, πιστός ὁ λόγος, which occurs five times in the Pastoral Epistles, but no where else in the New Test. nor in the Class. writers, seems intended to introduce a quotation from some well known and weighty authorities; and once, it should seem,—namely, at iii. 15,—without the formula, where see note: The saying thus adduced infra iv. 9, is similar to πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, ὅτι Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς ἦλθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἁμαρτωλοὺς σῶσαι· ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ· <sup>16</sup> ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἤλεθην, ἵνα ἐν ἐμοὶ πρῶτῳ ἐνδείξηται Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τὴν ἡμῶν μακροθυμίαν, πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν ἐπ' αὐτῷ εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον. <sup>17</sup> Τῷ δὲ Βασιλεῖ τῶν αἰώνων, ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, τιμὴ καὶ δόξα εἰς τοὺς

m Rom. 16.
27.
ch. 6. 16.
Jude 25.

the present. I would add, that, though the above peculiar expression does not occur elsewhere in the Singular, yet it does occur in the Plural, twice in the New Test.,—namely, in Rev. xxi. 6, and xxii. 6, οἱ λέγοντες πιστοὶ καὶ ἀληθινοὶ ἴσασιν.—Ἰσῶσαι means, not only 'to put into the way of salvation,' but also to furnish with such aids of Divine grace in working it out, as are consistent with the free-will of men as moral agents.—ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ. At this strong expression the Commentators stumble. To remove the difficulty, Benson explains it, 'the first who, from a blasphemous persecutor, has become a Christian,' which sense, however, would require the Article; while some, as Abp. Newc. and Valpy, render 'a chief,' i. e. one of the chief. But whether πρῶτος ever has that sense may be doubted; certainly not in Eph. vi. 2, where see note. Hence it is best to retain the common interpretation, regarding the words (with Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and Grot.) as merely expressive of deep humility and self-abasement; like those at 1 Cor. xv. 9, ἰγὼ εἰμι ἑλächιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων. However, the remark of Wiesing. is worthy of attention,—namely, that it is the conduct of the Apostle in itself, viewed by him apart from its mitigating circumstances, which induces him to use the expression.

16. ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἤλεθην, &c.] meaning, it would seem, 'Howbeit for this reason was I,' &c. In other words, 'I was the first and chief of sinners, and therefore in me first [of all who had so sinned], or, in me principally, above all (even as I had sinned above all, v. 15), did Christ show mercy.'—τὴν πάσαν μακροθ., 'the utmost long-suffering.' Lachm. and Tisch. edit ἄπασαν, from three uncials and four ancient cursives (to which I add Lamb. 1185),—an authority insufficient. Besides, it may be urged, that while Paul only uses the word ἄπας once elsewhere (namely, Eph. vi. 13), and that in the neut. plural, he uses πᾶς hundreds of times; and, in the passages where he uses it, ἄπας never appears as a var. lect. Besides, πάσαν is confirmed by such passages as John xvi. 13, τὴν πάσαν ἀλήθειαν. What Griesb. and Scholz thought of the reading is plain from their omitting to even report it. I doubt not that ἄπ. came from Critics, who wished to screw up the representation to the very utmost.—πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν τ. μελλ. πιστ., 'for a type and pattern, by way of exemplar' (ὑποτύπωσις prop. denoting either such an exact representation of the form of any thing as is obtained by a stamp, or impression, as of a seal, or die [Heysch. σημείωσις], meaning, 'that my case may form a sort of precedent, to be viewed by all who are hereafter to believe in Jesus Christ unto life eternal.'—'and thus contribute to the comfort of all penitent sinners.')

17. Here the Apostle's gratitude for the mercy of God breaks out into an expression of devout praise and adoration. The term ὁ βασιλεὺς is often applied to God, as being the King of kings and Lord of lords. See note on Matt. xvi. 16. He is, moreover, termed ἀφθάρτῳ, as distinguished from earthly monarchs; ἀοράτῳ, as being φῶς οὐκ ὄντων ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν οὐδεὶς ἑώρακεν, οὐδὲ ἰδεῖν δύναται, infra vi. 16.—ἀοράτῳ. Comp. Heb. xi. 27, τὸν ἀόρατον, meaning Him who is invisible. By this, we must suppose, is meant to be understood invisible except by his works, as Creator, Preserver, &c. See Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 13. On μόνῳ σοφῷ see Rom. xvi. 27. The word σοφῷ, not found in four uncials, and two cursives, some Versions, and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. Internal evidence, indeed, would seem against it, inasmuch as it may have been introduced from Rom. xvi. 27. Yet I cannot but suspect that it was removed by those half-learned Critics, who stumbled at the expression, perhaps from their taking the passage, as does Lampe on John xvii. 3 (but wrongly, as will appear from the note on that passage), as if pointed ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ, σοφῷ Θεῷ. If, indeed, that were the true punctuation, the word would seem almost useless; but that argument will only be valid against the punctuation, not the genuineness of σοφῷ. Lampe, indeed, asks why the expression 'only wise' should be applied to the Deity any more than 'only invisible.' But it would not be difficult to offer a reason for that, were it necessary: but it is not; for μόνος is merely used by an idiom very suitable to Oriental diction, though not confined to it, whereby it merely raises the positive of any quality to the superlative. So Ps. xli. 4, Sept., σοὶ μόνῳ ἡμαρτον, i. e. 'especially,' κατ' ἐξοχὴν, and so in the purest Greek writers; e. g. Antiph. Æol. frag. i. 4, p. 493 (Mein.), where love is designated as ὁ μόνος θνητοῖς ἀγαπᾶν τὸν πόλμαν, where μόν. cannot mean to the exclusion of other incentives to daring, but only as being pre-eminently such. 'Certainly μόνος (as observes Bp. Burgess, cited on John xvii. 3), does not possess so exclusive a sense as the Unitarians suppose.' But what Unitarians think now, the Arians might think in the early age,—and therefore I cannot but suspect that doctrinal reasons may have concurred in inducing some early Critics to throw out the word: emboldened, perhaps, by what it said at vi. 15, 16, ὁ μακάριος καὶ ὁ μόνος δυνάστης, ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευόντων, καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῶν κυριονόντων, ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, φῶς οὐκ ὄντων ἀπρόσιτον. It may, indeed, be urged that the Trinitarians might introduce it from Rom. xvi. 27; but (putting good faith out of the question, and the fact that, of the orthodox adding any thing to the text, very few proofs can be adduced), it was far more the interest of the Arians to remove, than of the Trinitarians to add, any thing.

αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμην. <sup>18</sup> Ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν <sup>n ch. 6. 13.</sup> παρατίθεμαι σοι, τέκνον Τιμόθεε, κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ <sup>2 Tim. 2.</sup>
 σὲ προφητείας, ἵνα στρατεύῃ ἐν αὐταῖς τὴν καλὴν στρατείαν, <sup>3-5, & 4. 7.</sup> <sup>19</sup> ἔχων πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνειδήσιν ἥν τιwὲς ἀπωσάμενοι, <sup>o ch. 8. 9.</sup> περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐναυάγησαν <sup>20</sup> ὧν ἐστὶν Ὑμέναιος καὶ Ἀλέξ- <sup>Tit. 1. 9.</sup> ανδρος, οὓς παρέδωκα τῷ Σατανᾷ, ἵνα παιδευθῶσι μὴ βλασ- <sup>Heb. 3. 14.</sup> φημεῖν. <sup>1 Cor. 5. 5.</sup>
<sup>21</sup> <sup>1 Tim. 2. 17.</sup>
<sup>& 4. 14.</sup>

II. <sup>1</sup> Παρακαλῶ οὖν πρῶτον πάντων ποιεῖσθαι δεήσεις, προσ-

18. The Apostle, here resuming what he had said at ver. 3, turns again to Timothy. In this verse we have a remarkable transposition; the construction being, ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαι σοι, ἵνα, κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας, στρατεύῃ, &c. 'Ἐπὶ in this sense, concerning, is rather unfrequent; but see exx. in my Lex. Of the words τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας, the only well-founded interpretation appears to be that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, who refer them to the revelations made by the Holy Spirit to Apostles, or persons possessing the χάρισμα, or Spiritual gift, called the προφητεία (of the existence of which we have indubitable evidence in the New Test.); which were virtually directions as to the persons proper to be designated as officers and teachers in the Church. See Acts xiii. 1, 2. xx. 28. 1 Cor. xii. 4—8 sq. Thus we may suppose the revelations in the present case, to have been made when Timothy was called to the service of Christ, when the will of God for the mission of Paul and Barnabas was narrated by the Prophets at Antioch, who, it seems, then foretold that Timothy would be a person who should prove eminently useful in the Church, and consequently be very proper to be invested with government in it.—ἵνα στρατεύῃ. Render: 'that thou mayest war;' a military metaphor (like one in Joseph. de Macc. § 9, ἱερὰν καὶ εὐγενὴ στρατείαν στρατεύεσθαι ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐσεβείας) employed in allusion to the courage and vigilance requisite to his office. Several similar modes of expression have been adduced from ancient writers, representing life as a warfare, and man as a soldier. So Seneca, Ep. 96, 'vivere militare est,' and Max. Tyr. xix. 4, στρατηγὸν μὴ τὸν Θεοῦ, στρατείαν δὲ τὴν ζωὴν, ὁπλίτην δὲ τὸν ἄνθρωπον.

<sup>19</sup> Πίστιν καὶ ἀγ. συνείδ.] Mentioned supra v. 5, and forming the principal virtues of the Christian soldier. 'These (observes Dr. J. Barrow, Sermon. vol. ii. p. 10) are terms inseparable from each other; for the first is nothing but the stipulation of a good conscience, fully persuaded that Christianity is true, and firmly resolved to comply with it; and as to the other, a man void of conscience will not embark in Christianity, or, having laid conscience aside, he will soon make shipwreck of Faith by apostasy from it.' Πίστις has here respect to orthodoxy of doctrine (what is called, infra iv. 6, τοῖς λόγοις τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς καλῆς διδασκαλίας), and συνείδησις, to conscientiousness in teaching it.—ἀπωσάμενοι, 'having cast off,' 'cast it from them.' At περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐναυάγησαν there is a nautical metaphor, derived from merchant-sailors, who lose their property by the vessel, in which they have embarked it, being run on a rock, περὶ ἔρμα, as it is said in Thucyd. vii. 25 (where see my note). This figurative use of the word is rare, but it is found both in the Fathers and in the Class. writers, as in two or three passages cited by the Commentators; to which I am enabled to add a still more apposite one from Pindar, frag. incert. xxiii., Ἀρχὰ μεγάλας ἀρετᾶς, ὄνασσι' Ἀλήθεια, Μὴ πταίσης ἰμὴν ἢ σύνθεσιν (for συνθήκη, 'plighted faith') τραχεῖ ποτὶ ψεύδει, i. e. 'do not dash the bark of my faith on the rock of falsehood and deceit.'

<sup>20</sup> οὓς παρέδωκα τ. Σ.] See note on 1 Cor. v. 5. At ἵνα παιδευθῶσι μὴ βλασφ. there is a kind of proverbial expression (not unknown in our own language), which may best be illustrated by a similar one in Soph. Antig. 1089, ἵνα γὰρ τρέψω τὴν γλῶσσαν σου χυλωτέραν. The term βλασφ. seems to have respect, not to blasphemy properly so called, 'speaking evil of that which is Divine,' but as Dr. Feile explains, in its present application it must mean, 'speaking in disparaging terms of the Gospel as preached by me.' By ἵνα παιδευθῶσι it is meant that 'they may, by the discipline of correction, be in some measure restrained from evil,' if not induced to repent of it.

II. The Apostle, now proceeding from generals to particulars, gives directions to Timothy for the regulation of the Church; and first as to its external form, commencing with the most important of external observances,—public worship.—πρῶτον πάντων, first of all, at the commencement of public worship. By these several terms, denoting prayer, in all its aspects, and in every form, δεήσεις, προσευχᾶς, &c. we may understand, 1. deprecations of evil; 2. supplications for good; 3. intercession for others; 4. grateful acknowledgments to the Divine goodness for preservation, or prosperity; a view supported by the authority of St. Augustin (as quoted by Dr. Parr, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 644), who interprets "δεήσεις," deprecations that evil may be averted from rulers; προσευχᾶς, 'petitions that good may be obtained for them; ἐντεύξεις, 'intercessions that needful graces may be conferred upon them; εὐχαριστίας, 'thanksgivings,' when they have fulfilled the high functions of their station, by effecting the deliverance of their people from impending danger, or by redressing some grievous and inveterate wrongs, or by diffusing general happiness in the regular and orderly administration of government." It is strange that all the modern Translators and Expositors should have taken ποιῶσθαι in a Passive sense; which is against the usage of the New Test. writers (espec. St. Paul), as well as of Jos. and, indeed, the Class. writers. The Present tense of this a Jer. 20. 7.

Rom. 13. 1.
b ch. 1. 1.
c Ezek. 18.
32.
Jer. 20. 7.
Tit. 2. 11.
3 Pet. 2. 2.
John 3. 16, 17.
d John 17. 3.
Rom. 2. 20.
e 10. 12.
Gal. 2. 19.
Heb. 9. 15.

ευχὰς, ἐντεύξεις, εὐχαριστίας, ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, <sup>2</sup> ὑπὲρ βασιλέων καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντων, ἵνα ἡρεμῶν καὶ ἡσύχων βίον διάγωμεν ἐν πάσῃ εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ σεμνότητι. <sup>3</sup> τούτο γὰρ καλὸν καὶ ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, <sup>4</sup> ὃς πάντας ἀνθρώπους θέλει σωθῆναι καὶ εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας ἐλθεῖν. <sup>5</sup> Εἰς γὰρ Θεὸς, εἰς καὶ μεσίτης Θεοῦ καὶ

verb is almost always, and in the New Test., I believe, invariably, used as a Middle Deponent. Accordingly, the meaning is, 'I direct, then, first of all the making of prayers.' This accords with the rendering of the Pesch. Syr. and Æthiop. Translators, and the exposition of Theodor., and derives confirmation from Plut. Num. c. 14, ἰδιότῃς ἡμᾶς τοῦ νομοθέτου μὴ κοῖσθαι τὰς πρὸς τὸ θεῖον ἐντεύξεις ἐν ἀρχαίᾳ. Great ignorance is here shown by Schleiermacher, in denying that the Particle οὖν here has any logical connexion; not being aware that it exists with the words ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαι σοι, sup. i. 18, where there is a general injunction, —here followed up by a particular one. Thus the οὖν, which may be rendered 'accordingly,' is, as often, resumptive; the words ἡ τινὶς—βλασφημεῖν being parenthetical; hence a new Chap. ought not to have commenced at παρακαλῶ.

2. τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ δ.] answering to the οἱ ἐν ταῖς of the early and pure Class. writers, 'those who hold any office in the state,' the ἐξουσίαι of Tit. iii. 1. The phrase before us is confined to the later Greek writers, as Polyb. and others; though used by Longin. de Subl. xxx., πρὸς τυράννους, βασιλείας, ἡγεμόνας ἐν ὑπεροχαῖς, scil. οἰσι, and other passages of the later Greek writers.—ἡρεμῶν καὶ ἡσύχ., i. e. 'peaceful and peaceable,' suffering no disturbance, and offering none, comp. 1 Pet. iii. 4; such a quietness as can no otherwise be attained than by good government, and without which godliness could ill be cultivated.—σεμνότητι is not well rendered gravity; for the term has respect, not to manners, but life, denoting that decorous, not to say severe, regularity of conduct, required in a well-ordered society, as opposed to the licentious practices espec. prevalent in times of war and civil commotion. Thus the term is best rendered by Erasim. honestate. And so Ælian, Var. Hist. ii. 13, uses σεμνότης βίον, and Jos. c. Ap. σεμν. ἀεικνῆς, and Jos. Bell. ii. 8. 2.—Εὐσεβείᾳ is not well rendered 'piety'; it rather means 'religiousness,' by the exercise of a godly spirit; denoting, according to its difference from the synonym ἀλγάβεια, 'the spontaneous feeling of the heart.' The word is used thirteen times by Paul in the Pastoral Epistles; but by no other writer of the New Test. except Peter, who employs it four times in his first Epistle: it is also used by Clement of Rome. The general sense intended by the Apostle is, that the prayers are to be offered up chiefly, and in a religious view, with reference to the will of God, by whom the powers that be are ordained, but partly, and in a political one, in return for that quietness, which can no otherwise be attained than by good government. The latter of these reasons is referred to in the expression καλὸν (for δικαίον), the former, in the ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ in the next verse.

3. τούτο γὰρ καλόν, &c.] 'For this (namely, making intercession for all men, espec. rulers) is good,' &c. The expression καλόν seems to mean what is good as regards men (so Theophyl. explains it τὸ φῶσαι καλόν), 'pulchrum, honestum, quod deest.' The word ἀπόδεκτον signifies properly what is worthy of being accepted or approved; but here it denotes what is approved, answering to εὐάρεστος in Heb. xiii. 21.—Λέχμ, cancels the γάρ, on the authority of MS. A. and 2 cursives, and the Copt. and Æthiop. Versions; most injudiciously, since the omission of unimportant Particles in a very few MSS. is usually owing to negligence on the part of the scribes, who, I have observed, omit γάρ more frequently, perhaps, than any other Particle.

4. πάντας ἀνθρώπους] meaning, 'all persons, without exception;' q. d. 'God desires the salvation of all, and therefore for all we ought to pray.' The words καὶ—ἐλθεῖν suggest the means of salvation,—namely, by coming to a full knowledge and entire recognition of the truth [of the Gospel]. In ἐπίγνωσιν there is a sensus prænoscens often found in ἐπιγνώσκω. The conjoint and implicit sense 'recognition' has place in the verb at Matt. xiv. 35. Mark vi. 54. Luke xxiv. 16. Acts iii. 10. xii. 14. The word properly signifies full and complete knowledge. Comp. Ceb. Tab. 12, where we have εἰς τὴν ἀληθ. παιδείαν ἐλθεῖν.

5. As respects the connection here, the γάρ is best referred to the clause immediately preceding, thus: 'God will have all men to be saved (and come to the knowledge of the truth); for he is the God alike of all, and the man Christ Jesus is the Mediator between God and man, who gave himself a ransom for all.' 'It is plain (says Dr. Paley), from the form and turn of the expression, that Christ's mediatorial character and office was meant to be represented as a perpetual character and office, because it is represented in conjunction with the existence of God and men, so long as men exist.' But Christ our Saviour is also to be considered as partaking of both natures, the Divine and the human; in the latter effecting satisfaction, and also exercising continual intercession for us, by presenting the merit of his sacrifice offered once for all. Here, then, is meant to be designated such a Mediator for men with God as to be also an Atorner, and also a perpetual Intercessor; thus in all was Christ reconciling man with his offended Maker. Comp. the parallel sentiment in Rom. iii. 29, 30, and see notes. As to the Unitarian gloss on μεσ. (by which it is taken as merely meaning 'one who makes known the mind of two parties to each other, and concludes an agreement or covenant between them'), that is disproved by the words of the next verse, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἀντί-λυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, from which it plainly appears that the principal notion of μεσ., as applied to Christ, is that of atonement. On the whole subject of mediation and atonement, see ἀνθρώπων, ἄνθρωπος Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς, ὁ δὲ δούς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίους. 7 ἵς δ' ἐτέθη

 2 Thess. 1. 10. 1 Acts 9. 15. & 12. 2. & 22. 21. Rom. 1. 9. & 9. L. & 11. 13. & 15. 16. Eph. 2. 8. Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 8. 2 Tim. 1. 11.

Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg., book ix. ch. 2, who there shows at large that mediation, to be effectual, must be enforced by some unsatisfaction; and that, as the mode of this mediation might have been either by interceding for the remission of the forfeiture, or by satisfying for the debt, so we find by Scripture that both were employed, the intercession being by way of satisfaction for the debt. The price paid was the death of the Son of God. And as to the nature of that death, which had the efficacy of redemption, he shows that it must be (as it was) both voluntary and offered up as a sacrifice. And thus the expiatory sacrifice of Christ on the cross operated for our redemption. As to the other Unitarian perversion of the sense, which represents Christ as here called a mere man, it has been abundantly refuted by Abp. Magee, Bps. Pearson, Bull, Beveridge, Warburton, and Dr. Mackn. Suffice it to say, that were he a mere man, how could he mediate between God and man? Comp. Heb. ii. 14. iv. 15. He would himself need a mediation. It is plain that this passage cannot contravene the doctrine that Christ was both God and man. Indeed, had he not been more than man, there would have been no occasion for ἄνθρωπος, which word is never found so applied to any other person, as Moses or John. And though in Numb. xii. 3 we have ὁ ἄνθρωπος Μωϋσῆς παρὰ (ἦν), yet there the Article is found, which it is not here in any MS.; nor, indeed, is it wanted, ἄνθρωπος Ἰησοῦς Χρ. standing as a title, like Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός. And here it may be remarked, that our Common Version throws a needless stumbling-block in the way of the ignorant, by rendering the οὗτος, αὐτός, and οὗτος in Heb. iii. 3. vii. 4, 24. viii. 3, and x. 12,—by 'this man.' It ought surely to be 'this person.' But to proceed,—in the present passage the Article is unnecessary, since, as Bp. Middl. has shown, 'Jesus Christ could not be called the man κατ' ἔξοχον, since he did not possess the human nature in a pre-eminent degree.' The learned Prelate rightly regards ἄνθρ. as used for a title, in the same way as Κύριος Ἰ. Χρ. Thus we may safely assert, that Christ is here named 'Man' by the title derived from his inferior or human nature, and that is attributed to one of his natures, which properly belongs to the compound nature of Christ; for he is mediator, not inasmuch as he is man, but inasmuch as he is θεοῦ-ἄνθρωπος. This does not exclude the Son's participation of the Godhead, but distinguishes his mediatorial office, to which on many accounts the Divine nature was also necessary. Comp. Heb. ii. 16—18, which is an excellent comment on the present passage.

6. ὁ δὲ δούς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλ. ὁ. π.] See Matt. xx. 28, and note, and Bps. Sanderson and Beveridge in D'Oyly and Mant. The ἀντίλ. of this passage is a stronger term than the λύτρ. of Matthew, and is well explained by Hesych. ἀντίδοτον, implying the substitution, in suffering punishment, of one person for another. See 1 Cor. xv. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. Tit. ii. 14. 1 Pet. i. 18. The next words, τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίους, from their abruptness, involve considerable difficulty, and hence great diversity of opinion exists on their sense. As to the various readings, they seem only to attest the perplexity of the ancient Critics, and are of no value, except to show what some ancients supposed to be the sense. To advert to the interpretation of the moderns, Abp. Newc. renders, 'a doctrine to be testified of in its proper time.' This, however, is paying no attention to the Article, which, indeed, chiefly occasions the difficulty of the sentence; and though Dr. Benson's version expresses the force of the Article, it cannot, I think, be admitted, since μαρτύριον, in the sense of a personal witness, is unprecedented. I should prefer, with Bp. Middl., to put the clause into a parenthesis, and render, 'the proof of it in due time.' Yet this runs counter to the laws of parenthesis, and the sense arising is scarcely suitable; not to say that the signification proof is unauthorized. In fact, the learned Prelate so distrusted his own interpretation, as to be ready to suspect that the clause is not genuine. I would propose to render, 'which (i. e. the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all) is the testimony (or doctrine) [to be borne witness to, i. e. to be set forth and taught] in its due season,—namely, that fitted for its purpose. Thus καιροῖς ἰδίους will have the same sense as at vi. 15, and Tit. i. 3, and is nearly equivalent to τὸ πλῆρωμα τοῦ χρόνου at Gal. iv. 4, the time appointed in the counsels of God, the time of the Gospel. The Apostle, then, means to hint to Timothy (and, through him, to all ministers), that the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all is to be the great subject of their preaching; and, accordingly, the present sentiment is quite parallel to that at 1 Cor. ii. 2, where Paul professes that he 'determined to know nothing (i. e. to keep solely to the one truth) of Jesus Christ and him crucified.' The above interpretation is, I believe, not liable to any well founded objection. The suspicion, above referred to, of Bp. Middl., that the words are not genuine, is quite groundless. They cannot be dispensed with, since δ in the next clause can be referred to nothing but μαρτύριον. The various reading merely serves to attest the vain endeavours of the ancient Critics to explain the words as they now stand, and have stood from the second century downwards. The Reviser of the text of the Alex. MS. removed τὸ μαρτύριον, which seems to do away with the difficulty; but that is only by converting difficulty into something bordering on absurdity, and equally destroys the reference as the former mode. More attention is due to the mode pursued by other Critics, who (as we find from the reading of three uncial MSS., with the Sixtine, Vulg., and Ambros.) wrote thus: οὗ μαρτύριον. ἰδίους καιροῖς ἰδοῦν. But that is no other than re-writing the clause, and making it plainer by amplification. Nay, from the Pesch. Syr. Version (if, indeed, the reading be genuine) it would seem, that even in the second century the Greek text (at least in the copy, or copies, used by the Syriac Translator) had been interpolated by a similar amplification; though what was inserted we are left to conjecture. I suspect it to g Pa. 124. 2.

 Isa. 1. 15.
 Mal. 1. 11.
 John 4. 21.
 h Tit. 2.
 2—5.
 i Pet. 2. 2.

ἐγὼ κήρυξ καὶ ἀπόστολος, (ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ, οὐ ψεύδομαι!) διδάσκαλος ἐθνῶν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀληθείᾳ. <sup>8</sup> Ἐβούλομαι οὖν προσεύχεσθαι τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ ἐπαίροντας ὁσίους χεῖρας χωρὶς ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ. <sup>9</sup> Ἦσαύτως καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας ἐν καταστολῇ κοσμίῳ μετὰ αἰδούς καὶ σωφροσύνης κοσμεῖν ἑαυτάς, μὴ ἐν πλέγμασιν, ἢ χρυσῷ, ἢ μαργαρίταις, ἢ ἱματισμῷ πολυτελεῖ. <sup>10</sup> Ἄλλ', ὃ πρέπει γυναῖξιν ἐπαγγελλομέ-have been δ ἰβιβαιῶν, the very reading which must have been in the copies from which the Italic Version was formed,—namely, 'quod confirmatum est.' The interpolator had prob. in mind 1 Cor. i. 6, καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἰβιβαιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν. The explanation which I have above given of the text as it now stands (and as, I am persuaded, it left the hands of the writer) will, I think, be found, considering the difficulty of the case, quite admissible. The harshness will be diminished by considering that it is not very unusual, in writers like Thucyd. and St. Paul, for a word to be left to be supplied mentally, and, as philologists say, fetched out of some word (generally a verb) which is expressed. Thus here μαρτυρησόμενον is left to be supplied from μαρτύριον, which is the less harsh, considering that the phrase μαρτυρεῖν μαρτυρίαν is found several times in the New Test.

7. ἀλήθειαν—οὐ ψεύδομαι.] A solemn form of asseveration, occurring also at Rom. ix. 1. See also John i. 19, 20, and note; comp. 2 Cor. xi. 10. The phrase ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀληθ. is not an Hendiad. for ἐν πίστει ἀληθείας, but there is a pregnancy of expression for 'in the faith of Christ, and the truth of his Gospel.'

8. The οὖν is resumptive, and refers to the direction at ver. 1.—τοὺς ἄνδρας should be rendered 'the men,' as having opposed to it just after τὰς γυναῖκας; perhaps, too, intimating that the men, not the women, were to lead the prayers.—ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ seems to mean, 'in every,' i. e. 'any place whatsoever [appropriated to public prayer],' and the words must be closely joined with those immediately following, ἐπαίροντας ὁσίους χεῖρας, said with reference to the attitude commonly adopted by the ancients in fervent prayer; see Ps. cxxxiv. 2, and cxli. 2. The use in this expression of an epithet before χεῖρας is very rare. One example is adduced by Wetstein from a passage of Galen; and I have noted another in Philo, p. 648, where we have καθαράς (answering to ὁσίους here), which term signifies unpolluted by vices. Here, however, the epithet is meant to be emphatic, in allusion to the carefully washed, though morally unclean, hands of the Jews and Judaizers, inculcating an earnest exhortation to cultivate the ὁσιότης, which becometh their Christian profession, and espec. suitable to prayer. The phrase χωρὶς ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ is best understood of the absence of altercation, and debate about matters of doubtful disputation, which would be likely to introduce some passionate feeling; for such seems the true force of ὀργή.

9. ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας, &c.] Here almost all modern Expositors take the sense to be, 'And in like manner I wish the women to adorn themselves,' &c. But thus there is no correspondence, such as is intimated by the particle ὡσαύτως. Now, as it is likely that the Apostle would address something to the women, as well as the men, on the subject of prayer, I agree with the ancient and a few eminent modern Expositors, that we must repeat not only βούλομαι, from the preceding, but also προσεύχεσθαι. Some, indeed, repeat the whole sentence; but that is harsh and unnecessary; for ὡσαύτως may be taken to mean ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ—διαλογισμοῦ. There seems to be here, as often, a blending of two sentences into one; and thus καὶ is to be repeated with κοσμεῖν. So at ὡσαύτως in Luke xiii. 3, and 1 Cor. xi. 25, ἵλαβιν must be repeated from the preceding; and in 1 Tim. iii. 8, 11. Tit. ii. 3, δεῖ εἶναι is to be repeated from the preceding. In the present passage, however, the Apostle blends the two sentences, as meaning to say, 'I wish them to attend such prayers in modest apparel;' thus adverting to two points in which the two sexes, respectively, would be too apt to err; the former from a spirit of contention, the latter from womanish vanity, and fondness for exterior adornment. In μετὰ αἰδούς καὶ σωφρ. the Apostle further develops his meaning; q. d. 'And let this adornment be rather with modesty than with art;' rather 'by sober-minded self-restraint, than alluring attractiveness.' Mr. Conyb. remarks 'it as a peculiarity of the Pastoral Epistles to dwell very frequently on the virtue of σωφροσύνη, or self-restraint.' Comp. Antiph. Incert. Fab. lvi. p. 568, Mein., μὴ χρώμασιν (for κόσμοις, as Plato, 239, χρώμασι καὶ κόσμοις) τὸ σῶμα λαμπρύνειν θίλει, 'Ἐργοῖς δὲ καθαροῖς καὶ τρόποις ('moribus') τὴν καρδίαν. And so Phintys (a Pythagorean philosopher), in her conjugal precepts forbids the wearing of gold (in gold ornaments), or jewels, or gay attire, but enjoins the wife κοσμεῖν δὲ μᾶλλον αὐτὴν αλοχύν. Lachm. and Tisch. alter ἡ before χρυσῷ into καὶ, on strong authority, confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version. If it be genuine, we may suppose the words πλείμασιν and χρυσῷ to be taken as an Hendiadyn, to denote the κρόβυλος, or κόρυμβος, of Thucyd. i. 6; namely, the top-knot, formed of braids of hair drawn up into a knot, and clasped around by the insertion of gold combs. But that would be confining the use of gold to the combs, whereas we know it extended to bracelets, armlets, anklets, ear-rings, &c. Hence it is better to retain the ἡ, and take χρυσῷ in its widest acceptation, so as to understand the golden head-bands, bracelets, armlets, anklets, and ear-rings; and by μαργαρίταις, ornaments for various parts of the body, made of precious stones. So aureum in Latin is used for ornaments of gold; as Virgil, Æn. iv. 138, 'Crines nodantur in aureum.' Rev. xvii. 4, καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἦν κεχρυσωμένη χρυσῷ καὶ λίθῳ τιμῷ, καὶ μαργαρίταις.

ναις θεοσέβειαν, δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν. <sup>11</sup> Ἡ γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ μαθη- <sup>1 Gen. 3. 16.</sup>
νέτω ἐν πασῇ ὑποταγῇ· <sup>12</sup> γυναικὶ δὲ διδάσκειν οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω, <sup>1 Cor. 14. 34.</sup>
οὐδὲ αὐθεντεῖν ἀνδρὸς, ἀλλ' εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ. <sup>13</sup> Ἐὰν γὰρ <sup>1 Gen. 1. 27.</sup>
πρῶτος ἐπλασθῇ, εἰτα Εὐα. <sup>14</sup> καὶ Ἀδὰμ οὐκ ἡπατήθη ἡ δὲ <sup>2. 15, 22.</sup> γυνὴ ἀπατηθεῖσα ἐν παραβάσει γέγονε. <sup>15</sup> Σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ <sup>1 Cor. 11. 2.</sup>
τῆς τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν μείνωσιν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ καὶ ἀγιασμῷ, <sup>1 Gen. 3. 6.</sup>
<sup>12.</sup>
<sup>2 Cor. 11. 2.</sup>
<sup>11 Tit. 2. 12.</sup>
<sup>1 Pet. 4. 7.</sup>
μετὰ σωφροσύνης.

10. ἐπαγγ.] This use of the word, by which it denotes 'the following a course' of life, or adopting a set of opinions, is found also in the best Class. writers; as Xen. Mem. i. 2. 7. iii. 1, 1, also in Jos. Ant. Præm. § 2, Θεοῦ θεραπεύειν ἐπαγγ. Wisd. ii. 13. The sense here is, 'making a profession of.'—θεοσ. denotes the worship of God, and, as is implied, in its purest form. Thus it had been used of Judaism, but was now transferred to Christianity. At δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν supply κοσμεῖν ἑαυτάς. Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4.

11. γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ μαθη.] 'Ἡσυχία, in this sense, to denote 'modest silence,' is rare in the Class. writers, but found in the Sept. and Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 5, καὶ καθίσαντων μετ' ἡσυχίας. The best Expositors are agreed that this injunction relates, like the foregoing, to public worship; and that what is added in the next verse is intended to further develop the meaning here. Women are enjoined, at divine worship, to keep that silence which is suitable to their condition. They are not only not to pray in public, but not to instruct; they are to learn, and not to teach, nor in any way assume authority over the other sex, but to be quiet, and ὑποτάσσεσθαι, for the injunction here is exactly the same as that at 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

12. οὐδὲ αὐθεντεῖν ἀνδρὸς.] 'Nor to claim authority over,' = ἐξουσιάζειν. How the term comes to have this sense, see my lex.—The next words, ἀλλ' εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ are exegetical of the foregoing, and denote that quiet silence and peaceable acquiescence (the ἡσυχίον πνεῦμα inculcated, 1 Pet. iii. 4), which is the very opposite to a spirit that affects rule.

13, 14. Here are adduced two principal reasons for the foregoing injunction, serving to show why the female sex is in subjection to the male. As to the first, it is generally supposed to be founded on the Jewish notion, by which (as we find from the Rabbins) priority of creation was always thought to carry with it precedence; see Wetstein and Loesner. There is, however, no necessity to resort to that principle. We may regard the words as intimating the argument more plainly expressed in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9, οὗ γὰρ ἔστιν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικὸς, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ ἐξ ἀνδρὸς· καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτίσθη ἀνὴρ διὰ τὴν γυναῖκα, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἀνδρα, which passage is the best comment on the present; showing that her being created as an helpmeet to man implies an inferiority to, and dependence on, man. Answering to ἐπλάσθη here is ἐκτίσθη there; a term used with reference to Gen. ii. 7, ἐπλασαν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἀνδρ. χεὶρ ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς.

14. καὶ Ἀδὰμ οὐκ ἡπάτη.] Here the ancient and most modern Expositors repeat, from the preceding, πρῶτος. This, however, is not a little harsh. The Apostle merely means to say, that the fault of being deceived rested on the woman; q. d. 'It was not Adam that was deceived [by the serpent], but the woman; who, being so deceived, was especially in fault.' Hence it follows, that she, from that original imbecility and persuasibility, was very properly subjected to the man, and thus must not usurp authority over him. To advert to a matter of reading. For ἀπατηθεῖσα, four uncial, and ten cursive MSS. (to which I add Lamb. 1184, Cov. 2, omitted by Mill, and Mus. 5116) have ἐξαπ., which has been received by Lachm. and Tisch., but on insufficient authority. Besides, internal evidence is rather in favour of ἀπατ., which was more likely to be altered into ἐξαπ. (namely, from 2 Cor. xi. 8) than the reverse. In the passage of Gen. iii. 13 alluded to, all the MSS. of the Sept. have ἡπάτησι, not ἐξηπ.

15. σωθήσεται διὰ—σωφροσύνης.] The difficulty so justly complained of in this passage centres in the expression τεκνογονίας; and this not a few Expositors have attempted to remove by assigning to the term some peculiar sense, as education, or offspring; the διὰ being taken for σύν. But thus the latter part of the sentence will not correspond to the former: and, both those significations are destitute of any authority. Again, to take the expression, with others, as meant of the bearing the promised Redeemer, would suppose such an enigmatical mode of speaking on a plain subject, as it is very improbable the Apostle should adopt. As to the attempt made to remove the difficulty by assigning to σωθῆσ. a sense by which it may denote temporal deliverance and preservation, it lies open to the fatal objection, that the deliverance has not been observed to be confined to Christian and pious women; and that the context requires σωθ. to be taken of eternal salvation. I have heretofore thought that the sense may be this, 'Nevertheless, the sex, which was the means of bringing such ruin on the human race, will not be excluded from salvation, or admitted to it on worse terms; but it will be extended to them, through child-bearing and the various onerous duties which follow it,—they will, I say, be saved, equally with the other sex, as a sex, and all the individuals of it, if they embrace and continue in the Christian faith, and practise those duties of loving obedience, holiness, and modesty which it enjoins.' On careful reconsideration of this difficult question, I see reason to think that this interpretation is liable to too much objection to be tenable; and I now prefer regarding the phrase διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας as an insertion thrown in by way of qualifying the gracious assurance just given of salvation on equal terms; in like manner as at Mark x. 30, the gracious promise of ample remuneration, in this world and in the next, to those who forsake all for a Acts 18.

Phil. 1. 1.
b Tit. 1. 6.
ch. 5. 9.

III. 1 * Πιστός ὁ λόγος· εἰ τις ἐπίσκοπὴς ὀρέγεται, καλοῦ
ἔργου ἐπιθυμεῖ. <sup>2</sup> Δεῖ οὖν τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἀνεπίληπτον εἶναι, μᾶς γυναῖκός ἄνδρα, * νηφάλιον, σώφρονα, κόσμιον, φιλόξενον,

Christ's sake, is qualified by the insertion μετὰ διωγμῶν, where see note. This view is, I find, that which was adopted by Wolf and Bengel, who remark, 'denotatur hic conditio sive status in quo mulier salutem sic assecuta;' though they notice not, what seems an important feature, that we have here a qualifying circumstance; just as (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson) all promises, both temporal and spiritual, are to be understood cum exceptione crucis. So also, at 1 Cor. vi. 28, to a similar kind assurance is subjoined, θλίβει δὲ τῇ σαρκὶ ἔξουσι. Wiesing, indeed, thinks the words were thrown in, only to point out the woman's proper sphere of duty, and to suggest that this position has been assigned to her in consequence of the fall; q. d. 'that in this sphere to which God has appointed her, and not in the sphere of active duty for the advancement of the Gospel, she will be saved on the same conditions as the other sex.' This view is adopted by Mr. Conyb., only that he takes σῴσις of temporal preservation. 'The Apostle's meaning,' he says, 'is, that women are to be kept in the path of safety, not, by taking upon themselves the office of the man (by taking a public part in the assemblies of the Church, &c.), but by the performance of the peculiar functions which God has assigned to their sex.' But that figurative sense of σῴσις, is unprecedented, and is here forbidden by the context, being in opposition to ἐν παραβάσει γίνεσθαι. — Πιστός καὶ ἀγάπη καὶ ἀγιασμός, &c. These three particulars embrace the grand outlines of a Christian's duty; for to the first the second is indispensable; and the third not less so to the two others; for 'without holiness no man shall see the Lord.' By σωφροσύνης is meant that discreet sober-mindedness just before enjoined. Thus it will correspond to the similar term σωφρονισμού at 2 Tim. i. 7, and ἐγκράτεια at 2 Pet. i. 6. And here we cannot but remark the refined address with which the Apostle thus brings round again what he had before enforced.

III. The Apostle now proceeds to the cognate subject, and adverts to another department of Church regulation,—namely, the qualifications of those who are to preside in the above assemblies for prayer, as Presbyters; or are to discharge other and ecclesiastical functions connected therewith, as Deacons.

1. πιστός ὁ λόγος] Many Commentators, ancient and modern, thinking that the subsequent affirmation would scarcely require so solemn an introduction, refer these words to the preceding assurance in σῴσεται, &c. But though the formula is used of what goes before, at iv. 9, yet it has just been used of what follows; and certainly the character of the formula (which is not solemnity, but seriousness), is here far more suitable thereto; q. d. 'It has been said, and is a true saying, and worthy of entire confidence, that,' &c. This view is confirmed by the authority of Calv. and Hyper. I know not why Neander should object to the sudden transition as un-Pauline; for in what Scriptural writer are there transitions more abrupt than in Paul? Besides, it is no further abrupt than might be expected from the discussion of a new subject. As to the remark of De Wette, that 'it introduces not, as elsewhere, a maxim of faith, but of experience,' it is enough to reply, with Wiesing, that, if the saying be a maxim of experience, it is founded on a basis of doctrine. As to the force of πιστοσύνης, it is that of spiritual oversight generally, not confined to the office of ἐπίσκοπος, or πρεσβύτερος, but prob. extending to the case of διάκονος.—Καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθ. By thus calling it 'an honourable work,' or 'office,' the Apostle doubtless meant to suggest that its weighty duties are especially to be considered, rather than the honour, that accrues from it. Comp. Phil. i. 6 by 1 Thes. v. 18. Indeed, ἔργον is a term always used of a laborious and important office. So it is said, Isocrat. in Dem. τοὺς δόξαι ὀραγομένους—δοσι μὲν οὖν πρὸς τοὺς ἑαυτῶν φίλους τοὺς προτριπτικοὺς λόγους συγγράφουσι, καλὸν ἔργον ἐπιχειροῦσι.

2. ἀνεπίληπτος] This is properly an agonistical term, signifying, 'one who gives his adversary no hold upon him;' but it is often (as here) applied metaph. to one who gives others no cause to justly accuse him. So Thucyd. v. 17, ταῖς ἐχθροῖς ἀνερ. σίμας. 'Such (says a celebrated writer) is the perfect parity of our religion, such the innocence and virtus it exacts, that he must be a very good man indeed who lives up to it. And when we consider the still greater requirements in a teacher of religion,—who is to be an example to others,—and reflect on the injury done to religion through the side of false professors, how much reason will there appear that such an one should be, as the Apostle says, blameless!'—μᾶς γυναῖκός ἄνδρα. That the Apostle forbids polygamy cannot be doubted; but the only question is, whether he means to forbid more than one wife at a time, or more than one wife in all; q. d. 'the candidate shall not have married a second wife.' Authority seems most in favour of the former interpretation; but, as in a kindred passage of ver. 9, where it is required of a widow, in order to be put on the list for support by the Church, to have been ἰνός ἀνδρός γυνή, where the expression can only mean, to have had one husband; and since it seems (as Chrys. observes) to have been the chief intent of the Apostle καλέσειν τὴν ἀμετρίαν, it may be supposed that he forbids second marriage in a Presbyter, lest, in an age when divorce was so very prevalent, Ministers might be induced to seek divorce, and thus subject themselves to scandal, as if actuated by improper motives. On further consideration, however, for this ninth edition, of this puzzling question, it occurs to me that this view, by which the passage is supposed to forbid second marriages, is liable to as grave objections (which are stated by Wiesing.) as those which attach to its being supposed to forbid polygamy. Here, if any where, the maxim 'in medio tutissimus ibis' would be expedient, could it be brought in, which it may, if we suppose the true interpretation to be that so ingeniously propounded by διδασκικόν <sup>3ο</sup> μὴ πάροικον, μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ· ἀλλ' <sup>οἱ 2 Tim. 2. 24.</sup> ἐπιεικῇ, ἄμαχον, ἀφιλάργυρον <sup>4ο</sup> τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου καλῶς προ- <sup>α Tim. 1. 8.</sup> ἰσταμένον, τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ, μετὰ πάσης σεμνότητος <sup>5ο</sup> (εἰ δέ τις τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου προστῆναι οὐκ οἶδε, πῶς ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ ἐπιμελήσεται;) <sup>6ο</sup> μὴ νεόφυτον, ἵνα μὴ τυφωθεῖς εἰς κρίμα ἐμπέσῃ <sup>1 Tim. 14. 12.</sup>

Mr. Conyb., in the following statement of the case, as it might be with respect to the persons in question, ἐπίσκοπον, or πρεσβύτερον: 'In the corrupt facility of divorce allowed both by the Greek and Roman law, it was very common for man and wife to separate and marry other parties, during the life of one another. Thus a man might have three or four living wives; or, rather, women who had all successively been his wives . . . . We believe it is this kind of successive polygamy which is here spoken of as disqualifying for the Presbyterate.' The above view is much confirmed by the authority of BEZA, from whom it originated.—νηφάλιον, 'vigilant or circumspect' (in which sense the word occurs in the later writers),—a quality, indeed, suggested by the very term ἐπίσκοπος, which imports vigilant superintendence.—σώφρων, 'sober-minded'; i. e. one who holds his passions and desires under. So Æschin. cont. Timarch. 25, 37, ἐκ παιδὸς εἰς γῆρας σώφρων. By κόσμιον is meant 'orderly, decorous, σεμνοσπρεπῆ, as Theophylact explains. Indeed, these three terms form a class of cognate virtues, and certainly habits implied therein, not behaviour and conduct only, but (as explained by Theodoret. καὶ σχήματι, καὶ βλέματι, καὶ βαδίσματι) carriage and deportment, as implied in κόσμη. Such is the use of the word in Philom., 'Ἀδελφ. fr. ii. 1—4, οὐκ ἂν λαλῇ τις μικρὸν, ἵνα τὸν κόσμον, οὐδ' ἂν πορεύηται τις εἰς τὴν γῆν βλέπων' ὁ δ' ἥλικον ('talent') μὴ ἢ φύσει φέροι λαλῶν, μηδὲν ποιῶν δ' ἀρχήμον, οὐτοὶ κόσμιοι. The terms σώφ. and κόσμη are, indeed, frequently conjoined in the Class. writers; whence it is plain that there is a reference to the manner and deportment, no less than the actions and conduct. Well might the Apostle require thus much from Christian ministers; for no less than this was expected of the heathen priests. So in Æschyl. Theb. 606, Amphiarus is described as being a model for priests, that: οὗτος δ' ὁ μάντις σώφρων, δίκαιος, ἀγαθός, εὐσεβὴς ἀνὴρ, μέγας προφήτης.—Φιλόξενον, 'hospitable'; see Rom. xii. 13, and comp. Heb. xiii. 2.—διδασκ., 'fit to teach,'—namely, as possessing the knowledge and faculty necessary. See Tit. i. 7.

3. μὴ πάροικον] Some Expositors, ancient and modern, take this to be equiv. to ὑβριστὴν or αὐθάδη, which is, indeed, much countenanced by three voices in this clause standing opposed to the three virtues in the next. But, considering that we have at ver. 8 the expression μὴ οἶνον προσέχοντες used of the Deacons, here at least the physical sense must be included; and, according to every principle of correct exegesis, it must stand first. In the word πάροικος the παρά may mean beyond, denoting excess, which is confirmed by Hab. ii. 5, 'he transgresseth by wine'; but it more prob. means sitting long at the wine table, confirmed by Prov. xxiii. 30, ἐγχευοί· τῷ οἶνῳ, meaning, given to much wine; as in Lysias, Lucian, and other Class.

writers.—πλήκτην. The term has been commonly rendered striker; but, considering that the expression is opposed to ἄμαχον in the next clause, it is better explained, with the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, quarrelsome. Of this metaphorical sense, rare in the Class. writers, to the examples from Plut. adduced by Lexicographers, I add Dicaearchus, p. 15, θρασυὶ δὲ καὶ ὑβρισταί, καὶ ὑπερήφανοι πλήκται &c. The next words, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ, not found in very many of the most ancient MSS. (to which I can add several Mus. copies), and nearly all the ancient Versions, besides many Greek Fathers, has been, with reason, cancelled by all the recent Editors. They came, doubtless, from the parallel passage of Titus.—ἀφιλάργυρον. From the vice of avarice it may surely be expected that a minister of the Gospel should abstain; for such can hardly subsist without the breach of more commandments than one. Indeed, it would be excessive candour to imagine that a man who so visibly sets his whole heart not only on the world, but on one of the most worthless things in it (for so is money with regard to its use), should be, at the same time, laying up his treasure in heaven. 'Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.'

4. καλῶς προϊστ.] 'well or creditably regulating.' So Diog. Laert. i. 70, τῆς αὐτοῦ οἰκίας καλῶς προϊσταμένῳ.—The words μετὰ πάσης σεμν. are to be construed with τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου καλῶς προϊστάμενον, denoting the gravity of demeanour to be adopted. The circumstance τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ adverts to the case wherein the καλῶς προϊστ. is most requisite.

5. εἰ δέ τις—ἐπιμελήσεται:] This seems founded on a sort of proverb, that 'he who cannot regulate his private affairs, is not fit to be entrusted with those of the public.' With the sentiment comp. Plut. t. vi. p. 545, εὐ ἡρμοσμένοι εἶναι τὸν οἶκον δέ τῳ μέλλοντι ἀρμόζεσθαι καὶ ἀγορᾷ, 'the State.' By πᾶς ἐκκλησίας, it is implied that the management of the Church forms an office any thing but easy. Comp. Artemidor. l. ii. 30, συστημάτων (I conjecture συστήματος, 'the corporate body of the priests of God') ἀρχῶν καὶ ἐπιτροπῶν πᾶσι σκυλμοῖσι καὶ ἐπὶ ἁλίας βιωτικὰς περιτήσῃ.

6. μὴ νεόφυτον] 'Not a new convert,' by a metaphor like that in 1 Cor. iii. 6, ὡς ἐφύτυσεν. There is also implied a notion of the rawness, and imperfect acquaintance with the doctrines of Christianity, likely to be found in such; which seems referred to in the τυφωθεῖς just after; since imperfect knowledge generates vain pride, and, in the case of a ruler, overbearing arrogance. The term, which recurs at vi. 4 and 2 Tim. iii. 4, occurs no where else in the New Test., and seems to have been resorted to by Paul in consequence of the peculiar circumstances under which the Pastoral Epistles were written, as in the case of many others which

11 Cor. 5. 12. τοῦ Διαβόλου. 7<sup>f</sup> Δεῖ δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ μαρτυρίαν καλὴν ἔχειν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν ἵνα μὴ εἰς ὀνειδισμόν ἐμπέσῃ καὶ παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου. 8<sup>g</sup> Διακόνους ὡσαύτως σεμνοὺς, μὴ διλόγους, μὴ οἶνω πολλῷ προσ-9<sup>h</sup> εχοντας, μὴ αἰσχροκερδεῖς, 9<sup>h</sup> ἔχοντας τὸ μυστήριον τῆς πίστεως ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει. 10 καὶ οὗτοι δὲ δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, εἴτα διακονείτωσαν, ἀνέγκλητοι ὄντες. 11 Γυναῖκας ὡσαύτως σεμνάς, μὴ διαβόλους, νηφαλίους, πιστὰς ἐν πᾶσι. 12 διάκονοι ἔστωσαν μίᾳς γυναικὸς ἄνδρες, τέκνων καλῶς προϊστάμενοι καὶ τῶν ἰδίων οἴκων. 13<sup>i</sup> οἱ γὰρ καλῶς διακονήσαντες, βαθμὸν ἑαν-

I have adverted to in my Introductions to those Epistles. It does not occur in the Sept.; but it does, and in the Passive, not only in Jos. and Philo, but in the Class. writers, as Plato, Demosth., Ælian, and Polyb. (iii. 81, 1, ἀγνοῖ καὶ τετυφώται), but only in the Particip. τετυφώμενος, as in 2 Tim. ii. 4. I am not aware that the Particip. Aorist occurs elsewhere.—The words eis krima impietis tou Diabolou are by most Expositors, ancient and modern, understood of falling into the same condemnation and punishment that the devil fell into through pride; which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. And so Calv. observes: 'Est elegans antithesis, quæ indignitatem augeat: Si is qui preficitur Ecclesie Dei, sua elatione in eandem cum Diabolo condemnationem ruat.' Several eminent Expositors, however, from Luther and Erasmus downwards, take τοῦ Διαβ. to mean the calumniator or slanderous enemy of the Gospel, the noun being, they say, used generically of those who seek an occasion to calumniate the Christians; but, as Calvin observes, 'rarum est ut iudicium maledictionis significat.' Besides, it is not to be imagined that the Apostle could intend the term Διαβόλου to be differently interpreted in two continuous portions. Whether, therefore, we understand Διαβόλ. to mean the devil, or the calumniator, the same view of the sense must be adopted as regards both the verses. The reason assigned by Calv. for rejecting the sense calumniator, and preferring that of the devil in the former verse, is quite valid; and, if that sense be received in the former, it must be adopted in the latter. On the other hand, if the sense devil be proved to exist in the latter, it cannot but be assigned to the former. And certainly there seems even stronger reason to adopt it in the latter than in the former. Moreover, the expression ἐμπέσκειν εἰς παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου naturally suggests the idea of diabolical influence, espec. when taken (as it cannot but be) in comparison with a parallel expression in 2 Tim. ii. 26, ἀναήψουσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος, and 1 Tim. vi. 9. Another reason for preferring the sense 'devil,' in ver. 7, to that of the sense calumniator, is, that those who so take it are obliged to suppose in εἰς ὀνειδισμόν καὶ παγίδα τ. δ. an hendiadys, which is too arbitrary a mode, and contrary to the logic of the passage, as ably traced by T. Aquinas, &c., and, moreover, against the judgment of antiquity; for the Pesch. Syr. and Vulgate translators repeat the is as if they had in their copies a second eis.—The term pay, may denote, in a generic sense, the various snares which, as we learn from Scripture, the Tempter is ever laying to entrap our virtue.

7. ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν] i.e. 'those out of the pale of the Church,' non-Christians. So in Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 5, the expression τοῖς ἔξωθεν is used of the non-Essenes, not, as Whiston ignorantly renders, the foreigners.

8—10. The qualifications now marked out for Deacons are comparatively few, such being omitted as have reference to government, or teaching.

8. μὴ διλόγους] 'not double-tongued,' or double-dealers, deceitfully saying one thing to one party, and another thing to another; one thing to the minister, and another to the people. Such an upright, straight-forward disposition was very necessary in persons who, like the Deacons, went, as it were, between the Presbyter and the people; espec. as difference of opinion respecting Jewish rites and ceremonies, and various other matters, existed in most congregations.—μὴ οἶνω πολλῷ προσέχοντας, 'not given to much wine.' The Apostle, as Theophyl. observes, says not μὴ μεθύσους (for that were altogether unworthy), but 'not great drinkers;' for much wine, even though it produce not inebriation, greatly weakens the tone of the mind. So it is finely said by Philostr. Vit. Ap. i. 8, ἡμετέροισθα τῇ τοῦ σου συστάσει, διαβολουῖντα τὸν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ αἰθερά.

9. ἔχοντας τὸ μυστήριον—συνειδήσει] In the interpretation of these words Expositors not a little differ. But the sense seems simply to be, 'holding the doctrines of the faith sincerely and conscientiously.' On τὸ μυστ. τῆς πίστεως in this sense, see Eph. i. 9. vi. 19. Col. iv. 3.

10. καὶ οὗτοι] 'those too,' viz., as well as the Presbyters; for, it seems, examination as to character and qualifications was to precede election.—ἀνέγκλητοι. Answering to μαρτυρίαν καλὴν ἔχ. at ver. 7.

11. γυναῖκας] Most modern Commentators interpret, 'their (i.e. the Deacons') wives;' while the ancient and most eminent modern ones take it to mean the order called Deaconesses, to whom certainly the qualifications here mentioned are more suitable than to the former; and on such a point the voice of antiquity ought not lightly to be rejected: indeed, the former interpretation would require the Article. In some cases, however, the same persons might be both deacons' wives and deaconesses.—πιστὰς ἐν πᾶσι, said with reference to their dispensing the public contributions among their own sex, to whom, by the customs of the Greeks, men had not access.

13. βαθμὸν ἑαυτοῖς καλὸν περιποιούνται] 'they obtain for themselves a honourable position,' lit. 'grade of dignity.' The passages from τοῖς καλὸν περιποιούνται, καὶ πολλὴν παρρησίαν ἐν πίστει τῇ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>14</sup> Ταῦτά σοι γράφω, ἐλπίζων ἐλθεῖν πρὸς <sup>κ 1 Tim. 2</sup> σε τάχιον <sup>15</sup> εἰάν δὲ βραδύνω, ἵνα εἰδῇς πῶς δεῖ ἐν οἴκῳ Θεοῦ <sup>ἐφ. 2. 21</sup>

ἀναστρέφεσθαι, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία Θεοῦ ζῶντος, στυλὸς καὶ

Class. writers here adduced by the Commentators and Lexicographers are not to the purpose. They might better have referred to Hermes ap. Stob. Eccl. Phys. t. ii. 938, where βαθμοί means 'degrees' of excellence and rank in souls, such as is supposed to exist in angels; and so in the Sententiae of the emperor Hadrian, ἐὰν καλὸς στρατιώτης γίνῃ, τρίτῳ βαθμῷ ('step of promotion') εἰς πραιπόριον δυνήσθαι μεταβιβῆναι. This latter passage would be peculiarly appropriate in fixing the interpretation, if we could be sure that Paul had reference to promotion to the higher degree of Presbyter, or perhaps Bishop. And so the ancient, and several modern Expositors, as Grot., Est.,—with more recent ones, as Drs. Burton and Peile,—think was intended; to which, however, the objection naturally occurs,—that the moral value of such a motive as that of interest was not likely to be held out by the Apostle. Besides, I cannot find any other ex. except that one; whereas, of the sense 'grade,' or 'position,' besides the above passage of Hermes, I can adduce a passage of Gregor. ap. St. Thea. in πῇ καὶ γὰρ ἡ ἀρετὴ οὐχ ἥτοις ἢ βαθμῶν ἡ προτιμήσει, and another from the 6th Canon of the Council of the Ephesians, τοῦ οἰκίου βαθμοῦ ἀποκρίπται cited by Suicer. Thea., who adduces two other ex., and says that it oft. occurs in the Canons of Councils, to denote any grade of Ecclesiastical dignity. And the interpretation I have adopted is confirmed by the scope of the context, and the intention of the Apostle, which was to point out the importance of good Deacons to the well-being of a Church;—and such men, it seems intimated, by the worthy performance of the office, gained for themselves a high position in the community, and acquired (by constant intercourse with different classes of men) a boldness in maintaining their principles, which was of great advantage both to them, and to the Church of which they were subsequently to become Presbyters. At πολλὴν παρρ. supply πιστι. The sense seems to be, 'they obtain the privilege of speaking with freedom (i. e. beyond that of private Christians) on matters concerning the faith.'

14. ἰλθαι πρὸς σε τάχιον 'very quickly.' a later Greek expression: for it is very rarely found in the Class. writers, though occurring twice elsewhere in St. Paul, and twice in St. John. Lachm. and Tisch., indeed, adopt the reading ἐν τάχει, which is evidently as much a gloss as τάχιον, found in one or two MSS. In his second ed. Tisch. has rightly restored τάχιον.

15. ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω, ἵνα εἰδῇς The best mode of removing the difficulty here complained of seems to be, to repeat ταῦτα γράφω from the preceding verse; q. d. '[And I write these things unto thee, not as if I should never come again], but that if I should be delayed, thou, &c.—στυλὸς καὶ ἰδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθ. These words have been variously interpreted. In order to ascertain their sense, it is necessary to determine their scope,—and whether they should be taken with the preceding, or the following words.

VOL. II.

Some ancient and several modern Expositors (as Chillingworth and Gataker) and many recent Interpreters, refer them to what follows. This method, however, lies open to insuperable objections, as stated by Poole, Benson, and Scott. And thus, too, I apprehend, the sentiment is overloaded with words, has in its air something frigid and jejune, and, what is more, involves an anticlimax, no where found in Scripture, and very rarely in any good Class. writer. The natural connexion of the words is, doubtless, with what precedes; yet certainly not, as some imagine, with εἰδῇς, as if the reference were to Timothy: for that would be an utter violation of the construction, and involve somewhat of incongruity; for, though Timothy might be a pillar of the truth, yet not a foundation thereof. In short, the words cannot well be united with any part of the preceding context, except with ἥτις ἐστὶ ζῶντος, which is their natural connexion, and which would probably have been more generally received than it has among Protestant Expositors, had they not wished to rescue the passage from Romish perversion. But surely such forced expositions, devised merely to evade the arguments or claims of opponents, are unworthy of a cause which needs not the aid of disingenuous arts to uphold it. Here there can be no doubt but that the true reference is to ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία, as was maintained by almost all the ancient Expositors, and many eminent modern Protestant Commentators, as Grot., Bp. Hall, Calv., Hamm., Gothofred, Weber, Schmid, Devling, Wolf, Whitby, Mackn., and Bp. Van Mildert, and, of the recent Expositors, Dr. Peile, and, of the Foreign, Wiesing., Huther, and Mack., who understand it of the Church Universal, administered under an external visible form of government,—and which, by maintaining the revelation of God and his religion, upholds it as a foundation does a building, or as pillars support an edifice. That such is the meaning, is plain from the context; the design of the Apostle being evidently this,—to give weight to his preceding instructions, as to the regulation of the Church at Ephesus, by suggesting the important purpose for which the Church Universal was instituted; for, as Wiesing. observes, 'the Church is here styled pillar of the truth, inasmuch as the continuance of this truth, its historical existence as Christian truth, rests on this—that there is a Church which supports and preserves the Word of truth. Without a Church there would be no Christian truth on earth; on the existence of the former rests therefore the existence of the latter upon earth.' The above interpretation is, I believe, liable to no well-founded objection; and, indeed, any other mode of explanation is, both philologically and otherwise, quite untenable. It may, indeed, be asked, that if such be the meaning, why was it not expressed more exactly and intelligibly? I answer, that the Apostle could not express ἥτις ἐστὶ before στυλὸς, &c., because that would have involved a tautology of the very worst kind possible, and of which there

L L

1 John 1. 14. ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας. 16<sup>1</sup> Καὶ ὁμολογουμένως μέγα ἐστὶ τὸ
Matt. 2. 18. τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον—Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκί, ἐδικαιώθη
1 Pet. 2. 18.
Mark 16. 6.
Eph. 2. 8, 9. Col. 1. 28. Luke 24. 31.

is no example to be found in any good ancient writer; and it was not necessary so to do, since the aposition supplies this subject to the context, and that context furnishes us with ἥτις ἐστὶ,—just what is wanted. With reference to the dispute in doctrine here involved, I would say, that as the Church of that age (to which the words were especially meant to apply) might well be said to be στέλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, because founded by the Apostles, who were the pillars of the Christian faith; so, if the words be applied, in the present instance, to the Church, they are not to be referred to the Church of Rome, or to the Church of England or of Scotland, or any particular Church, but to Christ's Holy Catholic Church (for which we pray in our Liturgy), consisting of all the true Churches of Christ throughout the world; i. e. all such Churches as hold the essential doctrines of the Gospel. So that the passage by no means implies the infallibility of any particular Church. That the words are well adapted to express the above sense, is manifest; for στέλος being qualified and explained by ἑδραίωμα, must be put for στέλημα (on which word see Steph. Thea.); and in ἑδραίωμα there is, I think, an allusion to the mode in which vast edifices, like the Temple at Jerusalem, or that of Diana at Ephesus (supposed by some Commentators to be here alluded to in οἶκος), were built; namely, as in several of our cathedrals (such as Canterbury and old St. Paul's), by first laying a foundation with rows of pillars penetrating deep under ground,—and then, by building upon those, as it were stage by stage, gradually raising the mighty superstructure. On again, for this ninth Edition, carefully reconsidering this much agitated and perplexing question, I am still of opinion that by ἐκκλ. is to be understood the Church Universal, administered under an external, visible form of government,—and which, by maintaining the revelation of God and his religion, upholds it, as a foundation does a building, or as pillars support an edifice. As the Church Universal is the ἑδραίωμα, so each particular Church may be regarded as a pillar of that foundation-structure, which upholds the superstructure of Gospel truth.

16. καὶ ὁμολογουμένως μέγα, &c.] This is closely connected with what precedes; the sense being, 'And confessedly (i. e. unquestionably) great is the mystery of godliness' (meaning, the Gospel-scheme, as in Joseph. c. Ap. i. 12) contained in the long-concealed, but now revealed truths of the Gospel, which that Church is to recommend and support, and of which the sum is, that 'God was manifested in the flesh.' There may, indeed, seem an abruptness, and a sort of hiatus in the sense between μυστ. and Θεός; but that is not uncommon in the writings of St. Paul, and especially in passages, like the present, of great pathos. See Rom. xi. 33—36. In these cases I have, after eminent Editors, placed a mark denoting the aposiopesis. The term μυστήριον is often used of the doctrines of the Gospel in general; but was here, I conceive, adopted chiefly with reference to that great mystery of 'God manifested in the flesh,' on which all the others hinge, and which Timothy was espec. to urge. It is true that the sense, as above laid down, depends upon the reading, which, in the case of Θεός, is disputed. Griesb. has for Θεός edited δε; but without any sufficient reason; for the external evidence in favour of it is next to nothing; only three MSS. having δ, and one δ, and those all of the Western recension, and prob. altered from the Vulg. As to Versions, though most of them favour δε, yet they cannot be balanced against nearly the whole of the MSS. The Latin Fathers, indeed, support δ, as might be expected from its being the reading followed in the Vulg.; but as to the Greek Fathers, they are by no means, as Griesb. affirms, in favour of δε; for it has been irrefragably proved by Matthæi, Rinck, and espec. Scholz, that their testimony is, upon the whole, decidedly in favour of Θεός. The false reasonings of Griesb. and Beisham have been fully exposed by Dr. Barton (Testim. p. 141) and the British Critic and Quart. Theol. Rev. ii. 297; the former adducing evidence of the way in which the passage was understood by the Ante-Nicene Fathers, in citations from Barnabas, Clem. Alex., Hippolytus, and Dionys. Alex.; to which others are added by Rinck from Ignat. Ep. to the Ephesians, § 19, Θεὸς ἀνθρώπινως φανερούμενον. Bengel, Matthæi, and Rinck, are decidedly of opinion that the reading ΘΕ arose from ΘΕ, and not ΘΕ from ΘΕ; and no wonder; since (as Matthæi has shown) in the uncial MSS. the line in Θ is not unfrequently omitted by the scribes; as, for instance, in the next word ἐφανερώθη. Now in a question of testimony, like this, it might be sufficient to prove that external evidence is decidedly in favour of Θεός; but we may as confidently refer to the internal, since it is not less so. It has been shown by Bp. Bull, Abp. Magee, Dr. Burton, the British Critic, and Rinck, that the reading δε is liable to almost every objection in interpretation, and violates all the rules of construction. The genuineness of Θεός has also been ably vindicated by Dr. Henderson, in a tract entitled, 'The Great Mystery of Godliness incontrovertible,' in which, after a most elaborate discussion of the evidence external and internal, he decides the question in favour of Θεός. So far in my former Edd. On again carefully considering the question, I am still of the same opinion; espec. since I find Θεός in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies; and though Tisch. alleges, among the passages of the Fathers serving to support the reading δε, Barnab. Epist. ver. 12, yet there the antithesis with ὡς ἀνθρώπου demanded ὡς τοῦ Θεοῦ not Θεός. And in the passage he cites of St. Ignat. ad Eph. ver. 19, Θεὸς ἀνθρώπινως φανερούμενος (where other MSS. have ὡς ἀνθρώπου φαινομένου), a manifest error of the scribes for φαινομένου is that he seeks to invalidate the proof by alleging that the Syrian Version follows the reading ὡς. That may be the case, but it will not prove ὡς to be the true reading. Nay, Ignat. could not have so written: for ὡς cannot of itself denote the Son of God. Moreover, the expression ἀνθρώπινως or ὡς ἀνθρώπου, meant to be ἐν πνεύματι, ὡφθη ἀγγέλοις, ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, ἐπιστεύθη ἐν κόσμῳ, ἀνελήφθη ἐν δόξῃ. IV. <sup>1</sup> τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα ῥητῶς λέγει, <sup>a</sup> ὅτι ἐν ὑστέροις καιροῖς ἀποστήσονται τινὲς τῆς πίστεως, προσ- <sup>b</sup> ἔχοντες πνεύμασι πλάνοις καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων, <sup>c</sup> ἡ ἐν ὑποκρίσει ψευδολόγων, κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν ἰδίαν συνειδησιν, <sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Matt. 24.
<sup>b</sup> Thess. 2. 3.
<sup>c</sup> Tim. 3. 1.
<sup>d</sup> Pet. 2. 8.
Jude 15.
1 John 2. 18.
Matt. 7. 18.
Rom. 16. 18.
2 Pet. 2. 2.

opposed to the former, demands Θεοῦ. In short, I still retain Θεός, and consider the sense of the passage to be, 'And confessedly great is the importance of the mystery of godliness contained in the long concealed, but now revealed, truths of the Gospel, which that Church is to recommend and support;—and of which the sum is, that God was manifested in the flesh,' &c. Here, then (to use the words of Bp. Pearson on the Creed), 'St. Paul, unfolding the mystery of godliness, has delivered six propositions together, and the subject of all and each of them is God; and this God, who is the subject of all these propositions, must be understood of Christ, because of him each one is true, and all are so of none but him. He was the Word, which was God, and was made flesh; and, consequently, God manifested in the flesh. Upon him the Spirit descended at his baptism, and after his ascension was poured upon his Apostles, ratifying his commission, and confirming the doctrine which they received from him; wherefore he was God justified in the Spirit. His nativity the angels celebrated; in the discharge of his office they ministered unto him; at his resurrection and ascension they were present, always ready to confess and adore him. He was therefore God seen of angels.'—ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, 'proclaimed among the nations at large,' as the Author of eternal salvation to as many as believe in him (Phil. ii. 16), (accordingly) believed on in the world (at large); and (finally) taken up to heaven, to be henceforth in glory.' Acts i. 11. ii. 36, et al. There is only one particular that is doubtful as to its sense, i. e. ἰδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι, of which the true meaning seems to be, 'was recognized (and vindicated as to his true character against all gain-sayers) through the Spirit' in various ways, which are pointed out by Est. and also by Bps. Pearson and Hurd. Comp. Matt. xi. 19 with Rom. iii. 4.

IV. 1. τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα, &c.] The connexion of this verse with the preceding matter is so close, that a new chapter ought not to have been commenced here; though to trace the exact concatenation of the ideas is by no means easy. It may be best to render δὲ, with Mede, veruntamen; q. d. 'Nevertheless [important as these truths are, and though the Church, by preserving the mystery of godliness, be the grand support of the truth], the Holy Spirit,' &c. See Dr. Peile's paraphrase. By τὸ Πνεῦμα some eminent Expositors understand that manifestation of the Spirit, which was vouchsafed to the Prophets of the Old Test.; as, for instance, Dan. xi. 36—39. But the term is better referred to the Apostle himself (comp. 1 Cor. ii. 10), for the expression seems to imply a direct revelation; comp. Acts viii. 29. x. 19. xi. 12, and Rev. ii. 7, ἀκούσας τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις. It may, however, have been a revelation to the prophets of that period; Acts xi. 28. xiii. 2.

By the expression ὑστέροις καιροῖς are meant, as in Acts ii. 17. Heb. i. 1. 1 Pet. i. 20, the times of the last or Christian dispensation. Comp. 2 Tim. iii. 1. James v. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 3. Jude 18. —ἀποστήσονται τινὲς τῆς πίστεως, 'certain persons will fall away from the faith,' with reference to the great apostasy,—the same subject as that treated on at 2 Thess. ii. 3—12, where see notes. The terms ἀποστασ. there, and ἀποστήσ. here, denote generally and properly apostasy from a religion, by entire abandonment; but sometimes, as here, only a falling away or defection from the true faith of it, by either rejecting some of its doctrines, or arbitrarily introducing others, or corrupting some of them by an admixture of the dogmas of heathenism or Judaism.—πνεύμασι πλάνοις, meaning (by the use of the Subst. for Adj.), 'persons who profess to speak by the Spirit, espec. in teaching, but are in reality impostors, leading astray. So Jos., Bell. Jud. ii. 13. 4, πλάνοι ἄνθρωποι καὶ ἀπατῶντες. In fact, πλάνοις serves to determine the sense of πνεύμασι, which otherwise would only be, 'those claiming to possess a Divine inspiration;' as 2 Thess. ii. 2. 1 John iv. 1. iii. 6. Of διδασκ. δαιμ. it is not agreed whether the sense be, 'doctrines suggested by, proceeding from, demons,' or 'concerning demons.' The former interpretation is preferable, as more agreeable to the context. See Mackn.

2. ἐν ὑποκρ. ψευδ.] The words are closely connected with the foregoing; but the construction is very anomalous, and not to be adjusted by any grammatical legerdemain,—such as supposing an antiphrasis, or resolution of construction. It is scarcely less unsatisfactory to suppose, with Conyb., that 'Paul, while grammatically speaking of the demons, is really speaking of the false teachers, who acted under their impulse.' That he is speaking of the seducers I do not doubt; but for that reason the connexion of the words must be, as Wiesing suggests, with προσέχοντες, understanding the words to denote, 'by, or through what cause they gave heed,' &c. Of the two expressions, ἐν ὑποκρίσει and ψευδολόγων, the former denotes 'a pretended show of extraordinary sanctity,' which allures the simple; and the latter adverts to the falsehood by which the claims are supported. The two ideas are united in Jos., Bell. i. 32. 3, τετρατίαν ('humbug') καὶ ὑπόκρισιν λέγει τὴν εὐσεβίαν;—Κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν ἰδίαν συν. In this figurative expression Expositors are not agreed whether the metaphor be taken from the branding of criminals, or from the cauterizing employed by surgeons on mortified flesh, which is insensible to all feeling. So Diod. Sic. xx. 54, ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὥστερ καυτηρὰ τινα προσῆγε. The latter view (ably maintained by Reitz on Lucian, i. 645) is preferable, as yielding a stronger sense, one more suitable to the context of the Epistle, and better according with the parallel passages of Scripture; nor is it unsupported by ancient ε Gen. 9. 2.

Rom. 14. 6.
1 Cor. 10. 30.

d Gen. 1. 31.
Rom. 14. 14.
20.
Tit. 1. 15.

3<sup>c</sup> καλούντων γαρμειν, ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, ἃ ὁ Θεὸς ἔκτισεν εἰς μετάληψιν μετὰ εὐχαριστίας τοῖς πιστοῖς καὶ ἐπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἀλήθειαν. 4<sup>d</sup> Ὅτι πᾶν κτίσμα Θεοῦ καλόν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπό-βλητον, μετὰ εὐχαριστίας λαμβανόμενον 5 ἀγιάζεται γὰρ διὰ authority. So Theodor. says that 'this serves to indicate τὴν ἐσχάτην αὐτῶν ἀναλογίαν. Thus it answers to ἀπληγκότες at Eph. iv. 19. To advert to a matter of reading. Lachm. and Tisch. (1st ed.) edit κακαστ., from 2 cursives, and 10 uncial MSS. of no great note; but without reason; since καυστηριάζω is a vox picti; for, though it seems to occur in Strabo, l. v. p. 215 (cited in Steph. Thea.), yet there, as Dindorf remarks, the true reading is καυτηρ. It is true that I find κακαστ. in Lamb. 1183, 1185, and Mus. 11,836; but doubtless from error of scribes; espec. since all those MSS., however valuable, swarm with such blemishes.

3. ἀπὶχ. βρωμ.] Here the best Expositors are agreed, that καλούντων is to be supplied, taken from κωλ. before; comparing 1 Cor. xiv. 34; these two passages being peculiar cases, differing from those many, where, in the latter part of a sentence, a word (generally a verb) is to be supplied from one that occurs in the former part of it; or if not the same, some word of cognate sense. Whereas, in these two passages, the word to be supplied is one the very opposite in signification to what had occurred in the former member of the sentence: which may perhaps be paralleled with the Class. idiom, by which, in the first clause of a sentence comes a verbum imperandi with a negative; and in the second the verbo is to be repeated without the negative. Now here κωλύω includes within itself δοῦναι; yet, in the second clause, a verbum imperandi, as καλούντων, is to be repeated, as in the former case. The next words, ἃ ὁ Θεὸς ἔκτισεν, &c., are said in opposition to the unjustifiable asceticism of those who dared to forbid the use of that which God created to be partaken of (with due moderation), and thanksgiving (to the Bestower). See Eph. v. 4, and note. The words placed within brackets are implied in the subject-matter; as was well seen by Theophyl., who remarks, ἡ μὲν μετάληψις τὴν συμμετρίαν ἔχει (i. e. suggests the idea of moderation in the use) ἡ δὲ τρυφή τὴν ἀμετρίαν (ἔχει). Thus there are two conditions,—one express, the other implied. The words τοῖς πιστοῖς καὶ ἐπεγνω. τ. δ. α. are exegetical of the foregoing, meaning (by a Dative commodi) for the benefit of those who have such faith as to fully know the truth concerning the use of meats. 'Hos autem (observes Est.) opponit infidelibus, tam hereticis quam aliis, veritatem, de qua hic agitur, ignorantibus.' 'Not (continues he) that God excludes such from the use of his creatures; but that they, by their asceticism, exclude themselves.' 'Sed ideo (he goes on) solos fideles nominat, quoniam ceteri partim vanis ac superstitiosis suis legibus semetipsos privant creaturis Dei, ut hæretici, et inter Philosophos Pythagorici, partim non eo modo, quo debent, utuntur, id est, cum sobrietate et gratiarum actione.' See also Calv. and Hyper. Wiesing. is of opinion that 'the words involve an opposition of a two-fold kind, (1) to the inferior position of Judaism, which had not penetrated to the full knowledge of the truth (Acts x. 10, seqq.); and (2) to the transcendental position of the heretics, who made the superiority of their knowledge, and their higher moral perfection, to consist in abstinence from meats.' To the latter of these views I assent, but not to the former. I doubt not, that the Apostle had also in view both the Pythagoreans, as Est. supposes, and the Essenes; which will evidently appear from Josephus' very exact description of them.

4. ἔτι πᾶν κτίσμα—ἀπόβλ.] These words are meant to further develop the foregoing; q. d. 'who fully know, I say, that every creature is good (fit for use, and lawful), and none to be rejected (as unfit) when received with thanksgiving.' As respects the force of ἀπόβλ. (unattended to by Expositors), it does not merely mean rejectionem; for the following context at ἀγιάζεται calls for a stronger sense, which is permitted, since the term ἀπόβλητον is oft. used by Aqu. and Symm. for the Hebr. חַוֵּץ, 'an abominable thing'; and in Hos. ix. 3, for the Hebr. מִצַּח ('impure'), is by the Sept. rendered ἀκάθαρτον, but by Aqu. μιασμαίνον, and by Symm. ἀπόβλητον, meaning 'fit to be rejected with abomination,' as defiled and impure; so I would now render the word (with the Pesch. Syr. and Arab. Versions, also Grot., Schleusn., and Bretachn) 'et nihil [eorum] respiciendum (est).' The next words (v. 5), ἀγιάζεται γὰρ—ἐντεύξεως, seem meant not so much to give a reason for the preceding, as to limit the foregoing position, and show that every κτίσμα Θεοῦ may become καλόν (for that is what is meant by ἀγιάζεται),—namely, 'if it be partaken and enjoyed, διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ ἐντεύξεως, in conjunction with, preceded by the use of, prayer,' &c.; i. e. 'its use becomes pure through the word of God in the Gospel, which allows its use, and prayer, which asks a blessing on its use.' Not, indeed, that we are to suppose that there is a natural impurity in the creature, which must thus be removed (that being forbidden by Rom. xiv. 14); still less to think it necessary to resort to those endless, vain distinctions, made by the German Expositors. It is enough to take the term ἀγιάζεται in a popular sense, and suppose, either, with the Greek Commentators, a concessio rhetorica, or, rather, with Est., an anticipation of an objection; q. d. 'Whether there be, or be not, we waive the question; but if there were any such, ἀγιάζεται, &c. It is, however, of more importance to advert to the strong confirmation which this passage gives to the practice of prayer before partaking of God's creatures,—a duty so scrupulously performed in the early ages of the Church, of which we have a specimen in the following interesting 'Grace before meat,' as used in the primitive Church, and preserved to us in the Constitut. Apostol. l. vii. 49, εὐλογητὸς εἰ, Κύριε ὁ τρέφων με ἐκ μήτῃτός μου, ὁ δίδως τροφήν πάσῃ σαρκί, πλήρωσον χαρὰν καὶ εὐφροσύνην τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, ἵνα πάντοτε πᾶσαν αὐτάρκειαν ἔχοντες περισσεύωμεν εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, δι' οὗ σοι δόξα, τιμὴ, καὶ κράτος

λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ ἐντεύξεως. <sup>6</sup> Ταῦτα ὑποτιθέμενος τοῖς ἀδελ- <sup>e 2 Tim. 2.</sup>
φοῖς, καλὸς ἔσθι διάκονος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς <sup>1 Pet. 2. 2.</sup> λόγοις τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τῆς καλῆς διδασκαλίας ἣ παρηκολού-θηκας. <sup>7</sup> Τοὺς δὲ βεβήλους καὶ γραῶδεις μύθους παραιτοῦ <sup>f ch. 1. 4.</sup> γύμναζε δὲ σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν. <sup>8</sup> Ἡ γὰρ σωματικὴ γυμ- <sup>a d. 20.</sup> νασία πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐστὶν ὠφέλιμος· ἡ δὲ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα <sup>2 Tim. 2. 10.</sup> ὠφέλιμός ἐστιν, ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα ζωῆς τῆς νῦν καὶ τῆς μελ- <sup>Tit. 1. 14.</sup> λούσης. <sup>9</sup> Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος. <sup>10</sup> Εἰς <sup>2 Tim. 2. 10.</sup> <sup>g Col. 2. 23.</sup>
<sup>ch. 6. 6.</sup>
<sup>h ch. 1. 15.</sup>
<sup>1 3 Cor. 6. 5.</sup>
<sup>3 Thess. 2. 8.</sup>

εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας· ἀμήν. From the expression λόγου Θεοῦ we may infer that the εὐχαριστία was usually made in some words of Scripture (as in the foregoing Grace),—a custom very properly adopted by the framers of our admirable Liturgy.

6. ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς λόγοις, &c.] meaning, 'one nourished up in the doctrines of the faith'; signifying, as Calvin, Beza, and Est. explain, 'the sum of Christian doctrine,' as regards the crendenda of the religion, as in Acts vi. 7. The next words, καὶ τῆς καλῆς—παρηκ., are exegetical of the foregoing, forming a more special description of Christian doctrines to be believed, by tacit opposition to the reverse, which Timothy is charged to counteract. In the strong expression ἢ παρηκολ., 'hast followed and fully learnt,' there may be, as Wiesing. thinks, an implied admonition to continue in the sound faith he had attained to.

7. βεβήλουν—παραιτοῦ] The mention of διδασκ. reminded the Apostle of the ματαιολογία, supra i. 6, a kind of learning, to which Jewish youths were particularly attached,—namely, that of the Rabbinical traditions and speculations, such as we find in the Talmud; the μῦθοι καὶ γυναικ. ἀτίκται. of i. 4. To these the epithets here used are quite applicable; and βεβήλ. may refer to something in them akin to the Ragae superstitions.—γραῶδεις, 'silly, absurd,' lit. 'old womanish.' So Strabo calls poetry γραῶδὴ μυθολογίαν: Jamblichus de Vit. Pyth. has γραῶδεις ὑποθήκαι, and Hippocr. de Facult. Med. Simpl. l. vi., εἰς μύθους γραῶδεις ἐξετάσματο. Γύμναζε δὲ σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβ. These words seem meant to anticipate and overrule a plea, which might be advanced for the kind of learning just condemned; namely, that it exercises the understanding. The Apostle directs Timothy rather to occupy himself in acquiring a perfect knowledge of the religion which he had to teach; see ver. 13; and espec. on the cultivation of the practical part thereof, by studying to lead 'a holy life,' which is the true sense of εὐσέβ., on which see note supra ii. 2.

8, 9. From the apostolical metaphor in γύμν. σεαυτὸν the Apostle takes occasion to show the high importance of this spiritual γυμνασία, by contrasting its benefits with those resulting from the temporal γυμνασία, to which young men so devoted themselves, either by way of preparation for the games, or for honourable display in general; the advantages of the former being, he says, only temporary and temporal, those of the latter permanent, and extending to a future life. Thus the argument corresponds to that in 1 Cor. ix. 25, ἐκίωσι μὲν οὖν, ἵνα φθαρτὸν στίφανον λάβωσι, ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀφθαρτον. Such seems to be the most natural and consistent view of the sense, though many Expositors understand the γύμν. of what we call bodily exercises; a sense surely too limited. In σωματικῇ (which is for τοῦ σώματος, as μάχας νομικὰς for μάχας περὶ τοῦ νόμου, Tit. iii. 9) there is an allusion to the exercising or training of the body. The term γυμνασία must, however, not only be referred to the laborious exercises of the athlete, but to all the other parts of what we call training, as applied to the πένταθλον, and expressed by the term ἐγκρατεῖνσθαι in 1 Cor. ix. 25. The expression πρὸς ὀλίγον may be understood both of degrees and duration. And so, as respects the former, it is well said by Diogenes Laërt. i. 56, of the ἀθληταὶ καὶ ἀσκούμενοι that, 'while going through the exercise or training, they are πολυδάπανοι (i. e. sacrifice much, are at a great private expense) καὶ κινῶνται ἐπιζημίῳ, and when conquering, occasion loss to the public;' namely, because they must be paid dearly for that which they have acquired dearly.—πρὸς πάντα, meaning, 'in every way,' and under all circumstances.—ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα, &c. A promise as respects the former, amply verified in that 'peace which passeth all understanding,' and that 'hope full of immortality,' which, added to the blessings in this world ever attendant on a life of virtue and temperance, make godliness, even as respects the present existence, to be indeed 'a great gain.'

9. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, &c.] On this formula see note supra i. 15. By the λόγος here spoken of is, as the best Expositors are agreed, to be understood the above position, ἡ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμος: an assertion well termed πιστὸς καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, worthy to be relied on, and worthy of entire and universal acceptance; for, as Benson observes, 'without these three great principles, a God, a Providence, and a future state of retribution, religion could not subsist.' And the Apostle, in the next verse, plainly intimates, that these principles were his support under affliction, as well as animated him to zeal and diligence in active service.

10. εἰς τοῦτο γάρ, &c.] Γάρ has reference to ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχ. at ver. 8, and by εἰς τοῦτο is to be understood τὸ ἔχειν ἐπαγγ., &c. In this verse we have, as Hyper. observes, a ratio confirmationis à signo (or, as Croll. says, ab exemplo); q. d. 'That what we affirm is true, you may be assured by this certain evidence, that for this cause we labour and undergo great perils. Therefore do we bear up under such accumulated hardships and difficulties, because we have a fixed hope in the living God (who is the Saviour of all men, however forlorn and perilous be their condition in this world, if so be that they do not by τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ κοπιῶμεν καὶ ὀνειδιζόμεθα, ὅτι ἡλπίκαμεν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζῶντι, ὃς ἐστὶ σωτὴρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, μάλιστα πιστῶν.

11 Cor. 11. 1.
1 Thes. 1. 6.
2. 10.
2 Thes. 2.
7-9.
Tit. 2. 7, 12.
1 Pet. 3. 2.

11 Παρώγγελλε ταῦτα καὶ δίδασκε. 12 * Μηδεὶς σου τῆς νεότητος καταφρονεῖτω· ἀλλὰ τύπος γίνου τῶν πιστῶν ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀναστροφῇ· ἐν ἀγάπῃ, [ἐν πνεύματι,] ἐν πίστει, ἐν ἀγνείᾳ.

13 * Ἔως ἔρχομαι πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγνώσει, τῇ παρακλήσει, τῇ their faithlessness exclude themselves from salvation); and we are certain that it is the praise of our doctrine, that we cannot, by any circumstances, however adverse, be deterred from that truth which consists in faith and charity.' Such is the substance of the sense of this passage. See more at large in the notes of Calv., Crell., and Est. We must not, however, neglect to advert to the important words ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων, which many eminent Expositors (with a view to supporting the doctrine of Universal Redemption) explain, 'would have all men to be saved; a sense, however, not to be extracted from the words; though it may seem countenanced by what follows, and the same expression supr. ii. 3, 4, yet see note there. The true sense seems to be, 'who is the temporal Preserver of all men (as well as the Saviour of mankind in general, whether Jews or Gentiles); holding out salvation to men of every nation who seek it in faith; and espec. of those who seek his preservation in faith, as true believers. Comp. Eph. v. 23. See Calvin's able note, who, however, errs by confining what is said to temporal preservation; whereas the other (of salvation in the life to come) was, I doubt not, meant to be included. And in this point of view God may well be said to be σωτὴρ πάντων, as providing salvation for all, placing it within their reach, and opening out to them the possibility thereof. The above view I find confirmed by Chrys., Theophyl., and Œcumen., and, after an able discussion, adopted by Est., as the fullest and truest comment, as much as to say, 'Deum etiam in hac vitâ singulari quodam modo fidelium esse salvatorem; quia laborantes adjuvat, ut ad salutem æternam perveniant, et quia salutem temporalem facit eis esse Salutarem, id est, utilem et conducentem ad salutem æternam; denique quia cooperatur illis omnia in bonum, tam adversa, quam prospera.' He further adds, that this sense is required by the context.

12. μηδεὶς—καταφρ.] From the connexion of this with the next clause, by means of ἀλλά, it is clear that the meaning is, 'Let no one have reason to despise thy youth,' i. e. despise thee on account of thy youth. Comp. Plato, p. 527, μη δασὺν τινὰ σου καταφρονεῖσαι ὅς ἀνόητον. At the words following ἀλλὰ τύπος γίνου, &c., something seems wanting for connexion; q. d. 'So far from suffering him to hold you cheap on account of your youth, give him reason to hold you in reverence as a true ministerial exemplar to your believing flock.' Theodoret well paraphrases, θάλει μὴ καταφρονεῖσθαι κελύων; ἐμπύχους νόμους γινού. διέξου ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ τῶν νόμων κατόρθωμα· ἔχει τὸν βίον μαρτυροῦντα τῷ λόγῳ.—Ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀναστροφῇ, meaning, 'in words and in actions, conversation and conduct.'—ἀγάπῃ, namely, 'love both to God and man; what is called ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος in a similar passage at 2 Cor. vi. 6. Πίστει must here have reference to the outward profession rather than the internal sentiment. Here ἐν πνεύματι may seem not in place, in a detail of outward qualities, which shall be an example to others. Hence the ancient Critics (as we find from the omission of the words in 5 uncials, and 10 cursives, and some Versions) cancelled the words. In this they have been followed by Griesb., Lachm., and Tisch.; but without any sufficient cause; since for the insertion of them no reason can be imagined, while for their omission a very strong one may be assigned,—namely, that πνεῦμα was commonly understood of the Holy Spirit; a sense which they rightly judged could have no place here: hence its omission in some Versions. However, it may have been introduced, from marginal reference to 2 Cor. vi. 6, by some one who was not aware that here the influence of the Holy Spirit cannot be supposed, as there, to exist. But that it should have been introduced in such a way into all the copies except 15 (for I find it in all the Lamb. and Mus. MSS.), is highly improbable. In short, the words must be retained, and explained, with Theophyl. and the best modern Expositors, to mean, in spirituality of disposition, both as to heart and life, in which the influence of the Holy Spirit must be recognized.

13. πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγνώσει.] On carefully reconsidering this variously explained passage, I am now come to the conclusion, that if τῇ ἀναγνώσει be taken in conjunction with the following context, it must be supposed to refer especially to the reading of the Scriptures of the Old Test. in public worship, a custom which, it seems, had been transferred from the Jewish Synagogue to the Christian assemblies; and that the following expressions, τῇ παρακλήσει and τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, while they confirm the foregoing interpretation, were meant to point at what followed the recitation,—namely, exhortation, or admonition, and instruction generally; so that the Readings were very much like our Ergastory Lectures, or the Homilies of Chrys. on the New Test. This is confirmed by a passage of Just. Mart. Apol. i. 67, cited by Heydenr., from which it appears that they were of this kind. See more in Wiesing. and Olsh. It is true that Theodor., Doddr., and Benson, interpreted τῇ ἀναγν. by 'private reading and study,' of which sense the word is quite capable. But that can only be implied, since, how could a Presbyter prepare such expository and instructive matter, to follow up the recitation, except by private study and diligent research; without which the enlightening of the Holy Spirit, well brought in by Theodor., could not be expected? In fact, the admonition to cultivate private study is implied in the subsequent admonition, μη ἀμίλει—χαρίσματος, and espec. ταῦτα μελέτα, ἐν τούτοις ἰσθί· ἵνα σου ᾖ προκοπὴ φαν. ὅ, since the spiritual gift of enlightening had, it seems, to be kept up, by the exercise of human means of attentive and continued study, for the performance of the work of instruction, v. 16. This χάρισμα was, we learn, given διὰ προφητ., not 'according to prophecy,' but 'by or through prophecy,' i. e. by the Holy Spirit speaking through the mouths of the prophets at the time of ordination. So Calvin, who refers to supra, i. 18, κατὰ τὰς προαγοῦσας ἐπὶ σε προφητείας, where see his note. Though no example has been adduced from the New Test. of διὰ προφητείας thus used, I have noted it in Jos. Antt. iv. 8, 5, ἢ (scil. πόλιν) ἐν ᾧ θεὸς αὐτῷ (read αὐτῶ) διὰ προφητείας ἐξήλθαι ('may choose out'). The words μετὰ ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν τ. πρεσβ. are not at variance with what is said in a kindred passage at 2 Tim. i. 6, διὰ τῆς ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν μου, since the μετὰ here only denotes concurrence in the thing. How far that extended, we are not informed, nor is it necessary for us to know. As to the thing itself, see Acts vi., espec. xiii. 3, and note. According to its general use, it must be considered as an appropriation of the gift of the Spirit, by prayer, through the instrumentality of others, either for an Ecclesiastical work undertaken, or service entered on (as in Acts viii. 17. xix. 6, comp. with Heb. vi. 2) for the performance of the general work of the Christian in working out his salvation, and which he can alone perform by the aid of the Spirit of grace.

διδασκαλία. <sup>14</sup> <sup>1</sup> Μὴ ἀμέλει τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρίσματος, δ' ἐδόθη σοι, διὰ προφητείας, μετὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου. <sup>15</sup> Ταῦτα μελέτα, ἐν τούτοις ἴσθι ἵνα σου ἡ προκοπὴ φανερά ᾖ [ἐν] πᾶσι. <sup>16</sup> <sup>m</sup> Ἐπεχε σεαυτῷ, καὶ τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ ἐπιμέμεν αὐτοῖς. τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν, καὶ σεαυτὸν σώσεις καὶ τοὺς ἀκούοντας σου.

V. <sup>1</sup> <sup>a</sup> Πρεσβυτέρῳ μὴ ἐπιπλήξης, ἀλλὰ παρακαλεῖ ὡς πατέρα νεωτέρους, ὡς ἀδελφούς. <sup>2</sup> πρεσβυτέρας, ὡς μητέρας νεωτέρας, ὡς ἀδελφὰς ἐν πάσῃ ἀγνείᾳ. <sup>3</sup> Χήρας τίμα τὰς

15. ταῦτα μελέτα] meaning, 'Exercise thyself in these things, make them thy perpetual care and study;' both this and the next phrase being, in the best writers, used of diligent attention. So Diog. Laërt. x. 123, ταῦτα πράττει καὶ μελέτα, and Arrian, Diss. Epict. iv. 1, ταῦτα μελέτα. Thus also Thucyd. i. 142 (speaking of the long training and practice by which the Athenians had attained their naval pre-eminence) μελετῶντας αὐτὸ εὖθε ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν. It is probable that the Apostle, in this use of the expression, had still in mind the agonistical metaphor before employed; μελετᾶν being a word used of all preparatory exercises, whether of mind or body. Possibly, too, he may have had in view the words of Ps. i. 2.—ἐν τούτοις ἴσθι, meaning (by the same idiom as in the Horatian totus in illis) 'continue in the careful observance of all such exercises.'—φανερὰ ᾖ ἐν πᾶσι. Lachm. and Tisch., on strong grounds, cancel ἐν. If retained, the sense will be, 'in all things,' viz. those just mentioned, and others pertaining to his ministerial functions; but, if thrown out, it will be, 'to all persons;' which sense is the more suitable of the two, and moreover has the support of the Pesch. Syr., Ital.,

and Vulg. Versions. Calvin, indeed, thinks that the older sense 'magis quadrat (scil. verbis).' But he was not aware how weak is the evidence existing for ἐν, which, I suspect, crept in from certain Critics, who, taking πάντων of things, thought, and justly thought, that ἐν was necessary to the sense, and accordingly inserted it.

16. Ἐπεχε σεαυτῷ, καὶ τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ] I would render, with Dr. Mackn., Bp. Jebb, and Bp. Horsley, 'Take heed to thy doctrine, though not to the exclusion of teaching,' meaning the manner thereof. By αὐτοῖς just after, understand the above inculcated needful attention to himself, his teaching, and doctrine. On the force of ἐπεχε, see my Lex. N. T. in v. With ἐπιμέμεν αὐτοῖς comp. Jos. Antt. viii. 7, 5, ἐπιμέμνη τούτοις ἀχρι τελευτῆς.

V. 1—25. Here are given directions to Timothy, as to his conduct to the various members of the Church, according to the several distinctions of age, sex, or position in the Church. On some of which particulars, e. gr. as to the management he is to pursue with respect to the widows, the Apostle treats more fully.

1. πρεσβυτέρῳ] 'an elderly person,' as opposed to the νεώτεροι just after.—ἐπιπλή. is to be understood of 'sharp rebuke,' by administering the verbera lingua. The usage does not occur elsewhere in the New Test., but it does in the Class. writers, from Homer to Polyb. and Plutarch. To this expression is opposed the παρακάλει ὡς πατέρα, meaning, as Est. explains, cum obsecratione admonere, as one would a father. Such was, indeed, in theory at least, the custom of antiquity; and Diog. Laërt., in his Life of Plato, iii. 95, ascribes a similar sentiment to that philosopher.

2. I have removed the comma after ἀδελφ., because the words ἐν π. ἀγ. are evidently meant for the νεωτέρας.

3. τίμα] The best Expositors are agreed that the sense is, 'support, or competently provide for,' as at v. 17. Matt. xv. 4—6. See notes on Mark vii. 9—13, and comp. Acts xviii. 10.—τὰς ὄντας χ., i. e. 'those who are really widows,' in the proper sense of the word (adverted to at v. 5),—namely, 'destitute.' From what the Fathers and Greek Commentators tell us, it appears that these persons were maintained from the funds of the Church; and yet from what follows, it is clear that they filled an office; the name χῆραι being as much one of office as διακονοί, though the exact nature of its duties has not been determined. That the persons who held it instructed the younger females in the princi-

b Matt. 15.
4-6.
Mark 7. 10,
13.
Eph. 6. 1, 2.

c Luke 2. 26,
27. & 13. 1, 7.
Acts 26. 7.
Eph. 6. 13.

ὄντως χήρας. <sup>4</sup> <sup>b</sup> Εἰ δέ τις χήρα τέκνα ἢ ἔκγονα ἔχει, μαυθανέτωσαν πρῶτον τὸν ἰδίον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν, καὶ ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι τοῖς προγόνοις· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι καλὸν [καὶ ἀποδεκτὸν] ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. <sup>5</sup> <sup>c</sup> Ἡ δὲ ὄντως χήρα, καὶ μεμονωμένη, ἡλ-πικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν, καὶ προσμένει ταῖς δεήσεσι καὶ ταῖς προσευ-
χαῖς νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας· <sup>6</sup> ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα, ζῶσα τέθνηκε. <sup>7</sup> Καὶ

ples of the Christian faith, is pretty certain; but whether they were, as some say, the same as the Deaconesses, is yet a disputed point. It would seem that they were not necessarily the same; but that having once been such, during the life of their husbands, they were not removed from that office. Otherwise, it would seem, their duties were different from those of the Deaconesses, and were we to call them by such a name as would designate their chief duties, we might call them 'Female Catechists.' That these differed from the Deaconesses, is certain from the positive testimony of Epiphanius. Yet they might occasionally assist them in their duty of visiting the sick. Be that as it may, the existence of such an order as the χήραι requires no very strong testimony from Ecclesiastical history; since, from the extremely retired life of the women in Greece and other parts of the East, and their almost total separation from the other sex, they would much need the assistance of such persons,—who might either convert them to the Christian faith, or farther instruct them in its doctrines and duties. This care in making provision for the widows was evidently transferred, with many other things, from the Jewish economy (see Deut. xvi. 11. xiv. 29. xx. 1, 17, 19. Exod. xxii. 22).

4. ἔκγονα] The term denotes any descendants further removed than children, as grand-children, or great grand-children.—μαυθ. 'let them (meaning those grand-children) learn from me [a lesson proper for them to know]—namely, τὸν ἰδίον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν. Render: 'to exercise dutiful care towards their own family,' 'to dutifully care for those of their own family.' Harsh is the ellipsis of eis, or πρὸς, supposed by many; for no reason can be imagined why the Preposition should not have been expressed, or the equivalent construction used, of which so many instances present themselves in the New Test.—namely, the dative, τῷ ἰδίῳ οἴκῳ. As it is, however, we must suppose the word here meant to be taken in its active sense,—namely, 'pietate colere,' equiv. to cursare; a construction frequent in the best Class. writers, though there the word is almost always used only of piety to the gods, and not, as here, of dutiful affection towards parents. Yet in Dio Cass. 530, 44, we have εὐσ. πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφόν. And so occasionally in Josephus. By the expression ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι (put for ἀμειβέσθαι, in Jos. c. Ap. ii. 27, τὸν οὐκ ἀμειβόμενον τὰς παρὰ γονέων χάριτας), it is hinted that this is no more than repaying a debt due to them for their former care and attention to their children. The words καὶ ἀποδεκτὸν are absent from almost all the uncials, and many cursives (to which, however, I can only add Lamb. 1185, l. m.), and are cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, and Tisch., as introduced from supra ii. 13. They may have been so; but it is strange that the words should have got into so many MSS. and all the early Versions.

5. <sup>4</sup> <sup>b</sup> εἰ δὲ ὄντως χήρα, καὶ μεμονωμένη] 'Having (observes Est.) before shown that true widows are to be honoured and sustained, he next points out what is a true widow, meaning to say that a true widow is one who is desolate, and destitute not only of a husband, but also of sons or nephews, and all human aid whereby she can be helped.' Thus μεμον. is exegetical of ὄντως χήρα, and μεμον. does not need ἀνδρὸς being understood, for it is the purpose of the Apostle to explain, not what he means by χήρα, but ἡ ὄντως χήρα. Accordingly, the force of μεμον. is best expressed by an adjective, as the Latin solitaria or sola. So Eurip. Alcest., ὁ μόνος. However, the term implies also the notion of 'destitute.' The next words, ἡλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν, 'setteth her hope in God;' not, as many Expositors explain, as to temporal provision. These words, and the following, καὶ προσμένει—ἡμέρας, seem espec. meant to point at the condition and habits of the persons in question, the αἱ ὄντως χήραι, in the way of commendation, and thereby to suggest how worthy they are of honourable sustentation. See the admirable note of Calv., who, as an Expositor, is here, as oft., instar omnium. He well points to the case of the unmarried of both sexes in 1 Cor. vii. 32, and to that of the widow Anna in Luke ii. 37. Of the two foregoing grounds of commendation and recommendation, the sense comprehended in the former is (Calv. observes) this,—that they 'nullo avocamento distrahi, quin respiciant in solum Deum; quia in mundo nihil reperitur, quo fulciantur.' The second ground is that,—assidue precibus incumbunt. Unde sequitur juvandas esse ac sustentandas Ecclesie impensis.

6. 'Postquam suâ notâ veras viduas insignivit, nunc alias opponit, quas rejiciende sint.' (Calvin.)—ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα, meaning, 'But she who liveth a life of luxury, self-indulgence, and dissipation.' So in James v. 5, we have united ἐντροφίσσαστε καὶ ἑσπαταλῆσαστε. The word (which is rare) comes from σπατάλῃς, though I can by no means agree with Schleusner, that the metaphor is 'a cutis pruritus.' It is rather 'a cute bene curata;' a common figure to denote luxury. So Hor. Epist. i. 4, 15, 'Mo pinguem et nitidum, bene curatâ cute, vices.'—τίθνηκε, 'is [spiritually] dead,'—namely, in sin. So Theophylact explains, τὰς δοκῇ ζῆν ταύτων τὴν ζῶσαν τὴν αἰσθητήν, τέθνηκε κατὰ πνεῦμα. And so also Theodoret. Comp. Eph. ii. 1. Similar sentiments are found in the Apocrypha, the Rabbinical writers (as Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 177, 3, 'Impii, etiam dum vivunt, vocantur mortui'), and even the heathen philosophers. Compare Timocl. ap. Stob. 91, 15, ὅστις μετὰ ζώων, τεθνηκώς, περιπατεῖ. So I would point, for ταῦτα παράγγελε, ἵνα ἀνεπιληπτοὶ ὦσιν. <sup>8</sup> Εἰ δέ τις τῶν ἰδίων, καὶ μάλιστα τῶν οἰκείων, οὐ προνοεῖ, τὴν πίστιν ἥρηται, καὶ ἔστιν ἀπίστου χεῖρων. <sup>9</sup> Χήρα καταλεγέσθω μὴ ἑλαττον ἐτῶν ἐξήκοντα, γεγονυῖα ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνή, <sup>10</sup> ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς

1. 52. 7.
2 Tim. 8. 6.
Tit. 1. 16.
Gen. 18. 4.
2. 10. 2.
Luke 7. 38.
1 Pet. 4. 9.

τέθω. is for τεθνηκώς ἄν, already dead. Such a person, then, the Apostle means to say, is not to be chosen, since, though μεμονωμένη in one sense, as being bereft of a husband, yet she is, in another, not desolate, using the ample means of livelihood, which she possesses, not for purposes of Christian benevolence and charity, but for selfish purposes, in a sensual and luxurious life, free from care or control.

7. ταῦτα παρ., ἵνα ἀνεπιλ. ὦσιν] The ταῦτα here refers to v. 4; and the subject at ὦσιν must be the persons referred to there at μανθανίσαν. Since, however, there seems an implied admonition for the widows at v. 8, the reference may extend to that verse. That there is an implied admonition to widows, nay, all widows who make any profession of godliness, cannot be doubted. Nay, Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and Eecumen., make the reference direct and principal, and so does Est.

8. εἰ δέ τις τῶν ἰδίων—χεῖρων] The τις here must not, with many Expositors, be referred to the widow,—which would involve an intolerable harshness,—but to those belonging to her, v. 4, sons, grandsons, or nephews; and in this Est. acquiesces;—ita tamen (he adds) ut generalis sit sententia, quæ rem particularem confirmet.—By τῶν οἰκείων some Commentators understand no more than ἰδίων. The two words are, indeed, in their general use, synonymous; but οἰκ. denotes properly a nearer connexion than ἰδίων: the former that of consanguinity, the latter that of affinity; including, perhaps, those of the same household, as domestics, whether bond or free; and the distinction is here evidently meant to be attended to.—τὴν πίστιν ἥρη. The full sense is, 'he denieth [by his works] that Christian faith [which he professeth with his lips]'; (comp. Tit. i. 16); for that teaches him, τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ μητέρα σου, including the making a sufficient provision for their wants. The construction of ἥρη. with an Accus. of thing is, indeed, very rare, not occurring elsewhere in St. Paul's Epistles, nor in the Catholic Epistles, nor in the Gospels; but it is not hence to be set down,—as it is by Baur, De Wette, and others, as un-Pauline, since it occurs Rev. ii. 13, οὐκ ἠρήσω τὴν πίστιν. And if used by St. John, why should it not have been used by St. Paul? In the sense 'to abjure,' 'to cast off,' it is used with δαΐδαν.—ἀπίστου χεῖρων, meaning, 'is less observant of the moral relative duties than an unbeliever'; for the heathens considered themselves bound, and were by their laws required, to maintain their parents.

9. καταλεγέσθω] lit. 'be put on the list'; namely, of widows to be maintained at the expense of the Church. Καταλείσθαι signifies 'to be enrolled in any order of persons,' civil or military. Besides the general roll which comprehended all the Christians of any Church, there were, it seems, particular ones confined to the clergy, and those poorer Christians who were maintained at the public expense, including destitute virgins and widows; and of such lists the Ecclesiastical Canons often make mention. With this entering upon a list was, says Jerome,—in order to in some measure compensate the Church for its bounty,—conjoined an obligation to undertake certain public functions, especially business of a lighter kind, suited to one in the decline of life. 'These widows (adds he) assisted the deaconesses properly so called, and were called προσβυτίδες.' Epiphanius expressly distinguishes τὰς γρασιστὰς προσβυτίδες from the regular deaconesses, and at the same time adds that they were χήραι. It is, however, as Mr. Conyb. observes, 'a disputed point, what list is referred to here in καταλείσθω, whether 1) the list of widows to be supported out of the charitable funds; or, 2) the list of deaconesses; or, 3) the τάγμα χωρῶν, or body of Church widows, mentioned by Tertull. de Vel. Virg. c. ix., and by other writers, as a sort of female presbyters, holding a distinct ecclesiastical position and duties. The point is fully discussed by Huther, p. 167, and by Wiesing., p. 507—522. I am disposed, with Mr. Conyb., to take a middle course between the 1st and 3rd hypothesis, by supposing (as, indeed, I have at all times heretofore gone far to do) that the list here mentioned was that of all the widows who were officially recognized as supported by the Church; but was not confined to such persons, but included also richer widows, who were willing to devote themselves to the offices assigned to the poor widows. This view is, indeed, liable to some objection,—which, however, is satisfactorily removed by Mr. Conyb. in his instructive note.—By ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνή must, notwithstanding the dissent of eminent Expositors, be meant no other than the uxorita, one who had been only once married,—the case of Anna (Luke ii. 36), as has been fully evinced by Wiesing.—To advert to a matter of punctuation. The Editors, from Griesb. downwards, generally place the comma after γεγονυῖα, thus uniting γεγ. with χήρα. But the previous Editors placed it after ἐξήκοντα, thus uniting it with γυνή. This latter punctuation I continue to prefer; indeed the other mode is not to be approved of, because it places the participle where it is not wanted, and leaves without it the word that does want it. I say want, since the sense intended by the Apostle is evidently that assigned by the Pesch. Syr. translator, 'who has had but one husband.' So our common authorized Version, 'who has been the wife of one man.' That χήρα does not need γεγονυῖα (which, indeed, would be unsuitable in tenue) is plain from such passages as Xen. Mem. i. 2, 35, μηδὲ σὺ διαλίγου νεώτεροις (scil. ἀνδράσι) τριάκοντα ἐτών. Of course, in each passage there is an ellipsis of the particip. οὖσα. This plainly appears from the use of ἑλαττον for ἑλαττόνων, as in Thucyd. vi. 95, 1, ταλάντων οὐκ ἔλασσον πάντα καὶ εἰκοσι, where I have adduced other examples of the idiom.

10. ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς μαρτ.] This use of ἐν is Hellenistic. In Clasa. Greek it would find no

μαρτυρουμένη εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν, εἰ ἐξενδοχόχησεν, εἰ ἀγίως πόδας ἐνέψεν, εἰ θλιβομένους ἐπήκεσεν, εἰ παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ ἐπηκολούθησε. <sup>11</sup> Νεωτέρας δὲ χήρας παραιτοῦ ὅταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, γαμεῖν θέλουσιν <sup>12</sup> ἔχουσαι κρίμα, <sup>13</sup> ὅτι τὴν πρώτην πίστιν ἠθέτησαν. <sup>13</sup> ὁ Αἴμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάνουσι περιερχόμεναι τὰς οἰκίας· οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀργαί, ἀλλὰ καὶ

place; as in Jos. Antt. xv. 10, 5, we have ἦν τις —τοῦ βίου καλοκαγαθία μαρτυρούμενος. Mosheim well observes, that 'the Apostle lays weight on this, in order that such a widow may be publicly acknowledged as a godly person.'—εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησε. It is not necessary here to suppose any unusual sense of εἰ; it will be sufficient only to repeat χήρα καταλεγίσθω. By ἑτακν. is meant 'educated,' and, as is implied in the context, καλῶς. Comp. supra iii. 4, and see Eph. vi. 4. Of course, it must be meant of such children as she has had, if any; for we are not to suppose, as Heinr. does, that the bearing of children is here insisted on. Nay, we find, from Ecclesiastical History, that aged virgins were at a later period received into the number of the χήραι. Ἐξεν. denotes hospitably entertaining Christian brethren, though strangers; chiefly, we may suppose, travelling preachers, since ἀγίως just after occurs. On δ. πόδας ἐνέψεν see note on John xiii. 14. This observance was usually administered by, or under the superintendence of, the mistress of the house; and being, in the East, particularly grateful, is meant to designate generally kind attention to the comfort of guests. —θλιβ. ἐπήκε., 'hath ministered to those pinched by poverty.' Comp. Pyrrh. ap. Athen., p. 419, μὴ θλιβόμενος κακοπαθεῖ. In each passage there is an ellipse of ἐκ τῆς πτωλείας, which words are expressed in Artemid. On. iii. 66. See Bp. Pearson's note on Ignat. Epist. p. 17; and for an ex. of ἐπαρκ. in this later sense see Diocl. Sic. t. x. p. 120, τοὶ δεξιμένοι οἰκτῶν ἱερικοῦσα. See more in my Lex. By ἐπηκολ. is meant the following up the good work, by seizing any opportunity of practising it.

11. παραιτοῦ] 'decline,' viz. to put them on the list of widows, reject their application. So Polyb. v. 27, τοὺς ἀρχοντας παρητήσατο.—'Ὅταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χρ., 'when they run riot against Christ,' i. e. rebel against the restraints of Christianity, by a life of voluptuous luxury, unsuitable to their calling, and detrimental to the cause of the Gospel: said in allusion to the case of the ἡ σπαταλῶσα, v. 6. This is confirmed by Barnab. Epist. ad Cor., ὅταν γὰρ σπαταλώσιν, ἐκτελειῶνται τοῦ Κυρίου ταῦτα. The reading καταστρηνιάσωσι (inadvertently, but most negligently, omitted by Griesbach and also Scholz), found in some of the most ancient MSS. and Chrys., and received by Lachm. and Tisch., is probably the true reading. Internal evidence is in its favour, since the syntax is a later Greek one for the earlier and purer one with the subjunctive. It occurs also in Rev. iv. 9, ὅταν δώσωσι, though there some MSS. have (probably from correction) δώσωσι or δώσι. In Matt. v. 11, ὅταν διώδωσιν ὑμᾶς, the reading διώδιδωσιν καὶ διώξουσιν, found in some ancient MSS., is worthy of attention.

12. ἔχουσαι κρίμα—ἠθέτησαν] Expositors are not agreed whether πίστ. is to be interpreted of the Christian faith, and ἠθέτ. of abandoning it; or whether it is to be understood of the solemn engagement (perhaps by vow) to celibacy, and devoting themselves to the office of χήρα, which marriage would render impossible; and ἠθέτ. of making light of and forsaking it. As to the former interpretation, I am not aware of any example of ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν, or ἠθέτ. being ever used of casting off a religion; which, too, would not necessarily follow their marrying even with heathens, as appears from 1 Cor. vii. 14. Besides, thus the suitability of the expression πρώτης might be questioned; since Paganism was their first religion. Whereas, according to the sense it carries in the second interpretation, which I find confirmed by all the ancient Fathers, Greek and Latin, referred to by Est. in his able note, it is very apt. And the phrase ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν, in the sense fallere fidem, 'forsoke a promise or engagement,' is frequent in the later Class. writers and the Sept., both with πίστιν expressed, and also implied, as in Ps. xiv. 4, and Jer. v. 11, prob. in Paul's mind, ὡς ἠθέτησεν ὑμῶν, εἰς τὸν συνόντα αὐτῶν, οὕτως ἠθέτησεν εἰς ἐμὸν οἶκον Ἰσραὴλ, λέγει Κύριος. Hence (observes Conyb.) when a widow was received into the number of Charach-widows, a promise was required from her (or virtually understood) that she would devote herself for life to the employments which these widows undertook; viz. the education of orphans, and superintendence of the younger women.

13. Αἴμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάν. &c.] This corresponds to γαμεῖν θέλουσιν at v. 11; v. 12 being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. 'They desire to marry, and moreover, learn to be idle, by gadding about among families.' By which seems to be meant, that they made their duty, of going about to instruct the women and children, or other parts of their office (as seeking out objects of charity, see note supra v. 10), rather a means of pastime, than subservient to the purposes of their vocation. As to the connection, which is needlessly debated by the German Expositors, the most natural one (and that adopted by Winer) is, to suppose an ellipse of οὐδὲν εἰς αἶμα, and this cannot be rejected as unprecedented, since exx. are adduced by Huther, p. 170, to which I could add not a few others from Thucyd. Thus they formed habits of idleness; and not only that, but, as is added, of trifling, prying, and intermeddling; a spirit which is admirably depicted in the masterly sketches of Theophrastus, περὶ λαλίας, and περὶ περιεργίας. Between the terms ἀργαὶ and περιεργαί, we may observe a paronomasia, as in 2 Thess. iii. 11. Φλόρος comes from φλόος, a bubble; since to blow up such, well designates the occupation of a trifler.—αλαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δ. is an

φλύαροι καὶ περιέργοι, λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δέοντα. <sup>14</sup> <sup>ε</sup> Βούλομαι οὖν νεωτέρας γαμεῖν, τεκνογονεῖν, οἰκοδεσποτεῖν, μηδεμίαν ἀφορμὴν δίδοναι τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ λαιδορίας χάριν. <sup>15</sup> ἤδη γάρ τινες ἐξετράπησαν ὀπίσω τοῦ Σατανᾶ. <sup>16</sup> <sup>η</sup> Εἴ τις πιστὸς ἢ πιστὴ ἔχει χήρας, ἐπαρκεῖτω αὐταῖς, καὶ μὴ βαρεῖσθω ἢ ἐκκλησίᾳ· ἵνα ταῖς ὁντως χήραις ἐπαρκεσθῇ.

<sup>17</sup> <sup>ι</sup> Οἱ καλῶς προσεστώτες πρεσβύτεροι διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιοσθωσαν, μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ. <sup>18</sup> <sup>κ</sup> λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ· Βοῦν ἀλοῦντα οὐ φιμώσεις· καὶ ἄξιός ἐ ἐργάτης τοῦ μισθοῦ αὐτοῦ. <sup>19</sup> <sup>ι</sup> Κατὰ πρεσβυτέρου κατηγορίαν

euphemism for 'talking scandal.' So Eurip. Phoen. 205, φιλοφρον γὰρ χρήμα θηλειῶν ἔφην· Συκράτες δ' ἀφορμὰς ἦν λάβωσι τῶν λόγων, Πλίστους ἐπεισφέρουσιν. ἡδονὴ δὲ τις ἔνταίξι, μηδὲν ὕγιαι ἀλλήλαις λέγειν.

<sup>14</sup>. νεωτέρας] i. e. the younger widows, not eromen, as in our Common Version; for of those alone the context treats. Indeed, χήρας is added in several MSS., and expressed by the Greek Commentators.—βούλομαι is to be understood, not of injunction, but only of wish that they would marry rather than make engagements and break them; q. d. 'I wish them to marry again, — if they are so inclined and have opportunity, — rather than aim at what they cannot attain, — namely, the dedicating of themselves, by celibacy, to the promotion of the Gospel.' So also the words are explained by Calv., Hyper., and Grot. It is not enough to say, with Chrys. and others, that in βούλομαι—γαμεῖν the Apostle points out a remedy to the younger widows, whereby they will give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully of the Gospel, such as would be given by the conduct described in vv. 11—13. That, however, is a circumstance which may be implied in the other,—namely, τεκνογ. and οἰκοδεσπ., suppl. eis τὸ ὅτι, and that equiv. to ἵνα τεκνογονῶσι καὶ οἰκοδουῶσι, 'that they may be occupied in the various duties of wives, and mothers, and house-keepers:' these three terms, γαμεῖν, τεκνογονεῖν, and οἰκοδεσποτεῖν, comprehending, as Bengel remarks, the three grades of female domestic society.—μηδεμίαν ἀφορμὴν, &c., 'and [thereby] give no handle, &c.'—τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ is used in a generic sense for τοῖς ἀντικειμένοις; comp. I Cor. xvi. 9. Phil. i. 20.—λαιδορίας χάριν, for λοιδορ. ἔντα, and that for eis λοιδορίας.

<sup>15</sup>. ἤδη γάρ τινες] The full sense is, 'I say what I do, for certain persons have,' &c., in the way mentioned supra 14,—or, at any rate, have, by marrying, to prevent those aberrations, violated their sacred engagements to celibacy, so indispensable to their all-absorbing office.

<sup>16</sup>. εἰ τις—ἔχει] A popular brevity of expression, meaning, 'If any believer, of either sex, have (relatives) who are (poor) widows.' I agree with De Wette, that this may denote a wider relationship, as aunts, or cousins. Tisch. has in his 2nd Ed. rightly restored πιστὸς ἢ, which in his 1st Ed. he had cancelled, with Griesb. and Lachm., from A, C, F, G, and 2 cursives; wrongly; since the words were expunged to remove an unclassical expression.

Other Critics have removed ἡ and πιστὴ,—which shows the origin of the other reading.

<sup>17</sup>. From the relief of the poor the Apostle proceeds to the support of ministers; though with an obscurity of expression (arising probably from delicacy), which prevents us from acquiring any very exact information. That a stipend was appropriated to the support of the minister is certain; but as to the amount, and the mode of collection, we are left very much in the dark. Some glimmering of light, however, may be obtained from a passage of Euseb. H. E. v. 28 (cited by Wetst.), where there is mention of a certain Bishop being engaged ὅσα λαμβάνει μηνιαία δηναρία ρν', at 150 Denaria a month.—προιστ. πριστ. must not be taken, with some, of the pastoral duties properly so called; but of the directive functions of some one ruling Presbyter, who regulated and had the government of the Church of a city, or district; in fact, the Bishop of a somewhat later period. Of ἀξιοσθῆ, the meaning is not merely, 'let them receive,' but, 'let them receive as their just due.' So Heb. iii. 3, πλείονος γὰρ δόξης οὕτως παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἤξισται. By τιμῆς may be understood both 'competent reward' and 'suitable respect'; and the term διπλῆς may (as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) be taken as standing for πολλῆς, i. e. 'liberal stipend'; exx. of which mode of expression have been adduced both from the Class. and Script. writers, though not all of them to the purpose; see 2 Kings ii. 9, and Rev. xviii. 6. This view of the sense is preferable to the one commonly adopted, because the Apostle, it may be observed, when speaking on the present subject, never descends to particulars. To avoid, however, any unnecessary curtailment of the sense, we may, with Bp. Sanderson (in his third Sermon ad Aulam, p. 393), understand this double honour, of one honour due to the place, and another due to merit in the discharge of its duties. 'For where (says he) place and merit concur, there is a double honour due.'—οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδ., i. e. discharging the regular pastoral duties. See Benson.

<sup>18</sup>. καὶ ἄξιός—αὐτοῦ] These words are no where to be found in the Old Test.; and as we are not compelled here to repeat λέγει ἡ γραφή, we may suppose that the words in question are introduced as a proverbial maxim, such as our Lord often adopted; and they are nearly parallel to his sayings at Matt. x. 10, and Luke x. 7.

<sup>19</sup>. κατὰ πρεσβ.] Not, 'an elderly person,' as many interpret, but, 'a presbyter.'—ἐπι,

μὴ παραδέχου, ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ τριῶν μαρτύρων. <sup>20</sup> Τοὺς ἀμαρτάνοντας ἐνώπιον πάντων ἔλεγε, ἵνα καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ φόβον ἔχωσι. <sup>21</sup> Διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ [Κυρίου] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν ἀγγέλων, ἵνα ταῦτα φυλάξῃς χωρὶς προκρίματος, μηδὲν ποιῶν κατὰ πρόσκλισιν. <sup>22</sup> Χεῖρας ταχέως μηδενὶ ἐπιτίθει, μηδὲ κοινώνει ἀμαρτίαις ἀλλοτρίαις σεαυτὸν ἀγνὸν τήρει. <sup>23</sup> Μηκέτι ὑδροπότηι, ἀλλ' οἶνον ὀλίγον

in Acta 6. 6.
3. 13. 2.
1 Tim. 2. 10.
2 John 11.
2 Ps. 104. 15.

'under the testimony of:' a rule founded on the Law of Moses, Deut. xix. 15, and adverted to at Matt. xviii. 16. John viii. 17.

20. τοὺς ἀμαρτ. This verse treats of those members who fall into sin. It is not agreed whether the presbyters, or the people at large, are here to be understood. The context favours the former view; but the air of the sentence, and the change of number, rather require the latter.

21. διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c.] A most solemn form of earnest injunction,—introduced, as Calvin observes, not only from the matter being very serious, but of great difficulty—to which a sentiment similar occurs in Jos. Bell. ii. 16, 4, μαρτύρομαι ὑμῶν τὰ ἅγια, καὶ τοὺς ἰερεὺς ἀγγέλους τοῦ Θεοῦ. By ἐκλεκ. ἀγγέλων are meant those angels who kept their first estate, and are, thus considered, the chosen and approved ones; see Matt. xx. 27, and note. They are here conjoined with the Lord Jesus, because they will be present at the day of judgment as accessores judicii attendant on Christ.—Κυρίου, not found in several ancient MSS., the Vulg. and Ital. Versions, and some Greek and Latin Fathers,—has been cancelled by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. But it is defended by the Pesch. Syr., Arabic, and Gothic Versions, three uncial MSS., and Chrys., besides nearly all the curiae ones, including all the Lamb. and Mus. copies. Yet, even if genuine, it will not necessarily follow that the words Θεοῦ and Κυρίου are meant to be descriptive of a single person. The doctrine thus brought in would be here out of place; and Bp. Middl. admits that there is no reason to think that the Fathers so understood the words. Nor can this be interpreted of two persons united in joint agency, as at Eph. v. 5, and yet Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. p. 216, has shown that the omission of the second article necessarily implies one or other of those two suppositions. Here, however, the persons would have to be considered quite distinct (so Est. 'coram gravissimis duobus testibus'), as infra, ch. vi. 13, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ, and 2 Tim. iv. 1, διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰ. Χριστοῦ. Comp. John viii. 15 and 16, and see note. Accordingly here the above canon would be broken, unless indeed we should suppose that the form Κύριος Ἰησ. Χρ. became so incorporated with the proper name as to be subject to the same law, and consequently did not need the Article. However, there is no great reliance to be placed on such critical niceties; and thus I would retain the Κυρίου here, as the τοῦ Κυρίου in the altogether parallel passage of 2 Tim. iv. 1, though I grant the omission of the words is countenanced by 1 Tim. vi. 13, and confirmed by strong evidence; and accordingly I have bracketed Κυρίου in both passages.—ἵνα ταῦτα φυλάξῃς, &c. This may extend to all the foregoing injunctions; but it chiefly respects the last; ταῦτα meaning, 'all these matters of discipline.'—χωρὶς προκρίματος, i. e. 'keeping yourself apart from prejudice, or prepossession; lit., fore-judging, answering to the Latin præjudicium,'—κατὰ πρόσκλισιν, 'through partiality,' or undue favour. The word is used by good, chiefly however later, writers, as Polyb., Sex. Emp., and Josephus.—Lachm. indeed has edited πρόσκλησιν, from a few ancient and many modern MSS. and Athanas. But no external authority can suffice to establish a reading, which is capable of no sense at all suitable, and which evidently sprung from what is called itacism. In fact, πρόσκλισις has elsewhere not unfrequently been corrupted into πρόσκλησις, of which no less than six instances are adduced by Hemsterh. on Aristoph. Plut. p. 373; and more may be added from two passages of St. Basil, cited by Cotelier on Clem. Rom. ad Cor. § 21, where, with the present passage evidently in mind, he writes, τὴν ἀγάπην αὐτῶν μὴ κατὰ πρόσκλισις, ἀλλὰ πᾶσιν τοῖς φοβουμένοις τὸν Θεὸν ὁμῶς ἰσὴν παρικήτουςαν.—a strong confirmation of the reading πρόσκλισις here, and demanding it in those two passages.

22. χεῖρας ταχέως μηδ. ἐπιτίθει.] The true sense, according to all the ancient, and nearly all the modern Expositors is, 'Lay hands (for ordination) hastily, or precipitately (see note on Gal. i. 6, and 2 Thess. ii. 2), on no man.' So Chrys. well explains, πολλὰκις περισσεψάμενος καὶ ἀκριβῶς ἐξετάσας. The German Commentators, however, from Heinr. down to De Wette and Wiesing., interpret this 'laying of hands' as merely the form of restoration of penitents to Church-fellowship. But the proofs they adduce of the practice only refer to a far later period of the Church. They appeal, indeed, to the preceding context; but in vain; for nothing is there said of exclusion from the Church, but only of ἔλεγχις, a sort of public reprimand; a very different thing. Besides, according to that interpretation, the words of the next clause μηδὲ κοινώνει ἀμαρτ. ἀλλοτ. will yield a very jejune sense. Whereas, according to the usual exposition, the words admit of a very suitable sense, if at least regarded as a popular mode of speaking, denoting the being accountable for the delinquencies of life, or short-comings in duty, of the candidate so inconsiderately ordained. See the able notes of Hyper. and Est. As to the next clause, I have long ago pointed out, in my Recens. Synop., that σεαυτὸν is emphatic; and that ἀγν. must not be understood of the foregoing delinquencies; and this I find confirmed by the suffrage of De Wette and Wiesing., who agree with me in thinking the sense to be, 'Keep thyself from sins, so as to be the better able to rebuke the sins of others.'

χρῶ, διὰ τὸν στόμαχόν σου καὶ τὰς πυκνάς σου ἀσθενείας.
 24 Τινῶν ἀνθρώπων αἱ ἁμαρτίαι πρόδηλοι εἰσι, προάγουσαι εἰς κρίσιν τισὶ δὲ καὶ ἐπακολουθοῦσιν. 25 Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰ κατὰ ἔργα πρόδηλά ἐστι καὶ τὰ ἄλλως ἔχοντα κρυβῆναι οὐ δύναται.

VI. 1. 1 "Ὅσοι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν δούλοι, τοὺς ἰδίους δεσπότης πάσης τιμῆς ἀξίους ἡγείσθωσαν, ἵνα μὴ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ διδασκαλία βλασφημηθῇ. 2 Οἱ δὲ πιστοὺς ἔχοντες δεσπότης, μὴ καταφρονεῖτωσαν, ὅτι ἀδελφοί εἰσιν ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλευ-ἔτωσαν, ὅτι πιστοὶ εἰσι καὶ ἀγαπητοὶ οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας αὐτι-

23. μηκέτι ὕδρω., &c.] The abruptness complained of here, and which Schleierm. calls 'the awkwardly introduced particularity,' will cease to give offence, if the following suggestion of Thos. Scott be duly weighed. 'It occurred to the Apostle's mind, when reflecting on Timothy's manifold cares and labours, that his frequent indispositions might be increased by too great abstemiousness, to the prevention of his usefulness, and the shortening of his days. He therefore broke in upon his subject ('contextum abruptum.' Calv.), to counsel him not to drink water any longer, at least as his only liquor, but to use a little wine, to strengthen his stomach, and preserve his health.' See also Macknight.

24, 25. This must (Hyper. thinks) be connected with what precedes, there being here an ἐπαναφορά or regressio. The general meaning (he says) may be thus expressed: 'Keep thyself pure from all participation in other men's sins [by ordaining unfit persons to the ministry;] [To avoid which, however, will require much circumspection and consideration]; for though some men's sins are discernible without any close examination, anticipating, as it were, the judgment passed on them after examination; yet, in other persons, their faults only follow, being known only after much examination. In like manner it is with respect to men's virtues. Some immediately appear; while others are only known after long acquaintance with the persons.' I would comp. Soph. Œd. Tyr. 614, Χρόνος δίκαιον ἀνδρὰ δαίτυναι μόνος. Κακὸν δὲ καὶ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ γινώκει μῆ. The foregoing connexion will, however, depend on the reference to σεαυτὸν ἀγνόν τῆρει, which, if interpreted as I have done, will forbid the connexion traced by Hyper. However, there is nothing to prevent us from supposing that Paul had in mind the reference in question; and the view taken by Hyper. is ably maintained by St. Augustine, cited by Est.

25. καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἔχοντα, &c.] meaning, 'and those works which are otherwise [than manifest] (i. e. οὐ πρόδηλα) cannot [whether they be good or bad] be long hid.' See more in Calv., Hyper., and Whitby.—To advert to matters of various reading. For τὰ κατὰ ἔργα, Lachm. and Tisch. read τὰ ἔργα τὰ κατὰ. They also cancel ἐστι, and read δύναται. The two last emendations are prob. well founded, since they have internal evidences in their favour, as existing in the circumstance of the double reading ἐστι and εἰσι. The first reading has every appearance of being a mere correction of style, such as is very often found elsewhere in the four uncials and four cursives, which contain this reading. There is still less to be said for the δὲ, after ὡσαύτως, inserted by Lachm. (and Tisch. in his first Ed.), from A, F, G, only, so to say, two copies, F, G being fellow copies, from the same original. The Critic had in view such passages as Mark xiv. 31. Luke xx. 3. Rom. viii. 26, not aware that the style of the Pastoral Epistles is different, espec. in the sparing use of Particles.

VI. 1. The admonitions in this and the following verse are (as appears from ver. 3) intended to correct certain contrary positions of the false teachers (commonly supposed to have been Judaizers), who, it seems, wanted to introduce into the Christian Church the doctrine,—that, as no Jew was to remain a slave for life, so ought no Christian; thus releasing men from all civil duties, under the pretence of religious rights, to the great scandal of the Gospel. Indeed, into errors of this kind ignorant or unreflecting persons might easily fall (partly by misinterpreting the metaphorical language of the Apostle), even without being perverted by any Judaizing teachers. It was obvious that the spirit of the Gospel is adverse to slavery. Indeed, in proportion as its injunctions are obeyed, it tends to root out a practice, in which folly and crime are alike conspicuous. Hence it was natural for persons so ignorant as slaves, to regard the Gospel as freeing men from all obligations that are intrinsically and fundamentally inconsistent with justice and equity. Thus the Apostle's admonition was highly seasonable.—Ὅσοι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν &c. We may notice the strength of this expression, in which there is a blending of two (comp. Gal. v. 1, ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε), and that, prob., in order to put the case in its strongest point of view (supposing even the harsh bondage), and thereby make the injunction to obedience the more forcible. See parallel exhortations in Eph. vi. 5—8, and 1 Pet. ii. 18, where see notes.

2. μὴ καταφ.] scil. αὐτῶν, meaning, 'let them not be neglectful (or disregarding) [of their orders],' as being in spiritual matters on an equality with their masters. This absolute use of καταφρ. is very rare, but occurs also in Jos. Antt. xiii. 6, 1.—ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλεύειτωσαν, 'but let them (i. e. the slaves) serve them the rather,' i. e. be the more zealous in their service. So μᾶλλον ἀγαπᾶν in John iii. 19, and xii. 43, and oft. elsewh. The term ἀγαπητοὶ serves to strengthen the preceding one, πιστοί. The next words, οἱ τῆς εὐεργ. ἀντιλ., must not, with some, be referred to the slaves, but to the masters. The words ὅτι πιστοὶ εἰσι—ἀντιλαμβάνομενοι, 'because those who are partakers of the benefit of their good service are b Gal. 1. 6, 7. λαμβανόμενοι. Ταῦτα διδασκε καὶ παρακάλε. <sup>3</sup> b Εἴ τις ἑτερο-

 ch. 1. 4, 6.
 διδασκαλεῖ, καὶ μὴ προσέρχεται ὑγαίνουσι λόγοις τοῖς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῇ κατ' εὐσέβειαν διδασκαλίᾳ,
 c 1 Cor. 8. 2.
 ch. 1. 4.
 2 Tim. 2. 22.
 Tit. 2. 9.
 d Rom. 16.
 17.
 2 Tim. 2. 5, 6.
 3 Pet. 2. 2.
 3 John 10.
 e Prov. 18.
 16.
 ch. 4. 8.
 Heb. 12. 5.
<sup>4</sup> c τετύφωται, μηδὲν ἐπιστάμενος, ἀλλὰ νοσῶν περὶ ζητήσεις καὶ λογομαχίας, ἐξ ὧν γίνεταί φθόνος, ἔρις, βλασφημίας, ὑπόνοιαι πονηραὶ, <sup>5</sup> d † παραδιατριβαὶ διεφθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων τὸν νοῦν, καὶ ἀπεστερημένων τῆς ἀληθείας, νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τὴν εὐσέβειαν. [Ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.] <sup>6</sup> c *Ἔστι δὲ faithful and beloved,' i.e. beloved brethren in the Lord. Comp. Philem. 16.

3. εἰ τις ἑτεροδ.] meaning, 'If any teach other doctrine,—doctrines different from those I have oft enjoined you to teach and exhort.' See supra l. 3, and note. The next words, καὶ μὴ προσέρχεται—διδασκαλίᾳ, are explanatory of the foregoing, and further develop the train of thought: they may be rendered, 'and does not accede to (assent to) the wholesome words of Christ, and to the teaching which is agreeable to godliness, or leads to it in a godly life.' See Calv. The ὑγ. λόγους, equiv. to ὑγ. διδασκ. in 1 Tim. i. 10, means, as Wiesing, says, and De Wette admits, 'some doctrine in opposition to that of the seducers, which is unsound through a profitless γνῶσις.' The opposition being between doctrine which leads to godliness and one not promotive, but subversive, of it. See Calv. But how, then, can Wiesing. say that 'the words τῇ κατ' εὐσέβ. διδασκ. are unnecessarily added to the preceding?' He might just as well have said that the words of the preceding clause were unnecessary. He, however, forgets that the words of both clauses are necessary to convey the full sense intended. The words τοῖς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμ. might have been dispensed with; and I wonder that they were not pronounced by De Wette, or Wiesing., unnecessary. If any think them so, let them learn their true scope from Hyper.—'Doctrinam quam exposuit [Apostolus] in hac epistola vocat sermones Christi, quia nimirum tota à Christo est tradita, neque usquam vel latum unguem discedens à Christo, ideoque meritò ei adhaerendum.'

δ. παραδιατριβαί] The reading here is uncertain. Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. edit, from 5 uncial and about 20 cursive MSS. (to which I add several Lamb. and Mus. copies), διαπατρ. But the compound διαπατρ. is almost unexampled, and good reasons are given by Tittman, de Synon., p. 233, why that reading cannot be admitted. The παρα in this word denotes, as Heinrichs observes, inanity, and the δια vehemence. Thus the expression aptly designates the folly as well as violence of the contest excited by the angry competition above alluded to. On attentive reconsideration of the question as respects the disputed reading here, I am still of opinion that Tittman's reasoning, which formerly induced me to retain παραδιατριβαί, are no less than irresistible. Vain is it to plead strong, but not paramount, external authority in favour of what would be a mere barbarism, but which might easily arise through inadvertence on the part of the scribes; and certainly the very ancient MSS. in which it is found (namely, A, D, F, C, I) abound in such errors. It might, however, proceed from Critics, who preferred that position of the Prepositions, just as others, stumbling at the use of two Prepositions in composition, thought fit to remove one, but could not agree on which. Thus some read παρατριβαί, others, as K, and some cursives (to which I add Lamb. 1185), διατριβαί. Thus we see how little reason there was for Wiesing. to pronounce διαπατρ. the best accredited reading. The next words, διεφθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων, &c., seem meant, by adverting to the character and disposition of the persons themselves, to intimate the wholesome truth, that (as Hyperius says) 'ex conditione doctorum solet eorum doctrinae estimari;' q. d. 'It is not likely that any wholesome doctrine can come from those whose minds and consciences are corrupt, and consequently destitute of truth.'—νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τὴν εὐσέβειαν. Here we have an illustration of the corruptness just adverted to. Render: 'supposing that godliness is gain,' i.e. regarding the Gospel, or any other religion, only as it may be subservient to gain; for I agree with Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. Dial. p. 172, that 'the absence of the Article before πορ., while εὐσέβ. has it (as being used in its most abstract sense) shows that the former is the predicate, and accordingly that the sense must be, 'supposing that godliness is a mode of gain,' a mere gainful trade. Of sentences similarly constructed I have already adduced several ex. from Xen., Dion. Hal., Zosimus, Joseph., and Philo, to which it may suffice to refer my readers. There is an earnest gravity, and deep wisdom, in the subsequent injunction.—ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων are, indeed, not in MSS. A, D, F, G, and 3 cursives (to which I can make no addition), also in the Vulg., Ital., and some later Versions, and are cancelled by Griesb., Lachm., and Tisch., but retained by Matth and Scholz, with reason; since external authority is insufficient, and internal evidence is not decidedly against them. It cannot be said that they were interpolated from other passages. They may have been introduced because they seemed called for, like that in Rom. xvi. 17, ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἰκκάλιατα, from which passage, however, it could not be taken, otherwise the term ἰκκάλια would have been taken with it. In short, it is more likely to have been accidentally omitted in six MSS. than to have been interpolated in all the rest, and in the Syr. Version. The words were read by Chrys., Basil, Theophyl., and Theodor. Even Est. here goes against his Vulgate, but consoles himself with showing that the words were formerly in the Latin copies, by appealing to Ambrosian.

6. ἔστι δὲ πορισμός, &c.] Here such a skilful turn is given to the foregoing position, as to make it express a weighty truth,—namely, that 'piety is not, as the false teachers deem it, a losing concern, but that it is piety itself that is the gain;' meaning, that religion, if accompanied with that contented spirit which it alone, through a true faith, teaches (a disposition well said by Bp. Sanderson to consist 'in the mutual and relative sufficiency of the things unto the mind, and the mind unto the things'), produces the truest gain, even the greatest happiness here, and everlasting life hereafter.

πορισμὸς μέγας ἢ εὐσέβεια μετὰ αὐταρκείας. <sup>7</sup> οὐδὲν γὰρ <sup>1</sup> Job 1. 21. εἰσηνέγκαμεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον δῆλον ὅτι οὐδὲ ἐξευηγείν τι δυνά- <sup>2</sup> & 27. 19. μεθα· <sup>3</sup> ἔχοντες δὲ διατροφὰς καὶ σκεπάσματα, τοῦτοις ἀρκε- <sup>4</sup> Ps. 46. 18. σθησόμεθα. <sup>5</sup> Οἱ δὲ βουλόμενοι πλουτεῖν, ἐμπίπτουσιν εἰς <sup>6</sup> Prov. 27. 24. πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα, καὶ ἐπιθυμίας πολλὰς ἀνοήτους καὶ βλα- <sup>7</sup> Eccles. 5. 14. <sup>8</sup> & Eccles. 29. <sup>9</sup> Matt. 6. 25. <sup>10</sup> 1 Pet. 5. 7. <sup>11</sup> h Prov. 11. <sup>12</sup> & 20. 21. & 28. 20. Matt. 12. 25. James 5. 1.

7. The Apostle now, as Theodor. observes, confirms the above position from the very nature of things.—οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσηνέγκαμεν, &c. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. 'Why should we be so anxious to secure what can stand us in so little stead, and will fail us so soon? since there is nothing we can long enjoy; for we brought,' &c. Comp. Philo. p. 852, μηδὲν ἐς κόσμον, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸν εἰσηνέγκας· γυμνός μιν γὰρ ἔλθει, γυμνὸς πάλιν ἐξίτη· Δῆλον ὅτι, γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτι. Three uncial MSS., and one cursive, are without δῆλον, which was cancelled by Lachm. and by Tisch. (1st ed.), though in his second he has restored it, and very properly; for it has not only the weight of authority in its favour, but it is indispensable to the sense, because the ὅτι without δῆλον is worse than useless.

8. The Apostle here shows in what this αὐτάρκεια (ver. 6) consists.—διατροφάς. The word is put in the plural, in order to answer to σκεπάσματα, which term has the same sense as our clothes; and so it is used in Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 5, ζωσάμενοι σκεπάσασαι λινοῖς. In διατροφάς the δια is very significant, importing a perpetual supply of necessary food, the 'provisus fruges in annum' of Horace.—τούτοις ἀρκεσθυσόμεθα, not, erimus, as many Translators and Expositors render, but, simus, 'we must be, it is our duty to be, self-sufficing;' the Fut. Ind. being here put for imperat. (necessarily, indeed, since the Fut. -θήσομαι has no imper. and no conjunctive, and accordingly the reading ἀρκεσθυσόμεθα is no other than a solecism); though this use has place only in cases where, as here, the word has that sense by which it expresses what is proper to be done, what ought, by the situation of the person, to be done. See Matth. Gr. § 511, 5 A., and Winer, Gr. § 44, 3. Of this the Apostle gave not only the precept, but the example. Thus in Phil. iv. 11, he says, ἡμᾶς—αὐτάρκεις εἶναι, and then are subjoined the affecting words μεμνημέναι—ὑποτασσάσθαι, language pointing both at the difficulty of attaining this αὐτάρκεια, and the means by which it is to be overcome,—namely, by the 'independentness of the spirit' through Christ, as adverted to in the next verse. Very similar is the language, and scarcely less affecting, of the greatest of dramatic Poets in his noble Drama, the Œdip. Colon., where at the beginning he introduces Œdipus, saying to his daughter Antigone, Τίς τὸν πλανήτην Οἰδίπου

καθ' ἡμέραν | τὴν νῦν σπανιστοῖς δέξεται δωρήμασιν | σμικρὸν μὲν ἔξαιτουντα, τοῦ σμικροῦ δ' ἔτι | μαῖον φέροντα, καὶ ('and yet') τοῦ ἐξαρκοῦν ἡμῶς | Στήργειν γὰρ αἱ πάθαι μαχρὰ μακροὶ χρόνοι | ξυνὸν διδάσκει, καὶ τὸ γυναιὸν τρίτον, where the Schol. well regards τὸδ' ἐξαρκοῦν as equiv. to ὅπως γοῦν τοῦτοις ἀρκοῦμενοι, and he with great taste explains τὸ γυναιὸν by τὸ τῆς ἀνδρείας πλεονεκτημα.

9, 10. In these verses we have arguments against avarice from the extreme perils in which riches involve men; and those are exemplified. In vain is it that some recent Commentators have attempted to refine away this impressive admonition, by referring it to mere Jewish notions. Avarice and idolatry are, indeed, compared, both in the Old and New Test.; not that they are of equal guilt, but in order to show the great guilt of the former. And that covetousness is in the Gospel regarded as highly criminal, the strong language of the Apostle puts beyond a doubt.

9. οἱ βουλόμενοι πλουτεῖν] 'those who study to be rich,' and devote their thoughts to the increase of their wealth, making this their great end and aim.—ἐμπίπτουσιν εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα. Render, not as in our Common Version, 'fall into temptation and a snare,' but, 'into temptation and snare,' the term snare being put generically for the plural snares. And so, indeed, Tyndale has in his Version 'temptation and snares.' There may be (what many of the most learned Expositors suppose) a Hendiadys for εἰς πειρασμοῦ παγίδα, 'ensnaring temptation.' But the objection to this view is, that thus the words would only advert to those ill-odors which ensnare men by the various temptations which beset them from their corrupt nature. This, however, is not the exact meaning here intended by the Apostle,—who rather adverts to the temptations proceeding from the snares of the evil one, through his agents, and against which we are taught in the Lord's Prayer daily to pray. Thus the expression καὶ παγίδα is (as Hyper., Crell., and Est. well saw) meant to communicate a certain emphasis to the foregoing term πειρασμὸν, and to advert to the kind of temptation here had in view. The next words forcibly advert to the pernicious and baleful effects thence resulting. By the terms ἀνοήτους καὶ βλαβ. it is meant not only that they are hurtful, but such as are unworthy of a being endowed with the faculty of reason (νοῦς), who, being thus raised above the animals, ought to rise above them in such animal propensities. So Longinus, de Subl. § 44, says that when men are devoted to avarice and sensuality, and the cognate passions and affections, they can no longer look upwards; and that mental greatness must pine away and be neglected, when men τὰ θνητὰ λατρεύει μέρη καὶ ἀνόητα ἐκθαυμάζουσιν, παρίντες αἰεὶ τὰ ἀθάνατα. It is true that βερὰς, αἵτινες βυθίζουσι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους εἰς ὄλεθρον καὶ ἀπώλειαν <sup>10</sup> ῥίζα γὰρ πάντων τῶν κακῶν ἐστὶν ἡ φιλαργγυρία, ἥς τινὲς ὀρεγόμενοι ἀπεπλανήθησαν ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως, καὶ ἐάν τοὺς περιέπειραν ὀδύνας πολλὰς. <sup>11</sup> Σὺ δὲ, ὦ ἄνθρωπε τοῦ

1 Prov. 1. 10.
2 Isa. 15.
3 Isa. 1. 22.
4 Jer. 5. 11.
5 1 Tim. 2.
6 2.

for ἀνοήτους, several MSS., and Versions, have ἀνοήτους, which has been approved by many Critics. But the t. rec. is decidedly preferable, and is confirmed by the use of this very term with ἐπιθυμία in Pausan. Arcad. p. 202, εἰς ἐπιθυμίας δὲ ἀνοήτους πολλοὶ ἐξοκέλλουσι. In short, it arose, if not from an error of scribes, from an alteration of vain Critics, who thought, as is their wont, they were improving the expression (q. d. 'useless, nay, injurious'), not aware that the term ἐπιθ. is employed, not only with reference to the vain expenses of the rich and luxurious, but as applied to all other lusts—in fact, what is contained in the expressive words of St. John, 1 Epist. ii. 16, ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν καὶ ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου, to all which may be applied the epithet foolish, because they are unworthy of the attention of a rational being. Such may truly be called 'vain things which cannot profit, for they are vain,' wholly unproductive of good, cheating their votaries with the shadow, but never giving them the substance, solid happiness; and hence truly termed in Eph. iv. 22, ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης. Hurtful they are in many ways, as destructive alike of health and fortune, plunging their victims into an abyss of utter ruin and destruction inevitable. In the words following, βυθίζουσιν εἰς ὄλεθρον καὶ ἀπώλειαν there is an almost poetical boldness of metaphor; which, it would seem, may be derived from a ship that is plunged head foremost into the abyss of the sea, never more to rise. See Polyb. ii. 10. 5. Diod. Sic. xi. 18. The same metaphorical use is found in Longin. de Sublim. § 44, ἡ γὰρ φιλοχρηματία, πρὸς ἢ πάντες ἀπληστώσας ἤδη νοσοῦμεν, καὶ ἡ φιληδονία, δουλαγωγοῦσι, μάλλον δὲ, ὥς ἂν εἴποι τις, καταβυθίζουσι αὐτάνδρουν ἤδη τοὺς βίους. Of course, the abyss here meant is, as the subsequent words point out, the abyss of destruction (a phrase found in Hippocr. Epist.), that of utter ruin, as a bottomless abyss; though there is prob., as Bretschn. and Wiesing. suppose, an allusion to the pit of eternal perdition in Hell (see Rev. ix. 2).

10. That these are the consequences of desiring to be rich is now confirmed, as at v. 7, by a general, and seemingly proverbial truth, as to the love of money. Some Expositors, not aware of this, and wishing to avoid what they think too sweeping an assertion, and one scarcely justified by facts, would render, 'a root of all evils;' and others, 'the root of all these (i. e. the above-mentioned) evils is,' &c. Of which two expositions the former would violate the usus loquendi, according to which the Article, though not expressed, is necessarily implied in the πάντων; for a root of all evils is surely a contradiction in terms. As to the latter, it is quite against the idiom of the Greek language, which would require to express such a sense, πάντων τούτων τῶν κακῶν. Indeed the sense itself would be one not sufficiently strong for the context; it being evident that the Apostle meant to say, as Hyper. explains, 'In summâ quoniam difficile esset enumerare omnia mala et pericula quæ ab avaritiâ proveniunt, ipsa est omnium malorum radix et origo.' Nor need we scruple on the ground that some few vices which are also productive of great evils (as lust) seem unconnected with avarice, though they are not so in effect,—and one might take as literally true what is said by Ammian. Marcell. l. xxxi. 4, 'Cupiditates (sunt) materia omnium vitiorum;' which will include φιληδονία as well as φιλοχρηματία. Be that as it may,—here, as Calvin remarks, it was certainly not the Apostle's intention to include under avarice whatever species of vices can be named: he simply means to say (by a popular hyperbole, πάντων standing for πολλῶν, very many) that 'infinite are the evils resulting from this one;' or, as Bp. Sanderson paraphrases, 'this is the root of very many and even almost of all evils;' it being, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the root of all, as most productive thereof. So corresponding to the saying of Bion, μητρόπολις τῆς κακίας φιλαργγυρία.—Ἐάν τοὺς περιέπειραν ὀδ. π. It is strange that some Expositors of note should take the sense to be, 'have pierced themselves all over from head to foot.' The περι in περιέπειρ. is for ἐπὶ or ἐν; and the term signifies properly to stick any thing upon a sharp stake, &c., or to stick the stake into it, of which sense many exx. are adduced; and, metaph., to inflict acute agony. Indeed, the very phrase π. ὀδόν. occurs in Homer and Orpheus, cited by West; to which I add Æsop, Fab. 504, κακοὶ ἰαντοὺς περιπαίροντες ἀποκρίσιν, 'unexpected evils.' See exx. in my Lex., and add Thucyd. vii. 84. 'Ὀδύνη is a very strong term, derived, I apprehend, from ὀδοῦν, and thus denoting literally 'a gnawing pain,' 'sharp grief,' an expression most applicable to the present case; for, as Bp. Sanderson well observes (in his 5th Sermon ad Aulam, p. 428), 'whilst men (divided between hope and fear), through the desire of having, hang in suspense between the hope of getting and the fear of missing, they cannot but hence suffer many keen sorrows, and create to themselves much unrest.'

11. σὺ δὲ—διώκε, &c.] Having thus warned Timothy to shun the various vices and evil dispositions before enumerated, Paul now enjoins him to cultivate those virtues most opposed thereto,—virtues which here, as in a similar enumeration at 1 Pet. i. 5–7, form a beautiful chain, not a link of which can be dispensed with; so here too, as at Rom. ix. 30, 31. 1 Cor. xii. 1; and Heb. xii. 14, he employs the forcible term διώκε, which properly signifies to press after, and figur., to earnestly endeavour to attain to. So in Eurip. Ion 440, we have the very phrase διώκε ἀρετάς. In doing this, Paul intended to remind Tim. of his devoted duty, in addressing him by a title, ἀνθ. π. Θεοῦ, formerly given to the prophets of the Old Test., and therefore very suitable to the inspired teachers of the New, and, indeed, to Ministers of succeeding ages, as denoting 'one devoted to God, and employed in making his will known unto

Θεοῦ, ταῦτα φεύγε· δώκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, εὐσέβειαν, πίστιν, ἀγάπην, ὑπομονήν, † πραότητα. <sup>12</sup> Ἄγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τῆς πίστεως, ἐπιλαβοῦ τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς, εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλήθης, καὶ ὁμολόγησας τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν ἐνώπιον πολλῶν μαρτύ-

11 Cor. 2.
Phil. 2. 12.
14.
ch. 1. 12.
ver. 12.
1 Tim. 4. 7.

man.' See 2 Cor. v. 20 and 2 Tim. iii. 17. The τοῦ before Θεοῦ has no place in the Alex. MS. and one or two cursives, and was cancelled by Lachm. and by Tisch. in his 1st Ed., though in his 2nd he restored it; very properly; for an omission in so very few MSS. may well be ascribed to accident. In fact, Θεοῦ is found with the article in the only other passage where St. Paul uses the expression, namely, 2 Tim. iii. 17, also almost always in the Sept. (whence St. Paul derived the expression), except it be omitted for some reason, as is the case in 2 Pet. i. 21, ἄγιοι Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι (where, however, the Alex. MS. alone has it), since it there forms a sort of compound term, denoting 'men who speak from God,' as also in 2 Kings iv. 20 (whence St. Peter derived the expression), ἴγνων δτι ἄνθρωπος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄγιος οὗτος, scil. ἵσται, 'a holy man of God,' for the addition of ἄγιος makes a difference. The expression, indeed, occurs in Philo de Abrahamo, p. 292, in its briefest form, namely, ἄνθρωπος Θεοῦ; but it is very rare; and the style of Philo is not that of St. Paul. In the O. T. it occurs about 50 times (always as used either of prophets, or priests, such as Elijah, Elisha, Shemaiah, or, at least, such as had a Divine commission, as Moses, Samuel, or David), and it is almost always, except for some particular reason, used with the Article. The expression seems to include a twofold idea, of one speaking by Divine revelation, through the Spirit (προφήτης), and one acting by Divine authority; in short, of a Divinely commissioned messenger and Divinely instituted minister of God (as were Moses and others): here the Genit. adverts to the source of the revelation and of the authority, —namely, God himself. As respects its use in the N. T., in the passage of 2 Pet. i. 21, the former of the above two ideas is that espec. dwelt on, though the latter is implied. In the passages of St. Paul (1 Tim. vi. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 16) it represents a general idea under that of an individualized and particular one, —denoting one who is Divinely commissioned to teach the truths of the Gospel, and is Divinely illuminated for that purpose, so as to be a fit steward of the manifold mysteries of God.' See more in my note on 2 Pet. i. 21. But, to revert to the exanumeration above noticed, as employed in the present passage, the Apostle, we may observe, keeps much to generalities; while at Gal. v. 22, where he specifies or exemplifies the fruits of the Spirit, he is more particular. It is, however, worthy of remark, that, as he commences this list with the master virtue, and pre-eminent characteristic of the Christian religion, δικαιοσύνη, or 'the doing unto others as we would they should do unto us,' so he ends both lists with the qualities of meekness and forbearance; meaning, it would seem, to intimate, that by these alone can the other virtues be made effectual to the great purpose of 'the man of God,' even 'the salvation of souls.' By these, indeed, the 'wisdom which cometh from above' is evinced to be pure, in that it is peaceable (see James iii. 17): and well does patience hold the prominent place here assigned to it, 'patience being (as Bp. Sanderson admirably terms it) the great Peace-maker.'—To advert to a matter of various reading. For πραότητα, 3 uncial, and 2 cursive, MSS. have πραῦπάθειαν, which is received into the text by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. The reading is not a little specious, espec. considering that Ignat., Epist. ad Trall., may be thought to allude to the word, when he says, τὴν πραῦπάθειαν ἀναλαμβάνετε. But that is uncertain, and, although the word is used by Philo, t. ii. p. 31, and Phot. Bibl. p. 160, and πραῦπαθῆς by St. Basil, and πραῦπαθῶς by Philo, it never occurs either in the Sept. or in the Apocrypha, and is too philosophical and artificial a term to suit the plain style of St. Paul. As to the authority of Eph. Syr., if the passage be to the purpose (but I have not the opportunity of consulting it with the context), it would have some weight, but not a preponderating one, because he lived long after the age of our earliest uncial MSS. Upon the whole, I am willing, in deference to the opinion of Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., to consider the matter as an open question, though I cannot think St. Paul employed the term; but I rather suspect that the reading was introduced, at a very early period, by the ancient critics as an improvement on the plain term πραότητα, on which I have fully treated in note on 1 Cor. iv. 21.

12. ἀγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τ. π.] Said with reference to the whole of his exertions, whether in the defence, or in the illustration of the faith, both by words and actions. Καλόν, 'good, or honourable.' This, indeed, it might well be termed, as compared with the ignoble objects which called forth the exertions of the ἀγωνισταί. The same agnostic allusion (also observable at 1 Cor. ix. 24—27) is kept up in the words following.—ἐπιλαβοῦ τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς, &c. Render: 'Lay hold of (endeavour to get hold of, obtain) the eternal life to which thou wert called, and, accordingly, hast confessed the good confession.' In ἐπιλ. there is an agnostic metaphor, eternal life being represented under the image of a βραβίσιον, or prize to be contended for in the games. 'Ἐπιλ. properly signifies to get hold of, cling by any thing, as a rope, &c., and hence it comes to bear the sense obtain; but is here used simply of the endeavour, like not a few other verbs. I have expressed the force of the τῆς before ζωῆς, because it has an especial reference to the εἰς ἣν ἐκλήθης following. And I am not aware that St. Paul, at least, has ever employed ἡ ζωῆς as a noun in its most abstract sense, like ἡ πίστις, ἡ εὐσέβεια, ἡ ἰλπίς. —Εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλ., 'to which thou wert, or hast been, called,'—namely, at his baptism, and afterwards at his ordination, which latter is espec. adverted to in the next words, with allusion to the public profession of faith, τὴν καλὴν ὁμολ., 'the good confession or profession,' which always accompanied the rite. Now this might well be called καλή, as being a full profession of faith in Deut. 23.

Bl M

1 Sam. 2. 6.
Matt. 27. 11.
John 15. 27.
ch. 2. 21.

n ch. 1. 11.
17. & 11.
Rev. 17. 14.
& 19. 16.

ρων. <sup>13</sup> Παράγγελλω σοι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζῶσποιούντος τὰ πάντα, καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ μαρτυρήσαντος ἐπὶ Ποντίου Πιλάτου τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν, <sup>14</sup> τηρῆσαι σε τὴν ἐντολὴν ἁσπιλον, ἀνεπίληπτον, μέχρι τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>15</sup> ἦν καιροῖς ἰδίους δείξει ὁ μακῦριος καὶ μόνος δυ-

and hope, and a solemn engagement to give himself wholly to the work of the ministry.

13. What the Apostle had before enjoined in figures, he now expresses in the natural way; making, however, what he says yet more impressive from the solemnity of the manner, taking God and Christ as witnesses to his injunctions. But here a matter of reading has to be settled before exposition can be fixed.—τοῦ ζῶσποιούντος τ. π. Four uncial and six cursive MSS. have, for ζῶσποιούντος, ζωογονούντος, which has been adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.; insufficient authority. It may, indeed, be thought that ζωσπ. is a gloss on ζωογον.; and accordingly I find Hesych. explains ζωογόνος by ζωοποιός. And it is truly remarked by Matthæi, that ζωογονία is more used by the Class. writers than ζωοποιᾶ; but that is only in the sense 'to produce or vivify,' which would here be unsuitable. And the use by the Class. writers would rather make one regard ζωογ. as an alteration of Critics. If, however, ζωογ. be, as it may, adopted, we may suppose ζωσπ. to be a gloss upon it: and this the glossographers must have meant by the explanation, 'who giveth life to all,' which may be what the Apostle meant; though, according to the usage of the Sept. and the New Test. in Luke xvii. 33, and Acts vii. 19, ζωογ. can only mean 'to preserve life.' Nevertheless, as he who preserveth life may be said, in a certain sense, to 'bestow it,' so here there may be (perhaps according to some provincial idiom) a union of both meant to be conveyed in the term ζωογ. In short, the word τοῦ ζωσπ., or ζωογ., may be meant to animate the courage of Timothy in defence of the Gospel, as well as his zeal and exertions in fulfilling his vows, from the remembrance of that Being who gave him life and yet preserved it, and would raise him up at the last day (see Rom. iv. 17. Eph. ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 18), and give him an inheritance incorruptible, and that fadeeth not away. The next words, μαρτυρήσαντος τὴν καλὴν ὁμολ., (where τὴν is to be taken, as at v. 12, with reference to John xviii. 36, seq.), form a remarkable variation of the phrase, and involve something anomalous; for, though μαρτυρεῖν μαρτυρίαν (as also ὁμολογεῖν ὁμολογίαν) be used, yet never μαρτυρεῖν ὁμολογίαν, which is a blending of the two phrases μαρτυρεῖν μαρτ. and ὁμολογεῖν ὁμολ. However, the two verbs, ὁμολογίαν, as used in the sense to publicly confess, profess, and μαρτυρεῖν, as used in that of to declare (like the Latin, testificor),—are so much alike, that they admit of being interchanged. There is here a reference to what is recorded in John xviii. 33—37. In fact, what our Lord said was both a confession and a declaration; a confession, or profession, as regarded the interrogation of Pilate, and a declaration, as respected the people at large.

14. τηρ.—τὴν ἐντολὴν] By ἐντολ. may be meant the injunction just given 'to fight the good fight of faith,' or rather the one at v. 22, σεαυ- τὸν ἀγῶν τῆρι. See the notes of Calv. and Est. The recent German Expositors, indeed (as Olsh., Leo, and Wiesing.), explain it to mean 'all that Christ has commanded;' the Christian doctrine in its binding and disciplining aspect, as forming the law for the Christian. See Tit. ii. 11, comp. with John xiii. 34. And so Dr. Peise, 'the law of Christ forming the duty of each member of his Church' (Rom. xiii. 10. 1 Cor. xi. 21. Gal. vi. 2. James ii. 8); which term, together with ἡ παραγγέλλια supra i. 5. ἡ δασκαλία, supra v. 1, and iv. 16, ἡ εὐσέβεια, v. 8, and iii. 16, ἡ διδαχή, Tit. i. 9, is, he thinks, to be referred to a received and well understood terminology of the Apostle's days. It may be so; but that rests on conjecture only; and the interpretation, however specious, is too harsh and strained to be put in competition with the first-mentioned view, which has the stamp of nature and truth. I quite agree with Wiesing., that the epithets ἁσπιλον and ἀνεπίλ. are not to be taken with ἐντολ. as its predicates, but with σε. And so Calv., Hyper., and Est. I cannot, however, agree with him, that the construction denotes 'the effect of keeping the commandment.' The words are in apposition with σε, or there is an ellipse of δύνα, such as oft. occ. in Thucyd. In the next words, μέχρι τῆς ἐπιφ.—Χριστοῦ, there is, as Wiesing. remarks, a quite Pauline connexion of ideas, akin to such passages as 1 Cor. i. 8. Phil. i. 6, 10, &c. (which form the best comment on this), where see notes; and here see the admirable notes of Calv. and Est.; the latter of whom points out why the second advent of Christ to judgment should be so frequently referred to in the Scriptures. It is, he says, 'iam quia ad gloriam, quæ tunc revelabitur, spectat ac protenditur omnis spes fidelium, quæ eos mirifice consolatur in omni tentatione, pressura, et persecutione, quam in hoc sæculo patiuntur; tum quia iudicii illius futuri cogitatione ægrioribus terrorem ingerit, simul et stimulos injicit ad perandam viam Judici venturæ.' He prefaces his remark by observing, that the Apostle does not say 'that thou shouldst preserve the commandment until the day of death,' as at Rev. ii. 10, γίνου πιστὸς ἄχρι θανάτου (though death is to every person tantamount to the second advent to judgment) 'sed adventum Domini.' Why, Theophyl. points out thus, ἵνα μάλιστα αὐτὸν διεγείρῃ, ἀναμνήσας τῆς δόξης ἐκείνης τῆς φρικτῆς. Accordingly, at v. 15 are accumulated the grandest predicates of the majesty and power of God in bringing about this glorious ἐπιφάνεια, which pave the way for the sublime doxology that closes the passage. There is 'an emphasis at Idioms, q. d. 'at his own good time,' that which he has reserved in his own power. The aptness of the expression is well pointed out by Calv.—ὁ μακ. καὶ μόνος δυν. On the former term, μακ., see note supra i. 11. The latter, μόν. δυν., is likewise meant to point at the greatness and majesty of the Deity, who produces the ἐπιφάνεια.

νάστης, ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευνόντων καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυριευόντων, <sup>16</sup> ὁ ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ ἰδεῖν δύναται ὡς τιμὴ καὶ κράτος αἰώνιον. ἀμήν.

<sup>17</sup> τοῖς πλουσίοις ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι παράγγελλε μὴ ὑψηλοφροεῖν, μηδὲ ἡλπιεῖν ἐπὶ πλούτου ἀδελότητι, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ Θεῷ τῷ ζῶντι, τῷ παρέχοντι ἡμῖν πάντα, πλουσίως εἰς ἀπολαυσιν <sup>18</sup> ἀγαθοεργεῖν, πλουτεῖν ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς, εὐμεταδότους εἶναι, κοινωνικοῦς, <sup>19</sup> ἀποθησαυρίζοντας ἑαυτοῖς θεμέλιον

o Exod. 33.
20.
Deut. 4. 12.
John 1. 18.
1 John 4. 13.
20.
Job 31. 24.
Ps. 62. 10.
Mark 4. 18.
& 10. 34.
Luke 8. 14.
& 12. 16.
9. Luke 12.
31.
James 2. 5.
1 Matt. 6. 30.
Luke 12. 15.
33. & 16. 6.
ver. 12.

νεια, in its reference to God. Δυν., however rare, does occ. at 2 Mac. iii. 24. xii. 15. xv. 23. The epithet μόνος is used as at Rom. xv. 27, where see note. The next two expressions, ὁ Βασ.—καὶ Κύρ., are meant to further develop the foregoing august idea. The same, or parallel expressions, occ. not only in the Scriptures, both of the Old and New Test., but also in Philo and Joseph., and, as I have shown, occasionally in the Class. writers.

<sup>16</sup> ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθαν., &c.] i. e. immortality self-derived; implying, that he alone can confer it, as it is said, John v. 26, that he 'hath life in himself.' The epithet μόνος (on which see Rom. xvi. 27, supra i. 17, and note) is one applied to all the attributes of the Deity, so as to denote that he is so transcendently the possessor of them, that he alone may be said to possess, as he alone can confer them.—φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον. It has been disputed whether φῶς should be taken in a natural or a metaphorical sense. Adopting the former, we may understand the expression of that dazzling glory, which is supposed to surround the throne of God, where he especially dwells; see Rev. xxi. 24, and comp. Ps. civ. 2. Isa. lx. 1, 19, 20: an opinion also held by the heathens, as appears from Hom. Od. xiv. 42, and Plutarch, Peric. 39, τὸν μὲν τόπον ἐν ᾧ τὸν θεὸν κατοικεῖν λέγουσιν—φωτὶ καθαρῷ τὸν πάντα χρόνον θαλάτῃ περιλαμπόμενον: see note in Grot., Hyper., Crell., and Benson. Thus there may be, as Hyper. and Benson say, an allusion to the custom of eastern courts, where people were not admitted to see the monarch face to face. Perhaps, however, the expression may be best understood metaphorically, as denoting the invisible nature of him of whom it is said, John xi. 7, 'Canst thou by seeking find out God?' so meaning (as Scott expresses it), that he is surrounded with glories so resplendent, that, as expressed in the next words, no man can possibly approach to him, except in and by his incarnate Son.

<sup>17</sup>—<sup>19</sup>. Some have considered the foregoing Doxology as properly the conclusion of the Epistle, and these verses, together with what follows, vv. 20, 21, as a mere supplement; entirely without reason; for, as Wiesing observes (and even Schlierm. acquiesces in the remark), a Doxology does not necessarily stand precisely at the conclusion of an Epistle, as appears from sup. i. 17. Rom. xi. 36, and other passages.

<sup>17</sup>. The Apostle now subjoins a most earnest admonition, suggested, we may suppose, at once by a benevolent regard for the poorer classes, and an anxiety which he could not but feel with respect to another class of persons, of whose salvation his own manner of speaking, and still more that of his Lord, argued the great difficulty,—even 'the rich in this world,' as opposed to those whose riches centre in the other, and future world. See Matt. vi. 20. xix. 21.—μὴ ὑψηλοφροεῖν, 'not to carry themselves haughtily'; see note on Rom. xi. 20. So Eurip., Suppl. 863, says of Capaneus, ὃ βίος μιν ἦν πολλὸς, 'Ἐκίστα δ' ἄλβω γαῖρος ἦν' (was not at all purse-proud), φρόνημα δὲ οὐδὲν τι μείζων εἶχε, ἢ κινήσιν ἀνὴρ.—Πλουτοῦ ἀδελότητι, for πλούτου ἀδελῶν: compare 2 Mac. vii. 34. Similarly it is said by Phocyl. frag. xiii. 24, ὁ βίος πρόχος, ἀστατος ἄλβος. See also Eurip. Elect. 940—44.—τῷ παρέχοντι ἡμῖν, &c. The argument hinted at in these words is, that, as God is so bountiful as to satisfy all our wants, and to some (as the rich) supplies these blessings πλουσίως, so as to be a blessing, so he expects that the rich should imitate his beneficence, by liberally imparting thereof to their fellow-creatures.—εἰς ἀπολαυσιν, 'for enjoyment,' meaning, 'for general enjoyment,' and not for selfish enjoyment in the possession, both to those who possess it, and to those to whom it is mercifully dispensed.

<sup>18</sup>. πλουτεῖν ἐν ἔργ. καλοῖς] Comp. a similar expression in Plato, de Rep. p. 696, B, ἐν νόμῳ γὰρ ἀρξουσιν οἱ τῷ ὄντι πλούσιοι, οὐ χρυσίου· δεῖ τὸν εὐδαίμονα πλουτεῖν ζωῇ ἀγαθῇ.—Εὐμεταδότους εἶναι, lit., 'to be good at distributing, ready to impart.'

<sup>19</sup>. ἀποθησαυρίζοντας ἑαυτοῖς—[ῥῆσι] In this verse the Apostle, as Hyper. observes, 'overrules by anticipation an objection which the rich might make to the foregoing doctrine, namely, that they should thereby exhaust their resources: and he invites them to the exercise of charity and beneficence on two grounds,—the first, by an argument ab utili, ἀποθησαυρίζοντας ἑαυτοῖς θεμέλιον καλὸν εἰς τὸ μέλλον: the second, by an argument suspended on the above,—namely, the greatness of the reward attached to the performance of this duty, even that of life, real and true (of which the life that now is forms only a faint image); as consisting in an eternity of bliss laid up in heaven for the righteous.' I have already adverted to a certain confusion and catachresis existing in ἀποθῆς. θεμέλιον, as forming a main cause of the harshness and difficulty complained of by Critics on this passage. To remove this, it was proposed by Hamm. and Mede to take θεμέλιον to denote 'a contract or bond for payment'; and thus an obvious sense will arise, which might be confirmed and illustrated from a passage of Prov. xix. 7. But the

a ch. 1. 4.
 & 4. 7.
 2 Tim. 1. 14.
 & 2. 14, 16.
 Tit. 1. 14. & 2. 2. Rev. 2. 2.

καλὸν εἰς τὸ μέλλον, ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς. 20 Ὁ Τιμόθεε, τὴν * παραθήκην φύλαξον, ἐκτρεπόμενος τὰς βεβήλους proof of this signif. of the word is not sufficient to warrant its adoption; and we must seek another solution of the difficulty. Now, if (as seems clear) St. Paul had the passage of Tobit iv. 19 in mind, then it would seem that he meant θεμέλιον here to be taken in the sense of θεῖμα there, namely, to denote a 'depositum,' lit. 'something laid down with a person, and to be returned by him when called for by the depositor.' Now, of this sense of θεῖμα exx. occur in abundance; but of θεμέλιον I cannot find one;—yet such a sense may have existed in the language of common life, and Paul may have chosen to adopt it. But, it may be asked, if the Apostle meant to express this sense, why did he not at once employ the term θεῖμα, which he had before him in the passage of Tobit? I answer, because he had, I apprehend, in his mind a twofold idea, involving a twofold allusion, and a twofold metaphor; and hence he made use of the term θεμέλιον, as one capable of conveying both allusions. Of this accumulation of two metaphors involved in one term, several examples might be adduced from Scripture (and even the Class. writers, espec. Thucyd.); but one will be sufficient, namely, from Psa. xxxvii. 5, where the literal rendering and full sense of the Hebrew phrase is, 'Roll thy way (viz. of life) upon, and commit thy course (thy actions and occupations) unto the Lord;' where we have the same accumulation of two metaphors in a single word, one taken from rolling a heavy load from one's own arms to those of another; and the other, from devolving, i.e. committing, the care and disposition of affairs to the hands of another. However, here it would seem that the mind of the Apostle dwelt more upon the metaphor of a foundation than upon that of a deposit for future repayment, and that hence he was induced to employ θεμέλιον in preference to θεῖμα. And certain it is that the ancient Commentators and most eminent modern ones suppose no other allusion.—'ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῇ αἰωνίῳ ζωῇ.' For αἰώνιον, many MSS., including almost all the most ancient, together with nearly all the Versions and very many Fathers, have ὄντως, which has been received into the text by all the recent Editors, and internal evidence is in its favour; for who would ever have thought of explaining αἰώνιον by ὄντως? Still not impossible is it that some Critics should have altered αἰών. into ὄντως, considering that the latter contains a more forcible term, and one of profound philosophy. And Matthæi (who retained αἰών.) remarks, that the Fathers not unfrequently oppose ὁ ὄντως ζῶν to ὁ ζῶν ἰνταῦθα. Weta., too, refers to various passages of Clem. Alex., Origen, Basil, Euth., Greg. Naz., Œcumen., Const. Apost., though indeed those require to be carefully examined, for I suspect that some of them are not to the purpose. Weta. remarks, that the reading ὄντως was approved by Dr. Mill, whereas, in point of fact, Dr. Mill in his edition retains αἰώνιον, and expressly styles ὄντως an 'old interpretation, whereby eternal life is described,' referring to Clem. Alex. And that Father, together with Origen and some others, may be thought likely to have made the change, if not for interpretation, yet in order to introduce a deeper and more philosophic sense. But so to take it for granted is more than ought to be done. It may also be urged, that the expression ὁ ὄντως is more in the manner of the Greek Fathers and Philo Jud. than of St. Paul. But that, again, involves a principle too arbitrary to be relied on. With more truth may it be said, that this use of ὁ ὄντως is somewhat in the manner of St. Paul, at least as he has written in this Epistle. Upon the whole, I am now of opinion that the reading ὁ ὄντως ζῶν prob. came from St. Paul.

20. The Apostle cannot conclude without again urging the injunctions contained in i. 18, and iv. 7.—τὴν παραθήκην φύλαξον. Here, as at 2 Tim. i. 14, the Apostle enjoins Timothy to keep hold of, preserve, the sacred deposit of the pure Gospel committed to his charge, even the form of sound words spoken of at 2 Tim. i. 13. On the reading παρὰ for the t. rec. παρακαταθήκην, see note on 2 Tim. i. 14.—καὶ ἀντιθ. τῆς ψευδ. γνώσεως. By ἀντιθ. are meant 'counter-disputations,' i.e. disputations, in opposition to the pure doctrine of the Gospel, founded on objections pointed by the arts of dialectic sophistry, with which comp. the ἐναντιώσεις of speculative sophistry, spoken of by Philostr. Vit. Sophist. i. 25. In τῆς ψευδ. γνώσεως, there has been thought to be an allusion to the Gnostics. But to this others reply, that although those heretics derived their appealation from the falsely termed knowledge, to which they laid especial claim, there is great reason to think that they were not then in being, at least not known by that name, until upwards of ten years afterwards. Whitby adduces various other reasons to show why the persons in question could not be the Gnostics. He strenuously maintains that they were the νομοδιδασκαλοὶ mentioned supra, i. 7, 'Judaizing teachers,' and thus the opposite to the Gnostics, who were, as Irenæus testifies, the adversaries of these legalists. The same view is maintained by Markn. But that view does not rest on any certain proof; nor have we evidence sufficient to enable us to decide as to what were the exact opinions introduced by the persons here censured by St. Paul, the words used being so few. Yet, few as they are, they are quite as applicable to the opinions of those early heretics (probably Gentile Christians) which paved the way to Gnosticism, as they are to those that were maintained by the Judaizing Christians. As to the expression, ch. i. 5, 6, ἀσθεαῖς πιστεύουσιν ἀνυποκρίτως, it has a meaning essentially different from ἀσθεαῖς παρὶ τὴν πίστιν at ch. vi. 21; the latter denoting a 'missing of the true faith by heresy;' the former, a 'failure in faith, by that faith not being founded on true persuasion;' the persons in question being only in external profession Christians, but in reality holding more or less of, or at least favouring, Judaism. Hence it is prob. that the same persons are not had in view here and there. And, when I consider that Chrysa. and all the Greek Commentators refer what is here said to Gnosticism, I cannot but think that there is in the opinion something of solid truth, however mixed with error. The true view I apprehend to be κενοφωνίας καὶ ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως. <sup>21</sup> ἦν <sup>18</sup> 1 Tim. 2.

 τιwές ἐπαγγελλλόμενοι, περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἡστόχησαν. Ἡ χάρις μετὰ σοῦ. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Τιμόθεον πρώτη ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Λαοδικείας, ἥτις ἐστὶ μητρόπολις Φρυγίας τῆς Πακατιανῆς.

that laid down by Est., in the following able annotation: 'Quamvis credi possit Gnosticorum nomen non statim cum heresi emersisse, sed aliquanto (about sixty years) post tamen Apostolorum temporibus, rem ipsam jam tum a Simone et Nicolao, quorum in Actis Apost. (vi. 5. viii. 13) Lucas meminit, originem accepisse, certum est. Hi namque doctrinam suam hereticam atque probrosam specioso scientie titulo ornare et commendare studuerunt. Unde factum, ut eorum successores, ipso etiam secte vocabulo scientiam profiteri volentes, sese Gnostiones, id est, cognitores, appellarent. Quam rem Epiphanius cum alibi, tum in heresi Carpocratitarum, sub initium, aperte declarat, qui idem hereticorum post Christi adventum exortum hunc facit ordinem, ut primi fuerint Simoniani, tum ordine sequantur Menandriani, Saturniniani, Basilidiani, Nicolaitae, Gnostici, Carpocratiani, Cerinthiani, Nazareni, Ebionitae, Valentiniani, et qui deinceps recensentur. Ex quibus jam perspicuum fit, Irenaeum verissime, lib. i. cap. 20, scripsisse, a Simonianis falsi nominis scientiam initia sumisse: scientiam enim illi falso jactabant; etiam nondum Gnostici vel a seipsis vel ab aliis nominati.' The above view seems substantially founded in truth. But what is said about the Simonians and Nicolaitans having originated in Simon Magus, and Nicolaus the deacon, has been strongly denied by Vitringa, Obs. Sacr. iv. 9, by Brucker, Hist. Crit. Philos. t. iii. 304, and especially by C. C. Tittmann, Diss.: 'de vestigiis Gnosticorum in N. T. frustra quaesitis.' That the Simon Epiph. he mentions was another Simon, and not Simon Magus, seems pretty certain: but there was no reason why Tittmann should have called in question the existence of such a sect. Its existence is attested in a fragment of Hegesippus ap. Euseb. Hist. iv. 22, adduced by Dr. Routh, Reliq. Sacr., vol. i. p. 216, ed. 2. Now, Hegesippus places him first in the list of eleven classes of heretics. As to the Nicolaitans, Tittm. greatly erred in denying the Nicolaitans to have been heretics, alleging that their offence was rather in their practice than in their doctrine. This view, I suppose, he founded on the passage of Rev. ii. 6, μισοῖτε τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν ἂ καὶ wό μισῶ. But that ἔργα there ought not to be so strictly interpreted, is plain from ver. 2 before. And that it was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans that St. John saw especial occasion to censure is certain from ver. 15 of the same chap., where he lays it to the charge of the Church of Pergamos: οὕτως κρατοῦνται τὴν διδασχὴν τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν, like the κρ. τὴν διδασχὴν Βυλαάμ at ver. 14. Indeed, Tittmann seems half inclined to agree, with Firmilian, in his Epistle to St. Cyprian (whom he places in the foreground in his arguments against Gnosticism in the apostolic age), that there were no such persons. But he has been ably answered by Dr. Routh, Rel. Sacr. i. 258, with whom I quite agree, that undoubtedly some heresies, and those even declining from communion with the Church, existed before the death of the Apostles, certainly before that of the Apostle John. Now the view thus taken is not, as Est. alleges, in sense the same as that adopted by the ancient Commentators before mentioned, but arose from a development of the simple statement in those interpreters. They agree in referring the metaphor in θεμ. to the immovable stability of the reward in question, ἡ δύναμις ζωῆς; and they are all agreed that the performance of the good works in question is such as to procure for us the enjoyment of the true life, even the life eternal. But they say nothing about the camulus, or thesaurus meritum, as being the foundation of that future edifice prepared for us in heaven. In fact, that was a mere incrustation superinduced on the original nucleus, so as almost to nullify it. In short, it appears to have been no other than a web spun out of the brains of the scholastic theologians of the middle ages, afterwards taken up by the Popish Commentators, and which has been strenuously maintained by the most learned, judicious, and candid of their Expositors, Estius. Yet how he could reconcile it to his conscience to suppress the words (not a little important) of Thom. Aquin., 'quae est principium merendi,' I know not. Certain it is that he passes not more harsh than unjust censure on his brother Commentator Calvin; who, he affirms, here acknowledges the promise of reward, although he rejects the merit, and pronounces that the reward is not due; as if meritum and merces were not mutually related to each other, so that one cannot stand without the other. This, however, is nothing more than a vain scholastic subtilty, at variance with the simple and popular doctrine of Scripture. It is too plain that Est. suppressed the above words, that he might weaken the doctrine laid down by the Angelic Doctor,—namely, that 'the merits on which the possession of the future glory is suspended, are obtained by grace.' So Augustin, cited by Thom. Aquin. elsewhere, says plainly, 'Sine gratiā gratum faciente non potest a mortalibus vita duci.' But that is no other than the doctrine of Calvin, and indeed of the Church of England in her Twelfth Article. And why, it may be asked, should Calvin be accused of gross error for promulgating the same doctrine as the Catholic Doctor (though the latter incrustated on it something more)? It is also to be observed, that Calvin does not say that the merces is indebitus, but only that the 'remuneratio non ex ratione meriti pendet, sed ex liberali Dei acceptione.'

ΠΑΤΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΜΟΘΕΟΝ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

I. <sup>1</sup> ΠΑΤΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος
Θεοῦ, κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν ζωῆς τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, <sup>2</sup> Τιμοθέω

THAT this Epistle was written by St. Paul while under confinement, and at Rome, is plain from i. 8. 12, 16, 17, and ii. 9. But whether that was his first imprisonment (mentioned in Acts xxviii.), or a second one, much later, is a point on which no little difference of opinion has existed. The question is discussed by Mr. Horne with his usual diligence and accuracy (from the statements of Benson, Lardner, Macknight, and Paley), and he decides in favour of the latter supposition; rightly, I think; for the arguments on that side certainly preponderate: though, indeed, had they been of equal weight, the uniform testimony of early Ecclesiastical tradition must have decided in its favour.—Thus far in my former Edition. In this revisé I have to add, that I am still of the same opinion as to the latter view being the preferable one, as I find it confirmed by the suffrage of Mr. Conyb., in his able Memoir (in Appendix I.) on the date of the Pastoral Epistles, on which I have treated at large in the Introduction to 1 Tim., where I have indicated the probable date—which can be only, however, an approximation—of the present Epistle.

The immediate purpose of this Epistle,—the sacred legacy of the Apostle's last farewell to his most beloved son in the faith,—was, to apprise Timothy of the circumstances of his second imprisonment (for of the fact itself he had probably been already informed by the brethren travelling from Rome to Ephesus in the latter part of the spring), and to request him to make haste and come to him before winter; but, being uncertain whether Timothy would receive the letter in time so to do, and thinking that, if he should not, he might not find him alive when he did come, he gives him various counsels, exhortations, and encouragements, with the earnest affection of a dying parent,—in order that his personal loss might be, in some measure, supplied by this impressive Epistle. The Epistle seems to have been written under a strong presentiment (verified by the event) that it would be his last letter, and that, if not addressing his last farewell to his dear son, he was at all events providing against the occurrence of his own removal, by martyrdom, from this earthly scene. And surely (to use the words of Canon Tate, Cont. Hist. p. 130), 'If ever of one holy man upon earth, on the eve of his departure from it, we may believe that a clear assurance of heaven was vouchsafed to him, we may without scruple believe so of St. Paul; who had already in beatific vision enjoyed a foretaste of what was to come. And after so many trying scenes of faith, charity, and patient endurance, divinely exercised in the service of his Great Master for the salvation of souls, what is it that we read when the close of such a life draws nigh? Solemn declarations of his own sure and certain hope of future blessedness; as his last bequest of consolation and joy to all those who, after his bright example of patience and faith, however otherwise inferior, yet do seek to inherit the promises.'

As to the style and phraseology of the Epistle, see the remarks above made on the Pastoral Epistles generally, in the Introduction to 1 Tim. What is there said applies to this; with the exception, that there is less of the defects of composition complained of by the Critics, and, from the peculiar circumstances of so writing, more of native and deep impressiveness, more of perspicuity, and, on the whole, some approach to the finish of the style, unpretending yet effective,—which we find in the Epistle to the Philippians. As to the contents; the simplicity of the Epistle scarcely admits of any formal analysis. It seems to divide itself into three parts: I. the Introduction, i. 1—5, containing the inscription, salutation, and affectionate felicitation. II. Various exhortations and encouragements, i. 6—iv. 8. III. A request to come to Rome speedily, accompanied by various particulars of information, ἀγαπητῷ τέκνῳ χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

3 * Χάρις ἔχω τῷ Θεῷ, ᾧ λατρεύω ἀπὸ προγόνων ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει, ὡς ἀδιάλειπτον ἔχω τὴν περὶ σοῦ μνησίαν ἐν ταῖς δεήσεσί μου νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας, 4 ἐπιποθῶν σε ἰδεῖν (μεμνημένος σου τῶν δακρύων), ἵνα χαρὰς πληρωθῶ 5 ὑπόμνησιν λαμβάνων τῆς ἐν σοὶ ἀνυποκρίτου πίστεως, ἥτις ἐνέφκησε πρῶτον ἐν τῇ μάμμη σου Λωΐδι, καὶ τῇ μητρὶ σου Εὐνίκῃ πέπεισμα δὲ ὅτι καὶ ἐν σοὶ. 6 * Δι' ἣν αἰτίαν ἀναμνησκω σὲ ἀναζωπυρεῖν τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὃ ἐστὶν ἐν σοὶ διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου. 7 α Οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς πνεῦμα δειλίας, ἀλλὰ δυνάμεως, καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ σωφρονισμοῦ. 8 * Μὴ οὖν

a Acts 22. 3.
b 22. 1.
c 24. 14.
d Rom. 1. 8. 9.
e Eph. 1. 16.
f 1 Thess. 1. 2. 3.
g 2. 10.
h Acts 16. 1.
i Acts 1. 6.
j 2. 17.
k 12. 2.
l 19. 6.
m 1 Tim. 4. 14.
n 2. 22.
o Acts 21. 22.
p Rom. 1. 16.
q Eph. 3. 1.
r 4. 1.
s Col. 4. 12.
t Phil. 1. 7.
u 4. 14. 17.
v 1 Tim. 2. 6.
ch. 2. 3.
Phillem. 1. 9.
12.

commissions, and salutations for the brethren in Asia Minor.—As to the agreement of the contents with the specified purpose of the writer, though that may have been denied by some, the particulars of whose objections have been urged with his accustomed acuteness and ability by De Wette, yet the whole fabric crumbles into dust under the spear of Ithuriel, powerfully wielded in the cause of truth, by the strong arm of Dr. Davidson.

1. 1. ἀπόστ.—κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν [ωῆς] Here κατὰ ἀποστείαν purpose, or result, 'on account of,' 'in pursuance of,' as to the effect, 'so that,' as the words express, 'the promise of salvation through Christ might be published by me.'

2. See 1 Tim. i. 2. 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 John 3, and notes.

3. χάρις ἔχω τῷ Θεῷ] See 1 Thess. i. 2, and 2 Thess. i. 3.—ἀπὸ προγόνων, 'after the custom of my forefathers.' Comp. Acts xxiv. 14, and see note. What the Apostle here says was meant to refute the unjust charges of the Jews, who accused him of abandoning the God of his Fathers.—ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει, 'in the exercise of a pure conscience.' Comp. συνειδήσει ἀγαθῇ πεπολιτευμαι at Acts xxiii. i. xxiv. 16; καλῇ συνειδήσει ἔχειν, Heb. xiii. 18; and συνειδήσειν ἔχειν ἀγαθὴν, 1 Pet. iii. 16, 21.—Ὁ ἀδιάλειπτον ἔχω—μνησίαν. I would now, with Calv. and Dr. Burton and Peile, suppose the meaning of this obscurely-expressed passage to be, 'in the constant mention which I make of you in my prayers, I add my thanks to God' (see Philem. 4). Accordingly, I connect χάρις ἔχω with what follows in v. 5, make v. 4 to depend upon ἔχω τὴν περὶ σοῦ μνησίαν, and render as ἀδιάλειπτον, &c., with Dr. Peile, 'uninterrupted as is the remembrance which I make of thee,' &c.

5. ἥτις ἐνέφκησε] Intimating that it was not by external profession only, or some transient feeling, but as an internal principle dwelling in the heart; perhaps with allusion to the Gospel doctrine, by which true Christians are considered as temples of the Holy Ghost. See Eph. ii. 22.

6. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν] 'Because I am fully persuaded that thou hast the gift of faith unfeigned.' So Est., who explains the πείρασμοι either of 'moral certainty,' or of that 'certainty of faith authorized by Divine authority.' 'Nam (adds he) sic certus erat Apostolus Deum esse potentem servare depositum suum; at hoc modo non noverat fidem non fictam in Timotheo habitare, sed id longè experientiâ didicerat, ideoque humanitatis certum tenebat.' Comp. Rom. viii. 14, 15, et al.—ἀναμνησκω σὲ δωκ, 'I do remind thee to stir up—keep alive by due exercise.' 'Ἀναζωπυρεῖν' prop. signifies 'to stir up, blow up,' as it were keep alive a dull fire; and hence, metaphorically, 'to rouse sluggishness, and call into action any dormant faculty, whether of body or mind.' See notes on 1 Thess. v. 19, and 1 Tim. iv. 14. The χάρισμα here must, as appears from what follows, chiefly denote the supernatural gifts of the Spirit imparted by St. Paul on setting him apart for the ministry, but not to the exclusion of the ordinary graces of the Spirit.

7. οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν—σωφρ.] Most recent Expositors, taking πν. in the sense spirit, or 'disposition,' render, 'for God hath not given us a disposition of faintheartedness, but of energy, love, and sobermindedness.' But, considering the preceding context, the sense 'Spirit,' i. e. 'the Holy Spirit,' must be chiefly meant; though the other may be included in a secondary sense; and thus the full sense will be, that 'the influence of the Holy Spirit given by God to his faithful people, espec. to the ministers of his Word, is not a spirit of timidity (i. e. does not impart it), but of love, of power (energy, called δύς, with allusion to the δύναμις τοῦ Πνεύματος, the power imparted by the Holy Spirit), and [yet] of sobermindedness;' meaning, as Theophyl. remarks, 'such a soundness of mind, and soberness of judgment, as should fit them to choose the good, and refuse the evil; including also such a seriousness of mind, as can alone, through Divine grace, arise from a spirit free from inordinate affections; I had almost said, from that zeal which hurries a person beyond the bounds of discretion.' This I find confirmed by Calv., who remarks that Paul adds σωφρ. to ἀγάπη, 'ut illam Spiritus potentiam discerneret ab intemperie fanaticorum hominum, qui, quum ruant impetu turbulento, Spiritum ferociter jactant;' 'therefore (he adds), that the powerful force of the Spirit is to be tempered by sobermindedness, and a placid desire to promote edification.'

8. We have here a conclusion drawn by infer-

f Rom. 8. 26.
g 9. 11.
Eph. 1. 4.
h 2. 8.
i 3. 11.
Tit. 2. 4—6.
g Isa. 26. 5.
Rom. 16. 26.
1 Cor. 15.
24. 55.
Eph. 1. 9.
g 3. 9.
Col. 1. 26.
Tit. 1. 2.
Heb. 2. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 20.
h Acts 9. 15.
i 12. 2.
g 22. 21.
Eph. 3. 5.
Gal. 1. 15.
g 2. 8.
1 Tim. 2. 7.
i Eph. 3. 1.
h ch. 3. 14.

ἐπαισχυνθῆς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, μηδὲ ἐμὲ τὸν δέσμιον αὐτοῦ· ἀλλὰ συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ, <sup>9</sup> τοῦ σώσαντος ἡμᾶς καὶ καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγία, οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν, ἀλλὰ κατ' ἰδίαν πρόθεσιν, καὶ χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ἡμῖν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ πρὸ χρόνων αἰώνων, <sup>10</sup> φανερωθεῖσαν δὲ νῦν διὰ τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καταργήσαντος μὲν τὸν θάνατον, φωτίσαντος δὲ ζωὴν καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου <sup>11</sup> εἰς δ' ἐτέθη ἐγὼ κήρυξ καὶ ἀπόστολος καὶ διδάσκαλος ἐθνῶν <sup>12</sup> δι' ἣν αἰτίαν καὶ ταῦτα πάσχω. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐπαισχύνομαι· οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι πεπίστευκα· καὶ πέπεισμαι, ὅτι δυνατός ἐστι τὴν παραθήκην μου φυλάξαι εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν. <sup>13</sup> ὅτι ποτύπωσιν ἔχει ὑγιαίνοντων λόγων, ence from the foregoing premises; q. d. 'Since then you have such a spirit, &c., be not ashamed,' &c. So intimating that this timidity, implied in the foregoing, had in some measure been evinced by his not coming to Rome, lest he should be involved in the persecution of his master; and he then sets before Timothy the momentous nature of that for which he is called upon to encounter persecution; namely, the salvation to be attained by the gracious calling of God, 'who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel.'—μαρτύριον, meaning, the preaching and profession of the Gospel. See note on Philem. 1.—ἀλλὰ, 'but rather'; this being, as Hyper. observes, put per incrementum.—κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ. This (as Bp. Middl. has shown) connects not with τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ (for in that case the Article would have been repeated, τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τῷ κατὰ δύναμιν), but is to be joined with the verb thus: 'but do thou jointly suffer the evil to be endured for the Gospel's sake, in dependence on the support which God affords.'

9, 10. At these verses the Apostle points at the chief heads of sound Gospel doctrine, in opposition to the unsound views of the false teachers, meaning, chiefly, it should seem, to impress more strongly on Timothy's mind, that this salvation is not of works, but of grace: a doctrine which the Apostle often inculcates (see Eph. ii. 8, and Tit. iii. 5); and it is here very aptly introduced, since there was the more reason for Timothy not to decline persecution or toil in the cause of Him by whom he had been saved wholly by grace.

9. To advert to a few matters of philology. At κατ' ἰδίαν πρόθεσιν, καὶ χάριν τὴν δοθ. there is an Hendiadys for propositum gratiosum, as at v. 10, ζωὴν καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου.

10. φανερωθεῖσαν, &c.] Comp. Rom. xvi. 26. Eph. ii. 9.—τῆς ἐπιφανείας. This Theodor. well explains by ἐνανθρωπήσας; the expression being one espec. used by the ancient writers, of the appearance of the gods on earth. So Jos. Ant. xviii. 3, 4, we have τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν ἐκδηγεῖται τοῦ Ἀνουβιδος.—Καταργ. τὸν θάνατον, 'has deprived it of its final power, by procuring for all men a resurrection from the dead.' The same term, on the same subject, occurs in 1 Cor. xv. 25—27, and Heb. ii. 14. So, too, in an inscription found in Nubia, cited by Bornem. de Gloesia, p. 48, it is said of God, ὁ τὸν θάνατον καταργήσας καὶ ἄδην καταπατήσας.—Φωτίσαντος, 'who hath brought to light,' and, by implication, 'made certain, what was before obscure and dubious,' just as bringing light to any object ascertains its reality. Comp. John v. 24—29. So Arrian, Epict. i. 4, τῷ δὲ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐπρόστι καὶ φωτίζει. Whitty, in an able and instructive note, shows that 'the hope the heathens had conceived, by tradition and the light of nature, of certain future good things to be received after the termination of the present life, was but faint, not credited by their philosophers, and disbelieved by the bulk of the people.' There had been many guesses on the subject, but since (as Paley says) 'he alone discovers who proves,' thus the term φωτ. is perfectly applicable.

11. εἰς δ'] for ἐφ' ὅσον. Comp. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 12. οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι πεπίστευκα] 'for I know on whom I have reposed, and do repose, my faith and trust.' Of the next words, καὶ πείσσομαι, ὅτι—ἡμῶν, the sense is, 'and fully persuaded am I, that he is able to preserve my deposit with him (i. e. the deposit of my soul and its salvation committed unto his hands as a faithful Creator and Preserver),' as it is said at 1 Pet. iv. 19 (κτιστὴς καὶ κρίσις τοῦ ἡμετέρου), 'unto that day,' even that last and critical day of the Lord, when, as it is said Mal. iii. 17, 'He maketh up (i. e. to make up) his jewels.' Similarly, in Hermes Past. i. ii. 3, it is said that the soul is a παραθήκη, 'a deposit' received from God, and to be rendered up to him as a stewardship. That this is the sense intended, and not, as many Expositors assign (as at v. 14, and 1 Tim. vi. 20), the doctrine of the Gospel, whose preaching was committed to Paul as a sacred deposit, is clear from the context. It is agreed that by ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν is to be understood (as at iv. 8, and elsewhere; see note on Matt. xxiv. 36) the day of judgment; this being referred to as something of great notoriety, and doubtless forming the frequent subject of conversation to those who felt interested in Scripture prophecy.

13. Now follow some exhortations, first general, and then special. On ὅσον. see note on 1 Tim. i. 16, and on ὅτι. see note on 1 Tim. vi. 3. By ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχει ὑγιαίνοντων λόγων is meant literally, 'the sketch, delineation, or outline of sound doctrines,' which must have been such a summary of the Christian faith, as is now

ὦν παρ' ἐμοῦ ἤκουσας, ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰη-σοῦ.<sup>14</sup> τὴν καλὴν * παραθήκην φύλαξον διὰ Πνεύματος ἁγίου <sup>1 Tim. 6. 20.</sup>
τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος ἐν ἡμῖν. <sup>15</sup> Οἶδας τοῦτο, ὅτι ἀπεστράφησάν <sup>m Acts 19.</sup> με πάντες οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, ὧν ἐστι Φύγελλος καὶ Ἑρμογένης. <sup>10.</sup> <sup>16</sup> Δῶף ἔλεος ὁ Κύριος τῷ Ὀνησιφόρου οἴκῳ ὅτι πολλάκις με <sup>m Acts 26.</sup>
ἀνέψυξε, καὶ τὴν ἀλυσίν μου οὐκ ἐπσχύνθη, <sup>20.</sup> <sup>17</sup> ἀλλὰ, γενό- <sup>Eph. 4. 30.</sup> μενος ἐν Ῥώμῃ, σπουδαιότερον ἐζήτησέ με, καὶ εὗρε <sup>ch. 4. 10.</sup> <sup>18</sup> (δῶף αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος εὐρεῖν ἔλεος παρὰ Κυρίου ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ) καὶ ὅσα ἐν Ἐφέσῳ διηκόνησε, βέλτιον σὺ γινώσκεις.

II. <sup>1</sup> Σὺ οὖν, τέκνον μου, ἐνδυναμοῦ ἐν τῇ χάριτι τῇ ἐν Χρι-στῷ Ἰησοῦ. <sup>2</sup> καὶ ἃ ἤκουσας παρ' ἐμοῦ διὰ πολλῶν μαρτύρων, <sup>a 1 Tim. 2. 2.</sup>
ταῦτα παράθου πιστοῖς ἀνθρώποις, οἵτινες ἱκανοὶ ἔσονται καὶ <sup>Tit. 1. 5-9.</sup>
ἐτέρους διδάξαι. <sup>3</sup> Σὺ οὖν κακοπάθησον ὡς καλὸς στρατιώτης <sup>b ch. 1. 3.</sup>
<sup>a 4. 5.</sup>

called a Creed, and in which the Apostle instructed his converts. See Rom. vi. 17. 1 Tim. vi. 3, 4. Tit. i. 9.—ἴχς must be connected with ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ. Timothy was to hold fast this summary, not in faith only, but with love and charity towards those who might differ from him in some respects, so that they were non-essentials.

14. παραθήκην] Such, for the t. rec. παρακαταθήκην, is found in almost all the uncials, and many cursives (I add all the Lamb. except one, and nearly all the Mus. copies); and it has been justly restored by Wets., Matthæi, Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; παρακαταθήκη being the Attic form, παραθήκη the common, or Hellenistic one, and accordingly used by Jos. and Philo several times. See Wasse and Popp on Thucyd. ii. 72. By this παραθ. is here meant the deposit of sound doctrine in the Catholic Faith, committed to him by Paul. It was to be retained by the aid of the same Holy Spirit, under whose influence it was communi- cated.

15. Now are held out some examples, partly for warning, and partly for instruction.—ἀπεστρ. does not so much mean abandonment of the religion, as a forsaking of its outward profession, and a withdrawing of their countenance from Paul. So 2 Tim. i. 15, ἀπείστ. με, 'forsook me.' Comp. Jer. xv. 6, ὃν ἀπείστράφησεν με (the Lord). Also Soph. Œd. Col. 1271, μή μ' ἀποστράψῃς.

16. The family of Onesiphorus acted the reverse, and therefore the Apostle prays that they may find mercy and acceptance with God. On ἀνένυξ see Col. iv. 11. The word seems to signify properly to 'bring a person to life again (anē) who is fainting with heat, by giving him air.'

18. βέλτιον] i. e. 'better than I can write or tell thee.'

II. 1. 'Sicuti antea jusserat depositum servare per Spiritum, ita nunc præcipit, ut in gratiâ roboretur.' (Calv.) Rightly; for the expression ἐνδυναμοῦ can mean no less than 'exert thyself vigorously'; 'strengthen thyself [by every exertion in thy power], in [humble dependence on] the grace of God, bestowed by and through Jesus Christ.' Thus the passage is quite parallel to Eph. vi. 10, ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, and 1 Cor. xvi. 13, κραταιοῦσθε, where see notes, and also Grot., Benson, and Doddr., on the present passage. In all these cases the expression is to be taken, if not literally, in the reciprocal sense (inculcated by Grot. and Benson), yet in the popular sense of the word, rouse your powers. Nor are we to wonder that such an exhortation should have been thought necessary by the Apostle, since, as Calv. remarks, 'Adeo ignava est caro, ut medio in cursu flaccescant etiam qui præditi sunt egregiis donis, nisi identidem excitentur.'

2. διὰ πολλῶν μαρτ.] There has been some doubt as to the persons here referred to. It seems best, with Est., Beza, Wolf, Rosenm., and Heinr., to understand both the presbyters and others of the congregation present at Timothy's ordination (mentioned at 1 Tim. iv. 14. vi. 12, and 2 Tim. i. 6), which was prob. accompanied with a public charge, the substance whereof St. Paul desires may be delivered to others also. In παράθου there is the same metaphor as in παραθήκην, supra i. 14, and elsewhere. The next words, πιστοῖς—διδάξαι, advert to the two principal qualifications for the ministry,—fidelity, and fitness for preaching or instructing.

3. ὡς καλ. στρατ.] A military allusion, as at 1 Tim. i. 18. vi. 12. Here, however, are, I apprehend, designated, not so much courage in defending, as labour and hardship in propagating the Gospel. So supr., i. 8, συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. And be it observed, that κακοπαθίσαι is often used by the Greek Historians with reference to the manual labours of the soldiery. Valer. Max. viii. 5, 'Carnades laboriosis experientia miles.' Here, instead of σὺ οὖν κακοπ., 6 uncial, and 5 cursive MSS., with the later Syriac, and some other Versions, have Συγκακ., which is received by Lachm. and Tisch.; but not on good grounds; for the σὺν here is worse than useless to the argument, and may easily have arisen from scribes in copying from an original which had not the σὺν (prob. cancelled by the Critics for the purpose of removing a tautology); in which case the σὺ would pass for σὺν in composition with the verb following. This is more prob. than that the reading was adopted from supr. i. 8. Moreover, what weakens our confidence in those uncial MSS. in this case is, that they all of them have the manifest blunder of the scribes in reading συστρατιώτης for e 1 Cor. 2.

26.
d 1 Cor. 9.
7—11, 28.
Heb. 10, 28.
e 3 Sam. 7.
12.
Ps. 138, 11.
Isa. 11, 1.
Matt. 1, 1.
&c.
Acts 2, 30.
R 13, 28.
Rom. 1, 3.

Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>4</sup> Οὐδεὶς στρατεύόμενος ἐμπλέκεται ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματεαῖς, ἵνα τῷ στρατολογήσαντι ἀρέσῃ. <sup>5</sup> Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ ἀθλῇ τις, οὐ στεφανοῦται, ἐὰν μὴ νομίμως ἀθλήσῃ. <sup>6</sup> Ὁ τοῦ κοπιῶντα γεωργὸν δεῖ πρῶτον τῶν καρπῶν μεταλαμβάνειν. <sup>7</sup> Νόμι δὲ λέγω, ὅτι δόξῃ γάρ σοι ὁ Κύριος σύνεσιν ἐν πάσι. <sup>8</sup> Μνημόνευε Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐγγεγερμένον ἐκ νεκρῶν, ἐκ σπέρ-

στρατ., the σπ having arisen, as often, from the σ preceding. Certainly the Pesch. Syr. Translator must have read Σὺ οὐ κακοῦ., which is found in the Vat. B, and, it seems, in all the MSS. except 11.

4. On the foregoing military comparison Paul founds an argument derived from the life of a soldier, and here applied à fortiori. By τοῦ βίου πραγμ. is meant the business of life in general, the plural being used with allusion to the various kinds thereof,—as agriculture, trade, manufactures, &c. Now, by the Roman law, soldiers were excluded from all such; and no wonder, for the long civil wars (throughout nearly the whole of the civilized world) and the change of manners had made it necessary that the army should be a regular profession, which did not admit of military service being carried on conjointly with the ordinary business of life, in trades or professions, as had been the case more or less until nearly the Christian era. And, accordingly, the Roman soldier was strictly forbidden to exercise any trade or handicraft (see Veget. l. ii. 19), in order that he might be a καλὸς στρατιώτης. With ἐμπλέκεται, 'entangles himself,' comp. Arrian, Epict. iii. 22, where it is enjoined that the philosopher be not ἐμπλεγμίνους σχέσειςιν. There may, however, be an allusion to marriage, as espec. entangling any one with the cares of life, from which Roman soldiers were strictly prohibited.—τῷ στρατολογήσαντι, meaning the sovereign, or state, that has taken him into pay.

5. On the military St. Paul now engrafs an agonistic allusion, as in 1 Cor. ix. 25.—ἀθλῇ, 'contend in the games,' viz. by wrestling.—οὐ στεφανοῦται, 'he does not gain the prize,'—νομίμως refers, not so much to the rules according to which the wrestlers contended, as to the previous rules of exercise enforced by the trainers. So Arrian, Epict. iii. 10, δός μοι ἀπόδειξιν, εἰ νομίμως ἠδύλασας, εἰ ἔφαγες ὅσα δαί, εἰ ἔγυμνάσθης, εἰ τοῦ ἀλείπτου ἤκουσας. The phrase νομίμως ἀθλ. occurs also in Galen and other writers. The two things which seem here espec. adverted to are, 1. the previous severe exercise, and 2. the stripping off all their clothes, throwing aside every encumbrance, so as to give their opponent no advantage over them.

6. The agonistic metaphor now passes into an agricultural one, such as we find at 1 Cor. ix. 10. James v. 7. The sense, however, will depend upon what πρῶτον is to be referred to. It is most naturally connected with μεταλ., and such is the construction adopted by the generality of Expositors, ancient and modern. The sense, however, thus arising either involves what is inconsistent with facts, or (even when helped out by the harsh ellipsis of ἵνα κοπιᾷ, 'in order that he may be enabled to labour') contains a truth here inapposite; and the spiritual application thence deduced is forced and frigid. We have only to suppose, what is common in the writings of St. Paul, a somewhat harsh transposition, and (with many of the best Expositors) to join πρῶτον with κοπιῶντα, as is required by the course of argument; the true construction being this: δεῖ τὸν γεωργὸν πρῶτον κοπ. τ. καρπ. ματ., where κοπ. is the participle imperfect, and the literal sense is, 'It is necessary that the husbandman should first labour, and then enjoy the fruits [of his labour].'

7. νόμι δὲ λέγω 'Mind, lay to heart, what I say.' This refers to all the foregoing admonitions from i. 8 forwards. There is, however, some doubt as to the reading. Lachm. and Tisch. edit δὲ λέγω and δώσει, from some six uncial, and a few cursive MSS., and some Versions. But the external authority for this reading is insufficient; and internal evidence is, in the case of δ, quite adverse, since it is plainly an easier reading, and such as Translators who render freely would be likely to follow. For the latter change there is more to be said, and the reading is received by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. Rinck remarks that δόξῃ, which cannot properly be joined with γάρ, seems to have crept in from supra i. 16 and 18. But it occurs also at Rom. xv. 5, and Eph. i. 17. 2 Thess. iii. 16. Thus the precatory form occurs five times, and hence it was likely to be employed the sixth; whereas the promissive form (whereby Paul would assure Timothy that he should have understanding given to him if he would bestow attention) occurs, I think, not once, unless Rom. xvi. 20 be thought to supply an instance, the words there being, ὁ θεὸς τῇ εὐρίκειᾳ συντερίψει τὸν Σατανᾶν, &c. But there the Alex. MS. and one other, together with the Ital. Version and Theodor., have the Optat. συντερίψει. If, however, the Fut. Ind. there and here be adopted, we must regard it as taken Hebraicè for the Optative 'bend precantis vel bene sperantis,' as Est. suggests. But this is a use very rarely found in the Septuagint, and never, I believe, in the New Testament; and, therefore, I still retain δόξῃ, which was, I suspect, stumbled at by the Critics on account of the γάρ; and, accordingly, they substituted δώσει: which has happened elsewhere. That the Optative or semi-precatory sense is here intended, is clear from the γάρ, which is not, what some recent Expositors suppose it, a mere Particle of transition, but is a formula pertaining to the Optative, of which the force may be best expressed thus: 'May, then (or 'accordingly'), the Lord give thee,' &c. So εἰ γάρ is used in Job vi. 2, Sept., and also in Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 38, and elsewhere in the best writers. In short, the context will not permit the words to be taken (as Est. thinks) of promise, but of prayer, as Calv., Hyper., Bulling., and Grot. have shown.

8. μνημ. 'I. Xp., &c.] Here there is a continuation of the admonition in νόμι δὲ λέγω: the intent being to admonish Timothy, in all his ματος Δαυίδ, κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγελίον μου <sup>9</sup> ἐν ᾧ κακοπαθὼ μέχρι δεσμῶν, ὡς κακοῦργος· ἀλλ' ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ δέδεται. f Eph. 3. 1.

12. & 4. 1.
Col. 1. 24.
& 4. 13.
Phil. 1. 7.
ch. 1. 18.
g Col. 1. 24.
h Rom. 6. 3.
i 2 Cor. 1. 12.
j 2 Cor. 4. 10.
k 1 Pet. 4. 13.
l Matt. 10.
m Mark 8. 28.
n Luke 12. 9.
o Rom. 8. 17.
p 2 Cor. 4. 10.
q Phil. 4. 10.
r 1 Pet. 4. 13.
s Rom. 3. 3.
& 9. 6.
 10 <sup>ε</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο πάντα ὑπομένω διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ σωτηρίας τύχωσι τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, μετὰ δόξης αἰωνίου.
 11 <sup>h</sup> Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος· εἰ γὰρ συναπεθάνομεν, καὶ συζήσομεν <sup>12</sup> εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν εἰ ἀρνούμεθα, κἀκεῖνος ἀρνή-σεται ἡμᾶς· <sup>13</sup> <sup>k</sup> εἰ ἀπιστοῦμεν, ἐκεῖνος πιστὸς μένει, ἀρνήσασθαι ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται.
 14 <sup>l</sup> Ταῦτα ὑπομύνησκε διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου 1 Eph. 4. 17. 1 Thess. 4. 11. 2 Thess. 2. 4. 1 Tim. 6. 4. 2 Pet. 1. 18.

sufferings and dangers, to remember Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, and thus a man in flesh and blood (i. e. the promised Saviour), who had been raised from the dead; the recollection of whose sufferings, with the glorious termination of them, in his exaltation as a Prince and a Saviour, would be the strongest incentive to constancy, both for himself and others.

9. κακοῦρ.] q. d. 'I labour;' suggesting his example in aid of his precepts.—ὡς, for ὡς εἰ. Of ἀλλ' ὁ λόγος—δέδεται the full sense is, 'but [it is my comfort, and yours, that] the word of God is not bound [along with me], but is making free course and is glorified.' Thus it was not only by others, but also, in some measure, by the Apostle himself; for he seems not to have been restricted from preaching the Gospel at his own hired house.

10. διὰ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν] meaning, as the best Commentators are agreed, those who were called to receive the Gospel, especially the Gentiles, of whom St. Paul was especially the Apostle.

11, 12. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος] This formula some refer to what precedes, as at Tit. iii. 8; but it almost always relates to what follows; and that it is so to be taken here, appears from γὰρ in the next clause, which means scilicet, so that there is no occasion for ὅτι. This use of the formula is intended to direct the attention to some weighty and indubitable truth (see 1 Tim. i. 15. iii. 1. iv. 9), and especially when, as in the present case, flesh and blood would be likely to stumble at a somewhat unpalatable doctrine, involving the sacrifice of what is most precious in this world, in order to the happiness of the next. See Calvin and Hyperius. Many Expositors are of opinion that what is here said was a saying in frequent use among Christians. But of this we have no proof, and the fact itself may be doubted; for, 1. the saying is not at all in the manner of a common adage, especially as it is too long (the saying extending as far as οὐ δύναται); and, 2. it is too refined in the thought, and antithetic in the expression. It bears more resemblance to what Mr. Conyb. thinks was the composition from which it was taken,—a Christian Hymn. But I know of nothing to confirm this conjecture; for that it is capable of being sung to music, is no proof at all. In order, however, better to understand its character and guess its origin, we must bear in mind that the passage consists of two distinct portions; the first (meant for encouragement and consolation, and containing in συζήσομεν—συμβασιλεύσομεν a beautiful dimas) terminating at συμβασιλ.; comp. Rom. vi. 5, 8, and notes; v. 17, and Rev. iii. 26;

the second, meant for warning, as to the awful consequences of failure in enduring the fiery trial (see 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12),—namely, that of being disowned by Christ. See Matt. vii. 23, and comp. x. 23. The remaining words of the sentence form, properly speaking, but one clause, and that intended for an illustration of what has been said, and to point the warning. The sense is, 'Though we should be unfaithful to our engagements, He will, and must, abide faithful both to his promises and to his threatenings. He cannot deny himself (as we may) by falsifying his own solemn declarations, i. e. He cannot renounce his own character, act inconsistently with himself. Therefore, as Christ is true, so must apostates and backsliders be rejected by him at that day, with the awful denunciation, "I never knew you; depart from me," &c.—εἰ ἀρνούμεθα—ἡμᾶς. Render: 'if we [on our part] deny [him], he too will deny us.'—To advert, however, to some questions as to reading. For ἀρνούμεθα, Lachm. and Tisch. edit. ἀρνήσομεθα, from two uncials, a few cursive MSS., and some Versions. But Versions are of no great weight in a case like this, and the reading in question seems to be a mere correction proceeding from the early Critics, of which the purpose was the better to adapt the word to that which follows a little after, ἀρνήσεται. But such adaptation is a point little considered in the writings of St. Paul. Thus, in this very passage, while we should have expected the addition of ἡμῖν to correspond to κἀκεῖνος, yet that is not found in a single MS. And the suppression of the pronoun in such a case is observable now and then in the best writers, espec. Thucyd. Again, after ἀρνήσασθαι, v. 13, almost all the uncials MSS., not a few others, and several Versions, insert γὰρ, which has been received by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. But internal evidence is against the word, considering that, while almost impossible to account for its having been omitted, it is by no means difficult to account for its having been added. It came, I suspect, from certain petty Critics who had not taste sufficient to be sensible of the force of the Ayndeton. 'Deny himself he cannot [inasmuch as his very nature is truth itself].'

14. ταῦτα ὑπομ.] So I would point, with Theophyl.; such being more suitable to the gravity and dignity of solemn injunction. In ὑπομ. there seems to be a union of the sense 'to bring to mind by suggestion,' and 'to enforce, exhort, by suitable admonition;' as in 2 Pet. i. 12, where see note.—διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπ. τ. K. See 1 Tim. v. 21. On λογομαχεῖν see 1 Tim. vi. 4. For λογομαχεῖν, Lachm., and Tisch., μη λογομαχεῖν, εἰς οὐδὲν χρήσιμον, ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ τῶν ἀκουόντων. <sup>15</sup> Σπούδαςον σεαυτὸν δόκιμον παραστήσαι τῷ Θεῷ,

m 1 Tim. 1.
4. & 4. 7.
8. & 20.
Tit. 1. 14.
3. 2. 9.
n 1 Tim. 1.
20.

ἐργάτην ἀνεπαίσχυντον, ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας. <sup>16</sup> Τὰς δὲ βεβήλους κενοφωσίας περιίτασσο· ἐπὶ πλείον γὰρ προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας· <sup>17</sup> καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτῶν ὡς γάγγραινα

ed. 1, edit λογομάχει, from two of the most ancient uncial MSS., the Vulg. and Æth. Versions, and some Latin Fathers. This would make the admonition one addressed to Timothy. But it were surely little necessary for him, though highly so for others. And it is observable that, at 1 Tim. vi. 20, Timothy himself is (as Est. points out) not admonished to abstain from contests of words; but others are indirectly reprehended for giving way to βεβήλους κενοφωσίας, which are mentioned that he may avoid them. Λογομαχεῖν too is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version, in addition to all the MSS. except two; and is rightly restored by Tisch. in his 2nd edit. At ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ there is not, as some suppose, an ellipsis of εἰ μὴ or ἀλλά. Much energy is imparted by the Asyndeton. The general sense is, that 'controversies which turn on some nice distinctions in words, rather than involve differences in things, are to be avoided, not merely as useless, but as tending to subvert the faith of the hearers; since they may thus doubt of the truth of that Gospel about which the contending parties cannot agree.' See Calv. and Hyper.

<sup>15</sup>. After having shown what the preachers of God's word ought not to do, the Apostle proceeds to point out what they ought to do. Here it is proper to notice the connexion, which has been ably traced by Calv. in the following judicious remark: 'Since the most fruitful source of controversies about doctrines is the eager desire of ingenious men to recommend themselves to the world, the Apostle proposes what is the best remedy against this, by directing the minister to look unto God;' q. d. 'Whereas others court popular applause, do thou study to approve thyself and thy ministry unto GOD,—ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας. The general sense here is obvious; but the nature of the metaphor here employed has been not a little disputed. Many recognize in ὀρθοτ. an allusion to the Jewish Priests, in sacrifice, cutting up or dividing the victim into its proper parts; or to the Scribes dividing the Law into sections; or, to a carver distributing the meat to the guests; or, to a steward dealing out the articles committed to his management: all which notions, however, are quite unsupported by any thing like sufficient proof. For first, as to the opinion of those (comprising almost all the early modern Commentators) who, supposing here a sacrificial allusion, take ὀρθοτομοῦν here for ὀρθῶς τέμνειν, as in Athen. 303, E; it is to be observed that there we have denoted, not the cutting up of a victim, but of a large fish, previous to roasting it; which was probably done by splitting it, as it were, in two. The opinion most generally adopted by the recent Commentators is that of Greg. Naz., ably supported by Elsner and Wetst., according to which there is supposed to be a metaphor taken from those who proceed by a direct road, leaving crooked and winding paths; and they compare the Greek phrase τέμ- νειν ὁδὸν (or κίλευθον) εὐθείαν, and the Latin viam secare. This view, however, is liable to two objections; 1. that it drops the idea of ἐργάτης, and unwarrantably introduces that of ὁδὸν; 2. that it does not sufficiently unfold that part of the compound term ὀρθοτομοῦντα which imports the act of cutting, or dividing, and which might lead us rather to think that the Apostle had in view the act of ploughing when the furrows are made straight; an opinion supported by the authority of Chrys. and Theodor., who annotate thus: 'We praise even those husbandmen, who cut their furrows straight; so also the teacher is to be commended, who follows the canon or rule of the Divine Oracle.' According to this view, 'the spiritual workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth,' is he who wanders not to the right or to the left, but goes forward directly in the path of truth, who, at every step, takes for his rule the revealed word of God. After all, however, even this view lies open to the same objection as the others,—namely, of introducing an idea, which there is no reason to think was in the mind of the writer; nay, it may be doubted whether the Apostle is here speaking of Scripture at all, and consequently whether he is giving any direction for its interpretation. By 'the word of truth,' seems rather to be meant the Gospel; and the Apostle appears to have had no special allusion to any of the qualifications or offices of the spiritual workman, but solely has in view the general idea of 'doing his work of the Gospel so as not to be ashamed; i. e. with all wisdom, diligence, and faithfulness. So the Vulg. well renders, 'rectè tractantem;' and the Pesch. Syr. Translator, 'preaching rightly;' whence it appears that he also took τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας to mean, not the Scriptures, but the Gospel; an interpretation confirmed by the context, at ver. 14, ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ τῶν ἀκουόντων. And in this sense the expression occurs at 2 Cor. vi. 7. Eph. i. 13. James i. 18. Col. i. 5. Thus, too, in Euseb. and other writers, ὀρθοτομία is used for ὀρθοδιδασκαλία. So Const. Ap. vii. 30, ὀρθοτομοῦν ἐν τοῖς Κυρίοις δόγματις.

<sup>16</sup>—<sup>18</sup>. On these verses see notes at 1 Tim. i. 4. 20. vi. 20. iv. 7, and also Bp. Warburton's Divine Leg., vol. iii. p. 198.

<sup>16</sup>. βεβήλους κενοφωσίας περιίτασσο] lit. 'stand aloof from, keep clear of, avoid,' equiv. to παραιτοῦ in 1 Tim. iv. 7. v. 11. So the word is used freq. in Jos., Lucian, Jambl., and even the earlier and purer writers, especially Plato.—ἐπὶ πλείον προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας, meaning that they will (if they go on as they do) increase, &c. Comp. Thucyd. v. 57, 1, εἰ μὴ προκαταλήφοντα ἐπὶ πλείον χρησασθαι αὐτά, 'the evils would proceed to a greater pitch.'

<sup>17</sup>. ὡς γάγγραινα ὁμῶν ἔξει] So in Plat. de Adul. c. 36, the flattered person is represented figur. as γαγγραιναῖς—διαβρωθεῖς, 'eaten up, brought to destruction:' comp. Prov. xxvi. 28.

νομήν ἔξει ὧν ἐστὶν Ὑμέναιος καὶ Φίλητος, <sup>18</sup> οἳ οὔτινες περὶ τὴν <sup>οἱ 1 Tim. 6.</sup> ἀλήθειαν ἡτοχόησαν, λέγοντες τὴν ἀνάστασιν ἤδη γεγονέναι, καὶ ἀνατρέπουσι τὴν τινῶν πίστιν. <sup>19</sup> Ὁ μέντοι στερεὸς θεμέ- <sup>John 10.</sup>
 λίος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐσθηκεν, ἔχων τὴν σφραγίδα ταύτην “Ἐγὼ Κύριος τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ” καὶ “ἀποστήτω ἀπὸ ἀδικίας πᾶς ὁ ὀνομάζων τὸ ὄνομα * Κυρίου.” <sup>20</sup> Ἐν μεγάλῃ δὲ οἰκίᾳ οὐκ <sup>2 Rom. 9. 21.</sup>

Parallel is an expression in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1868, Reiske, οὐκ ἔσται πῖρας τῶν δαιμονίων χόλων, ἵως ἀν-φαγίδαίνα ἐγκαθημένη πάντα σήπη καὶ διαφθεῖρη τὰ καλὰ, ‘eats out all that is good,’ and Plut. de Superst. c. 1, τοῦτο τὸ ψεύδος ἰὼν ἔχει, νέμεται τὴν ψυχὴν, where ἔχει is used as ἔξει here, of tendency to the action, ‘what will tend to eat,’ eat as rust eats metal (see James v. 3), and will eat on, spread further (so Acts iv. 17, ἵνα μὴ ἐπὶ πλείον διασηθῇ), even as running ulcers.

18. ἀνατρέπουσι τὴν τινῶν πίστιν] ‘They upset the faith of some.’ Perhaps alluding to the persons as being upset in argument by dexterous sophists. So Aristoph. Nub. 897, ἀνατρέψω ταύτ’ ἀντιλίγων.

19. ὁ μέντοι στερεός, &c.] In order to determine the exact import of this difficult passage, it is proper to pay especial attention to the connexion (for a connexion there certainly is, notwithstanding that it has been denied by some, and thought doubtful by others); and this would seem to be with the preceding verse; q. d. ‘Nevertheless [whatever may be the evil effects produced by these seducers] the Foundation of God standeth firm and immovable:’ it being, as Hyper. observes, a proof that all are not subverted; q. d. ‘Although false teachers do subvert the faith of some, yet the solid foundation of God stands firm and unshaken, and therefore the edifice is safe.’—But to consider the exact import of the expression ὁ θεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ. By this the recent Commentators in general understand the Christian religion, which has God for its author. Yet thus it will be necessary to take θεμέλιος to mean edifice; for which signif. of the word, however, no good authority exists. It is best, then, to suppose the word here employed in the usual acceptation on: though even those who retain it, vary in their interpretation of the expression; some understanding by it the doctrine of the resurrection, whereon principally God has meant the truth of the Gospel to be built; others, Christ himself; and others, again, the promise of eternal salvation through Christ. Of which expositions the second and third, though they are not a little specious, and have much to recommend them in other parts of Scripture, yet they have little support from any, the second may be said to run counter to the context, which is strongly in favour of the first, i. e. the doctrine of the resurrection. This, too, has the further advantage, that it admits of the third being engrained upon it; for certainly ‘the fundamental doctrine of the Gospel,’ the resurrection (see 1 Cor. xv. Intro.), contained in itself the promise of eternal salvation to all true believers, and indeed might be taken, per synecdochen, to denote the religion itself. Moreover, according to this view alone are we enabled to assign any tolerable sense to the words following, ἔχων τὴν σφραγίδα ταύτην: for to suppose it to mean tokens, or confirmation (as those are obliged to interpret it who understand θεμέλιος of an edifice), would make the next words incapable of any satisfactory sense. The best Critics, for nearly a century, have been of opinion, that σφραγίς may retain its almost constant signif. in the New Test., and denote the impression, or stamp, made by a seal, whether cyphers, figures, or letters; and Biblical antiquaries have proved not only that the ancient seals had often whole sentences, moral apophthegms, &c., but also that the foundation-stones of great edifices had often engraven on them, or stamped upon them by a large seal, inscriptions having reference to the purpose of the building, or containing certain moral apophthegms. Now here the foundation of this mystical building, meaning THE GOSPEL, is supposed to have two inscriptions upon it, proper to be impressed on the minds of all professing Christians, both for encouragement and for warning, according as the case may be; for encouragement, since the Lord knoweth his chosen, approveth and taketh care of his obedient people, and will preserve them, while others are left to perish; for warning and admonition to unstable converts, and indeed a direction to all professing Christians, to make their calling and election sure, and evidence the reality of their faith and love by being ‘careful to maintain good works’ (Tit. iii. 8), which are the surest proofs of their sincerity, and the fairest fruits of their efficacy.—To advert to a matter of reading, though not affecting the sense.—For t. rec. Χριστοῦ, Matth., Grieb., Vater, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. edit Κυρίου, on very strong authority, —namely, almost all the uncials, and very many cursives, MSS. (to which I can add all the Lamb. and Mus. copies), confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and some other Versions. And, considering the great weight of external authority, while internal evidence is evenly balanced, I have now received the reading into the text.

20. ἐν μεγάλῃ δὲ οἰκίᾳ] This passage partakes much of the obscurity of the preceding; but the difficulty here, as at Rom. v. 12, chiefly arises from the application of the similitude not being expressed. It is not agreed whether οἰκία means the world, or the visible Church; but there is little doubt that the latter is the true view. By ἐκκλησία some think are meant Ministers; others, Christians in general; but if οἰκία mean ‘the visible Church,’ ἐκκλησία must mean ‘all professing Christians in it,’ whether ministers or not. The best Expositors are agreed that the Apostle meant thus to intimate, for the encouragement of faint-hearted believers, that the heresies and backslidings of many professing Christians did not affect God’s covenant and promises to true believers; ‘for, as in a great house, &c.,’ so in the visible Church, not only true Christians were found, but persons of a different character, yet whose hypocrisy and iniquity were overruled to ἔστι μόνον σκευὴ χρυσᾶ καὶ ἀργυρᾶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ξύλινα καὶ ὀστράκινα· καὶ ἃ μὲν εἰς τιμὴν, ἃ δὲ εἰς ἀτιμίαν. 21 Ἐὰν οὖν τις ἐκκαθάρῃ ἑαυτὸν ἀπὸ τούτων, ἔσται σκευὸς εἰς τιμὴν, ἡγιασμένος, καὶ εὐχρηστον τῷ δεσπότῃ, εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένος.

22 Ὡς δὲ νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας φεύγε· δίκωκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, πίστιν, ἀγάπην, εἰρήνην μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων τὸν Κύριον ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας. 23 Ὡς δὲ μαρὰς καὶ ἀπαιδεύτους ζητήσεις παραιτοῦ, εἰδὼς ὅτι γεννώσι μάχας. 24 «δούλον δὲ Κυρίου οὐ δεῖ μάχεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἥπιον εἶναι πρὸς πάντας, διδακτικόν, ἀνεξίκακον, 25 ἐν πραότητι παιδεύοντα τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους fulfil his righteous purposes. See Calv. and Hyper. Thus the connexion may be laid down as follows: '[Such being the case, let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity if he desires to attain to the resurrection of the just. This he must do:] for though there are bad as well as good characters in the Church, as in a large house there are various sorts of vessels, yet it is only by cleansing himself from all iniquity that he can be fit for his Lord and Master's service here, and his rewards hereafter.'

21. Here the Apostle, pursuing the same metaphor, admonishes them to keep themselves pure from the aforesaid evil principles and practices; of course implying a careful separation of themselves from the persons themselves. So Tit. iii. 10, it is said, αἱρετικὸν παραιτοῦ, and 1 Tim. vi. 8, ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων. Ἐκκαθάρῃ—τούτων, keep thyself pure from the contamination of these, namely, the seductions of evil men, false teachers. Ἐκκαθάρ. is a highly significant term, of which the sense is to cleanse out; and is espec. used of the purifying vessels; which idea seems, from the subsequent term σκευὸς, to have been here present to the mind of the Apostle. The same fig. use occurs in Arrian, Epict. ii. 23, 40, τὴν προαίρεσιν ('his disposition') ἐκκαθάρει, and in Plut. vi. 153, cited in my Lex. in v. In σκευὸς—ἡγιασμένος there is an allusion to the vessels of the temple, which were kept apart from all profane use. The καὶ before εὐχρ., not found in many uncial MSS. and Versions, is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; perhaps rightly; for the ayndelon here would have great force. It is observable that a καὶ has been similarly foisted in at Tit. iii. 1. The words εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένος are exegetical of the εὐχρηστον preceding.—ἡτοιμ. has the sense, 'accommodated to.'

22. νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυ.] This is not, I think, to be interpreted of lusts properly so called; such a sense being foreign to the context, and to the character of the person addressed; and the abstinences elsewhere ascribed to Timothy excludes the idea of sensuality. It would seem that νεωτ. here stands for μετακιβέριος (an expression which Philo joins with ἐπιθυμία), and that the Apostle thus means (as Salmas. Wolf, Calv., and Heinr., are of opinion) to denote 'those vehement, impetuous, and headstrong passions' mostly found in young men, but which are sometimes found in middle age, which Timothy had nearly reached, and, accordingly, against which the Apostle here cautions him; and, through him, other ministers, both young and middle-aged, as well as Timothy. Now when we consider that it was rashness, vanity, and rage for controversy and novelty, that had hurried Hymeneus and Philotus into those baneful errors, against which the Apostle here cautions Timothy, the suitableness of the present admonition will be very apparent.—By the term δικαιοσύνη is meant 'justice' (= to the Latin aequitas, see Acts xxiv. 25), 'quoniam neminem ledit, sed unicuique quod suum est tribuit.' (Est.)—πίστις and ἀγάπη are, Calv. remarks, subjoined, as forming the principal instruments of rectitude. Comp. the kindred passage 1 Tim. vi. 11, δέωκα δικαιοσύνην—πίστιν, ἀγάπην. To the ἀγάπῃ is well subjoined εἰρήνην μετὰ—καρδίας, since the being occupied in curious questions which are apt to engender strife, would be at variance with that Christian love, which, as Paul intimates, is to be evinced in cultivating peace even with those who conscientiously differ from us in opinion, so that it be on matters not affecting fundamentals. The expression ἐπικαλ. τὸν Θεὸν or τὸν Κύριον is one formed on the use of ἐπικ. found in the Sept. and in the N. T. (see my Lex.), by which the word denotes sometimes, as here, not invocation in prayer, public or private, but 'that God-fearing devotional prayer,' which is always ready to address God in prayer or praise; and the expression is here used, in a general sense, of 'serving God in a holy life and conversation by having him always before us.' By the phrase ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδ. (with which comp. Soph. Ed. Col. 487, καλοῦμαι Εὐμαιίδας ἐκ εὐμαιῶν στήθεσιν, where the Schol. explains by μὴ εἶς ἐπιτολῆς ἀλλ' ἐν διαθείτῃ), is meant 'out of a single-hearted purpose of pleasing God,' as opposed to an hypocritical man-pleasing spirit. It is to be a spirit untainted by human motives, such as that of vain-glory. Comp. Ps. xiii. 4, καθαρὰ καρδία. The phrase occurs also in 1 Tim. i. 5, and 1 Pet. i. 22.

23. ἀπαιδεύτους] 'insensates,' which tend to be solid information, being founded on mere folly; forming, in fact, the καυφῶναι and ἀντιθέσεις τῇ ψευδονομίᾳ γνώσεως of 1 Tim. vi. 20.

24. μάχεσθαι] 'to be disputations and quarrelsome;' see Tit. iii. 2.—ἀνεξίκακος properly signifies 'patient of injuries.' See my Lex. Here, however, it must denote 'tolerant of those petulant expressions, which too often arise from difference of opinion:' a disposition above all others calculated to promote the peace above inculcated; 'patience being'—(as a great Divine well says) 'the great peace-maker.'

25. τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθε.] meaning, not those who μή ποτε † δὴ αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς μετάνοιαν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας, 26 καὶ ἀνανήψουσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος, ἐξωγημένοι ἐπ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα.

III. 1<sup>a</sup> Τοῦτο δὲ γίνωσκε, ὅτι ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις ἐνστή-a 3 Pet. 2. 2.

1 John 2. 18.
Jude 17.

oppose the Gospel itself—who are, at ch. iii. 8, denoted as οἱ ἀντιστάμενοι, and from whom Timothy is there directed to turn away,—but those who oppose his views of it, lit. set themselves in opposition to. So Longin. de Subl. § 17, ἀντιδιατίθειμνοι πρὸς τὴν πίστιν. See more in my Lex. These Timothy is enjoined to treat with mildness, meekly instructing and setting them right where wrong, instead of harshly censuring them,—whereby, so far from being brought to a better mind, they would only be uselessly exasperated. Accordingly, the next words, μή ποτε δὴ αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς μετάνοιαν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας, are meant to suggest a reason why it is fit the Christian minister should exercise this mild forbearance,—namely, because it holds out the best hope of bringing over the erroneous professor to a reception of the truth as it is in Jesus; for the context requires us to render, 'if peradventure God may give them,' &c. : a somewhat irregular use of μή ποτε, but occasioned, as Mr. Green has well observed (Gr. N. T., p. 83), by the Apostle's having 'set out with the doublet [which is no other than the proper] sense of μή; but, a design being still strongly presented to his mind, he subjoined the Mood (viz. the Subjunct.) corresponding to the prevailing thought, springing from the hope that God would give them repentance.' The minister, Hyper. remarks, is to do this because 'spemus est illos (viz. the ἀντιδιατίθειμνους) per Deum adducendos ad,' &c. And this is supported by the exposition of Chrys. and Theophyl., ἵσως, φησὶν, ἵσται τι διόρθωσις, and especially Theodor., who explains the μή ποτε δὴ αὐτοῖς μετάνοιαν thus: εἰκότι γὰρ ('it is preferable') αὐτοὺς τῇ ἀνυθὲν ἐπικουρίας τυχεῖν, καὶ ὅτι. It is true that the above view of the sense depends on the reading. Now for δὴ, five uncial and a few cursive MSS. have δὴν, which reading has been adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.; while Griesb. and Scholz retain δὴ, whom I continue to follow; though, as will appear from note on Eph. iii. 16, δὴν may prob. be the true reading; for perhaps the Optat. may have been used in Hellenistic Greek for the Subjunct., in which the μή ποτε means ('to see) if,' or 'whether perhaps'; and this is confirmed by Luke iii. 15, διαλογιζομένων—μή ποτε αὐτοὶ εἰς ὁ Χριστὸς, sine v. l., and also by Homer, Od. xii. 215, αἰ κέ ποδὶ ('haply') Ζεὺς Διὶ τόνδε γ' ἑλθεῖν ὕπεκφυγεν. Comp. also vii. 314, οἶκον δὲ—δοίην, where it would seem that the Hellenistic idiom was derived from the ancient Doric. To the few cursive MSS. adduced for δὴν,—only two or three,—I add Lamb. 1185, l. m. If the δὴ be retained, the sense will be, 'If haply God may give;' if the Optat., it will be, 'If haply God should give.'—εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀλ., meaning, 'that so they may acknowledge the truth which they had before rejected.' The Apostle then hints at the sinfulness of their even conscientious opposition to the truth, by making it need repentance. Comp. Acts xi. 18.

26. καὶ ἀνανήψ., &c.] This strong expression seems meant to more clearly express the sinfulness and danger of those opinions, by a reference to their origin and tendency. As to the figures, we may suppose a somewhat abrupt transition from the metaphor derived from the deep sleep of inbriety to that taken from slavery; just as, in the first clause, there is a harsh blending of the metaphors of sobering from inbriety (see note on 1 Cor. xv. 34), and that of disengaging oneself from a snare (as birds from the snares of the fowler), by which is here to be understood temptation; the latter of which is found in 1 Tim. iii. 7, ἵνα μὴ ἐμπέσῃ εἰς παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου. By Grot., Beza, Benson, Beng., Wetst., Mackn., Wakef., and Abp. Newc., the ἐκείνου is referred to the remote antecedent ὁ Θεός. But that involves no little harshness, from the violent transposition it supposes. The most natural reference is to the nearer antecedent Διαβόλου; and thus the image of complete deliverance is made stronger. Comp. Luke xxiii. 25, τόν 'Ι. παρίδωκε τῷ θαλάμῳ αὐτῶν, 'to do with him as they would.' The construction here is, indeed, awkward; and there is a difficulty in referring αὐτοῦ and ἐκείνου to the same subject; but there was no reason for Wiesing. to refer αὐτοῦ to Timothy, and ἐκείνου to God; for De Wette has shown, by a passage from Plato, that the above-mentioned reference is inadmissible. There is also an ellipsis of ποιήσαι; and εἰς stands for πρὸς. The complete phrase occurs in Luke xii. 47, and there is an allusion to prisoners in war surrendering at discretion, and consequently, if spared, spared to do the behests of the victor.

III. Having apprised Timothy that, for wise reasons, in the counsels of God, false teachers were permitted to arise, the Apostle now proceeds to apprise him that, through the influence of their false doctrines, grievous and perilous times would arrive; which are then graphically described. The Apostle may have done this, in order to put Timothy on his guard; for such is implied in the phrase τοῦτο γίνωσκε, introducing this predictive description,—which is, with reason, supposed to have the same reference as that of the Apostasy and the Man of Sin in the second Epistle to the Thessalonians. Moreover, by turning his view to future grievous and perilous times, the Apostle meant, doubtless, not only to quicken his vigilance, but sharpen his diligence; for as Calvin observes, 'hac denuntiatione diligentiam ejus magis acutere voluit. Ubi enim res ex voto nostro habent, magis securi redimur, necessitas autem acris pungit.'

1. ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις] An expression equiv. to υστεροὶ καιροί, 1 Tim. iv. 1, where see note.—ἐπιστήσονται καιροὶ χαλεποί, 'difficult times, seasons hard to bear will impend, be at hand, present themselves.' Comp. Cic. Epist. ad Attic. 'grave tempus.' Such is the use of ἐν in Hermod. ap. Steph. Thes. in v., where we have ὁ καιρὸς ἐνίστην τῶν μυστηρίων ('adventi, advent').

σονται καιροὶ χαλεποί. <sup>2</sup> ἔσονται γὰρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι φίλαντοι, φιλάργυροι, ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφανοι, βλάσφημοι, γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, <sup>3</sup> ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι, διάβολοι, ἀκρατεῖς, ἀνήμεροι, ἀφιλάγαθοι, <sup>4</sup> προδόται, προπετεῖς, τετυφωμένοι, φιλ-

2—5. The Apostle now illustrates the epithet χαλεποί, in a description full of energy, containing, as in Rom. i., a long drawn συναθροισμός, with which the Commentators compare some from the Class. writers, all serving to show the degeneracy of Christians at the period here spoken of. The fulfilment of the prophecy has been referred to various periods, with more or less of probability, but perhaps never so as to attain any thing approaching to certainty.

2. φίλαντοι, φιλάργυροι, &c.] The various vices here specified seem (as elsewhere in St. Paul's writings) to be enumerated with a certain regard to plan, so as to form groups, of which φίλαντοι and φιλάργυροι form the first, and should be rendered 'selfish, fond of lucre.' The former term properly implies no more than the feeling implanted by the Almighty in man for his preservation. So Jos. Antt. iii. 8, 1, διὰ τὰ τὸ φύσει πάντας εἶναι φιλαύτους. In the same good sense of the word, Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 15, says that old men are φίλαντοι μᾶλλον ἢ δαί. In the later writers, however, the term is commonly used in a bad sense, like our selfish, and thus well opposed to φιλόκαλος. Comp. Plut., vol. v. p. 508, φιλαῦτον γὰρ ἄνδρὸς, οὐ φιλόκαλον παντὸς αἰεὶ βελτίστον ἡγεῖσθαι, a confessedly corrupt passage, of which the true reading, I think, is, φιλ. γ. δ., οὐ φιλόκαλον, παντὸς αὐτὸν βελτίω ἡγεῖσθαι, where βελτ. means 'considered as more worthy of his consideration'; no wonder, since the selfish man is he who does every thing with a reference to self-gratification only; who loves none but himself; and cares for none but himself; whose affections (to use the words of a great moral painter) 'solely centre in one person, whose interest and indulgence alone he considers on every occasion; regarding the good or ill of all others as merely indifferent, any further than they contribute to the pleasure or advantage of that person.' The words ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφανοι, βλάσφημοι, form the second group, namely, boasters, arrogant, railers. Of these three terms we have the first two associated at Rom. i. 30; and corresponding to βλάσφημοι here we have there ὕβριστάς. The third group is, γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι, consisting of vices which naturally follow one upon the other (the vices generally go in clusters); for, as Theophyl. observes, he who is disobedient to parents will be ungrateful to others; and he that is such is ἀνόσιος, because τὴν ὁσίαν καὶ τὸ ἀφειλόμενον ἀνίσταται. He will also be ἄστοργος; since for whom will he feel affection, if he has none for his benefactor? He will also be ἄσπονδος; for whom will he keep covenant with if not with his parent or benefactor? It would seem that the three last are introduced (as in Rom. i. 30) by way of climax to the preceding. 'Ἀνόσ. denotes 'violators of the most solemn civil obligations,' which are called ὅσια as opposed to ἱερὰ (or Divine obligations) by the best writers. So Thucyd. ii. 52, ἐς ὀλιγωρίαν ἱερὰντο καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων. Finally, by the expression ἄστοργοι, 'devoid of natural affection,' it is meant, not that they never had the στοργή, but that they have divested themselves of it. See Benson.

3. διάβολοι, ἀκρατεῖς, ἀνήμεροι, ἀφιλάγαθοι] These form the fourth group. By διαβ. are meant calumniators; namely, on the principle of bringing all others down to their own low level.—ἀκρατεῖς is generally regarded as equiv. to ἀκόλαστοι, to denote incontinent; but that is a sense wholly unsupported by proof. The expression would rather seem to mean insuperables, for ἀκρατεῖς ἰαντῶν, scil. ἰπτιθυμίας, affectuum, 'having no mastery over their passions and affections,' lit. unreined. And although εἰς of this absolute use in a general sense are rare, yet Aristotle furnishes more than one in his Ethics, vii. 1, 4. And so Hippocr. Epidem. i. iv. and Thucyd. iii. 84, ἀκρατὴς ὄργης, 'un-governable in impetuosity.' This trait consorts well with the προπετεῖς just after, meaning, 'headlong, rash'; implying the absence of all restraint in laws, whether human or divine. Of this, indeed, the next word ἀνήμεροι, fierce, savage, may be considered as illustratives; in like manner as ἀφιλάγαθοι may be meant to further develop the idea of διάβολοι before. 'Ἀφιλάγαθοι (a term exceedingly rare) many eminent Commentators take to mean, 'haters of all that is good.' Yet as we have φιλάγαθος used at i. 8 in the sense 'a lover of good men,' here it is surely better to render, 'haters of good men;' and thus the term will well consort with διαβ. preceding. Nearly connected with this is, I conceive, the following προδόται, indicating, it would seem, a treacherous way of showing their hatred to the good, and bringing them into trouble with their persecutors, whether Jews or Heathens.

4. The two next terms, προπιτεῖς and τετυφ., form another group. Of which the former (on which see note at Acta xix. 36) answers to the ἐμπλήκτως ὄρεῖς of Thucyd. iii. 83, denoting a headlong, rash, reckless spirit. On the latter, see note 1 Tim. vi. 4. It may best be explained 'conceited,' espec. since the qualities of headlong rashness and conceit are generally associated, the latter producing the former. Lastly, we have a general trait, φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, with which Weta. compares from Demophilus, φιλήδονοι καὶ φιλόθεοι τὸν αὐτὸν ἀδυνατῶν εἶσι, and from Philo, 333, 49, φιλήδονοι καὶ φιλοπαθῆ μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι. By the pleasures here spoken of may be meant sensual gratifications in general. Prob., however, the Apostle intended chiefly to denote 'a dissipated spirit,' and 'an inordinate fondness for pleasure,' whatever that might be; though, in some cases, it might not, in due measure, be of a very censurable kind. With this view the words following at v. 5, ἔχοντες κόρη, &c., are very consistent, as denoting a mere profession of the Gospel, and an attention only to its external forms, with little or no influence on the heart and life; what Philo (cited by Loewner) calls ἐπιμορφίζων τὴν εὐθείαν.—By δὲν, is de-

ἡδονοὶ μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, <sup>5</sup> ἔχοντες μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν
 δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἡρνημένοι. καὶ τούτους ἀποτρέπου. <sup>6</sup> ἐκ τούτων γάρ εἰσιν οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας καὶ * αἰχμαλωτί-ζοντες [τὰ] γυναικάρια σεσωρευμένα ἁμαρτίαις, ἀγόμενα ἐπι-θυμίας ποικίλαις, <sup>7</sup> πάντοτε μαυθάνοντα, καὶ μηδέποτε εἰς ἐπί-γνωσιν ἀληθείας ἐλθεῖν δυνάμενα. <sup>8</sup> Ὁν τρόπον δὲ Ἰαννῆς

<sup>b</sup> Matt. 7. 18.
<sup>c</sup> 18. 17.
<sup>d</sup> Rom. 14. 17.
<sup>e</sup> 2 Thess. 2. 8.
<sup>f</sup> ch. 2. 16.
<sup>g</sup> 2. 10.
<sup>h</sup> 2 John 10.
<sup>i</sup> c Matt. 23.
<sup>j</sup> 14.
<sup>k</sup> Tit. 1. 11.
<sup>l</sup> 2 Tim. 7.
<sup>m</sup> 11.
<sup>n</sup> 1 Tim. 6. 5.
<sup>o</sup> Tit. 1. 16.

noted here, as in Phil. iii. 10, 'the essential and real efficacy inherent in any thing,' and μόρφ. is put in opposition to it, to denote 'the mere external form;' and hence we may render, 'presenting the form of piety, but declining (or being indisposed to evince) the real efficacy thereof,' viz. in their life and actions, as indirectly opposed to words and mere forms. Comp. Tit. i. 1, ἡ ἀλήθεια κατ' εὐσεβείαν. It would seem that, by introducing the trait φιλήδονοι last, after all the foregoing vices, the Apostle thus meant to intimate that it is the root of them all. So Philo-Judeus, vol. ii. pp. 268, 25, says of the φιλήδωνος, or lover of pleasure, that he will not be that only, but will have all other vices; and he subjoins a catalogue of no less than 146 epithets characterizing the vices which accompany φιληδονία. And no wonder; since in this vice is involved the grand master-principle of cupidity. See note on 1 Tim. vi. 10. On the persons who may be supposed to be characterized in the present portion, and the period of the fulfilment of this prophecy, no little diversity of opinion exists. I agree with Benson in regarding this as having the same reference as the great Apostasy mentioned at 2 Thess., and introductory to the reign of the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ; on which see 2 Thess. ii. 3—9. Here, however, as in the former case, the Apostle seems to have considered the mystery of iniquity as then working, though only in its beginning, and his corrupt opposers as those paving the way for it. See ver. 13, and iv. 3, 4.

6. οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας, &c.] Here is thrown in, as a reason why the persons in question are to be avoided, a peculiar trait by which they are distinguished,—that of insinuating themselves into the confidence of families, for the sake of interested purposes. In this expression ἐνδύνοντες εἰς, of which see other exx. in my Lex., there appears to be a metaphor derived, not, as Commentators say, from serpents, but rather from worms; the persons in question contriving, as we say, to worm themselves into the confidence of others, in order to make them their dupes. So it is well said by Anaxilas in Athenæus, p. 254 (of a similar class of persons, namely, flatterers and parasites), οἱ κολακῆς εἰσι τῶν ἔχοντων οὐσίας σκώληκες· εἰς οὐκ ἔκαπον ἀνθρώπου τρόπον εἰσδόν, ἔκαστος ἐσθίει, καθίμενος·

 ἔσι δὲ, ὥσπερ πυρὸν, ἀποδείξῃ κανόν.

ἔπειθ' ὁ μὲν λέμμι· ἔστιν, ὃ δ' ἐτιροδανεύ.

For so the passage ought to be pointed, in order to make sense. Moreover, for καθίμενος I would read καθήμενος; and for ἐτιροδανεύ, read ἐτιρον δάκνει. Observe, too, the elegant παρονομασία between κολακῆς and σκώληκες. By λέμμι is meant 'the leek,' as compared to πυρὸς, 'the grain.' This passage, I would observe, throws no little light on the expression

VOL. II.

κατεσθίει used of such persons at 2 Cor. xi. 20. It seems that both the Pharisees and the false teachers, like impostors in religion of every age and sect, fastened on the liberality of their devotees.—For αἰχμαλωτίζοντες, I now read, with Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., αἰχμαλωτίζοντες, from A, C, D, E, F, G, and 25 cursives (I add Lamb. 1182, 1185, Mus. 19, 288, and Cov. 2, omitted by Mill). Considering that both terms are used in the writings of St. Paul, and both occur in the Sept. and the later writers, internal evidence is equal, and external authority must decide; which latter, in point of antiquity of text, is decidedly in favour of αἰχμαλωτίζ. In illustration of this domineering, several passages have been adduced from Irenæus, Josephus, and other writers. The Pharisees, it seems, had always employed these means. So Jos. Ant. xvii. 3, 4, says of them, οἱ χαίρουν τὸ θεῖον προσποιουμένων, ὑπῆκτο ἡ γυναικωνίτις, where I would read, οἱ (χαίρουν τὰ θεῖα προσποιουμένων, scil. αὐτῶν) ὑπῆκτο ἡ γυναικωνίτις. By τὰ θεῖα is denoted religion, as the expression signifies in Thucyd. v. 70. The same thing, indeed, has happened in every age, and the same arts been practised by religionists the most widely separated in opinion and doctrine. In short, Jerome asserts that all heresies begin with women.—σεσωρευμένα δμ. This is well explained by the Lex. Cyrill., βεβαρημένα δμ., the expression pointing, it would seem, at the weight of former sins as burdening the conscience (see Matt. xi. 28), from the guilt of which, as well as of present offences, they sought to be delivered on easier terms than the Gospel authorizes. See Calv. and Hyper. By the words following, ἐπιθυμίας ποικίλαις, many understand carnal lusts and gross vices of every kind, in which it is supposed they were indulged by their teachers. That, however, proceeds upon a very improbable view; and from what follows it would rather seem that the ἐπιθυμίας here spoken of are those of the heart; see Pa. lxxxi. 12. And so, indeed, the expression is used supra ii. 22, where we have τὰς νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας. Again, at iv. 3, speaking of similar persons, Paul says, τῆς ὑγαιωνούσης διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέχονται· ἀλλὰ, κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τὰς ὁίας, ἑαυτοῖς ἐπισωρεύουσι διδασκάλους. Thus the expression may be said to designate the various fancies by which their light minds were carried away at the will of the artful hypocrites who guided them at pleasure: a view confirmed by what follows, πάντοτε μαυθάνοντα, καὶ μηδέποτε εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, &c.; for it is such light and unbalanced minds that are observed to be ever learning (namely, some new fancy), and never coming to any solid or certain knowledge. Such, too, is, I find, the view adopted by Calv., who says, 'Concupiscentiis generaliter accipio pro stultis et levibus desideris, quibus circum-

N N

καὶ Ἰαμβρὶς ἀντέστησαν Μωϋσῇ, οὕτω καὶ οὗτοι ἀνθίστανται τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἄνθρωποι κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν. <sup>9</sup> Ἄλλ' οὐ προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ πλεῖον ἢ γὰρ ἄνοια αὐτῶν ἐκδηλὸς ἔσται πᾶσιν, ὡς καὶ ἡ ἐκείνων ἐγένετο. <sup>10</sup> Σὺ δὲ παρηκολούθηκός μου τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, τῇ ἀγωγῇ, τῇ προθέσει, τῇ πίστει, τῇ μακροθυμίᾳ, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ, <sup>11</sup> τοῖς διωγμοῖς, τοῖς παθήμασιν, οἷά μοι ἐγένετο ἐν Ἀντιوخείᾳ, ἐν Ἰκονίῳ, ἐν Λύστροις· οἷους διωγμοὺς ὑπήνεγκα· καὶ ἐκ πάντων με ἐρρύσατο ὁ Κύριος. <sup>12</sup> Καὶ πάντες δὲ οἱ θέλοντες εὐσεβῶς ζῆν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, διωχθήσονται. <sup>13</sup> Πονηροὶ δὲ ἄνθρωποι καὶ

9 1 Tim. 4.

1 Ps. 94. 19.
Acts 13. 69.
2 14. 2, 19.
32.
2 Cor. 1. 10.
9 Matt. 16.
14.
Luke 24. 28.
John 17. 14.
Acts 14. 22.
1 Thess. 2. 2.

feruntur mulieres, quas Deum ex animo non querunt, et tamen religiose et sancte volunt haberi.

8. Ἰαμβρὶς καὶ Ἰαμ.] Names of two Egyptian Magicians, who, as we learn (not from Moses, but from the Rabbins, confirmed by Pliny and other Class. writers) were magicians at the court of Pharaoh, and who opposed their sleight of hand tricks to the miracles of Moses.—κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν. The same expression, as used of the same persons, has before occurred at 1 Tim. vi. 5, denoting 'men whose mental judgment had been depraved and corrupted by evil ways and corrupt affections.' On ἀδόκιμοι, see notes on Rom. i. 28, and 1 Cor. ix. 27.

9. οὐ προκόψουσιν.—ἔσται.] Render: not, 'shall,' but 'will,' the words being prophetic. The Apostle assures Timothy, for his comfort, that the evils in question will not proceed much further, by the folly and wickedness of the persons becoming publicly notorious.—ἀνοια. The expression here involves the conjoint notions of 'extreme folly,' 'presumption,' and 'impiety,' in which last sense it often occurs in the Sept.

10. σὺ δὲ.] The δὲ is adversative (q. d. 'Do thou, on the contrary'), and serves to contrast the abandonment of the true faith by the false teachers, with the adherence to it by Timothy; a commendation, from which the Apostle takes occasion to subjoin, at ver. 14, an admonition to constancy. And, instead of παρῆκ. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, he says παρῆκ. μου τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, thus emphatically denoting its truth. On this he engraves a sketch of the principal features of his own conduct, as a model to Timothy; and closes with adverting to the persecutions he had endured, in order that Timothy might be prepared to encounter the same with like courage; suggesting, moreover, for his comfort, a trust in that mighty Power which had delivered him out of all his trials. On the expression παρῆκ. see note on Luke i. 8, and 1 Tim. iv. 6. The term here signifies follow up; as at 2 Macc. ix. 27.—ἀγωγῇ is for ἀναστροφῇ, 'mode of life': a sense of the word rarely found except in the New Test. and Sept., where it occurs 2 Macc. iv. 16. vi. 18. xi. 24. I have, however, noted it in Jos. Bell. i. 23, 5.—τῇ προθέσει. This is by some eminent Expositors interpreted firmness, or resolution of purpose; as Acts xi. 23, τῇ προθέσει τῆς καρδίας προσμένειν τῷ Κυρίῳ. Yet these notions of firmness and resolution are communicated by καρδίας and προσμ., whereas here there is no adjunct, and therefore the usual sense, purpose, scope, aim, and design, is preferable.

After the general terms ἀγωγῇ and προθέσει come, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12, the special ones πίστις, μακροθ., ἀγ., and ὑπομ.—Πίστις is generally explained faithfulness, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12. There, however, ἀγάπη comes first, and is afterwards followed by πίστις; while here πίστις comes first, as in 1 Tim. i. 14. vi. 11. 2 Tim. ii. 22. 1 Thess. v. 8, where they are considered as being united (as in Eph. vi. 13) by being compared to a breast-plate: and at Gal. v. 6, it is shown how they should be united; viz., when 'faith worketh by love.' It may be thought strange that the terms should be here separated; but if we were to impute it, with most recent Commentators, to mere irregularity of style, we should overlook the intent of the Apostle, who here, I apprehend, purposely separated πίστις and ἀγάπη, in order to introduce with each the virtue springing from it. That πίστις is closely connected with μακροθ. is plain from Heb. vi. 12, which passage is the best comment on the present; and that ἀγάπη is equally connected with ὑπομολή appears from 1 Tim. vi. 11, πίστις, ἀγάπη, ὑπομονή. Tit. ii. 2, τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ. Whereas, of πίστις followed by ὑπομολή, I know of no instance, except Heb. vi. 12; nor of ἀγάπη followed by μακροθυμία. Besides, St. Paul seems to have subjoined ὑπομ. to intimate that the love was, as it regarded men, of that fervent kind which constrained him to bear any thing and every thing to accomplish the salvation of souls. The best comment on this whole passage is Rom. v. 1—9.

11. In τοῖς διωγμοῖς there is an exegetical apposition. Render: 'namely, by.'

13. πονηροὶ—χίτρον.] Here there is an indirect admonition to Timothy to go forward in the right path, from strength to strength, and from righteousness to righteousness; as the 'bad men,' false teachers, in question, will go on from bad to worse. Their being false teachers is suggested by the next term, γόττας, though πον. might of itself denote that. So in Jos. Ant. ii. 13, 3, Pharaoh calls Moses πονηρὸν, thus characterizing him as a 'base impostor,' seeking to deceive men by evil arts, namely, magic, and thus to lead them to cast off their allegiance to their sovereign. So again, Jos. Bell. ii. 11, 13, speaking of the impostors who drew away the Jews into rebellious acts, calls them πονηροὶ καὶ πλάνοι ἄνθρωποι καὶ ἐπατάζοντες, προσχίματι θιασμού. The next words, πλάν. καὶ πλανώμενοι, some eminent Commentators take to mean, that 'as they deceive some, so are they themselves the dupes of others.' But though γόντες προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον, πλανῶντες καὶ πλανώμενοι.

14 <sup>b</sup> Σὺ δὲ μένε ἐν οἷς ἔμαθες καὶ ἐπιστάθης, εἰδὼς παρὰ τίνος <sup>h</sup> ch. 2. 2.

ἔμαθες, <sup>15</sup> καὶ ὅτι ἀπὸ βρέφους τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα οἶδας, τὰ

δυνάμενά σε σοφίσαι εἰς σωτηρίαν, διὰ πίστεως τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ

Ἰησοῦ. <sup>16</sup> <sup>i</sup> Πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος, καὶ ὠφέλιμος πρὸς διδα- <sup>1</sup> Rom. 15. 4.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 19.
<sup>30</sup>

that might sometimes be the case, the words are, I conceive, meant to suggest how it happened that they went from bad to worse;—namely, by the influence of self-deception, as well as that of deceiving others; for men are observed to repeat falsities, till they almost believe them themselves.

14. ἐπιστάθης meaning, 'thou hast learnt with absolute certainty and full persuasion.' So Hesych., ἐπληροφορήθης. Theophyl., μετὰ πληροφορίας ἔμαθες.—The words following, εἰδὼς παρὰ τίνος, &c., show the grounds of this certainty and assurance;—namely, 1. that he had been taught sound doctrine by one divinely commissioned, like the Apostle; 2. that the truths in question were founded on what had been learnt by him even from his childhood (for his mother was a Jewess, and mothers are more likely to carefully communicate religious instruction than fathers); and that learning the learning of the Sacred Scriptures; 3. that those Scriptures are capable of supplying him with all knowledge and certainty necessary to salvation.

15. διὰ πίστεως τῆς ἐν Χ. Ἰ. These words are corrective and explanatory of the foregoing assertion, indicating the only means whereby the salvation in question can be attained; q. d. 'provided we superadd faith in Christ Jesus, who is the end of the Law for justification to them that believe.' (Rom. x. 4.) Thus we are drawn from the letter of the Law to its spirit in the Gospel. See John v. 39, 40. 46. The scope of this clause is well pointed out by Hooker, Eccl. Pol. i. 14. 'The Apostle (says he) here grants that the Holy Scriptures (meaning those of the Old Test.; for those of the New were not in being in Timothy's childhood) were able to make him wise unto salvation, but he adds, "through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Wherefore, without the doctrine of the New Test. teaching that Christ hath wrought the redemption of the world, which redemption the Old did foreshew he should work, it is not the former alone which can perform so much as the Apostle doth avouch, who presupposeth this, when he magnifieth that so highly.' Of the intent of the Old as compared with that of the New Test., it is well said by the same admirable writer, 'The general end of both is one; the difference between them consisting in this,—that the Old did make wise by teaching salvation through Christ that should come; the New, by teaching that Christ the Saviour is come, and that Jesus whom the Jews did crucify, and whom God did raise again from the dead, is He.'

16. The Apostle here carries forward the encomium above briefly expressed, setting forth the high value and great excellence of Scripture, first on the score of its paramount authority, and next with a reference to the manifold utility thence resulting. (Calv.)—πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος, &c. Here there is evidently an ellipsis of ἱστί, though Commentators are not agreed whether it should be introduced between γραφὴ and θεό-

πνευστος, or between θεόν and καὶ ὠφέλ., thus joining θεόν in immediate concord with πᾶσα γραφὴ. The latter method is adopted by Theodoret, of the ancient, and by many eminent modern Commentators, from Cameron to Heintz, and Iaspis; q. d. 'all inspired Scripture is also profitable,' &c. This, however, is not permitted by the καὶ, which is found in every existing MS.; and though it does not appear in the Syriac and Vulgate Versions, yet, as Bp. Middleton observes, 'it is far easier to perceive why καὶ does not appear there, than how, supposing it not to have been in the earliest MSS., it should have found its way into all those that remain.' The γραφὴ, Bp. Middleton proves, is meant of the ἱερὰ γράμματα just before mentioned; the sense being, 'the whole of such Scripture is divinely inspired.' That such is the true construction, has been most fully and ably evinced by Dr. Henderson, in his Lectures on Divine Inspiration, pp. 305—310. 'That the Scriptures of the Old Test. (says he) are intended, is unquestionably the construction best supported by the preceding context. Even on the supposition that no reference had previously been made to any specific writing or collection of writings, it was most natural for Timothy,—who had received an early Jewish education, of which the study of the Scriptures formed a prominent part,—to understand the Apostle to mean these Scriptures; γραφὴ, the term here used in the singular number, being in common use in application to them. He had been taught to regard them as the productions of men who were actuated by the Spirit of God, and who consequently wrote what was agreeable to his will. The very terminology, therefore, independently of any thing else, would, at once, lead his thoughts to these Scriptures as the collection to which reference was made; but the circumstance that, in the verse immediately preceding, the Apostle had expressly mentioned the ἱερὰ γράμματα, "sacred Scriptures," as those which Timothy had known from his earliest age, would seem to place the matter beyond dispute. It is in the closest connexion with the statement there made respecting these Scriptures that the subject of the present text is introduced, and it is evidently introduced by way of supplement to what had been there taught. The train of the argument is this: "Not only are the Divine Scriptures, with which you are familiar, capable of furnishing you with the knowledge requisite for your own personal salvation, by pointing out Christ as their end or scope, but they are a rich treasury of inspired wisdom, from which you may bring forth matter adapted to all the various departments of the office with which you have been invested." The learned writer further shows, p. 309, that the translation, 'every divinely inspired writing is also profitable,' &c., besides being destitute of the slightest authority from MSS., is quite indefensible. 'To say nothing (continues he) of the

a Rom. 1. 9.
& 9. 1.
2 Cor. 1. 23.
2 11. 31.
Gal. 1. 20.
Phil. 1. 8.
1 Thess. 2. 8.
1 Tim. 5. 21. & 6. 12.

σκαλίαν, πρὸς ἐλεγχον, πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν, πρὸς παιδείαν τὴν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ· <sup>17</sup> ἵνα ἄρτιος ᾖ ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐξηρτισμένος. IV. 1 * Διαμαρτύρομαι [οὖν ἐγὼ] awkwardness and total want of point introduced into the passage, by giving to the copulative conjunction the signification of also, such a mode of construction is at variance with a common rule of Greek syntax,—which requires that, when two adjectives are closely joined, as θεόπνευστος and ἀφίλιμος here are, if there be an ellipse of the subst. verb ἔσθι, this verb must be supplied after the former of the two, and regarded as repeated after the latter. Now there exists precisely such an ellipse in the case before us; and as there is nothing in the context which would lead us to take any exception to the rule, we are bound to yield to its force, just as we would in any similar instance. That all the ancient Versions may as properly be rendered, “The whole of Scripture, which is divinely inspired, is profitable,” &c., as “every Scripture,” &c., is evinced by Dr. H., who observes, that “the evidence in favour of the translation in our common English Bible, derived from the Fathers and almost all the Versions, among others the modern Greek, which reads ἅλη,” “the whole,” is most decided.” It may further be observed, that the elliptical ἔσθι should not be rendered, ‘is given;’ for thus, as Dr. Henderson shows, ‘a degree of emphasis is attached to the word which it does not possess,’ and which, I would add, no elliptical term can have. It is best, then, to retain the version is, meaning comes, as the Æthiopic Translator freely renders. To advert to a variety of reading. Lachm., and Tisch. in his 1st ed., adopt, from 8 uncial, and 4 cursive MSS., ἐλεγχόν: but, in his 2nd ed., Tisch. restores ἐλεγχον. Yet whether it was worth while to change, and then to change back, I cannot see. External authority is decidedly in favour of ἐλεγχον, but internal evidence equally for ἐλεγχόν: and hence not easy is it to determine the preference, since the scales hang so even; and, though rare, ἐλεγχόν is found occasionally in the Sept. and the Apocrypha, and sometimes in the Greek Fathers. Yet the circumstance that ἐλεγχος is used by St. Paul at Heb. xi. 1, where not a single MS. has ἐλεγχόν, may be thought to turn the scale in favour of ἐλεγχον. The four following expressions point at the result which the Holy Scripture is calculated to promote. The first I have already explained. The second, πρὸς ἐλεγχον, means ‘for confutation of error in doctrine;’ and as the former pair referred to doctrines, so does the latter to practices. Thus πρὸς ἐπανόρθ. means ‘for the promotion of correction of what is wrong in life.’ This is confirmed by the phrase ἐπανόρθωσις τοῦ βίου, occurring in the Class. writers, as Polyb. and Arrian; also in Philo and Josephus. The fourth particular, πρὸς παιδείαν τ. ἐν δικ., has been variously explained, espec. by the recent Foreign Expositors, as also Dr. Peile and Mr. Conyb., who render, ‘for discipline in the school of righteousness.’ And Mr. Conyb. compares Heb. xii. 7, and regards this παιδ. as a severer kind of ἐπανόρθωσις; a specious, but not solid or tenable view, since it involves great harshness, and is not agreeable to the context, which requires the interpretation of all the ancient and modern Expositors until recently. Calv. well explains, ‘ad pie sancteque vivendi rationem;’ and Est., ‘ad justam et sanctam vitæ conversationem.’ But the fullest and most able exposition of the true sense is that of Hyper.: ‘In summa, si qui de ullâ re, quæ pertinet ad veram justitiam, ad pietatem in Deum, charitatem in proximum, velint institui ac doceri; si qui vel nesciunt, vel sciunt, haud tamen satis animum adjuicere possunt ad pietatis officia, uti par est, exercenda; hi magistratam sibi præficient Sacram Scripturam, et ex eâ addiscunt quicquid ad justæ, sobriæ, pie agendum in hoc seculo est necessarium.’ Of course there is an allusion to the four principal duties of the spiritual Pastor and Teacher (to which Est., for a particular reason, that may well be imagined, limits it) upon whom it is incumbent to aid those committed to his spiritual charge, and drawing forth their uses. And this seems referred to in the next words, ἵνα ἄρτιος ᾖ ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος, which must, by the context, and the parallel passage of 1 Tim. vi. 11, mean ‘the minister of the Gospel,’ to whom the words τ. ἔργον, and ἐξηρτισμένος, are very appropriate; comp. Eph. iv. 12, and just after, iv. 5, ἔργον ποιήσων εὐαγγελιστοῦ: though otherwise the expression would be applicable to the Christian, as will appear from Hyperius’ able note.

17. ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος] meaning, the Christian teacher, or minister. See note on 1 Tim. vi. 11. On the expression ἄρτιος, ‘complete,’ ‘wanting in nothing,’ see Luke vi. 40, and note.—πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθόν, meaning, ‘for every good purpose [his ministry is designed to answer].’ Comp. supra ii. 21, and Eph. ii. 10.—ἐξηρτισμένος. The term is very appropriate, since it means lit. ‘fully equipped,—namely, with all requisites for his work;’ or, as we should say, ‘accomplished for,’ by being furnished with all due means and appliances for this effect. As business is said to be completed when its purpose is accomplished, so a person is said to be accomplished for a purpose, when he is furnished with all the aids for bringing it about; and so here of the minister of the Gospel, who is to be πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθόν ἐξηρτισμένος. So Joa. Antt. iii. 2, 2, πολλοὶ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους τοῖς ἅπασιν καλῶς ἐξηρτισμένοι, lit. ‘well equipped with every thing.’

IV. To the foregoing statement of the means necessary for making the Christian teacher complete for every good work, the Apostle engraves an earnest exhortation, pointed by the inferential οὖν, to the constant and zealous use of them.

1. διαμαρτύρομαι] See note on a similar passage of 1 Tim. v. 21. The words τοῦ μέλλοντος—αὐτοῦ are added by way of reminding Timothy of the strict and solemn account, which he must have then to give of his stewardship; and by τὴν βασιλείαν is intimated the glorious reward of fidelity. The latter clause simply means, ‘when he shall come in his kingdom,’ i. e. that of his glory commencing with the day of ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ μέλλοντος κρίνειν ζῶντας καὶ νεκροὺς κατὰ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ.<sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> κήρυξον τὸν λόγον, ἐπίστηθι εὐκαίρως <sup>b</sup> Ἀκτ. 20. 7.

ἀκαίρως· ἔλεγχον, ἐπιτίμησον, παρακάλεσον ἐν πάσῃ μακροθυμίᾳ καὶ διδαχῇ.<sup>3</sup> Ἔσται γὰρ καιρὸς, ὅτε τῆς ὑγαινούσης διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται· ἀλλὰ, κατὰ [τὰς] ἐπιθυμίας τὰς ἰδίας, ἑαυτοῖς ἐπισωρεύουσιν διδασκάλους, κηθόμενοι τὴν ἀκοήν.<sup>4</sup> <sup>c</sup> καὶ <sup>c</sup> 1 Tim. 1. 4
ἀπὸ μὲν τῆς ἀληθείας τὴν ἀκοήν ἀποστρέψουσιν, ἐπὶ δὲ τοὺς μύθους ἐκτραπήσονται.<sup>5</sup> <sup>d</sup> Σὺ δὲ νῆφε ἐν πᾶσι, κακοπάθησον, <sup>d</sup> Ἀκτ. 21. 8.
ἔργον ποιήσον εὐαγγελιστοῦ, τὴν διακονίαν σου πληροφόρησον. <sup>d</sup> Εφ. 4. 11.
<sup>e</sup> Ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπένδομαι, καὶ ὁ καιρὸς τῆς ἐμῆς ἀναλύσεως <sup>e</sup> Φιλ. 1. 23.
<sup>e</sup> 2 Pet. 1. 14.

judgment; the present being only his mediatorial one.

2. ἐπίστηθι; 'assiduously apply [to your work];' for, as Calv. observes, 'his verbis non assiduitatem modo commendat, sed etiam contentionem; quæ omnia difficultatum obstacula superet.' The words following, εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως, were, I think, intended to be applied to both parties, the preacher, or pastor, and the hearers, the people committed to his charge,—exactly as at Matt. v. 42, where see note. As to the former, the expression will denote, 'at all times, places, and occasions, not only convenient, but inconvenient to himself;' 'not only (as Dr. Barrow says) taking opportunities presented for it, but quicking at them, and creating them to ourselves, when there is no such apparent need of it.' As respects the latter,—the people,—'at all times, both convenient to them, and what they may think inconvenient.' And so Augustine, on Ps. cxxviii., 'Sonet verbum Dei volentibus opportune, nolentibus importune.' Est, too, rightly saw that the expressions should be referred to both parties respectively, and remarks, 'semper opportune fieri, quod sit utiliter ad salutem: licet alia consideratione fiat opportune, spectato nimirum homine exteriore et affectu sensuali, sive ejus qui agit, sive ejus circa quem agitur.' Bengel, however, equally saw the true scope, and, better than any other Commentator, explains it thus: 'Ineta temporibus solitis et legitimis, et extra ea; sive tibi auditoribusque commodum est, sive minus.'—ἔλεγχον, ἐπιτίμησον, 'confute (namely, those who are in error as to doctrine), reprove,' namely, the unruly or the immoral in life.—παρακάλεισον, &c., 'exhort [all] to continuance in sound doctrine and holy life.' So Plutarch, de Educ., speaks of instructors as διδάσκοντας, ἀπειλούντας, δομῶντες, συμβουλευόντας. All this is directed to be done ἐν πάσῃ μακροθ., 'with the greatest patience.' At διδαχῇ following repeat πάσῃ; the sense being, 'and with every [suitable] instruction; i. e. sound doctrine, as appears from what follows just after, τῇ ὑγαινούσῃ διδασκαλίᾳ οὐκ ἀνέχονται.

3. ἔσται γὰρ καιρὸς] So showing, by a reference to the waywardness of men, how zealous and active ought the ministers of the Gospel to be; q. d. 'And need is there of these exertions; for the time will come when, &c. (Calv.)—τῇ ὑγαινούσῃ διδ. 2 Tim. i. 13.—οὐκ ἀνέξ., 'will not bear to listen to.' To sound doctrine, which necessarily requires a holy life, the corruption of human nature, in every age, makes men averse; inducing them rather to follow such teaching as makes the gratification of their passions consistent with hopes of salvation.—κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τ. ἰδ., is by the earlier Commentators construed with ἐπισωρεύουσιν, but by the more recent ones with διδάσκ., which seems preferable, since it is more agreeable to the usus loquendi, yields a better sense, and is more suitable to the style of St. Paul, which abounds in transpositions. The words may be rendered, 'according to their several fancies or caprices.' See supra iii. 6, and note. The τὰς before ἐπιθυμίας, not found in many ancient MSS., has been cancelled by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but the evidence in this case only warrants its being bracketed. Internal evidence draws two ways; and Griesb. seems to be aware that the reading here is an open question.—ἐπισωρεύουσιν διδασκάλους. An expression of contempt; q. d. 'there will be no want of persons idius farinæ.' The next words suggest why they will heap up teachers; namely, as κηθόμενοι τὴν ἀκοήν, lit. 'having an itching in the ears; i. e. wishing to be gratified with something which may please their fancies. So Plut. de Superst. c. v., Ἰσκα κησέως ἐόντων.

4. μύθους] So said with reference to the false nature of the doctrines; such being ever employed ad captandam.

5. νῆφε] See 1 Thess. v. 6, and note; and on κακοπάθησον see supra ii. 3, and note.

6. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπίνδ., &c.] Ἐγὼ is emphatic, and corresponds to σὺ in the former verse. Γὰρ refers to a clause understood; q. d. '[Do thou fully discharge thy ministerial duties, nor expect any further exhortation from me;] for, as for me, I, already, am now being poured out;' meaning that his life is being sacrificed, as a libation is poured forth on occasion of a sacrifice. See note on Phil. ii. 17. The ἤδη here adverts to the nearness of his death, of which he had then a presentiment. That the general sense is ἐπιθανάτιός εἰμι, we may be sure. Expositors, however, are not agreed whether the expression signifies, 'I am ready to be poured upon in sacrifice,' as the victim had the libation poured upon its head; or, 'I am ready to be poured,' i. e. my blood to be poured out as a libation. The former view is more agreeable to the usus loquendi, and is confirmed by Phil. ii. 17, ἅλα, εἰ καὶ σπίνδομαι ἐν τῇ θυσίᾳ, where see note.—ἐμῆς ἀναλύσεως is put for τ. ἐμ. ἀναλύσεως. Lachm. and Tisch. (1st ed.) edit τ. ἀναλ. μου, from nine MSS.; though, in his 2nd edit., he

† 1 Cor. 9. 24. ἐφέστηκε 7<sup>1</sup> τὸν ἀγῶνα τὸν καλὸν ἡγώνισμαι, τὸν δρόμον τετέ-24.
 Phil. 3. 14.
 1 Tim. 6. 12.
 Heb. 12. 1.
 g 1 Cor. 9.
 24.
 1 Pet. 5. 4.
 James 1. 12.
 λεκα, τὴν πίστιν τετήρηκα. 8<sup>8</sup> λοιπὸν ἀποκείται μοι ὁ τῆς δικαιοσύνης στέφανος, ὃν ἀποδώσει μοι ὁ Κύριος ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ὃ δίκαιος κριτῆς· οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐμοί, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἡγαπηκόσι τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ.

h Col. 4. 14. 9 Σπούδασον ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με ταχέως. 10<sup>h</sup> Δημᾶς γάρ με ἐγκατέλιπεν, ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς Θεσσα-
 1 Acts 15. 27.
 Col. 4. 14.
 Philom. 24.
 λονικὴν Κρήσης εἰς Γαλατίαν, Τίτος εἰς Δαλματίαν 11<sup>1</sup> Δου-
 κᾶς ἐστὶ μόνος μετ' ἐμοῦ. Μάρκον ἀναλαβὼν ὄγε μετὰ σεαυτοῦ ἔστι γάρ μοι εὐχρηστος εἰς διακονίαν. 13<sup>h</sup> Τυχικὸν δὲ ἀπέστειλα εἰς Ἐφεσον. 13 Τὸν * φελόνην, ὃν ἀπέλιπον ἐν Τρωάδι παρὰ

 1 Acts 20. 4.
 Eph. 6. 21.
 Col. 4. 7.
 Titus 1. 12.
 1 Acts 19. 24.
 24.
 1 Tim. 1. 20.
 Rev. 6. 10.
 & 15. 6. 20.
 Κάρφω, ἐρχόμενος φέρε, καὶ τὰ βιβλία, μάλιστα τὰς μεμβράνας.
 14<sup>1</sup> Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ χαλκεὺς πολλά μοι κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο. † ἀπο-has restored the t. rec., rightly; since the other evidently arose from a marginal gloss.

7. The above metaphor is followed up by another, derived εἰς ἀγωνιστικά, on which see note at 1 Tim. vi. 12. On the following words, δρόμον τετέληκα, see note on Acts xx. 24.—τὴν πίστιν τετήρηκα. Many eminent Commentators render, 'I have preserved my fidelity.' But the common interpretation, 'I have kept the precepts of the Christian faith,' besides being more apt, is much more agreeable to the sensu linguae. For, not to mention that πίστις has very rarely the sense fidelity, the phrase itself, 'I have kept my fidelity,' is, I believe, quite destitute of authority; whereas, of τηρεῖν, followed by words similar in sense to τὴν πίστιν, denoting 'the doctrines and precepts of the Christian religion,' many exx. might be adduced.

8. ἀποκείται μοι meaning, 'is laid up as in a treasury as ready;' see notes on Col. i. 5—8. 1 Thess. ii. 19. Gal. i. 15. Crowns and all sorts of prizes held forth to conquerors were said ἀποκεῖσθαι, because they were set apart as their due, and ready for them. So in Demophilus, Similit. p. 615, we have τοῖς μὲν σταδιοδρομοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῷ τέρματι τὸ βραβεῖον τῆς νίκης—ἀποκεῖται, and see Pind. Olymp. x. 9. Comp. a similar use of ἀποκ. in Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 11, ταῖς ἀγαθαῖς ψυχαῖς τὴν ἐπὶ ὁκεανὸν δαιταν ἀποκεῖσθαι, &c.—ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ. See note supr. i. 12.—τοῖς ἡγαπηκόσι τὴν ἐκφ. ἀντοι, meaning, 'those who have reason to look forward with hope and satisfaction to his coming;' namely, by having fought the good fight, and kept the faith. Comp. 1 Cor. i. 7, and note.

10. Δημᾶς γάρ, &c.] q. d. 'for I stand in need of some assistance, Demas having' &c. This man had, it seems, through cowardice, deserted Paul, and, through worldly-mindedness, preferred some opportunity of temporal advantage to assisting the Apostle and furthering the Gospel.

11. Render: 'Luke alone is now with me,' i. e. alone of his companions and earlier associates, such as Mark next mentioned (see Col. iv. 10); though there were not wanting brethren, and in some degree fellow-labourers in the Gospel, who dutifully attended on the Apostle, as Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, and Claudia.

13. φελόνην] Some MSS. and Editions have φαινόλην, which is by many supposed to be the original spelling of the word, though, in later times, disused. The word was, they think, at first φαινόλην (whence the Latin pennula), then, per metathesin, φαιλόνην, and afterwards φελόνην. Others think the true spelling was φελόνην, or φελόνης (from φείλος, 'the bark of a tree,' and also 'the outside of anything'), afterwards, by a change familiar to the later Grecism, φαιλόνην. But this is wholly a gratuitous supposition. I still retain, as before, φελόνην, but rather in deference to the united judgments of Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., who seem, however, to be influenced by the weight of external authority, which in words so easily confounded and interchanged by ισοκρίση, has not its usual weight. However, it is quite prob. that φαιλόνην is the true spelling, found in nearly half the MSS., including one ancient Lamb. 1186, and two Mus. copies. But even then there may be a transposition of scribes for φαινόλην = Latin pennula, whence φαιν. This is confirmed by Athen. p. 97, E, οὐ σὲ εἰ δὲ, καὶ τὸν καινὸν φαιλόνην (ἐλήθητι γὰρ καὶ ὁ φαινόλην) εἰσέναι καὶ λαῖκος, ὅς μοι τὸν ἀχρηστον φαινόλην. The word is also used by Artemid. ii. 3, and Arrian, Epict. iv. 8, and is noticed by Hesych., Suid., and Photius; whence it seems to have been 'a travelling cloak,' or 'over-wrapper,' reaching to the feet. If, however, φαιλ. be the original reading, it may have been a provincialism.

14. Ἀλέξανδρος] See 1 Tim. i. 20, and Acts xix. 33.—πολλά μοι κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο. Mr. Conyb. justly objects to the 'did me much evil' of the authorized Version, and he maintains that the lit. interpretation is, 'manifested many evil things against me,' = 'charged me with much evil in the declaration.' He argues, that as the Active form of the verb has in Class. Greek a forensic meaning, so may the Midd. ἐνεδείξατο, used in an Active sense, be supposed to have the same. But there is no proof that a forensic sense was here intended. The only fault in the Common Version is in being too free a rendering; the lit. sense being, 'showed much evil towards me.' = 'did me much evil'; and this is confirmed by Did. Sic., vol. x. p. 171, μεγάλην ὄβριον τῇ πρὸς βίβλιν ἐνεδείξατο: also in Sept., Gen. i. 15 and 17, ἐνεδείξατο κακὰ, τὸν ἡμέραν. And so the framers of the ancient Versions took it;

δῶν αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ 15 ὃν καὶ σὺ φυλάσσου, λίαν γὰρ ἀνθέστηκε τοῖς ἡμετέροις λόγοις. 16 Ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ μου ἀπολογία οὐδεὶς μοι συμπαραγέμετο, ἀλλὰ πάντες με ἐγκατέλιπον (μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθῇ!) 17 ὁ δὲ Κύριός μοι παρέστη, <sup>m Ps. 22. 31. Acts 22. 11. & 27. 23.</sup> καὶ ἐνεδυνάμωσέ με, ἵνα δι' ἐμοῦ τὸ κήρυγμα πληροφορηθῇ, καὶ ἀκούσῃ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη καὶ ἐρρύσθῃ ἐκ στόματος λεοντος. 18 Καὶ ῥύσεται με ὁ Κύριος ἀπὸ παντὸς ἔργου ποιηροῦ, καὶ <sup>n Ps. 121. 7.</sup> σώσει εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐπουράνιον ᾧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν.

19 Ὁ Ἀσπασαὶ Πρίσκαν καὶ Ἀκύλαν, καὶ τὸν Ὀνησιφόρον οἶκον. 20 Ἐραστος ἔμεινεν ἐν Κορίνθῳ Τρόφιμον δὲ ἀπέλκυνον ἐν Μιλήτῳ ἀσθενούντα. 21 Σπούδασον πρὸ χειμῶνος ἐλθεῖν. <sup>o Acts 12. 2. Rom. 16. 2. ch. 1. 16. p. Acts 19. 22. & 20. 4. & 21. 20.</sup>

Ἀσπάζεται σε Εὐβουλος, καὶ Πούδης, καὶ Λῠος, καὶ Κλαυδία, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ πάντες. 22 ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματός σου. ἡ χάρις μεθ' ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Τιμόθεον δευτέρα τῆς Ἐφεσίων ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον χειροτονηθέντα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, ὅτε ἐκ δευτέρου παρέστη Παῦλος τῷ Καίσαρι Νέρωνι.

though they rightly render by 'showed unto me.' And this view is maintained by Est., who says that ἐνδὲ 'ostendit' = 'exhibit,' 'lit. affect.' He adds, that it is a Hebrew phrase, frequent in Scripture, and adduces several exx. from the Psalms, e. g. iv. 6, 'Who will show us any good?' lxx. 20. lix. 5, 'ostendisti populo tuo dura.' But that will only prove that it may, not that it must, have that sense. It may have the sense 'to evince,' 'to display,' as said of a feeling, or disposition of mind; and so it is used in Hdut viii. 141. Thueyd. iv. 126. Aristoph. Plut. 785. Xen. Anab. and Cyr.; and so the later Greek writers, as Diod. Sic., Hlian.; and the Dat. is expressed in most of the foregoing exx., in the rest it is implied. However, the phraseology of the Class. writers is very different from that of the Scriptural. Besides, the sense thus yielded is not strong enough to match with the expression which follows, ἀποδῶν αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος, and least of all with κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. That Chrys. and Theophyl. took the word as Est. does is evident from their gloss, ἐθελήσει με υπερβαλλόντως, ἢ καὶ διαφόρως, and they justly remark, that mean persons, ἐπιδὼν ἀρξάνται τινὰς κακοῦς, οὐδ' ὅλως φαίδονται.—Ἀποδῶν, &c. I agree with the ancient, and several eminent modern Commentators, that this is to be considered as, not properly speaking, an imprecation, but rather the expression of a hearty wish that the person in question may suffer condign punishment; i. e. that the righteous God and Judge may treat him as he deserves, unless he should heartily repent of his sin; a limitation which Mackn. thinks implied in the following words, κατὰ τὰ ἔργα; but without reason; it is rather, as Dr. Peile thinks, implied in the very nature of the wish. Comp. Rom. xii. 19. Jude 9, and see notes. Such strong expressions are oft. misinterpreted by Critica. Thus in Shakspeare's Richard III. — 'If heaven have any grievous plague in store, exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,' &c., even there is, properly speaking, no imprecation, but the earnest desire expressed, as in Romeo and Juliet.—'Blistered be thy tongue for such a wish.' The reading, indeed, of many MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, ἀποδώσει (adopted by Griesb. and Scholz), would remove all difficulty and objection; but for that very reason it cannot safely be adopted.

16. πρ. ἀπολογία] One hearing, it seems, had been granted him at Rome; and he was in expectation of a second, during which interval, it is plain, this Epistle was written; and, as we learn from Ecclesiastical History, this second turned out very different from the first, since the Imperial butcher, in a rage, as Chrys. tells us, at his conversion of the royal cup-bearer, had him beheaded.—μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθῇ! See Rom. iv. 8, and note.

17. παρίστη] i. e. by secret help and support. So Homer says, Μινέρνα παρίστη Ἀχιλλεῖ.—Πληροφ., 'might obtain full credence,' 'be fully believed with assurance of faith;' see Luke i. 1, and note.—πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, taken, as Heiar. and Rosenm. say, populairer, for very many of different nations; i. e. who had business at the Court. The words, however, are not, with those and other Commentators, to be referred to his defence only or chiefly. They have reference to the preaching of the Gospel by him during his long confinement, by which in a manner all the nations might be said to hear it; since Rome was the resort of persons from every quarter of the civilized world, individuals from each of which would hear the Gospel, and carry tidings of it at least, if not diffuse its doctrines, in their respective countries.—ἐρρύσθῃ ἐκ στόματος λ. The best Expositors are agreed in understanding this expression to allude to the Emperor Nero. Certain it is, from Esth. xiv. 13, and Ezek. xix. 3, that the Jews used to call tyrannical princes by the appellation lions.

ΠΑΤΡΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΤΟΝ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

a 1 Tim. 1.4
2 1.16
2 2.1

I. 1<sup>a</sup> ΠΑΤΡΟΣ, δούλος Θεού, ἀπόστολος δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, (κατὰ πίστιν ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ καὶ ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας τῆς κατ'

TITUS was a Greek, either of Syria, or of some province of Asia Minor, bordering upon it. He was one of St. Paul's earliest converts; and so much in his confidence, as to be allowed to accompany him and Barnabas to the first council at Jerusalem, and afterwards to attend him in his circuit, to visit and confirm the Churches. He was probably afterwards employed in confidential public business for the Church; inasmuch that, some years after, we find him sent by St. Paul to Corinth to examine the state of the Church in that city, and to transmit a report of it to him. In consequence of that, he was sent back to Corinth to hasten the collection for the poor brethren in Judea. After that time we have no further mention in the New Test of what became of him, except that in this Epistle he is spoken of as being with Paul in Crete, and in 2 Tim. iv. 10 as being in Dalmatia, having, it is supposed, been sent there to settle the affairs of the Church. It would seem that Titus, though perhaps occasionally sent to settle the affairs of other Churches, had Crete as his especial province, from the time when he was left there by Paul (Tit. i. 5). As to the time when Christianity was first planted in that island, we are left much in the dark. The most probable opinion is, that notwithstanding the Gospel might have been announced, and become known, in Crete, from the time of the first effusion of the Holy Spirit at Jerusalem (Acts ii. 11), where some Cretans were present; yet that it was not thoroughly planted there till many years after; most probably by St. Paul, and some say during the year and a half he spent at Corinth, between the latter part of A.D. 51, and the early part of 53; for it appears from 2 Cor. xii. 14. xiii. 1, that he did make an excursion somewhere during that time, and after it returned back to Corinth. This, however, is, to say the least, very doubtful; it being little probable that St. Paul would spare time enough for so great a work as evangelizing the 'hundred-cities' quasi in parvum. It would rather seem, as others suppose, that the Apostle evangelized Crete during the period between his first and second imprisonment at Rome;—namely, in the summer of A.D. 63. On the date of that evangelization, or rather further spread of evangelization, and regular settlement of the Church in Crete, very much depends on the date of the Epistle, on which I have treated in the Introduction to 1 Tim. Whichever of the dates there mentioned as most probable,—the Autumn of A.D. 66, or that of 67—be adopted, it is quite plain that but a short time—the period between Autumn and the following spring—could have intervened between this Epistle and the 2nd to Tim., confessedly the last of Paul's Epistles.

I. 1. The expression δούλος Θεοῦ is here used, as at Acts xvi. 17, Rev. xv. 3. It is, as Wiesing, (after Calv.) observes, the more general designation of office, which is followed up by its more special one in ἀπόστολος Ἰ. Χρ.; and the two predicates, by which the Apostle designates himself, occur no where else in exactly the same construction; though that at 2 Pet. i. 1 comes very near it. The designation 'servants of God' had been originally assigned to the prophets of God under the Old Test., with allusion to their devoted services rendered to him. See 2 Kings ix. 7. Judg. ii. 8, compared with John i. 1; xii. 6. But the appellation δούλος Θεοῦ, or Χριστοῦ, might, and often did, mean only a 'minister of God' or 'of Christ.' And such is the import of δ. Κυρίου in 2 Tim. ii. 24. Accordingly, strict exactness of designation might require the addition of ἀπόστολος Χριστοῦ, though δούλος Χριστοῦ several times occurs; and therefore the designation in 2 Pet. i. 1 is, as regards St. Peter, quite exact. And so is that of St. Paul here, since the very same person might be (as in the case of Paul and of Peter) δούλος Θεοῦ and Χριστοῦ, the service being rendered to both. See John xiv. 9, seqq. Thus δὲ should be rendered, ['and not only so] but.' Nay, it seems to have been Paul's design here to represent his office in its twofold aspect, with reference both to God and to Christ; as to the former, as holding a certain ministry and office, as it were, εὐσέβειαν, <sup>2</sup> ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ζωῆς αἰωνίου, ἣν ἐπηγγέλματο ὁ ἄνθρωπος Θεὸς πρὸ χρόνων αἰώνων, <sup>3</sup> ἐφάνερωσε δὲ καιροῖς ἰδίους τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ, ἐν κηρύγματι, ὃ ἐπιστεύθη ἐγὼ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ,) <sup>4</sup> Τίτῳ γησίῳ τέκνῳ κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν χάρις, [ἐλεος,] εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν.

<sup>5</sup> Τούτου χάρις † κατέλιπόν σε ἐν Κρήτῃ, ἵνα τὰ λείποντα

1 Thess. 2. 4. d Eph. 1. 2. Col. 1. 2. 1 Tim. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2. e Acts 14. 23. 2 Tim. 2. 2.

in the family of God. See Est., who further observes, that 'we are not to stumble at the union of the two expressions, as though Christ were not God;' nam (continues he) Christum secundum id, quod homo est et caput totius Ecclesie, considerat. Quin potius eo, quod indifferenter modo Dei, modo Christi servum se nominat, Christum esse Deum vult intelligi.—The next words, κατὰ πίστιν ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ—down to Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, forming a long parenthetical portion (bearing a strong resemblance to Rom. i. 1, seqq., and Gal. i. 1, seqq.), point at the end of his Apostolic office,—namely, 'as observes Wiesing, 'the bringing about of faith in the elect of God, and the knowledge of the truth, whilst the subject-matter of his preaching, with which he was entrusted, according to the commandment of God our Saviour, is described as the hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began, but hath in his own time manifested his word through the preaching, which is committed to the Apostle.' See more in Calv. and Hyper. To advert briefly to the phraseology.—κατὰ is 'unto' = 'destined for,' as in 2 Tim. i. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 6. By ἐκλ. Θεοῦ are meant 'believers in Christ, who were now chosen to be the elect people of God;' and are at 1 Pet. ii. 9 called 'a chosen generation;' 'a designation,' as Wiesing. observes, 'having its ground, not in any thing belonging to the persons so distinguished, but in the eternal act of the Divine will, the πρόθεσις, Rom. v. 25, or ἰδία πρόθεσις, in virtue of which they are fore-ordained to salvation.' Thus the sense is, 'for the furtherance of the faith of God's elect.' And this is on their part furthered when (to use the words of our XVIIth Article) 'they through grace obey the calling.' The next words, καὶ [κατ'] ἐπιγινώσκουσιν point at the second thing which it is the purpose of the Apostle's office to accomplish,—namely, the attainment of a full knowledge (of course, one resting on faith) of the truth (comp. 1 Tim. ii. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 25. iii. 7), meaning, of course, 'as it is in Jesus,' Eph. iv. 21, but here expressed by the peculiar phrase τῆς κατ' εὐσεβείας, meaning, 'which is accordant to godliness (religiousness of life), and leads to it.'

2. The words ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ζωῆς αἰωνίου mean, 'on the hope of eternal life;' q. d. 'founded on that hope;' or, as Est. renders, 'ex quo speranda nobis offertur vita æterna.' Comp. Rom. vi. 23.—ὁ ἀψευδὴς Θεός. An appellation of God, like ὁ ἀληθινός, used by the Class. as well as by the Scriptural writers. So Euseb. Orest. 364, ἀψευδὴς Θεός. Comp. Heb. vi. 17, 18.—ἣν ἐπηγγέλματο, &c. Comp. Luke i. 70. Rom. i. 2. Alluding to the promise made by God to Adam and Eve and their posterity at the fall

(that 'the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head'), and afterwards renewed in the covenant with Abraham. On the expression πρὸ χρόνων αἰώνων see notes at 2 Tim. i. 9—11.

3. ἐφάνερωσε] 'hath revealed,' 'made known.' On this expression see 2 Tim. i. 10; and on καιροῖς ἰδίους, Acts i. 7 and 1 Tim. ii. 6. vi. 15. As to the construction (which is anomalous), Wiesing. well observes that 'τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ here takes the place of ἡν before; and the change of object, or rather designation, that eternal life is still, in respect of its φανέρωσις, a thing future.' Comp. 1 Tim. iv. 7. 1 Cor. i. 21. The next words, ὃ ἐπιστεύθη, are added to express that that eternal life, long since promised, but now manifested, is the subject-matter of the Apostle's preaching; and that κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τ. Σ. ἡμ. Θ., 'according to the injunction,' express direction of God.' Comp. 1 Tim. i. 1. Rom. xvi. 26.

4. γησίῳ τέκνῳ, &c.] Comp. 1 Tim. i. 2, and 2 Tim. i. 2.—κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν, 'according to ('in virtue of) the faith common to both of us and all Christians.' On the words following, χάρις—ἡμῶν, see 1 Tim. i. 2, and note.—ἐλεος, before εἰρήνη, is cancelled by Scholz and Tisch., from C, D, F, G, two cursives, and several Versions; while Griesb. retains the word. But, since internal evidence is against it, it was more likely to be brought in from the parallel passages, than put out, I rather agree with Scholz and Tisch. It would seem that Paul chose here to adopt the briefer inscription; and that it was afterwards lengthened by those who wished to adapt it to the longer form. The authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version here has great weight, and is in favour of the briefer inscription. The same authority confirms the t. rec. just after, where Lachm. and Tisch. edit. Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, from A, C, D, and three cursives, with the Vulg., and some later Versions. Ἰησοῦ Χρ. might be altered by Critics (according to their wont) into Χρ. ἰ.; in which case Κύριον would be removed by other Critics, as against the custom in the New Test.

5—16. 'The Apostle begins by reminding Titus of the commission given him to ordain presbyters, v. 5; he then, in vv. 6—8, specifies the qualifications of a presbyter, in a moral point of view, then with respect to doctrine, v. 9; and confirms the necessity of these qualifications, vv. 10—16, by a reference to the circumstances of the Cretan Christians, which demand on the part of the presbyter a decided adherence to the true and sound doctrine, and an energetic application of it.' (Wiesing.)

ὁ τούτου χάρις. κατέλιπόν σε ἐν Κρ.] Hero,

† ἐπιδιορθώσῃ, καὶ καταστήσῃ κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, ὡς
 1 Tim. 3. 2. ἐγὼ σοὶ διαταξάμην ὅτι εἰ τις ἐστὶν ἀνέγκλητος, μίᾳ γυναίκῳ as at Gal. i. 6, the Apostle enters at once in medius res, saying, 'For this cause left I thee behind in Crete, that thou mightest further set right the things which remained to be put in order,' or 'what had been wrong, and only partly set right (by me).' For κατέλιπον MSS. A, C, D, F, G, and several cursives (not many, as Scholz and Tischendorf affirm, and sot, as Wetstein, No. 31), have ἀπέλιπον, edited by Lachmann and Tischendorf, perhaps rightly; since internal evidence is in its favour, as it may have been altered to the plainer κατέλ., used in 1 Thess. iii. 1.—ἡ δὲ τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθώσῃ. At λείποντα, 'were lacking,' Particip. Imp., understand διορθώσῃ, taken from ἐπιδιορθώσῃ, which supplementum is confirmed by the passage I have cited from Philo. The use of the term ἐπιδιορθ. implies the farther aid of Titus, in order to fully carry out Paul's plans for the settlement of the Church with respect to discipline, even perhaps more than doctrine. This signification and constr. (viz. doctrine of things) occurs in Soph. Trach. 937, and El. 474. With respect to the reading here, which is disputed, for ἐπιδιορθώσῃ five uncial and several cursive MSS. have ἐπιδιορθώσῃ, which was adopted by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. in his 1st ed.; though in his 2nd ed. he has restored the other reading. Which of the two readings is entitled to the preference, it is perhaps impossible quite to decide. The word itself is, as I have said, one of very rare occurrence, and never occ. in the Class. writers, though the Verbal noun occ. in Philo, t. ii. p. 534. The Midd. form is found in passages of Greg. Nyss. and J. Damasc., cited in Steph. Thes., ed. Paris, which confirm the t. rec.; while the Active form is supported by an Inscription ap. Boeckh., vol. ii. p. 409, 9, αὐτὸς δὲ τὴν κακὴν δόξαν ἐπιδιορθώσατε, and Eustath. Opusc., p. 109, 90, ἐπιδιορθώσῃ τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν κριτικόν. It should seem that the Middle form, as far as it was used, was confined to the language of books, that of the Active to the language of common life; though, perhaps, sometimes found in books. Upon the whole, internal evidence is in favour of ἐπιδιορθώσῃ. From the expression following, καταστήσῃ πρεσβυτέρους, it is evident that Titus was invested with Episcopal authority, in the highest sense of the word ἐπισκοπος, which was sometimes, as at ver. 7, and Acts xx. 17, 28, used in the lower sense of πρεσβύτερος, since pastors are overscers over their flocks. Accordingly, the Presbyterians are obliged to understand this appointing, of Paul's interposing his influence with the congregations to procure the election of these persons as presbyters; than which a harsher or more factitious gloss was surely never promulged even by the Socinians.—κατὰ πόλιν. Not 'in every city,' but 'in each city or town' (lit. 'city by city'), of all those which had Christian congregations. Of such there might be several in this 'hundred-cited isle;' though the name πόλις was often given to towns; and there is reason to think that not a few of the Cretan cities were no better.—σοὶ διατάξ., 'as I [then] directed thee.' Paul, it seems, had not time then to give the directions and injunctions which he now sends. Connected with the statement set forth in this verse, there is a question of some importance which has never yet been satisfactorily decided, 'sed adhuc sub judice lit. est.' The question is, at what time previous to the writing of this Epistle did Paul leave Titus at Ephesus?—a question not easily answered. It has appeared to some inquirers of competent judgment as most natural to suppose, that Titus was one of the friends who, with Luke and Aristarchus, accompanied Paul on his celebrated voyage to Rome to appeal unto Caesar, and that it was while the ship was detained by westerly winds in the harbour of Fair Havens, Crete, that Christianity was first preached in Crete; and that when the ship sailed, Titus was left behind to set in order the things yet wanting. But this is very far remote from probability. It does not appear that the ship stayed sufficiently long to afford Paul the opportunity of evangelizing Crete. It is to be observed, that the expression is ἡμεῖς, not παλλοῦ, in the sense 'a good long time.' But even that is a comparative term. Circumstances would forbid any such delay as would be requisite for that purpose; not to say that Paul would never be allowed to leave Fair Havens, but be expected to be always ready to sail with the vessel; and even a good deal of time could scarcely be turned to any sufficient purpose. Besides, there is no reason to think that Fair Havens was a city or town; it was only, as Mr. Smith has shown, an open roadstead, or rather a double roadstead, forming only a good anchorage, not a port. It is more probable that, as Bp. Pearson, Dr. Paley, Canon Tate, and others suppose, we have to take for granted a second, but unrecorded, journey of Paul to Crete, i. e. from Rome,—namely, at the close of his first imprisonment there. I agree with Canon Tate, that it is likely that Titus, as well as others, visited Paul towards the close of his imprisonment. And thus Paul, Timothy, and Titus, in voyaging from Ephesus to Rome, took it seems the opportunity of stopping at Crete, Paul having before learned, during his sojourn at Fair Havens, that the Gospel had been planted in some parts of the island; for the residence of Jesus there is certain from Acts ii. 11, and their number may have increased since the time he was first at the island. Thus Paul, it would seem, finding that a door had been opened to him by the Lord, thought fit to take Crete in his way to Ephesus, and, in conjunction with his two associates, nurse the infant Faith. With their aid he would (as Canon Tate remarks) soon accomplish the formation of some Churches, and the establishment of others in the Faith. And as Timothy was, we know, destined for high services elsewhere, the episcopal labour of carrying on (ἐπιδιορθ.) what the Apostle had begun was committed to Titus. The above view supposes that, from some cause, though (as Canon Tate observes) now lost to all conjecture, some one had deposited the first seeds of the Gospel in Crete before the time when St. Paul was on the island on his voyage to Rome. Nay, it is not improbable that he might, while the ship stayed at Fair Havens, have communication with some of the Christian converts,—possibly from Gortyna, the second city ἀνὴρ, τέκνα ἔχων πιστὰ, μὴ ἐν κατηγορίᾳ ἀσωτίας, ἢ ἀνυπότακτα.

7 <sup>8</sup> Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἀνέγκλητον εἶναι, ὡς Θεοῦ οἰκονόμον <sup>g Lev. 10. 9. Matt. 24. 48. 1 Cor. 4. 1. Eph. 6. 18. 1 Tim. 5. 2. 1 Pet. 5. 2. h 1 Tim. 5. 2. i 1 Tim. 1. 10. k Acts 15. 1. 1 Tim. 1. 6.</sup> μὴ αὐθάδη, μὴ ὀργίλον, μὴ πάροιον, μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ <sup>8</sup> ἄλλα φιλόξενον, φιλόγαθον, σώφρονα, δίκαιον, ὅσιον, ἐγκρατῆ <sup>9</sup> ἀντεχόμενον τοῦ κατὰ τὴν διδασχὴν πιστοῦ λόγου, ἵνα δυνατὸς ᾖ καὶ παρακαλεῖν ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ τῇ ὑγιαίνουσῃ, καὶ τοὺς ἀντιλέγοντας ἐλόγχειν. <sup>10</sup> Εἰςὶ γὰρ πολλοὶ [καὶ] ἀνυπότακτοι, ματαιολόγοι καὶ φρεναπάται, μάλιστα οἱ ἐκ περι-of the island, and only distant about 12 miles,—or at least learnt of their existence in other parts of the island, probably on the northern part, which was the best peopled.

6. The Apostle now proceeds to particularize what he had just said generally, and at v. 7 is a confirmatory explanation of v. 6, and only the chief qualifications, moral and others, are mentioned.—εἰ τις=ὅστις, 'whoever; comp. 1 Tim. iii. 2-7.—ἀνέγκλ. here is=ἀνεπιληπτος there. The epithet πιστὰ, added to τέκνα, is to be taken, as at Eph. i. 1. Col. i. 2, as denoting not only 'believers,' but 'faithful to their Christian engagement.'—μὴ ἐν κατηγορ. ἀσωτίας, lit. 'not under accusation of dissoluteness, not even to be ill-reported of in that respect.' On the force of the word I have already treated; and more may be seen in my Lex.

7-9. Comp. 1 Tim. iii. 2, 3, and notes.

7. ὡς Θεοῦ οἰκονόμον 'as the steward of God's family' (which every congregation is). And, surely, if fidelity be required in earthly affairs, how much more is requisite in spiritual ones! See 1 Cor. iv. 2. Heinr. here compares Soph. Ant. 671, ἐν τοῖς γὰρ οἰκείοις ὅστις ἐστ' ἀνὴρ | χρηστός, φανεῖται καὶ πόλει δίκαιος ὢν.—Αὐθάδῃ, 'self-willed'; of which character a most spirited sketch is given by Theophrastus, Char. ch. xv. On the terms following, ὀργίλον, πάροιον, πλήκτην, αἰσχροκερδῆ, see 1 Tim. iii. 3.

8. φιλόγαθον The expression may signify either 'a lover of good men' (as the word is used in Aristot., Rhet. chap. ii. 4, Cod. Vat.), or, 'a lover of goodness.' But the former is more agreeable to the context, and better suited to the opposite ἀφιλόγαθον in 2 Tim. iii. 3, as also to the usage of the language in similar expressions, e. g. μισόχρηστος in Xen. Hist. ii. 1, 6. Dion. Hal. Ant. vii. 62; μισόγαθος in Chrys. on Ps. viii., and the Scholiast on Pindar.—δίκαιον, ὅσιον. Here there appears to be a climax (as in Porphyr. de Abstin. ii. 60, καὶ δίκ. καὶ ὅσ.); the former term denoting 'the being right, salutary, as to human laws and duties; the latter, 'as to God and his laws, pure from sin, godly, pious.' So in Polyb. xxiii. 10, 8, we have τὰ πρὸς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια καὶ τὰ πρὸς θεοὺς ὅσια.

9-16. 'Here we have the qualifications of an ἐπίσκοπος, with respect to doctrine, and a confirmation of this by a reference to the state of things in Crete.' (Wiesing.) See also Chrys.

9. ἀντεχόμενον 'closely adhering to; lit. 'holding fast by any thing, in opposition to [ἀντι]: one who would wrest it away.' See more in my Lex. in v. As to the words τεῦ κατὰ τ.

διδασχὴν πιστοῦ λόγου, I agree with Wiesing. that they are not to be understood as expressing two co-ordinate properties of the λόγος, but that the κατὰ τ. διδασχὴν more exactly determines the λόγος: also that κατὰ διδασχὴν denotes the ground of the credibility,—'in so far as,'—namely, as the word rests on the Apostolic teaching. Accordingly, I would render, with Dr. Poile, 'holding fast by the true [lit. 'trustworthy, as true'] doctrine set forth in the teaching of the Apostles (see Matt. xviii. 20. Acts ii. 42. Eph. ii. 20. iii. 5); that he may be able καὶ παρακαλεῖν—ἐλόγχειν, words which have been variously, but not, I think, satisfactorily interpreted, partly by choosing wrongly among the several senses of which the terms are capable, but chiefly by taking ἐν for 'in,' which obliged the Translators to fill up the sense they assigned to παρ. by some others with which it has nothing in common. Thus, deceived by the Vulg., a few early and several later interpreters, as Wiesing. and Conyb., explain, 'in sound doctrine;' which will neither suit to 'exhort,' nor to 'console.' It would suit to 'confirm,' a sense of the word found in the New Test., and on which I have treated supra several times; and this is supported by Theophyl., φυλάττει καὶ στήριζ. However, I am inclined to think that the Apostle intended as wide a sense as the terms will admit. Accordingly, by rendering ἐν, per (as almost all Expositors of every age do), = Hebr. 3, and the Syr. ܐܢܝܢ, we may suppose the sense to be this, 'to exhort, confirm, and comfort.' Comp. 1 Pet. v. 10, στήριξαι, σθενώσαι. That the Pech. Syr. Translator took the ἐν for per, 'by,' is evident. My view as to the extent of sense in the term παρὰ. I find confirmed by Hyper., who explains it by 'exhortari,' 'consolari' (rather, 'confortare'), 'erigere.' On the expression ὑγιαίνουσα see note at 1 Tim. i. 10.

10. 'Having laid down a common rule, to be everywhere observed, the Apostle now enforces it by a reference to the peculiar necessity there exists for its observance.' (Calv.)—εἰςὶ γὰρ πολλοὶ καὶ, &c. Kai after πολλοὶ is in several MSS. not found, and in others it is put before ματαιολόγ. It is, therefore, with reason, suspected by the Editors to be interpolated; prob. by some early Critics, who thought a copula was required.—ἀνυπότ. here seems to denote disobedience both in matters of doctrine and discipline; Judaizers being prob. for the most part intended.—ματαιολ. is meant of those who are at 1 Tim. i. 6 said to have turned aside εἰς ματαιολογίαν. See note there. The φρεναπάται (lit. mind-deceivers) are those who at Rom. xvi. 18 are called ἐξαπατῶντες τὰς καρ-

1 Matt. 23.
2
1 Tim. 6. 2.
3 Tim. 3. 6.

m Isa. 28.
14.
Matt. 15. 2.
Col. 2. 22.
1 Tim. 1. 4.
2 & 7.
2 & 20.
n Matt. 18.
11.
Luke 11. 28.
41.
Acts 10. 15.
Rom. 14. 14.
20.
1 Cor. 6. 12.
2 & 10, 22, 28.
1 Tim. 4. 2 & 4.
o 3 Tim. 2. 5.
Jude 4.

τομῆς<sup>11</sup> οὐδὲ ἐπιστομίζεω οἷνες ὅλους οἶκους ἀνατρέ-πουσι, διδάσκοντες ἂ μὴ δεῖ, αἰσχροῦ κέρδους χάριν. <sup>12</sup> Εἰπέ τις ἐξ αὐτῶν, ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης “Κρήτες αἰεὶ ψεύσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.” <sup>13</sup> Ἡ μαρτυρία αὕτη ἐστὶν ἀληθείας. δι’ ἣν αἰτίαν ἐλεγχε αὐτοὺς ἀποτόμως, ἵνα ὑγιαίνωσιν ἐν τῇ πίστει, <sup>14</sup> μὴ προσέχοντες Ἰουδαίκοις μύθοις, καὶ ἐντολαῖς ἀνθρώπων ἀποστρεφόμενων τὴν ἀλήθειαν. <sup>15</sup> Πάντα [μὲν] καθ-αρὰ τοῖς καθαροῖς τοῖς δὲ μεμιασμένοις καὶ ἀπίστοις οὐδὲν καθαρόν, ἀλλὰ μεμίσκονται αὐτῶν καὶ ὁ νοῦς καὶ ἡ συνειδήσις.
<sup>16</sup> Θεὸν ὁμολογοῦσιν εἰδέσθαι, τοῖς δὲ ἔργοις ἀρνοῦνται, βδε-λυκτοὶ ὄντες καὶ ἀπειθεῖς, καὶ πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἀδόκιμοι.

διὰ τῶν ἀκάκων.—Φρενακ. is a word found only in this passage, and was prob. a provincialism.

11. οὐδὲ δεῖ ἐπιστομίζεω.] Namely, by putting them to silence after full confutation, and then formally silencing them by Episcopal authority. So Demosth. p. 85, 4, has ἐπιστομ. τοὺς αὐτῶν ἀντιλέγοντας. See more in my Lex. in v.—ὅλους οἶκους ἀνατρέ., i. e. ‘subvert the faith of whole families.’ So 2 Tim. ii. 18, τὴν πίστιν ἀνατρέψουσι. This, indeed, is hinted at in the words διδ. & μὴ δεῖ, where there is a hiatus, as in Isa. lxi. 4. John xxi. 18. Comp. Plato, p. 960, ὅλας οἰκίας, χρημάτων χάριν, ἐπιχειροῦσι κατ’ ἀκρας ἔξαιρειν, and Jos. Bell. i. 25, 2, διὰ τῶν τοιούτων οἰκῶν—καὶ βασιλείας ὅλας ἀνατρέψουσι. These are the kind of persons described in 2 Tim. iii. 6, as οἱ ἐνδύοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας καὶ αἰχμαλ., &c., and who are at ver. 2 described as φιλάργυροι, corresponding to αἰσχροῦ κέρδους ἱνικα.

12. εἰπέ τις—προφ.] Here ἴδιος αὐτῶν is put per orationem, as being a stronger expression. Προφ. is by Abp. Newc. and others rendered poet. And, indeed, the term, like vates in Latin, was then applied (as implying a sort of inspiration) to all poets of more than ordinary celebrity; though it had been formerly confined to Homer, Hesiod, and Pindar. Epinemides, however (who is admitted to be the person here meant) was not a poet, but a prophet, and a writer περί χρησμάτων, and, as Theophyl. says, θειασμοὶ καὶ ἀποτροπασμοὶ προσέχον, καὶ μαντικὴν δόκην κατορθοῦν, was reputed to be an able μάντις. Hence he is called by Apuleius, fatidicus, and by Cicero, vaticinans. And Plut. Sol. 12, says he was θεοφίλης καὶ σοφὸς περὶ τὰ θεία, inasmuch that he was reckoned among the seven wise men of Greece, and was called in by Solon to aid him in the formation of his laws. Thus the word meant, in a general way, ‘an interpreter of the will of the gods.’ Here, then, it would seem St. Paul had reference to his prophetic, rather than his poetic celebrity.—Κρήτες αἰεὶ ψεύσται. These words were borrowed by Callim. (Hymn on Jove, v. 8), who fully evinces the justice of the expression αἰεὶ, from their having fabricated a tomb which they pretended was Jupiter’s.

13. ἐλεγχε αὐτοὺς ἀποτόμως.] A metaphor derived from surgeons, who cut away the unsound flesh even to the quick, lest the mortification should extend. The same expression occurs at 2 Cor. xiii. 10, where see note.

14. μὴ προσέχοντες Ἰουδαίκοις μ.] See note on 1 Tim. i. 4.—ἀποστρεφόμενων τὴν ἀλήθειαν. By this metaphor, as Mackn. observes, it is represented that truth offers itself to the Judaizers, while they turn away from it in contempt.

15. πάντα μὲν καθαρὰ, &c.] A similar sentiment is found at 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5, and Rom. xiv. 14, and also Ecclus. xxxix. 32. So also it is said by Galen (cited by Weta.), τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις ψυχαῖς, εἰ προσήμιον προσφέρει λόγον, οὐ μόνον οὐδὲν ἀφελήσεις αὐ. ἀλλὰ καὶ βλάψει οὐ σμικρά. The μὲν, not found in most of the uncial and several cursive MSS., is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; perhaps rightly; since internal evidence is against it, from its being more likely to have been inserted, in order to correspond to the δι, than removed. Those who inserted it did not perceive the force of the asymdolon.—But to revert from words to things. The Apostle here takes occasion, from what has been said of Jewish fables and traditions, to inculcate a kindred truth,—that the Jewish distinctions of meats and drinks, as clean or unclean, were of no effect as to moral purity; which consists not in abstaining from certain meats, but in preserving an unpolluted heart; q. d. ‘to the pure [in heart] all such meats as, by the Jewish traditions, were held as unclean, are pure;’ i. e. may be eaten without defilement; but to the polluted [in heart], and unfaithful to Christ, nothing is pure.—μεμίσκονται αὐτῶν συνειδήσις. Comp. Dionys. Hal. de Thucyd. viii., μιαίνου τὴν συνείδησιν.

16. Θεὸν ὁμολογοῦσιν εἰδέσθαι, &c.] This seems intended to evince the justice of the foregoing charge (ver. 15) of unknowing, and, as Hyper. observes, anticipate an objection exculpatory of the false teachers,—that they have much knowledge of God and religion, are pious and laborious in their preaching, and pure in their lives. The antecedent, however, the Apostle denies, hence the consequent falls to the ground; q. d. ‘They profess, indeed, to know, love, and serve God, but in their actions they neither know nor obey him, their deeds not corresponding to their professions;’ as it is said, 2 Tim. iii. 5, ἔχοντες μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἥρηκέναι. The term ἔργοις is used with reference to the idea of λόγοις implied in ὁμολογοῦσιν. So in a passage of Aristotle, cited by

II. 1 Σὺ δὲ λάλει ἃ πρέπει τῇ ὑγιαίνουσῃ διδασκαλίᾳ· <sup>2</sup> πρεσβύτας νηφαλέους εἶναι, σεμνοὺς, σώφρονas, ὑγιαίνοντας τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ· <sup>3</sup> πρεσβύτιδας ὡσαύτως ἐν καταστάματι ἱεροπρεπεῖς, μὴ διαβόλους, μὴ οἶνῳ πολλῷ δεδουλωμέναs, καλοδιδασκάλους, <sup>4</sup> ἵνα σωφρονίζωσι τὰς νέας φιλάνδρους εἶναι, φιλοτέκνους, <sup>5</sup> σώφρονas, ἀγνάs, οἰκουροὺs, ἀγαθάs, ὑποτασ-

a 1 Tim. 2. 9.
b 1. 12.
1 Pet. 3. 2.
b Gen. 3. 16.
1 Cor. 14. 34.
Eph. 5. 22.
Col. 3. 18.
1 Tim. 5. 1.
1 Pet. 3. 1.

Budæus, Comm. L. Gr. in voc. συνάδω, we have καὶ συναδόντων μὲν τοῖς ἔργοις, ἀποδεικνύοντες διαφωσκόντων δὲ λόγους, ὑποληπτίον, where, instead of the manifestly corrupt words λόγους ὑποληπτίον, I venture, with some confidence, to propose to read λόγους, ἀποληπτίον for ἀποστατίον, we must abandon their society.—βδελυκτοί. On this expression see note at Matt. xxiv. 15; and on ἀδελκοί, note at 2 Tim. iii. 8.

II. 1. As the best means of keeping out fables Titus is recommended to labour for solid edification. (Calv.) Comp. 1 Tim. iii. 11. v. 14.—σὺ δὲ λάλει, &c., q. d. 'Horum ergo pessima exempla fugiens, ea age, in eis labora, quæ ecclesiæ Christianæ singulis hominibus, ætātibus, pro sunt, vv. 1—10; vivimus enim temporibus jam evangelii lumine illustratis, quibus digne vivendum nobis est, ver. 11—fin.' (Heinr.)

2. πρεσβύτας νηφ. εἶναι] Repeat λάλει, in the sense ἐλάλῃ, bid. By πρεσβ. some eminent Expositors understand, not aged men, but Presbyters; alleging that the directions here given are similar to those at 1 Tim. i. 3, and πρεσβύτιδας at ver. 3 is applicable to those women who bore offices in the Church, as appears from the epithets ἱεροπρεπεῖς and καλοδιδασκάλους. This view, however, is supported neither by the authority of the ancient Expositors, nor by the opinion of the best modern ones; and the qualifications do not sufficiently correspond. Indeed, the word is never so used in the New Test. Mōre may be said for πρεσβύτιδας as denoting 'female elders,' or 'deaconesses;' where there is ancient authority to allege. Perhaps we may, in the former case, reconcile the two interpretations, by supposing that the Apostle, though using the general term πρεσβύτης, yet had also in mind those who filled ecclesiastical offices.—ὑγιαίνοντας τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ. According to the Versions in general these Datives, ἀγάπῃ and ὑπομονῇ, are taken as dependent on ὑγιαίνοντας; but that leads to a sense which could not be intended. Repeat εἶναι before ἐν ἀγάπῃ, thus: 'That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in the faith, continue in love, in patience.' So the Æth. Version has, 'no hesitent in fide, et diligent, et patientes sint.' On these various particulars comp. 1 Tim. vi. 11, and 2 Tim. iii. 10.

3. ἐν καταστάματι ἱεροπρ.] 'in deportment [not 'dress'] such as becometh persons reverend and of holy profession.' So Philo, t. ii. 457, Θεοῦ γεγενῆσιν—ἱεροπρεπεῖς [δύναται] τὰς ἐαυτῶν διανοίας, and Porphyry, τὸ δὲ σεμνὸν καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καταστάματος ἐκράτο.—Διδούλ., 'addicted to'; nearly synonymous with προσέχοντας at 1 Tim. iii. 8, though a somewhat stronger term, and illustrated by John viii. 34 and Rom. vi. 14.

4. ἵνα σωφρονίζωσι τὰς νέας φιλ. εἶναι] Lachm. and Tisch. alter σωφρονίζωσι to σωφρονίζωσι, solely on the authority of A, F, G, H (to which I add Cod. Coisl., adduced by Jacks., Lamb. 1182, 1 m., 1196, and Cov. 2, omitted by Mill); but wrongly, since it is forbidden both by external authority and internal evidence, as existing in the greater probability that -ωσι should be mistaken by the scribes for -ουσιν (the letters ω and ον being continually confounded), than that so great a solecism should be committed as joining ἵνα with an indic. present, which is not proved by such examples as φησιούσθε in 1 Cor. iv. 6, and ζηλοῦτε in Gal. iv. 17, as will appear from the notes there. However, it is possible that the originals, from which those MSS.,—all exceedingly ancient,—were copied, had σωφρονίσουσιν, since the use of ἵνα, followed by Indic. Fut., is not unfrequent in the ancient MSS., and would have been more frequent, but for the errors of scribes, or the license of Critics.

4, 5. ἵνα σωφρονίξῃ, &c.] These words point at the chief purpose of the instructions,—namely, that they should teach them to be σώφρονες, acting as monitresses and regulators of their morals. These instructions (as appears from what follows) were to turn on the domestic duties suitable to young married women, and each in the order of importance. The first, implied in φιλάνδρ., is, as it were, their cardinal virtue; for it was well said by Socrates (ap. Stob. p. 488), εὐσέβεια γυναικεία, ὁ πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα ἔρως.

5. In οἰκουροὺs we have a very significant term, denoting not only 'stayers at home' (στανόμους, Lycoph. Cass. 1095), but, ex adjectivo, 'care-takers of the house.' Eur. Herc. Fur. 45, τροφὸν τέκνων, οἰκουρόν. Philo de Exsecr. p. 952, γυναῖκα—σώφρονα, οἰκουρόν. Dio Cass. p. 391, γυνὴ σώφρων, οἰκουρὸς, οἰκονόμος; and so Theophyl. here explains by οἰκονομικάs. The οἰκουροὺs, adopted by Lachm., and by Tisch. Ed. 1, from 6 of the most ancient cursives, was a gloss of a Scholiast, or an emendation of Critics, founded on the above sense, taking the word to mean 'work-wives,' having in mind Solomon's description of a good wife in Prov. xxxi. 31, and supposing the sense to be, 'doing the work of a housewife.' Yet that sense is in some measure implied in οἰκουροὺs, since that term comes from οἶκος and οὖρος, meaning, 'watching, keeping, taking care of the house,' which usually implied 'taking some share in the house-work,' such as is implied in our old English housewife, as Shakespeare was thinking of, when he wrote in his 'As you like it' iv. 5, 'I surely did think that her old gloves [i. e. such as she did the house-work in] were on; but 'twas her hands; she hath a housewife's hand.'—ἀγαθάs may mean either,—with reference to the words following,—'good-tempered,' or, as it should rather seem, with reference to the preceding, 'good-wives,' in the sense in which the

c1 Tim. 4.
15.
1 Pet. 5. 2.
d 1 Tim. 5.
14.
1 Pet. 2. 13.
15. & 2. 16.

σομένας τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν, ἵνα μὴ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ βλασφημηται. <sup>6</sup> Τοὺς νεωτέρους ὡσαύτως παρακάλει σωφρονεῖν <sup>7</sup> c περὶ πάντα σεαυτὸν παρεχόμενος τύπον καλῶν ἔργων ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ ἀδιαφθορίαν, σεμνότητα, ἀφθαρσίαν, <sup>8</sup> d λόγον ὑγιή, word was used by our ancestors, like the οικοδομοῦναι of Artemid. ii. 33, or the δομα-fermista of Ennius; namely, 'good managers.' Thus it will be exegetical of the preceding. On ἵνα μὴ ὁ λόγος, &c., see 1 Tim. vi. 1.

7. περὶ πάντα, &c.] I know not why Kypke and Heinr. should explain περὶ πάντα as equiv. to περὶ πάντα ἀνθρώπων, 'towards every man,' taking πάντα as a singular. It is true that, in the sense erga, περὶ is found in the Attic Greek writers, cited by Kypke, but not one of them has περὶ πάντα; besides that, he adduces no proof of the use of πάντα for πάντα ἀνθρώπων. For παρεχόμενος one might rather have expected παρίων, which is found in the purest Attic writers, as Plato, Æschin., and others. Yet παρεχόμενος occurs once in Xen. Cyr. viii. 1, 39 (in a passage very similar to the present), παράδειγμα τοιοῦτε ἑαυτὸν παρίωντο. At ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ ἀφθαρσίαν repeat παρεχόμενος from the preceding. The phrase καλῶν ἔργων is not to be taken in the acceptation it bears in Bodies of divinity; but understood simply of such proceedings as become the person, and become his calling in Christ Jesus. In short, by πάντα may be meant, in general, all the duties of a Christian, whatever be his station in the Church, whether private or public, whether of the taught or the teacher. The Bishop is required to be an exemplar to both these classes. For there is meant such an EXEMPLAR as may be followed by all under him, whether cleric or lay brethren; though the words following were meant to apply chiefly to the former. On τύπον, see 1 Tim. iv. 12, and note. By ἀδιαφθορίαν is denoted 'integrity of purpose,' by not corrupting the word of God for gain, or from any human motive, 2 Cor. ii. 17. 1 Tim. vi. 5. So the term was explained by H. Steph. Thes. in v.; and this view is confirmed by the use of the Adj. ἀδιάφθορος, as said both of uncorrupt judges, and generally persons who act from a disposition unswayed by corrupt motives of any kind; as Demosth. p. 325. It is true that for ἀδιαφθ. several of the most ancient MSS., and very many of the later ones, have ἀφθαρσίαν, which was commended by Griesb., and has been adopted by Lachm. and Tisch., but not, I apprehend, on good grounds. External authority is, indeed, rather in favour of ἀφθαρσίαν, but internal evidence strongly supports ἀδιαφθ. Supposing the two terms ἀδιαφθ. and ἀφθαρ. to be, as the Critical Editors affirm, equivalent in sense, the former could not need to be explained, still less to be altered into the latter. However, they are not so; ἀφθ. denoting 'incorruption,' as said of a thing; ἀδιαφθ., 'incorruptness,' or 'incorruptness,' as said of a person, who is not induced to do wrong by any corrupt motives; which latter is the sense here intended, as will appear still more from what I have remarked on λόγον ὑγιή just after. It seems, however, that since, as we know from Theophyl., some in ancient times (as not a few there have been in modern) referred the term to doctrine (having in mind the expression, ἡ ὁγιαίνουσα διδασκαλία, supra, i. 9, and 2 Tim. iv. 3), so the framers of the marginal 'scholia' explained ἀδιαφθ. by ἀφθαρ. as a more suitable term to express the idea. And this so approved itself to the Critical Revisers, that they adopted it into the text. The readings ἀδιαφθαρσίαν and ἀφθαρσίαν are mere glosses on ἀδιαφθορίαν and ἀφθ.; and ἀγνείαν, found in a few of the most ancient MSS. and several Fathers, with the Pease. Syr. and Arm. Versions, is evidently a mere scholium, coming from certain who understood the term ἀφθ. to denote 'purity of morals,' as some modern Expositors have done, having in view 1 Tim. iv. 12. By σεμνότητα is denoted that 'gravity of deportment' which excludes all levity or carelessness, and, moreover, whatever is calculated to catch attention by the condescending to what is low and familiar.

8. λόγον ὑγιή] Not a few EXX. of this phrase are adduced by Wets., and others might be added. But in these several passages the sense of ὕγ. varies. And the main question is, what is the sense which the word bears here? Now, that will depend on the reference in λόγον. Supposing it to refer (according to the opinion of the ancient, and most modern, Commentators) to doctrine, it may be taken to denote veram, sinceram, true, uncorrupt; but that will be much the same as saying what was said before in ἐν διδασκαλίᾳ ἀδιαφθορίαν. Accordingly, it is better to take λόγον to denote speech, discourse, with reference to the wording of his public address in teaching and preaching. Upon the whole, though the words may seem to be closely connected with those which precedes, yet, from the following context it would appear that they belong to those which go after, and were meant to usher in a new particular. That they must not be referred to what goes before has been ably shown by Raphael, whose main argument seems to be this, that 'St. Paul for this reason requires λόγον ὑγιή of Titus, lest the adversary should have any cause of speaking evil of Christians. Yet, as far as regards Christian doctrine, the Gentiles spoke evil of Christians for that very thing; nor could that be avoided, although the Doctors of the Church had used, in teaching and preaching the divine word, ever so much care and caution.' It is further observable, that St. Paul enjoins the same λόγος to be ἀκατάγνωστος, 'irreprehensible,' or 'what cannot justly be condemned.' But all the infidels condemned the λόγος περὶ Χριστοῦ, because they accounted the thing itself as absurd. Now this circumstance seems conclusive in proof that λόγος ὑγιή must not be referred to the term διδασκαλία, but be regarded as forming a separate head with another reference, and with another acceptation of λόγον; and I agree with Raphael in supposing the sense here intended to be sermonesque, understanding thereby that familiar conversation which we employ, towards those with whom we are acquainted, in social intercourse. Agreeably to this view, Calv., I find,

ἀκατάγνωστον ἵνα ὁ ἐξ ἐναντίας ἐντραπῇ, μηδὲν ἔχων περι

* ἡμῶν λέγειν φαῦλον. <sup>9</sup> ° Δούλους ἰδίοις δεσπόταις ὑποτάσσεται, ἐν πᾶσιν εὐαρέστους εἶναι, μὴ ἀντιλέγοντας· <sup>10</sup> μὴ νοσηζομένους, ἀλλὰ πίστιν πᾶσαν ἐνδεκνυμένους ἀγαθὴν ἵνα τὴν διδασκαλίαν τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ κοσμῶσιν ἐν πᾶσιν. <sup>11</sup> ° Ἐπεφάνη γὰρ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος πᾶσιν ἀνθρώ-

° Eph. 6. 5.
Col. 3. 22.
1 Tim. 6. 1.
2.
1 Pet. 2. 18.

1 Tim. 2. 4.
2 Tim. 4. 17.
ch. 2. 4.

refers it to common life and private conversation. So also Bengel explains it, as Crell. before him, by 'sermonem in consuetudine quotidianā.' Nor is this view a modern novelty, being as old as the time of Chrys., who so understood λόγος, since he explains the clause as if ἐν τῷ βίῳ καὶ ἀναστροφῇ had been in the text before λόγον ὕγιᾳ. Upon the whole, then, it appears that the Apostle's purpose here was, to express the same injunction as he conveyed to Timothy, 1 Tim. iv. 12, τέτοις γίνου τῶν πιστῶν ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀναστροφῇ ('both in speech and action, in conversation and conduct'). In the epithet ὕγιᾳ, subjoined to λόγος, there seems to be (as in the opposite expression at Eph. iv. 29, λόγος σαφές: and in Arrian, Epict. ii. 15, where λόγος σαφές is opposed to λόγος ὕγιᾳ) a medical metaphor taken from wounds, which in Hippocr. are frequently described as either σαφρά (= σπέρν, 'purulent') or ὕγια, e. gr., p. 345, τὰ σαφρά ὕγια ποιοῦνται. The term ἐντραπῇ stands for κατασχυνθῇ, as in 2 Thess. iii. 14, ἵνα ἐντραπῇ. It is conjoined with αἰσχ., in Pa. xxiv. 26, αἰσχυθείσαν καὶ ἐντραπείσαν ἄμα. There is an implied notion of desisting from any words or actions, so as not to be put to shame by plain facts. Of ἐντραπῇ λέγων, the full sense is, 'may be ashamed at speaking against you,' viz. 'by having no evil to say of you, or of us;' for here the reading varies, and is doubtful, though ἡμῶν is best supported, and in this reading Tisch. finally acquiesces, after having (as in very many similar cases) first edited ὡμῶν.

9. 10. Comp. similar admonitions at 1 Tim. vi. 1, sq. Eph. vi. 5—8. Col. iii. 22.

9. μὴ ἀντιλέγοντας] 'not answering again.' The term is supposed to be equiv. to ἀπαποκρίνεσθαι at Rom. ix. 20 (which may serve to illustrate an obscure expression, Æschyl. Theb. 244, παλινεστόμεαι εἰ; for ἀπαποκρίνη; For so I would point, regarding the preceding line as spoken aside). The expression is, indeed, by the recent Commentators in general taken to signify 'not refractory,' or 'not rebellious.' But I prefer the foregoing interpretation, which is confirmed and illustrated by Soph. Œd. T. 408 (perhaps founded on the above cited passage of Æschyl.). Εἰ καὶ τυραννῆι, ἐξισωτίον τὸ γούν 'ἴσ' ἀντιλέγει: τοῦδ' ἄρ' ἀγὰν κρατῶ. Οὐ γὰρ τι σοὶ ἔξ δούλου: for the slave, it seems, had not the privilege to make any reply to his master. Thus, in Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 26, p. 1089, mention is made of a slave who, on his master ordering him to perform some work unreasonably laborious, and ἀνταπὼν αὐτῷ, πλεγάς ἔλαβε μέστις: πανὸν πολλὰς.

10. Here πᾶσαν πίστιν, for πιστ. πᾶσαν, was edited by Tisch., ed. 1, from several of the most ancient MSS.; though in his 2nd he has very properly restored the t. rec. By πιστ. ἀγαθὴν is meant 'true fidelity,' 'faithfulness to one's engagements.'—τὴν διδασκαλίαν τοῦ Σωτῆρος. Lachm. and Tisch. insert τὴν between διδ. and τοῦ, on the authority of six uncial and some cursive MSS., Chrys., and Theodoret. But, although internal evidence is rather in favour of this reading, yet, to determine whether this, or the commonly received one, be the true reading, is as difficult as it is unnecessary. With an inconsistency very frequently evinced by him, Lachm. at ver. 11 cancels the second ἡ, on the authority of three or four uncial MSS., though internal evidence is as strongly as external authority in its favour; and even propriety of language requires it, the repetition of the Article being necessary to point the general truth here expressed, that 'it is the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men.' Here, again, Tisch., after first following Lachm., deserts him, and restores the ἡ.

11, 12. Here commences the latter portion of the Epistle, in which, as Crell. and Hyper. observe, there is expressed the main reason why men should live thus righteously and godly, and withal the general heads of the piety required of them are enumerated. The great end and aim of Christianity here adverted to is, through the mercy of God, founded on the merits of Christ, to bring men on, through faith and holiness, to salvation.

11. Of the two constructions, adopted by Expositors, of these words, ἐπιφάνη—ἀνθρώποις, that by which σωτήριος is construed with πᾶσιν seems to deserve the preference; the word σωτήριος taking after it a Dat. And that ἐπιφάνη may very well be taken absolutely, is sufficiently shown by the words a little further on, iii. 4, ὅτε δὲ ἡ χρηστότης—ἐπιφάνη. On the other hand, σωτήριος taken absolutely would be here very harsh. However, since the constr. of ἐπιφ. with πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις is supported by a passage of Luke i. 79 (ἐπιφάναι τοῖς ἐν σκότει), it may perhaps be allowed at σωτήριος to supply πάντων, from πᾶσιν, or take πᾶσιν twice. And so the words must have been taken by the Pesch. Syr. Translator. This construction I find adopted by Dr. Peile. The foregoing is the general import of the words; but to fix the exact sense, the meaning attached to παιδείουσα must be ascertained. The sense 'teaching,' the erudition of the Pesch. Syr., Arab., and Vulg. Versions, is preferable; yet it scarcely goes far enough; for it is not 'simple instruction' that communicates what is enjoined. Neither, on the other hand, can I approve of the rendering of Kutt. and Dr. Peile, 'disciplining us,'—namely, through the precepts of virtue and holiness given to us, being the instituta media by which we may come to what is presented in the Gospel; which more than savours of views that Dr. Peile cannot approve. The true view of the sense seems to be that taken by Est., as follows: 'Non quod gratia Christi consistat in doctrina, quemadmodum vo-

g Eph. i. 4.
 & 4. 22—25.
 Col. i. 22.
 & 3. 5—8.
 2 Tim. i. 9.
 1 John 2. 10.

h 1 Cor. i. 7.
 Phil. 2. 30.
 i Exod. 10. 8.
 Eph. 2. 10.
 & 2.
 Gal. i. 4.
 & 1. 20.
 Heb. 9. 14.
 k 1 Cor. 10.
 11.
 1 Tim. 4. 12.

ποις, <sup>12</sup> ἡ παιδεύουσα ἡμᾶς, ἵνα ἀρνησάμενοι τὴν ἀσέβειαν καὶ τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθυμίας, σωφρόνως καὶ δικαίως καὶ εὐσεβῶς ζήσωμεν ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι. <sup>13</sup> ἡ προσδεχόμενοι τὴν μακαρίαν ἐλπίδα καὶ ἐπιφάνειαν τῆς δόξης τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>14</sup> ὃς ἔδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ἵνα λυτρώσθαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ πάσης ἀνομίας, καὶ καθάρσιν ἑαυτῷ λαὸν περιούσιον, ζηλωτὴν καλῶν ἔργων. <sup>15</sup> ἡ Ταῦτα λάλει καὶ παρακάλει, καὶ ἐλεγγχε μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς· μηδεὶς σου περιφρονεῖτω.

lebat Pelagius; sed quia manifestatio gratiæ, seu beneficentiæ, Dei nobis esse debet vico institutionis ad vitam sanctæ ascendam. Verumtamen nec ea institutio, nec ulla doctrina auribus addita, quantumvis ad persuadendum apposita præstabit, ut sancte vivamus; nisi Deus hoc ipsum per gratiam suam in nobis efficaciter operetur.' It is in vain to seek to confirm Dr. Peile's view by Heb. xii. 5—13, since there it is the παιδεία Κυρίου, even that of ἐλεγγχε, 'wholesome discipline.' I wonder that Dr. Peile did not appeal in support of his interpretation to 2 Tim. iii. 17, for he explains the παιδεία there of discipline in righteousness. But that interpretation, notwithstanding Mr. Conybeare's ingenuity in making the best of it, is, as I have there shown, untenable. I need scarcely say, that the ἡ before σωτῆρ, has been rightly restored by Tisch. in his 2d ed., though in his 1st he followed Lachm. in cancelling it on the authority of only 3 MSS. (A, C, D), and contrary to internal evidence. The reading of F, G, is another Critical alteration, even more injudicious.

12. ἀρνησάμενοι—τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθυμίας] By ἄρν. is meant abnegantes, lit. 'saying No to their solicitations'; implying, as Theophyl. remarks, 'total and heartfelt aversion.' See note supra, i. 15.—ἀσέβειαν. This consisted not only in neglect of the proper object of worship by idolatry, but also by those vices which invariably attended in its train; designating the condition of the unconverted, both heathen and others. On the expression τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθ. the best comment is 1 John ii. 16.—σωφρ. denotes virtue as regards ourselves; δικ., as regards our fellow-creatures; and εὐσεβῶς, as respects God.

13. προσδεχόμενοι—Χριστοῦ] Of these words the most natural sense, and that required by the propriety of language, is, beyond all doubt, the one assigned by almost all the ancients from Clem. Alex. downwards, and by the early modern Expositors, as Eras., Grot., and Beza, and also by some eminent Expositors and Critics of later times, as Bps. Pearson and Bull, Wolf, Matthei, and Bp. Middl.—namely, 'Looking for (or rather, looking forward to, comp. Job ii. 9) the blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.' The cause of the ambiguity in our Common Version is ably pointed out, and the above version established on the surest grounds, by Bp. Middl. and Prof. Scholef. But, besides the argument founded on the propriety of language, that of Beza, who urges that ἐπιφ. is no where used of God, but Christ, is unanswerable. Other convincing arguments for the construction here laid down may be seen in Dr. Routh's Reliquiæ Sacre, vol. ii.

p. 26. Against the view of those who maintain the words to be 'descriptive of two persons, only strictly united in joint agency,' I would, with Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. Dial., p. 216, propose this question: 'What intimation is there given in Scripture of a glorious appearing of God the Father, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, in concert? Certainly, none whatever. Consequently we are bound to adopt the only other view which can be taken of the words,—which view was adopted by the Greek ecclesiastical writers in the earliest periods of the Church. The reader is particularly referred to Clem. Alex. Cohort. ad Gentem, sub init., where vv. 11—14 are cited by that Father, and the view of Σωτ. here maintained is adopted. As to the plausible argument of some in favour of the new version contended for, that 'Jesus Christ is no where styled the great God;' we answer, that μεγάλων belonging to both Θεοῦ and Σωτῆρος, alters the case, and removes that objection. The sense, as above shown, is plainly, 'the glorious appearance of that GREAT BEING who is our GOD AND SAVIOUR.'

14. ἑδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν] i. e. 'gave himself up to death,' gave not gold, or silver, or holocaust, but Himself, body and blood (comp. Eph. v. 2); and that, by implication, freely and spontaneously.—λυτρώσθαι, 'might redeem us.' The word here is a verbum pragmaticum, denoting not merely, as the Socinians contend, a 'withdrawing men from sin,' by a pure doctrine and a holy example, but a paying the λύτρον, which delivers them from the penalty of sin, and from its dominion. See Rom. vi. 14. Here bondage to sin is to be understood as carrying with it the penalty of death spiritual. See Heb. ii. 15. From this Christ hath delivered us, by delivering us from sin in all its liabilities, both 'ab effectus et ab reatu' (as says Est.), in other words, both from the power of sin, and the penalty of sin. In the next words, καὶ καθάρσις, &c., may be recognized a blending of two clauses into one,—namely, 'that he might [by atonement] purify us unto his service, and [thus] make us a people peculiarly his own, by being zealous, not of vain rites and ceremonies, but of good works.'

15. ἐλεγγχε] This ought not to be rendered, as it is by Rosenm. and others, 'enjoin'; a signification wholly unauthorized. The sense commonly assigned is sufficiently apt, and indeed no perplexity would have existed, had the comma of the early Editions after παρακάλει been retained. The general meaning may be thus expressed: 'The above doctrines and duties do thou teach, and exhort to the practice thereof; and [any who gainsay or neglect them] rebuke with all authority,' i. e. in the exercise of all the authority vested in thee as God's minister for that very purpose. So 2 Tim. iv. 2, κήρυξον—ἡλεῖξον—παράκλησον. The expression μετὰ πάσης ἀπειταγῆς I would not (with most Commentators) refer to ἡλεῖξαι only, rendering severely. It is better to understand it of all the several terms preceding, and render, 'with all authoritativeness,' in the sense above pointed out. So imperium in Latin is used for auctoritas, such as that of masters over their servants, parents over their children, husbands over their wives, and sometimes physicians over their patients.—μὴ οὐδὲ σου περιφρ., i. e. 'give no one just cause to despise thee.' He does not say, as to Timothy, despise thy youth, for Titus was a much older man; but 'despise thee,'—namely, for the want of due authority and firmness.

III. <sup>1</sup> Ὑπομίμησθε αὐτοὺς ἀρχαῖς καὶ ἐξουσίαις ὑποτάσσεσθαι, πειθαρχεῖν, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐτοίμους εἶναι, <sup>2</sup> μὴ δένα βλασφημεῖν, ἀμάχους εἶναι, ἐπεικεῖς, πᾶσαν ἐνδεικνυμένους πραότητα πρὸς πάντας ἀνθρώπους. <sup>3</sup> Ἦμεν γὰρ ποτὲ καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀνόητοι, ἀπειθεῖς, πλανώμενοι, δουλεύοντες ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ ἡδοναῖς ποικίλαις, ἐν κακίᾳ καὶ φθόνῳ διάγοντες, στυγητοὶ, μισοῦντες ἀλλήλους. <sup>4</sup> Ὅτε δὲ ἡ χρηστότης καὶ ἡ φιλα-

sons now are. By the expression ἡμᾶς the best Expositors are agreed that the Apostle speaks per κοινωμίαν; i.e. identifies himself with them, as he often does elsewhere, in order to soften disagreeable topics, and avoid offence; for, notwithstanding what some say, there is here scarcely any particular suitable to Paul when a Jew, whereas all of them are very similar to those by which the Apostle describes the heathens at Rom. i. and elsewhere.—ἀνόητοι has reference to the peculiar ignorance of atheism, which says, 'there is no God' (Ps. xiv. 1), or of polytheism, which bows to idols. Nearly synonymous with this is the term following, πλανώμενοι, which is accordingly at Heb. v. 2 joined with ἀγνοῶντες, and may there, as here, be rendered self-deceived, implying voluntary error.—ἀπειθεῖς, as being placed between ἀνόητοι and πλαν., must denote a contumacious refusal of belief and obedience, corresponding to οὐκ ἰδοκίμασαν τὸν Θεόν ἔχειν ἱπικύνας at Rom. i. 28. On the words δουλοῦντες ἑαυτοῖς καὶ τοῖς τοκήσιν the best comment is Rom. i. 28–31, and Eph. ii. 3; and as those words allude to the abominable vices of the heathens, so, I conceive, do the next to certain evil dispositions,—such as malice, envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness. So Rom. i. 29, καταπραυνόμενος—κακίᾳ μιστὸν φθόνον, φόνον, ἔριδος.—Διάγοντες (sc. βίον) is a strong expression (occurring also in 1 Tim. ii. 2, and oft. in the Class. writers), denoting 'the going on habitually in any course of action.'—στυγνοί, 'hateful (or 'deserving of hatred') to God and good men.' Of μισούντες ἀλλήλους the sense may be best expressed in the words of Tacitus, invidiosæ mutuis odiis. In this last particular we have one of the surest indications of 'the carnal mind, which is enmity against God.' Accordingly this hatred is with reason placed by St. Paul, Gal. v. 20, among 'the works of the flesh.' How far the heathens carried this pernicious principle, will sufficiently appear by a reference to the frequent custom of antiquity, of having plates of lead nailed up in the sepulchral vaults, inscribed with bitter imprecations of their enemies.

4—7. 'To the above Paul places in opposition, by an ὅτι δέ, matter introduced not so much to give a declaration of a new state, in contrast with the former, as to show how little reason the Cretans have to be proud of themselves. It is through the kindness and love of God that they have been saved, not in consequence of their own merit, but solely in virtue of his compassion, through the work of salvation and the efficacy of baptism. When this connexion is rightly considered, we clearly see why the kindness and love of the Saviour-God are mentioned so emphatically with the work of salvation, and why that saving efficacy of baptism is brought pro-

III. 1. ὁπομιμνησκε αὐτοὺς—ὑποτάσσει.] On this precept see Rom. xiii. 1, compared with Col. i. 10. So important an injunction was this of obedience to magistrates ever regarded, that one of the seven precepts of Noah was to avoid resistance to magistrates. Of the two terms designating this obedience, ὑποτάσσει refers to their position of subjection to the powers exercising magistracy, and πείθεσθαι to the obedience due to lawful authority. The subjoined words, πρὸς πάντας ἰσχυροὺς ἀγαθῶν ἰσ. ἀλφαι, must be referred, not, with some, to the following context, but to the preceding, and they seem intended to further develop the injunction,—that it must be ready obedience, and unlimited, extending to every thing,—so that it be not morally wrong, by being inconsistent with the paramount duty to God; in which case πείθεσθαι δεῖ θεῷ μάλλον ἢ ἀνθρώποις. Acts v. 29.

2. μηδὲνα βλάσφη, ἀμάρτυροι εἶναι] The connexion with the preceding words (so necessary to rightly understand these) seems to arise from this,—that in the foregoing injunction to political obedience, unlimited, except by the duty to God, the case of the Ruler commanding what is heavy to be borne, nay, in itself unjust, is not excepted. Now in such a case the injured person might think himself justified in using reproachful language, which is forbidden by the μηδὲνα, though of course it extends to all other persons. And with this is joined the duty of being ἀμάρτυροι, ‘non-quarrelsome,’ ‘non-captious,’ or ready to think themselves injured; but aiming at the cultivation of the opposite disposition of meekness and forbearance towards all men, even towards those who, like their heathen adversaries, little deserved it at their hands.

3. ἦμεν γὰρ ποτὶ, &c.] The γὰρ is meant to assign a reason for such lenity and mildness towards abusive heathen opponents;—namely, pity for their miserable condition, and recollection that they themselves were once such as those per-

VOL. II.

e John 2. 4.
Acts 15. 11.
Rom. 8. 26.
26. 4. 2. 4.
2. 9. 11.
2. 11. 6.
Eph. 1. 4.
2. 4. 9.
2. 5. 26.
Gal. 2. 16.
3 Tim. 1. 9.
f Ezek. 36. 26. Joel 2. 28. Acts 1. 52. Rom. 8. 5. g Rom. 8. 23, 24.

θρωπία ἐπεφάνη τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, <sup>5</sup> οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων τῶν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ ὧν ἐποιήσαμεν ἡμεῖς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας, καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος ἁγίου, <sup>6</sup> οὐ ἐξέχεεν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς πλουσίως, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν <sup>7</sup> ἵνα δικαιωθέντες τῇ ἐκείνου

minently forward; the sense intended running thus: 'When, however, the kindness and philanthropy of our Saviour-God appeared, he saved us, not on account of works of righteousness which we had done, but in virtue of his mercy through the laver of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he has shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour, that, being justified by his grace, we should become heirs according to the hope of eternal life.' (Wiesing.) Comp. the parallel passages at Gal. iv. 3-6, and Eph. ii. 1-10, the latter of which especially is a good comment on the present.—τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ is not well rendered by Bp. Middl. and Wiesing., 'of our Saviour God;' who, in supposing that here and at i. 3. ii. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 2, the Saviour God means Christ, is certainly mistaken. Not only the parallel passages of Gal. and Eph. show it to be God the Father who is here meant, but such is clear from ver. 6. This view is confirmed by the almost universal voice of antiquity, and is ably maintained by Est. who, among other passages, adduces John iii. 16, οὗτος γὰρ ἠγάπησεν τὸν υἱόν, &c. Rom. v. 8, συνίστησι τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἀγάπην εἰς ἡμᾶς τὸ Θεόν, &c., which latter passage serves to confirm the remark of Est., that here, as elsewhere, the term Σωτῆρ is applied as well to the Father as to the Son.

4. The terms χρηστ. and φιλ. properly differ as genus and species, yet are elsewhere, as well as here, conjoined by good writers, though exclusively later ones, as Philo, Jos. Liban., Aristides, Lucian, Plut., &c. Here the conjoint idea which they represent is equiv. to χάρις Θεοῦ supra, ch. ii. 11. The term φιλανθρωπία is, however, very seldom used to denote 'the love of God to men,' though frequently 'the love of man to man.' In the former use, however, it occurs in Artemid. iv. 24, τὸ τῶν Θεῶν φιλανθρωπεῖν συνίσταται. I would render, 'the kindness and the philanthropy;' because the second Article is meant to give prominence to the term introduced by it, and the two are not to be taken aggregately, as in Matt. xxiii. 23, ἀποδεκατοῦτε τὸ ἄνθος, καὶ τὸ ἀνθος καὶ τὸ κῆμον. See Green, Gr. N. T. Dial. p. 213, 214, where he justly observes that the present ex. of this force of the repeated Article is the more remarkable, because only one person is described.

5. ὧν ἐποιήσ.] Render, with Mackn. and Wakerf., 'which we had done,' or did; i. e. before faith and the laver of regeneration. 'This (as Whitby observes) does not in the least exclude the works of righteousness which should hereafter be done, by virtue of the new nature given to Christians, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, from being conditions of their future happiness; and when the Apostle says κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς, his meaning is, that by his free mercy he brought us from a state of wrath and condemnation into the way of salvation; in which, if we walk and continue, we shall assuredly obtain salvation.' Lachm. and Tisch. (1st Ed.) read αὐ, from a few uncial and other MSS., yet against internal evidence; for who, it may be asked, would correct the more difficult, but grammatically correct reading, ὧν to αὐ? whereas the other would be almost sure to be done. Tisch. (2nd Ed.) very properly restores αὐν. With equal want of judgment Lachm. prefixes τοῦ to λουτροῦ, from one MS., the Alex.; for, if St. Paul had prefixed the Article to λουτροῦ, he would naturally have done it to παλιγγ. So in Eph. v. 26, we have in all the MSS. τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος. But λουτρ. παλιγγ. is equally correct.—ἔσωσι, meaning, the best Expositors tell us, 'bath put us into a state of salvation.' See note on Matt. i. 21. Acts ii. 47, and 1 Tim. ii. 4. But the expression must, in the context, rather denote, deliverance from the consequences of former sins, negligences, and ignorances, by having past offences atoned for, and the means of future holiness and righteousness communicated.—διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας. Render: 'by the laver of regeneration;' i. e. (as Bp. Hall explains) 'by means of those holy ordinances which he hath appointed; and mainly, as one of them, by the holy sacrament of baptism, which is the laver of our spiritual regeneration; yet not by any virtue of the outward sign, but by the inward renovation which is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost.' That by παλιγγ. is meant baptismal regeneration, the ancient Commentators almost universally (see Chrys. i. 328), and the most eminent ones of modern times, are agreed. And that this is the doctrine of our Church, is evident from its XXXVth Article. The term, indeed, might, without the adjunct λουτροῦ, mean moral regeneration; and though that sense be very rare in the ancient writers, yet I have myself noted an example in Euseb. Eccl. Hist. iii. 23, fin., διδοὺς μέγα παράδειγμα μετανοίας ἀληθινῆς, καὶ μέγα γνώρισμα παλιγγενεσίας. The expression ἀνακαιν. Πν. ἁγ. must, of course, be primarily understood of the renovation proceeding from the regenerating grace of baptism; though it must by no means be confined to that, but understood of that moral renovation begun in baptism, but requiring the aid of the Holy Spirit throughout the whole of life. The reader is here referred to an excellent elucidation of this controverted topic by Dr. Gloucester Ridley (cited by Mant and D'Oyly), which leaves, in fact, very little about which moderate men, careful to understand each other, would differ; also to Bp. Bull, Harm. Ap. p. 83, and espec. to Bulling. on this passage.

7. ἵνα δικαιωθῶμεν, &c.] See the parallel passages of Gal. iv. 3-6, and Eph. ii. 1-10; also Rom. iii. 24-26. v. 1-9. viii. 17. Gal. iii. 29.—τῇ ἐκείνου χάριτι. By his grace is, of course, to be understood the grace of God: as is plain from ἐκείνου, not αὐτοῦ, being used; the one pointing to the remote, the other, to the χαρίτι, κληρονόμοι γενόμεθα, κατ' ἐλπίδα, ζωῆς αἰωνίου. <sup>8</sup> Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος· καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαι σε διαβεβαιούσθαι ἵνα φροντίζῃς καλῶν ἔργων προτάσθαι οἱ πεπιστευκότες τῷ Θεῷ. ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ καὶ ὠφέλιμα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

nearer antecedent. 'It is evident that Luther felt, as did St. Paul and St. Augustin, that the evil in man does not lie in the imperfection of his outward works, but in the corruption of his heart. Therefore did he so strongly urge, that, if we are to be justified, it must be wholly through grace, by the righteousness of our Divine Saviour, to be received and appropriated by faith, without any admixture of the works wrought by so frail and peccable a creature as man.' Archd. Hare, Mission of the Comforter, vol. ii. p. 752. —For γενόμεθα Lachm. and Tisch. edit γεννηθῶμεν, from five uncial MSS. But that was, I suspect, a mere alteration, proceeding from the Critics, and introduced in order the better to suit in tense with the preceding δικαιοσύνης.

8. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος]. A formula peculiar to the Pastoral Epistles: 'Faithful, or true, is the saying.' Expositors are not quite agreed whether this refers to what precedes, or to what follows. In the latter case the sense will be, 'uphold the doctrine, that believers should maintain good works.' To this sense, however, the plural τούτων is adverse; and it is not permitted by the ἵνα. Hence it is better, with almost all eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, to refer the words to what precedes, understanding by τούτων the 'doctrines above mentioned'; vv. 4—8;—namely, 1. the ruined state of man, both in soul and body; 2. the infinite goodness of God, which devised his salvation; 3. the manifestation of this goodness by the incarnation of Jesus Christ; 4. the justification which they who believed received through His blood; 5. the mission of the Holy Spirit, and the purification of the heart by His influence; 6. the hope of the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of both it and the soul through all eternity; 7. the necessity of obedience to the will of God, and of walking worthy of the vocation wherewith they had been called.—Καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαι, &c., meaning, 'and I would have you constantly insist strongly on these truths; so that those who have believed in God, may maintain good works.' The cause of the obscurity, and consequent diversity of interpretation, in these words, arose from the Apostle not having here shown how it should be, that the doctrine of salvation by grace should produce holiness of life. But he has done it in another kindred passage, which the Commentators have omitted to adduce—namely, Eph. ii. 9, 10, where, after having at large treated on the subject of salvation by grace (as here), adding that it is not of works lest any man should boast, he subjoins: αὐτοὺ γὰρ ἰσμεν ποίημα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ 'Ἰησοῦ ἐν ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, οἱς προητοιμάσεν ὁ Θεός, ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπατήσωμεν, where the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[Yet wor-s must be done,] for, &c.' Hence it would seem that καλῶν ἔργων here must have the same sense as ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς there; and consequently it must not be limited, with many eminent Commentators, to works of benevolence, still less to the business of our vocation, but be extended to good works of every kind. Προτάσθαι signifies, 1. 'to set oneself about any thing'; 2. 'to assiduously practise it'; a sense not unfrequent in the Class. writers. Accordingly the two terms φροντ. and προτάσθαι taken together convey an intensity of sense in the latter.—The τῷ before Θεῷ is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., on the authority of all the uncial, and several cursive, MSS., and Theodor.; but without reason, since it is contrary to the usage of St. Paul, and the other writers of the New Test., who often use πιστεύειν τῷ Θεῷ, or τῷ Κυρίῳ (as Acts v. 14. xiii. 12, in M. C.; xvi. 34. xxviii. 55. Rom. iv. 3. Gal. iii. 6. James ii. 23. 1 John v. 10, sine v. lect.), but nowhere πισταίειν Θεῷ. Πιστεύειν τῷ Θεῷ does occur (as Gen. xv. 6. Ex. xiv. 31. 3 Kings xvii. 14. Ps. lxxvii. 26. Jonah iii. 5) in the Sept., but πιστ. Θεῷ never, any more than in the Class. writers. Hence we may suppose the reading in question to have arisen from carelessness on the part of the scribes.—ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ, &c. Some 14 MSS. have not the τὰ, which Bp. Middl. is disposed to cancel, for scarcely any better reason than because he does not see the force of it. And what the Bishop was only inclined to do, Mr. Valpy, swayed by his authority, takes courage and does; and, with less than his usual discretion, cancels the word, alone of all the Editors. But, not to advert to Bp. Middleton's reasons for supposing it not genuine, it is surely difficult to imagine how, if so, it should have been introduced into nearly nine-tenths of the MSS.; for Rinck's collations present no variation; whereas, for its omission we can well account,—namely, from the ancient Critics being as unable to discover its force as was Bp. Middl. Yet, if I mistake not, it is susceptible of a very good sense,—namely, 'These are the things (i.e. duties), which are good and profitable unto men.' Similarly to what is said by Plut. de Educ. § 17, ταῦτα μὲν οὖν καλὰ καὶ συμφέροντα. The above sense is, I apprehend, much stronger than that yielded by the Common Version, and such as is very agreeable to the Apydelon; which in St. Paul is commonly introductory to a sentiment of more than usual energy. Indeed, it is here required by the contrast in the next verse; for, in the pursuit of curious speculations, unconnected with the main articles of our faith, and the common rules of human duty, practice is usually neglected. So far in my former editions. I have now to add, that, among a multitude of passages from Plato, Xen., and Plut., which have since come under my notice, I have not found any with the Article so used, except one in Plut. Pericl. c. i., τὰν δὲ καλῶν καὶ ὠφελίμων παραμειλόντων, a circumstance which is the more remarkable, as serving to assist us in determining the true reading here, where the Article τὰ is absent from nearly all the uncial and very many of the cursive MSS. (to which, however, I can only add Lamb. 1186, and Cov. 2, omitted by Mill), and has been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch. But, though external authority may seem to favour

O o 2

h 1 Tim. i. 2-7, & 4. 7.
 & c. 50.
 2 Tim. i. 22.
 ch. i. 14.
 1 Matt. 13.
 15-17.
 Rom. 16. 17.
 2 Cor. 12. 1.
 2 Thess. 2. 6.
 2 Tim. 2. 5.
 2 John 10.
 1 Acts 20. &
 Eph. 6. 21.
 Col. 4. 6.
 2 Tim. 4. 12.
 1 Acts 18. 26.
 1 Cor. 1. 12.

<sup>9</sup> ἡ Μωρὰς δὲ ζητήσεις καὶ γενεαλογίας, καὶ ἔρεις καὶ μάχας νομικὰς, περιτίσασον· εἰς γὰρ ἀνωφελεῖς καὶ μάταιοι. <sup>10</sup> Ἰδιότρονον ἄνθρωπον, μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νοουθεσίαν, παραιτοῦν <sup>11</sup> εἰδὼς ὅτι ἐξέστραπται ὁ τοιοῦτος, καὶ ἁμαρτάνει ὡς αὐτοκατάκριτος.

<sup>12</sup> Ὅταν πέμψω Ἀρτεμῶν πρὸς σε, ἡ Τυχικὸν, σπουδάσον ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με εἰς Νικόπολιν· ἐκεῖ γὰρ κέκρικα παραχειμᾶσαι. <sup>13</sup> Ζητῶν τὸν νομικὸν καὶ Ἀπολλῶν σπουδαίως πρόπεμψον, ἵνα μὴδὲν αὐτοῖς λείπη. <sup>14</sup> Μανθανέτωσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ ἡμέτεροι καλῶν

the omission, internal evidence is quite in its disfavour; for no reason can be imagined why any Critics should introduce the word, which would seem superfluous (and of which, indeed, Bp. Middl. confessed he could not discover the force); whereas it may very well be supposed that Critics would—as is often the case elsewhere—cancel what they could not comprehend, and what to them appeared to answer no purpose. To me, however, it seems not useless, as serving to promote an intensity of sense, thus: 'These are the things which are good and profitable unto men:' a sense this called for by the Asyndeton, which in St. Paul is usually introductory to a sentiment more than usually energetic. The force of the Article here will appear by considering this passage as referable to that class treated on by Mr. Green, Gr. N. T., p. 210, in which 'the full idea in a writer's mind is expressed by the employment of two or more words nearly allied in meaning;' as I have already shown is the case with καλὰ and ὠφελίμα, in which case the first word has the Article and the other not. Besides, the καὶ is called for by the contrast introduced by δὲ in the next verse, where the things adduced are speculations, both foolish and unprofitable.

<sup>9</sup> μωρὰς ζητήσεις In this expression there is, as Vitringer (de Synag., p. 671, fin.) says, an allusion to those disputations vain and foolish, which were held in the Synagogues by the disputers (συζητηταί) of this world, on matters pertaining to the Synagogue, and the economy of the Old Test. He further enters at large into the nature of these συζητήσεις, 'questions for discussion.' On this subject see notes at 1 Tim. i. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17. On γενεαλογίας see note at 1 Tim. i. 4, also Mosheim's Ecclesiastical Hist., vol. i. p. 71.

10. The mention of 'frivolous questions, and curious subtilties' naturally introduces that of the heresies and schisms, which they seldom fail to generate (comp. Rom. xvi. 17, where see note). On the sense of αἰρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον, and of the term σχίσμα, much has been written. Suffice it here to say, that αἰρετικός seems to mean 'one who takes up any doctrine in opposition to, or inconsistent with, the fundamental truths of the Gospel;' espec. if anxious to promulgate his own notions, and from a vain-glorious desire of being the head of a sect. Of course, schism is the promulgation and supporting of such heresies. See my Lex. in v., Bingham's Ecclesiastical Antiquities, i. xvi. 6, 21, and Vitringer, de Synag. p. 755, seqq.

<sup>11</sup> εἰδὼς ὅτι—αὐτοκατ.] These words, not a little obscure and controverted, are, I conceive, meant to suggest a reason why all intercourse with such a person is to be avoided. And the difficulty mainly hinges upon αὐτοκατάκριτος, which some eminent Commentators think may mean, 'one who furnishes matter of self-condemnation against himself;' a sense, however, not a little harsh, and far from suitable to what preceded. The ancient interpretations, from their simplicity, deserve more attention. Chrys., Theophyl., and Euseb., explain it ἀπεκλογητός, i. e. 'condemned by himself and his own conscience;' implying that he teaches erroneous doctrine, knowing them to be such: for, as Whitby observes, no man who acts according to his judgment, how erroneous soever that may be, is thereby self-condemned; while Theodor. thinks that the import of the whole verse is ἀνοήτως γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ πόσις. Perhaps the truth will best be attained by uniting both interpretations, thus: 'Such an one avoid (comp. 1 Tim. vi. 5, ἄπό); for he is utterly perverted, and therefore no good can be expected to be done: he sins self-condemned, and is so inexcusable that you may justly break off intercourse; and, by his being already self-condemned, you need not keep up intercourse with the intent of convincing him of his error; for of that his conscience will admonish him.'

— ἐξέστραπται—καὶ ἁμαρτάνει ὡς αὐτοκατάκριτος] I have explained ἐξστ. to signify, 'is utterly perverted, corrupted, and gone wrong.' And so it is understood by several of the most eminent Interpreters, ancient and modern. Thus they regard ἐξέστραπται as standing for διέστραπται: though they adduce no certain proof that that word was ever so used. For as to the passage of Ezek. xiii. 21, Sept., that affords no sure data. And, again, that of Dent. xxxii. 20 is not to the purpose, since there διέστ. merely means perverse, i. e. obstinately wrong, as the contrary to truth and righteousness. In consequence, then, of the want of authority for the above signification, I am now inclined to prefer the version adopted by other Expositors, εστραπ. equiv. to subvertens (lit. 'upturned'), meaning subverted in faith, hope, and every good gift. So Est. and Calv. explain the term, supposing here a metaphor taken from a house, which, if collapsed in some of its parts, may be repaired and renewed; but, if its foundations are upturned, there is no hope of restoration. And this opinion derives support from a passage of Hom. II. xvii. 58, βόθρου τ' ἐξίστριψε καὶ ἐξέταυσε ἐπὶ γαίῃ.

14. The scope of this verse seems to be, to engraft upon the Christian duty enjoined in the last, in σπουδ. πρόσ., ἵνα μὴδὲν αὐτοῖς λείπῃ, a general admonition, further illustrative of ver.

ἔργων προΐστασθαι εἰς τὰς ἀναγκαίας χρείας· ἵνα μὴ ὦσιν
 ἄκαρποι. <sup>15</sup> Ἀσπάζονται σε οἱ μετ' ἐμοῦ πάντες· ἄσπασαι τοὺς φιλοῦντας ἡμᾶς ἐν πίστει. <sup>16</sup> ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν. <sup>m 1 Cor. 16. 22.</sup>

Πρὸς Τίτον τῆς Κρητῶν ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον χει-ροτονηθέντα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Νικοπόλεως τῆς Μακεδονίας. <sup>Eph. 6. 24.
 1 Tim. 4. 22.
 Heb. 12. 26.</sup>

8, as to works of benevolence in general; and the words may be rendered, 'And withal, let our people (meaning the Christians) among you,—the Cretan Christians,—learn to exercise themselves carefully in goodly actions (i. e. works of benevolence), for the supply of necessary wants, that they may not be unfruitful.' This use of οἱ ἡμεῖς is very rare, and probably a colloquial idiom; it occurs, however, in Ignat. Smyrn. 11, and Polycl. Mart. 9, cited by Mr. Grinfield. On the expression προΐστασθαι see note supra v. 8. By καλὰ ἔργα must here be espec., if not solely, meant works of benevolence and charity; as appears from the context, and the very expression καλῶν ἔργων, occurring in a similar connexion at 1 Tim. vi. 18, and v. 10. Heb. x. 24, and elsewhere. The next words seem intended to show what was meant by καλῶν ἔργων here, and in some degree to qualify what had been said; the sense being, 'for the supply of necessary wants;' comp. Demosth., p. 668, αἱ ἀναγκαῖαι χρεῖαι. And that the ἐφόδια provided for travellers were sometimes so called, is plain from Acts xxviii. 10, καὶ ἀναγομένοις ἐπὶ θύαντο τὰ πρὸς τὴν χρεῖαν. So that Theophyl. (following Chrys.) well explains by ἐφοδιάσαι, κῆδεσθαι τῶν δευμένων, καὶ ἐν χρήμασι καὶ ἐν ῥήμασι, where, for ἐν ῥήμασι, read, as the sense requires, ἐν δόμασι. The words following suggest the reason why they should do this,—namely, 'that they may not fail in rendering such fruit as Gospel principles should yield.'

ΠΑΤΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΦΙΛΗΜΟΝΑ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

a Eph. 2. 1.
b 4. 1.
c 4. 30.
d Tim. 1. 8.
e Rom. 16. 5.
f Cor. 16. 12. Col. 4. 16, 17. Phil. 2. 26.

1<sup>a</sup> ΠΑΤΛΟΣ, δέσμιος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός, Φιλῆμονι τῷ ἀγαπητῷ καὶ συνεργῷ ἡμῶν, 2<sup>b</sup> καὶ

THIS Epistle is simply a brief letter, on a private, or personal matter, written to reconcile a Colossian named Philemon (who had, it seems from v. 10, been converted by Paul, prob. when he visited Phrygia) to his slave Onesimus, who had absconded, whether for crimes he had committed, or for some act of disobedience, and having come to Rome had been converted to the Christian faith, and baptized by St. Paul,—with whom he stayed some time, attending upon him with the greatest fidelity, and attached affection. In order, however, to repair the injury he had done his master, he was anxious to return to him; but was afraid that, on his return he would inflict (as the law allowed him) condign punishment for his misconduct; and St. Paul wrote this letter to entreat Philemon to pardon his offence, and receive him again into his service, not, indeed, as a slave, but as a servant and Christian brother; since he might now place entire confidence in him, as he was become a sincere Christian, and would in future conscientiously discharge his duties. Nay, in order to prevent all objection on the score of injury suffered, the warm-hearted Apostle offers to reimburse Philemon any loss he had sustained by him. It is of some importance to duly understanding the scope of the letter, and a due appreciation of the conduct of Paul, to determine whether the words of v. 18, in which ἡδίκησε is followed up by ᾔφελλει, refers to something stolen by Ones. from Philem., or to the wrong generally done to his master,—by depriving him of his services for a long time, and perhaps, by idleness and negligence while with him. The thing is not certain. However, I agree with Dr. Davidson, that since the words ἡ ᾔφελλει seem meant to further develop the idea in ἡδίκησε, and that considering the delicate nature of the language employed in the Epistle, the terms are too strong to denote injury by loss of service. It would seem to advert to some act of dishonesty committed by Ones., prob. at the time of his running away, in order to supply funds for travelling expenses, and until he should have a safe refuge and abode furnish temporary support. See the able note of Est., whose reasoning on this view is all but certain,—espec. since it is strongly supported by the skilful address employed by Paul in wording the letter so as to effect its design, in spite of the great difficulty encountered, by the accomplishment of the benevolent purpose of the writer. Accordingly, though the Epistle, containing, as it does, no regular statements of Christian doctrines, or practical exhortations, might seem of slender importance as a document presenting Christian truth, it is not without its usefulness, by suggesting weighty practical application; espec. since, as Dr. Davidson observes, it 'serves as a practical comment on Col. iv. 6, ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν—πάντε δαὶ ὑμῶς ἐν ἰκ. ἀποκρίνεσθαι, inasmuch as it is impossible to read it without being struck with the amiability, and generosity of spirit, which breathe through the letter.' Dr. Davidson is of opinion 'that true delicacy, fine address, consummate courtesy, nice strokes of rhetoric, render the letter a unique specimen of the epistolary style.' In the same tone, of unmeasured praise, Dr. Doddr. regards it, as also does Dr. D., as far superior to the celebrated Epistle of Pliny the younger to Sabinian (Epist. l. ix. 21), written on a similar occasion; though 'antiquity (Dr. Doddr. says) furnishes no example of the Epistolary style equal to that of the letter in question.' For my own part, I like not sweeping comparisons; and in a case like the present, there is a want of good taste in instituting them.—As to the time when the Epistle was written, there is much uncertainty. But Dr. Paley has gone far to prove it to have been written at the same period with the Epistle to the Colossians (but whether before or after that Epistle, is difficult to say), and committed to the same person, who conveyed that, and no doubt this at the same time, to Colosse. The writer was yet in confinement, but is supposed to have been nearly at the end of his first imprisonment.

1. δέσμιος X. 'I.] 'a prisoner for the sake

Ἀφίλα τῇ ἀγαπητῇ, καὶ Ἀρχίππῳ τῷ συστρατιώτῃ ἡμῶν, καὶ τῇ κατ' οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησίᾳ: <sup>3</sup> χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

<sup>4</sup> Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου, πάντοτε μνησάν σου ποιούμενος <sup>c</sup> Rom. 1. 8. Eph. 1. 16. Phil. 1. 3. Col. 1. 3. <sup>5</sup> ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου, <sup>d</sup> ἀκούων σου τὴν ἀγάπην καὶ τὴν πίστιν, ἣν ἔχεις πρὸς τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν καὶ εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους: <sup>e</sup> ὅπως ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεώς σου ἐνεργῆς γένηται <sup>1</sup> Thess. 1. 2. <sup>2</sup> Thess. 1. 3. <sup>3</sup> Tim. 1. 5. <sup>4</sup> Eph. 1. 15. Col. 1. 4. <sup>5</sup> Rom. 12. 12. <sup>6</sup> ἐν ἐπυγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν * ἡμῖν, εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. <sup>7</sup> † Χάριν γὰρ ἔχομεν πολλὴν καὶ παράκλησιν ἐπὶ τῇ ἀγάπῃ σου, ὅτι τὰ σπλάγγνα τῶν ἁγίων ἀναπέπνυται διὰ σοῦ, ἀδελφέ. <sup>8</sup> <sup>8</sup> Διὸ, πολλὴν ἐν Χριστῷ παρῆρησιαν ἔχων ἐπιτάσσει σοι τὸ <sup>9</sup> ἀνῆκον, <sup>9</sup> διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς <sup>1</sup> Thess. 2. <sup>2</sup> Cor. 10. 8. <sup>10</sup> Παῦλος πρεσβύτες, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ δέσμιος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. <sup>11</sup> <sup>10</sup> Παρακαλῶ σε περὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ τέκνου, ὃν ἐγέννησα ἐν τοῖς

of, or in the cause of, Jesus Christ; see 2 Tim. i. 8, and note.—συνηργῶν, lit. 'helper [in the cause of the Gospel]'; whether as Deacon, or preacher to the congregation assembling at his house is uncertain.

2. Ἀφίλα] Said by the ancients to have been the wife of Philemon. Archippus, they tell us, was his son, and a Deacon in the Church.

6. ὅπως ἡ κοιν., &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that here προσευχόμενος is to be supplied from προσευχῶν at ver. 4, 'praying that.'—ἡ κοιν. τῆς πίστεώς σου ἐνεργῆς γένηται, lit., 'that the communication of thy faith [by promoting its participation with others, in one community of faith, see Tit. i. 4] might become effective,' efficax, operatrix, as Jerome renders: and so Theophyl. explains, ἐμπρακτος, καὶ οὐ ῥῶσα, so as to continually produce its effects. The sense of these words is very obscure, but it may be that assigned by Conyb. 'In (causing) true knowledge of all the good which is in us for Christ and his service.' But I am not satisfied with any interpretation of the words that I have seen, nor can I offer any which satisfies myself.

7. χάρις] Six uncial, and ten cursive MSS., with Versions, Fathers, and early Editions have χαράν, which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., and Tisch. Ed. 1; but, I think, without sufficient reason; since external evidence for χαράν is not strong, the MSS. being of the Western recension, and abounding in corrections; whilst Versions are in a case of this kind so evidence, and the authority of Fathers very slight. With respect to the internal evidence, it is decidedly in favour of χάρις, as being the more difficult reading. On which grounds I imagine Tisch., in his 2nd Edit., has recalled χάρις. The Critics broached the emendation (as at 2 Cor. i. 15), because they did not perceive the true sense of χάρις, which is 'gratitude,' 'holy thankfulness of spirit,' as oft. in the N. T., e. g. Luke vi. 32, seqq. xvii. 9. Rom. vi. 17. 1 Cor. xv. 57. 2 Cor. ii. 14, et al.—ὅτι τὰ σπλάγγνα—σοῦ. These words are exegetical of the foregoing. Though a difference of opinion exists as to the sense of τὰ σπλάγγνα τῶν ἁγίων, which some, as Est., Casaub., and Menoch., understand of the persons themselves, with a notion of misery, calling for pity. Far more natural, however, is the interpretation of others, as Theophyl., Grot., Beza, and Scultet, the heart and mind, as at v. 20. This sense of σπλάγγνα oft. occ. in the N. T. Nor is it a mere Hebraism, ex. of it being adduced by the Commentators from Plut. de Virt. et Vit. § 2, to which I add Dionys. Hal. i. 518, 16, ἐν τοῖς σπλάγγνοις ἐνταυτῇ, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐνὶ στήθεσιν. Lycoph. Cass. 465, δυσμενεστάτου ξίνου 'ἔτυνε δάμαρ σπλάγγνον,' 'touched his heart.' Æschyl. Ag. 966, σπλάγγνα δ' οὐτε ματάζει. Πρὸς ἰνδοίκους φρασίην τελεσφόροις Δάλαις κεκοσμημένον κίαρ, where Herm. remarks, 'Σπλάγγνα explicat poets per κίαρ.'—Ἀναπίνυται, 'have been recreated, refreshed, solaced,' as v. 20. 2 Cor. vii. 13, a sense very rare in the Class. writers, the only ex. I know of being in Leges. Homerit. ap. Anecd. Gr. vol. v. p. 75, 3, τοὺς πίνυτας ἐθεράπειε τε καὶ ἱκανίστανα.

8, 9. διό] 'This being the case,' i. e. since you have shown so benevolent and liberal a spirit to Christians.—παρρ. ἔχων ἐν Χρ., i. e. 'such full authority as I might, by the authority of Christ and as his Apostle, use.' Of this sense of παρρῆσια (which seems required by the context) ex. occur in Jos. Antt. iv. 8, 12, and xv. 6, 7, ἐπαφῆς πόλιν sic τὴν Ἰουδαίαν πλείον τιμῇ καὶ παρρῆσιᾳ. Zosim. Hist. iii. 7. Of τὸ ἀνῆκον the meaning is, 'what is proper for you to do as a Christian.'—διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην. The full sense is, it would seem, 'because of the love [which subsists between us].'

9. τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς Παῦλος, &c.] q. d. 'cum talis sim, ut tibi imperare possim, magis tamen hortor tanquam senex, inquam, imo etiam vincit, hortor et obsecro te, certus preces meas apud te non fore irritas' (Weta.), who compares Andoc. in Alcibi., ὃ δὲ πάντων δεινότητον ἐστίν, τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς υἱοὺς τῷ δήμῳ, τοὺς λόγους ποιεῖται.—Πρεσβύτες, 'an old man.' 'There are (observes Heinr.) three claims on which he grounds his request: 1. as being an Apostle to whom Philemon was indebted; 2. as being an old man (and to such we should be loth to refuse a request); 3. as being a prisoner in the cause of the Gospel, i. e. "for the Gospel's sake."

10. ἐγέννησα] i. e. 'have converted to the δεσμοῖς μου, Ὀνήσιμον, <sup>11</sup> (τὸν ποτέ σοι ἄχρηστον, νυνὶ δὲ σοὶ καὶ ἐμοὶ εὐχρηστον.) ὃν ἀνέπεμψα· <sup>12</sup> σὺ δὲ αὐτὸν, τουτέστι τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα, προσλαβοῦ. <sup>13</sup> Ὁν ἐγὼ ἐβουλόμην πρὸς ἐμὰν τὸν κατέχειν, ἵνα ὑπὲρ σοῦ διακονῇ μοι ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· <sup>14</sup> ἢ χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης οὐδὲν ἠθέλησα ποιῆσαι, ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ ἀνάγκην τὸ ἀγαθόν σου ᾖ, ἀλλὰ κατὰ ἐκούσιον. <sup>15</sup> Τάχα γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο ἐχωρίσθη πρὸς ὦραν, ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃ· <sup>16</sup> οὐκέτι ὡς δούλον, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ δούλον, ἀδελφὸν ἀγαπητὸν, μάλιστα ἐμοί, πόσῳ δὲ μᾶλλον σοί, καὶ ἐν σαρκὶ καὶ

<sup>11</sup> Cor. 9. 7.

<sup>12</sup> Cor. 8. 12.

<sup>13</sup> 2 Cor. 8. 7.

<sup>14</sup> 1 Pet. 2. 2.

Christian faith; by a metaphor common both in the New Test. and the Rabbinical writers.—Several MSS. prefix ἐγὼ before ἐγέννησα, and are without μου: both which readings have been received by Lachm., and the latter by Tisch. But, as respects the former, it is founded on very incompetent authority, that of only three MSS.; and, as to the latter, the external authority for the presence of the μου is greatly superior to that which exists for its absence (six or seven MSS. being insufficient authority in the case of an omission), and it has, moreover, the support of the Pesch. Syr. Version. Internal evidence, too, is quite in its favour, considering that it was far more likely to have been left out, than put in.

11. τὸν ποτέ σοι—ἄχρηστον] On the admirable address shown in thus introducing the request to be made, see Benson. Ἀχρηστον is supposed by many Expositors to be used, per hōiōem, in the sense injurious; since from vv. 18, 19, it appears, they think, that Onesimus had robbed his master. See Introduction.

12. τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα] i. e. 'whom I love as if it were myself,' lit. 'my own bowels.' So the best Commentators explain, comparing Esth. vii. 3, and adducing several exx. from the later Class. writers of σπλάγχνα in the sense son; to which may be added another from Soph. Antig. 1053. Nor is the idiom without parallel in our own language, in which the expression 'my heart' is used of a person as an address of warm affection.—προσλαβοῦ, meaning, 'take him to thy confidence and protection;' as Acts xviii. 2. The word is, indeed, absent from A, F, G, and one cursive, and is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., but wrongly; since that it should have crept into all the MSS. except four; and two of them, F, G, duplicate copies, and all the Versions, from the Pesch. Syr. downwards, is incredible. That it should have been omitted by error of scribes in so few MSS. is very possible. It is, moreover, supported by the weighty authority of the Pesch. Syr. and the other ancient Versions, as also by that of Chrysost. both in his text and his commentary, where he notices the force and significance of the term thus: οὐκ εἰπὼν ἀποδέξαι—ἀλλὰ προσλαβοῦ, i. e. receive him to your society and friendship, as a brother in the faith. So Rom. xiv. 1 and 3. xv. 7, as also Acts xxviii. 2. To ascribe the omission, as Conyb. does, to St. Paul's 'abrupt and rapid dictation,' is quite unsatisfactory. Besides, it is plain from v. 19, that the Apostle wrote this letter with his 'own hand.'

13. ὃν ἐγὼ ἐβούλ. πρὸς ἐμ. κατέχ.] 'whom I was wishing, could have wished, to hold back, retain.' This is added to show the Apostle's decided opinion that he is son εὐχρηστον.—ὅτι σοῦ, not 'in thy stead;' for, as at ver. 19, the Apostle tells him that he even owes himself to him,—so that debt could not be better paid than by granting Onesimus to Paul in his place.—διακ. refers, not so much to 'the waiting on, as of a servant,' but to 'the kind offices' which a spiritual father had a right to expect from those whom he had begotten in the faith.

14. χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης] lit. 'apart from,' 'without thy consent [on the matter].' The Class. writers in this sense use ἀνεῖν, in preference to χωρὶς. So Hdtan. v. 1, ἐμοὶ δὲ σκοπὸς, μηδὲν τι πράττειν ἀνεῖν τῆς ὑμετέρας γνώμης. Xen. Mem. iv. sub fin., ἀνεῖν τῆς τοῦ προτέρου διαστότου γνώμης.—ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ, &c., 'that thy goodness [if thou chooseth to give him up to me] may not be as though it were (done) of necessity, but voluntary; or, taking ἀν in the sense suggested by Dr. Peile, 'that thy goodness [kind compliance with my request] might not be [as is the case when done after a compulsory fashion] of a compulsory and reluctant character.'

15. The Commentators remark on the euphemism in ἐχωρίσθη, which they render, 'was parted,' or 'separated from you;' and they suppose this meant to suggest the probability that the separation happened κατὰ θεῖαν οἰκονομίαν, by Divine Providence. Comp. Gen. xiv. 5. 1. 20. This could not indeed justify Onesimus' running away (Rom. iii. 8), but hence is magnified the gracious mercy of God, who had brought good out of evil. See more in Mackn. and Benson.—ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃ. Here there is, I conceive, a blending of two clauses into one, i. e. 'that thou mightest receive him back from me reformed, and thus to remain with thee for ever,' or perpetually. This view I find embraced by Dr. Peile, who, for this sensus pragmatice in ἀπέχῃ, refers to his note on Phil. iv. 18, and the exx. there given; to which add Luke vi. 24. The γὰρ has reference to some words omitted; q. d. '[However, regard what has happened as permitted by Divine Providence unto good,] for perhaps he was parted,' &c. This is not so much meant indirectly to engage that he shall not run away again, as to suggest another more stringent and affecting consideration; 'for if (as Dr. Burton observes) Onesimus had continued a heathen, Philemon might have had him as his servant for life, but after that they would have been separated; now they would be companions for ever, in this world and the next.'

16. καὶ ἐν σαρκὶ καὶ ἐν Κυρ.] meaning, 'both in his outward and his inward man.' See 2 Cor.

ἐν Κυρίῳ; <sup>17</sup> Εἰ οὖν ἐμέ ἔχεις κοινωνόν, προσλαβοῦ αὐτόν ὥς ἐμέ. <sup>18</sup> Εἰ δέ τι ἠδίκησέ σε ἡ ὀφείλει, τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει.
<sup>19</sup> ἐγὼ Παῦλος ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ, ἐγὼ ἀποτίσω ἵνα μὴ λέγω σοι ὅτι καὶ σεαυτὸν μοι προσοφείλεις. <sup>20</sup> Ναί, ἀδελφὲ, ἐγὼ σου ὀναίμην ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀνάπαντόν μου τὰ σπλάγχχνα ἐν <sup>k 2 Cor. 7.</sup>
† Κυρίῳ. <sup>21</sup> <sup>k</sup> πεποιθὼς τῇ ὑπακοῇ σου ἔγραψά σοι, εἰδὼς ὅτι <sup>14.</sup>
καὶ ὑπὲρ ὃ λέγω ποιήσεις. <sup>22</sup> <sup>1</sup> Ἄμα δὲ καὶ ἐτοίμαξέ μοι ξενίαν <sup>15.</sup>
<sup>16.</sup> <sup>17.</sup> <sup>18.</sup> <sup>19.</sup> <sup>20.</sup> <sup>21.</sup> <sup>22.</sup> <sup>23.</sup> <sup>24.</sup> <sup>25.</sup> <sup>26.</sup> <sup>27.</sup> <sup>28.</sup> <sup>29.</sup> <sup>30.</sup> <sup>31.</sup> <sup>32.</sup> <sup>33.</sup> <sup>34.</sup> <sup>35.</sup> <sup>36.</sup> <sup>37.</sup> <sup>38.</sup> <sup>39.</sup> <sup>40.</sup> <sup>41.</sup> <sup>42.</sup> <sup>43.</sup> <sup>44.</sup> <sup>45.</sup> <sup>46.</sup> <sup>47.</sup> <sup>48.</sup> <sup>49.</sup> <sup>50.</sup> <sup>51.</sup> <sup>52.</sup> <sup>53.</sup> <sup>54.</sup> <sup>55.</sup> <sup>56.</sup> <sup>57.</sup> <sup>58.</sup> <sup>59.</sup> <sup>60.</sup> <sup>61.</sup> <sup>62.</sup> <sup>63.</sup> <sup>64.</sup> <sup>65.</sup> <sup>66.</sup> <sup>67.</sup> <sup>68.</sup> <sup>69.</sup> <sup>70.</sup> <sup>71.</sup> <sup>72.</sup> <sup>73.</sup> <sup>74.</sup> <sup>75.</sup> <sup>76.</sup> <sup>77.</sup> <sup>78.</sup> <sup>79.</sup> <sup>80.</sup> <sup>81.</sup> <sup>82.</sup> <sup>83.</sup> <sup>84.</sup> <sup>85.</sup> <sup>86.</sup> <sup>87.</sup> <sup>88.</sup> <sup>89.</sup> <sup>90.</sup> <sup>91.</sup> <sup>92.</sup> <sup>93.</sup> <sup>94.</sup> <sup>95.</sup> <sup>96.</sup> <sup>97.</sup> <sup>98.</sup> <sup>99.</sup> <sup>100.</sup> <sup>101.</sup> <sup>102.</sup> <sup>103.</sup> <sup>104.</sup> <sup>105.</sup> <sup>106.</sup> <sup>107.</sup> <sup>108.</sup> <sup>109.</sup> <sup>110.</sup> <sup>111.</sup> <sup>112.</sup> <sup>113.</sup> <sup>114.</sup> <sup>115.</sup> <sup>116.</sup> <sup>117.</sup> <sup>118.</sup> <sup>119.</sup> <sup>120.</sup> <sup>121.</sup> <sup>122.</sup> <sup>123.</sup> <sup>124.</sup> <sup>125.</sup> <sup>126.</sup> <sup>127.</sup> <sup>128.</sup> <sup>129.</sup> <sup>130.</sup> <sup>131.</sup> <sup>132.</sup> <sup>133.</sup> <sup>134.</sup> <sup>135.</sup> <sup>136.</sup> <sup>137.</sup> <sup>138.</sup> <sup>139.</sup> <sup>140.</sup> <sup>141.</sup> <sup>142.</sup> <sup>143.</sup> <sup>144.</sup> <sup>145.</sup> <sup>146.</sup> <sup>147.</sup> <sup>148.</sup> <sup>149.</sup> <sup>150.</sup> <sup>151.</sup> <sup>152.</sup> <sup>153.</sup> <sup>154.</sup> <sup>155.</sup> <sup>156.</sup> <sup>157.</sup> <sup>158.</sup> <sup>159.</sup> <sup>160.</sup> <sup>161.</sup> <sup>162.</sup> <sup>163.</sup> <sup>164.</sup> <sup>165.</sup> <sup>166.</sup> <sup>167.</sup> <sup>168.</sup> <sup>169.</sup> <sup>170.</sup> <sup>171.</sup> <sup>172.</sup> <sup>173.</sup> <sup>174.</sup> <sup>175.</sup> <sup>176.</sup> <sup>177.</sup> <sup>178.</sup> <sup>179.</sup> <sup>180.</sup> <sup>181.</sup> <sup>182.</sup> <sup>183.</sup> <sup>184.</sup> <sup>185.</sup> <sup>186.</sup> <sup>187.</sup> <sup>188.</sup> <sup>189.</sup> <sup>190.</sup> <sup>191.</sup> <sup>192.</sup> <sup>193.</sup> <sup>194.</sup> <sup>195.</sup> <sup>196.</sup> <sup>197.</sup> <sup>198.</sup> <sup>199.</sup> <sup>200.</sup> <sup>201.</sup> <sup>202.</sup> <sup>203.</sup> <sup>204.</sup> <sup>205.</sup> <sup>206.</sup> <sup>207.</sup> <sup>208.</sup> <sup>209.</sup> <sup>210.</sup> <sup>211.</sup> <sup>212.</sup> <sup>213.</sup> <sup>214.</sup> <sup>215.</sup> <sup>216.</sup> <sup>217.</sup> <sup>218.</sup> <sup>219.</sup> <sup>220.</sup> <sup>221.</sup> <sup>222.</sup> <sup>223.</sup> <sup>224.</sup> <sup>225.</sup> <sup>226.</sup> <sup>227.</sup> <sup>228.</sup> <sup>229.</sup> <sup>230.</sup> <sup>231.</sup> <sup>232.</sup> <sup>233.</sup> <sup>234.</sup> <sup>235.</sup> <sup>236.</sup> <sup>237.</sup> <sup>238.</sup> <sup>239.</sup> <sup>240.</sup> <sup>241.</sup> <sup>242.</sup> <sup>243.</sup> <sup>244.</sup> <sup>245.</sup> <sup>246.</sup> <sup>247.</sup> <sup>248.</sup> <sup>249.</sup> <sup>250.</sup> <sup>251.</sup> <sup>252.</sup> <sup>253.</sup> <sup>254.</sup> <sup>255.</sup> <sup>256.</sup> <sup>257.</sup> <sup>258.</sup> <sup>259.</sup> <sup>260.</sup> <sup>261.</sup> <sup>262.</sup> <sup>263.</sup> <sup>264.</sup> <sup>265.</sup> <sup>266.</sup> <sup>267.</sup> <sup>268.</sup> <sup>269.</sup> <sup>270.</sup> <sup>271.</sup> <sup>272.</sup> <sup>273.</sup> <sup>274.</sup> <sup>275.</sup> <sup>276.</sup> <sup>277.</sup> <sup>278.</sup> <sup>279.</sup> <sup>280.</sup> <sup>281.</sup> <sup>282.</sup> <sup>283.</sup> <sup>284.</sup> <sup>285.</sup> <sup>286.</sup> <sup>287.</sup> <sup>288.</sup> <sup>289.</sup> <sup>290.</sup> <sup>291.</sup> <sup>292.</sup> <sup>293.</sup> <sup>294.</sup> <sup>295.</sup> <sup>296.</sup> <sup>297.</sup> <sup>298.</sup> <sup>299.</sup> <sup>300.</sup> <sup>301.</sup> <sup>302.</sup> <sup>303.</sup> <sup>304.</sup> <sup>305.</sup> <sup>306.</sup> <sup>307.</sup> <sup>308.</sup> <sup>309.</sup> <sup>310.</sup> <sup>311.</sup> <sup>312.</sup> <sup>313.</sup> <sup>314.</sup> <sup>315.</sup> <sup>316.</sup> <sup>317.</sup> <sup>318.</sup> <sup>319.</sup> <sup>320.</sup> <sup>321.</sup> <sup>322.</sup> <sup>323.</sup> <sup>324.</sup> <sup>325.</sup> <sup>326.</sup> <sup>327.</sup> <sup>328.</sup> <sup>329.</sup> <sup>330.</sup> <sup>331.</sup> <sup>332.</sup> <sup>333.</sup> <sup>334.</sup> <sup>335.</sup> <sup>336.</sup> <sup>337.</sup> <sup>338.</sup> <sup>339.</sup> <sup>340.</sup> <sup>341.</sup> <sup>342.</sup> <sup>343.</sup> <sup>344.</sup> <sup>345.</sup> <sup>346.</sup> <sup>347.</sup> <sup>348.</sup> <sup>349.</sup> <sup>350.</sup> <sup>351.</sup> <sup>352.</sup> <sup>353.</sup> <sup>354.</sup> <sup>355.</sup> <sup>356.</sup> <sup>357.</sup> <sup>358.</sup> <sup>359.</sup> <sup>360.</sup> <sup>361.</sup> <sup>362.</sup> <sup>363.</sup> <sup>364.</sup> <sup>365.</sup> <sup>366.</sup> <sup>367.</sup> <sup>368.</sup> <sup>369.</sup> <sup>370.</sup> <sup>371.</sup> <sup>372.</sup> <sup>373.</sup> <sup>374.</sup> <sup>375.</sup> <sup>376.</sup> <sup>377.</sup> <sup>378.</sup> <sup>379.</sup> <sup>380.</sup> <sup>381.</sup> <sup>382.</sup> <sup>383.</sup> <sup>384.</sup> <sup>385.</sup> <sup>386.</sup> <sup>387.</sup> <sup>388.</sup> <sup>389.</sup> <sup>390.</sup> <sup>391.</sup> <sup>392.</sup> <sup>393.</sup> <sup>394.</sup> <sup>395.</sup> <sup>396.</sup> <sup>397.</sup> <sup>398.</sup> <sup>399.</sup> <sup>400.</sup> <sup>401.</sup> <sup>402.</sup> <sup>403.</sup> <sup>404.</sup> <sup>405.</sup> <sup>406.</sup> <sup>407.</sup> <sup>408.</sup> <sup>409.</sup> <sup>410.</sup> <sup>411.</sup> <sup>412.</sup> <sup>413.</sup> <sup>414.</sup> <sup>415.</sup> <sup>416.</sup> <sup>417.</sup> <sup>418.</sup> <sup>419.</sup> <sup>420.</sup> <sup>421.</sup> <sup>422.</sup> <sup>423.</sup> <sup>424.</sup> <sup>425.</sup> <sup>426.</sup> <sup>427.</sup> <sup>428.</sup> <sup>429.</sup> <sup>430.</sup> <sup>431.</sup> <sup>432.</sup> <sup>433.</sup> <sup>434.</sup> <sup>435.</sup> <sup>436.</sup> <sup>437.</sup> <sup>438.</sup> <sup>439.</sup> <sup>440.</sup> <sup>441.</sup> <sup>442.</sup> <sup>443.</sup> <sup>444.</sup> <sup>445.</sup> <sup>446.</sup> <sup>447.</sup> <sup>448.</sup> <sup>449.</sup> <sup>450.</sup> <sup>451.</sup> <sup>452.</sup> <sup>453.</sup> <sup>454.</sup> <sup>455.</sup> <sup>456.</sup> <sup>457.</sup> <sup>458.</sup> <sup>459.</sup> <sup>460.</sup> <sup>461.</sup> <sup>462.</sup> <sup>463.</sup> <sup>464.</sup> <sup>465.</sup> <sup>466.</sup> <sup>467.</sup> <sup>468.</sup> <sup>469.</sup> <sup>470.</sup> <sup>471.</sup> <sup>472.</sup> <sup>473.</sup> <sup>474.</sup> <sup>475.</sup> <sup>476.</sup> <sup>477.</sup> <sup>478.</sup> <sup>479.</sup> <sup>480.</sup> <sup>481.</sup> <sup>482.</sup> <sup>483.</sup> <sup>484.</sup> <sup>485.</sup> <sup>486.</sup> <sup>487.</sup> <sup>488.</sup> <sup>489.</sup> <sup>490.</sup> <sup>491.</sup> <sup>492.</sup> <sup>493.</sup> <sup>494.</sup> <sup>495.</sup> <sup>496.</sup> <sup>497.</sup> <sup>498.</sup> <sup>499.</sup> <sup>500.</sup> <sup>501.</sup> <sup>502.</sup> <sup>503.</sup> <sup>504.</sup> <sup>505.</sup> <sup>506.</sup> <sup>507.</sup> <sup>508.</sup> <sup>509.</sup> <sup>510.</sup> <sup>511.</sup> <sup>512.</sup> <sup>513.</sup> <sup>514.</sup> <sup>515.</sup> <sup>516.</sup> <sup>517.</sup> <sup>518.</sup> <sup>519.</sup> <sup>520.</sup> <sup>521.</sup> <sup>522.</sup> <sup>523.</sup> <sup>524.</sup> <sup>525.</sup> <sup>526.</sup> <sup>527.</sup> <sup>528.</sup> <sup>529.</sup> <sup>530.</sup> <sup>531.</sup> <sup>532.</sup> <sup>533.</sup> <sup>534.</sup> <sup>535.</sup> <sup>536.</sup> <sup>537.</sup> <sup>538.</sup> <sup>539.</sup> <sup>540.</sup> <sup>541.</sup> <sup>542.</sup> <sup>543.</sup> <sup>544.</sup> <sup>545.</sup> <sup>546.</sup> <sup>547.</sup> <sup>548.</sup> <sup>549.</sup> <sup>550.</sup> <sup>551.</sup> <sup>552.</sup> <sup>553.</sup> <sup>554.</sup> <sup>555.</sup> <sup>556.</sup> <sup>557.</sup> <sup>558.</sup> <sup>559.</sup> <sup>560.</sup> <sup>561.</sup> <sup>562.</sup> <sup>563.</sup> <sup>564.</sup> <sup>565.</sup> <sup>566.</sup> <sup>567.</sup> <sup>568.</sup> <sup>569.</sup> <sup>570.</sup> <sup>571.</sup> <sup>572.</sup> <sup>573.</sup> <sup>574.</sup> <sup>575.</sup> <sup>576.</sup> <sup>577.</sup> <sup>578.</sup> <sup>579.</sup> <sup>580.</sup> <sup>581.</sup> <sup>582.</sup> <sup>583.</sup> <sup>584.</sup> <sup>585.</sup> <sup>586.</sup> <sup>587.</sup> <sup>588.</sup> <sup>589.</sup> <sup>590.</sup> <sup>591.</sup> <sup>592.</sup> <sup>593.</sup> <sup>594.</sup> <sup>595.</sup> <sup>596.</sup> <sup>597.</sup> <sup>598.</sup> <sup>599.</sup> <sup>600.</sup> <sup>601.</sup> <sup>602.</sup> <sup>603.</sup> <sup>604.</sup> <sup>605.</sup> <sup>606.</sup> <sup>607.</sup> <sup>608.</sup> <sup>609.</sup> <sup>610.</sup> <sup>611.</sup> <sup>612.</sup> <sup>613.</sup> <sup>614.</sup> <sup>615.</sup> <sup>616.</sup> <sup>617.</sup> <sup>618.</sup> <sup>619.</sup> <sup>620.</sup> <sup>621.</sup> <sup>622.</sup> <sup>623.</sup> <sup>624.</sup> <sup>625.</sup> <sup>626.</sup> <sup>627.</sup> <sup>628.</sup> <sup>629.</sup> <sup>630.</sup> <sup>631.</sup> <sup>632.</sup> <sup>633.</sup> <sup>634.</sup> <sup>635.</sup> <sup>636.</sup> <sup>637.</sup> <sup>638.</sup> <sup>639.</sup> <sup>640.</sup> <sup>641.</sup> <sup>642.</sup> <sup>643.</sup> <sup>644.</sup> <sup>645.</sup> <sup>646.</sup> <sup>647.</sup> <sup>648.</sup> <sup>649.</sup> <sup>650.</sup> <sup>651.</sup> <sup>652.</sup> <sup>653.</sup> <sup>654.</sup> <sup>655.</sup> <sup>656.</sup> <sup>657.</sup> <sup>658.</sup> <sup>659.</sup> <sup>660.</sup> <sup>661.</sup> <sup>662.</sup> <sup>663.</sup> <sup>664.</sup> <sup>665.</sup> <sup>666.</sup> <sup>667.</sup> <sup>668.</sup> <sup>669.</sup> <sup>670.</sup> <sup>671.</sup> <sup>672.</sup> <sup>673.</sup> <sup>674.</sup> <sup>675.</sup> <sup>676.</sup> <sup>677.</sup> <sup>678.</sup> <sup>679.</sup> <sup>680.</sup> <sup>681.</sup> <sup>682.</sup> <sup>683.</sup> <sup>684.</sup> <sup>685.</sup> <sup>686.</sup> <sup>687.</sup> <sup>688.</sup> <sup>689.</sup> <sup>690.</sup> <sup>691.</sup> <sup>692.</sup> <sup>693.</sup> <sup>694.</sup> <sup>695.</sup> <sup>696.</sup> <sup>697.</sup> <sup>698.</sup> <sup>699.</sup> <sup>700.</sup> <sup>701.</sup> <sup>702.</sup> <sup>703.</sup> <sup>704.</sup> <sup>705.</sup> <sup>706.</sup> <sup>707.</sup> <sup>708.</sup> <sup>709.</sup> <sup>710.</sup> <sup>711.</sup> <sup>712.</sup> <sup>713.</sup> <sup>714.</sup> <sup>715.</sup> <sup>716.</sup> <sup>717.</sup> <sup>718.</sup> <sup>719.</sup> <sup>720.</sup> <sup>721.</sup> <sup>722.</sup> <sup>723.</sup> <sup>724.</sup> <sup>725.</sup> <sup>726.</sup> <sup>727.</sup> <sup>728.</sup> <sup>729.</sup> <sup>730.</sup> <sup>731.</sup> <sup>732.</sup> <sup>733.</sup> <sup>734.</sup> <sup>735.</sup> <sup>736.</sup> <sup>737.</sup> <sup>738.</sup> <sup>739.</sup> <sup>740.</sup> <sup>741.</sup> <sup>742.</sup> <sup>743.</sup> <sup>744.</sup> <sup>745.</sup> <sup>746.</sup> <sup>747.</sup> <sup>748.</sup> <sup>749.</sup> <sup>750.</sup> <sup>751.</sup> <sup>752.</sup> <sup>753.</sup> <sup>754.</sup> <sup>755.</sup> <sup>756.</sup> <sup>757.</sup> <sup>758.</sup> <sup>759.</sup> <sup>760.</sup> <sup>761.</sup> <sup>762.</sup> <sup>763.</sup> <sup>764.</sup> <sup>765.</sup> <sup>766.</sup> <sup>767.</sup> <sup>768.</sup> <sup>769.</sup> <sup>770.</sup> <sup>771.</sup> <sup>772.</sup> <sup>773.</sup> <sup>774.</sup> <sup>775.</sup> <sup>776.</sup> <sup>777.</sup> <sup>778.</sup> <sup>779.</sup> <sup>780.</sup> <sup>781.</sup> <sup>782.</sup> <sup>783.</sup> <sup>784.</sup> <sup>785.</sup> <sup>786.</sup> <sup>787.</sup> <sup>788.</sup> <sup>789.</sup> <sup>790.</sup> <sup>791.</sup> <sup>792.</sup> <sup>793.</sup> <sup>794.</sup> <sup>795.</sup> <sup>796.</sup> <sup>797.</sup> <sup>798.</sup> <sup>799.</sup> <sup>800.</sup> <sup>801.</sup> <sup>802.</sup> <sup>803.</sup> <sup>804.</sup> <sup>805.</sup> <sup>806.</sup> <sup>807.</sup> <sup>808.</sup> <sup>809.</sup> <sup>810.</sup> <sup>811.</sup> <sup>812.</sup> <sup>813.</sup> <sup>814.</sup> <sup>815.</sup> <sup>816.</sup> <sup>817.</sup> <sup>818.</sup> <sup>819.</sup> <sup>820.</sup> <sup>821.</sup> <sup>822.</sup> <sup>823.</sup> <sup>824.</sup> <sup>825.</sup> <sup>826.</sup> <sup>827.</sup> <sup>828.</sup> <sup>829.</sup> <sup>830.</sup> <sup>831.</sup> <sup>832.</sup> <sup>833.</sup> <sup>834.</sup> <sup>835.</sup> <sup>836.</sup> <sup>837.</sup> <sup>838.</sup> <sup>839.</sup> <sup>840.</sup> <sup>841.</sup> <sup>842.</sup> <sup>843.</sup> <sup>844.</sup> <sup>845.</sup> <sup>846.</sup> <sup>847.</sup> <sup>848.</sup> <sup>849.</sup> <sup>850.</sup> <sup>851.</sup> <sup>852.</sup> <sup>853.</sup> <sup>854.</sup> <sup>855.</sup> <sup>856.</sup> <sup>857.</sup> <sup>858.</sup> <sup>859.</sup> <sup>860.</sup> <sup>861.</sup> <sup>862.</sup> <sup>863.</sup> <sup>864.</sup> <sup>865.</sup> <sup>866.</sup> <sup>867.</sup> <sup>868.</sup> <sup>869.</sup> <sup>870.</sup> <sup>871.</sup> <sup>872.</sup> <sup>873.</sup> <sup>874.</sup> <sup>875.</sup> <sup>876.</sup> <sup>877.</sup> <sup>878.</sup> <sup>879.</sup> <sup>880.</sup> <sup>881.</sup> <sup>882.</sup> <sup>883.</sup> <sup>884.</sup> <sup>885.</sup> <sup>886.</sup> <sup>887.</sup> <sup>888.</sup> <sup>889.</sup> <sup>890.</sup> <sup>891.</sup> <sup>892.</sup> <sup>893.</sup> <sup>894.</sup> <sup>895.</sup> <sup>896.</sup> <sup>897.</sup> <sup>898.</sup> <sup>899.</sup> <sup>900.</sup> <sup>901.</sup> <sup>902.</sup> <sup>903.</sup> <sup>904.</sup> <sup>905.</sup> <sup>906.</sup> <sup>907.</sup> <sup>908.</sup> <sup>909.</sup> <sup>910.</sup> <sup>911.</sup> <sup>912.</sup> <sup>913.</sup> <sup>914.</sup> <sup>915.</sup> <sup>916.</sup> <sup>917.</sup> <sup>918.</sup> <sup>919.</sup> <sup>920.</sup> <sup>921.</sup> <sup>922.</sup> <sup>923.</sup> <sup>924.</sup> <sup>925.</sup> <sup>926.</sup> <sup>927.</sup> <sup>928.</sup> <sup>929.</sup> <sup>930.</sup> <sup>931.</sup> <sup>932.</sup> <sup>933.</sup> <sup>934.</sup> <sup>935.</sup> <sup>936.</sup> <sup>937.</sup> <sup>938.</sup> <sup>939.</sup> <sup>940.</sup> <sup>941.</sup> <sup>942.</sup> <sup>943.</sup> <sup>944.</sup> <sup>945.</sup> <sup>946.</sup> <sup>947.</sup> <sup>948.</sup> <sup>949.</sup> <sup>950.</sup> <sup>951.</sup> <sup>952.</sup> <sup>953.</sup> <sup>954.</sup> <sup>955.</sup> <sup>956.</sup> <sup>957.</sup> <sup>958.</sup> <sup>959.</sup> <sup>960.</sup> <sup>961.</sup> <sup>962.</sup> <sup>963.</sup> <sup>964.</sup> <sup>965.</sup> <sup>966.</sup> <sup>967.</sup> <sup>968.</sup> <sup>969.</sup> <sup>970.</sup> <sup>971.</sup> <sup>972.</sup> <sup>973.</sup> <sup>974.</sup> <sup>975.</sup> <sup>976.</sup> <sup>977.</sup> <sup>978.</sup> <sup>979.</sup> <sup>980.</sup> <sup>981.</sup> <sup>982.</sup> <sup>983.</sup> <sup>984.</sup> <sup>985.</sup> <sup>986.</sup> <sup>987.</sup> <sup>988.</sup> <sup>989.</sup> <sup>990.</sup> <sup>991.</sup> <sup>992.</sup> <sup>993.</sup> <sup>994.</sup> <sup>995.</sup> <sup>996.</sup> <sup>997.</sup> <sup>998.</sup> <sup>999.</sup> <sup>1000.</sup>

iv. 6 seqq. Eph. iv. 18. Col. iii. 3. 1 Pet. iii. 4; and see Kuttin. and Dr. Peile.

17. εἰ οὖν ἐμὶ ἔχεις—[ἐμὶ] The best Commentators are agreed that κοινωνός here (like the Hebr. חֵן in Prov. xxviii. 24, and Isa. i. 23) signifies a friend; q. d. 'If I am worthy of participating in your confidence as a friend.'—Προσλαβοῦ αὐτόν ὡς ἐμὶ, 'show this confidence to Onesimus, and receive him as thou wouldst me, with kindness.'

18. εἰ δέ τι ἠδίκησέ σε ἡ ὀφείλει On the true sense of these words, which is not a little disputed, I have treated in my Introduction to this Epistle.—τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει, lit. 'reckon that in the account between us as an item for me to pay.' See my Lex. in v. The word does not occur in the Class. writers; but it has been found in the prop. sense in an Inscription (Boeckh, Gr. Inscr., p. 850), μὴ ἰλλογομένους ταῖς μετρήσεσιν ἀπάσαις μῆτι ριθθῶν, μῆτι δσα (scil. μέρι) τραχία δντα καὶ μὴ δυνάμυνα γιωργαῖσθαι, &c.—To advert to a variety of reading. For ἐλλόγει Lachm. and Tisch. edit ἐλλόγα, from seven MSS.; but on insufficient grounds; for no certain proof is there of such a word as ἐλλόγας (for the λογίω of Lucian, Lexiph. 15, is a fictitious term, coined in ridicule by Lucian); while ἐλλόγιω, though exceedingly rare, occurs in the above passage, and in Rom. v. 13, where, however, the Alex. MS. has ἐλλογάτω, meaning ἐλλογᾶται, for the t. rec. ἐλλογεῖται. But, as Lachm. and Tisch. did not receive the verb there, they ought not, in consistency, to have done so here. In fact, in both places the reading was a mere error of the scribes, who very often confounded u and a, on which errors see East. Comment. Palaeogr. on Gregor. de Dial., pp. 623, 652, 706.

19. ἐγὼ Παῦλος ἔγρα. τ. ἰ. χ.] q. d. 'For greater certainty, take my engagement: I, Paul, now inditing this letter, [do hereby] write with my own hand, I will repay it.' Comp. οἰκτιόχειρος ἀσφάλεια in Pschym. vi. 26.—ἵνα μὴ λέγω σοι ὅτι καὶ σεαυτὸν μοι προσοφείλεις. This seems meant to rouse Philemon's sense of shame at being yet in debt (lit. 'in arrears of debt'; see my note on Thucyd. vii. 48, 5) to his spiritual father; and thus to stir him up to a desire, in some way or other, to discharge the debt (knowing that the generous mind is, in the words of Aristot. Eth., p. 175, οἷος εὖ ποιεῖν—εὐεργετούμενος δὲ αλοχύνεται.—καὶ ἀντενεργητικὸς πλειόνων [ἴσσι] οὕτως γὰρ προσοφειλήσει ὁ ὑπάρξας, καὶ ἴσται εὖ πεποιθὼς), and what that wish shall be the Apostle most delicately intimates, and engagingly urges upon Philemon. See Calvin's able note.

20. ναί—Κυρίῳ] 'Do (you), brother, grant that I may enjoy this from thee, as from one in the Lord' (i. e. as from thy conversion). Of the next clause, the sense seems to be, 'gratify my heart in this matter connected with the religion of Christ.' See note supra v. 7. For Κυρίῳ not a few ancient MSS., most of the early Versions, and many Fathers, have Χριστῷ, which has been edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., but whether rightly may be doubted; such being, perhaps, a mere alteration of the Alexandrian Critics, to remove tautology, and suggested by a similar expression at Phil. i. 8, ὡς ἐπιτιθεῖς πάντας ἡμᾶς ἐν σπλάγχχοις 'I. X. Moreover, Κυρίῳ is in exact accordance with the invariable usage of St. Paul, who often employs the phrase ἐν Κυρίῳ to signify 'in the work of the Lord and the Gospel' (as Rom. xvi. 8, 13. ix. 2. Eph. vi. 21. 1 Thess. v. 12), never ἐν Χριστῷ, except in 1 Cor. iv. 17; and even there three uncials have Κυρίῳ. Upon the whole, however, I admit that the reading here is an open question. As to the distinction laid down by Dr. Peile, that ἐν Κυρίῳ refers espec. to 'a man's conversion to Christianity,' and ἐν Χριστῷ to 'his regenerate state of salvation and grace, in his visible Church,' the laying down such canons, on a writer like Paul, is alea periculosa plenum opus, and never to be depended on.

21. πεποιθὼς τῇ—σοὶ] Render: 'In reliance on thy ready obedience I have written unto thee [as I have].—ὕπακ., Benson, Wakef. and Abp. Newc., render 'compliance'; and so several Commentators explain: but this quite mars one of the many refined strokes in this brief Epistle, which is ably pointed out by Est. thus: 'Hic rursus πιστός ac, quamvis precibus agat cum Philemone, posse tamen precipere: id enim includit obedientia nomen. Ac si diceret: Obedientia tua mihi probe cognita facit ut plane confidam me impetraturum id, quod his literis flagito: quoniam etsi precarerem, obedires. This was seen also by Chrys.; and so Theophyl. remarks, οἷα ἐπιτάττω φρονίῳ οὐδὲ ἀνταδιδέχουμνος ἔργα σοι, ἀλλὰ θαρρῶν τῇ ὑπακοῇ σου. Hyper., too, was quite aware of this, as his masterly note will show. 'What stone,' exclaims Chrys., 'would not such language soften?' And yet, observes Est., 'orationem adhuc αἰσῶ,' in the subsequent words, εἰδὼς—ποιήσεις, q. d. 'well knowing (from experience of thy obedience) that thou wilt do even more than I say.' It is strange that Expositors should not have seen that Paul points at Philemon's permitting Onesimus to resume his duties ministrations and attentions to the comfort of their common spiritual father,—inasmuch as Paul half expresses that wish by implication supr. 13, δὲ ἐγὼ ἰβουλόμην πρός ἐμ. κατέχειν.

22. ἄμα δὲ καί] Dr. Peile thinks that this must be connected with the request at v. 20. But why should it not be connected with vv. 12, 13, and 20? q. d. 'I have yet another request to m Col. 1. 7.

3x 4. 13.

n Acts 12.

12. 35.

3x 15. 27.

3x 19. 26.

3x 20. 4.

3x 27. 2.

Col. 4. 10, 14.

2 Tim. 4. 10.

11.

1 Pet. 5. 13.

ἐλπίζω γὰρ ὅτι διὰ τῶν προσευχῶν ὑμῶν χαρισθήσομαι ὑμῖν.

23 <sup>m</sup> Ἀσπάζονται σε Ἐπαφρᾶς, ὁ συναιχμαλώτός μου ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, Μάρκος, <sup>24</sup> <sup>a</sup> Ἀρίσταρχος, Δημᾶς, Λουκᾶς, οἱ συνεργοί μου. 25 Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Φιλήμονα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης διὰ Ὀνησίμου οἰκέτου.

make of thee—that thou wouldst get ready for me a lodging; either, as Mackn. thinks, ‘a house’ [rather ‘furnished apartments’] (where he might receive all who might resort unto him), or an apartment—(a sort of prophet’s upper chamber) in Philemon’s house. Comp. Eurip. Alcest. 365, καὶ δῶμ’ ἐτοίμαζ’, ὥς συνοικήσουσά μοι, where μοι is meant both for ἐτοίμαζις and συνοικ. The formula δμα δὲ καὶ occurs also in 1 Tim. v. 13, but no where else in Scripture, nor, I believe, in the Class. writers; though δμα τε καὶ occasionally occurs in good writers, from Homer downwards.

23. I agree with Conyb., that Epaphras is here styled by Paul his ‘fellow-bondsman,’ only because he had taken up his residence with him in the lodgings where he was held in durance by the soldiers that kept him. This is far more prob. than Dr. Benson’s view, adopted by Dr. Peile.

ΠΑΤΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΕΒΡΑΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

Ι. <sup>1</sup> ΠΟΛΥΤΕΡΩΣ καὶ πολυτρόπως πάλαι ὁ Θεὸς λα- <sup>a Num. 12.</sup>
λήσας τοῖς πατράσιν ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, ἐπ' <sup>b & c</sup> * ἐσχάτου τῶν <sup>d Joel 2. 28.</sup>

WE are now arrived at a Book, on the nature and character of which, and espec. on the writer, there has been more discussion than on all of the other Books of the New Test., putting aside the Apocalypse. Here five points have espec. to be attended to. 1. What may be considered the nature of this Book? Is it to be called an Epistle, or what? 2. To whom was it addressed? 3. In what language was it written? 4. By whom was it written? 5. What was the occasion of its being written, and what is the scope of its contents? Now, from the forms of salutation usually found in the Epistles being here wanting, some have doubted whether it can be regarded as an Epistle, sent to some one Christian community, or whether a Discourse on some important topics, intended for the instruction of Christian readers in general. But the objections to its claim to be regarded as an Epistle have been quite over-ruled; and by the able reasoning of several eminent Critics, it has been established that the composition in question, though it be without some of the usual characteristics of an Epistle, yet is essentially an Epistle; being at least an address combined with dissertatory and argumentative matter, in order to give the appeal to the Jewish brethren greater effect;—though, for reasons adverted to by Prof. Stuart, not avowedly such. That it was meant espec. for some Christian community in particular, is plain. Thus, for instance, we have the pronoun ye, and that in conjunction with some particular circumstances connected with the persons so addressed; nay, even a visit is mentioned, as promised to them, and various salutations are sent. As to the question to whom it was addressed, it is inscribed to the Hebrews; though the learned are not agreed whether by those are to be understood Hebrews in general, Christian and non-Christian, or whether the former only; and if so, whether Hebrew Christians in Palestine, or in Asia Minor, or in Greece, or in Spain. These and other questions have been fully and ably discussed by Prof. Stuart, from whose researches it seems pretty certain that the opinion of the ancient Greek Church, adopted by Beza, Calvin, Hyper., Bp. Pearson, and nearly all the most eminent Critics, almost up to the present day, is the one entitled most to reception,—namely, that the Epistle was principally intended for the Hebrew Christians in Palestine, who bore the appellation Hebrews by way of distinction from the Foreign Jews, who were called Hellenists. But whether it was meant for the Church or Churches of Palestine in general, or some Church in particular (as that of Jerusalem, or that of Caesarea), must, I apprehend, after all that has been said, be left undecided; and prob. it may have been, in some measure (like the Epistle of St. James), meant for the Jewish Christians in foreign countries as well as those in Palestine, and was therefore written in Greek, though even on that point a difference of opinion exists. The Fathers of the Greek Church generally, some of the Latin (as Jerome and Augustine), and a few eminent modern Critics, maintain that it was originally written in Hebrew, and afterwards translated into Greek by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement of Rome; while the modern Critics and Commentators in general maintain that it was written in Greek. For the former opinion the chief reason alleged is, that, since the Epistle was addressed to Hebrew Christians, it was proper that it should be written in Hebrew. But surely there were, as we have seen, reasons why it would be as proper to be written in Greek. Those, on the other hand, who contend for the Greek original, establish their opinion on various points of internal evidence arising from the composition itself: 1. since the work has all the freedom and spirit of an original, and Hebraisms are in it not so frequent as in the Septuagint Version. 2. That Hebrew names are interpreted. 3. That the passages cited from the Old Test. are not quoted from the Hebrew, but from the Septuagint. These arguments, however, are not all of them equally cogent; for as to the first, can any work have more of the air of an original than Josephus's History of the Jewish War? And yet we know that it was translated from a Hebrew original. Other arguments are employed by Prof. Stuart. But those arguments only tend b Ps. 2. 8.

Matt. 21. 42.

John 1. 3.

Eph. 1. 10.

Gal. 4. 4.

Col. 1. 16.

e Ps. 110. 1.

Wisd. 7. 22.

John 1. 4.

14. 9.

2 Cor. 4. 4.

Col. 1. 15, 17.

Phil. 2. 6.

ch. 3. 1.

2. 12, 13.

2. 12.

Rev. 4. 11.

ch. 7. 17.

ἡμερῶν τούτων ἐλάλησεν ἡμῖν ἐν Τίφ<sup>2</sup> ὃν ἔθηκε κληρονόμος πάντων, (δὶ οὐ καὶ τοὺς αἰῶνας ἐποίησεν) <sup>3</sup> ὃς,—ὢν ἀπα-

to show the expediency of a Greek, but do not disprove the expediency of a Hebrew original; and as the weight of historical testimony (in the Greek and early Latin Fathers) is most decidedly in favour of a Hebrew original, it would seem to be the best mode of reconciling conflicting testimony, of removing various difficulties (such as may be urged, whichever hypothesis, of a Greek or of a Hebrew original, be adopted), and accounting for various phenomena, to suppose that here (as in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel and Josephus's History of the Jewish War), there were, in a certain sense, two originals, both coming from the author himself, and therefore equally entitled to the name of an original. Nor will it be of much importance to ascertain which was first; but if we inquire which, in all probability, preceded, there are, I apprehend, as many reasons why we should here assign the priority to the Greek, as, in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel, we ought to the Hebrew—reasons founded on internal evidence, as supplied from the nature and state of the composition itself. Besides which, the Greek would be more likely to be first called for, and at all times would be of more extensive circulation and utility. As to supposing, with several ancient Critics, that the Greek was a translation formed from the Hebrew by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement, such probably originated merely in report or surmise, or was perhaps suggested by the desire to account for the dissimilarity supposed to exist between the style and manner of this Epistle and those of the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul. It is probable that the Hebrew was formed either contemporaneously with, or a very short time after, the Greek, and was, we may suppose, drawn up for the especial use of those Palestine Jews who, being of the less educated class, or living in the country, did not understand Greek; though intended, I imagine, also for those Jews out of Palestine, who were called the Eastern Dispersion; i. e. those who sojourned in the parts beyond the Euphrates, as Mesopotamia, Babylonia, Media, Parthia, Elamitis, &c. Now these were not likely to understand Greek, but would probably have a tolerable knowledge of the Syro-Chaldee, into which the Old Test. was now already translated, as appears from the Targums (i. e. Chaldee Versions) of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel. Now the existence of these Chaldee or Syro-Chaldee Versions, formed at or before this period, proves the existence of a very extensive class of persons, prob. both in and out of Judea,—i. e. of the Eastern Dispersion,—who did not understand Greek, and therefore could not read the Septuagint Version; which, indeed, was at first intended alone for the Foreign Jews of the Western Dispersion; though, from the circumstance of the Greek language becoming prevalent in Judea, it at length proved useful to the educated class there.

With respect to the date and canonical authority of the Epistle, the former is established by Prof. Stuart, on good grounds, both external and internal; and the latter, by actual testimony the most weighty and decisive. That it was written while the Temple at Jerusalem and the Jewish state were yet in being, is plain from the work itself; and yet that it was written in the latter part of the Apostolic age, is evident from various intimations (see v. 12. x. 32. xiii. 7, 17); and the external evidence for its canonical authority is almost of equal strength, from its being found in the Pesch. Syr. Version, and from a chain of quotations and attestations from the early Fathers, Clement, Barnabas, and others down to the close of the second century; where, as Prof. Stuart observes, 'the question of the Canonical credit of the Epistle intermingles itself with the question whether St. Paul was the writer of the Epistle.' And this naturally leads us to the most important, though, at the same time, the most difficult question connected with the Epistle—namely, Who was the writer? Now some have ascribed it to St. Luke, or Barnabas; others, to Clement of Rome, or Silvanus, or Apollos. However, the Christian Church in general has ever ascribed it to St. Paul. Indeed, as to Barnabas, Clement, Silvanus, Apollos, and Luke, there is no external authority to prove any one of them to be the writer; and internal testimony is very slender, nay, as regards Luke and Clement, quite adverse. Internal testimony is not wanting in favour of Apollos, but it only amounts to this—that if the matter depended wholly upon internal evidence, we might indeed say that there is something in the Epistle but what seems agreeable to the character and talents ascribed in the New Test. to Apollos. Yet this kind of evidence cannot be admitted where external evidence is entirely wanting (as is the case here), and where internal evidence of a still stronger kind may be alleged in proof of some other writer, and where external authority of the strongest kind is combined with that internal. And this leads us to advert to the evidence for the opinion which has generally prevailed in the Christian Church, that this Epistle was written by St. Paul. On so very extensive a question, to enter into details would be unsuitable to a work of this nature. I must therefore content myself with briefly adverting to the leading features of the evidence, external and internal, referring the reader for further particulars to Prof. Stuart's Introduction to his Translation, with notes, of this Epistle. Now the evidence for the Pauline origin is of two kinds,—external and internal. As to the external evidence, it seems adverted to as the production of St. Paul by St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, iii. 15, 16; for there is great reason to suppose that this Epistle was the one which St. Peter had chiefly in view. See note on 2 Tim. iii. 15. 2. The Epistle is found in the most ancient of the Versions, Eastern and Western; as, for instance, the Pesch. Syr. of the 2nd century, and the nearly as ancient Latin Version called Italic. 3. The testimony of Ecclesiastical antiquity is quite in favour of the Pauline origin; the Greek Fathers almost universally ascribing it to St. Paul, as also many of the most eminent of the Latin. 'Now,' as observes Prof. Stuart, 'the early testimony is, of course, immeasurably the most important; and there seems to be sufficient evidence that this was as general and uni-

γασμα τῆς δόξης καὶ χαρακτῆρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, φέρων τε τὰ πάντα τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ,—δι' ἑαυτοῦ καθαform, for the first century after the Apostolic age, as in respect to many other Books of the New Test., and more so than in respect to several. So that it is apparent that the weight of evidence from tradition is altogether preponderant in favour of the opinion that Paul was the author of this Epistle.

Let us now advert to internal evidence for the Pauline origin. I. Paul cherished a great affection for his kinsmen according to the flesh (Rom. ix. 1—4); and is it probable that he should never write to them, and endeavour to remove their prejudices and their unbelief? II. If a writer's method of treating his subject, together with his manner of reasoning, be a sure mark by which he may be recognized, then St. Paul must be allowed to be the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews; for, in the first place, the general arrangement or method pursued in this, corresponds with that found in the confessedly Pauline Epistles; and in the second, we here find that superabundance of meaning expressed in very few words, which distinguishes St. Paul from the other sacred writers; and thirdly, many things in this Epistle show its writer to have been not only 'mighty in the Scriptures,' but perfectly conversant with the customs, practices, opinions, traditions, expositions, and applications of Scripture then received in the Jewish Church. III. Not only does the general scope of this Epistle tend to the same point on which St. Paul so much dilates in his Epistles (namely, that we are justified and saved alone through Jesus Christ, and that the Mosaic institutions cannot accomplish that); but there are various doctrinal propositions in this Epistle which are found in the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul; 1. As to the degree of religious knowledge imparted by the Gospel; 2. as to the views displayed in the Gospel concerning God the Father, and the communication of the gifts of the Holy Spirit; 3. concerning the person and mediatorial office of Christ. IV. There is such a similarity between the modes of quotation, and style of phraseology of this Epistle, and those which occur in the Epistles confessedly by St. Paul, as evince this to be his production, those being: 1. modes of quotation and interpretation of some passages of the Hebrew Scriptures, which are peculiarly Pauline, because only to be found in the writings of St. Paul; 2. instances of coincidence in the style and phraseology: of these Schmidt, De Groot, and Stuart adduce a considerable number: add to this, that agonic figures, which are frequent in St. Paul, are found in the Epistle to the Hebrews (xii. 1—3, 4, 12); 3. coincidences between the exhortations in this Epistle and those confessedly Pauline; 4. similarity of the conclusion of this Epistle to the conclusions of St. Paul's Epistles. V. There are several circumstances towards the close of this Epistle which prove that it was written by St. Paul; see xiii. 23, 24. x. 34. Now is it possible that these coincidences can be the effect of mere accident? Is it not, rather, far more probable that Paul was the writer of this Epistle?

The foregoing sketch presents the outlines of the Professor's argument on the internal evidence, adduced for the Pauline origin of the present Epistle, on the nature and weight of which evidence I would offer a few remarks. First, the evidence as regards the circumstances, is, in a few respects, inconclusive, and in all is not so strong as that deduced from similarity of doctrines, &c.; and yet even similarity of doctrines and method would not, of itself, be sufficient to prove this to be the production of St. Paul; for such are not inconsistent with its being from the pen of Apollon. The evidence arising from similarity of diction would seem likely to be decisive; but here it must be acknowledged that a considerable part of the passages adduced by the defenders of the Pauline origin are not sufficiently definite to absolutely prove coincidence; while a few passages that are so (as will be seen by the subsequent Annotations) have been inadvertently passed over. One thing, however, is certain, from the learned researches of De Groot and Stuart,—namely, that the points of similarity and coincidence are far more numerous than those of dissimilarity; though these last have been hunted out by the indefatigable diligence of a whole phalanx of German Critics for the last fifty years. It must, however, after all, be confessed, that the internal evidence for the Pauline origin is less strong than the external. It is, indeed, of the nature of all internal evidence in favour of the authenticity of any composition (I mean, that a work came from the pen of any certain writer) to be less satisfactory than that which is against it; for while, in the latter case, internal evidence may be so strong as to prove the point almost to demonstration, in the former case it can rarely rise much beyond a high probability that the work was from the writer in question. And as no internal evidence can prove a book to be genuine, when external evidence is decidedly against it; so no internal evidence short of that strongest kind, proceeding from what involves anachronism, can prove a work to be spurious, or not written by any author, when external testimony decidedly attests that it was. Yet, sometimes, internal evidence that a composition is by a certain writer, may, if his style, manner, and cast of thought be very peculiar, prove so strong, that a person possessed of a true taste and correct judgment may feel such a persuasion that the composition is by that writer, as to rise to what he thinks certainly. Here, however, we have to encounter the perplexing fact,—that while the cast of thought and modes of reasoning are decidedly Pauline, yet the colourings of style, and especially the composition of the sentences, are not so; though that difference may be partly attributable to the difference of subject in this Epistle, which was intended as a treatise rather than an hortatory letter; and being didactic, would consequently be written with far greater deliberation than most of the Epistles confessedly Pauline appear to have been, and would have more of the finish of style and composition than those. At all events, the coincidence in the former particulars is of by far the most importance; and I must say that the feeling of my own mind as to the composition now in question, after repeated and most attentive examinations of its contents, is that none but St. Paul could ῥισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν [ἡμῶν], ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ

 τῆς μεγαλωσύνης ἐν ὑψηλοῖς <sup>d</sup> τοσοῦτῃ κρείττων γενόμενος

have written it, and consequently that none but St. Paul did write it. That he did, is all but certain; for in it we have all the peculiar and prominent features of St. Paul's style and manner,—the same method of treating his subject, the same fullness of thought, the same devotional spirit, the same warmth of feeling, and the same energy of expression, which characterize his other Epistles. Can all this be the case, and yet the Epistle be not by St. Paul?

But if so satisfactory be the proof as to its Pauline origin, how, it may be asked, comes it to pass that learned Continental Critics for the last half century have almost unanimously rejected it? To this I reply, that the wonder is much lessened by considering the strong bias of the persons in question against old established opinions. Of course they take their stand on the internal evidence, founding thereupon various objections (for the most part exceedingly frivolous), which have, however, been so fully refuted by Prof. Stuart, that only a few remarks in addition can be necessary. The Critics, who contend against the Pauline origin, rest their proof chiefly on the allegation, that the Greek of this Epistle is so much superior to that of the Epistles admitted to be by St. Paul, that the composition in question cannot have been his. But is that great superiority a matter of fact? I think not. After a study of the Greek language as diligent, and an acquaintance with its writers, of every age, probably as extensive, as any person, at least of my own country, now living, I am decidedly of opinion that the Greek is, except as regards the structure of the sentences, NOT so decidedly superior to the Greek of St. Paul, as to make it even improbable that the Epistle was written by him. At any rate, certain it is, that, though arguments drawn from the style and diction of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as compared with those of the Epistles admitted to be written by St. Paul, would not of themselves be enough to prove the Pauline origin; so, on the other hand, the same kind of arguments, if even far stronger than they are, never can decide the Epistle to be not written by St. Paul. And this latter needs the aid of external and historical evidence even more than the former. Moreover, those who maintain that the Epistle was not written by St. Paul, are quite unsuccessful in showing who was the author; for objections of the most serious kind lie against any name that has been or can be brought forward. That it was written by Barnabas, or by St. Luke, there is not a shadow of evidence; for Clemens Romanus, or Silvanus, the evidence is very slight; and for Apollos, the external or historical evidence is next to nothing; and the internal only such as to induce us to grant that he might be the writer, if historical testimony would allow it; but it does not. And one cannot imagine that, if Apollos had been the writer, all attestation to the fact would have thus wholly lost. It is plain, therefore, that this, as well as the preceding hypothesis, is utterly untenable. Of this, indeed, Seyffarth and Kuinoel are quite aware; yet, sooner than admit the Pauline origin, they have devised another hypothesis even less admissible than the foregoing,—namely, that the Epistle was written by an anonymous Alexandrian Jew. But what can be imagined more improbable than that the work of an anonymous writer, and an obscure person, should, in the space of 30 years after it was written (the time of Clement of Rome, who appeals to it as a book of Divine authority), or not very long after, when the Peach. Syr. Version was formed, have come to be regarded as an inspired work, and received into the Canon of Scripture, though no works had been admitted to a place there, but such as were confessedly written by Apostles? This argument, indeed, holds good, more or less, of Clemens, Silvanus, and Apollos, but much more of an anonymous writer. Besides, as the writer evidently was well known to those whom he especially addressed, how could it happen that he should not be more generally known? On the other hand, the almost universal persuasion in the earliest age that the Epistle was written by St. Paul can hardly be accounted for, except on the supposition that it was. Indeed (to use the words of Prof. Stuart), 'if Paul did not write it, who did? And what is to be gained by endeavouring to show the possibility that some other person wrote it, when so many circumstances unite in favour of the general voice of the primitive ages, that this Apostle was the author? That the Church, during the first century of the apostolic age, ascribed it to some one of the Apostles, is clear, from the fact that it was inserted among the canonical books of the Churches in the East and the West; that it was comprised in the Peckin, in the old Latin Version, and was certainly admitted by the Alexandrian and Palestine Churches? Now what Apostle did write it, if Paul did not? Surely neither John, nor Peter, nor James, nor Jude. The difference of style is too striking between their Epistles and this, to admit of such a supposition. But what other Apostle, except Paul, was distinguished in the ancient Church as a writer? None; and the conclusion, therefore, seems to be altogether a probable one, that he was the writer.' In short, I must, with Prof. Stuart, entirely acquiesce in the judgment of Origen (which certainly attests the opinion to have been of the highest antiquity), that 'it is not without reason that the ancients have handed down to us, that this Epistle is St. Paul's.'—Thus far in my former Editions. On again carefully reconsidering the subject for this ninth Edition, I continue to be substantially of the same opinion; and I have only to subjoin, from my recent Supplementary Volume, the following matter, which will tend, I trust, to bring this long agitated question to a satisfactory adjustment.

My exertions in support of the Pauline origin of this Epistle have been, since I wrote, strengthened by the aid of three able coadjutors,—the Rev. Charles Forster, On the Apostolical Authority of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the erudite Dr. Routh, and the learned Canon Tate, in his Cont. Hist. App. G; where he treats at large, 1) on the Epistle to the Hebrews itself; and, 2) on the two persons who might have been the bearers of it. As to the first, he unhesitatingly avows that he receives the Epistle to the Heτῶν ἀγγέλων, ὅσῳ διαφορώτερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν <sup>9 3 Sam. 7.</sup>

 ὄνομα. <sup>14.</sup> 5 Ἐν τίνι γὰρ εἶπε ποτὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων Τίός μου εἶ σὺ, <sup>1 Chron. 22.</sup>
<sup>10.</sup> & 22. 6. Ps. 2. 7. Acta 12. 25. ch. 5. 5.

brows as essentially stamped with the Apostolic authority of St. Paul himself. 'That it should (he goes on to say) wear so much the character of an argumentative Discourse, and so little present that of an Epistle, is the natural consequence of its immediate object.—to reason on the high mission and Divine nature of our blessed Lord, with the Hebrew Christians, from their own Sacred Books; to which persons, however, generally speaking, Paul had become more or less obnoxious, as being the Apostle of the Gentiles, and the assertor of their evangelical liberty.' In adverting to the notion (first briefly started by Luther, and lately much favoured on the continent) that Apollos was the author of this Epistle, he remarks, that 'if any man but St. Paul could be the author of the Epistle, or if the hand of any other man could be employed to write it under his direction, Apollos was peculiarly qualified for that purpose; and that a guiding inspiration might be given to such a writer [so employed], who can doubt?' Now that it may possibly have been written by Apollos, but under the immediate direction of Paul, and with continual suggestion of arguments from the Scriptures to him who was 'mighty in the Scriptures,' I am not prepared to deny. But, granting that this hypothesis sufficiently ensures Apostolical authority to the Epistle (which it scarcely does, for if Divine inspiration was necessary to Apollos in drawing it up, it would seem that the Epistle might as well be called Apollos as Paul's), this bringing in of Apollos has not, as far as I can find, the slightest countenance from any ancient authority. Barnabas is mentioned by Tertullian; but he stands alone; and we have no reason to think that Barnabas had the pen of a ready writer. There is stronger authority, resting on Euseb. and Jerome, for Clemens Romanus; but they do not speak with much confidence; and they mix up the hypothesis adopted by Clem. Alex. of its being originally written in Hebrew by Paul, and translated into Greek, with all that finish of composition which it has, by Clemens. But there is no sufficient evidence for this, and no reason to think that Clemens was equal to Greek composition of so high an order. Far greater attention is due to the opinion of those who think that it was written by the hand of Luke, but under the dictation of St. Paul, in such a way as to vindicate the substance, and doctrinal authority, to Paul, but give up the writing and composition to St. Luke. This opinion was long ago adopted (as the result of extensive discussion) by Estius, in his Introduction to this Epistle. His words are these:—'Quare, cum aliis, omnino dicendum arbitramur, subjectum sive materiam (the subject-matter) totius Epistolæ, simul et ordinem a Paulo fuisse subministratum; sed compositionem esse cujusdam alterius ejus operâ Paulus utendum putaverit.' He then proceeds to adduce Bede and Bellarmine, as among the modern maintainers of this view, and of the ancients, Euseb., H. E. iii. 32; Augustin, and Jerome, de Script. Eccles.; and, lastly, Origen ap. Euseb. vi. 19; where (says Est.) 'the learned Father, after having spoken of the style and characteristics of the Epistle in terms agreeing with those above used by himself (Est.), concludes in the following words:—Ego constanter affirmo sensus esse Apostoli, phrasim autem et constructionem verborum alterius cujusdam—velut dictata ex præceptoris ore scribentis. Proinde si quæ Ecclesia istam habeat Epistolam, eam ipse approbet ut Pauli, idque hanc ratione persuasa: non enim temerè veteres eam Pauli esse tradiderunt.' Est. is entirely of opinion that St. Luke (as being the favourite companion and fellow-labourer of St. Paul) was the likeliest person to be employed on such a service as the one in question; and, in confirmation that he was, he adduces the argument that there are not a few terms (of which he adduces examples) in this Epistle which are peculiar to it and Luke's Gospel and Acts, but scarcely to be found in the other books of Scripture. The learned Commentator then proceeds to develop more fully the view he thinks best to take on the origin of this important Epistle. 'What I maintain (says he) is, Verba esse Pauli tum quoad sententiam et res, ut dictum est ab ipso subministratas, atque earum ordinem ac dispositionem generalem, tum verò quia totam Epistolam alieno stylo concinnatam, sed suis sensibus plenissime respondentem, ipse tanquam suam approbavit ac misit; adeo ut fateamur non solum Paulum in materiâ et ordine præscribendo, totâque Epistolâ postquam scripta fuit approbandâ, a Spiritu Divino motum fuisse, verum etiam mentem et manum ejus qui composuit (sc. S. Lucæ) ab eodem Spiritu fuisse gubernatam, ut non alia nec aliter scriberet, quam oportet: haud secus atque factum est in aliis, qui sacros libros scripserunt.' The most weighty ancient authority for this view is the passage of Origen ap. Euseb., cited by Estius, though it seems unknown to even the best-informed of theological writers on this subject since his time; which may have arisen from the passage being adduced by Estius somewhat imperfectly, only in the Latin Version, and, what is worse, with a false reference. After no little trouble, I have succeeded in finding it in the original Greek of Origen, at l. vi., cap. 25, of Euseb. H. E., p. 295, ed. Reading. Est. has, I find, very well expressed the sense of the passage, as far as he took it,—except that he did not fully open out the force of the terms ἀποκηρυχθέντων and σχολιογραφούν, inasmuch as those terms do not imply that the words written by St. Luke were only those pronounced vivâ voce by St. Paul, which would make St. Luke no more than a scribe, which evidently it could not be Origen's intention to intimate, since the view that he takes in the preceding context (which ought to have been also adduced by Estius) is, that 'the thoughts and sentiments are Paul's, the phraseology and composition Luke's, or whoever was the writer.' Origen probably was of opinion that the substance, or subject-matter, was (as Clem. Alex. thought) dictated by Paul in the Syro-Chaldee, but expressed by the writer in Greek; the Greek (not necessarily Pauline) which he thought most suitable to the subject and the occasion, as addressed to learned Hellenists. However, the view taken by Estius,—and by him alone fully

f Pa. 97. 7.
Rom. 8. 26.
Col. 1. 15.

ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε; καὶ πάλιν Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται μοι εἰς υἱόν; 61 Ὅταν developed and carefully guarded from all misconstruction,—is preferable. And who was so likely to have been selected for so important a purpose as the one in question, or who could so well fulfil the wishes of the Apostle as Luke the Evangelist, whose Gospel had been formed under the Apostle's eye, and with his continual co-operation? Nor will it follow that, because some small degree of dissimilarity may be traced between the style of the writer of the Acts and that of the Epistle to the Hebrews, that Luke was not the writer; for, as Est. remarks, 'aliam dictionem historia postulat, aliam disputationem ad persuadendum suscepta de magnis et profundis fidei mysteriis;' nor is the difference greater than between Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians and those to the Romans, Galatians, and Thessalonians. The above view of Origen and Estius sufficiently vindicates the Pauline origin of the Epistle—at least, virtually and essentially—while it furnishes a ready solution of the many difficulties which beset the doctrine of the Pauline origin in its literal and most unqualified sense. But if St. Luke be regarded as the framer of the Epistle—as we have it, the most probable date for its composition will be the period (at the end of A. D. 63, or the early part of 64) when the Apostle, towards the close of his earthly course, and during the latter part of his final imprisonment at Rome, was left (as we learn) with Luke alone; which would afford a fit opportunity for Paul, by the welcome aid of his old companion and fellow-labourer, to make a last effort to rouse his Hebrew brethren to reconsider their views, and come to a truer sense of the august doctrines promulgated in this noble composition, without their prejudices being awakened by the name of the addresser. I am happy in being enabled to add, that the foregoing solution of this puzzling question (promulgated by me in my Supplementary Volume) has since been confirmed by the suffrage of Dr. Davidson, whose judgment was formed on an independent course of research. The conclusions to which he comes, after a most elaborate discussion of the materials, for and against, on the case, are expressed in the following decided, but not overcharged representation of the matter: 'The reasons are strong for maintaining that Paul was [virtually] the author, and that Luke did not translate the Epistle from one language into another. Yet this does not militate against the notion that Luke had a part in putting the thoughts and words of Paul into their present form. What was the nature of the service he rendered, it is impossible to discover. How far he polished the style cannot be known. He co-operated with the Apostle in making it what it now appears. We are thus brought to substantially the conclusion which recommended itself to Origen in ancient, and to Lardner, Hug, and Stier in modern times.' He concludes, by removing an objection, which, having never been satisfactorily obviated, has caused many to stumble at the Pauline origin;—namely, how shall we account for the fact, that there was so much diversity among the early Fathers, and Churches, as to the writer of this Epistle? To this the answer (as satisfactory as the want of complete historical data admits) is this,—'the majority of the early Christians attributed it to the Apostle. When first written, it was doubtless sent to some one Church, as the concluding verses clearly prove. That Church, as we shall see, was prob. that at Jerusalem, the centre of the influence which the Epistle was meant to reach. It would, therefore, be well known as the Apostle's production in that place, and the knowledge be diffused round about in an always widening circle, as the existence and contents of the letter were spoken of. Hence the majority of the early Christians received it as Paul's. Hence, too, the Eastern Churches generally admitted it as his. But many doubted, or denied, its Pauline origin because the Apostle's name was not openly attached to it, as it is to his other writings. Perhaps he refrained from prefixing his name, that he might not unnecessarily excite an unfavourable prepossession among his readers by a knowledge of its origin. A few who were judges of style may have hesitated to receive it as Paul's, solely on account of its dissimilarity in that respect to his other writings; or they may have been confirmed in their previous doubts of its Pauline origin by that circumstance; but the many who did not acknowledge it as Paul's were not commonly influenced by diction and style. The Western Christians denied its Pauline origin, because at a distance from the place to which it was originally addressed. The Easterns, who were nearer, took an opposite view. Surely the latter had better means of knowing the true state of the case.—To advert briefly to the scope and contents of the Epistle. 'Its great object is to show the Deity of Jesus Christ, and the excellency of his Gospel, when compared with the institutions of Moses; to prevent the Hebrews or Jewish converts from relapsing into those rites and ceremonies which were now abolished; and to point out their total insufficiency, as means of reconciliation and atonement. The reasonings are interspersed with numerous solemn and affectionate warnings against apostasy and exhortations,—addressed to different descriptions of persons,—to continue steadfast in the faith; which serves to introduce an impressive discourse on the nature, efficacy, and triumph of faith, by which all the saints in former ages had been accepted by God, and enabled to suffer severe, and perform noble exploits in defence of their holy religion; from which he takes occasion to finally exhort them to steadfastness and perseverance in the true faith as it is in Jesus.'

I. The general design of the writer being so to commend Christianity to those whom he addressed, as to confirm them in their adherence thereto, or induce them to embrace it, if they had not yet done so, he commences his discourse by first raising in their minds the highest conceptions of JESUS CHRIST, as the Author of that new revelation which God had made to man (ver. 1). He then points out the dignity of his office and person, as Lord of the world, which was created by him (ver. 2); representing him as being the true image of God, the representative to men of his glory, and accordingly endowed

δὲ πάλιν εἰσαγάγῃ τὸν Πρωτότοκον εἰς τὴν οἰκουμένην, λέγει·
Καὶ προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ.

with Sovereign power (ver. 3); that, as Mediator of the new Dispensation, he is exalted far above the angels, the mediators of the old Covenant; that in his name SON, he has an appellation far more exalted than theirs (vv. 4, 5); nay, that he is the object of worship to the angels, while they are only God's messengers (vv. 6, 7). That in his quality of King and Messiah he has an eternal dominion; and is elevated by his love of righteousness to an honour above all other kings (vv. 8, 9), being, indeed, addressed in Scripture as Creator of the Universe, immutable, imperishable (vv. 10—12); an exaltation never ascribed to angels (ver. 13),—who are only considered as agents employed for the good of those who are to attain to the salvation which Christ accomplishes (ver. 14).

Vv. 1—3, inasmuch as they develop the fundamental idea of the Epistle, form a sort of Introduction to the subsequent matter from v. 4 onwards. Of these three verses, the first sounds forth, as it were, the key-note to the whole discourse; and the revelation of God in his Son is opposed to the revelations of God by the Prophets,—the former as infinitely higher, so as to be such κατ' ἐξοχήν. Expositors are not agreed whether the commencing words πολυμ. and πολυτρόπ. should be kept distinct in sense, or be connected as synonymous, and designating, by intensity, the great variety of the ancient revelations; q. d. as Kypke explains, 'per varias personas, variis legibus et doctrinis, sub variis umbris ac typis, figuris variis ac revelandis modis.' This latter view would seem confirmed by certain passages adduced from Maxim. Tyr., and Philo, where we have πολυμερῶς καὶ πολυτρόπως and πολυμερῶς καὶ πολυτρόπου. Yet thus the difficulty is merely shifted, not done away; for there the terms surely admit of being kept distinct in sense, and they are best kept distinct here. But πολυμερῶς cannot mean, as many explain, 'at various times.' Its most probable sense is that of Calv. and Hyper., 'in sundry or diverse parts,' or 'ways' (so Joa. Antt. viii. 3, 9, of Solomon's temple, ταῦτα πάντα πολυμερῶς κατεσκεύασε, and Plut. de Invid. c. v., πολ. ἐξημέρωφωσι); the diverse dislosures in question being, as Dr. Henderson (Lect. on Insp.) observes, 'effected not only in various parts or portions, according to the various exigencies of the Church,—a considerable period of time frequently intervening between them;—but being furnished by means or in ways greatly differing from each other.' In πολυτρόπως we have, as Dr. Henderson says, expressed the idea of multiplicity as well as diversity; the term being meant to denote the various modes of Divine revelation, by dreams, visions, symbols, Urim and Thummim, and prophetic ecstasy. That Tholuck and others should pronounce that the 'words are used merely for the sake of amplification,' is a proof of the blindness of semirationalistic views, using cracked Criticism, and perverted Philology, as its agents. I agree with Prof. Ebrard, that λαλεῖν properly denotes 'oral communication between man and man,' and not only, as here, 'the utterances of God in revelation,' but other modes of communication, as dreams, visions, &c. Of course by πατέρες are meant 'the ancestors,' generally, of the generation in Paul's time.—ἐν stands here for διὰ, denoting instrument; an Hellenistic idiom, formed on Hebr. ב, 'by,' or 'through.'—προφ. here, as often, denotes those who communicate the Divine will. At ver. 2, instead of the t. rec. ισχύτων, very many MSS. (to which I add all the Lamb. and most of the Mus. copies, including Cov. 4, omitted by Mill), early Editions, and Fathers have ισχύτων, which has been adopted by every Editor of note; and with reason; espec. as it is confirmed by the occurrence of the very expression in the Sept. at Numb. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xxxviii. 16. Jerem. xxiii. 20; though ισχύτων elsewhere occurs. Moreover, ισχύτων is to be preferred, as being the more difficult reading. With respect to the sense of the expression ἐν ἰσχύτων, it generally imports, 'at some future time' more or less remote, according to the context and scope of the passage. When the times of the Messiah are spoken of, the expressions ἰσχυαὶ ἡμεῖς, ἰσχυαὶ καιρὸς, or χρόνος, and τὸ ἰσχυαὶ τῶν ἡμερῶν, mean the last times; since then an end would be put to the Mosaic Dispensation by the coming of the Messiah. Thus the expression ἰσχ. ἡμ. was occasionally applied by the Apostles to denote the time shortly previous to the advent of Christ to judgment at the end of the world. Sometimes, however, it was employed to denote the period of the Gospel, the last dispensation of God, even that of Jesus Christ in the Gospel. And such seems to be its import here.—To advert to ἐν Ἰγῷ, this use of Ἰγῷ without the Art. does not, as Prof. Stuart thinks, tend to invalidate Bp. Middleton's theory of the Greek Article. In a note on Matt. i. 1, and iv. 3, he shows that, by a licence arising out of the nature of Θεός, we may write either ὁ Ἰγὼς τοῦ Θεοῦ, or Ἰγὼς Θεοῦ; but he has, I believe, no where noticed the peculiar usage before us of Ἰγὼς Ἰγὼς Θεοῦ, which is indeed exceedingly rare, yet again occurs at ch. v. 8, and vii. 28. Had he done so, however, he would have found no difficulty in reconciling it with his theory; since he would have seen that Ἰγὼς may, in this use, be considered (like Χριστός put for ὁ Χριστός τοῦ Θεοῦ) as an appellation converted into a sort of proper name, and consequently entitled to the same licence, which we find to be the case in Χριστός; very rarely, indeed, in the Gospels and Acts, but frequently in the Epistles. Mr. Green, however, Gr. N. T. Dial., p. 182, classes this passage with those where the Article, which might rightly be prefixed, is withheld, to promote prominence, or point; espec. in cases where there is a contrast, as here, and at vii. 28. The Apostle's especial concern is, he thinks, with the nature and attributes (without calling attention to the inherent meaning of the Title of the Son of God), in order to impress on his readers his Divine Sonship, and consequently (which is the leading idea of the Epistle) his immeasurable superiority, in virtue thereof, to all preceding persons bearing a Divine commission. The rendering, 'as Mr. Green observes, 'should prob. be, "By a Son," or "By One who is his Son;"' implying that God no longer addressed them by a prophet, a mere οἰκίτης, but by One who had the nature and dignity of a Son. There is the same contrast vii. 28, ὁ νόμος γὰρ ἀνθρώπων ("mere creatures") καθίστηεν ἀρχιερεῖς, ἔχοντας ἀσθένειαν, Ἰλὸν ("God's Son") ἐν τὸν αἰῶνα τεταλειωμένον ("endued with everlasting perfection").—ἐν ἱθὺς κληρονόμον πάντων. The term κληρονόμον was used for κύριον, to hint at something further; on which see Theophyl. Of κληρονόμος πάντων the full sense is, 'Lord of all things in the world by inheritance,' in virtue of his Sonship just mentioned. So κληρονόμος κόσμου is used at Rom. iv. 13. Comp. v. 3; and see Bp. Bull. Jud. Cath. Eccl. ch. v. § 8, p. 42.—δὲ οὖν. Here Kuin. justly rejects the Version of Grot. and others, 'on account of whom'; since δὲ οὖν, and δὲ ἐν, are no where confounded, but kept distinct, in this Epistle. Indeed, the sense thus arising would be inapposite, and the thing asserted be contradictory to what is said repeatedly in the New Test., as John i. 3. 1 Cor. viii. 6. Eph. iii. 9. Col. i. 16, 17; from which it appears that the words must be understood of a physical, or efficient creation by Christ; as all the ancient Fathers are agreed. So Just. Mart. has ὅς τοὺς οὐρανοὺς ἐκτίσας. By τοὺς αἰῶνας is meant (as at xi. 3, and perhaps 1 Tim. i. 17) 'the whole system of creation, the material universe' (as, indeed, the Pesch. Syr. Translator renders), comprehending all created things in the heavens and on earth, corporeal and incorporeal, and thus answering to the πάντα of John i. 3. This sense of αἰῶν (found also at Wisd. iv. 2. xiii. 9. xiv. 6) is confined to the plural, being formed by the Alexandrian Jews on the Hebr. עוֹלָמוֹ. See more in my Lex. in v. αἰῶν.

Ps. 104. 4. 7 Καὶ πρὸς μὲν τοὺς ἀγγέλους λέγει· Ὁ ποιῶν τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ πνεύματα, καὶ τοὺς λειτουργοὺς αὐτοῦ

3. ἀπαύγασμα.—[ὑπόστασις.] Render: 'the effulgence, by emanation, of his glory,' meaning, as in our Liturgy, 'Light of Light'; or rather, 'Light from Light' (according to the ancient Latin Liturgy), 'and the exact image of his substance, or essence.' Δόξα corresponds to the Hebr. כְּבוֹד, and, like it, is used espec. of the Divine Majesty of the Deity. And thus the sense here intended is, as Dr. Pye Smith explains, that 'the Redeemer is the true and proper representative of the Infinite Perfection of the Deity.' The term ἀπαύγασμα (which signif. lit. 'off-shining') denotes properly 'the light reflected from a lucid body'; but it is here used figur. in the sense of εἰκών; intimating that he is that to the Divine Father, which the solar light incident on our world is to the same light as the source of its emanation. So Philo, vol. i. p. 337, has τὸ δὲ ἀγίασμα (the Sanctuary) ὡς ἅγιον ἀπαύγασμα, μίμημα ἀρχετύπου, meaning, that the one was a perfect likeness of the other. See note on Matt. xvii. 2.—χαράκτηρ (from χαράσσω, στήρο), prop. signif. 'the die,' or 'stamping-stool,' used in coining, by which the figure to be expressed is stamped; also 'the impression made by a seal'; being thus synonymous with σφραγίς; and as such cannot but be an exact representation of the die, or seal, so the word came to denote 'an exact and perfect resemblance,' or 'counterpart'; of which sense exx.

are adduced from Aristotle, Plato, and Philo. Thus it is a stronger term than εἰκών; with which, however, it is in us synonymous. So at 2 Cor. iv. 4, and Col. i. 15, Christ is called εἰκὼν τοῦ ἀοράτου Θεοῦ.—ὑποστάσις signif. not 'person' (a sense of the word unknown until after the Arian controversy, in the fourth century), but 'substance,' or 'essence'; i. e. 'being,' equiv. to παράξις: a sense supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and Vulgate Versions. And thus χαρ. τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ may be rendered (as it is done by Ernesti), 'the perfect expression of the Divine Nature and Essence.' It is meant, then, that 'the glory of the Father was reflected on the Son, and the ὑπόστασις of the Father was impressed on the Son; so that the Son represented it, as an impression represents the seal, forming a perfect representation of God's person and attributes'; i. e. of the perfections subsisting, or existing in God. The idea was probably suggested by a similar one at Wisd. vii. 26, where Wisdom is said to be an efflux from God's glory, an ἀπαύγασμα φωτὸς αἰδίου, ἱσοκτῆρον τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐνεργίας, καὶ εἰκὼν τῆς ἀγαθότητος αὐτοῦ.—Φέρων τὰ πάντα, &c. Φέρων is rendered by Abp. Newc. 'ruling,' by Stuart, 'controlling'; but I prefer our Authorized Version, 'upholding,' or 'supporting'; which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, Theophyl., and almost all the early modern Expositors. So Bp. Hall explains, 'giving support, maintenance, power, and preservation to all things that he hath made.' Similarly it is said, Ps. lxxv. 3, 'I bear up the pillars of it (i. e. the earth).' Thus the expression is equiv. to ἀναφέρω, which term involves an adjunct notion of 'regulating' as well as 'supporting.' Indeed, such seems to have been the reading of the original from which the Vatican MS. B was copied; for as to the reading φανερῶν, it is evidently a mere error of the copyist. Of course ἀναφέρω was no more than a glōss, though highly deserving of attention, as indicating the sense assigned to φέρω in the earliest ages.—On reconsidering this point of interpretation I am still of opinion, that the variously understood term φέρων is best rendered by sustinet, upholds; and the term seems used, by a metaphor derived from those who cause any thing to be stirred by applying the finger, i. e. to stir by heaving up any thing so as to move it.—τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. This is, by Hebraism, for τῷ ῥήματι δυνατὸν, 'by his powerful fiat,' the words רַבּוּ and רִמָּה being often used in the Old Test. of the fiat of Omnipotence, conveying, as Dr. Pye Smith remarks, the idea that He does not sustain the world with effort, but by his simple volition. See Gen. i. 3, and Ps. xxxiii. 6, 9. By 'all things' are evidently meant the subjects of the possession or dominion just before spoken of; namely, the natural universe. The next words, δὲ ἑαυτοῦ, are absent from A, B, D<sup>3</sup>, and 4 cursives (to which I can only add Mss. 11,836), the Vulg., and some Fathers, and have been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., but not on good grounds; for a few MSS. are insufficient to warrant the cancelling of words, espec. when they are almost πυρὸς φλόγα· ὁ πρὸς δὲ τὸν γλῶσσαν ὁ θρόνος σου, ὁ ὡς πα. α. β. γ. Θεός, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ αἰῶνος· ῥάβδος ἐυθύτητος ἡ indispensable; which is the case here. For, as Est. observes, 'from the Divine nature of Christ the Apostle reverts to his human nature (comprising in this passage the sum and substance of the whole Epistle), teaching that he, as a man, through desert obtained by his passion remission of all our sins, and made full satisfaction for them by offering himself to God the Father as a sacrifice for us.' Such is the sense inculcated in these words δι' ἑαυτοῦ, which are highly emphatic, being equiv. to διὰ τῆς θεότητος αὐτοῦ (as in ix. 12, 26. ii. 14), implying, 'and not by the blood of victims, as has been observed by Chrys., Theophyl., Theodor., and (Ecumen. Besides, the words are confirmed by the weighty authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version. Their omission arose, I suspect, from the occurrence twice just before of αὐτοῦ (a cause of omission as found to exist in numerous other cases); and this is the more probable, considering that from the reading of the MS. D and others, as also Theodor., Cyril, &c., it plainly appears that αὐτοῦ for αὐτοῦ or ἑαυτοῦ was read at a very early period. Again, the ἡμῶν after ἀμαρτιῶν has been cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch., on the authority of A, B, D, E, and 3 or 4 cursives (to which I can only add Mus. 16, 184), and some Versions. But it is confirmed by Rev. i. 5, τῷ λούσαντι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμ. ἡμῶν, where Lachm. and Tisch. (1st Ed.) cancelled the word, on the authority of only three MSS., though Tisch. has restored it in his 2nd Ed. Yet here it is not quite necessary, since the Apostle may have meant to speak in a general sense, as in Col. i. 14, ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν—τὴν ἀφεσιν τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, and Acts ii. 38, αἱ ἀφεσιν ἀμαρτιῶν, where, however, Lachm. edits, from five ancient MSS., α. ἀφ. τῶν ἁμ. ἡμῶν, involving inconsistency with his decision at Col. i. 14, and here; though in Col. i. 14, and Acts iii. 38, ἡμῶν is implied in the context. Not so here, since the sense may be, 'having made purification of sin,' viz. by its expiation. Comp. ἰλασθῆναι τὰς ἀμαρτίας, infra ii. 17, and ποιεῖν λύτρωσιν at Luke i. 68.—ἐκάθισεν. Supply ἑαυτόν, 'seated himself.'—τῆς μεγαλυσυνης, scil. τοῦ Θεοῦ, meaning (by the use of abstract for concrete) the Almighty. So in the Book of Enoch we have ἐνώπιον τῆς δόξης τῆς μεγαλύνουσης. Prof. Ebrard is of opinion, that 'in these words there is solely the idea of participation in the Divine dominion and majesty, without any local reference whatever.' But the reference does exist, as implied in the next words, ἐν ὑψηλοῖς (= ἐν ἰσχυραῖς in Eph. i. 20), where Ebrard recognizes it. 'Thus far is described the κληρονομία which the incarnate Son has received; and after these introductory words, by way of foundation, the writer now passes to the first principal inference from them,—namely, that that Son, the origin of the New Test. revelation, is infinitely superior to the angels,—the organs of the Old Test. revelation. The carrying out of this inference occupies from v. 4 to ch. ii. 18 of the Epistle.' (Ebrard.)

4. τ. κρείττων γινόμενος τῶν ἀγγ.] Render: 'being so much superior in rank to the angels.' From the examples cited by the Commentators, it appears that κρείττων was used, in an august sense, of the gods and demigods of the heathens.—διαφορώτερον, denoting 'a more distinguished superiority.'—δύναμις. Many modern Commentators assign to the word the sense dignity; but the ancients, and the generality of moderns, 'name,' or title, of SON, which is greatly preferable; for (as Kuinoel and Stuart observe) 'the argument in the sequel shows that the sense involved in the title SON is the ground on which the superiority over the angels is proved.' Now none but Christ is ever called the Son of God.

5. In confirmation of the above, an argument is adduced from the Old Test., formed on two passages of it (Pa. ii. 7, and 2 Sam. vii. 14), which have been in every age referred, by even the best Jewish Interpreters, to the MESSIAH, at least in their mystical and sublimer import; for in such a sense as is inherent in these passages (namely, one that denotes 'supreme dominion and authority'), neither angels nor men were called sons of God. The force of the argument lies in γίνομαι and γενέσθαι; but in whatever way this may be referred to Christ's human nature, it can be no ground for such pre-eminence; and consequently this filiation must be applicable to him in his Divine nature. The expression σήμερον γενέσθαι υἱον is usually understood of 'the eternal generation of the Son of God'; q. d. 'Whereas the angels are created, he is begotten,' i. e. holds the dignity he possesses by an eternal generation. But it does not appear how σήμερον can ever denote 'from eternity.' By Chrys. and Theophyl. it is referred definitely to time; and the best Expositors have always so understood it, though they are not agreed whether by that time is denoted the period of our Lord's incarnation, or of his exaltation (as regards his human nature) to his mediatorial throne after his resurrection. The latter view, however, is decidedly preferable. To the above remark Dr. Peile adds, de suo, 'The question, if any there still be on this point, is surely decided by our Apostle's own teaching, as happily preserved for us in Acts xiii. 32, 33; where that identical Promise to which he here refers, as made by the mouth of Nathan unto "the Patriarch David" (2 Sam. vii. 12—16), is declared to have been "fulfilled unto us," the children (in CHRIST) of the Prophets, and of the Covenant which God made with the Fathers of the typical Israel, "in the act of God's having raised up Jesus"—the Beginning and First-Born of that new creation from the Dead, wherein he, by his Spiritual and Life-giving Presence, is now the Christ in us, our Hope of Glory.'

6. 'After this verse there follow certain arguments, in which the superiority of the Son over the angels appears; though not precisely that as respects the foregoing κληρονομία.' (Ebrard.) The difficulty complained of in this verse mainly rests on the expressions πάλις and ἑταράγγ. Here, if necessary, we might, with Rosenm., suppose a transposition of the words, for πάλις δὲ ἔταν, as often in the Script. and Class. writers; but it is not necessary. Stuart justly contends that there is no transposition, and he takes δὲ πάλις to mean, 'Again, also, when he,' &c. But the words δὲ and πάλις do not, properly speaking, belong to each other; the δὲ belonging to ἔταν

1 Sam. 61. 1, 2.
Acts 10. 25.

ῥάβδος τῆς βασιλείας σου. ὁ ἡγάπησας δικαιοσύνην, καὶ ἐμίσησας ἀνομίαν διὰ τοῦτο ἔχρισέ σε ὁ Θεός, ὁ ἰσχυρ., and the πάλιν (if it have the same sense as in the former verse) to λέγων taken from λέγει, or εἰπών taken from εἶπε just before. I find this view of the construction confirmed, virtually at least, by Ebrard, who observes, that 'according to the sense [intended] πάλιν can belong only to λέγει, parallel to the πάλιν (εἶπε) at v. 5, and consequently there is an hyperbaton (rather, an hypallage).' The expression ἰσχυρ. has been variously interpreted, but there is no sufficient reason to abandon the sense, supported by many exx., commonly assigned,—namely, of 'ushering, as it were, into the world' (namely, by the predictions and prophecies of Scripture) the advent of the First-born. Thus understood, the term denotes 'the formal introduction of one, vested with high authority, to those whom he is to govern,' as in Philo, p. 193, C: and in this is implied a formal declaration to the inhabitants of the world, angels as well as men, of the exalted rank of the Personage so introduced. Thus we may render, 'and when he shall have brought in.' It would seem that the term εἰσάγων was used by the writer, from his having in mind not so much the idea of God, to which the preceding context points, as the holy Prophet speaking under Divine inspiration.—τὸν Πρωτότοκον. Render: 'the First-born,' or 'First-born.' For this, as appears from Ps. lxxix. 27, comp. with Rom. viii. 29, was a title of the Messiah; and when the force of the metaphor is duly weighed (on which see Schoettg.), it will be found to mean the Lord of men and angels. The writer (as Ebrard observes) says designedly, not Υἱός, which would denote the Incarnate, but Πρωτότοκος, which, like the μονογενὴς of John, denotes the Eternal Son of the Father; or, as Paul more fully expresses the sense in Col. i. 15, Πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, where see note. The words following are taken from Ps. xvi. 7, according to the LXX., who have rendered ὡς ἄγγελοι, though modern Interpreters take it to mean the false gods of the heathen. The word is, however, as Kuinoel remarks, used in the former sense at Gen. xxxv. 7. Ps. lxxii. 1, which would be very suitable to the context and the intent of the Psalmist here; for it is admitted by Kimchi that 'this Psalm, as well as all from xciii. to ci., relates to the mystery of the Messiah.' Θεοῦ, however, was supplied by the Sept. Translators, to make the sense clearer, though the use of the Article with ἄγγελοι would have answered the purpose as well. The argument of inferiority deduced from any one's scornshipping another, is irrefragable. Of course it is implied how supremely great must that Person be, whom the very angels are to reverently bow before. Comp. Phil. ii. 10.

7. To further prove this inferiority of the angels to Christ, certain passages are now adduced from the Psalms, in which they are called ministers, but Christ KING supreme and perpetual (Kuinoel); and that for the purpose of contrasting the angels, as servants, with Christ as a King.—πρὸς μιν, &c., 'as regards,' in reference to. The words following are from Ps. civ. 4 (Sept.), though for πρὸς φλόγα we have there πῦρ φλέγον, which, however, will not prove that the Apostle, as Kuinoel supposes, quoted from memory; but only that he gave another version to ὡς ἔστι, and that so similar to the version of Symmachus, that it is not improbable some copies of the Sept. might then have the rendering assigned by the writer. Indeed, such is found in many of the best MSS. of the Sept. It has been doubted whether the subject here be contained in πνεύματα and πρὸς φλόγα, or in τοὺς ἄγγ. and τοὺς λειτουργοὺς. Many eminent Expositors adopt the latter view, rendering, 'who maketh the winds his messengers, and flames of fire his ministers.' This interpretation, however, Bp. Middleton thinks, would require the Article at πνεύμ., and πρὸς φλόγα; and though it be very agreeable to the context of the Psalms, yet that of the Epistle requires the first-mentioned construction, which is confirmed by the Peach. Syriac Version. And Prof. Stuart thinks the Hebrew words admit of no other construction. It has also been disputed whether πνεύματα should be rendered 'spirits,' or 'winds.' Now Bp. Middleton's criticism would necessarily exclude the latter sense, and consequently oblige us to adopt the former. Considering, however, the licence, throughout St. Paul's writings, with respect to the omission of the Article where it can conveniently be omitted, such a principle may be regarded as precarious; and the question must be determined solely by the comparative fitness of the two senses. That of 'spirits' is contrary to the use in the Psalms, and is at variance with the other member of the Parallelism; 'since (as Carpzov observes) there can be no comparison between an intelligent ens and what is not intelligent.' Indeed, the best Commentators have been long agreed in rejecting that interpretation. The sense 'winds' or 'the winds' is doubtless the true one. And though here again the words are susceptible of more than one sense, yet the only one suitable to the context is, 'Who employs his angels as winds, and his ministering servants as lightnings;' q. d. 'Angels not less than the winds and lightnings obey his fiat. As he employs the winds and lightnings as instruments of his will, so does he the angels as his agents.' In like manner, Xen. de Mem. iv. 3, 14, speaks of the winds and lightning as ὑπηρέται τοῦ θεοῦ.

8. πρὸς τὸν Υἱόν Render: 'respecting the Son,' as ver. 7, πρὸς ἄγγελ., 'respecting the angels.' In ὁρὸς and ῥάβδος we have emblems of dominion in the kingdom of God-man; and, as the former clause designates the perpetuity, so does the latter the perfect equity of the Son's government.—ὁ Θεός. Nomin. for Voc., as elsewhere in the New Test., and generally throughout the Sept. This clearly ascribes Divinity to the Son, agreeably to the Prophet Isaiah ix. 6, 'his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God,' &c. Bp. Horsley has fully shown that the passage is here with the greatest propriety applied to Christ (as, indeed, the best Jewish Interpreters admit), and made an argument of his Divinity, not by any forced accommodation of the words, but according to the true intent of the Psalmist, and the literal and only consistent exposition of his words.

9. ἡγάπησας—ἀνομίαν.] This is illustrative of the expression εὐθύτης before; and the Aorist here denotes, as often, what is customary; and thus it is well expressed by the Present tense. The general sense (strengthened by the use of the negative form following the affirmative) is this: 'perfectly equitable and just is thy government.' At ἔχρισαι—ἔλαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως there is commonly supposed to be an allusion to the inauguration of Kings and Prophets by anointing; in allusion to the anointing of Christ by the Holy Spirit for his regal and priestly office in the Church. To this, however, both the context and the usus loquendi are adverse. Now χρίσις sometimes simply denotes ornars, instructs (as in Acts x. 38), which seems to be the sense here. Thus ἀγαλλ. will have reference to the notion of exaltation and celebrity, included in that of honouring; and so Chrys. must have taken it, since he explains ἀγαλλ. by ἀγλαΐσμοι, καλλωπισμοῦ δόξης. By τοὺς μετόχους are meant 'associates in dignity,' συνθρόνους; comp. Rev. xix. 16. The Accus. is here (by an idiom found also occasionally in the Class. writers) put for the Dat., which is the usual Syntax. It is not certain whether the first ὁ Θεός is a Nomin. or a Vocal. Many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, including Ernesti, Rosenm., Kuin., and Stuart, suppose the latter; while the ancient Interpreters, and almost all modern ones, adopt the former view, which yields a better sense, and with a more natural construction.

Θεός σου, ἔλαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως παρὰ τοὺς μετόχους σου. <sup>10</sup> Καὶ Σὺ κατ' ἀρχάς, Κύριε, τὴν γῆν ἐθεμελίωσας, καὶ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου εἰσὶν οἱ οὐρανοί. <sup>11</sup> Αὐτοὶ ἀπολούνται, σὺ δὲ διαμένεις· καὶ πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται, <sup>12</sup> καὶ ὡσεὶ περιβόλαιον ἐλίξεις αὐτοὺς καὶ ἀλλαγήσονται· σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἰ,

10—12. The kai (meaning, 'and further') serves to connect this position with the testimonies at ver. 8; and consequently the matter must have the same reference, to Christ. The passage here introduced is from Pa. cii. 25—27, which, while it would seem to be, at least primarily, a description of the eternity and immutability of God, is here quoted in such a manner as seems a direct and unreserved application to CHRIST. Certainly, as Stuart observes, there is nothing in the Psalm that forbids its application to the Messiah; nay, many passages are most applicable to him; and such a reference is supported by the fact that several Psalms do contain such predictions. 'Though (he adds) even if it were supposed to be applicable merely to Jehovah, there would be no difficulty with the quotation here, since the application of the same words to the Son of God, which were originally spoken of Jehovah, would be the same as saying, What was affirmed by the Psalmist of Jehovah may be as truly affirmed of the Son.' Thus the weight of the argument as to the Divine nature of Christ would be the same. This, however, is taking too low a view of the subject. Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test. l. iv. § 16) has given good reasons for supposing that the passage in the Psalm was directed, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, not to Jehovah, but to Messiah, the hope of Israel. From a close examination of the nature and character of the Psalm, the learned writer shows the inference to be unavoidable, that the afflicted Psalmist's prayer was to 'that same DIVINE PERSON who had allowed himself to be seen in a glorious human form, by Abraham, by Jacob, by Moors and his associates, and by Ezekiel; the Angel of the Covenant; the Hope, the Redeemer, the Saviour of Israel.' Hence it follows that the Apostle, in making use of the Psalmist's prayer as a testimony to the supremacy and Deity of that Messiah, expressed no more than the true and original meaning of the passage.

10. κατ' ἀρχάς τὴν γῆν ἔθημ.] Κατ' ἀρχάς is best rendered 'of old'; since the Sept. only rendered κατ' ἀρχάς with reference to the ἀν ἀρχῇ of Gen. i. 1.—ἔθημαλ. refers to the first act of creation, with allusion to the idea entertained of the earth by the Hebrews,—namely, as a plain surface erected on foundations. The use of τῶν χειρῶν imports, not instrumentality (as Stuart supposes), but power, as Estius has ably shown. By the αὐτοὶ we may, with Kuinoel and Stuart, understand the heavens and the earth; both having been mentioned. Thus in ἡ γῆ and οἱ οὐρανοὶ we have a periphrasis of the world. See Gen. i. l. xiv. 19. In αὐτοὶ the gender is accommodated to οὐρ., as the last-mentioned and the worthier gender. For διαμένεις a few ancient MSS. have διαμενῖς, which is adopted by Griesb., Knapp, and Stuart; but the former is plainly the true reading, and is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who well renders, 'Thou art permanent'; and certainly there is nothing to hinder the Hebr. נצח from being expressed in the present tense, as it is by Dr. French, in his Translation of this Psalm. Thus, too, there is more force and propriety in the sentiment; the Present being more applicable to a Being whose duration is unconnected with time, who was, is, and is to be; who 'is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' The words καὶ πάντες—ἀλλαγ. are exegetical of ἀπολούνται, as καὶ τὰ ἔτη—ἐλπίψ. are of διαμένεις. With πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται comp. Isa. li. 6.—πριβ. denotes a wrapper, or outer garment, like the lyks or bornouse of the Arabs; for such is the idea in the Hebr. שר, denoting the sky. In that expression and ἐλίξεις there is an allusion to the heavens as an expanse, the rolling up implying removal, for the purpose of substituting others,—the 'new heaven and new earth' of Rev. xxi. 1. Comp. xx. 11.

12. σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἰ] Of these words the sense is but imperfectly indicated by Commentators, who have failed to perceive that the sentiment here is the same with that more fully expressed at xiii. 8; both containing the idea of absolute unchangeableness, and both ascribing to the Messiah the Divine attribute of immutability. So Philo (cited by Carpzov) says of the sun, ὁ αὐτὸς ἔστιν ἀεί. The words following, τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ ἐλπίψουσι, are expressive of immortality; q. d. 'thy years (meaning, thy existence)

m Ps. 110. 1.
Matt. 22. 34.
Mark 12. 36.
Luke 20. 42.
Acts 2. 34.
1 Cor. 15. 26.
Eph. 1. 20.
ch. 10. 1, 2.
& 12. 2.
n Ps. 108. 21.
R 34. 7.
& 91. 11.

καὶ τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ ἐκλείψουσιν. <sup>13</sup> πρὸς τίνα δὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων εἶρηκέ ποτε Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν σου; . <sup>14</sup> Οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶ λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενα.
διὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας κληρονομεῖν σωτηρίαν; II. <sup>1</sup> Διὰ τοῦτο δεῖ will never fail, or come to an end.' The whole serves to place in very strong contrast with the dependence, the weakness, the nothingness of the most exalted creatures, the characters of eternity and immutable faithfulness in the Saviour of men and Lord of angels.

13. 'This verse forms the key-stone of the whole argument; and, accordingly, we may do well to look back on the course of reasoning that has been employed. The New Test. revelation of God in the Son was opposed to that of the Old Test., as the absolute to the relative, v. 4, and the absoluteness of the former derived, 1. from the name Son which is assigned in the Old Test. to the promised Messiah, but to none among the angels, v. 5; 2. from this, that where the (Messianic) saving work of God, i. e. of the Πρωτότοκος is prophesied of, merely the place of worshipping spectators belongs to the angels, v. 6; 3. vv. 7—12, from the immediateness of the union of God with men in the Messianic salvation, from its everlasting duration and its spiritual nature, inasmuch as it rests on the reciprocal relation of human righteousness, vv. 8, 9, and Divine faithfulness, vv. 10—12. It had been shown in vv. 8, 9, as well as in vv. 10—12, that an immediate elevation of man to God, and an immediate act of grace on the part of God towards man, without the interposition of angels, were already laid down in the Old Test. as the fundamental characteristics of the Messianic salvation. This immediateness is now in v. 13 still further confirmed by a crowning passage from the Old Test., in which it is most clearly expressed.' (Ebrard.) By πρὸς τίνα, &c., is meant, 'Where does God address even the angels in terms implying that they are σύνθρονοι with him?' for such is implied by the phrase κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν: on which see notes on Matt. xxii. 44, where the words are applied by our Redeemer himself to the Messiah. The words ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου contain an image of complete subjection, and are highly intensive of the sense of the foregoing phrase.

14. This forms the conclusion of the comparison made between the Son of God and the angels; for the purpose of evincing the great superiority of the former, there is subjoined a reference to the condition of the angels, what they really are.—Οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶ λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, &c. The interrogation with οὐχὶ implies a strong affirmation, intimating that the thing is an universally admitted truth. The full and literal sense is, 'Are not all of them [of whatever rank] [no more than] ministering spirits sent forth for service (or assistance), on the part of (i. e. in behalf of) those who are to inherit (i. e. obtain) salvation?' They are said to be λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα (an expression formed on Ps. ciii. 21, Sept., εὐλογεῖτε τὸν Κύριον, λειτουργοὶ αὐτοῦ, ποιῶντες τὰ θελήματα αὐτοῦ) as being merely διάκονοι Θεοῦ, not σύνθρονοι, like Christ. The next words are exegetical of λειτουργικὰ, and show the nature of that service. Finally, the term ἀποστελλόμενα is used to intimate that they have no self-derived dignity, but are only ἀπόστολοι, with delegated authority, which is the constant doctrine of the Old Test. and the Jewish writings in general. The use of πνεύμα here seems formed on Num. xxvii. 16, Θεοὶ τῶν πνευμάτων καὶ πάσης σαρκός—Διὰ τοῦτο μιλῶντες κληρ. σωτ. A periphrasis for faithful and true Christians; the best comment on which will be found in the words of the same Apostle at Rom. viii. 17, where see note.

II. This and the preceding Chapter the learned Ernesti justly calls the scandalum Socinianorum, and he lays down a summary of the doctrines which may thence be proved, namely, the Divinity and the humanity of Christ; the conjunction of both natures in one person, the communication of the Divine idiomata; the twofold state of Christ, and his triple office.

At vv. 1—4 the writer subjoins a practical application, springing out of the foregoing doctrines.—διὰ τοῦτο, 'wherefore,' i. e. such being the infinite superiority of Christ, the Head of the new Dispensation, over the angels,—the mediators of the old,—so much the more carefully must we hold fast by the doctrine so revealed to us: The strong term πιστ. cannot be better rendered than thus: 'with an earnest vehemency of [hopedful] earnestness.' So Lord Clarendon says, 'earnestness and vehemency of expression.' The warning hinges on the forcible expression μὴ ποτε παραβῶμεν, and hence it is proper to ascertain its true import. The Commentators are not agreed whether it denotes to glide, or slide from them, turn aside from them, fall from them; or, to let them glide or slip from the mind in utter forgetfulness; in which latter sense the word occurs in Lucian, Dipa. contra Hes. 5, εἴτι ἐν τῇ τῆς ποιήσεως ὁρμῇ παραβῶν λήθῃ. But that is too feeble a sense to match the foregoing expression περισσοτέρως, and it is inappropriate. Accordingly, I continue to prefer the first interpretation, which is especially suitable, since, as Prof. Ebrard observes, 'this falling away from the doctrine heard was the specific danger which threatened the persons in question.' To remove any seeming harshness in the wording, we have only to suppose the use of hypallage, so frequent in high wrought, figurative language; the words, 'lest we should glide, or slide away from the things' being interchanged with 'lest we should let them glide away, or slip, from our mind and attention.' And thus the expression 'lest we should slip aside, slide pass, the things' (lit. 'be carried past the things' [equiv. to 'let them slip out of the mind and escape the attention']), is very appropriate; and Paul prob. had in mind Prov. iii. 21, ὄψις, καὶ παραβῶντες, τήρησον δι' ἐμὴν βουλήν. The metaphor is not taken, as Kuin. thinks, from a torrent, but rather from a vessel passing down a περισσότερος ἡμᾶς προσέχειν τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσι, μή ποτε παρἀρνήσωμεν. <sup>2</sup> αἰ γὰρ ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαληθεὶς λόγος ἐγένετο

 βέβαιος, καὶ πᾶσα παράβασις καὶ παρακοή ἔλαβεν ἔνδικον μισθοδοσίαν <sup>3</sup> β πῶς ἡμεῖς ἐκφευξόμεθα, τηλικαύτης ἀμε-λήσαντες σωτηρίας; ἥτις ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα λαλεῖσθαι, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, ὑπὸ τῶν ἀκουσάντων εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη <sup>4</sup> c συνεπιμαρ-τυροῦντος τοῦ Θεοῦ σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασι, καὶ ποικίλαις δυνάμεσι, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ θέλησιν.

a Deut. 4. 2.
 4. R 17. 2. 5.
 12. R 27. 30.
 Acts 7. 55.
 63.
 Gal. 3. 19.
 b Matt. 4. 17.
 Mark 1. 14.
 ch. 12. 28.
 c Mark 10.
 30.
 Acts 2. 22.
 R 14. 8.
 R 19. 11.
 1 Cor. 12. 4.
 7. 11.
 d ch. 1. 2, 4.
 8. & 9. 5.
 2 Pet. 2. 18.

<sup>5</sup> d Οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλους ὑπέταξε τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, river, and which, from want of attention on the part of the steersman, is allowed to glide past the place which the vessel was bound for. Theophyl. well observes, that this is said to intimate the easiness of the slip, and the great difficulty of recovering it: τὸ γὰρ παρὰρρύν (scil. ὑδωρ) δύσκολον ἐπαναλθεῖν. There, however, may have been a blending in Paul's mind of both the above figures, as in the following passage,—Greg. Naz. ap. Steph. Thea. in voc., ἴσα μὴ ἐξίτηλα τῷ χρόνῳ γίνηται τὰ καλά, καὶ μὴ παρὰρρύν, λήθητι θυθεῖς ἀμνηστούμενα. Comp. Eupol. ap. Stob. Floril. iv. 33, μάλιστα καὶ παρὰρρύν τῶν φρονούν, 'slips out of his wits.'

<sup>2</sup> αἰ γὰρ ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαλ. λόγ.] Here there is shown, by an argument ex minori ad maius, why the Gospel demands especial obedience. And here, notwithstanding what some eminent Expositors maintain, ὁ δι' ἀγγ. λαληθεὶς λόγος must denote 'the Mosaic Law,' thus promulgated, as appears from Gal. iii. 19, ὁ νόμος διαταγὴς δι' ἀγγέλων, and Acts vii. 53, ἐλάβετε τὸν νόμον ἐν διαταγῇ ἀγγ. (see notes). Comp. with Jos. Anti. xv. 5, 3, ἡμῶν τὰ κάλλιστα τὰ δογματῶν τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις δι' ἀγγέλων παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ μεθούτων. Any seeming discrepancy between what is said in those passages and the present, as compared with Exod. xx. 1, and elsewhere, where God himself is said to proclaim the law, will at once vanish, by application of the well-known principle, 'Qui facit per alium, facit per se'; and God might be said to promulgate, and the angels to proclaim the law.—βέβαιος, 'firm'; namely, by being carried fully into execution. Thus it is meant (as Prof. Dobree well expresses) to say, 'If the denunciations of Moses were actually fulfilled, much more will Christ's, which are now confirmed to us (i. e. further explained and partly accomplished) by the Apostles, through the witness of the Spirit.' See Rom. iv. 16. 2 Pet. i. 19. The terms παράβασις and παρακοή are nearly synonymous; the only difference being that the former implies contumacy as well as disobedience, positive transgression. —μισθοδοσία is best rendered 'retribution'; since that must imply punishment, though at x. 35 and xi. 26, reward. To the illustrations of the Commentators I add Eurip. Or. 833, πατρίων παθίων ἀμοιβάν (where the Scholiast explains ἐκδικεσιν), and Æschyl. Theb. 1023, τοῦπιτίμιον λαβῆν (mercedem) τιμωρίαν. So also Hor. Carm. iii. 24, 24, 'Et peccare nefas, aut pretium emori.' This idiom in μισθοδοσίᾳ occurs in no other writer except Const. Ap. vi. 11, and is justly supposed by Fischer to have been taken from the common Gr. dialect, where it was used for the Class. μισθοδοσία. Μισθοποδ. is, indeed, pronounced by Prof. Ebrard to be a more select and elegant term; but without reason, since from H. Steph. and Dindorf. it seems to have been confined to the later and less pure Gr. writers, and accordingly well known to the scribes, who sometimes introduced it into the text; e. g. in Diod. Sic. l. xvi. 73.

<sup>3</sup> τηλικαύτης σωτηρίας] Σωτ. is taken by some good Expositors for λόγον σωτ., which occurs in Acts xiii. 26, meaning the Gospel, or Christian religion. But it must rather, by metonymy, denote 'the means, or the doctrine of salvation,' there being here a tacit comparison between the temporal salvation of the Law, and the eternal salvation of the Gospel; as is evident from the expression τηλικαύτης, which intimates 'the greatness of the thing,' and the correspondent guilt of neglecting it. By the term ἀμελήσαντες, 'after having slighted,' is intended to be conveyed the idea of such total disregard and apostasy by those who had embraced the faith.—ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα—εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη. This is rightly regarded by Ernesti and Kuinoel as a formula præsumptiva, to be explained by ἦλθεν εἰς ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐβεβαιώθη, 'was delivered unto us at first, and then established to us on firm grounds.'

<sup>4</sup> συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος—θέλῃσιν is explanatory of ἰσβ., and the sense is, 'God [himself] bearing this joint testimony [to the truth of what was preached] by signs and wonders, and various miraculous powers and distributions of the Holy Spirit, [imparted] according to his own will and pleasure.' So Sext. Emp. adv. Log. ii. 324, has συνεπιμαρτυροῦσαν τῷ λόγῳ.—Σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασι, &c. See note on Acts ii. 22. The words following, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, are exegetical, and show the manner of the thing; for μερ. does not denote, as Stuart thinks, 'the additional gifts of the Spirit other than supernatural powers,' but 'particular distributions'; and the best comment on the expression is in the words of the Apostle at 1 Cor. xii. 4, διαίρεσις ἐστὶν χαρισμάτων ἡμῶν, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, &c., and xii. 11.

<sup>5</sup> οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις—λαλοῦμεν] Having warned them against the consequences of apostasy from the Gospel, the Apostle resumes the subject of Christ's superiority to the angels, proceeding to show that the new dispensation was not indeed 'ordered,' like the old, by angels, but that the Son of Man, the Messiah, was, in his human nature, placed at the head of it. Now as the Jews grounded that the dispensation of the Messiah would be of a higher order than that of Moses, a proof that Jesus was the sole mediator or head of the New dispensation, and that angels

o Pr. & G.
B 144. E.

περὶ ἧς λαλοῦμεν ὁ διεμαρτύρατο δὲ πού τις λέγων Τί
ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος, ὅτι μιμνήσκη αὐτοῦ ἡ υἱὸς ἀνθρώ-

were not employed as mediators in it, would satisfy them that Jesus was superior to the angels; since the place which he holds in the new economy is higher than that which they had under the old, because the new economy itself is of a higher nature than the old. At the same time, an objection which a Jew, weak in Christian faith, and strong in his attachment to the Mosaic institutions, would very naturally feel, is met, and tacitly answered by the Apostle, in what follows. The unbelieving Jews, doubtless, urged upon those, who professed an attachment to Christianity, the seeming absurdity of renouncing their subjection to a dispensation of which angels were the mediators, and of acknowledging a subjection to one of which the professed head and mediator appeared in our nature. The Apostle concedes the fact that Jesus had a nature truly and properly human (vv. 6—18), but, instead of granting that this proves the new dispensation to be inferior to that of Moses, he proceeds to adduce evidence from the Old Test. to show that man, or the human nature in the person of the Messiah, was to be made Lord of the universe. Consequently, in this nature, Jesus the Messiah is superior to the angels. Of course the possession by Jesus of a nature truly and properly human, does not at all prove either his inferiority, or the inferiority of the dispensation of which he is the Head (vv. 6—9). Nay, more; it was becoming that God should exalt Jesus, in consequence of his obedience unto death; a death necessary for the salvation of both Jew and Gentile (vv. 9, 10). To suffer this death he must needs take on him a nature like ours; and, as his object was the salvation of men (and not of angelic beings), so he participated in the nature of men, in order that by experience he might know their sufferings, temptations, and trials, and thus be prepared to succour them, vv. 11—18. (Stuart.) Rather, that he might more effectually and completely expiate sin.—τὴν ὁικουμενὴν τὴν μέλλουσαν may denote, as Witsius and Kuin. think, the new dispensation (as opposed to the old); i.e. the Gospel dispensation, commencing at Christ's first advent, and, when completed at his final advent, to be merged into the economy to subside under the reign of Christ. Thus it comes to designate the same as the μίνουσαν πόλιν of xiii. 14, the future world, or kingdom, spoken of in the Prophets; as Isa. lvi. 22.

6. διεμαρτ. δέ πού τις] There is here a sort of lacuna supplied,—‘but [God put it in subjection to Christ], for, &c., which suppressed clause is implied in the proof itself. (Kuinoel.) Thus the sense is well expressed in paraphrase by Abp. Newe.: ‘But God hath committed the dispensation under which we live to his Son, who became man; to which assumption of human nature, and its consequences, I apply the words of the Psalmist.’ The τίς must, of course, from the subject and the context, denote an inspired writer; a mode of expression by no means implying any ignorance of the writer in question, nor even of the part of his work intended; but only supposing so familiar a knowledge of both in the reader, as merely to need the words being cited; and as it was confined to writers of the greatest eminence, it implies any thing but irreverence. Indeed, this mode of citation is common in the Rabbinical writers, and not unexampled in the Class. authors.—τί ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος, &c. It has been not a little debated whether by ἄνθρωπος, and υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου, is here meant Man (i.e. human nature) or the Son of Man, i.e. Christ. That the passage is applicable to the Messiah is certain, from our Lord's applying another part of the same Psalm to himself (Matt. xxi. 16). This, however, will not prove, as some imagine, that the whole Psalm is meant of the Messiah alone. That notion has been refuted at large by Bp. Middl., who shows that ‘this Psalm is an instance of the existence in the Old Test. of various passages having both a primary and a secondary sense; i.e. capable of a two-fold application,—being directly applicable to circumstances then past, or present, or soon to be accomplished; and indirectly to others, which Divine Providence was about to develop under a future Dispensation. The learned Prelate shows that the objections advanced against this view only tend to establish a secondary, not to disprove a primary sense. ‘It may readily (he continues) be admitted that the words here, though primarily spoken of Adam and his descendants, cannot in their full and complete sense have their sole reference to them, because they expressly represent a person, who, after a while, was advanced to the highest dignities, a perfect Lord and governor over all created beings, a complete conqueror over all the enemies of God's kingdom.’ Thus, as observes Conyb., ‘while the Hebrew Psalmist speaks of maintain, the New Test. [by the Sacred writer] teaches us to apply his words in a higher sense to CHRIST, the representative of glorified humanity.’ But to consider the phraseology in detail: μιμνήσκη (‘shouldst bear in mind’) is explained by the antithetical term ἐπισκέπτη, which signifies to show regard to, i.e. regard with favour and protection. It is truly observed by Bp. Middl., that ‘the real difficulty of the Psalm, as applied in the Epistle, lies in εὐνο, which signifies both in a small degree, and also for a short time, the former sense adapted to man, the latter to our Saviour.’ ‘In this case (he continues) three suppositions appear possible; either that the Psalmist has used the word to signify in a small degree, which is the more common meaning, and that the Apostle, availing himself of its ambiguity, has employed βραχύς τι in the other sense; or else that the Psalmist had by inspiration a knowledge of man's future resurrection and exaltation to the condition of angels, in which case he might properly say for a little time; or lastly, that the Apostle was content to use the phrase, as the Psalmist had used it, to signify in a small degree, since this was sufficiently expressive of the condition of human nature, though the other sense would have been more immediately applicable to the condescension of Christ; and of these the last appears to be the least embarrassed with difficulties. If the Psalmist has declared man to be little inferior to the angels, the application of this phrase to Christ will signify that he took the human nature; the που, ὅτι ἐπισκέπηται αὐτοῦ; 7 Ἠλάττωσας αὐτὸν βρα-χύ τι παρ' ἀγγέλους δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφάνωσας αὐτόν [καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου] 8 ἵπαντα ὑπέταξας ὑποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ. Ἐν γὰρ τῷ ὑποτάξαι αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα, οὐδὲν ἀφήκεν αὐτῷ ἀνυπότακτον. Νῦν δὲ οὕτω ὁρῶμεν

αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ὑποτεταγμένα. 9 Τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι παρ' ἀγγέλους ἡλαττωμένον βλέπομεν, Ἰησοῦν, διὰ τὸ πάθημα
τοῦ θανάτου δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφανωμένον ὅπως χάριτι Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ παντὸς γεύσῃται θανάτου. 10 Ἐπρεπε γὰρ

f Pa. 8. 7.
Matt. 28. 18.
1 Cor. 15.
28. 27.
Eph. 1. 22.
g Acts 2. 43.
Phil. 2. 7, 8.
Rev. 10. 12.
h Luke 24.
35. 45.
John 19. 30.
Acts 8. 18.
& 8. 31.
Rom. 11. 36.
Phil. 2. 9.
ch. 8. 2.
& 12. 2.

only difference will be, that what in the one case is made matter of pride and exultation is a subject of humiliation in the other.' This interpretation of βραχύ τι is confirmed by the authority of Dindorf and Stuart, who show that the sense is required in the Psalm, and is more suitable in the Epistle. 'For what (observes Stuart) is the design of the writer? To prove that Christ, in his human nature, is exalted above the angels. How does he undertake to prove this? First, by showing that this nature itself is made but little inferior to that of the angels; and next, that it has been exalted to the empire of the world.' The Apostle (as Kuin. and Stuart prove) was fully justified in using the term ἀγγέλοις, this being found in the Sept., and indeed supposed by many of the best interpreters, Hebrew and Christian, to convey the true sense of the Hebr. מַלְאָכִים, on which see Stuart.—Δόξῃ and τιμῇ are terms synonymous, but here combined to raise the sense.—στίφ. denotes ornate. On the nature and origin of the metaphor see my note on Thucyd. iv. 121, and my Lex. in v.; also Cebet. Tab. p. 41, and Artem. On. ii. 30.

8. πάντα ὑπέταξαι ὑπ. τ. ποδ. α.] i. e. 'thou hast given him complete and universal dominion'; a metaphor derived from Oriental customs, and copiously illustrated by Dind. and Stuart; comp. 1 Cor. xv. 27. Πάντα, as Bp. Middl. observes, 'is a term whose extent seems ascertained by the subjoined enumeration of the several classes of brute creatures, and at vv. 7, 8, of Pa. viii. But as πάντα may include all things, without exception, and angels as well as men, what proves the secondary sense by no means disproves the primary.—Ἐν γὰρ τῷ, &c. The γὰρ is illustrative; the writer now proceeding to comment on and argue from the above scripture. The expressions ἐν τῷ ὑποτάξαι αὐτῷ—ἀνυπότακτον strongly mark the universality of the subjection. Ἰσχυρ. and ἀφήκεν may, with many recent Commentators, be referred to the writer, by the figure mentioned in the note on ἀλαγὰν supra i. 6; but it is more agreeable to the context to suppose it (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) to relate to God.—Νῦν δὲ—ὑποτεταγμένα, q. d. 'But now, as we do not see all things; for instance, all mankind, death, the evil angels, &c.' (Abp. Newc.); meaning, 'that this prophecy of the Psalmist is not, as yet, wholly fulfilled; but that so much of it has been accomplished, that we may regard it as a pledge that a fulfilment of the rest will certainly follow.'

9. τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—ἴσπερ.] In this passage the εἰκασία, as Bp. Middl. remarks, 'is τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—Ἰησοῦν, and the predicatio all which follows. Moreover, in the subjoined clause, ὅπως χάριτι Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ παντὸς γεύσῃται θανάτου, there is assigned the reason why Christ suffered death, as mentioned in διὰ τὸ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου.' The difficulty here complained of is partly caused by an inversion of construction (prob. resorted to in order to make the grand subject of the assertion, JESUS, the more prominent), and partly by the last clause being worded with obscure brevity. Accordingly, the sense (when the construction is cleared, and the phraseology properly interpreted) will be as follows: 'But Him, who was made a little lower than the angels (namely, by assuming the human nature)—even Jesus—we see (even by the eye of faith in the revelation made to us), on account of his having suffered death, crowned with glory and honour; [which suffering he bore,] in order that, by the grace of God, he might taste of death for every man; i. e. that, by the goodness and mercy of God, this his suffering of death might be effectual unto the salvation of all men. This mode of taking the passage is, I believe, liable to no well-founded objection; for the sentiment contained in the last clause is not, as some affirm, the same as before, but is a further illustration of what was before said,—namely, that Jesus suffered the death in question, that he might give his life a ransom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6. Matt. xx. 28. Mark x. 45,—and thus it may be regarded as an addition, meant to inculcate the great and cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, THE ATONEMENT. Ver. 10 is closely connected with v. 9, as an explanation (which is further developed at v. 11), wherein it is shown how suitable this crowning of Jesus with glory and honour was to the wisdom, justice, and other attributes of the Deity.'

10. The force of ἔπρεπε &c. is not well expressed by, 'it became Him,' &c., debet; for, as Ernesti remarks, 'it opens a door to unallowed metaphysical refinement.' (In how many other cases, alas! does this apply?) On the other hand, it is not well to take it, with Kuin., as equiv. to ἀναγκαῖον ἴστω, as will appear further on. Preferable is the rendering debet, oportet, at least if it be taken in the somewhat qualified sense, as standing for par erat, and so the Peaseh. Syr. Version 'it was proper,' q. d. 'as Christ possessed a nature truly human, and as all men are, by the arrangement of a wise and overruling

αὐτῷ, δι' ὃν τὰ πάντα καὶ δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα, τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτηρίας αὐτῶν διὰ παθη-μάτων τελειῶσαι. 11 Ὁ τε γὰρ ἀγιάζων καὶ οἱ ἀγιαζόμενοι

1 Acts 17. 30.
ch. 10. 10,
14.

Providence subjected to trial,—so it was proper, [suitable to] God, that Jesus should be subjected to trial in our nature before he was advanced to glory in it.—By αὐτῷ is, no doubt, to be understood GOD, not, as some say, Christ. In the words δι' ὃν—τὰ (where supply ἐγένετο) we have a formula designating the supreme Lord. So Rom. xi. 36. 1 Cor. viii. 6; God being described as the First Cause (δι' ὃν), and the Sustainer and Preserver (δι' οὗ) of the Universe. At πολλοὺς υἱοὺς εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα the construction, as respects ἀγαγόντα, has been disputed. Many construe it with the words following, thus referring it to Christ; but thus the sentiment seems overloaded. It is better, with others, to suppose ἀγαγόντα as put for ἀγαγόντι, by an hypallage, oft. occ. in St. Paul (as Acts xi. 12. 2 Cor. xii. 17), and in the Class. writers, espec. Thucyd. Render, 'After he had decreed to bring many sons (meaning, all true Christians, or those who are 'begotten again to a lively hope,' 1 Pet. i. 3) [back] to life and salvation [from death and misery],—a sense of δόξα occurring in Rom. v. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 8. I would not, with some recent Commentators, take ἀρχ. τῆς σωτ. as equiv. to ἀρχηγὸν καὶ σωτῆρα in Acts v. 31, where Christ is said to have been exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, for it seems that the Apostle intended to express some higher sense, and more profound doctrine than that; and what this is, will be found set forth in the notes on Acts iii. 15, and Heb. xii. 2.—ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτ. αὐτῶν. The last word is absent from one MS. the Codex Sinait. Covell., which Dr. Mill thought the true reading of the Apostle; for 'quis sanus (asks he) illud αὐτῶν expunxerit?' True: but it might easily be omitted by accident in the case of one scribe, or it might be expunged by a rash Critic, who, having in mind Acts iii. 15, τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς ζωῆς, and Heb. xii. 2, τὸν τῆς πίστεως ἀρχ., thought that τῆς σωτ. should here be taken in its most extensive sense, of 'salvation generally.' But the context shows that there is a reference to 'the many sons' before spoken of, as the subject of the assertion. The passage is ably explained by Thom. Aquin., Hyper., Est., and Calv., from whose discussions it is clear that the αὐτῶν cannot be dispensed with.—Διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι. In παθημάτων there is reference not only to the death of Christ, but to those many sharp sufferings which preceded it. On the exact force and nature of the metaphor in τελειῶσαι some difference of opinion exists, which may be best adjusted by considering its mode of signif. and how that arises. Now τελειοῦν properly signifies 'consummare,' to render perfect. But there is also sometimes, and may here be, inherent in the term a notion of reward and felicity,—derived, probably, from the agonistical metaphor above, with reference to reaching the goal and receiving the prize. Hence he who proclaims the victor and bestows the prize is said τελειοῦν τινα, and those who receive it are said τελειοῦσθαι, made τέλειος, 'to be consummated' (so infra xii. 23 we have δικαίων τετελειωμένων); an idea very applicable to CHRIST, who 'for the glory that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame.' Whether the allusion may be brought in here, very much depends on the sense to be assigned to τελειῶσαι. If that of 'consecrare' be adopted, with several eminent Expositors, from Calv. to Schmid and Kuttm., it cannot. But that 'consecrare' must be admitted as the sense here, has been ably evinced by Hyper. and Est. They have proved, from an able examination of the preceding context, and tracing of the course of reasoning, that the sense of τελ. must be consummare, or perfectum reddere. The sense of the whole passage is ably laid down by Est. thus: 'Deus, qui rerum omnium finis et auctor est, ideoque sapientissimus, judicavit, hoc quam maxime decere, ut, postquam aut quoniam multos filios suos per multarum adversitatum tolerantiam ad gloriam adduxerat, similiter etiam auctorem eternae salutis illorum, id est, Filium suum naturalem per afflictiones ipsarumque crucem consummaret, hoc est, ad consummatam gloriam perduceret.' If this be regarded, as it justly may, the true interpretation, the agonistical allusion may have place: but whether the Apostle had in mind the agonistical expression, is more than I would pronounce. See more on this important term τελειῶσαι in the note on the kindred passage infra vii. 28.

11. Ὁ τε γὰρ ἀγιάζων—ἐξ ἑοῦ The γὰρ refers to some words left to be mentally supplied; q. d. '[I say many sons] for the Sanctifier and the sanctified are alike sons of our Father, God.' Both are sons of God, but in different ways; one, as of the same substances with the Father; the others, as creatures; see Theophyl. Whether at ἐξ ἑοῦ there be supplied γένους, or πατρὸς, matters not, since, as Est. shows, it comes to the same thing; or rather we may say the two senses merge into one, as Est. himself seems to have perceived, who, after ably tracing the logic thus, 'Plenius id quod dixit, probat, scil. decuisse Deum ut Filium suum per passionem consummaret. Est autem probatio talis. Christus a Deo constitutus est Pontifex, qui, oblato sacrificio, sanctificaret, i. e. a peccatis emundaret ac Deo reconciliaret genus humanum,' subjoins 'Atqui Sacerdos sanctificans, et populus, qui sanctificatur, ex uno sunt, i. e. ex eadem natura humana vel (rather 'adeoque') ex uno primo parente.' The sense of ἀγιάζων and ἀγιαζόμενος involves a much debated question. I am, however, on reconsideration, inclined to think the interpretation 'the Expiator and the expiated,' though ably supported by Ernesti, Kuttm., Kuin., and Stuart, scarcely tenable. The true and full sense of ἀγιάζων and ἀγιαζέται here is ably shown by Theophyl.: to whom add Ecumen. on 2 Pet. i. 5. Prof. Ebrard observes that ἀγιάζειν here denotes 'the total act by which Christ withdraws his own people from the natural life of death, and places them in the sphere of a new life,' which rests upon his atoning death, has its source in his resurrection, consists in the appropriation of salvation through repentance, faith, and renewal of life, and will at one time be perfected in sinlessness and glorification. The other and stricter ἐξ ἐνὸς πάντες δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοὺς καλεῖν, <sup>13</sup> λέγων Ἀπαγγελῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς ἀδελ- h Ps. 22. 22.

φοῖς μου, ἐν μέσῳ ἐκκλησίας ὑμνήσω σε. καὶ πάλιν 1 Isa. 8. 18.
Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι πεποιθὼς ἐπ' αὐτῷ <sup>13</sup> καὶ πάλιν Ἰδοὺ John 10. 30.
ἐγὼ, καὶ τὰ παιδία ἃ μοι ἔδωκεν ὁ Θεός. <sup>14</sup> Ἐπεὶ 17. 9.
οὖν τὰ παιδία κεκοινώνηκε σαρκὸς καὶ αἵματος, καὶ αὐτὸς παρα- 11, 12.
πλησίως μετέσχε τῶν αὐτῶν, ἵνα διὰ τοῦ θανάτου καταργήσῃ m Isa. 26. 8.
Hos. 13. 14.
John 1. 14.
1 Cor. 15.
Phil. 2. 7.
3 Tim. 1. 10.

signif. of ἀγιάζειν, in which it denotes 'the special renewal of life proceeding from faith (John xvii. 17. Comp. Heb. xii. 14), belongs to the third usage of ἅγιος. See 1 Pet. i. 16.' However, I do not see why this stricter sense of ἀγιάζειν should not be brought in here, since Faith itself is the gift of God, through Christ, and the teaching of the Spirit. See Matt. xiii. 11, ὑμῖν δίδεται γινῶναι τὰ μυστήρια, &c., where see note. And this view is nearly that taken by Dr. Peile, in whose Paraphrase there is much to approve, and something to pause at. See also Calv. By the expression οὐκ ἐπαισχ. is implied (as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) the infinite superiority of Christ to the human nature. 'For if Christ (as Stuart remarks) were merely a man, where would be his condescension in calling men his brethren? whereas, if he possessed a higher nature, and ἐκίνωσεν αὐτόν, μορφῇ δούλου λαβὼν (Phil. ii. 7, 8), then, indeed, it was great condescension to call men his brethren.' See more in the able notes of Calv. and Est.

12. The truth of the above position is now confirmed from the Scriptures of the Old Test.—λέγων, &c. Render: 'inasmuch as He (i. e. Christ) saith, or may be supposed to say, while on earth, I will,' &c. For ἀπαγγελῶ the Sept. has the synonyme διηγῆσμαι. That this Psalm relates to the Messiah, the best Commentators, Jewish as well as Christian, are agreed. Indeed, as Stuart remarks, 'the history of his death seems a kind of practical commentary thereon; and there is nothing which forbids the application of it to the Messiah, but quite enough to show that it is inapplicable to David.' The term ἐκκλησία signifies properly, in the Jewish sense, 'the assembly of the nation congregated at Jerusalem;' but in the Christian sense, as here, the assembly of the faithful, which forms the Church Universal.

13. The citations in this verse are by some supposed to be from Ps. xviii. 3, or from 2 Sam. xxii. 3. The Psalm, however, contains no allusion to the MESSIAH; the best Commentators are now agreed that both citations are from Isa. viii. 17, 18, and of which, as observes Dind., 'there could have been no doubt as to the thing, but for the second καὶ πάλιν, which some thought could not be meant of the same passage. At x. 30, however, there is an exactly similar case.' The argument (says Stuart) is this: Men exercise trust or confidence in God. This is predicated of them as dependent, and possessing a feeble nature. The same thing is predicated of the Messiah, and consequently he possesses a nature like theirs, and therefore they are his brethren; 'nay, 'his children,' whom he calls such, John xiii. 33. xxi. 5. are those whom God had given him, John xvii. 9, 24.' I regret that my narrow limits will not enable me to do more than refer my readers to the masterly note of Calv. in defence of the Apostle's application of this text.

14. ἵνα οὖν τὰ παιδία] Here Paul, sumo more, skilfully takes up the word 'children' from the preceding verse, and makes use of it to evince the moral fitness of Christ's suffering; meaning, of course, by παιδ., 'the true spiritual children of Christ' thus, 'Forasmuch, then, as the children are all of one flesh and blood, He also himself, in like manner, became partakers with them of the same fleshly nature.—παρὰ πλησίως, not 'in a similar manner,' but, by an idiom frequent in the best writers, 'in the same manner' (so Demosth., Olynth. iii., παρὰ πλησίως καὶ ὁμοίως, and Thucyd. i. 14, ὁμοία καὶ παρὰ πλησίως); which, of course, implies really and truly, not in appearance only, as the Docetæ perversely explained the word. The next words, down to the end of v. 15, show the grounds on which the foregoing assertion rests. 'That (observes Ebrard) which stands in the way of our becoming sons of God, and which must first be removed, is death, or,—as the author here more specially describes it,—the being subject to the kingdom of darkness and the Prince of this kingdom, who has the power of death. This bondage of death could be removed only by our guilt being atoned for through the sacrificial death of Christ. In order to this, however, it was necessary that He should become a member of that humanity which took its rise from the first Adam.' Render: 'in order that he might by his [own] death put down, and deprive of his power, him who hath the power of death, namely, the Devil.'—καταργ. is here used as at the kindred passage of 2 Tim. i. 10. Here, however, the Apostle, instead of τὸν θάνατον, employs the expression τὸ κράτος, &c. suitably, Kuinoel thinks, to the preceding imagery; or, rather, for the reason suggested by Ebrard, because Jesus by his death has not freed us from death absolutely;—the death of the body remains, but its sting has been taken away; hence the Apostle speaks not of the taking away of death, but of the cessation of the power of death; because, as the words of v. 15 suggest, 'Christ has released those who through fear of death were all their lives subject to bondage.' In the words τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, there may be, as is commonly supposed, a reference to the history of the Fall in Gen. iii. 15: and thus the Devil, as being the author of sin and of death also (the latter as introduced by the former), may be said figuratively to have the power of death, and that not only temporal, but eternal; for as 'the wages of sin is death,' the Devil, by leading men into sin, brings them under the sentence of death. Comp. 1 John iii. 8. But by his own death, our Lord, offering himself up for τὸν τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, τούτεστι τὸν Διάβολον, n Luke i. 74. 15 n καὶ ἀπαλλάξῃ τούτους, ὅσοι φόβῳ θανάτου διὰ παντὸς τοῦ

 Rom. 8. 16. ζῆν ἔνοχοι ἦσαν δουλείας. 16 Οὐ γὰρ δὴ πον ἀγγέλων ἐπιλαμo Phil. 2. 7, βάνεται, ἀλλὰ σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ ἐπιλαμβάνεται. 17 ° Οθεν ch. 4. 15, 16. ὥφειλε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ὁμοιωθῆναι, ἵνα ἐλεῆμων & 5. 1, 2. γένηται καὶ πιστὸς ἀρχιερεὺς τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, εἰς τὸ ἰλάσκε-p ch. 4. 15, σθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ. 18 ° Ἐν ᾧ γὰρ πέπονθεν αὐτὸς 16. πειρασθεὶς, δύναται τοῖς πειραζομένοις βοηθῆσαι.

the expiation of our sins, destroyed the causes of eternal death, even sin.

15. καὶ ἀπαλλάξῃ—δουλείας] The full sense is: 'and [by bringing life and immortality to light] might deliver those whose continual fear of death had placed them, as it were, in a state of slavery to an inexorable tyrant.' 'Ἀπαλλ. signifies metaph. 'to set free from any thing that holds one hampered, as from evils, labours, &c., and sometimes even the fear of coming evils. Here it is used absolutely (as in Soph. Ant. 596, οὐδ' ἀπαλλάσσει γενεάν ἔνός—οὐδ' ἔχει μίαν λύσιν), though by an ellip. of δουλείας, or such like, expressed in Hdot. i. 175, meaning the setting free from the chains of that fear of spiritual death, which must hold souls unreconciled to God through Christ, who came to preach 'redemption to the captives.' That this is not an overcharged representation will appear, when we figure to ourselves the state of mind of the unrepentant sinner, when the very thought of death comes home to him. But the Apostle says still further, that 'Christ has put down him who had the power of this death—the Devil,—and who held and exercised it against us in the way above pointed out. It is true, that by θανάτου many Expositors understand only 'the dissolution of the body'; but that is a very shallow view; and we must, with the ablest Expositors, as Calv., Hyper., Beza, and Est., take it of death temporal and spiritual, both 'the first and the second death,' as it is called in Rev. ii. 11; not only the separation of the body from the soul in this life, but the eternal separation of body and soul, united, from the presence and favour of God in another world, most significantly expressed in 2 Thess. i. 9, by δεδεικναι αἰῶνας ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ. Indeed, it is not simply the ceasing to be, 'the shuffling off this mortal coil,' that alarms men; for, as Bacon observes, 'there is no passion so weak, that does not overcome the fear of death—love, revenge, grief, fear, and even satiety.' But it is, as our great Dramatic Poet expresses it, 'the dread of something after death.' This it is which 'makes cowards of us all.' In short, the great 'sting of death is sin' (see 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57), from which we can alone be delivered by faith in Jesus Christ.—Ἐνοχος is here put for εισέχουσιν, subject, lit. held bound. The physical sense is very rare, but it occurs in the Anthol. Gr. i. 179, ἐπ' ἀγκύρας ἔνοχον βάρος. The phrase ἔνοχος εἶναι δουλείας corresponds to ἐγγὺς δουλείας ἐνέχασθαι at Gal. v. 1.

16. οὐ γὰρ—ἐπιλαμβάν.] The difficulty, which has occasioned some diversity of interpretation, hinges on the term ἐπιλαμβάν., which is by the Greek Commentators and the earlier modern Expositors interpreted 'assumes the nature of.' But this sense is neither agreeable to the verba loquendi, nor suitable to the context. The best Interpreters have been long agreed in explaining, 'helps,' 'assists,' in reference to the work of redemption, as one of infinite mercy (Luko i. 72, 78), a gracious 'help in time of need' (infra, iv. 16), here represented under the image of a helping hand held out to uphold the footsteps of a sinking wayfarer; comp. Ps. xvii. 5. Acts xiii. 18, ἡτοροφόρησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἰρήμῳ, comp. with Deut. i. 18, and Numb. xi. 12. Thus, then, the term will correspond to βοηθῆσαι at ver. 18. Render: 'He doth not [thus] assist angels, he is not their Redeemer.' Here, then (as Stuart observes) is meant to be adduced another reason why Christ took on him a nature that was human; namely, because he came to succour men, not angels, and consequently was made like unto men, in order that he might the better be enabled to feel for, and help him. By the expression σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ may be understood either the natural (meaning the Jews) or the spiritual seed of Abraham, the Gentiles; it being true of either; and though, as the writer is addressing Jews, the former is more to the purpose, yet the latter may be included.

17, 18. These verses contain an inference from the foregoing.—ὥς, 'whence,' i. e. because he was to be their helper and redeemer.—κατὰ πάντα ὁμ., 'to be in every respect, in the same condition' (i. e. as far as extended to the human nature, its innocent infirmities and amiable sympathies), with the Jewish High Priest, and as having offered up himself a sacrifice for sin. The epithets here applied to him, ἐλεῆμων and πιστός, are used with reference to his character of Priest, in relation to God and to man respectively. As regarded God, he would be faiithful in discharging the duty of his office of atonement; and to his fellow-men he would be compassionate, as one who could sympathize with the human frailties he had himself experienced, as intimated in the next words, εἰς τὸ ἰλάσκειν τὰς ἁμαρτίας τ. λ., which suggest the purpose of that priesthood,—namely, to expiate the sins of the people. How ἰλάσκειν comes to have this sense, see my Lex. in v.

18. ἐν ᾧ γὰρ πείρ.—βοηθ.] These words are intended to show why the being compassionate as well as being like unto his brethren, necessarily attached itself to the idea of such a High Priest. Render: 'for in that (forasmuch as) he hath suffered, having Himself been tempted by suffering (tried in the furnace thereof), He is able to succour them who are being tempted.' I find this view confirmed by the full discussion of Prof. Ebrard, who remarks, 'For, as Christ was a Rom. 15. 8.

III. 1<sup>a</sup> "Οθεν, ἀδελφοὶ ἄγιοι, κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου μέτοχοι, κατανόησατε τὸν ἀπόστολον καὶ ἀρχιερέα τῆς ὁμολογίας ἡμῶν, [Χριστὸν] Ἰησοῦν<sup>2</sup> β πιστὸν ὄντα τῷ ποιήσαντι αὐτὸν, ὥς

Phil. 2. 11.
ch. 4. 14, 15.
a. 6. 20.
a. 8. 1.
a. 9. 11.
a. 10. 31.
b Num. 12. 7. ver. 5.

tempted precisely through suffering, and suffered in the being tempted, so it is evident that he "has suffered" in the same respects in which he was "tempted." The helping, therefore, refers just to those things in which the state of being tempted manifests itself.' This absolute construction of πειράζεσθαι is so rare, that I know of only one other ex., in Plut. de Discr. Adul. c. 8, δυσπραξία ληφθεὶς ἐκδόος ἐστὶ τῷ πειρωμένῳ, 'chimes in with one tried with affliction.' A parallel sentiment is found in Æschyl. Agam. 170, τὸν φρονεῖν βοροῦν δόσαντα, τὸν πάθει μάθος θίνα κυρίως ἔχειν. At the δύναται of the next words there is implied, with the power, the disposition, to succour,—an assertion founded on the common sentiment of every age, that experience of suffering peculiarly fits and disposes men to sympathize in it, and thus to succour the afflicted. So it is said by Philemon ap. Max. Tyr. lxiii. p. 93, 6, ἐκ τοῦ παθῆναι γίνωσκε καὶ τὸ συμπαθεῖν καὶ σοὶ γὰρ ἄλλος συμπαθήσεται παθών. And so Meleager in Anthol. Gr. i. p. 14, οἷδα παθὼν ἔλπειν, and Soph. Ed. Col. 1131, τοῖς γὰρ ἐμπείροις βοσῶν μόνους οἷόν τε συνταλαιπωρεῖν τάδε. Hence it is no wonder that, as an eminent Moralist observes, 'they fly for consolation and help to those who have known the touch of woe; the prosperous, as ignorant of their feelings, and therefore likely to be regardless of their complaints, they decline.'

III. In chaps. iii. and iv. the subject is the SON and MOSES. 'From what is said supra ii. 17, 18, the writer might have proceeded forthwith to the comparison of the New Test. Messiah, as the perfect High Priest, with the imperfect High Priest of the Old Covenant. But, after a brief recapitulation in ch. iii. 1, of what is proved in the preceding,—namely, that Christ unites the office of a High Priest with that of a perfect Messenger of God to men, he suddenly breaks off at v. 2 into a comparison of Christ with Moses. This is not the result of caprice, but of intrinsic necessity.' Thus far Professor Ebrard, who proceeds to point out how it arose; and then, after observing that vv. 1, 2 form the transition, remarks that 'the transition takes the form of an exhortation; and the link of the connexion is, he thinks, in the words ἀπόστολος and ἀρχιερεὺς, in which the substance of the train of thought in chaps. i. ii. is recapitulated, in order, from that point, to proceed further.' Paul addresses them by the title ἀδελφοὶ ἄγιοι, inasmuch as they are (which the next words suggest) 'called to be holy.' The expression is unusual, and occ. elsewhere only in 1 Thess. v. 27.—ἐπουρανίου is for οὐρανίου (comp. Phil. iii. 14, τῆς ἀπὸ κλήσεως), meaning that the calling is from heaven.—i. e. from God (through Christ, the Caller, 1 Pet. ii. 9. 2 Pet. i. 3, who is in heaven, John ii. 13),—by a call to heaven, even to the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven. To the proximate object of the verb *κατα*ν., namely, Ἰησοῦν, are affixed the attributes τὸν ἀπόστ. καὶ ἀρχ. τ. ὁμ. ἡμῶν, of which the former designates Christ as 'legatus Dei, et interpres vo- luntatis ejus' (as in John iii. 34. x. 36. xiii. 16. xx. 21. Heb. i. 1), and is adopted because of the comparison with Moses, who was such; in the latter there is a tacit comparison with Aaron, the first High Priest, and such κατ' ἔξοχον. The sentiment is generally supposed to be this: that 'as Aaron was the ἀρχιερεὺς of the old and imperfect covenant, so is Christ of the new and better one, who is therefore of higher dignity, making that real atonement for men, of which the sacrifice offered by the High Priest was only the type.' This is very true; but the notion of a covenant is only by implication, and to be sought in the term ῥημα., which, according to its use in the New Test., is 'confession,' or 'profession,' of Christ as our Lord. And thus it may well denote 'the faith itself,' as Chrysa., Theophyl., and Theodor. explain it. And so Dr. Burton, who remarks, that the Jews call the High Priest their 'Apostle,' and 'the Apostle of God.' And our Lord, in John v. 38. vi. 29, 39. viii. 42, and xvii. 18, speaks of himself as 'sent by the Father.' Est. well shows why ῥημα was used, and not πιστ., because there is an allusion to the confession of faith in baptism. 'Erat ergo (he goes on to say) Christus confessionis eorum Apostolus, quia doctrinam fidei, quam tenebant et profitebantur, ipse per se eis annuntiaverat. Erat ei Pontifex confessionis ipsorum, quoniam et hoc Pontificis est, veris religionis doctrinam populo confitendam tradere.' And so Calvin. There is great weight in the term κατανόησατε, which is miserably lowered and debased by Ebrard, though ably set forth by Calv., and, after him, by Est. Here ἡμῶν is emphatic; there being here an indirect comparison between Moses the ἀπόστολος, as also Aaron the ἀρχιερεὺς, of the Jews, and CHRIST, who is such in regard to all believers; and for that very reason, as above pointed out, it is better to take ῥημα., to signify 'the faith, or doctrine, confessed, or professed.'

2. πιστὸν ὄντα] Here is subjoined a new quality, brought under attentive consideration,—the fidelity of Jesus in the discharge of all the duties of his office, as ἀπόστ. and ἀρχ. The next words, ἐν ᾧ τῷ οἴκῳ αὐτοῦ, here and at v. 5, are formed on Num. xii. 7, οὐχ οὕτως ὁ θεράπων μου Μωϋσῆς ἐν ᾧ τῷ οἴκῳ μου πιστός ἐστι. Ebrard, with several Editors and Expositors, would place a comma after Μωϋσ., and then refer the words ἐν ᾧ, &c., to πιστὸν ὄντα. 'Logically (adds Ebrard) the sentence would of course have extended thus: Ἰησοῦς πιστός ἐστιν τῷ ποιήσαντι αὐτὸν ἐν ᾧ τῷ οἴκῳ αὐτοῦ, ὅς καὶ Μωϋσῆς πιστός ἦν ἐν ᾧ τῷ οἴκῳ αὐτοῦ, and all that is meant is, that each was faithful in the sphere of office, or duty, appointed to him.' True; but that does not render the change of punctuation necessary. From the context it is plain that οἴκῳ must, as being applied both to Moses and to Christ, mean family (including the more definite idea of Church), or, as respects the Jews, nation; for the Jewish nation is considered as God's family, and is so called in Amos iii. 1. As applied to Christ, it c Zech. 6. 12.

Matt. 16. 18.
3 Cor. 6. 17.
d Eph. 2. 10.
e Deut. 18.
15. 18.
ver. 2.
f ch. 1. 2.
Matt. 24. 13.
3 Cor. 6. 16.
Eph. 2. 21.
22.
ch. 10. 35.
Col. 1. 22.

καὶ Μωϋσῆς ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκῇ αὐτοῦ. <sup>3</sup> Πλείονος γὰρ δόξης οὗτος παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἡξίωται, καθ' ὅσον πλείονα τιμὴν ἔχει τοῦ οἴκου ὁ κατασκευάσας αὐτόν <sup>4</sup> (ἡ πᾶς γὰρ οἶκος κατασκευάζεται ὑπὸ τινός· ὁ δὲ τὰ πάντα κατασκευάσας, Θεός.) <sup>5</sup> Καὶ Μωϋσῆς μὲν πιστὸς ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκῇ αὐτοῦ ὡς θεράπων, εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαληθησομένων <sup>6</sup> Ἰησοῦς δὲ, ὡς υἱὸς ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ must denote the great Family of Christians comprehended in the visible Church. See Eph. iii. 15.

3. πλείονος γὰρ, &c. The γὰρ, which is not argumentative, but simply intensive, connects with κατανοήσατε, &c., introducing another point of view, in which Christ is greatly superior to Moses. On the exact nature, however, of the parallel, some difference of opinion exists. The point of comparison here intended between Moses and Christ (involving the superiority of the latter) most probably consists in this,—that while Moses was curator, he was also θεράπων; but while Christ was curator, he was at the same time υἱὸς and κατασκευαστὴς οἴκου.

4. πᾶς γὰρ οἶκος—Θεός In the interpretation of this passage Commentators differ very widely, and that from a certain difficulty, not so much in the words themselves, as in tracing their connection and bearing upon the context. Most Expositors, from Whitby to Stuart, suppose the words to be an argument to show the superiority of Christ over Moses, by evincing that Jesus is God: a view supported by the following able discussion of the course of argument by Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 813: 'This passage represents the constitution of revealed religion, in the different modes of its administration and progress, under the figure of a well-arranged domestic establishment. Of this establishment God, the Supreme Father, is the primary Author and Sovereign Head (ὁ ποιήσας): it is, therefore, throughout, called his household. In describing the arrangements of the household, the Apostle pursues a train of resemblances and differences between Moses, the leading person under one administration, and Christ, the Chief of the other. Moses was appointed to his station by competent authority; so was Christ. Moses was faithful to his charge; so is Christ. Moses was (θεράπων) an attendant or ministering officer, and therefore, eminent and dignified as was his station, he was only a servant; but Christ is the Son of the Sovereign Lord and Supreme Father of this holy family. Moses was a part of the household; but Christ was (ὁ κατασκευάσας) the immediate Constructor of the establishment. Moses was honoured suitably to his capacity; Christ had higher honour, in proportion to the superiority of the Lord above the domestic; and, since he is the Constructor of "all the things," (all the parts and arrangements of this economy,) he is God.'—To advert to a minute matter of reading. Six uncials, and a few cursive MSS. have πάντα without the τὰ, which is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; but not on good grounds, since the external authority for the omission is very slender; and internal evidence is against it, considering that, from the sense intended being plainly, 'the whole of the things in the universe,' propriety required the Article; a propriety, I believe, elsewhere invariably observed by St. Paul, e.g. 1 Cor. viii. 6, ἄξ οὐ τὰ πάντα, and xv. 28, ὑποτάξ ἑαυτὸν τὰ πάντα. See espec. Col. i. 16, ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, also τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ, supra ii. 10, δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα (sine var. lect.). And although, at Col. i. 16, Lachm. cancels, on slender authority, the τὰ in both places where it occurs, yet Tisch. retains it. In fact, in almost all the passages where the expression τὰ πάντα occurs, some few MSS. are without the Article, doubtless from its being omitted through carelessness on the part of the scribes.

5, 6. θεράπων here is opposed to υἱὸς a little after; though the term is properly opposed to κύριος, as denoting 'one who despatches any business as assistant to, or under the direction of, the principal;' i.e. the κύριος, and is synonymous with οἰκονόμος. Since, however, υἱὸς has been shown to be tantamount to κύριος, there is no anomaly. The next words, εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαληθ. state the object of Moses' service; namely, to deliver to the people what was to be promulgated and taught from God in the religion intended to be introductory to a more perfect dispensation. Such, at least, is the sense, if μαρτ. be taken (with most recent Expositors) to denote instruction; but if it be understood as bearing the more usual interpretation of testimony, the meaning will be 'the commission of Moses was merely to bear witness to the higher revelation which was afterwards to be made by Christ.'—Εἰς μαρτ. is for εἰς τὸ μαρτυρεῖν, 'in order to teach, or give directions;' see Kuin.—Υἱὸς may be, as Theophyl. says, for υἱὸς καὶ ἀληθοσύμης, equiv. to κύριος. From the structure of the words it is plain that πιστὸς ἦν must here be repeated. The opposition, too, is not only between θεράπων and υἱὸς, or κύριος, but between ἐν τῇ οἰκῇ and ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον, to show the difference between Moses and Christ. The former was part of the family; the latter over the family, in quality of Lord thereof.

6. Of the subsequent words, οὗ οἴκου ἱσμεν ἡμεῖς—κατασχόμεν, no one has traced the connexion so ably as Calv., who, after pointing out a turn similar to one at Rom. i. 6, ἐν οἷς ἵσμεν καὶ ἡμεῖς κλητοὶ 'I. Xp., remarks that 'so does the writer here exhort the Jews who had embraced the Gospel, that they should persevere in the faith, whereby they might be reckoned of the family of God.'—Dixerat prius, Christi imperio domum Dei subiectam esse. Huic sententiae commodum addidit haec admonitio, tunc eos in Dei familiā locum habituros, si Christo parent.' Dr. Peile well observes, that 'the nearness of the interest in Christ's Sonship and inheritance, which they have not only as his household, but his family, the Apostle proclaims, when he adds, "whose family and household we are, so far forth as we are holding &c." But why not render ἱσμεν by 'if so be?' which is required to express the condition limitative, well pointed οὐ οἶκος ἐσμεν ἡμεῖς, ἐάντερ τὴν παρρησίαν καὶ τὸ καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν κατέσχωμεν. <sup>7</sup> Διὸ, καθὼς λέγει <sup>1</sup> 1 Sam. 23.

Ps. 96. 7.
ver. 15.
8 & 7.
Exod. 17.
2 Num. 30. 13. τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, <sup>8</sup> μὴ σκληρύνετε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ, κατὰ τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ πειρασμοῦ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. <sup>9</sup> οὐ ἐπείρασάν με οἱ πατέρες ὑμῶν, ἐδοκίμασάν με καὶ εἶδον τὰ ἔργα μου τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη <sup>10</sup> διὸ προσώχθισα τῇ γενεῇ ἐκείνῃ, καὶ εἶπον out by Calvin., and adopted by Ebrard, who thinks it forms the transition to the exhortation in vv. 7—10. Render, 'if so be that we do but hold fast, &c.' It is true that MSS. A, C, D<sup>2</sup>, E<sup>2</sup>, J, K, and 2 cursives (for the alii of Scholz are imaginary) are without the πῆρ, which is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; but wrongly; being opposed to internal evidence, since it was far more likely to be omitted than added. Moreover, ἐάντερ occurs also at ver. 14, and ch. vi. 3, though it is confined to this Epistle. The words μὴχρι τέλους βεβαίαν are cancelled by Tisch., but only on the authority of the Vat. MS. B, the Æthiop. Version, and the Fathers Lucif. and Ambrose,—an authority quite insufficient to warrant more than the bracketing of the words, which may have been introduced from ver. 14. But it is of some importance to ascertain the force of the term, which, in this limitative condition, expresses what it is that we are 'to hold fast.' Dr. Peile thinks that τὴν παρρ. means 'the freedom,' or 'privilege' which we have of sons born in God's house; and that τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπ. just after denotes 'exultation of hope'; a very specious interpretation, somewhat countenanced by Rom. v. 2. viii. 21, but, I apprehend, untenable. I am still of opinion that the term παρρησία has reference to the ὁμολογία, or profession of faith, supra v. 1, and ch. iv. 14, which, to be of any avail, must be made in confidencis; comp. x. 35, ἡ ἀποβόλη τῆς παρρησίας ὑμῶν. This view is mainly confirmed by the suffrage of Ebrard, who thinks that 'it is nothing else than the πίστις itself in its most direct and practical expression.' This is so far true, as that πίστις is the animating principle, whence issues the fruit out of the open confession of faith. As to the accompanying expression, καὶ τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπ., it seems added to qualify the idea contained in παρρ., as not only 'a sure confidence,' but a 'joyfully hopeful one.' Βεβαίαν is made to agree with παρρ., as being the more important term; and, perhaps, to intimate the necessity of the profession so made being steadfastly adhered to. So that there is no occasion to call in (with Est.) the grammatical Θεὸς ἀπὸ μηχανῆς—the zeugma, here.

7. The foregoing clause οὐ οἶκος—τέλους is skilfully employed as a vinculum, to connect, with the παρρησία there mentioned, an exhortation (extending to iv. 11) to constancy in the profession of a religion which furnishes such a joyful hope. In order to lay a foundation for it, and to give additional weight to the admonition, there are adduced the words of Ps. xc. 7—11. Many eminent Expositors indeed refer διὸ to βλέπετε at ver. 12, regarding the intermediate portion as parenthetical. That, however, is not a little harsh; and it is better, with Heinr., Dind., and Kuin., to refer it to μὴ σκληρύνετε at ver. 8, in the sense, 'Wherefore as the Holy Spirit speaks by the Prophet (whose words I make my own), To-day that ye have heard' = 'in which it shall be that ye have heard;' as Dr. Peile has well rendered the words. The word σήμερον is emphatical; meaning, 'at this very time,' namely, of the admonition, ἀρχὴ οὐ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται (see also iv. 7), since that alone is the 'day of salvation.' See 2 Cor. vi. 2, compared with John ix. 4.

8. μὴ σκληρύνετε τὰς καρδ. q. d. 'Be not obstinate and disobedient, as were your forefathers, by their murmurings [at Massah and Meribah], i. e. from their rebellion there, and the consequent provocation of God. See Ps. xc. 7, &c. The words ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ are well rendered by Kuin.: 'ut [olim] factum loco, qui a rebellione dicitur, tempore tentationis in deserto factus;' and he shows that, even in the Psalm, Meribah and Massah are not used as proper names, though that use be hinted at; and that the place where the provocation and temptation occurred was in fact called by Moses Massah and Meribah, as appears from Exod. xvii. 7. Moreover, the use of the words as appellatives was more adapted to the purpose of the Epistle, namely, admonition. The Article is here used κατ' ἔξοχην; for though the Jews provoked and tried the patience of God throughout the whole of their journey through the wilderness (six particular provocations being mentioned, Exod. xvi. 2. xvii. 2—9. xxxii. 10. Numb. xi. 32. xiv. 29. Deut. i. 34, seqq.), yet the occasion in question was the last and most signal instance, when God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest.

9. ἐπείρασάν με—ἐδοκίμασάν με] The με after ἐπείρ. is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch.; and for ἐδοκ. με they edit ἐν δοκιμασίᾳ. There is the same authority of uncial MSS. A, B, C, D, E, for both alterations, and they both evidently proceeded from the same workshop, that of licentious alteration, under the guise of improvement; which may be supposed to have here had for its purpose the removal of a seeming roughness of style; though it is no other than a certain harshness, highly suitable to indignant remonstrance. In ἐδοκίμασαν (i. e. 'put him to proof, to see what he would do') there may be a climax.—καὶ εἶδον may be rendered (as it is by Dr. French, in his translation of this Psalm) 'although they had seen;' which is required by the Hebrew וַיֵּדְעוּ; and this sense of καὶ, like that of the Hebrew ו, is not unfrequent. By ἔργα are denoted 'the wonderful works' wrought for their preservation and protection in Egypt, and their continual sustenance in the desert.

10. προσώχθισα] On further consideration,

Ἀεὶ πλανῶνται τῇ καρδίᾳ· αὐτοὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὰς ὁδοὺς μου <sup>11</sup> ὥς ὤμοσα ἐν τῇ ὀργῇ μου· εἰ εἰς-ελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου. <sup>12</sup> Βλέπετε, ἀδελφοί, μήποτε ἔσται ἐν τινὶ ὑμῶν καρδιά ποιηρὰ ἀπιστίας, ἐν τῇ ἀποστήναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζώντος <sup>13</sup> ἀλλὰ παρακαλεῖτε ἑαυτοὺς καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν, ἄχρις οὗ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται, ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ * ἐξ ὑμῶν τις ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἁμαρτίας <sup>14</sup> μέτοχοι γὰρ γεγόναμεν τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐάν περ τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστάσεως μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν κατὰσχωμεν. <sup>15</sup> Ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι-

† Num. 14.
 21.
 Deut. 1. 34.

κ ch. 10. 34.
 Rom. 7. 11.

1 ver. 6.
 ch. 4. 14.
 Rom. 8. 17.

m ver. 7.

I see reason to reject the nautical metaphor here recognized by some lexicographers and philologists; and I now rather agree with those who, deriving the term from ἄχθος, suppose it to be a metaphor taken from bearing a heavy burden until one is weary of bearing it. Thus it occurs frequently in the Sept. to express the Heb. יָרַח, and has the sense to be weary of, involving a conjoint notion of hatred and loathing. See note on Acts xiii. 18. In this fig. sense the term also occurs at Eccles. i. 27, ἐν δυνάμει ἰδύσαι προσ-ῶχθισεν ἡ ψυχὴ μου, and Lev. xxvi. 43. And so the simple verb is used in Hom. II. i. 570.—αἰὶ πλαν. τ. καρδία-μου. Render: 'ever are they wandering [from me] at heart (see Isa. xxix. 3); they, moreover, have no knowledge of my ways, or doings.' So Est. well expresses the sense thus, 'Opera potentie, bonitatis, et justitie mee, quæ coram eis feci in Ægypto, in mari rubro, et in deserto, quæ cæcitate cordis non consideraverunt, nec eorum rationem habuerunt, ut mihi crederent.'—πλαν. τῇ καρδίᾳ is a strong expression, like that in Isocr. ὕμᾱς ταῖς διαβολαῖς πλανᾶσθαι. Indeed, καρδία here may be understood of 'the affections,' as appears from the words following, which are illustrative; and ἔγνωσαν implies not simple ignorance, but 'the not caring to know, nay even disapproval, as far as they might know.' 'Aei here has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew, but was added by the Sept. to strengthen the sense; and it is justified by the τεσσ. ἔτη to which it adverts.

11. αἰ εἰσελεύσονται, &c.] On the force here of εἰ see note at Mark viii. 12.—τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου, meaning, 'the rest which I had provided for them;' that of the heavenly Canaan. The term is combined with κληρονομία in Deut. xii. 9.

12. 'Here we have the exhortation contained in the foregoing passages of Scripture further enforced by various considerations. And first is deduced the important lesson, that they should not harden their hearts to the words of the Gospel.' (Hyper.)—βλέπετε, ἀδελφοί, &c. The general sense is, 'Beware, brethren, of an evil unbelieving heart, such as the Israelites possessed, lest, like them, you apostatize from the living God; lest you apostatize from the religion of Christ which he has required you to receive and maintain, and thus perish like ancient Israel, who revolted from God.' (Stuart.)

13. ἀλλὰ παρακαλεῖτε ἑαυτοὺς, &c.] Under the term παρακ. is, as Hyper. and Carpz. show, comprehended teaching, admonition, entreaty, consolation, reprehension, &c., each to be used as the case might suit. Here, then, we have intimated the important truth, that our faith is especially confirmed by mutual exhortation; implying, that as a means to prevent apostasy, they should thus mutually strengthen each other.—ἄχρις οὗ τὸ σήμερον καλ.] A forcible mode of expression, importing 'as long as it can be said, "To-day do so;"' or (to use the words of Dr. Burton), 'so long as you are allowed to consider the time still unexpired, in which God invites you to hear his voice.—ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ, &c. The full sense is; '[Use these means,] that none may, by neglect of them, be hardened and grow callous to all remonstrance.' Σκληρύνεσθαι prop. signif. 'to be so hard as not to yield to the pressure of the finger in touching,' and is here used figuratively of the obstinacy of unbelief. So Theophyl., δοκῶν τὰ πειρασμῶν σώματα καὶ σκληρὰ οὐκ εἶναι ταῖς τῶν λατρῶν χερσίν οὕτω καὶ αἱ σκληρυνθεῖσαι ψυχὰς οὐκ ἀκούσι τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ. In ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἁμαρτίας the expression ἀμ. may be understood of that corruption of our nature (the φρόνημα τῆς σαρκός), which blinds the understanding, and, by giving undue weight to carnal reasonings, plunges men into unbelief, and thus into immorality, or, at least, into backsliding. For τις ἐξ ὑμῶν many ancient MSS. (including all the Lamb. and several Mus. copies), and the Ed. Princ., have ἐξ ὑμῶν τις, which I have now, in deference to the united judgment of all the Editors, from Griesb. to Tisch., received.

14. μέτοχοι γάρ, &c.] The γάρ refers, I conceive, to what was said at ver. 6, which seems implied as the subject of the exhortation at ver. 13, followed up here by a necessary warning, lest, having begun well, they should end ill; 'no pretextu gratiæ (says Calv.), quam consequuti sunt, carnis indulgentia securitati, dicit, opus esse perseverantiam.' And to urge them to this, they are, as at v. 6, reminded of the condition on which alone they can be 'partakers of this so great salvation.' Of course, by μέτ. τοῦ Χρ. is denoted 'that spiritual union with Christ, which implies participation in the benefits of his Gospel; see John xiv. 11. xvii. 23, and 1 John i. 3.'—ἰδὲν περ has reference to the above implied sense in μέτοχοι, &c., suspending it on the conditional Particle, in which μόνον is implied.—ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστ. is for τὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπόστασιν or τὴν ὑπόστασιν τὴν πρώτην (as infra v. 12. John ii. 11), 'your first constancy in the profession of the Gospel;' lit. 'that firm foundation in faith, on which can alone be built constancy of profession;' the παρήρησαν βεβαίαν spoken of supr. v. 6.

15. ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι. Σήμ.] It is almost

“Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε,” — μὴ σκληρύνετε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ. <sup>16</sup> ὅτι τίνες γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρεπύκρναν; ἀλλ’ οὐ πάντες οἱ ἐξελθόντες ἐξ Αἰγύπτου διὰ Μωϋσέως; <sup>17</sup> ὅτι τίσι δὲ προσώχθισε τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη; οὐχὶ τοῖς ἀμαρτήσασιν, ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ; <sup>18</sup> ὅτι τίσι δὲ ὤμοσε μὴ εἰσελεύσεσθαι εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἀπειθήσασιν; <sup>19</sup> καὶ βλέπομεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν εἰσελθεῖν δι’ ἀπιστίαν. IV. <sup>1</sup> Φοβη-

n Num. 14.
4, 11, 24, 30.
Deut. 1. 30.
o Num. 14.
22, 27.
4, 20, 35.
Pa. 100, 90.
1 Cor. 10. 5.
Jude 8.
p Num. 14.
30.
Deut. 1. 34.

hopeless to trace out any regular connexion in the passage consisting of vv. 13, 14, 15, so deformed by asacolutha. One step towards it is to consider v. 14, with Bengel, Michael, and Peile, as parenthetic, and to refer ἐν τῷ λέγ., &c., to the words παρακαλεῖτε ἑαυτοὺς—ἵνα μὴ σκληρ. at v. 13, considered in their general substance of import; q. d. ‘Carry on with wary heedfulness this mutual exhortation and strengthening in the path of faith.—Do it at once, ἐν τῷ λέγ.’ Σήμε., even whilst it is being said (i. e. might be said among you one to another) in the voice of Scripture, for warning against delay, and exhortation to duty.’ The full sense of the adduced words of Scripture may be represented thus: ‘To-day if ye be disposed to hear his voice [hear it at once, and], harden not your hearts in the warning.’ Thus, following up the foregoing appeal; we may say ‘seize time by the forelock.’ Comp. Eccles. ix. 10, πάντα ὅσα ἀν’ οὐρῇ ἡ χεὶρ σου ποιῇσαι, ὡς ἡ δύναμις σου, ποιήσου, where I would read ὅση δύναμις σου, which is confirmed by the Hebr. תבצר. The instantier which the Vulg. employs in the place is only implied in the context.

16. The clauses of this verse are by most Commentators taken declaratively, in the sense expressed in our Common Version. Dind., Kuin., and Stuart, however, have shown that this is by no means agreeable to the design of the Apostle; which (as Stuart observes) ‘is, to lead the minds of the readers to consider the specific sin,—viz. unbelief, which occasioned the ruin of the ancient Israelites, and would involve their posterity in the like condemnation.’ The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the clauses are interrogative, and may be rendered, ‘Who now were those that, when they had heard the voice of the Lord (Deut. iv. 32. v. 25), did provoke [God]? Nay, were they not all those who came out of Egypt, under Moses’ guidance?’ q. d. ‘Yea, might I not ask, did not all who came out of Egypt do this?’ i. e. all but Joshua and Caleb; and indeed, popularly speaking, all. I find this confirmed by the able analysis of Ebrard, who remarks that at vv. 16—18 the proof of the foregoing is developed, and then in v. 15 the same thesis as we have supra 14; only in a negative form (that the Israelites, on account of their unbelief, came not into the rest) is repeated as a quod erat demonstrandum.

17, 18. Render: ‘with whom, further (δὲ), was it that he was disgusted (loathing their ways) for forty years? Was it not with those who had sinned; whose limbs (i. e. bodies) fell in the wilderness? Unto whom again (δὲ) did he swear, that they should not enter into his rest, but unto them that were disobedient?’ It is plain VOL. II.

that the sin of the Israelites was not so much unbelief in God, as distrust in him, by a sort of practical unbelief in his power to save them. I find this view confirmed by Ebrard, who remarks ‘that the chief and fundamental sin of the Israelites was that disobedience which refuses to be led in the gracious ways pointed out by God, arising from that distrust which induced the people to think that, in spite of God’s promises, it would not be possible for them to obtain possession of the promised land.’ In ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τ. ἔρ. there is a graphic representation of destruction by a violent death. Had, indeed, καταστροφή been substituted, as at 1 Cor. x. 5 (where see note), for ἔπεισε, it would, indeed, have been yet more so; but τίκτω, like the Hebr. יָצַק, of itself suggests the idea of prostration by a sudden and violent death. See Ez. vi. 11. Judg. iv. 22. 1 Sam. xxxi. 8. Κῶλα (which signifies the limbs, as apart from the trunk), is said by the Commentators to be put, by synecdoche, for the bodies themselves; but the usual sense may be retained, as being truer to nature (see Pa. cxl. 7), since we find from the accounts of Oriental travellers, that in places where human carcasses are found stretched, the κῶλα (the leg and arm bones) are soon all that are left entire by the wild beasts and birds.

19. καὶ βλέπομεν—δι’ ἀπιστίαν] Here the Apostle returns to the thesis which was to be proved. Render: ‘And so (= ‘so that’) we see that they could not enter [into the promised land] because of their disbelief in God’s Providence to bring them into the promised land; nay, even discredited the good account of the land brought by the spies, Numb. xiii. xiv.’ The best Expositors are of opinion that the ἠδυνήθησαν is to be taken populariter, the sense being simply this, ‘we see [by the story and the event] that the reason why they could not enter, was their disbelief; which, together with the sins springing from thence, made them unfit objects of the protection and favour of God; and thus their introduction to the promised land was so far impossible; as it is said at Mark vi. 5, οὐκ ἔδυνατο ἐκεῖ οὐδεμίαν δύναμιν ποιῆσαι διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν, meaning that ‘Christ could not, consistently with the rule on which he acted, of requiring faith in the subjects of the miracles.’ So, in the present case, that want of faith and trust which made these Israelites distrust the providence of God rendered them unfit objects of his favour, and made it, in that sense, impossible for God to confer it on them. See more in Calv., Hyper., and Est.

IV. The writer now treats the history allegorically (as in Gal. iii. 16. iv. 24), applying it Q q

θῶμεν οὖν, μή ποτε, καταλειπομένης ἐπαγγελίας εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν κατὰπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, δοκῇ τις ἐξ ὑμῶν ὑστερηκεῖναι. <sup>2</sup> Καὶ γὰρ ἔσμεν εὐηγγελισμένοι, καθάπερ κἀκεῖνοι· ἀλλ' οὐκ ὠφέλησεν ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς ἐκείνους, μὴ † συγκεκραμένος τῇ πίστει

to the case of Christians. (Dind.) He begins with declaring, that a promise of entering into God's rest is still made to Christians,—as it was to the people of Israel, vv. 1, 2,—and into which believers are still admitted, ver. 3. Now that the rest spoken of by the Holy Ghost in Ps. xcv. is not a mere temporal rest in the land of Canaan, but also a future and heavenly rest, is plain, inasmuch as God's rest is such a rest as God enjoyed when he had finished the work of creation, and consequently a spiritual, heavenly rest, vv. 3, 4; because the terms of the oath, 'they shall not enter into my rest,' imply that the promise included another rest besides that of Canaan, a rest resembling God's rest, ver. 5; because, since it remains that some must enter into the rest spoken of in the oath, and they to whom the promise was first given did not enter in by reason of disbelief, it follows that a rest must be intended into which all true believers may enter, and consequently a future and heavenly one, ver. 6; and because God, in the oath, warns the Israelites against losing this rest, a long time after they had been in possession of the promised land, and consequently he must have intended another rest than that of Canaan, vv. 7, 8. There remains, therefore, a spiritual and heavenly rest for the people of God, into which those who enter shall cease from their labours, as God did from his work of creation, vv. 9, 10. Hence follows the duty of labouring to enter into it, vv. 11—13.

1. φοβηθ. οὖν—ὕστερ.] Render: 'Let us then be afraid lest, though there be a promise left (us) of entering into his rest, any of you should be found (lit. 'be deemed') to have fallen short of it.' I find this view of the sense confirmed by the Pesch. Syr., Vulg., and Arab. Versions, and the best modern Expositors; and it also seems required by the context, and the usus linguae as to καταλ., which, as it is used by Polyb. oft. of a hope, by others of an inheritance, so may it of a promise; espec. since the promise here has reference to the heavenly inheritance. Besides, the sense 'a promise being still left,' is far more agreeable to the context, implying that the promised rest had not yet been enjoyed, but was left for others to enter upon. The above reading of δοκῇ is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version, and by Est. in an able paraphrase. However, the full sense is, 'should be deemed by the event,' a mild expression, intended to soften the harshness of the term ὕστερ., implying 'utter failure;' usually by neglect. On the κατὰπαυσιν here see note on Matt. xxv. 21.

2. καὶ γὰρ ἔσμεν εὐηγγέλ. meaning, 'for to us [Christians], too, has the blessed message, or proffered blessing [of a rest] been made, as well as to them.' On this allusion to the Gospel as a message, see note on Acts xiii. 32. In ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκ. we have a Hebraism for ὁ ἀκουσθεὶς λόγος, 'the word heard by them.' See Rom. ix. 6. 1 Thess. ii. 13. 'This word,' so heard, οὐκ ὠφέλησεν, 'did not profit them;' ωφέλ. is said in the next words, μὴ συγκ. τ. π. τ. ἀκούσ., where the sense depends on the reading. However, a difference of opinion exists both as to the reading and the interpretation of these words. Not inconsiderable is the variety of reading, though chiefly what concerns mere grammatical form, and this variety is between -μενος, -μενος, and -σμενος. The only material variations are between συγκεκραμένος and συγκεκραμένους, as between ἀκούσασιν and ἀκούσαντες, or ἀκούσαντων. With respect to the former, συγκεκραμένους, it is found in several uncials, and not a few cursive MSS., was by Weta. preferred, and received by Matth., and by Griesb.,—placed in the inner margin, by Lachm., by Tisch., ed. 1, adopted into the text, though in his 2nd ed. he has recalled the t. rec.; and very properly; for there is every reason to think that the changes arose partly from the difficulty found in perceiving the nature of the metaphor employed, partly in determining the construction and general sense of the words. Now, although external authority is in favour of συγκεκραμένους, or -σμενους, yet a tolerable number of MSS. (including Lamb. 1185, 1 m.) have συγκεκραμένους; and this reading has the support of the Syr., Vulg., Ital., and Arabic Versions, and several Fathers. Nor is the inequality fatal, since the terminations ος and ους are so similar in MS. characters, that one might easily be mistaken for the other; and in the present passage ος might easily be read as if ους, on account of the ἐκείνους just before, with which one would be very likely to connect it. Accordingly, internal evidence fully balances any inferiority in external authority. Besides this, the reading συγκεκραμένους, in whatever light we view it, is, as Dr. Owen shows, incapable of any satisfactory sense; for, as Mackn. truly observes, 'considering that Caleb and Joshua were the only persons who received this λόγος ἀκοῆς with faith, we cannot suppose that the Apostle would speak of the mixing of the whole congregation with them. Hence it may be presumed that ος—or is the true reading. Yet those who adopt ος—or are not agreed as to the sense and the nature of the metaphor. Those who render it mixed, or tempered, suppose here a metaphor taken either from compounding medicines, or from the coction of food, whereby the chyle is converted into blood. See Camer., Grot., and Owen. But this view, as applied to faith, involves no little incongruity; and, what is more, I have not been able, after diligent search, to find a single instance of the term συγκ. being used to denote 'mixing and tempering medicines,' or in any such medical or physical metaphor as has been here supposed. Hence it seems better to pass by the notion of mixing, or contempering, &c., and to suppose the equally frequent use of conjoining, blending by becoming perfectly united. So Plato, p. 889, and Soph. Aj. 895, οἷον συγκεκραμένην. Menand. ap. Stob. Flor. xiv. 8, δει—τὴν τοῦ λόγου μὴ δύναμιν οὐκ ἐπιφθονον, ἥδι δὲ χρῆστω συγκεκραμένην. Plut. Non Poss. Suav. c. 20, βέλτιον—τι συγκεκράσθαι τῇ περι θεῶν δόξῃ κοινὸν αἰδοῦν καὶ φόβον τοῖς ἀκούσασιν. <sup>3</sup> <sup>a</sup> Εἰσερχόμεθα γὰρ εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν οἱ πιστεύσαντες, καθὼς εἶρηκεν “Ὡς ὥμοσα ἐν τῇ ὀργῇ μου Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου” καίτοι τῶν ἔργων ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου γενηθέντων. <sup>4</sup> <sup>b</sup> Εἶρηκε γάρ <sup>b</sup> Gen. 2. 2. Exod. 30. 11. & 31. 17. που περὶ τῆς ἐβδόμης οὕτω Καὶ κατέπαυσεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ἐβδόμῃ ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ <sup>5</sup> καὶ ἐν τούτῳ πάλιν Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου. <sup>6</sup> Ἐπεὶ οὖν ἀπολείπεται τινας εἰσελθεῖν εἰς

πάθος. See more in my Lex. in v. Without attempting, however, to minutely scan the mere verbal peculiarity as regards the metaphor, we may more profitably direct our attention to the Gospel truth conveyed under it. And what the Apostle may be supposed to have here had in view seems to be what may best be expressed in the words, slightly altered, of Est. in his commentary: ‘commiscetur autem auditio fide, quando qui audit recipit;’ so intimating that it is indispensably necessary to its due effect, that the word of God, addressed to man, should be received in faith, and held fast in faith, from the heart and in the heart. So Luke viii. 15, οἱ τινες ἐν καρδίᾳ καλῇ καὶ ἀγαθῇ, ἀκούσαντες, τὸν λόγον κατέχουσιν, ‘keep hold of it,’—namely, in firm faith. As respects the construction, the Dat. τῶν πιστῶν is governed of the οὖν in composition, as in the passage of Menander above cited. In τοῖς ἀκούσασιν the Datives are for Genitives with ὅσοι (see Matth. Gr. § 398). Or they may be Datives of circumstance, pointing to a given case; q. d. ‘in the case of those who heard it,’ as in Thucyd. i. 84, μόνοι—εὐπραγίαι οὐκ ἐξυβρίζουσι, καὶ συμφοραῖς ἥσσον ἰτέρων εἰκόμεν.

3. Of this verse the import is rendered not a little obscure by extreme brevity, and also a certain cast of reasoning peculiarly Jewish. Hence various modes of interpretation have been propounded, all of them more or less objectionable. The ancient and common interpretation, in its simplicity and suitableness to the context, has the greatest appearance of truth. It is well observed by Kuin., that we have here unfolded, though briefly, what was meant by the foregoing expression in the Psalm, τὴν κατάπαυσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ; namely, ‘a quiet and felicity similar to that which God enjoys;’ to which true Christians are to attain, after having gone through the various troubles and afflictions of the present life. Thus in Rev. xiv. 13 the dead in Christ are said to ‘rest from their labours.’ See also Wisd. iv. 7. At ver. 4 this rest and felicity to be enjoyed by Christians in heaven is compared to the rest of God after the work of creation was ended,—the Sabbath; and so it is termed at v. 9, σαββατισμός. Accordingly it was, we find, a saying of the Jewish Doctors, that the Sabbath was an image of the future rest of the departed after the resurrection. See Wets. and Schöttgen.—εἰσερχόμεθα γάρ, &c. The γάρ has reference to a clause omitted, left to be supplied from the foregoing context; q. d. ‘Glad tidings, I say, have been proclaimed [to us]; for we [Christians], too, do enter (i. e. are to enter) into the rest spoken of in Scripture as follows.’—οἱ πιστεύσαντες are opposed to τοῖς ἀπειθήσασιν supra iii. 18.—καίτοι may be rendered, nevertheless, ‘namely,’ or ‘and indeed such a rest as God enjoyed [when he rested] from his works after the creation of the world; the true ellipse at καίτοι being κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ, as it is said, ver. 4, κατέπαυσεν—ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ, and v. 10, κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων, &c. After καθὼς εἶρηκεν we must supply the words περὶ τῶν ἀπιστησάντων, in order to correspond to οἱ πιστεύσαντες, which indeed suggest this ellipse. And such omissions of words serving to show the reference, or indicate the application, are frequent after the formulas καθὼς γέγραπται, and such like, of which καθὼς εἶρηκεν here is one, being equiv. to καθὼς εἶπε at John i. 23, and elsewhere, and καθὼς εἰρηται just after. Now in such a case the formula merely imports that some truth adverted to may be collected from the words thus introduced. Thus it is here meant that the truth just mentioned may be collected from the words of God concerning the faithless Hebrews,—that they should not enter his rest; implying that the faithful would.

4, 5. Here the idea in the foregoing verse is further developed; and the general sense intended is, as Conyb. observes, ‘God’s rest was a perfect rest [even a heavenly and spiritual one]. He declared his intention that his people should enjoy his rest,—that intention has not yet been fulfilled,—its fulfilment therefore is still to come.’ The force of the argument is in the terms αὐτοῦ and μου; for περὶ τῆς ἰδῆς must not be regarded as the subject spoken of, their purpose being simply to make the reference in ποῦ more definite; and therefore λίγων is left to be supplied.

6. ἴσται οὖν—ἀπειθεῖαν] The only mode of interpreting this sentence, so as to make it agreeable to the context, is to suppose that here, as occasionally elsewhere in Scripture, the conclusion of the argument is left to be supplied, which may be done thus: ‘It follows, then, that οἱ ὑποτιμῶν εὐαγγελισθέντες εἰσελεύσονται διὰ πίστεως.’ And this is the less harsh in the present case, since a conclusion comprising it is introduced at ver. 9, meant both for the argument at vv. 7, 8, and for that in ver. 6. The foregoing view is, I find, supported by the opinion of Prof. Stuart, who gives the following able illustration of the sense of this verse, in conjunction with what goes before: ‘We have here a resumption of the subject in ver. 3, after the explanations of rest which vv. 4, 5 contain. There the writer says, “Believers enter into the rest of God.” How is this proved? “Because he has sworn that unbelievers shall not enter into it;” which necessarily implies that believers shall enter into it. Then, after delaying a moment, in order to αὐτὴν, καὶ οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες οὐκ εἰσῆλθον δι' ἀπεί-θειαν.—<sup>7</sup> πάλιν τινὰ ὀρίζει ἡμέραν, Σήμερον, ἐν Δαυὶδ λέγων, μετὰ τοσοῦτον χρόνον (καθὼς εἴρηται) Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς

φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν. <sup>8</sup> Εἰ γὰρ αὐτοὺς Ἰησοῦς κατέπαυσεν, οὐκ ἂν περὶ ἄλλης
ἐλάλει μετὰ ταῦτα ἡμέρας <sup>9</sup> ἄρα ἀπολείπεται σαββατισμός τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ. <sup>10</sup> ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὴν κατάνανσιν αὐτοῦ, o Ps. 96. 7.

ch. 3. 7, 16.

d Rev. 14. 13.
3 Eod. 2. 11.

show what the nature of the rest in question is, viz. that it is God's rest, i. e. such rest as God enjoyed after the work of creation was completed (vv. 3-5), the writer resumes the consideration of the proposition advanced in the first part of ver. 3, and avers that, as some must enter into God's rest (for God could not be supposed to have provided one in vain), and as unbelievers cannot enter in, so it is necessarily implied that believers, and they only, will enjoy the rest in question. It is not to be unattended to,—because throwing light on the reason for the rejection,—which is not δι' ἀπιστίας, as iii. 19. Hence we are warranted in saying, that the rejection of the Israelites was caused both by unbelief (distrust of God's Providence) and disobedience to his will,—the former producing the latter.

7, 8. The argument here (not very clearly expressed) may be traced, after Whitby, and other eminent Expositors, as follows: 'And since the Psalmist, so long after the Israelites entering into Canaan, speaks of a set time of entering into his rest, and that time is still future, and typical of something under the Gospel; for Joshua did not give the rest, emphatically called the rest of God,—otherwise the Holy Ghost would not so long after that, in David's time, have spoken of another day of entering into his rest; it follows, therefore, that there must be yet another rest remaining to the people of God.'

7. πάλιν τινὰ ὀρίζει ἡμέραν, &c. 'And again he defines and appoints a certain time, a to-day, i. e. he defines and mentions another time by the same name to-day, at which they were to enter into this rest, saying, 'by David, after such a time as we have before mentioned, namely, forty years;' for if Joshua had brought them to that rest (i. e. true and stable one), God would not have spoken, by David, of another time hereafter; from which we are to beware lest we be excluded.'

9. ἄρα ἀπολείπεται σαββατισμός, &c. q. d. 'So, then (by the tenour of the Christian covenant), (vv. 2, 3) there does remain,' &c. Here, for ἀνέπαυσιν before, we have substituted the rare term σαββατισμός, partly to exclude any idea that the rest of God spoken of might be the Sabbatical rest, and partly, by thus comparing it with the Sabbath, to intimate that that was a symbol of the true and eternal sabbath with God in heaven, of which their Doctors spoke (see Schoettgen, Hor. Heb.), the rest and felicity of the world to come, the age of consolation. Of which sabbatism it is well said by Bengel, 'In tempore sabbata multa, sed tum erit sabbatismus, perpetuus, perfectus, plenus, eternus;' 'Where saintly heroes are for ever said To keep an everlasting sabbath's rest.'—To advert more particularly to the interesting term which designated this blessed rest. Σαββατισμός is a word of the rarest occurrence, having no place in the Sept., and being found only two or three times in the Ecclesiastical writers, as Origen, Epiphanius, and Eustathius. It occurs, however, in one, and, as far as I know, only one, passage of the Class. writers, namely, Plut. de Superst. c. 3, where, in recapitulating the degrading practices of superstition, he specifies πλήσεις, καταβορβώσεις, σαββατισμοὺς, δίψαις ἐπὶ πρόσωπον αἰσχράς, προσκαθίσεις, ἀλλοκοτοὺς προσκνήσεις. But the presence of the word there may justly make us pause; and Dr. Bentley, against Collins, p. 211, with reason regarding it as not to be tolerated, proposes to read βαπτισμοὺς. I should, however, prefer καταβαπτισμοὺς (Angl. dunkings over-head-and-ears), a term there highly suitable, as conveying a contemptuous idea, which does not belong to the simple noun βαπτισμοῦς. That, indeed, is never found in the earlier Class. writers, while the verb, καταβαπτίζω, and the noun, καταβαπτισμός, occasionally occur in the later ones. I doubt not that Plut. there glanced at the Jewish baptisms (or ceremonial washings) adverted to by the Apostle, infr. xi. 10, διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς. Though, to show his contempt of these, he employs the ivindious term καταβαπτ., exactly as Greg. Naz., in his Fourth Oration, p. 670, to the request of an Anti-trinitarian to baptize, bids him 'go and look out elsewhere for a βαπτιστήν, ἢ καταβαπτιστήν;' 'which words are rendered, 'quere qui te tingat, vel potius extingat,' Angl., 'may duct you.' And so also καταβαπτιστήριον, as said of the same persons, is contrasted with the βαπτιστήριον of the orthodox in Act. v. Concil. sub Mana, p. 649, adduced by Suic. in his Lex. in v.

10. ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν εἰς, &c. The words of this verse are closely connected with the former; and the only way to ascertain the true sense intended by the Apostle is, to render them with scrupulous exactness thus: 'for he who hath entered into his rest hath himself also ceased from his own works, as God (did) from his own (on the first Sabbath).' Thus there is an exact parallel, which requires that the respective words should bear some affinity to each other; which effectually excludes the interpretation of Calv., who takes ἔργων αὐτοῦ of 'the works of the flesh.' The true sense, as pointed at by the parallelism, is that of Est., who explains it of 'the laborious duties of life.' He has most ably and signally refuted the view taken by Calv. in his elaborate, but very erroneous exegesis, whose interpretation was incautiously caught up by Beza, Piscator, and others. Estius' note sets forth all that is necessary briefly as follows:—'Expositio est sabbatismi, quem dixit reliquum esse populo Dei. Sabbatum enim institutum fuit in memoriam quietis, quā Deus requievit die septimo ab

καὶ αὐτὸς κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ τῶν ἰδίων ὁ Θεός. <sup>11</sup> Σπουδάζωμεν οὖν εἰσελθεῖν εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν κατάπαυσιν ἵνα μὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τις ὑποδείγματι πέσῃ τῆς ἀπειθείας. <sup>12</sup> Ζῶν γὰρ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐνεργῆς, καὶ τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν μάχαιραν δίστομον, καὶ δεικνύμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ ψυχῆς τε καὶ πνεύματος, ἁρμών τε καὶ μυελῶν

<sup>9</sup> Isa. 40. 2.
<sup>10</sup> Jer. 23. 20.
<sup>11</sup> Prov. 5. 4.
<sup>12</sup> 1 Cor. 14. 24.
<sup>13</sup> 3 Cor. 10. 4.
<sup>14</sup> Eph. 6. 17.

omni opere, quod fecerat. Ad eundem modum, quisquis ingressus fuerit in requiem Dei, id est, a Deo paratam populo suo, etiam ipse requiescet a suis operibus, id est, laboriosis actionibus hujus vite, secundum illud in Apoc. xiv. 13. ἀπάρτι—ἵνα ἀναπαύσονται—μετ' αὐτῶν, which is the best comment on the expression here. The above view is confirmed by the ancient Interpreters universally, from Chrysa. downwards; also by Thom. Aquin., and by several eminent modern Expositors, and is ably supported by Prof. Ebrard.

11. The connexion with the foregoing context is well pointed out by Ebrard thus: 'Man has not yet entered into the rest, but Jesus has entered into the true Sabbath rest: what remains, then, but that we also should seek by Him to enter into this σαββατισμός?' This leads to the exhortation, σπουδάζωμεν οὖν εἰσελθεῖν—κατάπαυσιν, with the accompanying warning, ἵνα μὴ—ἀπειθείας. It is well remarked by Conyb., that 'the reasoning of the passage rests upon the truth,—that the unbelief of the Israelites, and the repose of Canaan, were typical of higher realities; and that this fact had been divinely intimated in the words of the Psalmist.'

12. 13. Having shown that unbelievers shall not enter into the rest of God, the Apostle now represents the awful nature of the denunciations of God in Scripture against unbelief and disobedience, and forcibly evinces the impossibility that any unbelief lurking in the heart can escape His all-seeing eye.

12. Ζῶν γὰρ ὁ λόγος, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause suppressed; q. d. ['Great guilt and danger would there be in such unbelief; for, &c. In the interpretation of these words, from their highly figurative character very obscure, the preceding context is our best guide. From this it would seem that the expression ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'the Fiat of God,' is to be taken, not (as many understand it) of the Word of God in general, but (as the best Expositors are agreed) only of the minatory declarations to be found therein, issuing in His Fiat; accordingly, Ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργῆς is to be understood per Hendiadyn, 'of mighty energy and of unfailling fulfilment on the disobedient.' This force of Ζῶν occurs both in the Script. and the Class. writers. See my note on Thucyd. iii. 17, 1; and comp. Aristoph. Eq. 379, ἵνα δὲ ζῇ ('is in a state of vital energy') τὸ βουλευτήριον. The allusion at the term ἐνεργῆς, lit. 'at work,' 'effective,' I have already explained at 1 Cor. xvi. 9, and Thucyd. iii. 17. The idea in ἐνεργῆς is further developed in τομώτερος—μάχαιραν, where the effect of God's punitive judgments on the soul is represented by a most forcible comparison with the dreadful effects produced on the body by the μάχαιρα δίστομον, or δίστομον ξίφος, answering to our battle-axe, with which, in war, the heroes of antiquity used to mow down whole ranks of the enemy. By a similar image it is said, Wisd. xviii. 15, 16 (a passage which well illustrates the present), 'Thine almighty word (ὁ παντοδύναμός σου λόγος) leaped down from heaven out of thy royal throne, as a fierce man of war (ἀπότομος ['slashing'] πολέμιστής) into the midst of a land of destruction, and brought thine unfeigned commandment as a sharp sword,' &c. Comp. also Rev. i. 16. ii. 12. xix. 15.—So far in my former Edd. On again reconsidering this most puzzling question, as to the reference in γὰρ, and the connexion with the preceding, and espec. the force of ὁ λόγος τοῦ, I am inclined to somewhat alter my view, espec. by taking a more enlarged scope. I cannot, indeed, adopt the view of Calv. and others, however plausible and ably supported,—that ὁ λόγος τοῦ means 'the word of the Gospel preached by the minister of the Gospel,' for reasons ably stated by Est., which forbid it. And, to take it, with Conyb., of 'the revelation of God's judgment to the conscience,' is liable to the same objection as the foregoing. Accordingly, I would now take the expression in the most general sense, of 'the revelation of the mind, or will, of God, imparted to man, not only threatening the disobedient, but promising his blessings to the obedient, and exhorting them to lay hold of those promises.' This is called for by the context; for, as observes Est., 'Agit Apostolus de fide habendâ verbo permissionis et comminationis Divinæ, docetque, si Dei promissiones fide amplectamur, in requiem eam ingressuros; sin minus, male perituros, idque eorum exemplo, ad quos olim sermo Dei factus est.—Nam sive per se, aut per Filium suum, Deus loquatur, sive per angelos, sive per homines, idem est Deus, qui loquitur, et, quod ad loquentem attinet, idem sermo. Qui proinde semper ut ejusdem est veritatis, sic et ejusdem virtutis et efficacis, tam ad præstanda promissa credentibus, quam ad inferenda supplicia contumacibus. Cum ergo sermo Dei sit, ipse Deus loquens, promittens, minas intentans, non mirum si Apostolus ea omnia, quæ hic dicantur et Deo propria videntur, adscribat sermoni Dei.' Thus the sense is, 'Studeamus ingredi in illam requiem; credamus verbo Dei nobis annuntiato, ne pereamus cum incredulis.' I would add some further illustrations of the strong terms which give so august an air to the passage.—Ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργῆς Est. explains, 'vivid et efficax,' meaning 'non est otiosus aut actionis expert, ut ea, quæ mortua sunt; non est irritus, non frustratur effectu suo, quemadmodum nostris verbis sæpe contingit; sed vivit, ac vim suam exercet in reddendis tam præmiis, quam supplicis comminationis.' By the words δεικνύμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ—μυελῶν Est. is denoted 'the all-searching, and deeply penetrating power of this Word—penetrating the hardest parts, even to the inmost of the joints, the marrow of the bones.' In μυελῶν there is Plur. for Sing., as f3 Chron.

16. 9.
Job 30. 6.
Ps. 33. 13—
15.
Eccl. 3. 10.
Eccl. 5. 8.
Eccl. 130. 11, 12.
Eccles. 15.
19.
Eccl. 3. 1.
Eccl. 6. 30.
Eccl. 7. 39.
Eccl. 8. 1.
Eccl. 9. 11, 34.
Eccl. 10. 23.
h Isa. 55. 3. Luke 22. 30. 2 Cor. 5. 31. Phil. 2. 7. ch. 2. 17. 1 Pet. 2. 22. 1 John 2. 5.

καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας. <sup>13</sup> καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχλησμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ, πρὸς δὲ ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος.

<sup>14</sup> Ἐχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα μέγαν, διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς, Ἰησοῦν τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, κρατῶμεν τῆς ὁμολογίας. <sup>15</sup> Οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ἀρχιερέα μὴ δυνάμενον συμπαθεῖν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν, * πεπειραμένον δὲ κατὰ πάντα καθ' ὁμοιότητα, χωρὶς

in Plut. de Discr. c. 29, μήτε νευροῖς ἢ μυελοῖς. In each case the Plur. in μυελ. is used in order to suit the Plur. in the other Substantive. In the next words, καὶ κριτικὸς—καρδίας, is contained another, and no less momentous, consideration, engrafted on the former, and suggested by the figure in δεικνύμενος ἀκρι μυστήριον.—namely, that 'this same Word of God in his Revelation to men, is able to try the very heart and reins (i. e. the inmost recesses of the heart), putting to the proof what is there found;' meaning, 'one who can discern and, as we should say, turn inside out, lay bare, the secret thoughts and intentions of the heart.'

13. The above sentiment is here confirmed by transferring what was said of the Word of God to God Himself, its Author.—καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφ. ἰ. α. By οὐκ ἀφ. is meant, by Meiosis, 'manifest,' 'conspicuous.' 'Hinc (says Est.) intelligi vult hypocrisis et infidelitatem, etiam in animo latentem, a Deo ignorari non posse; non quod hæ sint creaturae, sed quia, qui creaturam omnem perfecte novit, etiam defectus ejus ac vitia non novisse non potest.'—πάντα γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχλησμένα, &c. Of this expression τετραχ. the general import is obvious, but the nature of the metaphor has been somewhat disputed. The most probable opinion is, that we have here an allusion to the bending back of the head, so as to lay bare the neck, as in slaughtering animals, as appears from Diog. Laërt. vi. 61, ἰδὲ τὸν κρόν ἀραιμάνιον, ὡς ὑπὸ τοῦ τυγχόντος κορασίον τραχηλίζεται, also adverted to, long before, in Homer, Il. i. 459, αὐ ἔρυσαν (scil. τράχηλον), 'they drew back the throat, or wind-pipe;' thus laying it bare to view. Thus there may be an allusion to the manner in which victims sacrificed to the gods were butchered, by being thrown backward (see Schol. on Ap. Rhod. l. i. 58), and their throats, usually concealed, laid bare to view. The words αὐτοῦ—πρὸς δὲ ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος being a designation of the omniscient Deity, 'who trieth the hearts and reins, and to whom an account is to be rendered by us. The words πάντα δὲ—αὐτοῦ tend somewhat to embarrass the construction; but their purpose is to illustrate the idea of this omniscience. The construction may be laid down as follows: καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ πρὸς δὲ ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχλησμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ. In fact, the sentence consists of two sentences blended into one, and ὁ λόγος might be meant to be taken in both the above senses, one for each clause, thus: 'Moreover there exists no creature that is not manifest in the sight of Him with whom we have to do; but all things are naked and exposed to his eyes, unto whom we have to render an account.'

14. ἔχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα, &c.] The οὖν is resumptive, referring to a subject commenced supra iii. 1 (but interrupted by the digression on the unbelieving Jews in the desert),—namely, that of Christ as our High Priest, and the superiority of his priesthood to the Levitical one, a subject on which the Apostle treats up to x. 18, enlarging on it thus much, from its great importance, bearing as it does so directly on the most momentous part of Christ's office, his atonement for sin by the sacrifice of himself.—ἀρχιερέα μέγαν. The term μέγαν has much significance, adverting to the various points of superiority in Christ over Moses, or the High Priests above mentioned.—διεληλ. τοὺς οὐρανοὺς, 'who hath passed through the heavens,' viz. so as to reach the seat of the Majesty on high; for the Jews reckoned three heavens,—the aerial, the sideral, and the highest heaven, or the residence of God and the angels, called by the Son of Sirach, xvi. 18, ὁ οὐρανὸς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. See 2 Cor. xii. 2, and note. Agreeably to this idea, there were three divisions of the Temple,—the Court, the Sanctuary, and the Sanctum Sanctorum; to the furthest of which, and through the Veil that hid it from view, the High Priest passed once every year. Thus the passing in the one case is compared to the passing in the other; and by passing to the farthest heaven is implied completion of the work of expiation, and access to God fully obtained.

15. This is meant to encourage them to follow his admonition, by reference to another point of superiority in the new dispensation, which is, that in Jesus their High Priest they have one not too exalted to concern himself with their miseries, but one who can sympathize with them, as having himself felt them; and to their infirmities and frailties, as having himself been subject to them. 'To a nature (says Dr. Blair, in an able Sermon on this text) altogether raised above us we must have looked up with terror; but He who remembers the struggles of his own soul, will not surely judge ours like a hard master.' As to sympathy with the miseries of man, as having felt them, comp. the sentiment of Philomel, Incert. Frag. 51, 'Ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ παθῆναι γίνωσκε καὶ τὸ συμπαθεῖν.' Καὶ σοὶ γὰρ ἄλλος συμπαθήσεται παθόν.—Μὴ δυνάμενον συμπαθεῖν, meaning, 'incapable of sympathizing with, by being raised above, human infirmities and miseries, as unveiled Deity would have been.'—πατεῖρ. adverts both to trials by affliction and temptations to sin; importing, however, no more than the being susceptible to temptation, from the possession of a human nature; though, indeed, our Saviour Christ was, in some respect, tempted, and assuredly tried beyond what men are; his whole life being little else than one unvaried conflict or trial of virtue.

ἁμαρτίας. <sup>16</sup> Προσερχώμεθα οὖν μετὰ παρρησίας τῷ θρόνῳ <sup>1</sup> Rom. 3. 26. Eph. 3. 12. ἡ χάριτος, ἵνα λάβωμεν * ἔλεος, καὶ χάριν εὐρωμεν, εἰς εὐκαι- ἄ. 12. ρον βοήθειαν. V. 1 <sup>2</sup> Πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς ἐξ ἀνθρώπων λαμ- ch. 10. 19, &c. βανόμενος, ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων καθίσταται τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, ἵνα a ch. 2. 17. προσφέρῃ δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν <sup>2</sup> b μετροπαθεῖν b ch. 1. 18. ἄ. 15. ἄ. 7. 25.

For πειρασμῶν, Lachm., with Scholz, edits πειρασμῶν: thus restoring the t. rec., which had been dismissed by Griesb., Matth., and Tisch., for πειρασμῶν, which is, indeed, more agreeable to strict propriety of language. See T. Mag. cited by Wets. That, however, is no sufficient reason why πειρασμῶν should not have been written by St. Paul. It is found in four of the most ancient uncial MSS., and many cursives; not any, however, of the Lamb. or Mus. copies. It is surely not to be denied that πειρασμῶν may have come from the scribes. Thus, in a passage of Thucyd. vi. 45, πειρασθεῖς, 'tempted,' a few inferior MSS. have πειρασθεῖς, doubtless from the scribes. And prob. the form σθ was in most use in the later Greek. Thus ἀποπειρασθῆναι occurs in Ach. Tat. i. ii. 27.—χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας. The sense here assigned by some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, 'without giving way under those afflictions,' is little suitable. It is plain from the foregoing expressions ἀσθενεῖς and πειρασμῶν, that the only true interpretation is the commonly received one, 'without yielding to, or falling into sin;' which is, I find, also adopted by Kuinoel, who confirms it from v. 2. vii. 26. 2 Cor. v. 21. 1 Pet. ii. 22. 1 John iii. 5.

16. προσερχώμεθα οὖν, &c. We have here an inference and exhortation founded on the foregoing doctrine; q. d. 'Having, then, a High Priest who can sympathize, &c., let us approach with confidence to the throne of a gracious God, as well we may, assured that whatever we ask in prayer, nothing doubting, we shall receive;' see Matt. xxi. 22. In the expression τῷ θρόνῳ τῆς χάριτος, the allusion is not, what some suppose, to the Jewish notion of God's having two thrones,—of mercy, and of judgment; but rather (as the best Commentators suppose) to the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat (Rom. iii. 25), where God was represented as sitting enthroned, hearing the supplications of the people, accepting their oblations, and dispensing ἔλεος καὶ χάριν. The terms λάβωμεν and εὐρωμεν are synonymous, though the latter is the stronger. 'Ἐλεος and χάρις, too, are generally synonymous; the gracious dispensations of God being called his mercies, to intimate our unworthiness of them. Here, however, the terms have a distinct sense with reference to the two ideas involved in πειρασμῶν at ver. 15, viz. mercy, or compassion, to be encompassed with sin, and surrounded with trials and tribulations (see ver. 15), and grace vouchsafed at all times, to comfort, support, and sanctify them.—εἰς εὐκαιρ. βοήθ., for εἰς βοήθ. ἐν καιρῷ, 'for seasonable help,' 'to be helped opportunely.'

V. 1. In order more fully to set forth the nature and efficacy of the Priesthood of Christ, the Apostle carries forward his comparison between the Jewish High Priest and Christ; and in order thereto he begins by describing the requisites for the former; and then proceeds to evince that Jesus Christ is the true High Priest, and infinitely superior to the Jewish ones, by having all the requisites for the office, and each in the highest degree. 'The γὰρ is not argumentative, but exegetical, introducing an explanation of what was said at iv. 14—16, bringing under closer consideration, and laying to heart, the charge given, by implication, at v. 16.' (Ebrard.) I understand, with him, the proposition at v. 1, as not a special, but a general one, meant of every such High Priest, every individual of that class; yet in the description, as 'taken from among men,' there seems a tacit comparison with Christ, the Divine High Priest. 'The subsequent words,' observes Ebrard, 'up to the end of v. 4, point at the requisites pertaining to every such High Priest.' That these requisites were found in Christ, and how they belonged to him, is then shown at vv. 5—10.—ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων καθίσταται τὰ π. τ. Θ. The full sense is, 'is appointed [such] for the benefit of men in relation to (their observances towards) God.'—ἵνα προσφέρῃ δῶρα, &c. These words indicate the purpose for which the office was espec. appointed; and of course intimate a main requisite in the person so λαμβ. ἔξ ἀνθρ. In προσφ. we have a sacrificial term, found also at Matt. v. 23, and John xvi. 2. The expressions δῶρα and θυσίας are properly distinct; the former being the original term, and such as chiefly respected the most ancient and primitive kind of oblation, that of the fruits of the earth, and generally as to sacrifices,—the unbloody ἀναθήματα, afterwards called thank-offerings, whence, says Jos. Ant. xviii. 1, 5, of the Essenes, εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ἀναθήματα στέλλοντες, θυσίας οὐκ ἵπτιλουσιν; the latter, the bloody offerings, the various sin and trespass-offerings made by slain beasts. Sometimes, however (as infra viii. 4, and often in the Sept.), δῶρον includes the idea of both the sacrifices.

2. μετροπαθεῖν δύναμις] This expression, from its corresponding to the one before used, συμπαθεῖν δύναμις (see iv. 15) cannot but denote something nearly allied to it, though not (as some have supposed) the same. The term μετροπαθεῖν prop. signifies 'to carry oneself with moderation,' holding the passions under due restraint, so as not to give way to anger or any other excess (as was enjoined by the Peripatetic philosophers, in opposition to the Stoics, who maintained that a man should be superior to the influence of the passions, and held that the wise man was not ἀπαθής, but μετροπαθεῖν; see Diog. Laërt. v. 31). Hence it came to denote, as here, 'the being gentle, forbearing, and indulgent to the failings of others.' By the expression δύναται is meant not so much the power as the disposition to show indulgence, as a man, towards τοῖς ἀγν. καὶ πλαν., whence we are not justified in supposing a mere Hendiadys for τοῖς ἔξ ἀγν. πλαν.: inasmuch as the indulgence of the High Priest on earth was not limited merely to this δυνάμενος τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις ἐπεὶ καὶ αὐτὸς περικείται ἀσθένειαν. <sup>3</sup> Καὶ διὰ ταύτην ὀφείλει, καθὼς περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ, προσφέρειν ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν. <sup>4</sup> Καὶ οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις λαμβάνει τὴν τιμὴν, ἀλλὰ [ὁ] καλούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καθάπερ καὶ [ὁ] Ἀαρών. <sup>5</sup> Οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἑαυτὸν ἐδόξασε γενεθῆναι ἀρχιερέα, ἀλλ' ὁ λαλήσας πρὸς

c Lev. 9. 7.
& 10. 5, &c.
ch. 7. 26.
d Exod. 28. 1.
1 Chron. 23.
12.
2 Chron. 26.
10, &c.
e Ps. 1. 7.
John 8. 54.
Acts 12. 22.
ch. 1. 5.

class of offenders, much less is the clemency of our great High Priest in the heavens so limited, Lev. vi. 1—7, but towards those who go astray, partly through unavoidable ignorance, or involuntary error, and partly through the weakness of human nature, and the deceitfulness of sin. Comp. Tit. iii. 3, ἀνόητοι—πλανώμενοι. The terms ἀγν. and πλαν. are, in the Hellenistic use, nearly synonymous; see Ps. xxv. 7, compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 13, where ἀγν. is put, per ὑποκορισμὸν, for ἀμαρτάνειν. And so ἀγνοεῖν and ἀγνόημα in Ecclesi. v. 18, and ἀγνόημα in Heb. ix. 7. The next words, ἵπαι καὶ αὐτὸς περικ. ἀσθ., seem meant to show how it is that he is so disposed,—since he himself feels the weakness of human nature clinging about and cleaving to him; for the term περικ. denotes, by a metaphor taken from clothing, 'the being intimately conversant with,' implying the idea of habitus, by which a thing cleaves to us, even as the fabled garment of Nessus to Hercules, of which says Soph. Trach. 770, καὶ προσπύσσεται Πηλεΐδῃσις ἀρτίκολλος, ὥστε τίκτοντο, Χιτῶν, &c.

3. διὰ ταύτην] 'on account of this [frailty and the sinning consequent upon it].—καὶ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ. This he was bound to do, if conscious of any particular wilful sin. The sacrifice was a young bullock; which, for greater security, was always offered up by the High Priest for himself on the day of Expiation. See Levit. xvi. 11, 24.—To advert to a diversity of reading. For ταύτην, Lachm. and Tisch. edit αὐτήν, and, for ὑπὲρ, περὶ. The former alteration is inadmissible; since the authority for it, that of 4 uncials, and 1 or 2 cursives, and some Versions, is insufficient; and internal evidence is against it; and it enervates the vigour of the sense, which is, 'on account of this [very] weakness.' As to the second alteration, it is not easy to say which is the true reading; since both ὑπὲρ and περὶ are used by St. Paul, the former in 2 Cor. v. 21. Heb. v. 1. vi. 27. x. 12, the latter in Gal. i. 4; as also in 1 Pet. iii. 18. 1 John ii. 2; and I find it in all the best Lamb. and Mus. copies. But, as Paul wrote, supr. ver. 1, ἵνα προσφέρῃ—ὑπὲρ ἑμ. sine v. 1., and infr. x. 12, ὑπὲρ ἑμ. προσενήγκας sine v. 1., also infr. vii. 27, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτ. ἀναφέρειν for προσφ., so we can scarcely doubt that here he wrote ὑπὲρ: for, in so exact a composition as the present Epistle, a third περὶ in the course of a few words would never have been employed. However, the reading may be regarded as an open question. The reading of Lachm., for ἑαυτοῦ, αὐτοῦ, from two or three MSS., destroys the antithesis, and, as such, cannot be right. The scribes prob. wrote, as they often do, αὐτοῦ by mistake for αὐτοῦ.

4. οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις λαμβάνει τὴν τιμὴν] Τιμὴ, like the Latin honor, is a term often used of office, whether political or religious. The expression λαμβάνειν ἑαυτῷ is highly emphatic, the sense being, 'does not take to himself [as his own] what has not been given to him.' Comp. Xiphil. Galb. p. 187, νομίζω οὐκ ἐιληφέναι τὴν ἀρχήν, ἀλλὰ δεδωσθαι (scil. αὐτῷ) αὐτῷ.—For καθάπερ, Lachm. edits καθὼς, from one MS., Chrys., and Procop.; while Tisch. edits καθὼς περ, from three uncial MSS. The former alteration is quite inadmissible, and involves an inconsistency on the part of Lachm., since at Rom. xii. 4, καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ἐνὶ σῶματι, he rejects the καθὼς supplied by four of those MSS. (uncial ones) to which he usually ascribes so much weight. As to Tischendorf's reading, καθὼς περ, it cannot be admitted, this being a word found nowhere in the New Test., nor in the Sept., and which has place only in writers several centuries later than the time of St. Paul. The reading doubtless arose from καθὼς being placed as a v. l. over the καθάπερ, and it may be supposed that the Reviser who adopted it took the περ with the καθὼς.—Ἀλλὰ ὁ καλούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, meaning, that this office must be of Divine appointment. The ὁ before καλούμενος found in the t. rec. has been cancelled (on the authority of many MSS., to which I add Lamb. 1190) by Bengel, Griesb., Matthæi, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; and rightly; since it might easily originate with the scribe, or be an insertion of some injudicious Critic; though, as Bp. Middl. observes, far from assisting, it disturbs the sense; καλούμενος here being opposed to ἑαυτῷ just before; q. d. 'not of his own accord, but being called thereto by God.' On the same authority the ὁ before Ἀαρών has been cancelled.—To advert to something far more important than Critical minutiae. The above several points of agreement in the High Priest, are characterized in a masterly way by Calv. thus: 'Primo dicit assumi ex hominibus sacerdotes; deinde non rem privatam agere, sed totius populi; tertio non inanes debere ad placandum Deum accedere, sed sacrificiis instructos; quarto infirmitatem nostrarum non debere esse expertes, quò libentius succurrant laborantibus; postremo non temere debere ad munus obediendum prostrare, sed tum demum honorem esse legitimum ubi a Deo electi sunt et comprobati.' He then proceeds to handle each of the parts with his usual ability. The notes, too, of Hyper. and Est. are of an high order, and important to the Theological student.

5, 6. At these vv., thinks Ebrard, the inquiry begins, whether, and in how far, those requisites belonged to Christ. In doing this, it is shown at v. 5, that, whereas no one could take upon himself the Levitical high-priesthood, unless called by God, as Aaron was, Christ not only was appointed to his priestly office by God, but had an everlasting priesthood conferred upon him, of

αὐτὸν Τίος μου εἰ σὺ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγεννηκά σε <sup>8</sup> καθ- <sup>τ</sup> Pa. 110. 4
ὡς καὶ ἐν ἑτέρῳ λέγει Σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα κατὰ τὴν <sup>ob. 7. 17.</sup> τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ. <sup>7</sup> Ὁς ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, <sup>τ</sup> Pa. 32. 1.
—δέσεις τε καὶ ἱκετηρίας πρὸς τὸν δυνάμενον σώζειν αὐτὸν ἐκ <sup>Matt. 20. 37.</sup> θανάτου, μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχυρᾶς καὶ δακρύων, προσενέγκας, καὶ <sup>28, &c.</sup> εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, <sup>8</sup> <sup>8</sup> καίπερ ὢν Τίος, ἔμαθεν, <sup>27. 46. 50.</sup> <sup>Mark 15. 34.</sup>
<sup>John 18. 27.</sup>
<sup>2. 17. 1.</sup>
<sup>h. ch. 1. 5. 8.</sup>
<sup>2. 6.</sup>
<sup>Phil. 2. 6. 8.</sup>

which Melchisedec's was but a type. Further, it is shown, that Christ's priestly office was thus far superior to that under the Law, in that he was appointed to it by an immediate investment from above, in virtue of his relation to God as Son, which made him High Priest in a far higher sense. This appointment is at ver. 6 evinced by reference to Pa. ii. 7, and cx. 4, the two passages being regarded as prophetic, and the prediction therein fulfilled in Christ. The phrase οὐχ αὐτὸν ἰδοῦσας corresponds to οὐχ αὐτῷ λαμβάνει before.—At ἀλλ' ὁ λαλήσας πρὸς αὐτὸν supply, not per alipsin, but from the context, ἰδοῦσας αὐτόν; q. d. 'God who spoke these words appointed Christ to be our High Priest;' the appellation Τίος implying that dignity.

6. κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελ. is for κατὰ τὴν ομοιότητα, 'after the manner of,' as at vii. 15. 'The particulars (says Stuart) of the comparison, in respect to the priesthood of Christ and Melchisedec, are not immediately brought into view, but suspended until the writer has introduced other considerations relative to Christ as a priest, vv. 7—9, and given vent to his feelings of concern for those whom he was addressing, by suggesting various considerations, adapted to reprobo, ch. v. 11—14; and to warn, vi. 1—9; as well as to excite and animate them, vi. 10—20.'

7—9. Of these verses the exact reference, scope, and bearing have been not a little disputed. They would seem to be (as Abp. Newc. and Stuart regard them) explanatory of ver. 2, being intended to be subservient to the comparison of Christ, as a priest, with the Jewish priests. Hence is evinced the fitness of Christ to be a compassionate High Priest, inasmuch as from his assumption of human nature, and exposure to its infirmities, he can pity the infirmities of others.

7. ὅτι ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς, &c. Here there is, together with a certain obscurity in the phraseology, a perplexity in the construction, which some attempt to remove by placing in a parenthesis the words δέσεις τε—εὐλαβείας; others, the whole of ver. 8; and others, again, the words καίπερ ὢν Τίος: each of which methods lies open to objection, and not one of them completely removes the difficulty. The obscurity here seems to be chiefly occasioned by the insertion of the words καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλ.; and if these are considered as parenthetical, the sense will be cleared. By ἡμέρ. τῆς σαρκὸς αὐ. is meant, 'during the time when he lived as a man among men;' in which there is an evident allusion to the period before he had put off his Divine nature, of course implying that he had such. Σαρκὸς αὐ. also carries with it a notion of the frailty and misery of the flesh; 'the whole (as Stuart observes) designating the condition of the Logos on earth (see John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16), and the period of the Saviour's humiliation;' on which see Calv.—δέσεις τε καὶ ἱκετηρ.—προσενέγκας. Render: 'by having offered up (= inasmuch as he offered up) both entreaties and supplications, with strong outcry and tears, to Him who was able to preserve him from death.' In προσφ. there is a sacrificial allusion, on which see my Lex. in v. The clause μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχ. καὶ δακρύων (with which comp. Joa. Bell. i. 32, 3, μετὰ δολυγμοῦ καὶ δακρύων) is to be construed after δέσεις καὶ ἱκετηρίας; the whole referring to our Lord's earnest prayers during his agony in the garden of Gethsemane.—Καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας. It is a disputed question whether the expression τῆς εὐλαβ. should be rendered fear of God, or piety. Either sense is permitted by the usus loquendi; espec. the former, which is a signif. of the word frequent in the later Greek writers and the Sept., and is here preferable on the score of greater strength and suitability. Thus the term εἰσακουσθεὶς will have a sort of double sense, by what is called a sensus proprius (an idiom common both in the Scriptural and Class. writers); in illustration of which Commentators refer to a similar use of the Hebr. שמע in Ps. xxii. 22, and Job xxxv. 12, where the Sept. similarly has καὶ οὐ μὴ εἰσακούσῃ καὶ ἀπὸ ἔβρων πονηρῶν, 'and yet thou wilt not hear, [and so deliver him] from the insolence of the wicked;' see also Pa. lv. 16. 2 Chron. xviii. 31. Pa. cxviii. 18. The full sense will then be, 'was heard in reference to his prayer to be preserved;' i. e. was so heard as to be delivered from this fear,—namely, that horrible fear, of which we have so affecting a description at Matt. xxvi. 37, and from which he was delivered by an angel strengthening him, Luke xxii. 43. Thus the full sense, as Prof. Ebrard, after an ample discussion, lays down, is,—'He prayed to be preserved from the death which threatened him, and was so heard as to be saved from that fear.' This is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. and Ital. Versions, and by the most eminent Expositors, from Calv., Beza, and Grot., down to De Wette, Thol., and Ebrard, who renders vv. 7—9 thus: 'Who, in the days of his flesh, when he prayed for the warding off of death, and was heard in as far as respects the fear of death, learned obedience in that which he suffered; and, after he was perfected, became the author of eternal salvation,' &c. He then remarks, 'What a beautiful harmony and symmetry does the sentiment thus receive!'

8. καίπερ ὢν Τίος Render: not 'though he was a son;' but (as is clear from the preceding words, ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τ. σ. α., = when he was in human nature), 'though he was the Son,'—namely, of God; by a use of Τίος without the Article, also found supra i. 1.—ἔμαθεν, ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, &c. In ἔμαθε—ἔπαθε there is supposed to be a paronomasia, prob. founded on the proverb μαθήματα τὰ παθήματα, traces of which are found in Hdol. i. 207, and Æschyl. Agam. 170, τῷ πάθει μάθος θίγεται κυρίως ἴχιν. The expression ἡμᾶς τὴν ὑπακοήν is best regarded (without any reference to metaphysical refinements) as a popular mode of speaking, to denote that 'he was made to learn, experimentally, how difficult it is to obey God's will amidst complicated trials.' 'This, indeed (as Calvin observes), was done, nostri respectu, for our instruction, that he might thus give an illustrious proof and specimen of his subjection to death; though, indeed, it may be said that Christ by his death learnt to the full what it is to obey God, when he had then so especially to deny himself and renounce his own will, by yielding himself, of his own free will, obedient to that death which he dreaded. It is meant, then, that 'by the experience of sufferings Christ learnt to what an extent it is necessary for us to yield submission and obedience to the will of God. And therefore we also, after his example, must, by various afflictions, and at length by death itself, be instructed and formed to a like obedience.'

1 ch. 2. 10. ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, τὴν ὑπακοήν <sup>9</sup> καὶ τελειωθείς ἐγένετο τοῖς ὑπακούουσιν αὐτῷ πᾶσιν αἴτιος σωτηρίας αἰωνίου, <sup>10</sup> προσαγορευθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀρχιερεὺς κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ.

<sup>11</sup> Περὶ οὗ πολὺς ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, καὶ δυσερμηνεύτος λέγειν, <sup>k</sup> ἐπεὶ νωθροὶ γηγόνετε ταῖς ἀκοαῖς. <sup>12</sup> <sup>k</sup> Καὶ γὰρ, ὀφείλουτες εἶναι διδάσκαλοι διὰ τὸν χρόνον, πάλιν χρειάν ἔχετε τοῦ διδάσκειν ἡμᾶς, τίνα τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ

<sup>9</sup> τελειωθείς] This term has reference to ἔπαθε at ver. 8; and hence the word must here have the same sense as at ii. 10, τὸν ἀρχηγόν—διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι, namely, 'to bring or exalt to glory in heaven.' So it is well observed by Calvin, that 'here we have the final or remote end (as it is called) why Christ must needs thus suffer,—namely, that thus he was inaugurated to his priestly office; as though the Apostle would say, that his suffering of death, even the death of the cross, was a sort of solemn consecration in Christ, whereby is intimated the reference which all his sufferings have to our salvation.'—τοῖς ὑπακούουσιν α., to those yielding an obedience to his Gospel as full and unreserved as that rendered by Christ to God the Father.—αἴτιος, effector. Thus τελειωθείς is equiv. to ἀρχηγός at ii. 10. The same expression is used by Philo, t. ii. p. 440.

<sup>10</sup> προσαγορευθεὶς] The sense seems to be, 'being proclaimed and constituted.' Appointment to office was in ancient, as in modern, times, made by saluting the person by the title attached to the office.

<sup>11</sup> We have now, to the end of the next chapter, a digressive portion,—though introductory and preparatory to the main purpose,—showing the priesthood of Christ,—which, as Calvin suggests, seems to have been to rouse the mind of the reader to increased attention to that deeply important subject. Accordingly, this portion consists of tacit reproof, by implication, as well as exhortation, intermixed, however, with consolation. First the Apostle points at the difficulty of the matter under discussion, so as to be sufficiently intelligible; a difficulty, however, only, or chiefly, with reference to the imperfect capacity of those whom he is addressing to receive and comprehend those truths. At the same time he glances at a latent reproof on them for their deficiency in this respect, in order to excite their attention to what he is going to say, and their desire to acquire competent knowledge. Indeed, the reproof carries with it (as Hyper. shows) somewhat of sarcasm, or rather angry feeling, at their backwardness, almost amounting to retrogression, in Christian knowledge. This will appear from the general air of the words, when accurately presented, q. d. 'Concerning whom (or "which matter,"—the comparison of the priesthood of Melchisedec with that of Christ) we have much to say, and that difficult to be made clear to you, seeing that ye have become dull in your comprehension (of spiritual matters);' prob. from neglect in making use of their spiritual advantages, in which it should seem that they were rather retrograding than advancing. I am, however, inclined to think that along with incapacity to understand is conjoined indisposition to comprehend,—a use of νωθρός akin to that of 'sluggish' in our old writers; and so Est. explains by 'torpentes'; which is confirmed by the 'ingenium accidia torpescit' of Pliny; and by the νωθοκαρδίοι of Prov. xii. 8; and so Chrys., t. viii. p. 207, νωθοκαρδίοι ὄντες ἐν τῇ πίστει. The phrase itself, νωθροὶ ταῖς ἀκοαῖς, is very rare; and Expositors and Lexicographers bring forward no other ex. But Polyb. iv. 8. 5. v., ταῖς ἱστοίαις comes near to it; to which I can add something more apposite from Heliod., Æth. v. 10, νωθρότερος ἂν τὴν ἀκοήν, where I conj. τῇ ἀκοῇ, and Sapph. Frag. i. 5, Blomf., κωφὴν δ' ἀκοῇ εἰσθησὶν ἴχουσι.

<sup>12</sup> καὶ γὰρ, ὀφείλουτες εἶναι διδάσκαλοι—τοῦ Θεοῦ.] What is here said is explanatory of the foregoing, as serving to show the cause of the νωθοκαρδία, and the result of it, not only failure of progress, but actual retrocession. Remember: 'for when, according to the time (ye have been learning) ye ought already to be teachers, ye have need that again some should teach you (the truths) which are the elements of the oracles of God.' Such is the general sense: a few brief illustrations of the particulars may suffice. By διὰ τὸν χρόνον it is intimated that they had been learning long enough to be teachers; long enough to understand, not merely the elements, but the more recondite doctrines of the Gospel. By τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς, for τὰ πρῶτα στοιχεῖα, are meant faith, repentance, and such like, which are so called, as being those which the learner στοιχεῖ goes upon, in seeking to attain further knowledge. Comp. Plut. de Educ. 16, στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρετῆς. As to τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ, it would mean, according to its proper sense (as in Rom. iii. 2), 'the word of God, as γεγονάτε χρεῖαν ἔχοντες γάλακτος, καὶ οὐ στερεῆς τροφῆς.

 13 <sup>1</sup> Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ μετέχων γάλακτος, ἄπειρος λόγου δικαιοσύνης· νήπιος γάρ ἐστι. <sup>14</sup> τελείων δέ ἐστιν ἡ στερεὰ τροφή, τῶν διὰ τὴν ἔξιν τὰ αἰσθητήρια γεγυμνασμένα ἔχοντων πρὸς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ. VI. <sup>1</sup> Διὸ ἀφέντες τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ

11 Cor. 2. 2.
 & 14. 30.
 Eph. 4. 14.

revealed in the Scriptures of the Old Test.:' but here, from the context, 'the Revelation of God in the New Test.' See Est. The words of the next clause are meant to further develop the idea, and to impress it more strongly by means of an apt and forcible figure implied in the words; and accordingly 'have used of milk, and not of solid food;' wherein there is a comparison of them (as it were neophytes) with children, who can digest none but the lightest and least solid food. The elementary, and the more recondite doctrines are here compared to 'milk,' and 'solid food,' respectively; just as at 1 Cor. iii. 2 γάλα is opposed to βρώμα. By στερεὰ τροφή is meant 'solid food' (called by Galen σχυρόν βρώμα, and by Arrian, Epict. ii. 16, 39, τροφή στερειωτέρα), such as that of seak, and grain in its most condensed state; as opposed to milk, porridge, and such like, elegantly termed by Sophocles νία τροφή.

13, 14. Here we have the above similitude further unfolded, and a description given of the persons to whom the milk of instruction is alone suitable. (Hyper.)

13. πᾶς γὰρ ὁ μετέχων, &c.] There is here a certain obscurity, occasioned by a confounding of the natural with the metaphorical, or allegorical, sense. If kept distinct, the thought would be expressed as follows: 'Thus [as] every one who can live only on milk is, in some sort, a babe; [so] every one who can profit only by the first elements of the Gospel, is also a babe in knowledge, being ἄπειρος λόγου δικαιοσύνης.' Comp. (for an apt illustration) Artemid. On. i. 16, p. 30, ἀσθενεῖς γὰρ εἰσι οἱ ἐν γάλακτι παῖδες (babes at the breast). Καὶ μὲν (read μὴ) δὴ (read γὰρ) καὶ οἱ τέλειοι θύαν νοσοῦνται, τροφῇ ('food') μὴ δύνανται χρῆσθαι διὰ τὴν ἀνάγκην, γάλακτι καὶ μασθῇ χρῶνται γυναικαί, where, I doubt not, a certain corruption exists as to the reading. I suspect ἡ to have been lost after χρῆσθαι, and would read and point thus: δύνανται χρῆσθαι, ἡ διὰ τὴν ἀνάγκην, γάλακτι. The latter of the two cases supposed has reference to such instances as that well-known one of the Greecian Daughter. The main difficulty turns on the force of the expression λόγου δικ., where, from the sense being expressed in a general way, there is room for variety of interpretation. Many of the best Expositors, from Calv. and Grot. to Kuin., Olsh., and De Wette, take it to mean doctrinam perfectionis, the τελειότης spoken of infra vi. 1; regarding it as in antithesis with τὰ στοιχεῖα, and the Genit. as one of quality. But this is liable to some objections (well stated by Ebrard), too serious to be removed. Accordingly, it is best, with most Expositors, to take δικ. as a Genit. of object, 'the word of righteousness;' meaning, however, not, as many explain, 'the moral law,' but 'the righteousness before God in Christ,'—the doctrine of justification by faith and grace, which prob. the persons here addressed, as well as the Galatian Christians, had forgotten, or not duly attended to. Now to those thus deficient are opposed the τέλειοι, or 'those who can bear the solid food of a more recondite inquiry into the origin and nature of the Gospel;' comparing the word of righteousness, the righteousness of Faith (see Rom. iv. 13), with the righteousness of the Law (see Rom. x. 5). According to this mode of interpretation, v. 14 will run parallel with v. 13; for, as observes Ebrard, 'He who still needs milk, cannot yet have comprehended the doctrine of justification; but that strough meat, and more difficult to digest (of the higher typology) is adapted not to such, but only to mature Christians, who have come of age, and who are exercised in distinguishing between the true and the false way.' The several terms, τελείων, στερεὰ τροφή, and ἔξιν, are equally adapted to the natural and to the figurative sense. So Hyper. remarks, that the ratio similitudinis would have required a nomen expressive of age, as men (adulti, or old men); but the Apostle thought it enough to say perfectos, as in Eph. iv. 13, ἀνδρα τέλειον. Thus by τελείων he means 'those that have made some progress, so as to understand the deeper mysteries of the word;' such as those of whom he makes mention at 1 Cor. ii. 6: 'Howbeit we speak wisdom, ἐν τοῖς τέλειοις.' The next words, διὰ τὴν ἔξιν, serve to show the nature of this τελειότης, and in what it consists; where the phrase does not here mean (though it might, did the context permit) 'by reason of use.' The philosophic Plutarch well defines ἔξις as συχὴ καὶ κατασκευὴ τῆς περὶ τοῦ ἀλόγου δυνάμεως, ἔξ ἔθους ἰγγυνομίην, agreeably to Locke's definition of habit, as 'the power or ability of doing any thing, acquired by frequently doing the same thing.' And so it is used in Polyb., Diod., and other later Greek writers. This, however, was, I suspect, rather the popular than the philosophic use of the term. It may denote simply the state, or condition, resulting from repeated use or exercise, and also, as here, popularly, by the exercise of, &c. The only passage I have met with that exactly corresponds to this, and in which the article is used, is Polyb. x. 47, 11, προσασκίον διὰ τὴν ἔξιν, 'one must employ the constant exercise of the thing.' Comp. Aristot. Rhet. i. in οἱ μὲν εὐκὴ ᾤοντο, οἱ δὲ διὰ τὴν συνήθειαν ἀπὸ ἔξιος, 'from constant practice.' By the terms καλοῦ and κακοῦ are denoted not simply 'moral good, and moral evil,' but 'the good of truth, and the evil of falsehood, or error, in religion.'

VI. 1. Here the Apostle proceeds, in connexion with the foregoing reasonings, commenced at v. 12, to exhort his readers to strive after that perfection which he had enjoined to be aimed at, and accordingly to exert themselves to pass beyond the elements; q. d. 'Wherefore (διὸ), there being solid food provided for those who would grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; consider it to be your duty to avail yourselves of it.' Such is evidently the general sense involved in the introductory διό. But as to the meaning contained in the subsequent portion Expositors differ. I have heretofore been of opinion, that the Apostle means in these words to apprise his readers of what he is about to do in his subsequent address to them;—namely, after passing over the more elementary parts of the Christian doctrines, to proceed to the higher and more recondite ones, the more spiritual mysteries of redemption by Christ: q. d. 'Passing over [for the present] the elementary doctrines of repentance, faith, baptism, &c., let us proceed to the consideration of the higher doctrines (as involved in the comparison between the priesthood of Melchisedec and Christ). And this,' adds he, 'by God's permission, we will now do,' i. e. intend now to do. Now this the writer does, but not until after a digression, contained in vv. 4—12, inclusive; commencing the discussion in question at ver. 13. This view is very plausible,—has much on the surface of the words to recommend it, and is ably supported by Grot., Whitby, Wolf, and other eminent Expositors, but is liable to insuperable objections, which are ably stated by Est., Kuin., and Ebrard; inasmuch that, on carefully reconsidering the case, I am induced to embrace the view of nearly all the ancient Expositors, and, of moderns, of Calv., Bohme, Bleek, and Ebrard, who understand the first person ('we') here, as used 'insinuatori, modestim ergo,' and the whole as admonitory to the readers. According to this view, the subsequent words admit of an excellent sense. Thus τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ λόγον will be in exact parallel with the expression supr. v. 12, τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λόγων τοῦ Θεοῦ, and accordingly the whole stands for ἀφέντες τὸ λέγειν περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ λόγου τοῦ Χριστοῦ, and that for τῶν λόγων τοῦ Θεοῦ.—'Ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερόμεθα. Τελειότης is here equiv. to τὰ τέλεια there, those recondite doctrines which correspond to the solid food of Christian knowledge just mentioned, fit for the τέλει, supr. v. 14. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7, σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς τέλει, σοφίαν Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ. In each of the above two passages Kuin. would take τῆς ἀρχῆς as subst. for its cognate Adject., and thus equiv. to πρώτος; 'so that here,' says he, 'τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς λόγον is tantamount to τὸν πρώτον λόγον; thus by τοῦ Χριστοῦ is meant the Christian doctrine, and by λόγον the treating on it;' the general sense being, 'the treating of the elements of Christian doctrine;' and thus, remarks Kuin., we get rid of the hypallage.' But, I would remark, at the expense of introducing something more objectionable than hypallage;—namely, the harsh and unauthorized taking of λόγον for tractationem,—a use which, if it could be proved, is one not permitted by the parallel passage at ch. v. 12. The two passages, indeed, bear such affinity, that the sense here must be determined by the sense there (and vice versa); consequently τὸν λόγον can admit of no other sense than τὰ λόγια there. But the sense here may be made consistent with the sense there, by the method which I have pointed out, without violence. And, since the principle of hypallage is one not to be resorted to without necessity (which here does not exist), it is best dispensed with, as it may be, by supposing that in each of the two passages there is a Genit. Subst. for its cognate Adject., as in Luke xvi. 8. Rom. i. 26. Eph. ii. 2, and other passages to be seen in Win., Gr. Gram. N. T. § 34, 2. On this principle, as superseding hypallage, see Hermann on Vig. p. 890, and Fritz., Excurs. I. ad Marc. Evang. de Hypall. in N. T. See also Coray on Thucyd. iv. 126, who remarks that such expressions are best considered as containing, in two words, one single notion. Thus at v. 12 this notion would be that of first principles. Here, then, we might render lit. 'the word (i. e. doctrine) of Christ of the beginning,' meaning, 'such as is taught at the beginning of Christian instruction,'—namely, elementary.—Μὴ πάλιν—alioquin. The sense here assigned to καταβαλλόμενοι will depend upon the view adopted respecting the force of the preceding words. It would seem that the Apostle meant to advert to the communication of the chief of the elementary doctrines of the Christian religion (as in Rom. xv. 20. 1 Cor. iii. 10), omitting such as were implied in the very profession of the religion; and therefore we are not to expect to find all that are specified in similar enumerations at 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. 1 Thess. i. 9, 10. Tit. ii. 11—14, though some of them may be in τοῖς πρώτοις, or primary ones. The sense assigned to μὴ πάλ. καταβ. by Ebrard, 'not demolishing,' is forbidden by the usus loquendi, for I cannot find a single ex. of the Midd. form καταβάλλεσθαι in the sense 'to demolish,' but only in the sense 'to jacere,' 'to lay down,' whether in a lit. or a fig. sense. The sense here may be thus expressed, 'not again and again laying our foundation, as to conversion from dead works, and faith towards God;' Genitives of explanation. On the first pair which forms the series, into which the fundamental points of the Gospel are in a popular way distributed, the best comment is Acts xx. 21, διαμαρτυρούμενος Ἰουδαίοις καὶ Ἕλλησι τὴν εἰς τὸν Θεὸν μετανοίαν, καὶ πιστὴν τὴν εἰς τὸν Κύριον. The term μετανοία may denote sinful works (comp. Eph. ii. 1), rendering needful the μετανοία here spoken of; but it is rather used with reference to the works as fruitless, inefficacious to save, as being mere works of external righteousness, not proceeding from a living faith, and therefore productive of only a legal, not an Evangelical repentance. See Matt. iii. 2, 8. Acts iii. 19. 2 Cor. vii. 10. See more in Hyper., Calv., and Est.

Χριστοῦ λόγον, ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερόμεθα· μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι μετανοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, καὶ πίστεως ἐπὶ Θεόν, <sup>2</sup> βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν, ἀναστά-

2. As to the second pair—βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν, I still, as heretofore, prefer, with Kuin. and Dr. Burton, to take βαπτ. as a general term referring both to the Christian baptism, and to the Jewish baptisms (implying, in the adjunct διδαχῆς, such a comparison of one with the other, and such a knowledge of the difference between them, as would lead to the adoption of the latter), of which men-

σεώς τε νεκρῶν καὶ κρίματος αἰωνίου. <sup>3</sup> * Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, <sup>a</sup> Acts 15. 11.
ἐάν περ ἐπιτρέπη ὁ Θεός. <sup>4</sup> b' Ἀδύνατον γὰρ τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτι- <sup>1</sup> Cor. 4. 10.
<sup>James 4. 15.</sup>
<sup>b Matt. 13.</sup>
ch. 10. 26, 27. <sup>3</sup> Pet. 2. 20. <sup>1</sup> John 4. 10. & 5. 16.

tion is made infr. ix. 10; yet this I do merely from that view involving the least difficulty. One would have expected the singular, βαπτισμοῦ, whose existence would appear from the false reading, occurring in 4 ancient MSS., βαπτισμόν, prob. an error of scribes. But even the reading βαπτισμοῦ was merely an alteration of Critics, to remove the difficulty; which must be met as well as we can, and may be much lessened, if not removed, by supposing that, of the persons addressed, Hebrew Christians, some (perhaps not a few) still clung to certain of the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law, espec. as to the various βαπτισμοί ('immersions and washings') prescribed by that law, and all emblematical of that purity of mind so indispensable to the worshipping of God acceptably. And since the same doctrine was emblematically inculcated by the Christian baptism, the baptisms enjoined by the law might be, however erroneously, thought reconcilable with Christian principles and practices. Accordingly, such kind of βαπτισμοί (evidently adverted to infr. ix. 10, διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς) may also be meant infr. x. 22, in the words ἱεραρισμένοι καὶ λουμένοι τὸ σῶμα ὕδατι καθαρῷ. That this view is not a mere novelty, but was held by some ancient Greek Fathers, appears from Theophyl., who remarks: 'Ἰσως δὲ οὗτοι (the Hebrew Christians addressed) ὡς ἐπὶ τοῦ νόμου ἀντεχόμενοι (as if yet clinging to the law) πολλοὺς βαπτισμοὺς, ἰουδαϊκῶς (more Judaico), καὶ ἐν τῇ χάριτι ἐκρίβανον' where ἐκρίβανον is rendered constituebant, a sense not unfrequently found in the Greek Fathers, from whom Theophyl. derived the above annotation.—'Ἐπιθήσεις χειρῶν. Here we have not a separate head of doctrine, but an external observance closely connected with the foregoing; and a reference is thus had to the laying on of hands, by which, in that age, baptism was accompanied, and that not merely as a symbol of the spiritual gifts and graces to be thereafter bestowed, but as a bestowment of them for the present, by a sort of foretaste.—ἀναστάσεις νεκρῶν, meaning, not (as many have supposed) the resurrection of the just, but a resurrection generally, both of the just and the unjust, spoken of in Acts xxiv. 15.—καὶ κρίμ. αἰων., 'and of a judgment, the consequences of which, whether for bliss or woe, will be eternal.'

3. καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, &c.] See note supra v. 1. I still retain the reading -σομεν, though 4 of the most ancient uncials, and 30 cursives (to which I add Lamb. 1184, 1185, 1 m., and 3 Mus. copies), have -σωμεν, which, however, is forbidden by internal evidence.

4.—6. Much difference of opinion exists as to the sense contained in these verses; in determining which, it is of consequence to settle the connexion in ἀδύνατον γάρ. Some refer γάρ to the preceding verse; while others suppose it belongs to ver. 1, but of course vary in their representations of the meaning, according to their different views of the import of that verse, and according as they take the expression ἀδύνατον in a qualified, or in an unqualified sense. If we adopt the view generally taken of the sense of ver. 1, we may regard it as an argument to show the necessity of going on in the true profession and faithful practice of Christianity, founded on the desperate condition of apostates, and paraphrase, with Mr. Holden, thus: 'Let us strive to go on to perfection, and resolve upon it, vv. 1—3, for it is impossible to renew again by repentance those who have been once enlightened, &c., and yet have fallen away, since they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh,' &c. Yet thus the argument is any thing but cogent, and the case is made far more prominent than seems to have been intended. Hence it is far better, with some ancient and several modern Commentators, as Whitby and Abb. Newc., to suppose the γάρ to have reference to the words μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι: q. d. '[Let us, I say, not have to lay again the foundation of our religion, or by giving way to sluggishness, gradually slide into apostasy;] for it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance who have fallen away.' That apostasy is here meant, is plain from what follows, and espec. from the parallel passage at x. 26, 27 (which is the best comment on the present),—from a comparison of which we are best enabled to explain the terms here on which the sense mainly rests,—ἀδύνατον, φωτισθ., παραπισσόντας, ἀνακαίνιζεν. No writer has, I think, thrown so much light on this most controverted passage as Bp. Jeremy Taylor, in § 4 of his able treatise 'On the effect of repentance,' vol. ix. pp. 199—202. (Ed. Heber.) He there shows that by παραπισσόντας is meant, in conjunction with what follows, 'a falling away from the state of excellent things in which they had received all the present privileges and blessings of the Gospel,'—a full conviction and pardon of sins, the earnest of the Spirit, the comfort of the promises, an antepast of heaven itself. 'Now (continues he) to fall away from all this cannot be by infirmity, ignorance, or surprise; this being what Paul calls ἁνομιὰς διατρέχειν, to sin wilfully, after they have received the knowledge of the truth.' It must, he proceeds to show, denote 'absolute apostasy, either unto heathenism, or Judaism, or any other state of despising and hating Christ, as thus crucifying him afresh.' By the peculiar expression ἀνακαίνιζεν sic μετ. Bp. Taylor supposes it to be intimated, that such persons cannot be restored to their former condition, or to any other gracious covenant, since they have despised this. 'Other persons (continues he) who "hold fast their profession," and "forget not that they were cleansed in baptism," they, in case they do fall into sin, may proceed, in the same method, as in their first renovation to repentance; that is, in their being solemnly admitted to the method and state of repentance for all sins known and unknown. But when this renovation is renounced; when they despise the whole economy; when they reject this grace, and throw away the covenant, there is "nothing left" for such but a "fearful looking-for of judgment;" for these persons are incapable of the mercies of the Gospel,—they are out of the way; for there being but one way of salvation, viz. by Jesus Christ, whom they renounce,—neither Moses, nor nature, nor any other name σθέντας, γευσάμενους τε τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γενηθέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου, <sup>5</sup> καὶ καλὸν γευσάμενους Θεοῦ can restore them; and their case is so bad,—there being no means whereby they can be renewed unto life,—that their condition is truly desperate.' With respect to the expression ἀδύνατον, there need not have been such debate as to whether it should mean absolutely impossible, or very difficult. The truth here (as not unfrequently) may be said to lie in medio. The learned Prelate above cited shows that the word is to be understood, not in the natural sense, but in the moral, as in 'the case of a criminal condemned by the law, of whom we say it is impossible he should escape, i. e. by the law, that being clearly against him.' In like manner (I would add) the apostate may be said to stand in the same place with respect to religion, that a deserter does with respect to an army; the one is condemned by the articles of war, and has as little chance of regaining the name and character of a brave man, as the other of ever again attaining to the state of a sincere believer. Thus we may, with Bp. Taylor, illustrate the expression from the parallel words οὐκ ἔτι ἀπολείπεται θυσία, alluding to Moses' law, in which, for those that despised it, i. e. for apostates (as Maimonides expounds), 'there was no sacrifice appointed.' 'So that (continues he) though ἀδύνατον signifies, in sensu forensi, a state of sin which is sentenced by the Law to be capital and damning, yet here it denotes the highest degree of that deadliness and impossibility, as there are degrees of malignity and desperation in mortal diseases; for, of all evils, this state here described is the worst.' But, besides all other senses of this word ἀδύνατον, it is certain, by the whole frame of the place, and the very analogy of the Gospel, that the impossibility here mentioned is not an impossibility of the thing, but only relative to the person. It is impossible to restore him whose state of evil is contrary to pardon and restitution, as being a renouncing the Gospel, that is, the whole covenant of pardon and repentance (comp. 1 John iii. 9); so far impossible as not to be done without the extremest difficulty, and a perfect contradiction to that state in which he is, for the present, lost. So that this impossibility concerns not those that return and do confess Christ, but those that wilfully and maliciously reject this only way of salvation as false and deceitful, and never return to the confession of it again, which is the greatest sin against the Holy Ghost. Thus it appears that ἀδύνατον here (as elsewhere, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers) denotes the highest degree of what we call moral impossibility, something so exceedingly difficult, as to be utterly hopeless; though not beyond the reach of his grace 'with whom all things are possible.' (Matt. xix. 26.) 'Even (observes Conyb.) in the more strongly worded parallel passage, x. 26—31, it is not said that such apostates are never brought to repentance; but only that it cannot be expected they ever should be.' In the subsequent words, τοὺς ἀπαξ φωτισθ., down to the end of the next verse, the blessings and privileges of the Gospel seem distributed into two divisions,—(1) as respects Divine knowledge; (2) as regards its practical results in conferring blessings and privileges in this world, and everlasting happiness in the world to come. To the former class pertain the privileges, denoted by ἀπαξ φωτισθέντας and μετόχους γενηθέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου; to the latter, the subsequent results. By the term φωτισθέντας is generally supposed to be denoted 'the being enlightened by the truths of the Gospel,' espec. as respects repentance and faith. (See Eph. i. 18. 1 Pet. ii. 9. 2 Cor. iv. 4.) Thus the expression may be compared with that infra x. 26, λαμβάνειν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, except that it is a much stronger term. Some, however, consisting of the ancient Commentators and many eminent modern Expositors (as Beza, Camer., Grot., Hamm., Est., Whitby, Bengel, Ernesti, Michal., and Valcken.), suppose φωτισθέντας to stand for βαπτισθέντας: as it is said, infra x. 82, ἀναμνησκέσθε τὰς προτέρον ἡμέρας, ἐν αἷς φωτισθέντες, &c. My own view of the point cannot better be expressed than in the words of Hyper., thus: 'Etsi rectè accipere possumus exposita hic esse beneficia spiritualia omnia, quæ credentes ab initio suscepti evangelii ad id usque tempus, quo Apostolus epistolam hanc scribebat, acceptant; tamen non dubium est, de his præcipue, quæ in baptismo à tempore primæ institutionis acceptant, beneficiis sermonem fieri, aded ut omnia ferè, quæ hic dicuntur, baptismo, tanquam proprii ipsius effectus, tribui rectè queant.' That there is at least a strong allusion to baptism in the expressions φωτισθέντας and ἀνακαινίζειν, may be inferred from the points adverted to at ver. 2 being those in which candidates for baptism were espec. instructed. The words following, γευσάμενους τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, have been variously interpreted, and admit of more than one sense. If by φωτισθέντας just before be merely meant 'instructed in the principles of Christianity,' then δωρεᾶν ἐπουρανίου here may be explained (as it most commonly is) as equiv. to κληρονομήν ἐπουρανίου at iii. 1. Yet this is not a little harsh; and thus γευσάμενους would be far too strong a term to suit the reception of instruction in producing faith and grace. Hence it is better, with others, to understand this of the gift of the Holy Spirit, which is infra, viii. 20, called τὴν δωρεάν τοῦ Θεοῦ, to which γευσάμενους is quite applicable. The following particular has reference, not so much to the increase of religious knowledge in the ordinary way,—namely, by the sanctifying graces of the Spirit, as through the extraordinary influences of the Spirit. To turn to the second class above adverted to, the expressions indicating the inestimable privileges and happy experiences of the Gospel, these are suspended on the term γευσάμενους, which here, by a figure found in the Hebr. טָמַע, the Latin gustare, and the correspondent terms in most languages, signifies to know by experience. So in Ps. xxxiii. 8, Sept., we have γύσασθε καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι χρηστός ὁ Κύριος, and 1 Pet. ii. 3, ἀπειρ ἡγύσασθε ὅτι χρηστός ὁ Κύριος. The peculiar expression καλὸν Θεοῦ ὄμμα is explained by some ancient, and several modern Expositors, of the word of the Gospel. But thus the epithet καλόν,—which, by being placed first, is meant to be very significant,—would be very ῥῆμα δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, <sup>6</sup> καὶ παραπεσόντας, πάλιν ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, ἀνασταυροῦντας ἑαυτοῖς τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ παραδειγματίζοντας. <sup>7</sup> Ἡ γὰρ ἡ πιούσα τὸν ὕδωρ ἐπ' αὐτῆς πολλάκις ἐρχόμενον ὕετον, καὶ τίκτουσα βοτάνην εὖθετον ἐκείνοις δι' οὗ καὶ γεωργεῖται, μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ <sup>8</sup> ἐκφέρουσα δὲ ἀκάνθας καὶ τριβόλους, ἀδόκιμος καὶ

rapid. I am inclined to suppose, with Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. Dial. p. 272, that καλὸν is not meant to be a mere epithet, but is a predicative, as οἶνον γεγεννημένον in John ii. 9 (where see note). Thus the sense will be, 'we have ascertained, proved by trial, that the word of God [in the Gospel, with its glorious promises of a resurrection into life and glory, &c.] is good,' i. e. emphatically such, as the best of all good things. So Philo, p. 470, speaks of the ῥῆμα Θεοῦ and the λόγος Θεοῦ in a similar manner, as something to be ascertained, and adequately enjoyed only on trial. In determining the sense of the words following, δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the question is, whether by αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων be here meant the Gospel dispensation, or, as many able Expositors maintain, = τὴν οἰκουμένην μέλλουσαν supra. If it does, then δυναμι will advert to the supernatural gifts and powers bestowed by the Spirit, through imposition of hands; though not to the exclusion of the powerful influence of the Spirit for sanctification. But whether the Apostle meant to express this sense I doubt. The interpretation which I have propounded in my smaller Gr. Test.—the powerful supports ministered by the doctrines of the Gospel as respects a judgment to come, and a future state, seems very nearly what the Apostle had in mind. And this view is somewhat confirmed by the opinion of Calv., who thinks that the words are meant to intimate, 'Nos fide quasi admittere in regnum celeste, ut beatam immortalitatem, quæ sensus nostris latet, spiritui cernamus.' This of course implies the illumination of the Spirit (adverted to in the preceding context); so that, as Calv. says, 'o mundo abducti erigamur in cælum.' So Theophyl. explains by τὸ ζῆν ἀγγελικῶς πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα ἀποβλέπειν, καὶ ἥδη ἀρραβῶνα ἔχειν τῆς μελλούσης ζωῆς τὴν ἰσταῦθα (ἥδη) πνευματικῶν.

6. καὶ παραπεσόντας] meaning, 'those who have fallen away': a mild expression to denote apostatizing, equiv. to ἀποστήναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζῶντος at iii. 12.—ἀνακαινίζειν signif., 1. to rebuild decayed edifices; 2. to renew them by repairs; 3. in a metaphorical sense, to restore. Here ἀνακ. sis μετ. is for ἀνακ. sis τὸ, ὥστε μετανοεῖν, implying καὶ ἀναστρέφειν sis τὸν Κόσμον, which is expressed at Acta xxvi. 20. By the next words, ἀνασταυροῦντας τὸν Υἱὸν, &c., we have graphically represented the peculiar enormity of the offence; namely, that by turning apostates they represent Christ as an impostor, and consequently his crucifixion as just; and thereby put him afresh to shame. To sink the ἀνα is unjustifiable; and to justify it by representing ἀναστ. 'to recrucify,' as against the usus loquendi, is in vain. That ἀναστ. is so taken here is plain from the context; otherwise the point carried on between πάλιν, ἀνακαιν., and ἀνασταυρ. will be destroyed, and the sense not a little weakened.—ἀνατοῖς some interpret

'apud se;' others, 'quantum in se;' others, again, 'in eam perneciem.' The sense last mentioned is manifestly inadmissible. The other two may be combined; the latter as engrafted on the former. It is meant, then, that they, as it were, do it again in their own case, and as far as they are concerned. On the expression παραδ. see note at Matt. i. 19.

7, 8. To enforce the admonition contained in ἀδύνατον, ver. 4, the Apostle now contrasts, in forcible imagery, the respective conditions of those who, enjoying the blessings and privileges of the Gospel, see them arise, and of those who abuse them. The former are compared to fertile, and the latter to barren, ground, the difference between which is denoted by the different effects which the rain from heaven has upon them; in the one causing exuberance of corn or grass, in the other raising up nought but thorns or briars; see Matt. xiii. 3—8, and xviii. 23. Blessing attends the one; cursing and burning the other: thus are figuratively represented, as in the parable of the sower, the different effects of the Christian doctrine on different persons. Those (it is meant) who improve their spiritual advantages will be blessed, and those who are either wholly unfruitful in Christian graces, or abandon the Gospel, will be rejected, as thorny ground is rejected by the husbandman, and whose end will be, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire!' See Matt. xxv. 41—46.

7. γῆ γὰρ ἡ πιούσα τὸν ὕδωρ—ὑέτον] Render: 'forland(or, 'soil') which imbibeth the rain;' not, 'the earth which,' as in the Common Version. Why this version cannot be admitted, will appear from my note on Mark iv. 5. Comp. Hdor. lii. 17, ἡ γὰρ (γῆ) πιούσα τὸ ὕδωρ: iv. 198, γῆ ὁμβρον πλὴν πιούσα. On the next words, τίκτουσα βοτάνην, &c., it is well observed by Grot., that there is a peculiar felicity in the application of the term τίκτουσα to 'the good ground,' and of ἐκφέρουσα (ver. 8) to 'the bad;' the former being represented as bringing forth a healthful issue, whether in corn, or grass; the latter, as casting forth, so to speak, an abortion. By a similar mixture of metaphor, it is said, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 25, φθίσουσα μὲν κάλυξιν, ἐγκάρποις χθονός, φθίσουσα δ' ἀγλαῖας βουνόμοις, τόκαίσι τε γυναικῶν.—ἔδωκεν ἱαίλους δι' οὗ, &c., 'is suitable to, useful for those on account of whom,' &c.—μεταλαμβάνει, εὐλογ., 'partakes of,' 'is admitted to,' 'enjoys God's blessing,' in the resulting fertility. So 'partake' in our old writers, as Shaksp.

8. ἐκφέρουσα δὲ, &c.] Here there is implied the circumstance of the land having been first watered and cultivated; the meaning being, 'But the land (supplying γῆ at ἐκφέρουσα) which [after receiving rain and cultivation] bringeth forth thorns,' &c. On the term τριβόλους see note at Matt. vii. 16.—ἀδόκιμος, sc. ἴσται, i. e. 'is held despicable by its owner,' as unfit for cultivation.

d Prov. 14.
31.
Matt. 10. 45.
& 25. 40.
Mark 9. 41.
John 13. 30.
Rom. 8. 4.
1 Thess. 1. 3. 2 Thess. 1. 6, 7.

κατάρas ἐγγύς ἦς τὸ τέλος εἰς καύσιν. <sup>9</sup> Πειπίσμεθα δὲ περὶ ὡμῶν, ἀγαπητοὶ, τὰ κρείττονα καὶ ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας, εἰ καὶ οὕτω λαλοῦμεν. <sup>10</sup> οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος ὁ Θεός, ἐπιλαβέσθαι τοῦ

To this is added a yet stronger expression, κατάρas ἐγγύς; meaning (by a mode of expression similar to that infr. viii. 13, ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμού), 'is near being utterly rejected' (lit. 'thrown up with a curse'), implying also, 'is near to being cursed by God to utter barrenness'; the opposite to the preceding μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ. So the Hebrews called a sterile field ἐπικατάρατος; i. e. 'devoted by God to a curse' (see Pa. cxvi. 34, Sept.); and land so hopelessly unproductive was popularly called 'curst land,'—ἡ τὸ τέλος εἰς καύσιν. Supply ἔστι. The phrase εἰς καύσιν εἶναι is a Hebraism, formed on עָלָה לְאֵשׁ, and the verbal is for the Infin. passive used as a noun; see Isa. xlv. 15. By the burning here spoken of is certainly not to be understood, with some Expositors, the being burnt up with drought (because, as has been before seen, it is implied that the rain has fallen on the ungrateful soil); but we have here alluded to a process common in the East,—and found more or less every where,—by which foul land is ameliorated by the thorns and thistles being pared off at the roots, and heaped and burned; which both cleans and manures the soil. So Virgil, Georg. i. 85, 'Sæpe etiam steriles incendere profuit agros.' The Apostle cannot but have had in mind Christ's Parable, of the different kinds of ground. 'In that Parable, however (as Ebrard observes), we find the best refutation of the Calvinistic exegesis of vv. 4—6. The fruitful as well as the unfruitful soil received the same rain and blessing; it is the fault of the soil if the seed is choked by thorns and evil lusts. The cause of the falling away lies not in the want of an abstract donum perseverantiae withheld by God, but in a short-coming in the struggle with the old man.' My interpretation of εἰς καύσιν εἶναι I find confirmed by Ebrard, who subjoins the remark,—'This is, then, the type of the eternal destruction of the individual who was compared with an unfruitful field.'

9—12. The Apostle now turns to the other side of the subject,—to the comforting hope, that in the case of his readers it has not yet come so far as to a falling away. He takes this course in order to soften any seeming harshness in his mode of addressing them; and to intimate that he deals thus plainly with them, by way of warning, from affection, as well as from a sense of duty. The foregoing remarks confirm the view which I have always entertained, that πειπίσμεθα is not to be understood of 'full persuasion,' or 'confident expectation' (for the Apostle's previous complaint of their sluggishness forbids that), but merely denotes, as we popularly say, 'a good hope.' So at Gal. v. 10, it is said, ἐγὼ πειπνοῖα εἰς ὑμᾶς, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονεῖτε, and yet at iii. 1 he had called them foolish. 'The change (observes Ebrard) here from severity to gentleness, reminds us of Gal. iv. 12, 19, and 2 Cor. x. 11; add Gal. v. 10; and supplies a confirmation of the Pauline origin of the Epistle.'

9. καὶ ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας.] 'Yea, things connected with, and leading to, salvation,' of which force of ἐχόμενα see my Lex. The expression ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας corresponds to the foregoing κατάρas ἐγγύς; intimating that, as apostates are κατάρas ἐγγύς, so those who persevere in the faith are ἐχόμενοι σωτηρίας, 'are in the way of salvation.'

10. οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος, &c.] Γὰρ seems to refer to the reasons which the Apostle had for this good hope of their salvation; reasons founded partly on themselves, and partly on that God who 'is not unrighteous to forget their work and labour of love'; for they had, it seems, shown such attention to one important branch of Christian duty, as justified him in the hope that they would in time add other virtues and graces, and thereby obtain the Divine aid and blessing on their endeavours to work out their salvation. See Phil. ii. 13. Jude 24, and 2 Thess. ii. 13. Prof. Ebrard, after laying down the wholesome truth, that 'the more the new life has already shown itself to be efficacious in a Christian, the more the fruits of holiness have been visible in him, so much the more may it be concluded that his has been a central, fundamental, and deep conversion,' proceeds to observe, that 'upon this truth the sentiment of v. 10 is founded. Because the readers have already evinced, and do still evince, the visible fruits of faith in works of love and of service, the writer cherishes the persuasion that God will not let them fall, will not withdraw his Spirit and the help of his grace from them.' I now, on further consideration, see cause to reject the sense merciful, no adequate proof for it existing. More of nature and the simplicity of truth is there in the ordinary sense, unrighteous = unjust, which is supported by the Peesch. Syr. Version, and called for by the context, and which has been rejected by some merely on doctrinal grounds, and from misconception of the true bearings of the question as relates to the terms merces and gratia Dei; some fearing, it seems, lest the passage should thus favour the dogmas of the Pelagians and Romanists, who imagine a mutual relation between the justice of God and man's merits and deservings. But, to see the fallacy of this supposition, the reader need only consult the able annotations of Hyper. and Calv., the latter of whom has evinced that 'the Apostle is not here discussing professedly what is the cause of our salvation; and accordingly no judgment ought from hence to be made as to the merit of works, nor what is due to works.' His further remarks are borne out by the able discussions of Hyper., who further adverts to an important principle,—applicable not only here but in not a few other passages where even the best theologians fail to resort to it,—namely, that the Apostle is here speaking 'communiter more loquendi et sequens communem sententiam, quâ dicitur a Deo nulum bonum relinqui inremuneratum';—a principle which entirely bears out what Calv. remarks, that 'no judgment is to be formed from this passage on the point at issue between the Pelagians and the Orthodox, as to the question of human merit.' Indeed, the most eminent of ἔργου ὑμῶν καὶ [τοῦ κόπου] τῆς ἀγάπης, ἧς ἐνεδείξασθε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, διακονήσαντες τοῖς ἁγίοις καὶ διακονοῦντες.

11 Ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δέ, ἕκαστον ὑμῶν τὴν αὐτὴν ἐνδείκνυσθαι σπουδὴν, πρὸς τὴν πληροφορίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος ἄχρι τέλους 12 ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ γένησθε, μιμηταὶ δὲ τῶν διὰ πίστεως καὶ μακροθυμίας κληρονομοῦντων τὰς ἐπαγγελίας. 13 Ὡρὴ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐπαγγει-

Gen. 12. 2.
17. 4.
22. 17.
Ps. 105. 2.
Luke 1. 72.

all the Roman Catholic Commentators, Estius, confirms to a considerable extent the views taken by Calv. and Hyper. The view taken by the latter is confirmed by the opinion of Prof. Ebrard, who says, 'It is here affirmed of God that he does not give up to perdition a man who can still, in any way, be saved, in whom the new life is not entirely extinct, and who has not yet entirely fallen away; but that he seeks to draw every one as long as they will allow themselves to be drawn.'—As regards the Critical question, which concerns the words τοῦ κόπου, on carefully reconsidering the matter, I still continue, with Matth., to retain them, though against the united judgment of Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. External authority for their removal is very slender,—only 5 uncials, and 10 cursives; to which I can make no addition. Internal evidence, indeed, draws two ways. The words might be introduced from 1 Thess. i. 3; but it is very improbable that they should have been introduced, as it would seem unnecessarily, into all the copies but 15. And as to the ancient Versions appealed to, Versions are not, in a case like this, of any great weight. That κόπου is retained in a few copies and in Cyril, and ἔργου cancelled, plainly points at the origin of the reading, however embraced by so many Critics; who, if they had borne in mind the strong aversion of the ancient Aristarchs to pleonasm, and the officious zeal with which they almost systematically removed them, they would have held their hands. It may, indeed, be replied, that the words are not absent in any copies at 1 Thess. i. 3. True; but there the removal could not be made. In short, the passages are not parallel; and hence interpolation was the less likely.

11. 'Quemadmodum laudes permiscuit exhortatione, ne immodice exasperat eorum animos; ita, ne quid assentionis habeat illa comitas, libere, quid adhuc illis desit, admonet' (Calv.); who well saw, what escaped most Expositors, the adverse force of δέ. Render: 'But what we desire is, for each one of you (every individual) to evince the same zealous promptitude (as heretofore) to the full assurance of hope unto the end,' i. e. 'to the uttermost,' 'to the fullest extent.'—πληροφορίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος, for ἐλπίδα περιπλορημένην, meaning, 'a fully assured hope' (as at x. 22 we have ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, 'unwavering faith'), whereby they would be most effectually secured against apostasy. It would seem, too, that faith is here implied in the hope; without which, indeed, it would be nugatory; q. d. with Calv. 'Caritatem vestram multis experimentis testatam fecistis: superest tamen, ut fides respondeat. Sedulo ne decesset hominibus vestra officia, laboratis: sed non minore studio incumbere vos decet ad profectum, ut firmam plenamque ejus certitudinem approbetis Deo.'

12. The next words, ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ, &c., further develop the preceding sentiment, and have reference to ἔλπ. preceding; q. d., pointing at result, 'that ye may be not, as heretofore, sluggish nor faint in your hope': to rouse which, the Apostle recommends to their imitation the example of those who had evinced those qualities (faith and constancy) which are best calculated to stimulate hope, and rouse exertion,—namely, Abraham and the Patriarchs, together with all those of his spiritual seed who were inheritors of the promises.—διὰ πίστεως καὶ μακροθυμίας. Several eminent Expositors recognize here a Hendiadys for πίστει καὶ μακροθύμῳ. But that detracts from the force and energy of the words; which seem meant to advert to the two great features of the Christian profession, faith and constancy under trial, which are in Scripture almost always considered separately, one bearing on the other, e. g. James i. 3, τὸ δοκιμῆς ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεως κατεργάζεται ὑπομονήν. The same error of Commentators in introducing Hendiadys at the expense of the sentiment is observable in not a few other passages of the N. T., e. g. James v. 10, where by κακῶν, &c. is meant both affliction (i. e. the being afflicted) and patience [under affliction]. So here faith is considered as productive of patient long-suffering.—Κληρονομοῦντων is a Participle Aorist, to be explained, 'who have come into the enjoyment of the promised blessing of salvation,' understanding λαβόν. as referring partly to the Patriarchs, their pious progenitors, who lived by faith in the promises of salvation through the future Saviour; and partly to those Hebrew Christians, who, imitating the faith and patience of their ancestors, had fought the good fight of faith and endured unto the end; and, being at length delivered from their trials, had entered into the joy of their Lord, promised to all his faithful servants. The plural in ἔργων is used, because the promises in question were extended to the Patriarchs generally, and were given at various times and seasons (see Gen. xii. 3. xxii. 16 and 18. xxvi. 3. xxviii. 13); all, however, centering in the promise of salvation through a Redeemer.

13, 14. Here the Apostle takes occasion, from the foregoing, to excite the Hebrews to perseverance, by enlarging on the certainty of the promises of God, as even confirmed by oath; recalling to their minds the many examples of faith presented by their ancestors, espec. Abraham, whom he justly magnifies, though he shows even him to have been inferior to Melchisedec; thus paving the way to represent the dignity of Christ as supreme.

13. τῇ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ, &c.] The γὰρ, as Mr. Wesley well points out, has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[Ye have abundant encouragement to this diligence and faith:] for, or, seeing that, no stronger promise could be made, than that great promise which God made to Abraham, λάμενος ὁ Θεός, ἐπεὶ καθ' οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ὁμόσαι, ὡμοσε καθ' ἑαυτοῦ, <sup>14</sup> λέγων· Ἡ μὲν εὐλογῶν εὐλογήσω σε, καὶ πληθύνων πληθυνῶ σε· <sup>15</sup> καὶ οὕτω, μακροθυμήσας, ἐπέτυχε τῆς ἐπαγγελίας. <sup>16</sup> Ἐνθ' ἄνθρωποι μὲν γὰρ κατὰ τοῦ μείζονος ὁμνύουσι, καὶ πάσης αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογίας πέρας εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὁ ὅρκος. <sup>17</sup> Ἐν δὲ περισσώτερον βουλόμενος ὁ Θεός ἐπιδειξάμενος τοῖς κληρονόμοις τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς

R 2

† Exod. 22.
11.

g. Ps. 22. 11.
Rom. 11. 29.

and in him to us.—εἶχε, meaning, 'had it in his power,' for ιδύνατο.—ὡμοσε καθ' ἑαυτοῦ. 'Sanctissimè promissit,' i. e. pledged his eternal Godhead to fulfil his engagement. So God is said, Jer. xxii. 5, and elsewhere in the Old Test., to swear by himself, as having none superior to swear by.

14. ἡ μὲν] A frequent formula of swearing, and also of solemn engagement.—ἡ μὲν—πληθ. πληθ. σε: a most emphatic mode of expression, formed on the Hebrew (but occasionally occurring in the early Greek writers), denoting, 'I will assuredly greatly bless and multiply thee.' Only part of the promise is here quoted, because it was one so well known, that more was unnecessary; but the Apostle's argument is concerned principally with those words, 'And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.'

15. The Apostle here again (as at v. 12. iii. 6, and elsewhere) inculcates constancy in faith; and in order to emphasize the injunction, remarks, that it was only through this constancy that Abraham obtained the 'promised blessing'—namely, of a son who should produce a progeny that should become numerous. The preternatural birth of a son under such remarkable circumstances was a sufficient pledge that what had been promised respecting him would be fulfilled. Other blessings, too, were connected with the birth of Isaac and the faith of Abraham, which Abraham did not, indeed, obtain by actual possession; but by anticipation, confident hope, and unwavering faith in the promises of God. Comp. John viii. 56. (Stuart.)

16. From the promise made by God to Abraham the writer takes occasion to speak on the immutability of the Divine counsels and purposes in general. See ver. 18. (Kuin.) We have here, as Calvin observes, an argumentum a minori ad majus; q. d. 'Si homini, qui natura mendax est, juranti habetur fides, quis intercedit confirmatio per Dei nomen; quanto plus fidei meretur Deus ipso, qui æterna est veritas, quum per seipsum jurat!'—τοῦ μείζονος, i. e. 'by some person greater than themselves [who can avenge falsehood],' meaning God, who is called, John x. 29, μείζων πάντων.—Καὶ πάσης αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογίας, &c. The force of the Article at ὁ ὅρκος ought not to be overlooked, as it is in the Common Version and some others; and to the sense assigned in others, 'the oath for confirmation,' it is well objected by Abresch, and Bp. Middl., that that would require ὁ εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὅρκος. The adjunct here, εἰς βεβαίωσιν, is of the same force as the one in Thucyd. iii. 82, ὅρκοι ἐνναλλαγῆς, for εἰς ἐνναλλαγὴν, since in either case is denoted purpose. Thus we may render, 'the oath sworn is to them a termination of all controversy, unto confirmation,' or assurance of belief in the word, by causing doubt to terminate in sure confidence. As to the argument, comp. Thucyd. iv. 87, οὐκ ἐν μείζω, πρὸς τοῖς ὅρκοις, βεβαίωσιν λάβοιτε. The oath here spoken of seems to have been such an oath as that mentioned in Thucyd. v. 78, —namely, that against a person accused of any crime that was not clear and decisive; in which case the accused and suspected, but not fully convicted, person was allowed to clear himself by a solemn oath as to his innocence of the crime. Such an oath might, accordingly, be well termed 'an end of all controversy unto confirmation,'—namely, of the truthfulness or innocence of the accused party.

17. ἐν ᾧ περισσ. βουλ., &c.] 'Wherein,' 'suitably to which (principle) God,' &c.—ἐμστίνας for μασίτη ἐγένετο, 'became Mediator under oath'; as much as to say, that 'although faith was due to the assertion of the God of truth, even without the interposition of an oath, yet in condensation to human weakness, he subjoined an oath to the promise.'—τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ, 'the immutability of his will or purpose.' The use here of the singular, βουλῆς, rather than the plural, is not without its force; for, as Bp. Sanderson observes (Serm. viii. ad Pop. § 17, p. 657, on Prov. xix. 21), 'while it is no commendation, but rather a disparagement of men's devices, that they are so many, it is to the honour of God, that his counsel is but one and unchangeable, and accordingly the great foundation of our Christian hope is immovable.'—ἐμστίνας ὅρκος. Of this obscure expression various novel interpretations have been propounded by the recent Expositors. It may suffice to notice that of Bretschn. (adopted by Kuin.), who assigns to ἐμστί. ὅρκος the sense sponsorem esse; a sponsor being one who acts the part of a mediator between two parties. Thus he renders, 'promissionis veritatem spondit juramento,' adducing from Josephus an example of μασίτης in the sense sponsor. Yet even this interpretation lies open to no little objection; for as God cannot be a mediator between himself and the heirs of the promise, so neither can he be a sponsor, in the above sense. Other interpretations propounded are even less entitled to confidence; and, until such be found, I cannot part with the sense ordinarily ascribed, 'interposed an oath,' as the Vulg. freely renders; meaning, as Stuart explains, 'that he was made [so to speak] mediator by an oath,—interposed an oath between himself and the other party, the heirs of the promises, i. e. made an oath the means of removing all doubt on their part, whether he would faithfully perform what he had promised.' And so Dr. Peile, 'interposed (by mediation);' became, as it were, a third party αὐτοῦ, ἐμεσίτευσεν ὁρκῷ<sup>18</sup> ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμετα-<sup>h Tit. 1. 2.</sup>

 θέτων, ἐν οἷς ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεόν, ἰσχυρὰν παράκλησιν<sup>1 Tim. 6. 12.</sup> ἔχωμεν οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπίδος.<sup>ch. 12. 1.</sup> 19<sup>1</sup> Ἦν ὡς ἄγκυραν ἔχομεν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀσφαλῆ τε καὶ βεβαίαν,<sup>1 Lev. 16. 15.</sup>
 καὶ εἰσερχομένην εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, 20<sup>2</sup> ὥσπου<sup>ch. 9. 7.</sup> <sup>k ch. 4. 14.</sup>
<sup>ab. 8. 1.</sup>
<sup>& 9. 11.</sup>

between himself (as the Promiser and the heirs of the promise, and so a virtual guarantee for its fulfilment) by means of an oath.

18. ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμεταβίβων, &c.] In further urging the argument founded on the oath of God above mentioned, the Apostle, in now enlarging on that oath, makes, in reference to it, a sort of distinction, which has to many seemed far-fetched, at least according to the sense almost universally assigned to this expression, 'the two immutable things,'—namely, the word, or promise, of God, of itself immutable (see Rom. x. 29), and the oath of God, added in condescension to human infirmity. Yet, admitting the distinction to be far-fetched, that is surely no more than what may often be said of Jewish composition (as found in the Rabbinical writers), and not very unfrequent in Paul. Nor are exx. of such wanting in the best writers of antiquity. It must here suffice to adduce one ex. (and that quite to the purpose) from Thucyd. ii. 95, διὰ δύο ὑποσχέσεις, &c., which passage presents a yet more out-of-the-way kind of expression, and one, moreover, which has not, like the present, the advantage of the thing signified being sufficiently elevated to comport with phraseology almost of Pindaric boldness. The harshness, however, is not so great as might at first sight appear. We may, with Hyper., regard the words as the conclusion of a syllogism, 'wherein (he says) the writer infers more than was strictly necessary, or than simply followed from the two premises; for he infers that on two accounts,—namely, on account of the promise itself, which even alone ought to be sufficient, and yet more because of its confirmation by oath, believers ought to continue steadfast in the faith,' &c. By the two immutable things, in which believers may confide, are meant, (1) God's promise that Abraham should have a Son (the Messiah), in whom all nations should be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18. (2) His oath that this Son should be High Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek (Pa. ex. 4). The things in question are called immutable, as necessarily attaining their fulfilment; and the reason for this immutability is adverted to in the next words, ἐν οἷς ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεόν, a reason founded on the nature of God himself, who is, as such, necessarily veracious (see 2 Cor. ii. 18), who can neither be deceived, nor be induced to deceive.—ἰσχυρὰν παράκλησιν. The term παράκλησις has been variously explained, but no sense is so suitable as the one commonly assigned,—consolation, which is supported by the authority of the best ancient Versions and the Greek Commentators. This consolation is called ἰσχυρὰν, valid, from its affording a firm ground for assured hope, as founded on the oath and covenant of God.—οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπί. There is here a sense of præsumptio, which may be thus evolved: 'we who run, to take refuge in and grasp at the hope set before us in the Gospel,' as sinking mariners gladly run into any harbour of refuge, or lay hold of a rope thrown out for their deliverance from the deep; there being a mixture of two metaphors.

19. ἦν Supply ἐλπίδα, not (with many) παράκλησιν, which is against the scope of the passage; whereas ἐλπίς is closely connected with the continuation of the above natural metaphor. The construction is this, ἦν (scil. ἐλπίδα)—εἰσερχομένην εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπ. Render: 'Which [hope]—entering into that within the veil (namely, heaven),' meaning, in other words, that 'our hope is firmly fixed on heaven,' as an anchor is firmly fixed when εἰσερχομένη εἰς γῆν ἀσφαλῆ, secure ground. Comp. Pind. Frag. Incert. iii., Γλυκεῖα ὁ καρδίας ἀντιτάλλοις γυροτρόφος ξυναορῇ ἑλπίς, ἡ μάλιστα θανάτῳ πολύτροφον γνάμιν κυβερᾷ, where there is a metaphor derived from a stately vessel (the 'tall anchoring bark' of Shakspear), resting safely at anchor, and defying the raging storms around. The term εἰσερχομένη is to be referred, not to ἄγκ., but to ἐλπίδος. Render: 'which hope entereth (viz. by anticipation) into the inner sanctuary (καταπέτασμα, see my Lex.) where God dwelleth,' even heaven itself.—ἔχομεν, for κατέχομεν, as in an anonymous writer, cited by Chrys., κατέχουσιν τὴν ἄγκυραν τοῦ πνέματος. The object of the anchoring here spoken of is, to secure us from making shipwreck of our faith and trust in God. Of this there was great danger; for, as Calv. observes, 'quamdiu peregrinamur in hoc mundo, non stamus in firma terra; sed quasi in medio mari, et quidem valde turbulento fluctuamur.' Thus then the general sense intended is, 'Hold fast the objects of your Christian faith and hope. These will keep you steady in adherence to your holy religion, and preserve you, as an anchor does a tempest-tossed bark, from making shipwreck of the faith.'

20. ὥσπου πρόδρομος, &c.] Of these words the sense mainly depends on the force of the expression πρόδρομος ἐσθλῆς. This the recent Commentators suppose to stand for προῆλθε, appealing to Æschyl. Theb. (196, Blomf.) ἐπὶ δαιμόνους πρόδρομος ἦλθεν ἀρχαία βρῆτη. That passage, however, is unsuitable to the present purpose, since there πρόδ. is for προτροπᾶ-δην, as in Soph. Antig. 108, φυγάδα πρόδρομον. Indeed, it may be doubted whether πρόδρομος ever simply means one who goes before any person, or thing; for though in the 400th fragment of the Tragedies of Æschylus we have δίσποιν 'Ἐκάτῃ τῶν βασιλείων πρόδρομος μελάθρων, yet there, I am persuaded, the true reading is πρόδρομος, to be taken adjectively, for πρό μελάθρων ἰδρυμένοι, meaning the status. Indeed, whereas πρόδρομος is used for 'running, or going forward,' as in Hdot. ix. 14, πρόδ. ἤλθε στρατῷ, it is almost always implied that the going forward is to prepare the way for others πρόδρομος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν εἰσηλθεν Ἰησοῦς, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδὲκ ἀρχιερεὺς γενόμενος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

a Gen. 14. 18,
&c.

VII. 1<sup>a</sup> Οὗτος γὰρ ὁ Μελχισεδὲκ βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ, ἱερεὺς
τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου,—ὁ συναντήσας Ἀβραὰμ ὑποστρέφοντι ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς τῶν βασιλέων καὶ εὐλογήσας αὐτὸν, 2<sup>a</sup> ὃ καὶ who stay behind. So Eurip. Iph. Aul. 424, ἰγὰρ δὲ πρόδρομος σὴ παρασκευῇ χάριν ἔκω. As to the application of the figure here, it may be true that Christ is in this passage said to be our precursor, to intimate that it is our duty to follow him. But that is not the whole truth, nor the main purpose. What is here said is, I conceive, meant not so much by way of exhortation to follow Christ, as of encouragement to do so; implying not only that the possibility of entering the heavenly kingdom is ascertained, but that preparation is made for those that follow. So Christ says of himself, John xiv. 2, πορεύομαι ἰτοιμάσαι τόπον ὑμῖν. Thus then the words may be rendered, 'whither Jesus is entered as a Forerunner for us; and not as a Forerunner only, but, having opened heaven, he remains there as our High Priest, to introduce thither all the faithful into the presence of God.' In the expression ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν there is plainly a reference to Christ's priesthood; from which the Apostle takes occasion to show that, as it was lawful for the Mosaic High Priest alone to enter, through the veil, into the inner sanctuary, so Jesus, as High Priest of the new dispensation, alone entered the eternal sanctuary above, making expiation of perpetual efficacy for sinners, Heb. ix. 11, 12, 22—26.

VII. The Apostle now resumes a subject which he had before glanced at, vv. 6—10, and pursues it to v. 25, where he takes up the topic broken off at v. 10, and completes what he intended to say concerning it, vii. 26—28; explaining the passage, which he had referred to, from Ps. cx. 4; and, after removing the doubt, which might seem to hinder him from treating of the sublime doctrines of the allegories and types of Christ, he labours to convince the Hebrews of the authority, prerogatives, and exalted priesthood of Melchisedec. His argument is founded on the oath of God, by which Jesus was constituted a High Priest for ever, according to the order or similitude of Melchisedec. Whatever, therefore, as a priest, this personage was, such must Jesus our High Priest be. Now the superiority of the priesthood of Melchisedec is shown in vv. 1—10; and though the Apostle has not expressly stated the conclusion, but left it to be supplied by the reader, it is clearly this: that, as Melchisedec is superior to the Aaronical priests, and Christ is a priest after the order of Melchisedec, so Christ must be far superior to them. (Dind., Iaspis, Stuart, and Holden.)

1. The γὰρ is resumptive, pointing back to vi. 20. Some Commentators after ἱερεὺς supply ἤν. This, however, not a little interrupts the course of argument, from an examination of which Kuin. shows that 'the periodus oratorica carried on from ver. 1 ends at the words of v. 3, μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές; and that these words belong to Melchisedec, and are to be considered as the predicate; while all the rest that proceeds is subjoined to the subject, describing it more at large.' a view, I would add, confirmed by the use of the Article at Μελχ., which Bp. Middl. shows would not otherwise have been employed. As to the doubt which has been entertained, whether Μελχ. is to be regarded as an appellative (i. e. title of honour) or a proper name, the latter is the common opinion, and is, upon the whole, the best founded. At all events a real person is here designated, and not (as some suppose) an imaginary one; yet of those who admit the reality, all are not agreed as to the nature of his person. Many ancients and some moderns have supposed him to have been a superhuman person, while others suppose him to be the same as Enoch, or Shem, or Job. There seems, however, most probability in the opinion of Josephus, and several eminent moderns, that he was a descendant, not far removed, of one of the sons of Noah; that he was a powerful chieftain, or head of a tribe, among the Canaanites, and, after the custom of the patriarchal ages, was, as head of his tribe, both king and priest.—To advert to a matter of reading. At τοῦ ὑψίστου Lachm. cancels the τοῦ, solely on the authority of the Elz. Edit. and one cursive—No. 35, and against internal evidence, since the τοῦ was more likely to be omitted through the carelessness of a scribe, than added in all the copies except one; for I find it in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies. I doubt not that it was omitted in the Elz. Edit. by a typographical blunder. Besides, propriety of language requires the Article, which is also found in the passage of the Sept. here alluded to.—ὁ συναντήσας A. Kuin. has here ally removed a seeming discrepancy between this account and what is said in Gen. xiv. 17; from whence it may, as he shows, be collected that Melchisedec did meet Abraham; though the circumstance is only expressly mentioned of the King of Sodom.—τῆς κοπῆς. Notwithstanding that all our Translators render this slaughter, yet its true sense, I conceive, is simply defeat. Of such a sense the Hebr. נצח at Gen. xiv. 17 is quite susceptible; and that such is the meaning here is plain from ver. 15 of that passage; for the action at ver. 17 must be the same with that at ver. 15, and that must simply be defeating, as is plain from what follows. So Job. x. 20 we have κόπτοντες αὐτοὺς κοπήν μεγάλαν σφόδρα.—Εὐλογήσας αὐτόν. This many recent Commentators take to mean no more than 'having congratulated him;' but it has been fully proved by Ernesti, Winzer, and Kuin., that the word must here have that more eminent sense which the ancient Expositors assign to it, as denoting 'a sacerdotal benediction.' So that the expression does not simply denote 'bona apprecari,' but 'bona, ut cetero ceventura, apprecari;' see Lev. ix. 22. Numb. vi. 23. This is plain from ver. 7, τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος εὐλογεῖται. It is implied, therefore, that what was uttered was 'ex auctoritate monitione Divino;' involving such δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων ἐμέρισεν Ἀβραάμ· πρῶτον μὲν ἐρμηνεύὁμενος βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ (ὃ ἐστὶ βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης).<sup>3</sup> ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ἀγενεαλόγητος, μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔχων, ἀφωμοιωμένοι δὲ τῷ Τίῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ,—μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές.<sup>4</sup> ὁ Θεωρεῖτε δὲ, πηλίκος οὗτος, ὃ καὶ δεκάτην Ἀβραάμ ἔδωκεν ἐκ τῶν ἀκροθινίων ὁ πατριάρχης! ὁ καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν Δευτὴν τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμ-βάνουσιν.

<sup>b</sup> Gen. 14. 20.
<sup>c</sup> Num. 18.
 21, 26
 Deut. 18. 1.
 Jos. 14. 4.
<sup>2</sup> Chron. 31.

a blessing as that which Jacob desired, and obtained of the angel, Gen. xxxii. 29.

2 ἀπὸ πάντων] scil. τῶν ἀκροθινίων, as is expressed at ver. 4. In vain is it that some recent Commentators attempt to prove this to have been only a courteous interchange of presents between two chieftains. The Apostle's language will admit of no such sense; but plainly implies, what is expressed by Philo, p. 437, that this tenth was given ἐκ τῶν ἀκροθινίων—ἐκ τῶν εἰρήνης.—Πρῶτον μὲν ἐρμηνεύμενος—εἰρήνης. The best mode of taking these words is to consider them as elliptical, and (with Carpe) to be supplied as follows: Πρῶτον μὲν ἐρμηνεύμενος ἐστὶν ὁ Μελχισεδέκ κατὰ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης· ἔπειτα δ' ἐστὶ καὶ βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ, ὃ ἐστὶ ἐρμηνεύμενος βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης. — Βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης. This is by some Expositors, and recently Stuart, regarded as merely equiv. to βασιλεὺς δίκαιος; while others (as Ernesti and Kuin.) have, I think, gone far to prove that the expression here designates 'such a king as discharges his functions, whether regal or sacerdotal, so as to make his subjects righteous and holy;' with allusion to that full justification which we obtain through the intercession of the great High Priest, JESUS. So βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης is shown by Winzer to be an appellation adapted to the great Antitype, the 'Prince of peace,' the Reconciler of man to his offended Maker, and who put away the enmity between Jews and Gentiles. Comp. Eph. i. 10. Col. i. 18—23.

3 ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ] Of these controverted expressions one thing may safely be affirmed, that they can by no means be supposed to import that Melchisedec, as a man, was not born and did not die; but, as the best Expositors are in general agreed, their meaning is merely, that, as a man, his birth and death, or father and mother, are not recorded in Scripture. This is confirmed by the Pesh. Syr. Version, and by Epiphanius, cited by Kültlen, οὐ διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι τῇ Θεῷ γραφὴ κατὰ τὸ φανερώτατον ἰκνόμενασθαι. Similar modes of expression are found in the Class. writers. So in Eurip., Ion 110, we have ἀμήτωρ ἀπάτωρ τὰ γὰρ.—Ἀγενεαλόγητος we may, with some, regard as explanatory of the two preceding words, denoting 'one whose origin and pedigree are unknown;' but it is better, with many eminent Expositors, to suppose it to have reference to Melchisedec as a priest; understanding him to be so called, because, being a Canaanite, and not standing in the public genealogical register as belonging to the family of Aaron, he was a priest not by right of sacerdotal descent, but by the grace of God. His priesthood, therefore, was of a higher order than Aaron's. Here, then, we have a striking counterpart in the antitype Christ, who was likewise ἀγενεαλόγητος. The above view of the expression is strongly confirmed by the words at ver. 6, ὁ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν. —Μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔ. These words seem meant to be taken in two senses, 1. as applied to Melchisedec, and 2. as applied to Christ, the type and the antitype respectively. As said of the former, they may mean either, 'having no beginning of his [Sacerdotal] days, nor end of his [Sacerdotal] life;' or, according to others, 'having no limited time for the commencement and expiration of his office,' as had the Levitical priests, who were restricted to serve between the ages of 30 and 50. As applied to the latter, CHRIST, the words will have their literal sense, denoting eternity, and consequently Deity.—The next words ἀφωμοιωμένοι τῷ Τίῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ are not, it would seem, to be referred to what immediately follows,—since Melchisedec's priesthood ended with his life; while Christ's will only terminate with his Mediatorial reign;—but to the words just preceding, taken by themselves, and no other assimilation understood, but that of his 'being made, by the Divine decree, a type of that great High Priest, who had neither beginning of days, nor end of life.' See more in Mackn.

4—7. The argument arising from the fact, that one of Abraham's contemporaries was in some things superior to him, as here stated, serves to introduce with great advantage a most conclusive argument against the perpetual obligation of the Levitical law, and the continuance of the Aaronic priesthood, and that of the covenant made with the nation of Israel at Sinai. (Scott.) We have here set forth the superiority of Melchisedec to Abraham, on the ground that this superiority was acknowledged by Abraham himself, in the act of rendering tithe to him; consequently the inferiority acknowledged by him must attach to his descendants.

4. τῶν ἀποθ.] Ἀκροθίνια at first denoted only the first fruits (ἀπαρχαί) of the spoils taken in war, but came at length to mean the whole of those spoils; and since Josephus and Philo, in relating the story, both of them testify that Melchisedec received the tenth of the whole of the spoils, the best Expositors have, with reason, supposed that to be the meaning here.

5. καὶ οἱ μὲν αὐτῶν] Render, 'And those, indeed, of the tribe of Levi, who hold the office of the priesthood, have a direction, by the law, to take tithe of the people; that is, their brethren, though sprung from the loins of Abraham [like themselves].—τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμβ. is said, since, though all the tribe had a right to tithes, all were not priests, but only the sons of Aaron. The argument goes on the principle (acknowledged by the persons addressed) that the rendering of tithes to another implied inferiority βάνοντες ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν ἀποδεκατοῦν τὸν λαὸν κατὰ τὸν νόμον, τούτεστι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτῶν, καίπερ ἐξεληλυθότας ἐκ τῆς ὁσφύος Ἀβραάμ. <sup>d Gen. 14. 20.</sup> <sup>Rom. 4. 13.</sup> <sup>Gal. 3. 16.</sup> <sup>6</sup> ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν δεδε-

 κάτωκε τὸν Ἀβραάμ, καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα τὰς ἐπαγγελίας εὐλόγηκε <sup>7</sup> χωρὶς δὲ πάσης ἀντιλογίας τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος εὐλογεῖται. <sup>8</sup> Καὶ ὧδε μὲν δεκάτας ἀποθνῆσκοντες ἄνθρωποι λαμβάνουσιν ἐκεῖ δὲ, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ. <sup>9</sup> Καὶ, ὡς ἔπος εἶπεῖν, διὰ Ἀβραάμ καὶ Λευὶ ὁ δεκάτας λαμβάνων δεδεκάτωται.
<sup>e Gen. 14. 20.</sup> <sup>10</sup> ἔτι γὰρ ἐν τῇ ὁσφύϊ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμ, ὅτε συνήνησεν αὐτῷ
<sup>f Gal. 2. 21.</sup> <sup>vv. 13, 15.</sup> ὁ Μελχισεδέκ. <sup>11</sup> Εἰ μὲν οὖν τελείωσις διὰ τῆς Λευιτικῆς

in the payer. With ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν comp. John xix. 7, νόμον ἔχοντες.—Ἀποδεκάτωσιν generally signifies to pay tithes, but here to cause them to be paid, to receive them, as also in 1 Sam. viii. 15. Neh. x. 37.—ἐξέρχασθαι ἐκ τῆς ὁσφύος τινός is a Hellenistic phrase, found in the Sept., and corresponding to the Class. one γεννᾶσθαι ὑπὸ τινός.

6. ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλ. ἐξ α. [i. e. Melchisedec] who did not trace his origin from them (and consequently might be thought no priest by the Jewish law), yet received tithes; intimating that his priesthood was of another kind, and in virtue of another authority. There is an emphasis on Ἀβρ.; and εὐλόγ. contains the other argument for superiority; which is plain if the word be taken in the same sense as at ver. 1. The plural in ἐπαγγελίας here, and at Gal. iii. 16, as used of one promise (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed), is used either dignitatis gratia, or rather with reference to the several repetitions of the original promise.

7. χωρὶς δὲ πάσης—κρείττονος] The δὲ is argumentative, and may be rendered now. The expression τὸ ἔλαττον is reckoned among those examples, so frequently occurring, of the use of the neuter for the masculine; as John vi. 37, πᾶν, and 1 Cor. vi. 11, ταῦτα, and occasionally in the best writers. In the Scriptures, however, the idiom seems rarely introduced (as it is in the Class. writers) for the mere purpose of elegance in style, but almost always on account of some delicate propriety. Here the neuter has the advantage of being better adapted to a general proposition such as the present; and moreover, by its use, makes the comparison in question (a comparison not a little humbling to the national self-complacency of the persons addressed) less invidiously prominent.

8. A yet further ground of superiority is now urged.—ὧδε, meaning, under the Levitical law, which assigned them tithes.—ἀποθνῆσκοντες ἄνθ., meaning, 'those who exercise their office only in succession,' each succeeding to the other by death, and consequently being only life-possessors.—ἐκεῖ δὲ, 'but there;' meaning, in the case of Melchisedec's priesthood. Of the words following, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ, the full sense is, 'one receiveth them, of whom it is testified (namely, Ps. cx. 4) that He liveth [for ever], μένει εἰς τὸ διηνεκές.

9. The argument here urged is, that even Levi himself, though unborn, virtually paid tithes to Melchisedec through Abraham his ancestor. On this argument, however, as it is somewhat precarious, (though proceeding on a principle recognised by those to whom it is addressed,) the writer, by the qualifying expression ὡς ἔπος αἰετῶν, hints that he does not mean to press, or particularly insist on it.

10. ἐν τῇ ὁσφύϊ, &c., meaning, that 'even then, when Melchisedec met Abraham, Levi already (in a certain sense) existed, and through Abraham, paid tithes to the king of Salem, i. e. acknowledged inferiority compared with him.' Here, as often, the conclusion is left to be supplied, and the argument is, Christ is a priest after the order of Melchisedec. Melchisedec is superior to the Aaronical priests; consequently Christ, as a priest, is superior to them. (Stuart.)

11—18. Turning from the type to the antitype, the Apostle now proceeds to prove the superiority of Christ by another mode of argument, which may be stated, with Stuart and Holden, as follows: 'If the Levitical priesthood had accomplished all that was needed (a free atonement and salvation), there would have been no occasion for another priest to arise after a different order; namely, after the order of Melchisedec, ver. 11. But if the priesthood were changed, there must also be a change of the law under which it was appointed, ver. 12. Now that the Levitical priesthood was intended to be changed, is evident from this, that Christ, of whom the things in Psalm xc. 4 were said, sprang from Judah, of which tribe no one was allowed by the Mosaic law to officiate at the altar, vv. 13, 14. And farther, it is still more clear, from God's oath, that there was to be another priest, different from, and superior to, the Aaronical priesthood, inasmuch as he was to be after the order of Melchisedec, vv. 15—17, and perpetual: consequently the law of Moses was to be abolished, and to give place to a more perfect dispensation, vv. 18, 19, the High Priest of which must therefore be pre-eminent.

11. The Apostle now evinces that the Levitical priesthood must yield to the priesthood of Christ, because Melchisedec, after whose order he is a priest, 1. is opposed to Aaron, vv. 11—14; 2. hath no end of life, vv. 15—19, but remaineth a priest continually. (Bengel.) The argument is as follows: 'From what has been said, then, it appears that the Levitical priesthood is by no means a perfect institution (i. e. perfectly answering all God's designs and man's wants in its making a perfect expiation for sin); for thus the order of Aaron needed not to have been superseded by that of Melchisedec. Whence it follows that both the priesthood and the law

ἱερωσύνης ἦν, (ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νενομοθέτητο,) τίς ἐτι
 χρεία, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ ἕτερον ἀνίστασθαι ἱερέα, καὶ οὐ κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Ἀαρὼν λέγεσθαι; <sup>13</sup> μετατιθεμένης γὰρ τῆς ἱερωσύνης, ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ νόμου μετάθεσις γίνεται. <sup>13</sup> Ἐφ' οὗ γὰρ λέγεται ταῦτα, φυλῆς ἐτέρας μετέσχηκεν, ἀφ' ἧς οὐδεὶς προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ. <sup>14</sup> Πρόδηλον γὰρ, ὅτι ἐξ Ἰούδα g Isa. 11. 1.
Matt. 1. 2.
So Luke 3. 38.
Rom. 1. 3.
 ἀνατέταλκεν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν εἰς ἣν φυλὴν οὐδὲν περὶ ἱερωσύνης Μωϋσῆς ἐλάλησε. <sup>15</sup> Καὶ περισσώτερον ἐτι κατάδηλόν ἐστιν, εἰ κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα Μελχισεδέκ ἀνίσταται ἱερεὺς ἕτερος,
<sup>16</sup> ὅς οὐ κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς † σαρκικῆς γέγονεν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ

were to give way to a better priesthood, and more excellent dispensation.—ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νενομ., 'for by it the people were put under the law,' or had the law given them. The Passive form νενομ. is by no means frequent. When it does occur it is chiefly used of a law, or dispensation, as infra viii. 6, and Jos. Antt. iii. 15, 5. Plato, p. 736. But used, as here, of a people or state, in the sense 'to be furnished with laws or institutions,' it is very rare; yet I find it in Plato, 701 and 962. For νενομοθέτητο, Lachm. and Tisch. read, from 4 uncials, and 5 cursives MSS., νενομοθίεται, which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version; though this is not a case in which Versions have any great weight; and internal evidence is against the reading, which was, I suspect, brought in by the Critics from the kindred passage infra viii. 6. Many recent Commentators, indeed, interpret the ἐπ' 'on condition of,' or, 'on account of;' neither of which senses is here suitable. In the Vulg. it is well rendered sub; for the Dat. here denotes the foundation upon which any thing or person rests, and through which it is supported: consequently it may signify, as here, simply sub, though the Genit. would have been plainer (as Luke iii. 2, ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων Ἀννα καὶ Κεϊάφα); and hence in 4 uncials, and 5 cursives, we have αὐτῇ, which is edited by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but without reason, external authority being insufficient, and internal evidence against the reading, which was prob. a Critical alteration; though it is possible that αὐτῇ was an alteration from viii. 6, ἐπὶ κρ. ἐπαγγελίας νενομοθίεται.—Τίς ἐτι χρεία—ἱερίᾳ, meaning, 'What need was there for it to be abolished, and another substituted for it, unless for its insufficiency to expiation; which would prove the Levitical priesthood inferior to Christ's, and consequently requiring to be abolished?'

12. μετατιθεμένης γὰρ—γίνεται] The γὰρ has here a use falling under that extensive class in which the reason referred to is to be gathered from the context, or the subject-matter. In the present case it may, as oft., be rendered nempe, scilicet, quippe. By the term μετατιθ. is imported 'abandonment of the old, and the substitution of a new, law.' The necessity here spoken of is, of course, a necessity arising from the condition of human nature; i. e. what Dialecticians call a necessity of consequence; the means of atonement, as Abp. Newc. says, depending on the priesthood. That a change of the priesthood involved a change of the law, is not what the writer means to prove; for that his readers would admit without proof; but that there was this change of priesthood (necessarily involving a change of law) is what he proceeds to establish in vv. 13—17; and that by two arguments: 1. that the High Priest CHRIST was not descended from the tribe of Judah, vv. 13, 14; 2. that he was to be a High Priest for ever, and consequently no change of priesthood is any longer to be expected. Moreover, as Christ's priesthood differed from the Levitical, so must the law by which it is regulated differ from that which regulated the Aaraonical priesthood. See more in Kuin. and Stuart.

13. ἐφ' οὗ γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ here, and in the next verse, refers to a clause omitted, to be supplied thus: '[But the priesthood is changed from one order and tribe to another;] for he,' &c.—ταῦτα, i. e. his being a priest after the order of Melchisedec, and his having an eternal priesthood.—μετέσχ., lit. 'had part in, had to do with, i. e. belonged to.' So Diod. Sic. p. 217, μετίχων τῇ παραλίῳ.—Προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσ. is equiv. to προσεδρεύει τῷ θυσ. in 1 Cor. ix. 13, where see note.

14. πρόδηλον, &c.] This is a stronger term than δῆλον, and being synonymous with κατάδηλον in the verse following, it may be supposed to mean, 'prominently conspicuous;' lit. 'plain at first sight;' see note on 1 Tim. v. 24. In the term ἀνατέταλκεν the best Commentators are agreed that the metaphor is derived from the springing up of plants. Certain it is that the Hebr. נוצץ (a plant) is often used in the Old Test. of the Messiah, and that נוצץ is sometimes rendered by the Sept. ἀνατολή, and sometimes βλάστημα. That ἱεροὶ and θάλας are, in the Class. writers, used of illustrious persons, is well known.

15. περισσ. ἐτι κατάδηλόν ἐστιν] A very forcible expression, of which the literal sense is, 'more abundantly downright plain is it,'—namely, that the priesthood of Christ is far superior to that of Aaron, and consequently that the law is to be changed.—εἰ κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα, &c., 'if [as is the case] another priest,' &c.; meaning to say (as Wesley well points out) that both the priesthood and the law are changed, because the Priest now raised up is not only of another tribe, but of a quite different order.

16. The sense of the verse is this, 'Who (namely, Christ) was not made such (i. e. a High Priest) by a law of fleshly commandment [like the Mosaic, which was so, inasmuch as its ordinances were frail, looked no further than this life, and therefore temporary, and to be abro-h Ps. 110. 4.

ch. 2. 6.
i Rom. 8. 2.
Gal. 4. 6.

k Gal. 3. 24.
ch. 2. 16.
Acts 13. 39.
Rom. 8. 20.
21.
Eph. 2. 18.
2. 12.
ch. 4. 16.
l Ps. 110. 4.

δύναμιν ζωῆς ἀκαταλύτου <sup>17</sup> ἡ μαρτυρεῖ γὰρ ὅτι σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ. <sup>18</sup> Ἡ ἀθέτησις μὲν γὰρ γίνεται προαγωγῆς ἐντολῆς διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενεῖς καὶ ἀνωφελές, <sup>19</sup> (ὅτι οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος,) ἐπεισαγωγῇ δὲ κρείττονος ἐλπίδος, δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ. <sup>20</sup> Καὶ καθ' ὅσον οὐ χωρὶς ὀρκωμοσίας <sup>21</sup> (οἱ μὲν γὰρ χωρὶς ὀρκωμοσίας εἰσὶν ἱερεῖς γεγονότες, ὁ δὲ μετὰ ὀρκωμοσίας, διὰ τοῦ λέγοντος πρὸς αὐτόν Ὁμοσε Κύριος καὶ οὐ μεταμεληθήσεται. Σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ)

gated, Ephes. ii. 15], but through the power of an endless life,—namely, as having in him the power of endless life, i. e. both as Son of God, and also as involved in the promise and oath of God, 'Thou art a Priest for ever,' &c.; see more in Hyper., Calv., and Bp. Hall. By the expression σαρκικῆς the Apostle may also have meant to suggest the inferiority of the old Law in respect of its carinality; and to intimate that the exalted excellence of the new High Priest demanded a corresponding excellence in the law,—namely, by passing from a carnal to a spiritual service. On the var. lect. σαρκίνης see note on 1 Cor. iii. 1, and 2 Cor. iii. 3.

<sup>17</sup> μαρτυρεῖ scil. ὁ Θεός. The conclusion, that the law is also changed, is left to be supplied by the reader. (Stuart.) For μαρτυρεῖ Lachm. and Tisch. adopt the reading of 4 uncial and 5 cursive MSS., with some Versions, μαρτυρεῖται: but without reason. The terminations -σι and -εται are not unfrequently confounded. Here, however, the reading -εται seems no other than a false correction of those who were not aware of the ellipsis of Θεός.

<sup>18</sup>, <sup>19</sup>. The Apostle here repeats more positively, what he has before said indirectly, respecting a change of the law and the priesthood, and at the same time gives a reason for the change. Thus ver. 18 is closely connected with the words of the Psalm, v. 17. espec. the phrase κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Melch.; for this order of things was contrary to the Mosaic law. (Kuin.)

<sup>18</sup> ἀθέτησις μιν γάρ, &c.] Ἀθέτησις μιν here has corresponding to it ἐπεισαγωγῇ at ver. 19, γίνεται being repeated; q. d. 'For there is indeed [implied in those words] an annulling of the former ordinances [concerning the priesthood], and an introduction of a better hope.' The commandment here spoken of (ἐντολῆς) is not to be confined to the priesthood, but extended to the whole of the Mosaic law, so as to be equiv. to νόμος, as Mark vii. 8, 9. Of this it is said (as a reason for its abrogation) that it is weak, and useless for the desired object, expiation; as is made clear by the parallel clause, οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν, &c. Not that the law was weak or unprofitable as to the end for which God made it, to lead men to Christ (Gal. iii. 24), but utterly weak for justification and salvation, and comparatively unprofitable, though answering for a time many important ends. See Gal. iii. 19—24. The meaning intended is, that the Law by its sacrifices, and the observances of the priesthood, provided no real expiation and atonement for sin.—Ἐπεισαγωγῇ (which sign. lit. 'superinduction') is a very rare word, of which only one ex. has been adduced, from Jon. Antt. xi. 6, 2; to which I add Thucyd. viii. 92. By the hope here spoken of, understand the hope of salvation held forth in the Gospel, and introduced by Christ,—a hope, as it is added, by which alone we have approach to God. Comp. Eph. iii. 12.—δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ. Ἐγγίζομεν is a very forcible expression, the 'drawing near' being meant to intimate a great point of superiority in the new Law over the old one. Under the latter the priests only, not the people, were permitted, in their acts of worship, to draw near to the manifestation of the Divine presence in the Tabernacle; but under the former, by the sacrifice of Christ, all believers are alike permitted to come to the throne of grace, in full dependence on the all-powerful intercession of an ever-living High Priest.

<sup>19</sup> οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος.—ἐλπίδος] Here the sense is obscured by harshness in the construction, and extreme brevity. Valekn. Schol., t. ii. p. 529, says that the words as they stand are for ὁ γὰρ νόμος οὐδὲν ἐτελείωσεν ἀλλὰ ἐλπὶς κρείττων ἵπαιτα εἰσαγομένη (rather ἐπεισαγομένη) ἐτελείου, the hope here spoken of being the hope of salvation through the benefits of the expiation made by Christ, the great High Priest. Comp. infra, viii. 6, and x. 15, with Rom. v. 2. Eph. ii. 18. iii. 12. Heb. iv. 16.

<sup>20</sup>—<sup>22</sup>. The argument stands thus: 'The Gospel is a better source of hope; forasmuch (καθ' ὅσον) as the appointment of a priest by an oath exceeds, in solemnity and importance, an arrangement to take the office merely by descent,—so much does the New Covenant, of which Jesus is the sponsor, exceed the Old.' The whole passage may be literally rendered, 'And [there is this argument too,—that] inasmuch as he was made a priest not without an oath (for those have been made priests without an oath, but he with an oath, even that of him who said unto him, "The Lord hath sworn and will not repent," &c.) in just so much is he made the mediator of a better covenant.' Comp. viii. 6.

<sup>21</sup>. The term here, ὀρκωμοσίας, is not (as Kuin. considers it) merely equivalent to ὅρκος, but (as Tittman de Synonym. observes) denotes 'a solemn affirmation, or promise, on oath.' It is a rare word, though found in Ezek. xvii. 19, and 3 Esdr. viii. 9. The Class. writers use ὀρκωμόσιον. By the words οὐ μεταμεληθήσεται we have expressed the nature of the oath in question, which is such an one as implies that the appointment itself shall not be reversed.

22 κατὰ τοσούτον κρείττονος διαθήκης γέγονεν ἔγγνος Ἰησοῦς. mat. x. 1.

23 Καὶ οἱ μὲν πλείονες εἰσι γεγονότες ἱερεῖς διὰ τὸ θανάτῳ κωλύεσθαι παραμένειν <sup>24</sup> ὁ δὲ, διὰ τὸ μένειν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἀπαράβατον ἔχει τὴν ἱερωσύνην <sup>25</sup> ὅθεν καὶ σώζειν εἰς τὸ παντελὲς δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους δι' αὐτοῦ τῷ Θεῷ, πάντοτε ζῶν εἰς τὸ ἐντυγχάνειν ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν. <sup>26</sup> Τοιοῦτος γὰρ ἡμῖν

n Rom. 8. 34.
1 Tim. 2. 8.
ch. 9. 24.
1 John 2.
o Rom. 8. 34.
ch. 4. 14. 15.
ch. 9. 24.
1 John 2. 2.

22. With respect to the two terms διαθήκης and ἔγγνος, the former signifies, 1. 'a disposition or arrangement of any thing;' 2. 'a covenant;' 3. when applied to the Jewish law, or to the Gospel, it denotes (with allusion to the engagements and conditions involved) 'a dispensation.' Ἐγγνος denotes sponsor, or 'surety'; a word occurring nowhere else in the New Test., but found in Ecclus. xxix. 15. 2 Mac. x. 28. The Class. writers use ἔγγνητής, or ἐγγύς. The term is one of extensive signif., and here carries with it a double sense,—namely, of Surety and Mediator,—as is plain from the parallel passage at viii. 6, where the term used is μεσίτης. These senses answer to the two principal parts of Christ's office in the working of man's redemption.

23, 24. We have here another and final point of superiority in Christ's priesthood over that of the Levites, founded on the fact that the latter is continually changing, and passing into different hands by succession, while the former is unchangeable and perpetual. This comparison, however, is espec. intended to apply to the High Priest's office; Jesus being all along considered as ἀρχιερεὺς, though the term ἱερεῖς, and not ἀρχ., seems here to be used in order to include the ordinary priests as well as the High Priest. And here, it is probable, the argument proceeds on the principle that multiplicity argues inferiority. Hence (says Bp. Sanderson, Sermon. p. 657) the Apostle proves the insufficiency of the legal priesthood and sacrifice: the priests were many, and there was a constant repetition of the sacrifice, because of the mortality of the one and the insufficiency of the other to take away sins; as, on the contrary, he further on, x. 1—14, proves the sufficiency of the priesthood and sacrifice of Christ from the unchangeableness and oneness both of Priest and sacrifice.

23. αἱ γεγονότες] for γεγόνασαι, by an idiom not unfrequent in the New Test., and sometimes occurring in the Classical writers. The term πλείονες (as Stuart observes) refers, not to the number of priests existing at any one time (said to have been 1500), but to the numbers formed by repeated succession. Of the High Priests there had been 75 at the destruction of Jerusalem. Of παραμένειν the meaning must be, not 'continue alive' (as is clear from vv. 3, 17, 21), but 'continue in their office'; though μένειν in the next verse must have the former sense, to signify that Christ is immortal in his nature, πάντοτε ζῶν, as it is said at ver. 25.

24. ἀπαράβατον] lit. 'untransmissible,' 'not having to be transmitted or to pass into different hands in succession.' Here, then, it is shown that God having by oath constituted Christ 'priest for ever,' his priesthood has not, like Aaron's, any succession in office. He is one and the same to his Church 'yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' Hence is then drawn the conclusion, that he alone (and not the Jewish High Priest) is able to fully save from condemnation all who have access to God through him: the proof of which ability lies in the words following πάντοτε ζῶν, 'since he liveth for ever.'

25. σώζειν εἰς τὸ παντελὲς δύναται.] The somewhat peculiar expression εἰς τὸ παντελὲς may be taken either (as construed with δύναται) of time, to signify perpetually, equiv. to εἰς τὸ διηνεκές; or, as construed with σώζειν, it may be understood to denote degree,—i. e. 'to the utmost of their need,'—and so signify entirely, completely. The former interpretation was adopted by some ancient Fathers, as Chrys., Theophyl., and Ecumen. (and so the Syr., Vulg., and Arab. Versions), many modern, and almost all later Expositors; while the latter was adopted by Theodor., the framer of the Coptic Version, and Zonaras, and, of modern Commentators, by Hyper., Beza, Cassaub., Erasmus, Capell., Bram., Elan., Carpzov., Wakef., and Abp. Newc. The former is thought to be confirmed by the words following, πάντοτε ζῶν, and yields a sense quite suitable, since the salvation Christ procures is not temporary, but perpetual,—extending both to this world and that which is to come, and is eternal. Yet thus a sense arises which, if not feeble, does not go to the root of the matter. I am still of opinion, that the latter interpretation is preferable, as yielding the weightier sense. It is well observed by Hyper. that St. Paul employed this expression most aptly and suitably, as intending thereby to express more than simply perfection (i. e. completeness), even consummate completeness, absolute perfection. It is also worthy of observation, that of εἰς τὸ παντελὲς as used of time the proof is weak; for as to Ælian, V. H. vii. 2, and xii. 20 (which passages are alleged by the above Expositors), the sense is entirely in the latter, continually, without intermission, in the former. As to the expression, supr. v. 3, μένειν ἱερὸν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, it will not oblige us to interpret εἰς τὸ παντελὲς here of perpetuity. Upon the whole, the best mode of determining this question is to suppose that the Apostle meant to unite (by a pregnancy of sense not unusual to him) both one and the other acceptation of the expression, the sense of perpetuity being engrafted on that of perfection, since, in order to this salvation's being perfect, it must be perpetual. Otherwise it would have been imperfect, and not suited to the end proposed; for (as Hooker observes) 'we account those things perfect which want nothing requisite for the end wherunto they were instituted.'—εἰς τὸ ἐντυγχάνειν ὑπὲρ α. 'so that he can [always] make intercession for them.' The expression may, however, like ἔγγνος at ver. 22, advert to all the other offices of our great High Priest, as well as his intercession; on which see Scott. Kuin., indeed, in an elaborate note on this word, is of opinion 'that Christ, as our great High p Lev. 9. 7.

& 10. 6. 11.
ch. 5. 3.
Zech. 2. 9.
Rom. 6. 10.

ἐπρεπεν ἀρχιερεὺς, ὅσιος, ἄκακος, ἀμίαντος, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, καὶ ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος· 27 ὅς οὐκ ἔχει καθ' ἡμέραν ἀνάγκην, ὥσπερ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς, πρότερον

Priest, is here compared with the Jewish priest in the work of deprecation.<sup>1</sup> This, however, is taking too confined, not to say low, a view. Intercession, in its fullest sense, must here be intended, which may include both deprecation and that sort of intercession which is ascribed to our Lord by St. John, 1 Ep. ii. 1, Παράκλητον ἔχοντες πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, Ἰησοῦν Χρ. Now from the full discussion on the sense of παράκλητος, which will be found in the note on John xiv. 16, it appears that the word denotes advocate, or intercessor; which is, I conceive, the principal sense here and at 1 John ii. 1; though that of helper, the one ascribed by most eminent Expositors to παράκλητος, in the above passage of St. John's Epistle, may be included.

26—28. As a means of exciting them to come unto the all-sufficient and never-failing Helper and Intercessor, the Apostle now adverts to the infinite superiority of the High Priest of the new to the one of the old dispensation, in the spotless purity of his character, which is such that he needs not to offer sacrifice on his own account. The Apostle shows, that, whereas they were encompassed with infirmities, He was spotless; whereas they were ceremonially undefiled, He was morally so. Finally, when it is said that such a High Priest as could effectually be our Intercessor and Helper was needful to be such for the purposes of expiation and salvation, we have here strikingly represented the superiority of Christ, who was such; and this the words of the Apostle imply.

26. For ἔπρεπεν, Lachm. and Tisch. edit. from four MSS. and the Syr. and Arabic Versions, καὶ ἔπρεπεν. But the Particle is unsuitable here, and the Syr. Version is wrongly alleged for it, since the καὶ comes in after ἄκακος. I doubt not that καὶ was introduced from the margin at a wrong place, being prob. meant to be brought in before κεχωρισμένος by some Reviser, who did not perceive the force of the Ἀσυνδeton. By the term ἔπρεπεν is denoted 'the needfulness of suitability.'—ὅσιος, ἄκακος, ἀμίαντος, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμ. These several terms seem to have allusion to the qualities required (though rarely, if ever, found) in the earthly High Priest. The first of them (ὅσιος) regards the duties to God, accompanied with internal purity of mind and disposition; the second (ἄκακος) the duties to men, accompanied with purity in the life. Ἀμίαντος signifies inlustratus. So at James i. 27 we have καθαρά καὶ ἀμίαντος. The concluding expression, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, denotes (as Abp. Newc. and Kuin. interpret) 'differing very far from the rest of men, and consequently not of their number;' in short, one who has no need to offer expiation for his own sins (ver. 27), as being χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, as it is said, iv. 15.—ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν, equiv. to διεληλυθὲς τοὺς οὐρανοὺς at iv. 14, and ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τῆς μεγαλειότητος ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς at viii. 1. Thus Jesus is represented as being σύνθρονος. (See John xvii. 5. Eph. iv. 10. Rev. iii. 21.) All these phrases denote the most exalted dignity and majesty, not on earth only, but in heaven; and consequently representing him as infinitely superior to the Jewish High Priests.

27. καθ' ἡμέραν] Some would here supply ἁρισμίστην, or τεταγμίστην, understanding this of the day of expiation. The ellipsis, however, is one quite destitute of authority. There is no sufficient reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned, daily. And that the High Priest did make a daily offering for the sins of himself and the people, is quite certain from Philo, who says, ἀρχιερεὺς, κατὰ τοῦ νόμου εὐχάσεται καὶ θυσίας τελεῖν καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν. See also Levit. vi. 20. Numb. xviii. 3, 4. On the exact nature, indeed, of this sacrifice, some difference of opinion exists. Kuin. is of opinion that the sacrifice was not expiatory, but eucharistical, and he thinks that the expression, καθ' ἡμέραν, is used populariter (as at Mark xiv. 49. Acts xvi. 5), to denote from time to time, i. e. 'as often as he was conscious of any private sins, of course including the sacrifice on the day of expiation.' But this is running counter to the sacred writer, in whose words it is, at least by implication, asserted, that the High Priest did offer a sacrifice daily, and that not a mere eucharistical, but an expiatory sacrifice, as is necessarily to be inferred from the words ὑπὲρ τῶν ἰδίων ἁμαρτιῶν, and the force of the sacrificial term ἀναφέρειν (for ἀναφ. εἰς τὸ θυσιαστήριον) which occurs at xiii. 15. And so 1 Pet. ii. 5 we have ἀναφ. πνευματικὰς θυσίας.—Τοῦτο γάρ, &c. The true purpose and import of the γάρ here, and that in the next verse, is, I think, best pointed out by Bp. Jebb, in his Sac. Lit. p. 385, who brings this passage (vv. 27, 28) under the head of those Parallelisms of the New Test. wherein, when a precept is delivered, an assertion made, or a principle laid down, co-ordinate reasons for it are independently assigned, without any repetition of the common antecedent, and without any other indication of continued repetition to the original proposition than the repeated insertion of some causative particle, γάρ or ὅτι: of which he adduces as examples Matt. v. 11, 12. v. 17—20. vi. 7, 9, 31, 32. vii. 13, 14. Col. ii. 8, the present passage, and Rev. xiv. 15. xv. 4. xviii. 23. xix. 2. On the present passage he remarks, that the division of the proposition here is clear and explicit: (1) Our great High Priest is under no necessity of offering daily sacrifice for his own sins, nor (2) for the sins of the people. The two-fold proof of which two-fold assertion is divided into two clauses, each commencing with γάρ: the proofs, however, are arranged in inverted order, so as to form an epanodos; the second assertion being first proved, and after it the first. The non-necessity of offering sacrifice for his own sins is first asserted, and last proved,—in order to give prominence to the grand comparison between him and the legal High Priest. He did once for all offer sacrifice for the sins of the people: he never did, never could, and never will offer sacrifice for his own sins; because he is, and was, and shall be everlastingly PERFECT and FREE FROM SIN.—ἰφάραξ, meaning once for all; as Rom. vi. 10, and ὑπὲρ τῶν ἰδίων ἁμαρτιῶν θυσίας ἀναφέρειν, ἔπειτα τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ τοῦτο γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἐφάπαξ, ἑαυτὸν ἀνενέγκας. 28 <sup>a</sup> Ὁ νόμος γὰρ ἀνθρώπους καθίστησιν ἀρχιερεῖς, ἔχοντας ἀσθένειαν ὁ λόγος· δὲ τῆς ὀρκωμοσίας, τῆς μετὰ τὸν νόμον, Τίον, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τετελειωμένον.

VIII. 1 <sup>a</sup> Κεφάλαιον δὲ ἐπὶ τοῖς λεγομένοις τοιοῦτον ἔχομεν ἀρχιερέα, ὃς ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τῆς μεγαλωσύνης ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> τῶν ἁγίων λειτουργὸς, καὶ τῆς σκηνῆς τῆς ἄλ-

<sup>a</sup> Eph. i. 20.
Col. ii. 1.
ch. i. 3.
<sup>b</sup> 8. 20.
ch. 12. 2.
b ch. 9. 8, 11.
24. & 10. 31.

infra ix. 12. x. 10.—'Ἐαυτὸν ἀνενέγκας.' When we find it expressly stated, that our Lord offered up himself as a sacrifice for sin; when he is elsewhere asserted to be "the propitiation for our sins," 1 John ii. 2; "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," John i. 29; when God is said to have "spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all," Rom. viii. 32; and that by him "we have received the atonement," Rom. v. 11; when these and many other such passages are to be found; when every expression, referring to the death of Christ, evidently indicates the notion of a sacrifice of atonement and propitiation; when this sacrifice is particularly represented as of the nature of "a sin offering;"—it may well appear surprising on what ground it has ever been made a question that the death of Christ is indeed pronounced in Scripture to have been a sacrifice of atonement and expiation for the sins of men.' (Abp. Magee.)

28. eis tōn aiōna tait.] The sense of τετελειωμένον here is variously, but, for the most part, erroneously rendered. Our Common Version has 'consecrated' in the text, and 'perfected' in the margin. The former rendering, as will appear from note supr. ii. 10, is untenable, whether there or here; nor does perfectum quite satisfy the exigency of the case, as regards the context. The version consummatum is more exact; but the term may include both senses, as forming one general idea. This view is confirmed by the opinion of Hyper., who, in a most elaborate note, shows how skillfully the terms were selected, as being highly appropriate to the subject-matter. 'Other epitheta,' he remarks, 'might have been selected; but this involves something more august than any other, espec. when conjoined with Τίος, regarded as equiv. to Θεός.' He concludes, by assigning to τετελ. the force of perfectum et consummatum, 'quæ vox,' he adds, 'commodissima est ad suggerendum quòd cum ipso talis sit, possit etiam alios consummatos (et sanctificatos) reddere, [ideoque ad plenum salvos facere].'<sup>1</sup> Est. assigns the following as the general sense of the passage, 'Qui non solum ab initio sanctus, innocens, et impollutus fuerit, et a peccatoribus segregatus, sed et postea, devicta morte, sublati in coelos, atque excelsior coelis factus, omnimodam semperque mansuram adeptus sit perfectionem.' This exposition is good, as far as it goes; but it fails by not tracing the idea involved in consummare (which sense he himself admits), so ably drawn forth by Hyper., and which is even more prominent in the kindred passage, supr. ii. 10, where see note.

VIII. After having treated on the nature of Christ's priesthood, and its superiority over that of the Levitical priests, the Apostle now proceeds to the consideration of the duties themselves,—namely, 'the nature of the sacrifice which Jesus offers; the place where it is offered; the efficacy which it has to atone for sin; and the difference, in regard to all these points, between the sacrifice offered by Christ, and that which was presented by the Jewish priests.' (Stuart.) In the present Chapter he shows the superiority of the former to the latter on these grounds: 1. that Christ, as a Priest, exercises his sacerdotal office in heaven; whereas the Aaraonical priests only perform theirs on earth, with a typical and emblematic service. 2. That Christ's ministry is more excellent than theirs, as corresponding with the greater excellence of the covenant of which he is the Mediator; which covenant it was foretold should in due time be introduced, and by which the old covenant was to be abrogated. (Holden.)

1. κεφάλαιον δὲ, &c.] From what has been already said, and from the fact of a new topic being here introduced, it is plain that the term κεφάλαιον must be interpreted, not sum (i. e. 'summary,' or recapitulation), but principal point, as Chrysa., Theophyl., and Theod. explain.—ἐκάθισεν ἐν, &c. See Notes on i. 3, and vii. 26. 'Here is shown the vast difference between Christ and the Jewish High Priest; the one being seated on the throne of God in the heavens, while the others are only ministers on earth, in a temple reared by the hands of men.' (Stuart.)

2. We have here further developed the idea in the preceding verse.—λειτουργός. See Notes on Rom. xiii. 6, and Phil. ii. 25. By τὰ ἁγία (scil. μυστήρια) is here meant (as at x. 19. xiii. 11) the Sanctum Sanctorum, as opposed to the ἅγιον κοσμητικόν at ix. 1; and considering that the term united with it, σκηνῆς, has the epithet ἀληθινῆς (like ἄρτος ἀληθινός in John vi. 32), true, and worthy of the name,—it would seem that that epithet may also be mentally extended to ἁγ.; and that both ἁγ. and σκ. are so called, as being heavenly, in opposition to that made with hands, constituted by Moses, ix. 11; and therefore truly such, as opposed to the earthly ones, which were only shadows of the heavenly.—καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων. The καὶ is absent from B, D, E, and one curative, and the Ital. and Arab. Versions, and is cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch. But the authority is insufficient—(as to the Versions, they are of no weight in a case like this, and the Latin idiom would require the absence of the word);—and internal evidence is against the removal, since, that all the copies except 4 should have been interpolated in so minute a matter, is incredible. There can be no Asyndeton sought here; and the use of the καὶ is more agreeable to popular simplicity than its non-use.

o Eph. 5. 2.
ch. 5. 1.

θωῆς· ἦν ἐπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, καὶ οὐκ ἄνθρωπος. <sup>3</sup> Πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰς τὸ προσφέρειν δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας καθίσταται· ὅθεν ἀναγκαῖον ἔχειν τὸ καὶ τοῦτον, ὃ προσενέγκη. <sup>4</sup> Εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν ἐπὶ γῆς, οὐδ' ἂν ἦν ἱερεὺς, ὄντων [τῶν] ἱερέων τῶν προσφερόντων κατὰ τὸν νόμον τὰ δῶρα· <sup>5</sup> (ὁ οὔτινες ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιά λατρεύουσι τῶν ἐπουρανίων, καθὼς κεχηρμάτισται Μωϋσῆς, μέλλων ἐπιτελεῖν τὴν σκηνὴν· Ὅρα γάρ, φησι, ποιήσης πάντα κατὰ τὸν τύπον τὸν δειχθέντα σοι ἐν τῷ ὄρει)

d Exod. 26.
40.
Num. 8. 4.
Acts 7. 44.
Col. 2. 17.
ch. 10. 1.

e 3 Cor. 8. 6.
ch. 7. 22.

6 οὐνὶ δὲ διαφορωτέρας † τέτευχε λειτουργίας, ὅσῳ καὶ κρείτ-

3. It is now shown that Christ discharges the office of High Priest and Minister of the Sanctuary on this ground,—that all the Priests had need to offer a sacrifice. In the next verse are subjoined the reasons why Christ is and must be a Priest in heaven—πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς, &c. Γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, which may be thus supplied: '[We have a High Priest and Minister of holy things in heaven:] for, &c. By προσφ. δῶρα καὶ θυς. are espec. meant 'piacular sacrifices, both unbloody and bloody'; the piacular sacrifice of Christ being compared with the ceremonial sacrifices of the priests. (Kuin.) As High Priest, it was necessary that Christ should have some oblation to present. What that is, we learn from vii. 27. ix. 12, namely, himself; after presenting which, we are told that he sat down at the right hand of God.

4. 'The Apostle now proceeds to show the reason why Christ is a Priest in the tabernacle above, and not in that on the earth.' (Stuart.) —ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἦν ἐν τῇ γῇ, &c., meaning, that '[Christ does really sustain the character of Priest in heaven:] for if, &c. The argument is one deduced ex absurdo; q. d. 'Christ does not sustain the character of a Priest on earth [as earthly]; since he was not a Priest here: for on earth he would not have been a Priest, much less a High Priest, since he was not of the tribe of Levi, nor of that race which offers up, &c. Consequently the oblation he presents must be in the heavenly temple,' meaning heaven.

5. οὔτινες ὑποδείγματι, &c.] The full sense is, 'who serve unto a ministry [in a temple] which is but an image and adumbration of the Temple in heaven.' So xiii. 10, τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύουσιν. Ὑπόδειγμα signifies properly 'a sketch (sometimes called σκιαγράφημα) marked out by a painter, to serve as an exemplar for any one to copy, who may fill up the outlines.—Σκιά is added, to make the sense more distinct, and with allusion to the substantial reality of the other ministry, or temple, in which consists the superiority of its High Priest.—καθὼς κεχηρμάτισται—σκηνὴν. This is meant to show the propriety of the terms ὑποδ. and σκιά, and alludes to the directions given to Moses respecting the construction of the tabernacle, as intimating its emblematical nature. On χρηματίζω see note on Matt. ii. 12.—For ποιήσης Lachm. and Tisch. edit ποιήσεις, which is confirmed by both the Sept. (Exod. xxv. 40) and the Hebrew original; though even there three MSS. and the Complut. Ed. have ποιήσε. The Subjunct. is found in Matt. viii. 4. xviii. 10. Mark i. 44. Since, however, this is a quotation from the Sept., it is best to follow the purest reading of that Version.

6. οὐνὶ δέ] Lachm. and, in his 1st ed., Tisch., edit οὐν δέ, though in his second ed. Tisch. restores οὐνὶ: very properly; since οὐνὶ δέ is of very frequent occurrence in the Epistles of St. Paul, and was more likely to be changed into οὐν than οὐν δέ. At another passage further on, xi. 16, Tisch. abides by the reading οὐν, adopted by Lachm. in preference to οὐνὶ. The full sense may be thus expressed: 'But, as things now are (i. e. since Christ is a Priest in heaven), his priestly function is very far superior to that of the Levitical priesthood; as far as the covenant, of which he is the Mediator, is more excellent than the one introduced by Moses; and such it is, inasmuch as it is founded on better promises.' Comp. supra vii. 22.—For τέτευχε Lachm. and Tisch. edit τίτευχε, from 4 uncials and 3 cursives, which may be the true reading, and may not; since both τίτευχε and τέτευχε were in use by the later Greek writers. Τίτευχε is the pure Greek form, and is here found in a few MSS. (to which I add Lamb. 1182, 1183, 1 m.), but doubtless from correction.—μεσίτης signifies 'one who mediates between two parties, and is equiv. to the ἐγγυος used supra vii. 24. The same term is also employed at Gal. iii. 19, and is applied to Moses, but in a more eminent sense to Christ at ix. 15, and 1 Tim. ii. 5, though μεσίτης is the pure Greek term. As to the manner in which this mediation was effected, it is clear from the context, the whole of this Epistle, and, more or less, from all the Books of the New Test., that it was not merely, as the Unitarians aver, by Christ's interceding for the remission of the forfeiture of salvation, but by his rendering satisfaction for the debt. On this deeply important subject,—the means of recovering what was lost by Adam's transgression,—the reader is referred to Bp. Warburton's Divine Leg., l. ix. ch. vii., and Abp. Magee On the Atonement.—ἦν ἐν τῇ κρείττωσιν ἰατρῇ. By these words it is shown how they are better,—namely, since they respect an eternal, not a temporal and earthly inheritance, by supplying that expiation and atonement of which the old Covenant was destitute. 'Ἐνι has here the sense sub, 'under the sanction of.' See note supra vii. 11.—ἐννομοθετηται, meaning, 'is promulgated and established with all the solemnity of a law'; the term being used in order to indicate that this was both a covenant and a law. 'The better promises (observes Stuart) follow in vv. 8—13, and the perfection of the second is further disclosed at ix. 9—14. x. 1—22. xiii. 9—14.'

τονός ἐστι διαθήκης μεσίτης, ἥτις ἐπὶ κρείττοσιν ἐπαγγελίαις νενομοθέτηται. <sup>7</sup> Εἰ γὰρ ἡ πρώτη ἐκείνη ἦν ἄμεμπος, οὐκ ἂν <sup>1 ch. 7. 11,</sup>
δευτέρας ἐξητέτο τόπος. <sup>8</sup> μεμφόμενος γὰρ αὐτοῖς λέγει· Ἰδοὺ, <sup>Jer. 31. 31,</sup>
ἡμέραι ἔρχονται, λέγει Κύριος, καὶ συντελέσω ἐπὶ τὸν <sup>8c.</sup> οἶκον Ἰσραὴλ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰούδα διαθήκην καινὴν <sup>9</sup> οὐ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν ἐποίησα τοῖς πατράσιν αὐ-τῶν, ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιλαβομένου μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν, ἐξαγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς ἐκ γῆς Αἰγύπτου ὅτι αὐτοὶ οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ μου, καὶ γὰρ ἡμέλησα αὐτῶν, λέ-γει Κύριος. <sup>10</sup> ὅτι αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη ἦν διαθήσομαι τῷ <sup>h Jer. 31. 31,</sup> οἴκῳ Ἰσραὴλ μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει Κύριος, <sup>8c.</sup> διδούς νόμους μου εἰς τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ καρ-

7. The subject of the superiority of the new Covenant touched on at vii. 22, and resumed at viii. 6, is here continued up to the end of the chapter; and this portion is justly regarded by Kuin. as parenthetical, since at ix. 1, is introduced the parallel between the two Tabernacles, which would have come in after viii. 5, had not the Apostle, on the mention of the better promises, stopped to show them to be such, from the inferiority of those which subsist under the old Law.—εἰ γὰρ—τόπος. The argument here is, that 'the introduction of a new Covenant implies the insufficiency of the former.'—ἀμεμπος, lit. 'what could not be justly found fault with,' as being perfectly adequate to accomplish the purposes in view.—Οὐκ ἂν δευτ. ἐξητ. τόπος. Here we have (as oft. in the writings of St. Paul) a sentence composed of two sentences blended into one; i. e. 'there would have been no place (i. e. room or occasion) for a better covenant, and [consequently] a better covenant would not have been sought for.' The term ἐξηταίτο was, it would seem, used with reference to that anxious desire and expectation, which had long filled the hearts of the pious, for the new Dispensation, and which 'the sure word of prophecy' had told them should be promulgated by the Desire of all nations. (Haggai ii. 7.) See 1 Pet. i. 10.

8. μεμφόμενος γὰρ, &c. Γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[But there was such a place to be found;] for, &c.' It has been disputed whether μεμφόμενος should be joined with αὐτοῖς, or be referred to διαθήκῃ at ver. 6. The former mode is generally adopted by the older Commentators, the latter by the more recent ones; who justly urge that the context, and the precision of style, observable in this Epistle, alike require it. In the passage which follows, this dissatisfaction of God with the old Covenant is implied; and therefore it is not unaptly adduced to prove that that covenant, and the religion thereby introduced, was not ἀμεμπος. See vii. 12. The Apostle, indeed, might well adduce the passage, since, in its literal sense, at least, it has been always referred, even by the Jews, to the times of the Messiah. In the words themselves, however, there exist not a few minute discrepancies from the Sept., which the recent Commentators in general ascribe to the writer's citing from memory; but as they are, for the most part, found in some of the MSS. of the Sept., they may have been in the text at the time of St. Paul.—διαθήκην καινὴν, i. e. as Wesley explains, new in many respects (though not as to the substance of it): 1. as being ratified by the death of Christ; 2. as freed from those burdensome rites and ceremonies; 3. as containing a more full and clear account of spiritual religion; 4. as attended with larger influences of the Spirit; 5. as extended to all men; and, 6, never to be abolished.

9. οὐ κατὰ, &c. Κατὰ here, like the Hebr. כַּ, denotes similitudo, as in 1 Pet. i. 15, and sometimes in the Class. writers. In the words ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιλαβ. μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν there is a Hebraism, for ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὅτι ἐπιλαβόμεν τ. χ. α. On the sense of ἐπιλαβ., see note on ii. 16. The expression is one to denote 'the care and tenderness of a parent.'—Οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ μ. A mode of speaking (per metonymiam) equiv. to 'they violated my covenant.' This suggests the reason why the new Covenant was framed,—namely, because the old one had not been observed. By διαβ. are here meant 'the precepts enjoined in the covenant,'—τὰ νουνομοθετημένα (see note on v. 6), and what had been undertaken to be performed.—ἡμέλησα αὐτῶν, 'I disregarded them,' 'took no care of them.' This agrees throughout with the Sept.; but, judging from Symm. and the Vulg., most of the modern Versions would seem to be very dissimilar. And yet there is no discrepancy. The sense assigned by the Versions in question is quite unsuitable to the context, nay, contrary to the proprietas linguae. The best Expositors, both Jewish and Christian, have long been agreed that כַּךְ חָזַק should be rendered, 'I was weary of and cared not for them;' which is confirmed by the words of 1 Sam. ii. 30.

10. διαθήκην ἦν διαθήσομαι, &c. The phrase διατίθεσθαι διαθήκειν is found in Aristoph. Av. 438. It is well observed by Mr. Conyb., 'that διαθήκην does not (like the English 'covenant') imply reciprocity.' It properly means 'a legal disposition,' and would, perhaps, be better translated 'dispensation' here. A covenant between two parties is συνθήκη. The new dispensation is a gift from God, rather than a covenant between God and man (see Gal. iii. 15—20). However, at the rendering 'dispensation' I pause.—Διδοὺς νόμους, &c. For διδοὺς the Sept. has διδοῖς δέσω, but the Hebr. simply τῷ, I will give.

1 John 8. 46.
 66.
 ch. 10. 16.
 1 John 2. 27.
 12 <sup>k</sup> Rom. 11.
 27.
 ch. 10. 17.
 13 <sup>a</sup> Exod. 25.
 3. & 26. 1.
 11 <sup>1</sup> Καὶ οὐ μὴ δι-
 12 <sup>k</sup> ὅτι ἴλεως ἔσομαι ταῖς ἀδικίαις αὐτῶν, καὶ τῶν
 13 <sup>a</sup> ἐν τῷ λέγειν καὶ νῦν, πεπαλαίωκε τὴν
 14 <sup>a</sup> πρώτην τὸ δὲ παλαιούμενον καὶ γηράσκον, ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ.
 15 <sup>a</sup> Εἶχε μὲν οὖν καὶ ἡ πρώτη [σκηνή] δικαιώματα λατρείας,

Most Commentators suppose διδοῦν put for δάσω; but it is better to suppose an ellipsis of εἰμι or ἔσομαι. This use of δίδωμι is thought Hebraic; yet an ex. has been adduced from Xen. Cyr. viii. 2, 20, ὃ μὲν οἱ θεοὶ δόντες εἰς τὰς ψυχὰς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. In each passage there is a blending of two modes of expression. Of the metaphor in ἐπὶ καρδίᾳ αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω, other exx. occur in Rom. ii. 15, and 2 Cor. iii. 3; nor is it unfrequent in the Class. writers. So in Æschyl. Choeph. 447, we have τοιαῦτ' ἀκούον ἐν φρεσὶ γράφον. On the full import of this and the foregoing expression see Hyper. and Calv. Suffice it here to say (in the words of Wesley), that 'by "putting his laws in their minds" is meant, opening their eyes and enlightening their understanding, to see the true, full, spiritual meaning of those laws; and by "writing them on their hearts" is meant, making them to inwardly experience whatever he hath commanded.'—καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς εἰς Θεόν, &c. A mode of speaking frequent in the Old Testament, and which may be, as Carpzov says, a formula solemnis, pertaining to any Divine covenant, importing the giving protection and blessing, on the one hand, and worship on the other.

11. οὐ μὴ διδάξωσιν, &c.] meaning, that 'they will have no need to teach, &c.'—For the t. rec. πλησιον, I have, with all the Critical Editors, from Matth. downwards, adopted πολίτην, from all the uncials, and very many cursives, including most of the Lamb. and Mus. copies. The t. rec. came, I suspect, from the Scholiasta.—The words λέγων γινώθι τὸν Κύριον are, as Kuin. says, 'illustrative of the ἀσπομίον adverted to in διδάσκεις'; for thus speaking, it is predicted that there will be, comparatively, no need of this under the new and better covenant; since the knowledge of true religion will be so universally diffused as to dispense with it.

12. ὅτι ἴλεως ἔσομαι, &c.] Here is adduced the reason why all should worship God,—namely, because Christ, by his death, hath obtained full pardon of sin, and hope of eternal felicity.—ταῖς ἀδικίαις α., put for αὐτοῖς δόκονσαι, as in Thucyd. viii. 40, 1, χαλεπατέρως ἐν ταῖς ἀδικίαις κολάζομαι. The words καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν are cancelled by Tisch., on the authority of three MSS., the Vulg., Syr., and other Versions; while Griesb., Scholz, and Lachm. retain them; very properly; considering that the words καὶ τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν recur at x. 17, sine v. l. And though the words καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν have no place in the Sept., nor is any thing corresponding to them found in the Hebrew original, yet I see not why the Apostle may not be supposed—espec. considering that he never slavishly binds himself to the Sept.—to have chosen to express the full sense of the Hebrew term נָשָׂא by two terms; which is the more prob., considering that he could scarcely fail to have in mind such passages as Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Num. xiv. 18, in the former of which passages we have ἀφαιρῶν ἀνομίας καὶ ἀδικίας καὶ ἀμαρτίας, and in the latter passage the Sept. expresses the single Hebrew term נָשָׂא by the two Greek ones, ἀδικίας καὶ ἀμαρτίας. Hence I still retain the words in question.—μὴ μνησθῶ. A refined mode of expressing forgiveness of sins. The general sense is, that 'under the new covenant a complete atonement will be made for the sins of men, whereby they may, under the conditions of that covenant, attain salvation.'

13. ἐν τῷ λέγειν—ἀφανισμοῦ] From the prophecy, announcing that a new covenant would be formed, the Apostle justly infers the abrogation of the old.—πεπαλαίωκε, ἀντισημασμένη, 'represents it as antiquated.' In παλαιούμενον καὶ γηράσκον there is a use, with which may be comp. that of παλ. in Plato, Conv. p. 206, τῷ τὸ αἰδιον καὶ παλαιούμενον ἵππον νῦν ἰγκαταλείπειν, and p. 59, παλαιούμενον; in the former of which passages, by αἰδιον καὶ παλ. is meant quod abet et antiquatur, and the expression is exactly parallel to the present τὸ παλαιούμενον καὶ γηράσκον, there being in each a Hendiadys introduced by way of strengthening the sense. In the one case we may render, 'what is gone out of use and superannuated'; in the other, 'what is gone off by utter senility.' This is then followed up with a general sentiment; q. d. 'Now what is grown old, and, by implication, weak and useless, is near dissolution; implying the inference, that as the old covenant is considered by God as antiquated, it would be succeeded by a new and perfect one; see infra x. 21. The expression ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ may be supposed to indicate the writer's persuasion that the Jewish Temple worship was destined to experience a speedy destruction, which indeed took place a very few years after. See infra x. 37.

IX. Thus far has been evinced the entire inferiority of the priesthood of Aaron, as compared with that of Christ. It has been proved that Christ is High Priest in the Temple of Heaven; while the Aaronical priests offer sacrifice in a temple which is no more than the image and shadow of the heavenly: finally, that to Christ belongs a far more excellent priesthood, as being

τὸ τε Ἅγιον κοσμικόν. <sup>2</sup> <sup>b</sup> Σκηνὴ γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη, ἡ πρώτη, <sup>b</sup> <sup>Exod. 26.</sup> <sup>20. & 26. 1.</sup> <sup>8c.</sup> <sup>Rev. 21. 5.</sup> <sup>8c.</sup> (ἐν ᾗ ἡ τε λυχνία καὶ ἡ τράπεζα καὶ ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν ἁρτων)

Mediator of an infinitely superior covenant. On this subject the Apostle now further enlarges; proceeding, in this and the next chapter, to consider the nature and purpose of the Temple service. And here, while he speaks with due respect of ordinances of remote antiquity, instituted by God himself, and with evident complacency dilates on the splendour of the tabernacles formed under Divine direction,—yet he shows that there is in the new religion what far overbalances the external magnificence, which so dazzled the eyes of the Jews in the old; nay, what was truly august; that respecting merely what is external, and requires constant repetition; this, what is internal, and sufficient once for all. Accordingly the one, though of Divine appointment, was calculated to be merely temporary, and meant to last only till a more perfect and permanent one should be introduced by the promised Messiah; when, having already answered its end, and become useless, it must cease. See more in Calv. and Hyp.

1. μὴν οὖν] The Particle is here transitive and continuative (as in Acts i. 18. ix. 31. xv. 30. xvii. 30. xxiii. 22), and may be rendered now, or therefore. — σκηνὴ, not found in most of the MSS., many Versions, Fathers, Commentators, and early Editions, has been rejected by almost every Editor from Mill to Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; with reason; since internal evidence is as much against it, as external. It doubtless came from a marginal Scholium, but wrongly founded, since διαθήκη, as the best Expositors are agreed, is the true subaudition.—δικαιώματα λατρ., 'ordinances of divine service,' or worship; signifying lit., what God δικαίωσεν, 'was pleased to ordain.' So λατρεία and λατρεύειν are often used, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, of Divine service. The Genit. in the Substantive λατρ. may (as in the case of an adject. preceding) be rendered 'respecting,' of which sense exx. may be seen in Winer's Gr. Gr. § 23, 3, though he omits this use after a substantive.—τὸ τε Ἅγιον κοσμικόν. Almost all our Translators render, 'a worldly sanctuary.' This, however, Bp. Middleton pronounces to be a sense utterly inadmissible. It would, he says, require either τὸ ἅγιον τὸ κοσμικόν, or τὸ κοσμ. ἅγιον, inasmuch as both ἅγιον and κοσμικόν being Adjectives, one of them must be taken Substantively; and the position of the Article determines that that one must be κοσμικόν, which is by Homburg, Bp. Middl., Wakef., and Prof. Stuart, understood to mean 'the sacred furniture,' vasa sacra, lotumque apparatus Leviticum; though that interpretation has been rejected by Dind. and Kuin., on account of the signif. being destitute of sufficient authority; and rightly: for though Bp. Middl. adduces that of the Coptic Version, which renders ornamentum, yet that is taking for granted the existence of κοσμικόν as a Subst., which, without positive proof, is inadmissible. Indeed, I have myself sought sedulously for an ex. in the Class. writers of every age, but without success. It is true that in a passage of Leo Grammaticus, cited by Ducange, Gloss. Gr. in voce, I find καὶ ἐνδύσσειν αὐτὸν κοσμικά. But this proof halts on the same foot as the last,—Leo being a writer

infimus Græcilitatis, who lived long after even the Coptic Version was formed; not to say that the passage is evidently corrupt. Instead of ἐνδύσσειν, the true reading, I suspect, is ἀνιδύσσειν. Thus κοσμικά is an Adjective plural, and signifies secularia; the sense being, 'and secular affairs enchain him.' See 2 Pet. ii. 19, comp. with Luke viii. 14 and Rom. vii. 23, 24. In short, we may suspect that the Substantive κοσμικόν never existed; espec. as even the Adjective κοσμικός is very rare; and it is not likely that the Substantive would be formed from so rare a form, but rather from κόσμος, which was common. Indeed, all the Nouns Substantive in ικον are rare,—such, I mean, as are real Substantives, and not Adjectives taken substantively; for almost all of them are, like λεξικόν, Adjectives neuter taken substantively, by the ellipsis of some noun. In short, the only vestige of the existence of the Substantive is in a passage of a Rabbinical writer adduced by Bp. Middl. Yet there may we not suspect (considering that κοσμικόν no where occurs, and κόσμιον very often in the later Greek writers) that the Rabbi wrote, not ἡσυχία, but ἡσυχία? And though Bp. Middl. appeals to other Hebrew words similarly formed from the Greek, as διαθήκη and παρόνσια, yet those were words of frequent occurrence, quite unlike the one in question,—which, if it did exist at all, was scarcely known to the Greeks themselves, and therefore would not be likely to be adopted by a foreigner. Of the word κόσμιον, and in the sense ornament (namely, of dress), exx. occur in the Alexandrine writers, as Judg. viii. 26 (Symm.), Cohel, xii. 9. And so the Glossary Cyrill. has κόσμημα γυναικός and κόσμημα κεφαλῆς. Other exx. too, are adduced by Ducange from Achmet., Oneir., Theophanes, Didymus on Homer, and Liban.: inasmuch that I strongly suspect the Coptic Translator, here appealed to by Bp. Middl., had in his copy κόσμιον. Certainly the existence of κόσμιον discountenances that of κοσμικόν; since the latter word was not wanted. At all events, no proof has been adduced of the existence of the Substantive κοσμικόν, at least so early as the time of St. Paul. Hence it is best here to retain the Adjective use of the word. Nor will it thus be necessary to read, as Bp. Middl. says, τὸ κοσμικόν ἅγιον. We have only to suppose, as we very well may, that the writer intended this, though he did not so express his meaning. Thus far in my former Edd. On carefully reconsidering this perplexing question for my ninth Edit., I am still of the same opinion as heretofore, notwithstanding that I find so exact a grammarian as Mr. Green, Gr. New Test. Dial. p. 188, confirms by his suffrage, the view of the sense propounded by Wakef., Bp. Middl., and Prof. Scholef. His reason for adopting it, however, must stand on its own footing, and that not valid,—namely, that, since the words cannot easily be rendered so as to make κοσμικόν a predicate, it must be regarded as a Noun [Substantive]. It cannot, I grant, easily be so rendered; but the difficulty is greater of regarding κοσμικόν as a Substantive wholly without proof. To Mr. Green's argument, that, as a sacrificial rite is in Eccus. i. 19 ο Exod. 30.

31, 32.
40. 2.
d Ex. 10. 22.
8. 30. 10. 16.
21. 8. 30. 33.
Lev. 16. 12.
Num. 17. 10.
1 K. 7. 8. 9.
3 Chron. 5.
10.
e Exod. 30.
13.

ἥτις λέγεται Ἀγία· <sup>3</sup> μετὰ δὲ τὸ δεύτερον καταπέτασμα σκηπὴ ἡ λεγομένη Ἀγία ὁγίων, <sup>4</sup> χρυσοῦν ἔχουσα θυμιατήριον, καὶ τὴν κιβωτὸν τῆς διαθήκης περικεκαλυμμένην πάντοθεν χρυσῷ, ἐν ᾗ στάμνος χρυσῇ ἔχουσα τὸ μάννα, καὶ ἡ ῥάβδος Ἀαρὼν ἡ βλαστήσασα, καὶ αἱ πλάκες τῆς διαθήκης, <sup>5</sup> ὑπεράνω δὲ αὐτῆς Χερουβιμ δόξης κατασκιάζοντα τὸ ἱλαστήριον περὶ ὧν termed κόσμος Κυρίου, therefore the apparatus might be termed τὸ κοσμικόν—I answer, Non sequitur. Rejecting, then, the supposition (which Bp. Middl. admits to be not necessary) of κοσμικόν being a Substantive, and regarding it as an Adjective, it remains to ascertain what is its real import. First, however, it will be necessary to explain that of τὸ Ἅγιον. Now this must surely mean the Temple, δῶμα being understood. And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator renders it ‘domus sancta.’ As to the sense of κοσμικόν, the ancient and some modern Expositors take the meaning to be, ‘which belongs to the whole world;’ while others, as Grot., Wetst., and Middl., render it mundane, i. e. emblematical of the mundane system; interpretations alike harsh and unsupported by the context. The true sense is, I apprehend, that adopted by Chrys., Calv., Crell., Hyper., Wolf, Estius, Casaub., Beza, Pisc., Bengel, Ernesti, Diindorf, and Stuart, who regard κοσμικόν as equiv. to ἐπίγειον, χειροποίητον, ταύτης κτίσεως at ver. 11, and so distinguished from the σκεπὴ ἀληθινή, at supra viii. 2, and the τὰ ἅγια ἀληθινὰ καὶ ἰσχυρά infra v. 23, 24. So Hyper. explains it ‘mundanum duntaxat, i. e. externum, temporale, carnale, et nequaquam spirituale.’ And Crell. remarks, ‘Mundanum vocat respectu illius celestis; ita ut mundanum idem quod terrenum vel seculare sit.’ This view of the sense I can confirm from Jos. Bell. iv. 5, 2, where, speaking of the Jewish priests, and the Levitical form of worship, he says, Οἱ δὲ ὀλίγον τὴν ἱερὰν ἰσθίαν περικείμενοι, καὶ τῆς κοσμικῆς θρησκείας κατάρχοντες—βορὰ κυνῶν καὶ θηρίων ἰδλίσκοντο, where κοσμ. signif. terrene, as opposed to celestial, i. e. by implication. Comp. the phrase κοσμικὴ εὐταξία, in Plut. Mor. p. 119, and Stob. Eclog. Phys. p. 66. So also, in Artemid. Oneir. i. 2, it is said, that ‘total eclipses of the sun or moon portend πάθῃ κοσμικά.’ Thus, then, we may render: ‘Now the first covenant, also, had ordinances of worship, and the worldly or terrene Sanctuary,’ as mentioned in the apodosis at v. 11.

2. ἡ πρώτη meaning (by the frequent use of πρῶτος for πρότερος) the anterior, or outward part of the tabernacle, corresponding to the ἕν or πρόναος in the Temple; for the Tabernacle of Moses (like the temple of Solomon, and that of Zorobabel) was divided by a Veil into two tabernacles; in allusion to which the whole Sanctuary is called in Ps. xliii. 3, μυστὸν, Sept. σκηνώματα. The difficulty here found, or sought, by Expositors, arose only from a harsh brevity of expression, not frequent both in St. Paul and Thucyd. No difficulty would have existed had the Apostle expressed his meaning more fully, thus: ‘For a tabernacle was constructed [consisting of two compartments]; the first, which is called Holy, wherein was, &c., and the second, which contained, &c.—λυχία καὶ ἡ τράπεζα,

&c. On the first of these particulars see Exod. xxv. 31, seqq., and on the two others, Exod. xxv. 31.—ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν ἁρτων we may either, with some, regard as standing for οἱ ἄρτοι οἱ προτιθέμενοι; or, with others, take the expression as standing for οἱ ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως (see Matt. xii. 4), the Show-bread (so called as being placed before the Lord), elsewhere denominated πρῶτος, literally, presence-bread.

3. μετὰ δὲ τὸ δεύτερον, &c.] This second veil was that which separated the Sanctum from the Court, and was called ἐπίσπαστρον.

4. θυμιατήριον] This term has given rise to much perplexity. According to Exod. xxx. 6, the incense-altar was not in the Holy of holies, but on the outer side of the veil which separated the Holy of holies from the rest of the Tabernacle. Several modes of evading the difficulty have been suggested; amongst others, to translate θυμιατήριον, cesser, and understand it of the censer which the High Priest brought into the Holy of holies once a year: but this was not kept in the Holy of holies. Moreover, θυμιατήριον is used for ‘the incense-altar’ by Philo and Josephus. The best explanation of the discrepancy is to consider that the incense-altar, though not within the Holy of holies, was closely connected therewith, and was sprinkled on the day of Atonement with the same blood with which the High Priest made atonement in the Holy of holies. See Exod. xxx. 6—10, and Lev. xvi. 11, &c. (Conyb.)—πάντοθεν, i. e. both outside and inside, as we find from Exod. xxv. 11, Jos., and Philo.—ἐν ᾗ, i. e. ‘in the ark.’ This, indeed, would seem to be at variance with what is said at 1 Kings viii. 9, that the ark contained only the two tables of stone. Hence various methods of removing the discrepancy have been proposed; while Kuin. and Stuart here decide, with Deyling and Carpov, that all we have to do is to show this description to be true of the tabernacle constructed and furnished by Moses (of which alone the Apostle is speaking), though not of the Temple of Solomon. That the pot of manna and Aaron’s rod were laid up in the ark of the covenant is, they show, proved from Exod. xvi. 32—34, and Numb. xvii. 10, at least according to the interpretation of the Rabbins and Jewish Interpreters even to the present day. The pot, too, is called ‘golden’ in the Sept., though not expressly said to be so in the Hebrew; and yet that it was so, considering the purpose, cannot be doubted.

5. Χρ. δόξης] From a comparison of the passages where these Cherubim are mentioned, it appears that they were symbolical emblems of the Divine nature, denoting the supreme governance of the Deity over all creation, and representing his tutelary presence. The term δόξης is by recent Commentators in general supposed to refer to the splendour of these figures, which were covered all over with gold; while the earlier

οὐκ ἔστι νῦν λέγειν κατὰ μέρος. <sup>6</sup> <sup>1</sup>Τούτων δὲ οὕτω κατεσκευ- <sup>f Num. 28. 2.</sup>
 ασμένων, εἰς μὲν τὴν πρώτην σκηνὴν διαπαντός εἰσίασιν οἱ ἱερεῖς τὰς λατρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες. <sup>7</sup> <sup>2</sup>εἰς δὲ τὴν δευτέραν ἀπαξ τοῦ <sup>f Exod. 30.</sup>
 ἑνιαυτοῦ μόνος ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς, οὐ χωρὶς αἵματος, δὲ προσφέρει ὑπὲρ <sup>Lev. 1. 2.</sup> ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ ἀγνοημάτων <sup>8</sup> <sup>3</sup>τοῦτο δηλοῦντος τοῦ <sup>15. 34.</sup> Πνεύματος τοῦ ἁγίου, μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδόν, <sup>16. 35.</sup> ἔτι τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς ἐχούσης στάσιν. <sup>9</sup> <sup>1</sup>Ἦτις παραβολὴ <sup>17. 36.</sup>
 εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' † ὃν δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι <sup>h John 14. 6.</sup> προσφέρονται, μὴ δυνάμεναι κατὰ συνειδήσιν τελειῶσαι τὸν <sup>ch. 10. 19, 20.</sup> λατρεύοντα, <sup>10</sup> <sup>4</sup>μόνον ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι, καὶ διαφόροις, <sup>1</sup> <sup>i Acts 13. 30.</sup>
 Gal. 3. 21. <sup>h Lev. 11. 2.</sup>
 Num. 10. 7, 8c.

ones, more properly, understand it of 'the glory of the Lord' dwelling between and shining around them, as alluded to in Pa. lxxx. 1.—ἱλαστήριον. This was the ῥα, cover, or lid, of the ark (or the mercy-seat), so called because, by the sprinkling of blood upon it, the atonement was effected on the day of expiation.

6. τούτων δὲ οὕτω κατεσκευ. Render: 'Now these things being [thus] set in due order.'—εἰσίασι should be rendered by a Present, not, as it is usually done, by a Paat tense; since the Present, from its indefinite sense, suits all times, and was here used with full propriety, the Temple being yet in being, and the Temple service continued. The same error is committed at the term προσφέρει, προσφέρουσι, and προσφέρονται, at ch. x. I agree with Mr. Conyb. in his remarks on the difficulty here (as elsewhere in this Epistle) found, or made, by Commentators. Undoubtedly, as Mr. Conybeare observes, 'the writer is speaking of the Sanctuary of the First Covenant (see ix. 1) as originally designed. And he goes on to speak of the existing Temple-worship, as the continuation of the Tabernacle-worship, which, in all essential points, it was.'

7. ἀπαξ τ. ἑν. Since from Lev. xvi. 12—15 it appears that the High Priest entered the Sanctum Sanctorum twice (some say thrice, and the Rabbins even four times), ἀπαξ τ. ἑν. must (as the best Commentators are agreed) mean, 'on one day only in the year'; i. e. on the day of Expiation; and, indeed, as the two enterings were in continuity, and forming one and the same service, they might be almost said to enter the Sanctum Sanctorum but once. From Philo, p. 591, cited by Kuin., we learn that if the High Priest entered on more than one day in the year, or oftener than twice on that day, he was put to death without mercy.—ἀγνοημάτων, meaning all such sins for which expiation was held available; sins of presumption and wilfulness, and the more heinous offences (as murder, adultery, incest, blasphemy), being excluded from expiation.

8. τοῦτο. Some supply διὰ, or κατὰ; meaning, 'by this restriction and difficulty of access.' That, however, involves a needless harshness; and it is better, with others, to regard τοῦτο as representing the subject of what was signified in the instruction,—meant to be intimated by a sort of figurative and spiritual application of the injunctions, or by the inference from them,—which, he means to say, is that the true approach to God, and access to the real Holy of holies, HEAVEN, by the expiation of sin, was not made fully manifest while the Jewish economy subsisted; or, in other words, that, as Conyb. explains, 'while the Temple-worship, with its exclusion of all but the High Priest from the Holy of holies, still existed, the way of salvation would not be fully manifest to those who adhered to the outward and typical observances, instead of being thereby led to the Antitype.'—ἔτι τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς ἐχούσης στάσιν, lit. 'while the first tabernacle (or dispensation) had a standing,' i. e. subsisted, was in force; of which sense Kypke adduces exx. from Polyb., Plutarch, and Dionys. Hal., and Carpszov from Philo. However, it would seem that the Apostle adopted the expression, because, as Theophyl. and Theodor. suggest, he meant to advert to the second holy edifice being still standing, and the Temple sacrifices and services yet constantly offered. However, by τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς is really meant simply 'the first dispensation'; i. e. that under the first Temple. The image in ἐχούσης στάσιν is adapted to the figure in σκηνῇ.

9. ἦτις scil. σκηνῇ, 'which [dispensation].'
—παραβ. ἑστ., 'is, or has been, a type or figure,'—namely, of the entrance of the more excellent High Priest into heaven, whereby is obtained free access to God, hitherto hindered.—εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστ. Render: 'up to the present time;' meaning τὸν καιρὸν τῆς διορθώσεως at ver. 10, which had then begun (see x. 10—14, 19, 22), when there was no longer occasion for the type in question; though, by the continuance of the Temple service, and the perverse unbelief of the Jews, it might be said still to exist.—δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι, meaning all sorts of expiatory sacrifices. In μὴ δυνάμεναι κατὰ συνειδήσιν τελειῶσαι τὸν λατρ. the expression δυνάμεναι is accommodated in gender to the latter of the above terms, as being the nearer and more important noun. The general sense is, 'which cannot perfectly tranquillize the conscience of the worshipper [who offers these expiatory sacrifices]'; lit. 'which cannot consummate, make perfect, the worshipper,—accomplish his purpose [remission of sins] as to the conscience, = so as to satisfy his conscience.'

10. μόνον ἐπὶ βρώμασι—ἐπικείμενα. Of these words, the construction, and (as dependent thereon) the sense, have been not a little disputed, the reading itself being a matter of debate. Here several var. lects. exist (especially δικαιώματα for δικαιώμασι); which, however, seem only so many different attempts at getting rid of what seemed a harsh construction,—namely, δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι—δυνάμεναι—ἐπὶ
 S s

1 ch. 2. 1.
R. 4. 14.
S. 6. 30.
E. 8. 1.

βαπτισμοῖς, [καὶ] δικαιοῦμασι σαρκὸς, μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως ἐπικείμενα. <sup>11</sup> Ἰησοῦς δὲ παραγενόμενος, ἀρχιερεὺς τῶν μελόντων ἀγαθῶν, διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τελειότερας σκηνῆς, οὗ

καίμα: in adjusting which most Commentators take ἐπικείμενα τύπος; i. e. with ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι, and with μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ., the ἐπὶ being put for ἐν. And, indeed, this would seem the most natural construction; but it leads to a sense objectionable; for how oblations and sacrifices can be said to consist in meats, drinks, and ablutions, it is not easy to see. It would, therefore, seem that ἐπικ. is only to be taken once, and that μόνον μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ. ἐπικ. are alone to be referred to ὅσα καὶ θυσίαι; also that the words ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ—σαρκὸς are meant to designate another class of ritual observances, as being mere ordinances of the flesh, gross and external, and therefore not able to quiet the conscience, or make the worshipper perfect. Thus ἐπὶ must be rendered not in, but præter; and by δικαιοῦμασι σαρκὸς we may understand other similar observances, as circumcision, &c.; or (as such an ellipsis of ἄλλοις involves a certain harshness) we may rather suppose this clause intended to qualify the preceding, and show the true nature of the βρώματα καὶ πόματα here spoken of. By διαφόροι βαπτισμοί are denoted those 'ceremonial ablutions,'—some respecting the priests, others the Levites, or the people at large,—which are detailed in the Books of Leviticus and Numbers. Hence they are here termed διαφόροι, 'of various kinds,'—namely, as pertaining to the different orders of persons, whether Priests, Levites, or others. These, then, in addition to the preceding class of ritual observances, are said to be ἐπικείμενα, 'enjoined,' and intended to be in force, μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως, meaning, 'the period which should introduce a reformation of religion, by a change of external forms into vital and spiritual worship,'—namely, that of the Gospel.' Here, then, it is meant (as Stuart expresses it) that oblations and sacrifices are offered up, which cannot fully accomplish what is needful for the purging and quieting of the conscience of him who performs the services in question; being enjoined and in force (together with meats and drinks, and various ordinances pertaining to the flesh) only until the time of reformation. On reconsidering for this ninth Edit. the reading and sense of this ver., I continue to be of the same opinion as heretofore. As to the reading, that opinion is confirmed by the circumstance, that, though Tisch. in his 1st ed. adopted, with Scholz and Lachm., the reading δικαιοῦμασι for καὶ δικαιοῦμασι, he has, in his second ed., restored that reading; very properly; since it is impossible to defend δικαιοῦμασι in a composition like this Epistle, marked by exactness of style. Yet he would have done still better had he followed those Editors in cancelling the καὶ, for which there is strong authority (to which I add Lamb. 1182, 1183, 1136), espec. considering that internal evidence is against the word, since we can easily account for its introduction, viz. by those Critics who did not perceive the force of the apposition, or (as it may have been) by scribes, who thought that δικ. ought to have a καὶ as well as the foregoing substantives.

11—15. The Apostle now contrasts these symbolical and temporary ministrations and ordinances with the effectual and perpetual services of our Redeemer, who exercises the office of High Priest in a greater and more perfect tabernacle, even in heaven (ver. 11), into which He entered by his own blood; thus procuring eternal redemption for us (ver. 12); for, he argues, 'if the blood of bulls and goats, offered by the Levitical priests, could effect an outward purification (ver. 13), much more must the blood of Christ purify the conscience, and fit the believer for heaven (ver. 14): for this reason he is appointed the Mediator of the new covenant, that by dying to purchase redemption for sinners, even in former times, believers of all ages might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance (ver. 15).

11. Χρ. δὲ παρὰ, ἀρχ. τῶν μελλ. ἀγ.] The sense is, 'But Christ, having come (in the flesh) as High Priest, in respect of the hope of the blessing in futurity, (passing) through a greater and more perfect Tabernacle, not made with human hands,—that is to say, not of this (natural) creation,—not by goats' and calves' blood, but by his own blood, hath entered once for all into the (true) Holy place, after having attained an everlasting redemption, so called in opposition to the temporary one of the High Priest at the annual day of expiation.'—I must not omit here to notice a matter of reading. For μελλόντων MSS. B. D. and the Pesch. Syr. and Ital. Versions have γενομένων, adopted by Lachm. and by Tisch. in his 1st ed., who in his 2nd ed. restored μελλόντων; very properly; since external authority is very slender, and internal evidence is rather against, than in favour of, γεν., which, notwithstanding all the sophistical reasoning of Ebrard, is not to be tolerated; and his attempt to show the inappropriateness of μελλ. is an egregious failure. I suspect, indeed, this γεν. to be no more than a corruption, by error, of the scribes, of some other reading which was a Critical emendation of μελλ. by those who did not perceive its true force and entire suitability. Though some modern Critics, as Dr. Mangey, similarly stumbling, proposed to read μυόντων,—utterly inadmissible, as yielding a most frigid and jejune sense. As to the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version, adduced for γεν., that aid is vainly invoked, since from the sense it expresses, 'wrought out,' 'effected,' it is plain that the Translator had not γενομένων in his copy, but some other word, which we are left to divine; sed hæret aqua. Strange is it that any should have stumbled at μελλόντων, which yields, when properly explained, a most excellent sense, as denoting (Est. observes) the 'bona cælestia of eterna, quæ in futuro sæculo expectantur per Christum, per ministerium sui sacerdotii, qui nobis intercessor est et dux ad ea bona.' So infra x. 1, the Law is termed a σκία τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν. See more in Hyperius, who has treated most fully and ably on this point.—διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τῆς τελειότερας σκηνῆς. Render: 'by the better and more perfect tabernacle.' To σκεῖν

χειροποιήτου, (τουτέστιν ου ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως;) <sup>12</sup> ἢ οὐδὲ δι' <sup>m</sup> ἁλοῦ 20.
αἵματος τράγων καὶ μόσχων, διὰ δὲ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, εἰσῆλθεν <sup>n</sup> Eph. 1. 7.
ἐθάπαξ εἰς τὰ ἁγία, αἰώνιαν λύτρωσιν εὐράμενος. <sup>13</sup> ἢ Εἰ γὰρ <sup>n</sup> Col. 1. 14.
τὸ αἷμα ταύρων καὶ τράγων, καὶ σποδὸς δαμάλεως ραντίζουσα <sup>n</sup> ch. 10.
τοὺς κεκοινωμένους, ἀγιάζει πρὸς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα <sup>n</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 19.
<sup>14</sup> ὁ πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὸ αἷμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὃς διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου <sup>n</sup> Rev. 1. 5.
ἑαυτὸν προσήνεγκεν ἅμωμον τῷ Θεῷ, καθαρῶς τὴν συνειδησιν <sup>n</sup> 2. 2.
ἡμῶν ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων εἰς τὸ λατρεῖν Θεῷ ζῶντι; <sup>15</sup> ἢ Καὶ <sup>n</sup> ch. 10. 4.
ἐμὲ. <sup>1</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 19. & 2. 18. & 2. 1 John 1. 7. Rev. 1. 5. p Rom. 3. 25. & 5. 9. 1 Tim. 2. 5. ch. 3. 1. & 12. 34. <sup>n</sup> Luke 1. 75.
Tit. 2. 14. <sup>n</sup> Rom. 6. 18.
Eph. 5. 2.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
Tit. 2. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 19.

this σκηνή is to be referred has been debated. To understand it, with some, of the Christian Church, lies open to various objections, well stated by Dindorf, Stuart, and Kun. It is the opinion of these, and many other eminent Commentators, that we have here a comparison of Christ with the Jewish High Priest, who, on the day of expiation, passed through the Sanctum into the Holy of holies, answering to that part of heaven wherein is the immediate presence of God himself. Thus, then, the Apostle will here mean to compare the visible heavens (called by the Jews the test of God),—through which Jesus passed in his ascension to the highest heaven,—with the veil which separated the Jewish Sanctum from the Holy of holies; and σκηνή τελ. will thus denote the exterior parts of the heavenly Adytum. So at iv. 14 Christ is spoken of as διελθὼν διὰ τῶν οὐρανῶν.—χειρὸς, means “not made by human hands”; οὐ ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως, “not of this world’s fabrication, not of earthly, but of heavenly fabric;” scil. ἡ ἐπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, viii. 2. Mr. Conybe. thinks that the parenthetic words τοῦτοισιν—κτίσεως have much the appearance of a marginal gloss on οὐ χειροποιήτων. But there is nothing to countenance this suspicion in the MSS. and Versions, except that the words are absent from the Venice MS. 109; but omissions are very frequent in that, and most other very ancient MSS.; and the words are not such as a glossographer would have adopted, who would undoubtedly have framed a much more perspicuous explanation. Besides, the words have quite a Pauline air, espec. in the harsh and peculiar use of ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως, for ‘this world’s fabrication.’ Besides, Paul often uses the form τοῦτοισιν to introduce an explanation, or further development of his meaning; so Rom. vii. 18. ix. 8. Philem. 12, and often in this Epist., as ii. 14. vii. 5. x. 20. xi. 16. xiii. 15. It occurs in 1 Pet. iii. 20, and in Acts i. 19.

12. οὐδὲ δι' αἵματος, &c.] meaning, 'Neither by the blood of victims, such as bulls and goats, but with his own blood he entered, once for all into the Holy of holies, after having obtained eternal redemption for us by his own blood.' The term ἐφάραξ alludes to the High Priest's entering once only every year into the Holy of holies; intimating that whereas he entered once every year, CHRIST, the great High Priest, entered once for all; see infra x. 10.—αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν, 'eternal,' as opposed to the Levitical annual one.—εὐράνωμεν, lit. 'having acquired for himself,' obtained. So in JOH. ANTI. I. 19, 1, we have δόξαν ἀφ' ἧς εὐράνωμεν. See my note on THUCYD. I. 18.

13. σποδοὶ δαμάλειον] See Numb. xix. 2—9.

—παρὶχουσα, 'sprinkling,'—namely, when mixed with running water, thus forming a sort of holy water used to purify the defiled. See Numb. xix. 17.

14. διὰ Πνεύματος] Of this unusual expression the exact sense and application have been not a little disputed. Some eminent modern Expositors suppose the term Πνεῦμα used with reference to the eternal and spiritual nature of Christ; a view adopted by Bp. Bull (Def. Fid. Nic., p. 19), who takes the sense to be, 'eternam Christi Divinitatem, sive divinam Filii Dei personam, unitam humanam naturam in arā Crucis Deo obtulisse:' adducing, in support of this, a passage from the Epistle of Barnabas, ch. vi., where it is said of Christ, αὐτοῦ ὑπὲρ τῆς ἡμετέρας καρπίας ἡμᾶς αἰνεῖς τοῦ πνεύματος (the vessel of the spiritual nature of Christ) προσφέρων θυσιαν. Others, consisting of the ancient Commentators in general, and many modern ones (as Calv., Est., Whitby, Bp. Middl., Winzer, Kuip., and Stuart), understand it of the Holy Spirit, either personally, or through his influences, by which every circumstance of our Redeemer's course is said in Scripture to have been accompanied: an interpretation which seems to deserve the preference. According to the former, this text supplies a proof of the essential Deity of Christ; according to the latter, of the eternal Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

—Καθαριῇ τὴν συνείδησιν, &c. A strong expression, to denote the removal of guilt, by a comparison of the washing the surface of any unclean vessel with water, or other liquid, so as to thoroughly cleanse it. Comp. Rev. i. 5, τὰ λούσαντι ἡμὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν ἐν τῇ ἑλιστάῳ αὐτοῦ. Here, by the term συνείδησις is, as Stuart observes, meant, not simply the conscience as a faculty of the soul, but the mind, meaning 'the conscious power of man,' 'the inward consciousness.' Compare James iii. 4, ὁ κρυπτός τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος. This is said figur. to be purified, by the removal of the oppressive sense of conscious guilt cleaving to us, like the fatal robe of Nessus, and entailing spiritual death. Comp. infra x. 22, ἁρτάνομενοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς.—By dead works, as here opposed to 'the living God,' we must understand such works as pollute the soul, even as dead bodies were thought to pollute the living worshipper; and from this pollution the blood of Jesus can alone cleanse men. In the words following (εἰς τὸ λατρεῖν Θεῷ ζῶντι) we see the purpose answered by this washing in the blood of the Lamb, i. e. that we are thus permitted to draw near unto God, and offer him, after this cleansing, an acceptable service; just as those under the old dispensation διὰ τοῦτο διαθήκης καινῆς μεσίτης ἐστίν, ὅπως, θανάτου γενομένου εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ πρώτῃ διαθήκῃ παραβάσεων, were not permitted to approach God until they had first gone through a previous ceremonial purification.

8 s 2

15-18. In this obscure passage the difficulty mainly turns on the import of the term διαθήκη. The sense formerly assigned to it, testament, is now generally rejected, from its involving something like an absurdity. For how, it is asked, can any one be called the mediator of a testament? How can a testament need a mediator? How can any one be called the mediator of his own testament? How can the Mosaic law be called a testament? Who was the testator? And how can it be said that the testator died to render it valid? This, indeed, is so plain, that no Expositors of any note now contend for the sense testament throughout the passage; though some (as Limborch and Medhurst, in a Dissertation on the subject, in the Bibl. Hag.) ascribe to it the double sense of covenant and testament, namely, a covenant which partakes of the nature of a testament. It is, however, generally admitted, that in ver. 15 the sense is covenant (as viii. 6, κατεργασμένη διαθήκη μεσίτης, and often elsewhere in this book and other parts of the New Test.); and the only difference of opinion is, whether, at vv. 16, 17, it is to have the same sense, or another, namely, that of testament (i. e. will). The former position is maintained by Pierce, Doddr., Michaelis, Mackn., Parkh., and espec. by Prof. Scholef.; the latter by Calv., Erasmus, Wolf, Crell., Alberti, Abp. Newc., Bengel, Schleusn., Wahl, Bretschn., Rosenm., Kuin., Stuart, and Rose on Parkhurst. Those who adopt the former view allege that such is likely to be the sense here, since it is found in the preceding verse; that the Mosaic covenant cannot well be considered as a testament; and that accuracy of argument requires the above sense: in order to evince which they trace the course of the reasoning, which see in Pearce, Mackn., and Hold., or, in another and modified form, in Prof. Scholef., which see in his Hints, &c., cited in my former Edd., accompanied with remarks in refutation from myself and Prof. Stuart. Suffice it here to remark that, to suppose διαθεμῖναι and διαθίμιναι to be taken in a sense different from that contained in διαθήκη, is exceedingly harsh; since the sentence is highly antithetical, and the points of antithesis fall on those very words. To remove this formidable objection, some who support the interpretation in question render διαθεμῖναι (as does Dr. Burton, after Whitby), 'the covenanting party.' But we may ask (with Prof. Stuart), 'where is the death of a person covenanting made necessary, in order to confirm [or ratify] the covenant?' 'Besides (as the learned Commentator observes) Christ ratified the covenant, not as a maker, but as a mediator,' agreeably to what is said in the preceding verse. Upon the whole, I see not how the above interpretation can be admitted; for to run directly counter to the usus loquendi, and violate the common idiom of the language, in order to make the Sacred writer's argument accurate, is a course which no conscientious Expositor of the word of God will think allowable; and in a passage like the present, where the fitness of an argument is not the matter in question, it is better to leave the Sacred writer's argumentation (be it what it may) as it is, than to attempt to improve it at the expense of violating the laws of sound interpretation. Here, however, no such great perplexity exists; for there would seem no serious difficulty involved in supposing that 'the Apostle takes advantage of the twofold sense of διαθήκη, intimating that it is applicable to the Christian dispensation, not only as denoting a covenant (which is the usual signification of the word in Scripture), but also in its general acceptation, of a testament, the death of a testator being not less requisite to the operation of a will, than the death of a victim to the validity of a covenant.' 'As διαθήκη (observes Mr. Rose) means both covenant and testament (each being a solemn disposition), and as covenants in general anciently (and espec. that of Mount Sinai) were ratified with blood, the Apostle, in comparing the new διαθήκη with the old, represents it in a double light, a covenant ratified by blood, of which the former sacrifices were the types, and a testament ratified and brought into action by the death of a testator.' The points of comparison are, I would observe, the same and the death in each case respectively. The occasion of here introducing διαθ. in a sense deviating from, though closely connected with, that adopted in the preceding verse, is well pointed out by Prof. Stuart thus: 'The whole comparison of testaments among men which confer a valid title to an inheritance (vv. 16, 17) seems evidently to spring from the mention of Christ's death in the preceding verse, and of the confirmation thereby of the believer's title to a heavenly inheritance. It is as much as to say, "Brethren, regard it not as strange that the death of Christ should have given assurance of promised blessings to believers—should have ratified the new διαθήκη, of which he is the author; other διαθήκαι are ratified by the death of their respective testators, and only in this way.'" He goes on to show that even the ancient covenant, though it could not be called a διαθήκη in all respects so well as the new one, was still ratified in a manner not unlike the new one, viz. by blood, the emblem of death, vv. 18-22. See more in Calv. and Hyper., and espec. Crell., whose elaborate discussion completely establishes the view taken by the above eminent Expositors, espec. Mr. Rose. It is moreover confirmed by considering the scope of vv. 15-18; the purpose of the Apostle being (as Kuin. shows) to clear the doctrine of the death of the Messiah from objections and scruples, by showing the necessity of it to effect the grand purposes of his mediatorial office, namely, 'the expiation of the sins of the whole world.' It may be added, that vv. 16, 17 are, in some measure, parenthetical, and are intended, as Crell. long ago saw, not so much for proof, as for illustration, showing that ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη, whether regarded in the light of a testament or of a covenant, requires to be ratified by death. Building on this suggestion, Mr. Conyb. remarks, that 'the statement in this verse is not meant as a logical argument, but as a rhetorical illustration, which is suggested to the writer by the ambiguity τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν λάβωσιν οἱ κεκλημένοι τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας.

 —<sup>16</sup> ὅπου γὰρ διαθήκη, θάνατον ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι τοῦ διαθε-μένου <sup>17</sup> ἡ διαθήκη γὰρ ἐπὶ νεκροῖς βεβαία, ἐπεὶ πῇ ποτε ἰσχύει <sup>Gal. 3. 8.</sup> ὅτε ζῇ ὁ διαθέμενος.—<sup>18</sup> Ὁθεν οὐδ' ἡ πρώτη χωρὶς αἵματος ἐγκεκαίνισται <sup>19</sup> ἡ λαληθείσης γὰρ πάσης ἐντολῆς κατὰ νόμον <sup>Exod. 24.</sup>
 ὑπὸ Μωϋσέως παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, λαβὼν τὸ αἷμα τῶν μόσχων καὶ <sup>Lev. 16. 14.</sup> τράγων, μετὰ ὕδατος καὶ ἐρίου κοκκίνου καὶ ὑσώπου, αὐτό τε τὸ βιβλίον καὶ πάντα τὸν λαὸν ἐβράντισε, <sup>20</sup> λέγων· Τοῦτο <sup>Exod. 24. 8.</sup> τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης, ἧς ἐνετείλατο πρὸς ὑμᾶς ὁ <sup>Matt. 26. 28.</sup>
 Θεός. <sup>21</sup> καὶ τὴν σκηνὴν δὲ καὶ πάντα τὰ σκεύη τῆς λειτουργίας <sup>Exod. 30.</sup>
<sup>Lev. 8. 15, 19.</sup>
<sup>2. 16. 14.</sup>

of the word διαθήκη.' True; but I pause at the use of the epithet 'rhetorical' as applied, so needlessly, to the word of Inspiration. Finally, μεσίτης is here used in a very peculiar sense as applied to a thing, to denote what we express by a person's negotiating a business for one party by transacting it with the other party; which, in the present case, was done by Christ's negotiating with God the work of reconciling man to his offended Creator, and thus effecting by mediation the atonement. This use of the word is, however, so rare, that no ex. of it has hitherto been adduced. I have, however, noted two, one in Jos. Antt. xvi. 2, 2, where it is said of Herod, καὶ τῶν παρ' Ἀγρίππας ἐπιχρητομένων μεσίτης ἦν· καὶ διεπράττετο (read διεπράττετο τὸ) μηδενὸς ἀντιχεῖσθαι τοῖς δομῶν, and another in Diod. Sic. t. iv. 55, μεσ. τῶν ὁμολογίων.—Ὅπως, θανάτου γινομένου, &c. Render, 'so that [his] death having taken place for the expiation of the transgressions committed under the first covenant, they who are called might receive the promise (i. e. the promised blessing) of the eternal inheritance.' Comp. Rom. iii. 25, 26.—οἱ κεκλημένοι must not be joined with τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας, but be referred to τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, τὴν ἐπαγγ. τῆς αἰωνίου· κληρονομίας being taken for κληρ. ἐπαγγελμένην.

<sup>16</sup>. φέρεσθαι] Render: 'be brought in,' = produced, proved. In which sense the word occurs in a passage of Plato cited by Kuinoel.

<sup>18</sup>. Aliud argumentum, quo probatur æquum esse, ut novum testamentum, intercedente morte Christi, ratum fiat, a collatione typi ad veritatem: veritas debet respondere typo. (Hyper.) To evince the necessity of the blood-shedding of Christ, adverted to at ver. 15, θανάτου γιν., the Apostle shows that, from the first, God ratified his covenant by sacrifice.—ὅθεν οὐδ'—αἷμ. ἔγκ. I would render, 'Whence (for 'wherefore') even the first Testament also had dedication not without blood.' I agree with Conyb., that ὅθεν does not refer to the preceding illustration concerning the death of the testator, but to the reasoning from which that was only a momentary (rather temporary) digression. Comp. v. 18 with vv. 12—14.—ἐγκαίνισθαι in this sense, 'to inaugurate by dedication,' occ. in 1 Kings viii. 63, and Deut. xx. 5, where it answers to our landel, as used of a house; and as the land-selling of any building was anciently celebrated by formal rites, which served to ratify the possession of the thing, so the word came to simply mean to ratify, as applied to covenants.

<sup>19</sup>. This verse, then, is explanatory and confirmatory of what was contained in the preceding.—λαληθείσης γὰρ πάσης, &c., 'for when Moses had recited the whole Law (meaning the formula of the covenant) to the people, as had been prescribed [by God], &c. By πάσης ἐντολῆς we must understand all the precepts contained in Exod. xxi.—xxiii., as referred to Exod. xxiv. 3. For κατὰ νόμον, Lachm. and (in his 1st Ed.) Tisch. read τὸν νόμον, from 13 MSS., Theodor., and Theophyl.; though in his 2nd Ed. Tisch. restores νόμον, rightly; for the other reading may be supposed to have been introduced from ver. 22, comp. with supr., viii. 4. But by νόμον is to be understood, not the law itself, but, as Est. explains (after Theophyl.), 'mandatum secundum legem, i. e. mandatum lege comprehensum,' that which regarded the promulgation of the law. See Exod. xx. 18, 19. xxiv. 3.—λαβὼν—ἐβράντισε. Moses, in his account of this transaction, says nothing of the blood of goats, nor of the water and scarlet wool, nor the hyssop, nor of the sprinkling the book of the Law with blood; circumstances supposed to have been derived from ancient tradition, and adverted to by the writer as things well known to his readers. Be that as it may, since similar rites are mentioned in Lev. xiv. 4—6, 49—52, there can be little doubt that they were used on this occasion. The water and hyssop are easily accounted for as necessary, or at least very suitable, to the thing performed; and that it was usual for water to be mixed with the blood, we learn from Lev. xiv. 49—51. Finally, as to the sprinkling of the book, that involves no discrepancy, being only an addition to, though no variation from, the Mosaic account; and as the altar was sprinkled, so might the book, as it lay upon the altar. Mr. Conyb. bids us remember 'that the Old Test. is usually referred to memoria by the writers of the New Test.' However, he grants (all that we can desire) that the advocates of verbal inspiration would be justified in maintaining that these circumstances actually occurred, though they are not mentioned in the books of Moses.

<sup>20</sup>. τὸ αἷμα τ. διαθ.] i. e. the blood by which the covenant was solemnly established and ratified; ἐντάλλασθαι here standing for the preceding συντελεῖν or ἐγκαίνισιν.—Πρὸς ὑμᾶς is put for a dativus commodi. The words here cited do not exactly correspond to those of the Sept., but they well represent the sense.

u Lev. 17. 11. τῷ αἵματι ὁμοίως ἑρράντισε. <sup>22</sup> u Καὶ σχεδὸν ἐν αἵματι πάντα καθαρίζεται κατὰ τὸν νόμον, καὶ χωρὶς αἱματεκχυσίας οὐ γίνεται ἄφεσις. <sup>23</sup> Ἀνάγκη οὖν τὰ μὲν ὑποδείγματα τῶν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς τούτοις καθαρίζεσθαι, αὐτὰ δὲ τὰ ἐπουράνια κρείττοσι <sup>24</sup> οὐ γὰρ εἰς χειροποίητα ἄγια εἰσῆλθεν ὁ Χριστὸς, ἀντίτυπα τῶν ἀληθινῶν, ἀλλ' εἰς αὐτὸν τὸν οὐρανόν, νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι τῷ προσώπῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν. <sup>25</sup> Οὐδ' ἵνα πολλάκις προσφέρῃ ἑαυτὸν, ὡς περ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰσέρχεται εἰς τὰ ἄγια κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἐν αἵματι ἀλλοτρίῳ <sup>26</sup> (* ἐπεὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν

x Rom. 8. 24.
ch. 7. 26.
1 John 2. 2.
y Exod. 80.
10.
Lev. 16. 2.
84.
ver. 7.
x 1 Cor. 10.
11.
Gal. 4. 4.

21. The dedication of the Tabernacle, here adverted to, is described at Exod. xl. 8, sq. and Lev. viii. 10, sq.; where, however, the circumstances in question is not mentioned, and might very well, for brevity sake, be omitted by Moses. It is supposed to have been derived from tradition, and mention of it is made in Josephus and Philo.

22. σχεδόν. This limitation is employed, because some things, i. e. such as could endure fire, were purified by fire, and others which could not, by water. See Lev. xvi. 28. Numb. xxxi. 23.—Χωρὶς αἵμ., &c. Answering to this is what is said by Josephus, Philo, and the Rabbins, that without blood (typical of the remission of sins by the Messiah) no one was absolved from his sins or defilements. On the reasons, see Braun, Owen, Dindorf, Kuin., and the 9th Book of Bp. Warburton's Div. Leg. The word αἱματεκχυσία does not occur elsewhere; yet we need not suppose it to be, as the Commentators say, coined by the writer. It is sufficient to consider it as one among the very numerous words of the Hellenistic, Alexandrian, and common dialect, not preserved in the remains of antiquity. The Apostle now, reverting to what was said at ver. 21, again treats on the main point,—the atonement,—subjoining a conclusion to be drawn from the whole of the preceding.

23. ἀνάγκη οὖν τὰ ὑποδείγματα, &c.] The full sense is, 'Hence it was necessary that the shadow of heavenly things [the Tabernacle] should be purified, [meaning consecrated to sacred uses] with such rites as these [of bulls and goats], but that Heaven itself should be purified (i. e. an approach to it be made by purification) by a more effectual sacrifice,' even the blood of Christ. In the expression καθαρίζεσθαι there is, Rosenm. observes, 'a metonymy, such as we often find, when things partly similar, partly dissimilar, are compared; for as by the legal purification an entrance was afforded to the sanctuary, so, by taking the effect as standing for the cause, Heaven is said καθαρίζεσθαι, instead of saying that an entrance by them is given to that heaven.'

24. Having by these two reasons evinced that the new testament could not have been ratified, except by Christ's dying, the Apostle now proceeds, as he had before begun, to fully show by several arguments the superior efficacy and excellence of the sacrifice of Christ, as compared with the legal sacrifices. (Hyper.) Here, then, the heavenly priesthood of Christ, which had been treated of previously to the parenthetical passage on the necessity of his dying, is here resumed and further illustrated.—οὐ γὰρ εἰς χειροποίητα ἄγια, &c., meaning that Christ did not enter into the earthly Holy of holies, which was only an image of the heavenly, but into Heaven itself. On these two terms χειροτ. and ἄγια, see supr., vv. 11 and 2.—ἀντίτυπα here is nearly synonym. with ὑπόδειγμα before explained, denoting 'the resemblance' relative to Christ both in his mediatorial high-priestly capacity, and as Lord in heaven.—νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι, &c. 'Ἐμφανισθῆναι is a forensic term, signif. 'to present oneself' before a tribunal, or court, either as a plaintiff, or advocate.' Here, from the context, the latter must be the sense intended.

25. The writer now contrasts the offering of Christ with his own blood, with the entrance of the priest into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another,—and accordingly declares Christ to have appeared before God, and entered into heaven, not in order to make a frequent offering of himself, i. e. not, after having entered into heaven, to again go forth from thence, and descend on earth, and there again be killed as a victim, and rising again, make repeated offerings of himself in heaven to God. Herein, then, he shows both the dissimilarity of Christ to the High Priest, and his superiority to him: 1. inasmuch as the High Priest entered into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another,—namely, of the victims, so that the High Priest and the victim were distinct; Christ, by his own blood; 2. that the High Priest, after having entered the Sanctuary, again went forth from it, and repeated this ingress and egress yearly, so as to enter several times, while Christ entered once only. (Limborch.) Here, then, as Hyper. observes, we have an argumentum à circumstantiis, that Christ only offered his sacrifice once, and that once fully sufficed for the expiation of sin.—οὐδ' ἵνα, &c. Οὐδὲ here corresponds to οὐ γὰρ at ver. 24, and ἀνάγκη must be repeated; the sense being, 'neither was it necessary that he should present himself often, as the High Priest enters the temple every year with another's blood.'—ἑαυτὸν for τὸ ἴδιον αἷμα, ix. 12.

26. ἐν ἑαυτῷ—κόσμου] In this clause (which Hyper. justly considers as parenthetical) we have a reductio ad absurdum. 'It is shown (says Calv.) what an absurdity would follow, if this one sacrifice of Christ should be not sufficient; for thus he must needs (ἴδειν) have died often, death being inseparable from sacrifice. It follows, then, that the virtue of this one sacrifice is eternal, and extends to all ages.' By ἐν συντάξει τῶν αἰώνων is meant 'towards the close of the Messianic dispensation.' See note on 1 Cor. x. 11. Schoettgen supposes the term συντάξις πολλάκις παθεῖν ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου) ὧν δὲ ἅπαξ, ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ πεφανέρωται. <sup>27</sup> α Καὶ καθ' ὅσον ἀπόκειται τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἅπαξ ἀποθανεῖν, μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο κρίσις· <sup>28</sup> β οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς, ἅπαξ προσερχθεὶς εἰς τὸ πολλῶν ἀνευρεῖν ἁμαρτίας, a 2 Esd. 14.

35.
Eccles. 12.
14.
b Matt. 20.
26. & 28. 28.
Rom. 6. 9.
10.
1 Pet. 2. 18.
1 John 2. 2.

to be here used, rather than τίλος, by way of marking the junction of the two τίλη or periods, by the close of the first running into the commencement of the second; so that the period of Christ's coming was 'in confusio Vet. et Nov. Test., ubi due extremitates se invicem contingebant.' Accordingly it is well observed by Bengel that 'the sacrifice of Christ divides the whole age or duration of the world into two parts, and extends its virtue backward and forward, from this middle point wherein they meet, to abolish both the guilt and the power of sin.'—πεφανέρωται, 'hath been made manifest,' or 'hath manifested'—a reflex. sense of Perf. Pass., occurring also in Col. iii. 4. 1 Tim. iii. 16. 1 Pet. i. 20. v. 4, and sometimes in the Class. writers, as Hdor. vi. 22. D. Hal. x. 87.—εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας. This may mean (as many eminent Expositors explain) for the expiation of sin, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν, as it is said supra, ver. 22, εἰς ἀπολ. τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, 'to make an end of them by obtaining their pardon and the abolition of the penalty.' But that would have required some such term as ἀνευρεῖν ἁμαρτίας at ver. 28. Yet of this proof is required. The nature of the metaphor, and the logic of the context, point at a putting down, making away with, of some previous authority and rule. And as Christ came to save from the power, no less than the penalty, of sin, it would seem that what St. Paul here means is, 'the dominion of sin that is to be abolished,' according to the promise in Rom. vi. 14. This view I find supported by the authority of Hyper., Bulling., Est., and Hamm.; also by Epiphani. Heres. p. 343, as appears from the words εἰς κατάκρυσιν ἁμαρτίας (written with an evident view to Rom. viii. 5) καὶ ἀθέτησιν τοῦ θανάτου.

27. It is now shown, by a new argument, derived à simili, that Christ ought once only to offer himself,—namely, because his sacrifice and death were one and the same. And here it is not meant to be affirmed that all men must die (that being undoubted), but only that it is appointed for them once to die, and that after death nothing shall remain but judgment. (Dindorf.)—ἀπόκειται, 'it is laid up,' or reserved, by the appointment of God, as in the case of a sentence passed on a criminal,—of which the execution is certain, though the period not defined;—a peculiar use of ἀπόκ. (to denote 'absolute certainty'), but occ. elsewh. in D. Hal. v. 8, τοῖς κακούργοις ἀπ. παθῆν.—μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο κρίσις. Render: 'but after that judgment,' 'to be called to judgment,' meaning, 'to meet the award at the day of judgment,'—a day which, as Sir Thomas Browne, Rel. Med., p. 89, finely observes, 'must make good that great attribute of God, his justice,—which must reconcile those unanswerable doubts that torment the wisest understandings, and restore those seeming inequalities and respective distractions which exist in this world, to an equality, and reconcile justice in the next.—

ἅπαξ, 'once for all' (see my Lex.) Thucyd. i. 139, ἰδοὺς ἅπαξ περὶ πάντων ἀποκρίνασθαι.

28. οὕτω καὶ, &c.] Here we have the application; 'as it is appointed unto men,' &c., 'so Christ, &c.'; in which is implied the reason of the above,—namely, the fact that the legal sacrifice could not atone for sin. At προσσευχθεῖς (which is a sacrificial term) supply εἰς θυσίαν. In εἰς τὸ πολλῶν ἀνευρεῖν ἁμαρτίας we have another strong metaphor, which, from its connexion with the cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, the Atonement, deserves especial attention. The phrase ἀνευ. δμ. occ. also at 1 Pet. ii. 24; and in both passages the sacred writers had in mind Isa. liii. 11, 12, and hence the sense of the phrase must be, in either case, (1) 'to bear the sins of another by suffering in his stead the punishment due to those sins.' (2) 'To bear them off, or away, remove them by expiation;' sin being viewed figuratively as a burden too heavy for the sinner to bear; perhaps with allusion to Ps. xxxviii. 4. The term πολλῶν is generally explained by the Arminian Expositors, 'even as many as were born into the world;' by Calvinistic ones, 'as many as truly believe in Christ.' The former sense cannot be admitted, as being a manifest gloss. The difficulty however is ably met by Bp. Middl. as follows: 'We are told that of πολλοί is often equivalent to πάντες. It is not, however, quite certain that the Apostle here meant to express πάντων: the verse concludes with the mention of those "who wait for him," i. e. who wait for Christ's second coming, in humble hope of receiving their reward; and these manifestly are not the whole human race. So also supra, if. 10, it is said that Christ bringeth many sons, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς, unto glory. See also Matt. xx. 28. xxvi. 28. Mark x. 45. The reason why, in some places, Christ is said to give himself a ransom for all, and in others only for many, seems to be, that when all are mentioned, it is meant that to all he has offered the terms of salvation; and where many are spoken of, it is considered that by all the terms will not be accepted; there is no ground therefore for the Calvinistic interpretation of this and similar texts.' But, as observes Dr. Peile, 'Calvin's own interpretation of this text is no more Calvinistic than the Bishop's.' See Calvin's note, as cited by Dr. Peile. I would add, that what Dr. Peile has said of this note of Calvin's is also true of most, if not all of the 'similar texts' mentioned by the Bishop,—χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὁφθῆναι. By ἁμαρτ. should not be understood, with some, a sin-offering. Considering the correspondence of these words with εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ πεφανέρωται at ver. 26, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας must mean 'without having occasion to bear our sins [in order to atonement],' inasmuch as being himself καχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, supra vii. 26.—εἰς σωτηρίαν may be referred to ἀπεσθαιχομένους; but better ἐκ δευτέρου χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὀφθήσεται τοῖς αὐτὸν ἀπεκδεχομένοις εἰς σωτηρίαν.

a Col. 2. 17.
ch. 8. 5.
§ 9. 9.

X. 1 * Σκιάν γὰρ ἔχων ὁ νόμος τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων, κατ' ἐναντιὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις ὡς προσφέρουσιν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, οὐδέποτε δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους τελειῶσαι <sup>2</sup> ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐπαύσαντο προσφερόμεναι, διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν ἔτι συνειδήσιν ἁμαρτιῶν τοὺς λατὸ ὀφθήσεται, whence, as Kuin. observes, will arise a weightier and more apposite sentiment; that 'He will not then appear as a placular victim to expiate sin, but, as the Judge of quick and dead, to bestow eternal felicity on his faithful followers.'

X. As the Hebrews would be very backward in admitting the foregoing conclusion concerning the inefficacy of the Legal expiations, the Apostle proceeds to further argue with them therein. (Scott.) The scope of vv. 1—18 is to evince the utter inefficacy of the Jewish sacrifices, as contrasted with the perfect expiatory sacrifice made by our great High Priest. This subject the Apostle had glanced at before; vii. 11—19. viii. 7—10. ix. 8, 10, 13, 14; and he now enlarges on it, beginning with declaring, that the Levitical sacrifices could not be a perfect satisfaction for sin (v. 1); for if they had been so, once offering them would have been sufficient (v. 2). But the continual repetition of them shows, that sin remained unpardoned, notwithstanding the previous sacrifices offered for it (v. 3); and, from their very nature it is impossible that they should procure the pardon of sin (v. 4). This is also asserted in Pa. xl., which is prophetic of the Messiah (vv. 5—7); and from which it is evident, that God designed to abolish his former dispensation concerning the Levitical sacrifices, and to establish another and better one (vv. 8, 9), which offers a perfectly efficacious sacrifice through the offering of the body of Jesus once for all (vv. 10—14); and which is also testified by the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures (vv. 15—18).

1. σκιάν γὰρ ἔχων, &c.] meaning, 'that Christ effectually by one sacrifice expiated the sins of many (see ix. 28, and x. 10); for the law, having [only] a faint adumbration or outline of the blessings in future (see ix. 11), and not the full form or image of the matters in question;—the actual realities, as opposed to the σκιά, 'mere shadows,' as opposed to solid substances. Σκιά signifies an outline, or sketch, as opposed to the filled-up figure of any thing, so as to constitute a substantial form. So in Philo, p. 218, we have ἐκείνους γὰρ τὰς σκιάς πλάττει, ὥσπερ οἱ ζωγραφούντες. On the other hand, εἰκὼν (to which it is here opposed) denotes the full and complete effigies of the thing. This and other passages (see v. 12, and ix. 9—14) 'abundantly prove' (as observes Abp. Magee) that the sacrifice of Christ was not, as the Socinians aver, a figurative sacrifice, founded only in allusion to the sacrifices of the Law, but a real and proper, a true and effective sacrifice, while those of the Law were only faint representations intended for its introduction.—κατ' ἐναντιὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις, &c. There is here a transposition, for ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις ὡς προσφέρουσιν κατ' ἐν-αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, &c. The words ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις belong to the following τελειῶσαι, which denotes to 'effect a complete purification,' comp. consummare. See ix. 9, and vii. 11.

2. ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν, &c.] Here we have a proof of the assertion at v. 1. Instead of the τ. rec. ἐπεὶ ἂν, all the uncials, and many cursive MSS. (to which I add Lamb. 1182, 1183, 1185, and 1196, and all the Mus. copies), some Fathers and Versions, and almost all the early Editions except the Ed. Princ., have ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν with a mark of interrogation at the end of the verse; which reading has been adopted by Bengel, Griesb., Matth., Tittman, Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., whom I have followed, since the word οὐκ might more easily be omitted by accident, than intentionally inserted. And though it may be supposed (which, however, I doubt) that the sense is the same according to either reading, yet with the οὐκ and a mark of interrogation, it has far more of spirit and animation, and, in many respects, more satisfactory (see Scott); though, from its greater obscurity and difficulty, it was more liable to alteration. It may, however, be doubted whether the sense be really the same either way. 'Ἐπεὶ has here, as at ix. 26, the sense 'since otherwise,' by an ellipsis of ἄλλως. Render: 'for otherwise (i. e. if the sacrifices could have perfectly expiated sin) would they not have ceased to be offered [as no longer necessary]?' That ἐπεὶ may thus commence an interrogative as well as declarative sentence, is certain from Rom. iii. 6, and Aristoph. Nub. 689. This use I have observed to occur espec. in sentences where γὰρ or some equiv. Particle occurs, and also when accompanied with Verbs in the Imperfect, or Aorist Indicative, thus assuming the sense of the same tenses in the Subjunctive. So in Thucyd. i. 11, we have τὸ γὰρ ἔνμα οὐκ ἂν ἰταχίσαντο, and i. 68, οὐ γὰρ ἂν Κίρκυραν βίη ἡμῶν εἶχον, and elsewh. also in the New Test. 1 Cor. xiv. 16. xv. 29, and sometimes in the Sept., as Job xxxv. 7.—διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν ἔτι συνειδήσιν, &c., meaning, 'because the worshippers, being, once for all, made clean from sin, would have been no longer troubled in their consciences with the remembrance of sins, those being thus expiated.' The term συνειδήσιν here, as also supra, ix. 14, denotes not simply 'the conscience' as a faculty of the soul, but rather 'the mind,' meaning 'the conscious power of man,' 'the knowledge of one's own thoughts and actions.' Hence it may often be best rendered by consciousness (e. g. in Philo, frag., δ τοῦ φαύλου συνειδήσιν, and Diod. Sic. i. iii. 189, διὰ τὴν συνειδήσιν τοῦ μύθου εἰς μάστιγιν περιέρχεται), there being here a mixed idea of conscience and consciousness, the latter, as the result of the former, or the one mutually acting and reacting on the other.

τρεύοντας, ἀπαξ κεκαθαρμένους; <sup>3</sup> ἀλλ' ἐν αὐταῖς ἀνάμνησις <sup>b</sup> Micah 6.
 ἁμαρτιῶν κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν <sup>4</sup> <sup>b</sup> ἀδύνατον γὰρ αἷμα ταύρων καὶ <sup>c</sup> Ps. 40. 7.
 τράγων ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας. <sup>5</sup> <sup>d</sup> Διὸ εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον <sup>e</sup> 50. 8, &c.
<sup>f</sup> Isa. 1. 11.
<sup>g</sup> Jer. 6. 20.
<sup>h</sup> Amos 5. 21, 22.

3. ἀλλά] The word has here (as at Acts xix. 2) the sense imo vero. The force of the argument here urged mainly turns on the expression ἀνάμνησις, and the full sense is well represented by Boehme and Kuin., who explain, 'Nay, so far are they, by these continued sacrifices, from being freed from the consciousness of unexpiated sin, that there is [rather] therein (or only) a commemoration of the sins of the people.'—ἀνάμνησις ἁμαρτιῶν, 'a commemoration of sins,' viz. by a ceremonial commemoration of sins intended to preserve them in remembrance, exactly as the annual offering of the paschal lamb was commemorative of the first paschal lamb.

4. Here we have another argument to prove the insufficiency of legal sacrifices to take away sin, derived from the nature of the things offered up; which, it is obvious, bear no proportion, either to God, who was to be propitiated, or to man, for whom they were offered, or to sin, which they should expiate. (Hyper.)—ἀδύνατον γὰρ, &c. The γὰρ is confirmatory of the preceding proposition; it being meant, that 'the thing aimed at is impossible, because such sacrifices are of no value in the sight of God;' cannot atone for sin (ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας), by procuring its pardon, or arrest its punishment. 'The Apostle's argument (observes Thomas Scott) is, that no sacrifice could really atone for sin, or bring sinners into a state of acceptance with God unto eternal life, which did not make full satisfaction to his offended justice, and render it honourable to him to remit the punishment of it. But the legal sacrifices were so far from being thus efficacious, that they did not suffice for the individuals, or the generation of Israel, who presented them, even in respect of a permanent exemption from temporal judgments; for the most solemn of them, at the day of atonement, was rather an annual remembrance of their sins, than a removal of the guilt of them; so that they had only a respect to the year which was past, and the same remembrance. As Divine appointments, such sacrifices might be a suitable acknowledgment of guilt, and profession of repentance, and reliance on the mercy of God, on account of which he might bear with the Israelites, and give them temporal benefits; and they aptly typified the sacrifice of Christ; but they could not possibly render pardoning mercy, in its most plenteous exercise, consistent with the infinite justice and holiness of God; without which nothing could take away sin, according to the Apostle's reasoning in this place.' 'Micah, too, had taught the same doctrine, vi. 7, and even insinuated that the heathens, being sensible of the impossibility of making atonement for sins by shedding the blood of beasts, had had recourse to human sacrifices, under the notion that these would be more meritorious.' (Mackn.)

5. To prove his doctrine in the most unanswerable manner, the Apostle shows that, however opposed to Jewish prejudices, it is no other than what is recognized in their own Scriptures; adducing, and arguing from, Ps. xl. 6—9, which passage showed that Christ's coming was the necessary consequence of the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and of the Almighty's purpose of saving sinners.—διὸ εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον λέγει, &c., meaning, 'Wherefore (i. e. in proof of this) in a Psalm which is prophetic of the coming of the Messiah, He is represented by David as saying, on his coming into the world,' &c. The quotation is from the Sept., with only the change of γήρας into εὐδόκῆσας; and at ver. 7 by a shortening of the words of the Sept. The discrepancy is not so great as it would appear from the writers on the Quotations, who subjoin καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου, though the Apostle plainly did not intend to take them. The Sept. Version itself is only a free translation of the Hebrew, and its true sense will better appear when it is pointed (as it ought to be) thus: 'Ἰδοὺ, ἦκα' (ἐν κεφαλίδι—μῶν) τοῦ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου, ὃ θέλες μου, ἡβουλήθην, καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου. In order to properly understand the last clause, it should be observed, that the Septuagint Translators, erroneously indeed, took the γῆρας as an Accusative, not a Nomin. The most remarkable circumstance connected with the passage in question is, that in the words σῶμα δὲ κατηργήσω the Sept. and the Apostle alike differ widely from the Hebrew, which is well rendered, 'mine ears hast thou opened.' To remove this discrepancy various methods have been proposed, either by altering the Hebrew to correspond to the Greek, or the Greek to the Hebrew. None of these, however, can be adopted, since the present reading in the Hebrew is confirmed by all the MSS. and Versions; and in the Greek by all the MSS. both of the Sept. and the Apostle. More attention is due to the methods proposed of reconciling the sense of the Hebrew with the Greek, and making them, though different in words, coincide in meaning; of which the most probable is that of Joseph Mede (Works, p. 897), who translates the Greek thus: 'Thou hast fitted my body [to be thy servant],' namely, in such a manner as servants' bodies usually are; with allusion to the custom among the Jews of boring the ears of perpetual servants. All these methods, however, are, more or less, harsh. Again, though the words in the Hebrew may, with a reference to Isaiah l. 5, be explained of obedience; yet to bring that sense to any coincidence with what is contained in the Sept. and the New Test., σῶμα κατηργήσω μοι, is impracticable. Indeed, the best Hebraists are now agreed that the meaning of the Hebrew words יָרַח אָזְנוֹתַי is, 'me docuisti;' as in Isaiah l. 5, and 1 Sam. xx. 2, the phrase יָרַח אָזְנוֹתַי signifies that the Messiah has opened out some profound truth. Finally, for σῶμα here we have the strongest evidence external and even internal; such being required by the words εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον just before. And at ver. 10, in the words διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Ἰ. Χρ., there is an evident reference to the σῶμα κατηργήσω μοι at ver. 5, which must, together with the εἰσερχ. εἰς τὸν κόσμον before, be understood of λέγειν Θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν οὐκ ἠθέλησας, σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι. <sup>6</sup> ὁλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ εὐδόκησας. <sup>7</sup> τότε εἶπον Ἰδοῦ, ἤκω (ἐν κεφαλίδι βιβλίου γέγραπται περὶ ἐμοῦ) τοῦ ποιῆσαι, ὁ Θεὸς, τὸ θέλημά σου. <sup>8</sup> Ἀνώτερον λέγων Ὅτι θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν καὶ ὁλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ ἠθέλησας, οὐδὲ εὐδόκησας (αἵτινες κατὰ τὸν νόμον προσφέρονται) <sup>9</sup> τότε εἶρηκεν Ἰδοῦ, ἤκω τοῦ ποιῆσαι, [ὁ Θεὸς,] τὸ θέλημά σου ἀναιρεῖ τὸ πρῶτον ἵνα τὸ δεύτερον στηθῇ. <sup>10</sup> Ἐν ᾧ θελήματι ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμέν [οἱ] διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐφάπαξ. <sup>11</sup> Καὶ

d ch. 9. 12.
ε. 12. 12.

the incarnation of the Redeemer, with allusion also to the expiation he made with that body offered up as a sacrifice for the sins of the world; see ii. 14. ix. 25. x. 10. It may be urged, indeed, that this is not the sense of the Psalmist. Granted; but the Apostle is amenable to no blame; for, as Stuart shows, 'the circumstance adverted to in σῶμα κατηρτ. μοι is not primary or essential, but only incidental to the argument he is carrying on.' And as the writer had occasion to quote the long passage in which it occurs for another purpose, and was obliged to quote it from the Septuag., as being alone understood by his readers in general, the words which he there found, he was fully justified in retaining; especially as they did not impede, but rather promote, the purpose he had in view; namely, by turning the minds of his readers to CHRIST, who, in his incarnation, became the true expiatory sacrifice, of which the sacrifices in the Law were but types and symbols.

7. τότε] 'then.' In the Hebr., na. The words, however, have so perplexed some Critics that they choose to regard each of them as redundant; but that is cutting the knot. It is better to suppose some rather unusual, yet suitable, sense of na and tote; and we might (with Carpzov, Ernesti, Morus, and Gesenius) render, 'therefore.' Yet no sufficient reason exists to deviate from the usual sense, of time; this being rather, as Stuart suggests, to be understood of the time referred to in the preceding context of Ps. xl., wherein are related the wonderful works of God. By the expression κεφαλίδι βιβλίου is meant the Pentateuch, and such other parts of the Scriptures of the Old Test. as were then in being. Κεφαλ., 'roll.' So called with reference to the wooden rollers about which the sheets of parchment were rolled, and which had at one end a κεφαλis, or sort of carved head, which gave name to the whole.

8. On the passage of the Psalm the Apostle now offers some remarks, showing, from the words of the Messiah, briefly repeated, that the Levitical sacrifices, from their inefficacy to obtain the full pardon of sins, are abrogated, and the sacrifice of Christ substituted in their place.

9. ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου] In other words, by offering myself on the cross, according to thy command, John xiv. 31. The words ὁ Θεός are absent from several ancient MSS. and some Vers. and Fathers, and have been cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but they are well defended by Matthæi and Valcknaer. I find them in all the Lamb. and Mus. copies.—ἀναιρεῖ τὸ πρῶτον. 'He abolishes,' or 'abrogates,' the first. The term av, is often used of the abrogation, or annulling, of a law. These words contain a conclusion from the foregoing sentence. By τὸ πρῶτον we are to understand the Levitical sacrifices; and by τὸ δεύτερον the will of God as evinced in the sacrifice of the body of Christ.

10. The Apostle now proceeds to explain what is meant, in this case, by doing the will of God, and what is the efficacy of that obedience.—ἐν ᾧ θελ. 'In conformity with which will' [of God], whereby he was pleased that Christ should be a victim, and which Christ came to fulfil; see vv. 7, 9.—ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμέν, 'we are atoned for, purified, and made holy,' expiation being made for us, and the pardon of our sins obtained; compare vv. 4, 11. ii. 11.—ἐφάπαξ must be referred, not (as it is by some) to ἡγιασμ., but to προσφ.; compare ver. 14, and supra ix. 26, 28. The full sense is, 'once for all:' a very significant term. 'The Apostle (says Stuart) meets the objection as to dissimilarity in the act of expiation, by showing that being once slain as an expiatory offering, was quite sufficient to satisfy all the demands of the case.'

11—18. The Apostle had, in the term ἐφάπαξ, again adverted to a point on which his Hebrew readers might think there was a superiority in the Jewish dispensation; namely, that the expiation made by the High Priest was made every year, that of Christ only once. Here he again encounters the objection; showing that it was made once for all, by an act neither needing nor admitting of repetition,—on which our atonement may safely be rested, since it will be for ever availing, and not be temporary like the sacrifices of the Old Dispensation. And here he applies generally to the sacrifices offered daily by the priests the argument by which he had proved the inefficacy of the annual sacrifices of the High Priest in the Holy of holies;—namely, that the very repetition of such sacrifices evinced their inefficacy, viz. to obtain permanent pardon and complete expiation. Whereas, though Christ offered but one sacrifice for the sins of the world, yet that one was so effectual, as not to need being repeated; and, as a proof of which completion, he shows that he was seated at the right hand of God as Lord of the universe. At ver. 14 he affirms that the repetition need not be made,

πᾶς μὲν ἱερεὺς ἔσθηκε καθ' ἡμέραν λειτουργῶν, καὶ τὰς αὐτὰς
πολλάκις προσφέρων θυσίας, αἵτινες οὐδέποτε δύνανται περιελθεῖν ἁμαρτίας· <sup>12</sup> αὐτὸς δὲ, μίαν ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν προσενέγκας <sup>e Col. 1. 1.
ch. 1. 8, 13.</sup>
θυσίαν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, <sup>f Ps. 110. 1.
Acta 2. 26.
1 Cor. 15. 25.</sup> τὸ λοιπὸν ἐκδεχόμενος ἕως τεθῶσιν οἱ ἐχθροὶ αὐτοῦ ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ. <sup>14</sup> μᾶ γὰρ προσφορᾷ τετελειώκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές τοὺς ἁγιαζομένους. <sup>15</sup> Μαρτυρεῖ δὲ ἡμῖν καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον μετὰ γὰρ τὸ προειρηκέναι· <sup>16</sup> Ἡ αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσεται πρὸς αὐτοὺς μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει Κύριος, διδούς νόμους μου ἐπὶ καρδίας

since it has already fully produced the effect, the perfect expiation of those who have an interest in that sacrifice by faith and repentance. Then it is said, that to this efficacy the Holy Spirit has testified, in the before-mentioned account of the Covenant of which Jesus Christ is the mediator; namely, that under the new Covenant, sin should be no more remembered: consequently, since pardon is obtained, no more offering for sin is necessary, 17, 18.

11. πᾶς μὲν ἱερεὺς] meaning, in a generic sense, 'the priests generally in their course,' including the High Priest. It is true that, for ἱερεὺς, Lachm., and (in his 1st Ed.) Tisch., edit ἀρχιερεὺς, from not a few MSS., though, in his 2nd Edit., he has restored ἱερεὺς; very properly; since external authority is in its favour, and also internal evidence, considering that ἱερ. was more likely to be altered into ἀρχ. than the reverse. The Emendator, it seems, thought the context called for ἀρχ., forgetting that the writer of this Epistle uses ἱερ. for ἀρχ. supr., vii. 21 and 23. viii. 4, twice, as does also St. Luke, Acts v. 24, and so it occurs in the Sept. In ἔσθηκε, to which is opposed at ver. 12 ἐκάθισεν, there is an allusion to the rule which required the Priests to stand while in the Temple; involving a tacit contrast between the humble posture of those ministers standing, and that of Jesus, who, in quality of Lord, sits in the presence of God,—and that at his right hand, and σύμβουλος. See Matt. xxvi. 55.

12. For αὐτὸς, Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. (Ed. 1.) read οὗτος, from MSS. A, C, D, E, and 6 cursives; but in his 2nd Ed. Tisch. restores αὐτὸς. The same change, and change back again, he adopts at Acts x. 42, which may be right there; though, whether such be the case here, I doubt. At any rate, internal evidence is equally balanced. Οὗτος may have been a Critical alteration to a purer Greek term; though αὐτὸς might here be used rather than οὗτος, honoris causa, as Hom. II. viii. 4, αὐτὸς δὲ (Jupiter) σφ' ἀγόρευε, θεοὶ δ' ὑπὸ πάντας ἀκούουσιν, though Ionic and Poetic Greek would not suit Paul's style; and when we consider that there is more of emphasis (where it is called for by the antithesis) in οὗτος, also that the writer uses οὗτος elsewhere at iii. 3; vii. 1 and 4, since v. 1., where there is no antithesis, one can scarcely doubt that οὗτος is the true reading.—εἰς τὸ διηνεκές is construed by Valckn., Dind., Boehme, and Stuart with θυσίας; but by Expositors generally with ἐκάθισεν, which is more agreeable to the context.

13. ἐκδεχ. 'awaiting.' See i. 13. On the next words see supra ii. 8. Matt. ii. 44. Acts ii. 35. 1 Cor. xv. 27, 28.

14. τετελειώκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές. Render: 'For by (or at) one offering [that of himself, ver. 9] hath he perfectly expiated those that are sanctified.' By the term τετελειώκεν (on which see supra ix. 9. x. 1, and notes) is denoted that provision which was made, by the sacrifice of Christ, for perfect reconciliation and justification, unto eternal life; so importing (to use the words of Bp. Beveridge) that 'our High Priest, by the one oblation of himself, once offered, was a complete propitiation, or has made sufficient satisfaction for the sins of the whole world; so that we need no other sacrifice besides that, whereby we obtain the remission of our sins, in the reconciliation made for us.' By the expression τοὺς ἁγιαζομένους are denoted not merely (as Hammond and Wetst. explain) obedient Christians, i. e. such as obey the Gospel, and so become entitled to the benefits of Christ's death; but those who are sanctified by faith springing from regeneration, and evidenced by the sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience. See Hyper., Melancth., Calv., and Est.

15, 16. Here Beza, De Dieu, and Storr, rightly connect μετὰ γὰρ τὸ προειρηκέναι with λέγει Κύριος a little after. For προειρηκέναι, Lachm., and (in his 1st Ed.) Tisch., edit εἰρηκ., from four uncial and several cursive MSS., with the Vulg. and some later Versions, though in his 2nd Edit. he restores προειρ., very properly; for this does not purport to be a regular quotation, and προειρ. is here employed, as better suiting the purpose of a statement of the Holy Spirit's witnessing. Render: 'for after having first spoken (i. e. uttered). This is the covenant, &c., the Lord [then] saith.' The pro was removed by those Critics who did not perceive the construction here, which is indeed harsh. As respects the difference between the Sept. and Paul, at διδόν, &c., in which the latter materially differs from the former, confirmed by the Hebrew,—rather than suppose, with Kuin, and other Critics, that this difference arose from lapses of memory on the part of the Apostle, I prefer to attribute this step either to the earliest scribes; who, it seems, passed over the dōσω after διδόν, or to some Critics, whose purpose was to remove what seemed a pleonasm. For τῶν διανοιών, Lachm. and Tisch. read τὴν διάνοιαν, from eight MSS.; though in his 2nd Edit. he restores τῶν διανοιών; very properly; for τὴν διάνοιαν is at variance both with the Sept. and the Hebrew.

αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν διανοιῶν αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω αὐτούς· <sup>17</sup> καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ ἔτι. <sup>18</sup> Ὅπου δὲ ἄφεςις τούτων, οὐκ ἔτι προσφορά περὶ ἁμαρτίας.

h John 10. 9.
i 14. 6.
Rom. 8. 2.
Eph. 2. 14.
15. 2. 12.
ch. 9. 8. 12.
i ch. 4. 14.
16.
k Ps. 61. 6.
Ezek. 50. 25.
James 1. 16.
1 John 8. 21.
Eph. 4. 13.
1 Cor. 1. 9.
1 Thess. 5.
24.
ch. 4. 14.

<sup>19</sup> Ἐχοντες οὖν, ἀδελφοί, παρρησίαν εἰς τὴν εἰσοδὸν τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ αἵματι Ἰησοῦ, <sup>20</sup> ἣν ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν, ὁδὸν πρόσφατον καὶ ζῶσαν, διὰ τοῦ καταπετάσματος, τούτέστι τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ· <sup>21</sup> καὶ ἱερέα μέγαν ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ· <sup>22</sup> προσερχώμεθα μετὰ ἀληθινῆς καρδίας ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, ἐρραντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς, <sup>23</sup> καὶ λελου-

17. For μνησθῶ Lachm. and Tisch. read μνησθήσομαι, from four MSS. But this is forbidden by supra viii. 12, where, in quoting the same passage, the Apostle wrote μνησθῶ (for so we have it in all the MSS. but one, and that one of inferior note),—namely, as is read in the Sept., and the same idiom οὐ μὴ μνησθ. (for Fut. μνησθ.) in Ezek. xlviii. 24. Isa. xlv. 25. Ezek. xxiii. 27, et al. Moreover, οὐ μὴ foll. by the Subjunct. frequently occurs in the writers of the N. T., but followed by Fut. Ind. very rarely, and scarcely once without the Subjunct. in some MSS. We cannot suppose that the Apostle would adduce the passage again with an alteration of reading.

18. ὅπου δὲ ἄφεςις, &c.] The Apostle thus sums up the reason why, under the Gospel dispensation, absolute and final pardon is obtained.

19. Here ends the doctrinal part of the Epistle, the remainder being occupied with admonitory, hortatory, and consolatory matter. And first the Apostle proceeds to the practical application of the foregoing doctrines, exhorting his Hebrew readers to constancy in their Christian profession, warning them against apostasy, and pointing to its awful consequences; intermingling, however, encouragement and promises, to excite them to strive for the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus, by enduring unto the end. The general sense of vv. 19—25 is well expressed by Hamm. and Whitby as follows: 'Such being the sum of my argument, viz. that as the High Priest entered into the Holy of holies with the blood of a sin-offering, by passing through the veil,—so Christians enter into heaven by virtue of the atoning blood of Christ; let us then cherish an assured confidence in the faithful promises of God, and persevere steadily in a Christian course, receiving mutual encouragement from each other from the near approach of that day,' &c., meaning the advent of Christ to judgment.—παρρησίαν εἰς τὴν εἰσοδὸν, lit. 'a confidence as to access'; meaning, a confidence (or confident trust) that we shall enter. In τῶν ἁγίων we have a Genit. for an Accus. with εἰς. The expression is intended to denote the true Holy of holies,—heaven.

20. ζῶσαν] for εἰς ζῶην ἀγούσαν, 'which leadeth to salvation.'—ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν, 'bath dedicated it to us,' i. e. unto our use; lit., 'has first opened it to us.' So Chrys. explains, 'first formed it, and himself first entered upon it.' In this sense the term occurs at Deut. xx. 5. 1 Kings viii. 63, and 2 Chron. vii. 5, answering to the Hebr. קָרַן. As, then, to handse any house is to open it for the first time for use (see Deut. xx. 5); so, 'to handse any road,' is to open it for access, and dedicate it to use. See note supra ix. 18.—διὰ τοῦ καταπετάσματος. Supply ἀγούσαν. By this obscure mode of expression (on which see note at vi. 19) is meant Christ's body, which is, by a figure similar to that at John x. 7, and xiv. 6, compared to the veil of the Temple. The meaning is (as Conyb. explains), that 'the flesh (or manhood) of Christ was a veil which hid his true nature; this veil he rent, when he gave up his body to death; and through his incarnation, thus revealed under its true aspect, we must pass, if we would enter into the presence of God.'

21. ἐπὶ τ. οἴκον τοῦ Θεοῦ] 'having a great High Priest set over the house of God;' meaning, God's spiritual house, or family, on earth; comp. 1 Tim. iii. 15; and so Calv., Hyper., and Est.

22. προσερχώμεθα] 'let us approach in prayer.' Comp. iv. 16. vii. 19.—ἀληθ. καρδίας is best explained 'a faithful and true disposition of heart,'—making a heart-concern of the thing. Comp. Isa. xxxviii. 3, ἐπορεύθην ἐνώπιόν σου μετ' ἀληθείας, ἐν καρδίᾳ ἀληθινῇ, and 2 Kings xx. 3.—ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστ., 'with a fully assured faith,' such as to exclude any approach to wavering, or apostasy. Comp. Dionys. Hal., p. 723, 21, Syllb., δόξα ἱσχυρᾶ, καὶ οὐ πολὺ ἀπίχουσα πίστις εἶναι. See supra vi. 11. Col. ii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 5.—ἐρραντ. and λελουμένοι are terms belonging to the Temple-service; and the rites to which they allude had a reference respectively to expiation and to moral purity. See ix. 13. There is here, however, a more particular allusion,—namely, as Kuin. suggests, to what is said at Exod. xxix. 21, and Levit. ix. 2, 20, of the vests of Aaron and his sons being sprinkled with blood, in order to their being allowed to enter the Sanctuary. May we not, therefore, suppose that when the High Priest entered the Sanctuary, he entered not only with blood, but also having his robes sprinkled with blood? The words ἐρραντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συν. πον. (with which compare 1 Pet. i. 2, ῥαντισμοὶ αἵματος Ἰ. Χριστοῦ) should be rendered 'sprinkled, as to our hearts, from an evil conscience,' i. e. (laying aside the metaphor, on which see note at ix. 13, 14) 'cleansed and freed from whatever dispositions corrupt the conscience, and defile the heart.' With the expression συνιδ. πον. I would compare Jos. Ant. i. 1. 4, ἐπὶ συνειδήσει πονηρῇ.

23. λελουμένοι, &c.] The expression here

μένονι τὸ σῶμα ὑδατι καθαρῶν κατέχωμεν τὴν ὁμολογίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος ἀκλινῇ· (πιστὸς γὰρ ὁ ἐπαγγελιάμενος) <sup>24</sup> καὶ κατανοώμεν ἀλλήλους εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης καὶ καλῶν ἔργων <sup>m Rom. 18. 11.</sup>
<sup>25</sup> μὴ ἐγκαταλείποντες τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς ἔθος <sup>2 Pet. 2. 9, 11, 14.</sup>

turns wholly on a comparison with the legal rite of washing for purification; and there is here an allusion to Baptism, as also in the foregoing expression we have a parallel with a Jewish rite,—namely, to what is said in Exod. xxix. 21, and Lev. viii. 30, of the garments of Aaron and his sons being sprinkled with blood, in order to their being allowed to enter the Sanctuary. The Jews (says Prof. Stuart) 'were sprinkled with blood, in order that they might be purified, so as to have access to God: Christians are internally sprinkled, i.e. purified by the blood of Jesus. The Jews were washed with water, in order to be ceremonially purified, so as to come before God: Christians have been washed by the purifying water of baptism.'—κατέχωμεν τὴν ὁμολογίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος ἀκλινῇ. One might have expected πιστὸς instead of ἐλπίς. And such is read in a few MSS., but doubtless from gloss. The full sense, imperfectly developed, is, 'let us hold fast unflinchingly the faith we confessed [in baptism], and cling to the hope involved in that profession.' So Est. observes that 'it is termed confession of hope, because he who confesses faith in baptism at the same time professes the thing which he hopes,—even remission of sin, resurrection of the body, and life eternal; and we might have expected ἀκλινῆς, &c. ἡμῖς. So 4 Macc. xvii. 4, ἀκλινῆς ὑπερινέγκας τὸν διὰ τῶν βασάνων σεαυτὸν.—ἀκλινῇ, 'firm and unwavering.' So Lucian (cited by Weta.) has ἀκλινῇ τὴν ψυχὴν.—πιστὸς γὰρ ὁ ἐπαγγελιάμενος, &c., meaning, '[And this we may well do:] for God will surely keep his promises, of all needful present support and future salvation; and therefore we may well perform our engagements.'

24. κατανοώμεν ἀλλήλους, &c.] Of this expression the exact sense has been disputed. The interpretation of some, 'let us take care of,' proceeds on a signif. of the word quite unauthorized. And as to that proposed by others, even by Est., in an able note, 'let us consider, bear in mind,'—namely, by showing a mutual concern for each other, it is one not sufficiently authorized by the usus loquendi, nor, indeed, quite agreeable to the context. It would seem that as the Apostle has just been exhorting to a sincere and lively faith, so here he intends to subjoin an admonition to those good works, which are the surest proof of its sincerity, and the fairest fruits of its efficacy (see Gal. v. 6, and Tit. iii. 7), and espec. to that important branch of them which consists in works of benevolence; 'for charity (as Dr. Is. Barrow says) being the main point of our religion, and benevolence the chief point of charity, it may well be ranked so high in the divine heraldry of Scripture.' The admonition is so expressed as to seem to advert to a certain principle, which might be serviceable towards producing and maintaining these good works,—that of mutual emulation, and the sense of acting under the eyes of each other, as well as of God. Be that as it may, the sense seems best represented by the Pesch. Syr., Chrysa., Theoph., and Theodor., among the ancient Commentators, and Beza, Calvin., Hyper., Grot., Monnoch., Wolf, Carpzov., and Kuin., among the modern ones, who take καταν. ἀλλ. to mean, 'let us take note of, keep our observation attentively fixed on, each other.' Thus, with Dr. A. Clarke, and others, we may explain, 'Let us incite each other, by a mutual example, to an increase in love to God and man, and, as a proof of it, to be fruitful in good works; for as the great proof of love to God is obedience to his law, so the great proof of love to man is actually doing him good.'

25. μὴ ἐγκαταλείποντες τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν ἑαυτῶν] meaning, 'not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together in public worship; lit. 'not abandoning, discontinuing [by allowing it to go into desuetude] the assembling,' &c. A very rare use of ἐγκατ., as said of a course of action, but found also in Polyb. xvi. 28. 9, ἐγκαταλείποντες τὰς αὐτῶν προαίρεσις (undertakings), also in Boeckh's Inscript. Gr. t. ii. p. 119, πολλῶν ἔργων (birelings) ἐγκαταλιπόντων τὰ ἔργα. However, the use here seems to have been suggested to the Apostle by two passages of the Sept., 2 Chron. xxiv. 18. Nehem. x. 39. xiii. 11, οὐκ ἐγκαταλείψομεν τὸν οἶκον Θεοῦ, 'will not forsake attendance at the worship of God.' In this sense the word ἐπισυναγωγὴ is indeed rare, only occurring elsewhere in the New Test. at 1 Thess. ii. 1; but it is found at 2 Macc. ii. 7, in the sense religious assembly, and was here employed in preference to συναγωγὴ, by way of distinction from the Jewish religious meetings. See Bengel. Here, then, it would seem that, as one principal means of maintaining their faith, hope, and charity, and by raising a wholesome emulation, which might counteract that indolence with which he charges them at ver. 11, the Apostle enjoins a regular attendance on the various assemblies for divine worship, whether in the public congregation, or in their more private meetings held for social worship. How indispensable this was to the producing the above ends, and how the neglect of this duty would tend to apostasy itself, it is scarcely necessary to observe; nor are we justified in seeking to diminish the force of the implied admonition, by adverting to the peculiar circumstances in which the Hebrew Christians were placed, and the temptation to which it appears they were of themselves too prone,—apostasy, or, at least, backsliding. The importance, and even necessity of the duty of Christians assembling themselves together at stated times is such as exists in every age. To see the high importance thereof, we need only attend to the remark of one of the bitterest enemies of our religion, ('fas est et ab hoste doceri,') Gibbon, in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. iv. p. 83: 'The devotion of the poet, or the philosopher, may be secretly nourished by prayer, meditation, and study; but the exercise of public worship appears to be the only solid foundation of the religious sentiments of the people, which derive their force from imitation and habit. The interruption of that public

n Num. 15.
30.
ch. 6. 4.
3 Pet. 2. 30, 31.
1 John 5. 10.
o Ezek. 36. 5.
Zeph. 1. 15.
& 3. 8.
p ch. 2. 2.
Num. 15. 30.
Deut. 17. 6.
& 19. 15.
Matt. 18. 15.
John 8. 17.
3 Cor. 12. 1.
q 1 Cor. 11. 22.

τισιν, ἀλλὰ παρακαλοῦντες· καὶ τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον ὅσῳ βλέπετε ἐγγίζουσιν τὴν ἡμέραν. <sup>26</sup> Ἐκουσίως γὰρ ἀμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, οὐκ ἔτι περὶ ἀμαρτιῶν ἀπολείπεται θυσία· <sup>27</sup> φοβερά δέ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως, καὶ πυρὸς ζῆλος ἐσθίου μέλλοντος τοὺς ὑπεναντίους. <sup>28</sup> Ἀθετήσας τὸν νόμον Μωϋσέως χωρὶς οἰκτιρμῶν, ἐπὶ δυσὶν ἢ τρισὶ μάρτυσιν, ἀποθνήσκει· <sup>29</sup> πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρονος ἀξιωθήσεται τιμωρίας exercise may consummate, in the period of a few years, the important work of a national revolution. Comp. 1 Tim. vi. 2. At παρακαλοῦντες supply αὐτοὺς, united is expressed at iii. 13, παρακ. αὐτοὺς—ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις ἐξ ὑμῶν. By παρακ. is meant 'exhorting each other to constancy in the performance of the above and all other religious duties'; there being here, it would seem, a reference to that especial benefit resulting from these meetings, as they were then carried on,—namely, the mutually teaching and exhorting or admonishing each other. And so Hyper., in his explanation of παρακαλοῦντες, unites the idea of teaching.—τ. μ. ὅσῳ βλέπ. ἡμέραν, meaning, 'and so much the rather ought ye to mutually exhort and excite each other to the performance of all good works, inasmuch as ye see the day approaching.' What 'day' is here to be understood, whether the day, or time, of the destruction of Jerusalem, or the day of judgment, is disputed. Most modern Commentators adopt the former interpretation, which is ably maintained by Prof. Stuart; but though it be true that the day of God's judgments on the unbelieving or apostatizing Jews, in that catastrophe, would be a seasonable deliverance of Christians from their persecutions, yet that was not, I think, intended to be made the prominent idea: and when we consider that the expression the day, or that day, is almost always in the New Test. used of the day of judgment, I prefer, with the ancient and several eminent modern Commentators, as Calv., Hyper., Wolf, and Abp. Newc., to take it of the advent of Christ to judgment. See 1 Thess. v. 2, 4. However the Hebrew Christians united in their minds these two great events, the second advent of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the world, called ἡ συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων. And so it is said, 1 Pet. iv. 7, πάντων δὲ τὸ τέλος ἡγγικε· σωφρονίσασθε οὖν, &c. Hence both the above senses might here be intended,—the latter as founded on the former.

26, 27. Here is suggested a reason why they should beware of whatever tended to apostasy;—namely, that if, after having acknowledged and embraced the truth, they should slide back into error, and deliberately apostatize, there would be no hope of pardon and acceptance, but their case would be desperate.

26. μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας] A phrase nearly equiv. to that supr. vi. 4, φημισθῆναι, but a more expressive one, as being compounded of two phrases.—οὐκ ἔτι περὶ ἀμαρτιῶν, &c., i. e. there is no other mode of expiation provided; and since God will not pardon sin without some satisfaction (else the argument here would be inconclusive), it follows that nought can remain to apostates but a horribly fearful expectation of future judgment unto perdition, strongly alluded to in the awful expression πυρὸς ζῆλος, denoting 'the fiery anger of God,' oft. thus designated in the Old Test. See Ps. xxi. 9. Mal. iv. 1. Infra xii. 29, and comp. the terms διάπυρος and αἶθων in the Greek Class. writers.

27. φοβερά δι τιν ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως] So Basil. M. t. ii. 524, φοβερά γὰρ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως. Tis has here great emphasis, being intensive of the force of the Adject., as in Eurip. ap. Stobæum, p. 173, 11, δεινὴ τις ὀργή. The word ἐκδοχὴ occurs, I believe, no where else; but, from what has been said by me in Lex. N. T. v. ἐκδόχουμαι, it will be plain that our recent English Translators have done wrong in altering the looking-for of our Common Version into expectation, which very inadequately represents the force of the expression—a manner of speaking used with allusion to what is matter of sight (and therefore more forcible than a term whose reference is to what is matter only of intellectual perception), and, as Hyper. on that passage well points out, was 'here suggested by the similarly forcible expression preceding, βλέπετε ἐγγίζουσαν τὴν ἡμέραν, meaning the day of judgment.' The propriety as well as force of the term looking-for, as employed in our Common Version, will fully appear by marking its happy effect in the following passage of a distinguished poet, and most consummate judge of the force of terms, (Dryden), 'Drown'd in deep despair, He dares not utter one repenting prayer. Amazed he lies, and sadly looks for death.—ἐσθίου—τοὺς ὑπεναντίους. As fire is oft., in O. T., said 'to eat up' what it consumes, so the fiery wrath of God is not unfrequently represented as consuming, destroying, and casting into perdition τοὺς ὑπεναντίους, the enemies of God, meaning those who oppose themselves to his true religion, the Gospel of Christ. The Apostle had here prob. in mind Isa. lxiv. 2, κατακαύσει πῦρ τοὺς ὑπεναντίους.

28, 29. Here is an argumentum à minori ad majus, to show the heavy wrath, which hangs over apostates, when even Moses' law punished such defection most severely.

28. νόμον M.] meaning the ceremonial law, for a wilful violation of which no persons whatever were exempted from punishment.—ἀποθνήσκει. Render: 'dieth'; the Present being used with reference to the punishment prescribed, for all times, by the Law, at Deut. xvii. 2—7.

29. πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρονος, &c.] These words are meant to place in a strong light the guilt of apostates. The expression δοκεῖτε has great energy; and ἀξιωθήσεται no little elegance. The πόσῳ is not (as some imagine) to be joined with δοκεῖτε, inasmuch as the word δοκεῖτε is to be pointed off by commas, as an insertion

ὁ τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταπατήσας, καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης κοινὸν ἡγησάμενος ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρίσας; <sup>30</sup> Ὅϊδαμεν γὰρ τὸν εἰπόντα· Ἐμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, <sup>r Deut. 32.
25, 26.</sup>
ἐγὼ ἀνταποδώσω, [λέγει Κύριος] καὶ πάλιν Κύριος κρι- <sup>Rom. 12. 19.</sup> νεῖ τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ. <sup>31</sup> φοβερὸν τὸ ἐμπεσεῖν εἰς χεῖρας Θεοῦ ζῶντος. <sup>32</sup> Ἀναμνησέσθε δὲ τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας, <sup>s Gal. 2. 4.
Phil. 1. 20, 20. Col. 2. 1.</sup>

thrown in; which at once imparts great spirit, and conveys an appeal on the part of the writer to the judgment and conscience of those whom he is addressing. Comp. Anacr. Od. xl. 15, πόντον, δοκίαν, ποροῦσιν, Ἔρωσι, ὄνονε σὺ βάλλεις;—Καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης, &c. Render: 'and who regards the blood of the covenant (i. e. the blood of Christ shed to ratify the new covenant) wherewith he was sanctified (i. e. cleansed from his sins, and set apart to the service of God) as a thing common and ordinary, no more than that of a man, and consequently having no expiatory efficacy.'—καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβ. Render: 'and hath treated with contumely the Spirit of grace; i. e. the Holy Spirit, the bestower of grace; viz., by resisting his holy influence, which would have preserved him from apostasy. Thus, supr. vi. 4, the persons in question are described as once μέτοχοι Πνεύματος ἀγίου. Many recent foreign Commentators, indeed, attempt to lower the sense to 'the mercies of the Gospel;' but it has been convincingly shown by Bp. Middl. that this version is wholly inadmissible. 'Attributes (he observes) are frequently expressed in the ancient Oriental tongues and Scriptural phraseology, not, as with us, by means of Adjectives, but by the Genitives of the names of attributes, made to depend on the noun to which the attribute belongs. The Holy Spirit is continually named in the Syr. Version the Spirit o holiness; and the gracious throne, a title of the Almighty, is in this Epistle, iv. 16, ὁ θρόνος τῆς χάριτος. So the all-gracious God is in 1 Peter, v. 10, ὁ Θεὸς πάντης χάριτος, and here τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος, the gracious Spirit, i. e. the Holy Ghost.' This interp. exactly suits the context: and that the writer should in the same verse speak of 'trampling on the Son of God,' and of 'insulting the gracious Spirit,' will seem very intelligible and natural to those who admit the personality of the Holy Ghost; and they who do not, ought at least to show that ἐνυβρίσας in Greek has for its object things, and even qualities; and that to 'insult the mercies of the Gospel' is tolerable sense.' Thus, then, to grossly insult, καταπατεῖν, the Holy Spirit, is to reject his holy influences with disdain, to deny their reality, or it may be, ascribe them to demoniacal agency,—the sin against the Holy Ghost.

30, 31. This solemn warning the Apostle follows up by adducing two passages from Scripture, showing the tremendous nature of the punishment threatened; applying to apostates what was originally said of the idolatrous Gentiles. To give greater force to the words, he has employed, in the place of the usual formula of citation, a mode of expression adapted to suggest the august greatness of the Speaker (i. e. God by Moses), in his attributes of infinite power, justice, and truth; see vv. 31, 37. The first passage is from Deut.

xxxii. 35; but the words quoted do not entirely agree either with the Sept. or the Hebrew; though the sense is faithfully represented; and probably some copies of the Sept. so read in the time of St. Paul. The words λέγει Κύριος are cancelled by Tisch., but retained by Lachm.; very properly; since the authority for their being cancelled is very slender (only that of 4 MSS. and some Versions); while internal evidence is equally balanced. The words may possibly have been introduced from Rom. xii. 19; but if the Apostle subjoined the words (for they are those, not of Moses, but of St. Paul himself, q. d. 'It is the Lord who speaks') in the passage of Romans, he would be likely to do so in this. However, the question is a doubtful one. The second passage is taken from Deut. xxxii. 36, though found also in Ps. cxxxv. 14. The term κρινεῖν is by some explained 'will avenge.' But though that sense seems very suitable to the passage of Deut., the context in the Apostle seems to require that assigned by many eminent Commentators, 'will condemn and punish his [apostatizing] people;' of course, by an accommodation of the sense of the original.

31. φοβερὸν τὸ ἐμπεσεῖν, &c.] The term φοβ. here answers to the Latin horribile. The expression ἐμπίπτειν εἰς χεῖρά τινας, denotes to fall into any one's power for evil, as punishment, or avengement. The epithet ζῶντος may refer either to the eternity or the omnipotence of God, or, indeed, to both, in order to show how utterly hopeless is the condition of his enemies.

32. To the influence of threatenings is now subjoined the argument of self-interest. They are reminded of the supports that had been provided for them under the trials they had experienced in the former days of their Christian profession; and it is intimated that, as to what they had suffered, and renounced for Christ, the sacrifices would be lost if they should now give way and apostatize. The best comment on this passage is a very similar sentiment at Gal. iii. 3, 4.—Τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας. Πρότερον is here, as often in Thuryd., used Adjectively. As to this passage, vv. 26—31, and the similar one, vi. 4—6, so perplexing to some serious Bible-students, from Luther downwards, it must be borne in mind that neither passage asserts the impossibility of an apostate's repentance. It has been well observed by Mr. Conyb., that 'what is said amounts to this,—that for the conversion of a deliberate apostate, God has (according to the ordinary laws of his working) no further means in store than those which have been already tried in vain.'—Φωτισθέντες, 'after having been enlightened,' viz. by the light of the Gospel (see Eph. i. 18); having been called out of darkness into his marvellous light (1 Pet. ii. 9), and thereby become Christians. Here, too, there may be an allusion to baptism (so also supr. vi. 4, where

ἐ φιλ. 1. 7. ἐν αἷς φωτισθέντες πολλὴν ἀθλήσιν ὑπεμείνατε παθημάτων 33 τούτο μὲν, ὀνειδισμοὺς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι· τούτο δὲ, κοινωνοὶ τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρεφόμενων γενηθέντες. 34 καὶ γὰρ τοῖς † δεσμοῖς [μου] συνεπαθήσατε, καὶ τὴν ἀρπαγὴν τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ὑμῶν μετὰ χαρᾶς προσεδέξασθε, γινώσκοντες ἔχειν

see note) as the sacrament of heavenly grace by the Holy Spirit for regeneration, alluded to supr., v. 29, τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρ., meaning 'the spirit of grace (in baptism) by which they had been brought out of darkness to light in the Lord.' The words following advert to the trials and tribulations that succeeded to that first period of joy in the Holy Ghost. These are first denoted by the forcible expressions ἀθλήσις παθημάτων (an agonistic metaphor, as in Thucyd. vii. 71, 1, πολλὴν τὸν ἀγῶνα—τῆς γνώμης εἶχε), and θλίψεις, by which are designated 'the effects of direct persecution,' as distinct from ὀνειδισμοῖς θεατριζόμενοι, which denote the indirect, —of contumely the most extreme.

33. ὀνειδισμοῖς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι.] A strongly fig. mode of expression—suggested by the foregoing agonistic metaphor—of which the sense is, 'being exposed to open and public insult,' where the term θεατρ. has allusion to criminals exposed, as a spectacle in the theatre, to the public insults of the multitude (Tacit. Ann. xv., 'percutibus addita ludibria') previous to their being put to an ignominious death. See Philo, p. 1043, and Plut. de sera N. V., and comp. 1 Cor. iv. 9, ὡς ἐπιθανάτιον (ἐπιδίδειξεν) ὅτι θιάτρον ἱγυήθημεν τῷ κόσμῳ.—Κοινωνοὶ γίνεσθαι fig. denotes 'to be partakers by deep sympathy with those that were thus circumstanced';—for such is the force of τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρ. and not 'treated'; for ἀναστρέφεισθαι is not a Passive, but Midd. Reflexive, in a reciprocal sense, lit. 'to turn oneself about in a place, versari, or about a thing'; and hence, to be circumstanced so and so as to the thing; which seems to be its use here. Though, were it not for the οὕτως, the word might be referred to ὀνειδισμοῖς and θλίψεσι, by an ellipsis of αὐτοῖς, 'conversant about revilings, afflictions.'

34. καὶ γὰρ τοῖς δεσμοῖς, &c.] The words of this verse are illustrative of both the above sorts of suffering,—that personally, and that by sympathy and mental participation (as members of the same body); only they are taken in inverse order, per Chiasmum. The sense is, 'Ye had, for instance, sympathy with, and succoured me in my bonds.' To this same principle of sympathy, which makes us, as it were, participators in the evils of our friends, the Apostle has another allusion at xiii. 3, μνησθε τῶν δεσμῶν, ὡς συνδεδεμένοι. Here, indeed, a difference of opinion exists as to the reading. Instead of the t. rec., δεσμοῖς μου, MSS. A, D, and 12 cursives (I can only add Mus. 5116), and several Versions, have δεσμούς, which has been preferred by most Critics, and edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. The t. rec., however, is ably defended by Heina, Capel., Wolf, Carpov., Michael., Matthæi, Schleusn., Bp. Jebb, and Rinck; and has been retained by Matthæi; perhaps rightly; since the external evidence for it is very greatly superior, and the internal not inferior. The recent Critics, I suspect, have been chiefly induced to reject the t. rec. from the opinion of Valcknaer that it is not good Greek; but as it has been shown by Bp. Jebb, Sac. Lit. p. 354, Valcknaer's testimony is negatived by his own admission supra iv. 15, συνεπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις, that 'it might be used by the best Greek writers.' That συνεπ. can be, and is, used of things, even by the writer of this Epistle, is plain from the above passage, and from a passage of Isocrates, adduced by Bp. Jebb, very similar to the one before us: ὥστε καὶ ταῖς μικραῖς ἀτυχείαις ἵκαστος ἡμῶν πολλοὺς εἶχε συνεπαθῆσας, 'so that each of us had many to sympathize even with our small mischances.' [I add Polyb. iv. 7, 3, ταῖς τιμῶς ἀτυχείαις.] Now (says he) since it is unquestionably pure Greek to say συνεπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀτυχείαις, where can be the solecism in saying ταῖς δεσμοῖς συνεπαθῆσαι? These phrases, indeed, may be elliptical: δεσμοῖς μου συνεπαθῆσατε [μοι]. συνεπαθῆσαι [ἡμῖν] ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν. ἀτυχίας ἡμῶν συνεπαθῆσασιν [ἡμῖν]. The ellipsis, however, extends even further than this. The complete phrase is συνεπ. μοι ἐν ταῖς δεσμοῖς μου; and, in the process of abbreviating it, there is an hyperallage, as in Phil. iv. 14, συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τῇ θλίψει, for συνεπ. μοι ἐν τῇ θλίψει μου. Thus far in my former Edd. On carefully reconsidering this perplexing question, I am ready to admit that the learned Critics whom I have adduced have pushed too far some of the arguments for δεσμοῖς μου, and have underrated those that may be urged for δεσμοῖς, for which Est. has advanced some remarks that deserve attention. Though, when he argues from the similarity existing between δεσμοῖς and δεσμοῖς, he uses an argument which draws two ways. And indeed the reading has chiefly to be determined from internal evidence,—and that, I now think, is pretty evenly balanced. For μου was not more likely to be removed by those who found δεσμοῖς in their copy, than to be added by those who, finding δεσμοῖς in theirs, inserted the pronoun, because St. Paul frequently subjoins it, indeed always except in Philem. 13, and even there it is implied in the μοι.—Προσδέξασθε, 'admitted,' 'acquiesced'; a signif. found in the Sept., Exod. x. 17, but not in the Class. writers.—ὑπαρξίς, 'wealth, or property'; a signif. confined to the later writers. The ἐν before ἑαυτοῖς has been, on strong grounds, espec. from internal evidence, cancelled by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch. It was prob. introduced by those Revisers of the text, who did not perceive the force of the Dat. commodi in ἑαυτοῖς, 'for yourselves,' which imparts no small force and emphasis, of which, however, Lachm., and Tisch. in his 1st Ed., effectually deprived the passage, by reading ἑαυτῶν, from A, and 5 cursive MSS., and the Vulg., a reading which evidently arose from the infinitive εἶχειν, the scribes not perceiving the construction. The words ἐν οὐρανοῖς are cancelled by Lachm. and Tisch. on the

[ἐν] ἑαυτοῖς κρείττονα ὑπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ μένουσαν. <sup>35</sup> * Μὴ ἀποβάλλετε οὖν τὴν παρρησίαν ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἔχει μισθ-
 αποδοσίαν μεγάλην <sup>36</sup> * ὑπομονῆς γὰρ ἔχετε χρεῖαν, ἵνα τὸ θέ-λημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιήσαντες κομίσσησθε τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν. <sup>37</sup> * Ἐτι γὰρ μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἤξει καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ. <sup>38</sup> * Ὁ

<sup>3</sup> Matt. 10.
<sup>35</sup> Luke 21.
<sup>36</sup> Hab. 2. 3.
<sup>37</sup> Hag. 2. 7.
<sup>38</sup> Luke 12. 3.
<sup>39</sup> Rom. 1. 17.
<sup>40</sup> Gal. 3. 11.
<sup>41</sup> 1 Pet. 1. 6.
<sup>42</sup> 2 Pet. 2. 2.

authority of three or four MSS. and the Vulgate Version. They may have been introduced from a marginal scholium written by one who was thinking of Col. i. 5 and 1 Pet. i. 4, and then transposed in some MSS. (to which I add Mus. 5116, and 11,836); this may be thought to confirm this view. But variation in position oft leads to omission in a few MSS. And the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version in confirmation of all the MSS. exc. 3 or 4, forbids even the bracketing of the words.

35. μὴ ἀποβάλ. οὖν] The Apostle subjoins exhortation to admonition, 'not to cast off, or away, that confident hope and trust,' by which they were assured of 'the better substance,' ὑπαρξιν, for which they had cheerfully encountered losses and sufferings.—The next clause, ἥτις ἔχει μισθ. μεγ., adverts to the ground of this perseverance in well doing,—inasmuch as it carries with it a mighty recompense of reward, in requital of all that they had suffered in the pursuit of the hoped for heavenly inheritance. 'Quod autem (observes Calv.) remuneratio nomine utitur [Paulus], eo nihil diminuit de gratuita salutis promissione;' the true view, whatever it be,—with unusual dogmatical sophistry,—may say to the contrary. It is not, cannot be, a reward of meritorious works, which is spoken of here. The only true ground of the παρρησ. here spoken of, consists in the unswerving faith, which trusts in CHRIST, and in him only.

36. The Apostle here urges the continuance of that patient endurance, on the ground of its indispensable necessity to bear them up under much future trial, q. d. 'great need have ye thereof, for &c.,'—a weighty representation, which Bp. Sanderson in a Sermon on this text well applies for general use thus: "well is it said, 'Ye have need of patience;' for, 1. we live here in a vale of misery, where we meet with a thousand petty crosses and vexations in the common road of our lives, which we have need of patience to digest; 2. we are beset and surrounded with a world of temptations, assailing us within and without, which we have need of patience to withstand; 3. we are exposed to manifold injuries, obloquies, and sufferings, which we have need of patience to bear; 4. we have many precious promises made us in the word of grace, of glory, and of outward things; of some of which we find as yet but slender performance, and of others no visible probability of their future performance; these we have need of patience to expect: 5. we have many duties required of us in our Christian callings, and in our particular vocations (for the honour of God, and the service of our brethren), which we have need of patience to go through." One cannot but admit the power for edification of the above passage of the learned Prelate: but he ought to have seen that it does not well suit the present passage, since ὑπομ. cannot well be expressed by 'patience' in the ordinary sense, as denoting 'the suffering of evil with equanimity;'

VOL. II.

but here the context requires the rendering perseverance, equiv. to 'patient perseverance to the end of any labour or trial;' and this must here be, the end of one's earthly course. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 13. The term χρεῖαν must here denote 'urgent need and necessity,' as said of a thing that is indispensably necessary to us.

37, 38. Here a remarkable discrepancy exists between the Hebrew and the Sept. and the Apostle; for while the Apostle's words agree with the Sept., except in the transposition of the two clauses of the latter verse, for better adaptation to his purpose, they both vary considerably from the Hebrew. The words ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἤξει καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ follow the Sept., except in adding ὁ to ἐρχόμενος, which, however, it is not improbable was anciently in the Sept. text, since otherwise the Framers of that Version would probably have written τὸ ἐρχόμενον, meaning, the prediction. At verse 38 the discrepancy seems very great between the Sept. and the Hebrew; yet it need not be ascribed to corruption in the Hebrew text; for it has been shown by Pocock that the Sept. may very well be reconciled with the present text, there being only a change of person to make the sense plainer. The μὺν of the Sept.,—where, according to the Hebrew, it should have been αὐτοῦ,—may be accounted for on the same principle as that above mentioned. It would seem, however, that the writer did not adopt the μὺν; for though it is found in two of the most ancient MSS. and some Versions, yet it seems to have been introduced from the Sept., where it was meant to be taken for αὐτοῦ. In the two other places of the New Test. where this passage is quoted (namely, Rom. i. 17, and Gal. iii. 11), the μὺν is not found.

37. μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον] A phrase used by the best writers, to denote 'a very little while.' In ὁ ἐρχόμενος we have a not unusual designation of the MESSIAH. This coming is to be understood of the advent of Christ to destroy Jerusalem, and put an end to the Jewish state.—ἤξει καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ. This is not a mere pleonasm, but a forcible mode of expression. Comp. Mesemach. Com. Hippoiat. frag. i. 25, ἤξει ἡδὴ καὶ μὴ μέλλειν. Thus the sense here is, 'will come at once and no longer tarry.'

38. Here are suggested the means by which the just shall attain this life; namely, by his persevering and enduring faith and reliance on God; of which the Apostle soon after takes occasion to illustrate the nature, and exemplify the efficacy, by reference to the worthies of the Old Test.—ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. Render: 'Now the just shall live out of faith [in me];' μὺν being left to be supplied from the subject-matter; though it is expressed in the Sept., where μὺν is for μοι, equiv. to εἰς ἐμὴ, forming an example of the attributive construction, as in Eurip. Troad. 376, ἡδὴναι τέκνονι, for ἐπὶ τέκνονι or ἐπὶ τένα. See Jelf, Gr. Gr.

T T

δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστειλήται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ. <sup>39</sup> Ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐκ

§ 499—601, 2, and note on James iv. 4, φιλία τοῦ κόσμου. However, the subordination is so harsh, that I am inclined to think μου may be admitted into the text; as it has been done by Lachm. and Tisch., on the authority of two uncial MSS., some Versions and several Fathers. —καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστειλήται, &c. Here it has been not a little disputed what is the subject of the verb ὑποστειλήται. Almost all Commentators, from the time of Beza and Grotius, have thought it to be τις; while the ancient and earlier modern Commentators, and a few after their time, as Bp. Pearson (Parnocis prefixed to Sept.), Mackn., Whitby, Abp. Newcome, Dr. A. Clarke, and Bp. Turton (in his Text of the English Bible, pp. 78—86), refer it to the just man before mentioned. Of course, the advocates for the doctrine of Final Perseverance adopt the former mode; the opponents of that doctrine the latter; according to which Whitby shows that the doctrine in question is utterly untenable. 'The words (says he) plainly suppose that the "just man," who "liveth" by "that faith," in which, if he persisted, he would "save his soul," may "draw back unto perdition." And this is also evident from the expression, "My soul shall have no pleasure in him;" for they plainly intimate that God took pleasure in him before his drawing back; for otherwise this threat would signify nothing, the Lord taking pleasure in none but "just" men only, and such as "live by faith." The question, however, is, which of the two above-mentioned modes of reference should here be adopted, and in order thereto, whether there can be any principle which may suffice to decide a point of such importance. Now here Bp. Turton comes opportunely to our aid in the following able remarks: 'The Apostle (says he) exhorting those whom he is addressing to steadfastness in the faith, employs, with some variation, the words of the Septuagint Version of Hab. ii. 4, which may be rendered, "If a man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him; but the just shall live by faith." In this rendering, the words "a man," or "any man," are more than the Greek contains, and are introduced because there is, in the Greek, no reference to any individual before mentioned; but it suited the Apostle's argument to invert the order of the clauses. Indeed, if the latter clause, as used by the Apostle, had stood first in the Prophet, and from its position had had a more general application, there would have been some difficulty in conceiving how any other version than the one now given could ever have been thought of. That the bearing and import of words are frequently changed by their position, is known to all who know any thing of the nature of language; and thus the inquiry is reduced to this,—whether, for the purpose of confirming the faith of the Hebrew converts, the Apostle used a sentence, the signification of which should be determined by its own obvious construction, or by what might happen to be recollected of its form when used by a Prophet, who here seems rather to be referred to than quoted. This point the reader shall decide for himself. As to the light in which this passage appeared to the elder Commentators, Erasmus manifestly did not contemplate the introduction of quis, "any man." Zeger explained the drawing back with reference to the just man [as did also that consummate theologian, Hyperius; see his able examination of the sense. Edit.]. J. Capell. and Grot. examined the Septuagint Version of Habakkuk, and finding τις to be understood there, seemed to think that it must be understood in Heb. x. 38 likewise. Beza, the great authority for the rendering 'but if any man draw back,' described the Apostle as inverting the clauses of the sentence, but retaining the Prophet's meaning; and this, so far as I can perceive, is his ostensible reason for introducing τις. That, by this rendering, another version was avoided, by no means agreeable to Beza's Theological opinions, there can be no doubt. From Bp. Pearson's Prof. ad Parav. we learn that, in his opinion, the inverted order of the clauses, adopted by the Apostle, at once gave to the verb "draw back" a nominative case "he," the just man (which also was the opinion of Theophylact), and that when Beza translated, "But the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in it;" his two methods of excluding the "just man" from being the subject of the latter clause—1. by introducing the words "any man;" and, 2. by transferring God's displeasure from the person who draws back (him) to the act of withdrawing (it)—indicate either a want of good faith or an undue concession to theological opinions.' I would further observe, that the censure here applied by Bps. Pearson and Turton to Beza should also be applied, in some measure, to Calvin, who has on this occasion evinced no little disingenuousness; for though he did not venture on the change introduced by Beza, yet he strove to suppress the sense naturally resulting from the words, by rendering ἐὰν ὑποστειλήται, 'si subductus fuerit;' though such is evidently at variance with the sens loquendi both of the Class. and the Script. writers. Thus in the Sept. the term always carries with it the idea of fear; and so in Jos. Ant. ii. 5, 5, and vi. 5, 5, we have φόβῳ added, to make the sense stronger. In the Bell. Jud., i. 20, 1, it is used without φόβῳ thus: οὐδὲ τούτῳ ἐν ὑποστείλλεσθαι εὐκταί. In short, the term in question implies a desertion of one's pledged faith, by a metaphor derived from the case of a soldier who deserts his post, by shrinking back from danger (which, moreover, seems to have been had in view by St. John, Rev. xxi. 8, where he speaks of 'the fearful and unbelieving (τοῖς δειλοῖς καὶ ἀπίστοις), for whom is reserved the second death.' There is no doubt that here the sense of ὑποστειλήται is, draw back, withdraw himself, from the faith by apostasy, through fear of professing it. This absolute use of ὑποστειλλασθαι is rare; though I have noted it in Jos. Bell. iii. 8, 1, μὴ ἁπλῶς ὑποστειλλασθαι. The view of the construction here, which I have taken, is supported by what Ket. has remarked in a long and able annotation on this verse, to which I beg to refer the reader.

39. Here the ensuing discourse on faith is well introduced by what may be considered the connecting link of an indirect exhortation to it:

ἐσμέν ὑποστολῆς εἰς ἀπώλειαν, ἀλλὰ πίστεως εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς.

XI. 1<sup>a</sup> Ἔστι δὲ πίστις ἐλπίζομένων ὑπόστασις, πραγμάτων <sup>a Rom. 8. 24.</sup> ἔλεγχος οὐ βλεπομένων. <sup>25.</sup> 2<sup>b</sup> ἐν ταύτῃ γὰρ ἐμαρτυρήθησαν οἱ <sup>3 Cor. 4. 18.</sup> πρεσβύτεροι. <sup>b Gen. 1. 1.</sup> 3<sup>b</sup> Πίστει νοοῦμεν κατηρτίσθαι τοὺς αἰῶνας <sup>Pa. 32. 4.</sup> ῥήματι Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐκ φαινομένων τὰ βλεπόμενα γεγονένα. <sup>Rom. 4. 17.</sup> 4<sup>c</sup> Πίστει πλείονα θυσίαν Ἀβελ παρὰ Κάιν προσήνεγκε τῷ <sup>3 Pet. 2. 5.</sup> Θεῷ, δι' ἧς ἐμαρτυρήθη εἶναι δίκαιος, μαρτυροῦντος ἐπὶ τοῖς <sup>c Gen. 4. 4.</sup> <sup>d Matt. 22. 25.</sup> <sup>ch. 12. 34.</sup>

q. d. 'But we [I trust] are not of the number of,' &c. On the terms ὑποστῆλθαι and ὑποστολῆ see note at Acts xx. 20. — Here ὑποστολῆς is abstr. for concrete, = τῶν ὑποστῆλλομένων, as in the instance of ἡ περιτομή and many other Substantives. Of εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς the full meaning is, 'unto the preservation of the soul' from death spiritual, as by ἀπώλεια is denoted 'destruction from the presence of God.' Comp. 2 Chron. xiv. 12. See more in note on 1 Thess. v. 9.

XI. 1. Having mentioned faith, issuing in constancy of endurance under trials and afflictions, as the peculiar characteristic of the true Christian, the Apostle, in order to excite his readers to the latter, proceeds to show, that such faith, or confidence, in the Divine promises of support under trials has always been the means of promoting such perseverance; also that the very nature of faith, and the character of true believers, require this. In order the better to work on the minds of his Hebrew readers, the Apostle, after first describing the essence and true nature of faith as a saving principle of action, illustrates at large its efficacy, proving, by a long array of Scriptural examples, that it had always been the grand characteristic of God's faithful servants from the earliest ages. First, the Apostle defines Faith, not logically and formally, but popularly and practically. Now faith, he says, is ἐλπίζο-μένων ὑπόστασις, where of the various interpretations the best founded is 'confidence, confident trust as to things hoped for,'—firm persuasion as to their existence (see supra iii. 16, comp. 2 Cor. ix. 4. xi. 17), a realization of them as absolute realities, though now only seen by the mind's eye (comp. v. 3), and only objects of trust and confidence (resting on God's promises). The next words, πραγ. ἔλ. οὐ βλεπ., serve to further develop the idea, by pointing to the result, as a full conviction of their being truly existent, though not seen by the bodily eye. The same brevity of expression occurs in Thucyd. v. 111, 2, τὰ ληχυρότατα (your surest grounds of preservation) ἐπιζόμενα μέλλεται.

3. πίστει—Θεῷ] The Apostle now proves, by reference to the creation of the world, that faith regards even things long past, and which do not strike the senses. (Kuinoel.) Here several Expositors connect μὴ with φαινομένων, assigning as the sense 'ita ut ex iis que non essent, ea que sunt existent,' as in 2 Macc. vii. 28, οὐκ ἐξ ὄντων ἰσχύοντες αὐτὰ (i. e. the universe); but its natural construction is rather with γεγονέναι; and from this there is no reason to depart, since the same sentiment will either way arise, and that founded on Gen. i. 1. It is meant that 'through faith we clearly apprehend, that the world we see was not made out of apparent materials, from matter which had existed from eternity, but was produced out of nothing to be seen; so that, at His fiat, the material creation was brought into existence, and formed into the things we see.' So Rom. iv. 17, Θεοῦ καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα. Comp. Philo, de Creatione, τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκέλευσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι.—

With τὰ βλεπόμενα, 'things actually seen,' comp. 2 Cor. iv. 8. Joa. Antt. v. 10, 4, τῶν βλεπομένων, and Æschyl. Cboëph. 844, τὰ βλεπόμενα, 'things really existing.' For τὰ βλεπόμενα, Lachm. and Tisch. read τὸ βλεπόμενον, from 4 MSS., 2 inferior Versions, and 2 Fathers; an authority too slender for any change except what might be called for by strong internal evidence; which is not the case here, since τὸ βλεπόμενον is precluded by the antithetic term φαινομένων. That reading probably arose from a confounding of the abbreviations for το and τα, which abbreviations are not dissimilar; and then βλεπ. would be accommodated in number to its Article.

4. πίστει πλείονα—Θεῷ] 'By virtue of faith Abel,' &c.; implying that it was his faith which made his offering more acceptable. Some, indeed, are of opinion that his offering was more acceptable as being of animals, not of the fruits of the earth; but it would seem that the offering itself was made from the superiority of his faith. Not only did Abel evince a more decided devotion to his God, by offering victims of the choice of the flock, but (as is shown by Abp. Magee on the Atonement, p. 52) there is great reason to suppose that 'his faith was especially superior, as being not directed to God alone (recognizing his existence, authority, and providence), but also to the Great Redeemer promised immediately after the fall (Gen. iii. 15), whose expiatory death was typified by animal sacrifices; by offering which Abel evinced his faith in the great sacrifice of the Redeemer prefigured by it; and thus he obtained that acceptance from God, and witnessing of his offerings, which was refused to Cain.—ἐμαρτ. εἶναι δίκ., lit. 'he was borne testimony to [by God] to be,' &c., i. e. testimony was borne by God that he was such. Δίκ. is an epithet constantly applied to Abel in the Scriptures, Philo, and Josephus. The words here, μαρτυρ. ἐπὶ τοῖς ὁμοίαις αὐτοῦ, are explanatory of the preceding; the sense being, 'bearing his approving testimony respecting the gifts.' The nature of the term and the language of Scripture elsewhere (Gen. iv. 10) point at some visible tokens of approbation, though what that was we are not told in the Old Test. But the Jewish Expositors and the most eminent Christian Com-δώροις αὐτοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ δι' αὐτῆς ἀποθανὼν ἔτι * λαλεῖ.
T 2

 5<sup>a</sup> Πίστει Ἐνὼχ μετετέθη τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, (καὶ οὐχ εὐρίσκετο, διότι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς,) πρὸ γὰρ τῆς μεταθέσεως αὐτοῦ μεμαρτύρηται εὐηρεστηκέναι τῷ Θεῷ.
 6<sup>a</sup> χωρὶς δὲ πίστεως ἀδύνατον εὐαιρεσθήσαι πιστεῦσαι γὰρ δεῖ τὸν προσερχόμενον τῷ Θεῷ, ὅτι ἐστὶ, καὶ τοῖς ἐκζητοῦσιν αὐτὸν μισθαποδότης γίνεται. 7<sup>a</sup> Πίστει χρηματισθεὶς Νῶε περὶ τῶν

d Gen. 5. 24.
 Ecclus. 44.
 16. & 22. 12.

e Gen. 6. 12.
 Ecclus. 44.
 17.
 Rom. 2. 22.
 Phil. 2. 9.

mentators are agreed, that it was signified by fire from heaven consuming Abel's victims, while Cain's fruits of the ground remained untouched. How ancient this opinion is, appears from Theodotion's insertion of the words in his Version of Gen. iv. 4.—an insertion prob. not made without authority, however it might originate from tradition only.—καὶ δι' αὐτῆς ἀποθανὼν ἔτι λαλεῖ. Render: 'though dead, he yet speaketh.' For a similar use of the particip., comp. Anthol. Gr. Jacobs, x. 82, σιγῶν λέγω, 'though silent, I speak.' The sense, however, depends upon the reading, which is disputed. Instead of the t. rec. λαλεῖται, MS. A, and 20 cursives (to which I can add 2 Lamb. and most Mus. copies), most of the Versions, and many Fathers have λαλεῖ, which is preferred by Grot., Mill., Valckn., Dind., Kuin, and Boehme, and edited by Bengel, Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; while the former is retained by Matthæi. But notwithstanding all that has been urged by Matthæi in favour of the t. rec., λαλεῖ is certainly preferable, not only as being the more difficult reading, but as yielding the only sense worthy of the writer. On the contrary, the sense of λαλεῖ (namely, that, 'though dead, yet he by his faith, as it were, speaketh,' bidding us follow his example, and inculcating a like faith in God as 'the rewarder of those who diligently seek him') is highly suitable, and recommended both by its simplicity and its weightiness of sense. The figure by which 'the dead are said to speak,' and admonish others by their own example, is found in the best writers, espec. the Poets and Orators. So Virg. Æn. vi. 618, magnâ testatur voce per umbras: Discite justitiam moniti, et non temerere Divos.' It may, indeed, be said, 'If such be the appropriateness of λαλεῖ, how came λαλεῖται into the great body of the MSS.?' I answer, from an error of scribes in some very ancient archetypes, by which a flourish after ει was taken for an abbreviation of -ται. I have found this oft. the case in the Lamb. and Mus. copies, and Schæfer, on Greg. de Dial., p. 754 and 842, testifies to the same fact, and subjoins some exx.

5, 6. Enoch's faith the Apostle justly infers from his having a testimony of approbation from God; since without faith it is impossible to have such approbation. To this faith the Apostle ascribes his being 'translated,' so as not to experience death.' The import, however, of the words μετετίθη, &c., has been not a little disputed. Most foreign Commentators for the last half century have been of opinion that neither Moses nor the Apostle meant to say that Enoch was taken to heaven alive, but that he was removed thither by a sudden death, probably by lightning. The arguments urged are detailed and reviewed by Kuin., who, very properly, rejects that notion, and accedes to the opinion of the ancient and most modern Commentators, that both writers meant to represent Enoch as removed to heaven alive. Indeed the words of the Apostle, τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, admit of no other construction; and though what is here said appears to rest on the words of the Sept. (the καὶ οὐχ—Θεὸς being a citation, justificatory of what is said in the foregoing clause), yet the expression οὐχ εὐρίσκετο, taken in conjunction with μετίθηαι, is so strong as to admit of scarcely any other interpretation: and the Hebrew terms are quite as remarkable; for, as Kuin. observes, while Moses constantly uses the term מָוֶת in recording the death of the other patriarchs, of Enoch alone he employs the term מָוֶת (accurately rendered by the Sept. μετίθηαι), which is no where used of removal by death, but only employed to describe the translation of Elijah. Again, οὐχ εὐρίσκετο is a faithful version of the Hebrew וְלֹא מָצָא, 'and he was not,' with which Kuin. compares 'nec deinde in terris Romulus fuit,' in Livy, i. 16. That the Septuagint Translators affixed such a sense to the words, cannot be doubted, espec. since Joseph. and Philo did the same. Also that the author of Ecclus., who lived at a much earlier period, so understood מָוֶת in both the above passages, appears from chap. xlviii. and xlix. 14, where, if the term ἀναλίσθη could be thought doubtful, the context proves it to mean what we understand by translation. Such, too, has been the way in which the words have been understood by the best Jewish Interpreters from the earliest periods.

6. πιστεῦσαι γὰρ δεῖ—γίνεται] q. d. 'Sincere worship of God implies a firm belief in his existence and moral government, and that he will reward those who study to do his will, and, by implication, punish those who disobey it. Faith in his existence must precede worship of him. And who would worship a Being who remained an unconcerned spectator of what passes on the earth, and with whom is no retribution?' Προσέρχεται in this sense, to denote 'divine worship,' is frequent in the present Epistle, and, indeed, may be said to be peculiar to this Book, since it occurs no where else in the New Testament nor in the Sept.

7. πίστει χρηματισθεῖς, &c.] 'It was by faith that Noah, being admonished by a divine revelation concerning things not yet seen, and only to be viewed by the eye of faith,' &c. By τῶν μετέπειτα βλεπομένων is meant the Deluge and the events subsequent to it; the expression being used with allusion to the definition of faith at ver. 1, ἔλεγχος οὐ βλεπομένων. The true and full sense of the disputed expression ὁλαβηθεῖς is 'through reverence and godly fear,—fear of God and reverence to his commands;' a sense of the word oft. found in the Sept., but very rare in the Class. writers; though it occurs μηδέπω βλεπομένων, εὐλαβηθεὶς κατεσκεύασε κιβωτὸν εἰς σωτηρίαν τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ δι' ἧς κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον, καὶ τῆς κατὰ πίστιν δικαιοσύνης ἐγένετο κληρονόμος. <sup>8</sup> Πίστει καλούμενος <sup>† Gen. 12. 1. & Acts 7. 2.</sup> Ἀβραὰμ ὑπήκουσεν ἐξελθεῖν εἰς τὸν τόπον, ὃν ἤμελλε λαμβάνειν εἰς κληρονομίαν, καὶ ἐξῆλθε μὴ ἐπιστάμενος ποῦ ἔρχεται. <sup>9</sup> Πίστει παρώκησεν εἰς τὴν γῆν τῆς ἐπαγγελίας ὡς ἄλλοτριαν, ἐν σκηναῖς κατοικήσας, μετὰ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακώβ τῶν συγκληρονόμων τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῆς αὐτῆς. <sup>10</sup> ἐξεδέχετο γὰρ τὴν τοῦς in Æschin. ap. Steph. Thea. and Plato, p. 879.—κατισκίασε κιβωτὸν, 'built an ark.' Thus obeying the Divine order, 'Make thee an ark of gopher-wood.' And when we consider the length of time it took, the immense labour it must have required, to effect the thing, we may appreciate the value of Noah's obeying in faith. The labour must have been enormous, in the then state of the arts, to build a ship, or rather a floating edifice, of the form of a parallelogram, 300 cubits long, 50 cubits broad, and 30 cubits high; far exceeding in size the largest ship of the line ever built. It was called תֵּיבָה, or κιβωτός (or, as Josephus terms it, λάβραξ), with allusion to its chest-like shape, doubtless chosen as far easier to build than one of a round form; and which is even yet, in a great measure, preserved in the form of the Chinese junks. As, then, by this wonderful occurrence, i. e. Noah's building so vast a structure, we see established the strength of his faith, so by that event connected with it, an universal Deluge—(of which the truth has been attested by all nations, 'the savage and the sage,' wherever written records have been preserved, tradition been maintained, or rites commemorative of the Deluge and the deliverance of Noah and his family by an ark been celebrated) we see established the very fact, which the Infidel denies,—the existence of a Divine Revelation,—namely, that the Deity has condescended to make known his will to man; since Noah's conduct surely implies foreknowledge of the Deluge: and that could only be founded on a communication from God to man,—to refuse admitting the evidence of which, must consequently expose the infidel to the same condemnation as that by which Noah's faith condemned the unbelieving world, and expose him to the same destruction that overwhelmed them.—αἰς σωτηρίαν τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ, 'for preservation of his household.'—κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον, namely, 'inasmuch as any one may be said to condemn others, who, by his own deeds, shows what they ought to have done, and thus convicts them of blame for not having so done.' Comp. Matt. xii. 41, sq., and Wisd. ii. 13, where it is observed that the wicked are desirous of getting rid of the righteous man, because, say they, ἐγένετο ἡμῖν αἰς λεγέον τὸν ἡννοῖον ἡμῶν, meaning, 'by his modes of thinking and acting he is a reproof to us.'—τῆς κατὰ πίστιν δικ. ἐγένετο κληρονόμος, for ἐκληρονόμησε, 'became possessed of,' &c. By the expression here, ἡ δικαιοσύνη κατὰ πίστιν, is meant 'acceptance with God,' 'the felicity of those who are justified by faith.' See Rom. i. 17. So at Rom. iv. 9, Abraham is said to have been 'justified by faith,' viz. in the declarations of God respecting the law of promise and the Redeemer; of whom the promise was confirmed in the renewal of the covenant made originally with Noah, to whom the doctrine of justification by faith in a Redeemer was, no doubt, made known.

8. καλούμενος] 'being called upon, invited, bidden.' See Gen. xii. 1, comp. with Acts vii. 3. The words μὴ ἐπιστ. τοῦ ἔρχ. are meant to illustrate Abraham's faith, and have been wrongly supposed to mean that he was in ignorance about the land or its qualities; for that is inconsistent with Gen. xii. 1. We may regard the words as a popular mode of expression, denoting that he threw himself wholly on Divine providence.

9. παρώκησεν εἰς τὴν γῆν] for ἐσθλὴν εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ παρώκησεν ἐκεῖ. The reading, however, is disputed, and Læschm. and Tisch. cancel the τὴν, from three uncial and a few cursive MSS. But propriety of language requires the Article, and the usage of the New Test. confirms it. See Acts vii. 17. ix. 8. xv. 8. Gal. iii. 14.—ὡς ἄλλ., for οὐκ ἴδιαν, 'as if it were a land in which he had no concern.'—παρώκησις is for παρόικος (i. e. ἀλλογενής) ἦν, in opposition to ἐπιγενής. The words following, ἐν σκηναῖς κατ., are meant to prove and illustrate the preceding term παρώκ.; designating the life of the Nomades, or rovers of the desert, in every age. Now the building of a house would have implied a property in the land; not so the setting up of a tent. In those early periods, when population was thin, even foreigners seem to have been allowed to fix tents, and bring cattle to graze, where the land was not occupied by the natives.—μετὰ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακώβ—αὐτῆς. These words are to be referred to all that has preceded in the verse. Here μετὰ is meant to mark, not time, but parity of circumstances; signifying 'as well as,' 'in the manner of' (by a use of the word found also at Phil. iv. 3); so denoting community both of circumstances and of disposition; q. d. 'as also did Isaac and Jacob after them, to whom the same promise belonged.' Here, then, Abraham's so living is mentioned to evince his faith; q. d. 'It was by faith in the promise of God, that he was content to go and live in a foreign land, and sojourn as a foreigner there, though fully assured that it was to be the inheritance of his posterity.'

10. ἐξεδέχετο γὰρ—ὁ Θεός] q. d. ['No wonder that he believed in God's temporal promises;] for he fully expected, i. e. looked forward to, &c. Comp. Gen. xlix. 18. Ps. xl. 1. Isa. xxv. 9. xxvi. 8. xxxiii. 2. Rom. viii. 19, 23, 25. Phil. iii. 20. 1 Cor. i. 7. These words, then, are meant to show the principle on which Abraham was content so to live,—namely, that of faith (agreed-θεμελίους ἔχουσιν πόλιν, ἥς τεχνίτης καὶ δημιουργὸς ὁ Θεός.

h Gen. 17.
16. & 21. 2.
Luke 1. 32.
Rom. 4. 19.
1 Gen. 14. 5.
& 22. 17.
Rom. 4. 18.
k Gen. 28. 4.
& 47. 9.
1 Chron. 26.
16.
Ps. 90. 12.
& 119. 19.
John 8. 28.

11 <sup>h</sup> Πίστει καὶ αὕτῃ Σάρρα δύναμις εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος ἔλαβε, καὶ παρὰ καιρὸν ἡλικίας [ἔτεκεν], ἐπεὶ πιστὸν ἡγήσατο τὸν ἐπαγγελίαμενον. 12 <sup>i</sup> Διὸ καὶ ἀφ' ἐνὸς † ἐγεννήθησαν, καὶ ταῦτα νεκρωμένον, καθὼς τὰ ἄστρον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τῷ πληθει, καὶ * ὡς ἡ ἄμμος ἢ παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τῆς θαλάσσης ἢ ἀναρίθμητος. 13 <sup>k</sup> Κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὗτοι πάντες, μὴ λαβόντες τὰς ἐπαγably to the description at ver. 1); even the patient hope of the city which hath foundations, (as opposed to the wandering life adverted to at ver. 9,) the heavenly Jerusalem mentioned at xii. 22, and often in the Apocalypse described in glowing imagery, such as the Jews applied to the new Jerusalem, which they supposed was to descend from heaven—imagery also employed by the Sacred writers, but intended to designate the new Jerusalem in heaven, i. e. heaven itself. The verse may be rendered, 'for he looked out for (anxiously anticipated) that city which hath sure foundations (comp. xii. 28); whose builder and maker is God.' By this strong mode of expression the city is distinguished from all ordinary ones, as 'the city of foundations,' because the only abiding city. Comp. xii. 22. Mr. Green, Gr. N. T. Dial., p. 227, thinks that the use of the Article here is contextual, the word having the Article by suggestion. And accordingly he is of opinion that τοῦς θεμ. must mean those foundations of which the habitations just mentioned (σκηναίς) were destitute. This, however, has the objection of being a view too refined to suit the simplicity of Scripture language. Moreover, tents are not buildings, and such need no foundations to give them all the security intended. At the same time, some reference is prob. here meant, though the Article cannot, Mr. Green thinks, refer to some particular foundations of notoriety; at least, he observes, 'it is difficult to conjecture what they can be.' Difficult, indeed, it is, yet not impossible. I doubt not that the reference is to such deep foundation-courses as were employed in building the walls of cities meant to be impregnable—at least to any military engines. Such was the way in which the walls of Nineveh, Babylon, and other of the most ancient cities were built. Thus those of Babylon, as described by Hdt. i. 179, had the foundations so deep, as to consist of thirty courses of large square kiln-burnt bricks, formed in a mould. A foundation so laid would bear up a wall of almost any thickness and height. An evident allusion to this may be recognized in St. John's description of the mystical New Jerusalem coming down from heaven, Rev. xxi. 18 (the same with that mentioned infr. xii. 22, as πόλις Θεοῦ ζώντος, Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἰπουράσιμ), which is represented by St. John as coming down from heaven, and by St. Paul as being of heaven, the one (the Millennium) as preparatory to the other. In that passage (xxi. 18) the wall is described as having twelve such courses, and thus the Plural θεμελίους here is quite intelligible. Such, indeed, was the mode in which, more or less, the walls of all strong cities were built; and accordingly it is not difficult to imagine a reference of notoriety in the case of such foundation-courses as those in question.—The τὴν seems to have a twofold reference both to ἔχουσιν and to πόλιν; the latter, with reference to the earthly, as the opposite to the heavenly (ch. xi. 16), heaven itself.—Of course the expression θεμ. σίγ. here is to be understood, in a figur. sense, as equiv. to that at xiii. 14, μένουσαν, denoting a community never to be dissolved, namely, the Gospel plan of salvation, the θεμίλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ at 2 Tim. ii. 19. And why μένουσαν? Because the builder and maker is God,—'the Rock of ages.'

11. αὐτῇ Σάρρα] 'Sarah herself.' Αὐτῇ is used with allusion to that which, from circumstances, seemed physically impossible, and the consequent incredulity which she had at first harboured, when the thing was announced to her, and which was even entertained by Abraham; though the reproof of the Lord and due reflection brought both to a firm belief.—εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος. This may be regarded, with many of the best Expositors, ancient and modern, as a brief mode of expression, simply denoting, in a popular manner, the act of conception. Some, indeed, as Ernesti, Kuin., &c., render it, 'for the foundation of a family,' 'in order to found a family': a sense, however, frigid in itself, and little suited to the words following, espec. if ἔτεκεν be cancelled, as these Critics contend it should, and as has been done by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., and Tisch.; though when it is considered how very frequently the two stages, of conception and parturition, are introduced by the Sacred writers, where one might have sufficed, the cancelling is ill judged; for which, indeed, there is next to no authority, and internal evidence is against it. Possibly, however, the word may not be genuine, and the writer may have meant, under the idea of conception, to be implied its consequent parturition; by a similar inartificial and popular mode of expressing the idea of conception as that in Lev. xii. 2. The words εἰς τὸ τεκεῖν added in several ancient MSS. and Versions, arose from a gloss on εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος, which, however, confirms the above view.

12. καθὼς τὰ ἄστρον—θαλάσσης] Oriental and popular hyperboles, though such are found also in the Western writers. So Aristoph. Lys. 1260, says, ἡν γὰρ τῶνδε οὐκ ἴδασκεν τὰς ψάμματος, τοὺ Πέρσαι. For the t. rec., δὲ αἰ μμος, all the uncial, and many cursive MSS. (to which I add all the Lamb. and most Mus. copies), most Fathers, and early Editions, have ὡς ἡ ἄμμος, which has been adopted by Matthæi, Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., and Tisch.; and justly; for propriety of language alike requires the Article (as in the passage of Aristoph.), and rejects ὡσί. We may suppose in this, as in many other cases, ἃ to have passed into αἰ by error of scribes.

γετίας, ἀλλὰ πόρρωθεν αὐτὰς ἰδόντες, [καὶ πεισθέντες] καὶ ἀσπασάμενοι, καὶ ὁμολογήσαντες ὅτι ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοί εἰσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. <sup>14</sup> οἱ γὰρ τοιαῦτα λέγοντες ἐμφανίζουσιν ὅτι πατρίδα ἐπιζητοῦσι. <sup>15</sup> Καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐκείνης ἐμνημόνεον ἀφ' ἧς † ἐξῆλθον, εἶχον ἂν καιρὸν ἀνακάμψαι. <sup>16</sup> † νυνὶ δὲ κρείττονος ἰ Exod. 3. 6. Matt. 23. 32. Acts 7. 32. ὀρέγονται, τουτέστιν ἐπουρανίου. διὸ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεός, Θεὸς ἐπικαλεῖσθαι αὐτῶν ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν.

13—16. 'These verses are introduced to confirm what was said at ver. 10 on the nature of the faith of the Patriarchs,—that it regarded not an earthly, but a heavenly country, the same as that which Christians expect.' (Kuin.)

13. κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὗτοι πάντες] Some learned Commentators interpret the promises alluded to in this chapter as temporal; and are consequently reduced to the necessity of confining the expression οὗτοι πάντες to some of the persons that had been named; or of referring it to all Abraham's descendants, of whom mention has been made in the preceding sentence. Now it is obvious, as Whitby remarks, that all the descendants of Abraham did not die in faith; and how, on the other hand, any particular individuals of those before named can be selected by an expression which comprehends all, it is not easy to discover; and if all who had been before named are referred to (as is unavoidable), then the promises cannot have been temporal, there being some to whom no temporal promises were made, as Abel and Enoch. As to the difficulty arising from the declaration, that the persons enumerated had died in faith, when it is known that Enoch did not die, but was translated; this is easily removed by considering that the stress is not laid upon the death of those believers, but upon their having retained their faith through life. (Abp. Magee.) So Chrys. observes that the words are to be understood of those that went before, q. d. all that did die. The words καὶ πεισθέντες are cancelled by Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch., being plainly a gloss on ὥσπερ. following, of which the sense may be, as most Expositors suppose, 'hailing them;' the metaphor being one taken from persons who, when they see at a distance the wished-for port, salute it with joyful shouts. So Virg. Æn. iii. 522, 'Italiam læti salutant.' However, I should wish to see some proof of the use of ὥσπερ. with this metaphor; and, until such shall be adduced, I prefer to take the term simply to denote, like amplector, receiving gladly (so Chrys. ἡσθίστες),—namely, by anticipation; of which examples may be seen in my Lex. N. T. in v.

13. ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοι εἰσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] Render: 'foreigners, and sojourners on earth;' i. e. in this world as compared with heaven: said doubtless with allusion to Gen. xxiii. 4, and xlvii. 9, and also perhaps certain other passages of the O. T., as Gen. xxviii. 4. Pa. xxxix. 13. cxix. 19. Such, too, was the language of the heathen philosophers. Thus Plato in Axiocō says, παρεπίδητα τὴν ἐστὶν ὁ βίος. And so life is also called in Æschin. Socr. Dial. iii. 3.

14—16. The course of argument here may be thus traced: 'The Patriarchs professed themselves to be strangers, and thereby showed they were desirous of some country as a permanent abode. Now if they had sought a country in those parts, or had regarded their native or ancestral land as their true country, they might have found means to return thither. But they did not consider Canaan as their country, nor did they return to Chaldea; therefore they desired not an earthly, but a better, even a heavenly one.'

15. καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐκείνης—ἀνακάμψαι] The sense is, 'And if truly (while thus designating themselves) they made mention of (bore in mind) the country from which they came forth, they might have had opportunity of returning to it.' Between the departure of Abraham from Chaldea and the death of Jacob, there was time for the Patriarchs to have returned thither if they had loved it as a country; but they did not. 'If they had sought a country (observes Braun), no one was more desirable than Chaldea, then far superior in fertility and wealth to Canaan.' For ἐξῆλθον MSS. A, C, D, and 3 curvies, read ἐξῆλθον, adopted by Lachm. and Tisch., but on insufficient grounds, internal evidence, as well as external, being in favour of ἐξῆλθον, of which ἐξῆλθον was a Critical emendation.

16. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] meaning, 'But as things now are (since they so spoke and acted), it is plain that they rested only on the promises of God respecting the possession of Canaan, as a country, not a mere sojourn, by their posterity; as they did of the attainment by themselves of another country, even a heavenly.' For νυνὶ, many MSS., and some Fathers and early Editions, have νῦν, which is edited by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., and Tisch.; but without sufficient reason; for though νῦν is used in this sense in other parts of the New Test., yet νυνὶ is stronger in sense than νῦν, and is more suitable when, as here, used in antithesis, after εἰ has preceded. Thus it is found at Rom. vii. 17. Heb. vii. 6, and sometimes in the Class. writers. It is true that we have νῦν δὲ used in antithesis at 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Thucyd. iii. 43, and after εἰ at Luke xix. 42. Yet as νυνὶ occurs in antithesis supra viii. 6 without any var. lect., I have thought proper, with Matthæi, to retain the common reading. That heaven is man's proper country was indeed acknowledged by most of the heathen philosophers who believed in a future state. So, too, Scaliger, in his Epitaphium, says, 'Profecto vera patria viro forti cōlum est: quippe hic peregrinamur boni, mali in exilio sunt.'—ὁ δὲ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται, &c., 'therefore (i. e. since they had such undoubting faith in the Divine promises) God does not (i. e. did not) disdain (meaning, per Meisioin, contemns, see note on ii. 11) to be called their God;' implying the ideas of protection and preservation.—ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν, '[nay, he shows himself such], for he hath prepared and destined for in Gen. 22.

2. &c.
Ecclus. 44.
21.

n Gen. 21. 12.
Rom. 9. 7.
Gal. 3. 26.

o Gen. 27
27, 28.

p Gen. 48.
15, 16, 30.
1. & 47. 21.

17 <sup>m</sup> Πίστει προσεήνοχεν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν Ἰσαὰκ πειραζόμενος καὶ τὸν μονογενῆ προσέφερεν ὁ τὰς ἐπαγγελίας ἀναδεξάμενος, 18 <sup>n</sup> πρὸς δὲ ἐλαλήθη· Ὅτι ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθήσεται ἡ σοὶ σπέρμα· 19 λογισάμενος ὅτι καὶ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγείρειν δυνατὸς ὁ Θεὸς, ὅθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβολῇ ἐκομίσατο. 20 <sup>o</sup> Πίστει περὶ μελλόντων εὐλόγησεν Ἰσαὰκ τὸν Ἰακώβ καὶ τὸν Ἠσαὺ. 21 <sup>p</sup> Πίστει Ἰακώβ ἀποθνήσκων ἕκαστον τῶν υἱῶν Ἰωσήφ εὐλό-them a city,' or permanent abode (as opposed to the σκηναὶ at ver. 9), even a heavenly one. On ἔπολε, see note on Matt. xxv. 34.

17. πίστει προσεν. Ἀβρ. τ. Ἰσ. π.] Render: 'By faith it was that Abraham, on being put to the proof (as to his faith) offered up Isaac; yea, the holder of the promises offered up his (very) only begotten son.' Of course the verb (προσφ.) is here, as oft. elsewhere, to be understood of 'will and purpose of action,' here only hindered from performance by the interposition of Divine command; and, accordingly, it has been always regarded by the Jewish writers, from Philo downwards, as a complete sacrifice. It would seem that ἀναδεξ. is more significant than δεξ. would have been, intimating the receiving the promises as a real heart-concern, in full faith of their fulfilment.

